SHEKEL, a Jewish weight and coin. (Heb.) See Exod. xxx. 13. The weight is about half an ounce; the value about half a crown. — Heb. sheqel, a shekel (weight). — Heb. sháqal, to weigh. [Both ees are short.]

SHEKINAH, SHECHINAH, the visible glory of the Divine presence. (Heb.) Not in the Bible, but in the targums; it signifies the 'dwelling' of God among His people. — Heb. shekináh, dwelling, the presence of God. — Heb. shákan, to dwell.

SHELDRAKE, a kind of drake. (E.) M. E. scheldrak; 'Hic umnis, scheldrak;' Wright's Vocab. i. 253, col. 1. Put for sheld-drake, i. e. variegated or spotted drake. 'Sheldapple [prob. for sheld-dapple], the chaffinch;' Halliwell. 'Sheld, flecked, party-coloured;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. Sheld in this case is just the same as M. E. sheld, a shield; and the allusion is, probably, to the ornamentation of shields, which is doubtless of great antiquity. The A. S. scýld or seild is a shield; but is also used, in a curious passage, to denote a part of a bird's plumage. 'Is se scýld ufan frætsum geféged ofer þæs fūgles bæc' = the shield above is curiously arranged over the bird's back; Poem on the Phoenix, l. 308 (Grein). So also Icel. skjöldungur, a sheldrake, allied to skjöldóttir, dappled, from skjöld, a shield; Dan. en skjoldet ko, a brindled cow, from skjold, a shield; G. schildern, to paint, depict, from G. schild, a shield, escutcheon. See Shield.

SHELF, a ledge, flat layer of rock. (E.) M. E. schelfe, shelpe; pl. shelves, Chaucer, C. T. 3211. — A. S. scylfe, a plank or shelf; Grein, ii. 416. + Low G. schelfe, a shelf, Bremen Wörterbuch; allied to schelfen, to scale off, peel. Cf. Lowland Sc. shelve, a thin slice, shelve, to separate in laminae (Jamieson); Du. schelp, a shell; G. schelfe, a husk, shell, paring; schelfen, schelfern, to peel off. Closely allied to shell and scale; the orig. sense is 'a husk,' thence a flake, slice, thin board, flat ledge, layer. See Shell. The Gael. sgéalb, a splinter, or (as a verb) to split, is from the same root. ¶ We occasionally find shelf, not only in the sense of a layer of rock, but in the sense of 'sand-bank' or 'shoal.' Dryden speaks of 'a shelfy coast' as equivalent to 'shoaly ground'; tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1125, 1130. He adds that Æneas 'steers aloof, and shuns the shelf,' l. 1132. There is confusion here with the verb to Shelve, q. v. Cf. 'shelvy and shallow,' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15.

SHELL, a scale, husk, outer covering, a bomb. (E.) M. E. schelle, shelle; P. Plowman, B. v. 528; Gower, C. A. iii. 76, l. 8. — A. S. scell, scyll; Grein, ii. 399. + Du. schel. + Icel. skel. + Goth. skalja, a tile; Luke, v. 19. β. All from a Teut. base SKALA or SKALYA, Fick, iii. 334; from ✓ SKAL (for SKAR), to separate, hence to peel off; see Skill. And see Scale (1). Der. shell-fish, -work; shell, verb; shell-y.

SHELTER, a place of protection, refuge, retreat, protection. (E.) This curious word is due to a corruption of M. E. sheld-trume, a body of troops used to protect anything, a guard, squadron. The corruption took place early, possibly owing to some confusion with the word squadron (of F. origin), with which it seems to have been assimilated, at least in its termination. Thus sheld-trume soon became sheldtrume, sheltrome, sheltrone, sheltroun, the force of the latter part of the word being utterly lost, so that at last -troun was confused with the common suffix -er, and the word shelter was the result.

β. See examples in Stratmann, s. v. schild. To which add: schiltrum, Barbour's Bruce, xii. 429; scheltrone, sheltron, sheltrun, Allit. version of Destruction of Troy, 3239, 5249, 5804, 10047; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1813, 1856, 1992, 2106, 2210, 2922. It occurs also in Trevisa's description of the battle of Hastings, and was quite a common word, well known from Aberdeen to Cornwall. Loss of the true form caused loss of the true sense, so that it came to mean only a place of protection, instead of a body-guard or squadron. But a sense of its derivation from shield still survives in our manner of using it. — A. S. scild-truma, lit. a shield-troop, troop of men with shields or selected for defence, occurring in a gloss (Leo); compounded of A. S. scild, a shield, and truma, a band of men, Jos. xi. 10. The word truma does not appear to be a mere modification of the Lat. turma, but is allied to A. S. trum, firm, getrum, a cohort, band of men (Grein); and to E. trim. See Shield and Trim. [†]

SHELVE, to slope down, incline downwards gradually. (Scand.) We speak of a shelving shore, i. e. a shallow or sloping shore, where the water's depth increases gradually. 'The shore was shelvy and shallow;' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15. We have shelving in Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 1. 115, which is explained by Schmidt as 'projecting like a shelf.' It is certainly not connected with shelf, except by confusion, and in popular etymology; see note appended to Shelf. Note O. Ital. stralare, 'to shelve or go aside, aslope, awry,' Florio (late edition, cited by Wedgwood). The -ve stands for an older guttural, appearing in Icel. skelgja-sk, to come askew, where the suffix -sk (for sik, oneself) is merely reflexive. And this verb is formed, by vowel-change, from Icel. skjálgr, wry, oblique, squinting (hence sloping); which is the source of the difficult words Shallow and Shoal. So also Swed. dial. skjalgäs, skjälgäs, to twist, become crooked, from skjalg, crooked (Rietz); O. Swed. skjalg, oblique, awry (Ihre); M. H. G. schelch, awry, oblique. The intermediate form appears in O. Du. schelwe, one who squints or looks awry (Kilian). See further under Shallow. Thus the orig. sense is 'to go awry;' hence to slope.

SHEPHERD, a sheep-herd, pastor. (E.) M. E. schepherd, shepherd, Chaucer, C. T. 506. — A. S. scēaphyrde, a keeper of sheep, Gen. iv. 2. — A. S. scēap, a sheep; and heorde, hyrde, a herd, i. e. guardian. See Sheep and Herd (2). Der. shepherd-ess, with F. suffix.

SHERBET, a kind of sweet drink. (Arab.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 203, 327. — Arab. sharbat, a drink, sip, beverage, draught, sherbet, syrup; Rich. Dict. p. 887. — Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. Allied to syrup, q. v. Also to shrub, in the term 'rum-shrub;' see shrub (2).

SHERD, SHARD, a shred, fragment. (E.) Commonly in the comp. pot-sherd, pot-shard. 'Shards of stones, Fragmentum lapidis; a shard of an earthen pot, the shell of an egge or a snail;' Baret (1580). The pl. shards is in Hamlet, v. 1. 254. For the double spelling, cf. clerk with Clark as a proper name, Derby and Darby, &c. M. E. scherd, scherde, Prompt. Parv. p. 445. — A. S. seard, a fragment; 'ealle þā seard' = all the fragments, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xviii. § 1 (b. ii. pr. 7). Lit. 'a broken thing;' from A. S. seard, adj. broken, Grein, ii. 404, evidently a participial formation from the same root as searu, a share, and secan, to shear. So also Icel. skarð, a notch, skarðr, sheared, diminished; M. H. G. scharf, hacked. Fick, iii. 333. See Share, Shear. Der. pot-sherd or pot-shard.

SHERIFF, an officer in a county who executes the law. (E.) M. E. shereue, shereve, Chaucer, C. T. 361. — A. S. scir-gerefa, a shire-reeve. In Ælfric's Glossary we find: 'Consul, gerefa;' also 'Proconsul, under-gerefa;' also 'Prætor, burh-gerefa;' and 'Preses, scir-gerefa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 18. — A. S. scir, a shire; and ge-refa, a reeve, officer; see Shire and Reeve. Der. sheriff-ship, sheriff-dom. Also sheriff-al-ty, generally written shrievalty, spelt shrevalty in Fuller, Worthies of England (R.); the suffix is F., as in common-al-ty. Dryden has the extraordinary adj. shrieval, The Medal, 14.

SHERRY, a wine of Spain. (Span. = L.) Formerly sherris, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 111. The final s was dropped, from a fancy that it was the pl. ending, just as in the case of pea for pease, &c. So called from the town of Xeres, in Spain, whence it was brought. There are two towns of that name; but the famous one is Xeres de la Frontera, in the province of Sevilla, not far from Cadiz. The Spanish x is a guttural letter (like G. ch), and was rendered by sh in English, to save trouble.

β. Dozy shews that Xeres = Lat. Cæsaris, by loss of the syllable -ar-, much as Cæsar Augusta became, by contraction, Saragossa; see Dozy, Recherches sur l'histoire et la littérature de l'Espagne, Leyden, 1860, i. 314. Cæsaris is the gen. case of Lat. Cæsar. Der. sherris-sack, i. e. dry sherry, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 104; see Sack (3). [†]

SHEW, the same as Show, q. v.

SHIBBOLETH, the criterion or test-word of a party. (Heb.) In Milton, Samson Agonistes, 288. See the story in Judges, xii. 6. — Heb. shibboleth, (1) an ear of corn, (2) a river; prob. used in the latter sense, with reference to the Jordan. From the unused root shābal, to increase, grow, flow. ¶ Any word beginning with sh would have done as well to detect an Ephraimite.

SHIDE, a thin piece of board. (E.) 'Shide, a billet of wood, a thin board, a block of wood; still in use;' Halliwell. Spelt shyde in Palsgrave. M. E. shide, schide, Gower, C. A. i. 314, l. 7; P. Plowman, B. ix. 131. — A. S. seide, a billet of wood, in a gloss (Bosworth); whence seid-weall, a fence made of palings, Wright's Vocab. i. 37, note 2. + Icel. skíð, a billet of wood. + G. scheit, the same. Cf. Lithuan. skėda, a splinter. β. From the Teut. base SKID, to cleave; see Sheath and Shed. Fick, iii. 335. Thus the orig. sense is 'a piece of cleft wood, a log, billet.' Doublet, skid.

SHIELD, a piece of defensive armour held on the left arm. (E.) M. E. schelde, shelde, Chaucer, C. T. 2506. — A. S. scild, sceld, a shield; Grein, ii. 407. + Du. schild. + Icel. skjöld, pl. skildir. + Dan. skjold. + Swed. sköld. + Goth. skildus. + G. schild. β. All from a Teut. type SKELDU, a shield; Fick, iii. 334. The root is doubtful; it seems reasonable to connect it with shell and scale, as denoting a thin piece of wood or metal. Fick suggests a connection with Icel. skella, skjalla, to clash, rattle, from the 'clashing of shields' so often mentioned; cf. G. schelle, a bell, allied to schallen, to resound. γ. Either way, the form of the base is SKAL, meaning either (1) to cleave, or (2) to resound. ¶ It is common to connect shield (A. S. sceld) with Icel. skjól, Dan. skjul, a shelter, protection; this gives good sense, but is certainly wrong, as shewn by the difference of vowel-sound; the Icel. skjól (for *skeula) being from the ✓SKU, to cover; Fick, iii. 337. Hence this suggestion must be rejected. The word really derived from Icel. skjól is Sheal, q. v. Der. shield, verb, K. Lear, iv. 2. 67; shield-bearer; shield-less. Also shel-ter, q. v., shill-ing, q. v.

SHIELING, the same as Sheal, q. v.

SHIFT, to change, change clothes, remove. (E.) The old sense was 'to divide,' now completely lost. M. E. schiften, shiften, to divide, change, remove. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 446, it is explained by 'part asunder,' or 'deal,' i. e. divide, as well as by 'change.' 'Hastilich he schifte him' = hastily he removed himself, changed his place, P. Plowman, B. xx. 166. And see Chaucer, C. T. 5686. — A. S. sciftan, scyftan, to divide; 'beð his ðæt scegyft swiðe rihte' = let his property be divided very justly; Laws of Cnut (Secular), § 71; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 414, l. 1. + Du. schiften, to divide, separate, turn. + Icel. skipta (for skifta), to part, share, divide; also to shift, change; so that the mod. use of shift is prob. Scandinavian. + Swed. skifta, to divide, to change, shift. + Dan. skifte (the same). β. The sense of 'divide' or 'part' is the orig. one, the word being formed from the sb. appearing in Icel. skipti (for skifti), a division, exchange, shift, Swed. and Dan. skifte (the same); which is formed from the base SKIF appearing in Icel. skifa, to cut into slices, and Icel. skifa, a slice. The last sb. is cognate with G. scheibe, a slice, particularly used in the sense of a slice of a tree, hence a disk, wheel; Du. schijf, a slice, disk, quoit, wheel; Dan. skive, Swed. skifva, a slice, disk; prov. E. shive, a slice (Halliwell); and the technical E. sheave, a wheel of a pulley. The base is SKIF, to slice into pieces; and when we compare this with G. scheiden, to part, from a base SKID, and Icel. skilja, to part, from a base SKIL, we see that SKI-F, SKI-D, and SKI-L are all extensions, with much the same meaning, from the Aryan ✓SKA, to cut, whence also ✓SKAR, to shear; see Shear. And see Shiver (2). ¶ It is necessary to remark that the Icel. skipta is merely the Icel. way of writing skifta; hence the base is SKIF (as above), and there is no connection (except an ultimate one) with Icel. skipa, to ordain. Der. shift, sb., a change, Timon, i. 1. 84; esp. a change of linen, and commonly restricted to the sense of chemise; shift-less; shift-y.

SHILLING, a silver coin worth 12 pence. (E.) M.E. shilling, shilling; P. Plowman, B. xii. 146. — A.S. scilling, scylling, Luke, xv. 9. + Du. schelling. + Icel. skillingr. + Dan. and Swed. skilling. + Goth. skilliggs (for skillings). + G. schilling. β. The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, the same as in A.S. feorð-ling (or feorð-ing), a farthing. The base is clearly SKIL, to divide, as in Icel. skilja, to divide; see Skill. γ. The reason for the name is not certain; Ihre suggests that the old coins were marked with a cross, for the convenience of dividing them into four parts, as suggested by the A.S. name feorð-ling, a fourth part or farthing. It is more likely that the word merely meant 'a thin slice' of metal, just as the A.S. styca, a mite (Mark, xii. 42), merely means a 'bit' or 'small piece'. δ. The derivation from SKIL is strongly supported by the occurrence of Swed. skiljemynt, Dan. skillemynt, in the sense of 'small change' or 'small money'; and by the occurrence of numerous other derivatives from the same base.

SHIMMER, to glitter, shine faintly. (E.) M.E. shimeren; whence shymeryng, Chaucer, C.T. 4295, spelt shemering in Tyrwhitt. — A.S. scymrian (better scimrian), given in Bosworth, but without a reference. However, it is merely the frequentative form of sciman, or scimian, to shine, Luke, xvii. 24 (Lindisfarne MS.), and Grein, ii. 408. — A.S. scima, a light, brightness, Grein, ii. 408; Grein also gives scima, a dawning light, dawn, faint light; perhaps the words are the same. From the base set- of set-nan, to shine; see Shine. + Du. schimeren, to glimmer; cf. schim, a shade, ghost. + Swed. skimra, to glitter. + G. schimmern, to glimmer; from O.H.G. scimman, to shine, scimo, a bright light. And cf. Icel. skimi, skima, a gleam of light, Goth. skema, a torch or lantern.

SHIN, the large bone of the leg, front of the lower part of the leg. (E.) M.E. shine; dat. shinne, Chaucer, C.T. 368; pl. shinnes, id. 1281. — A.S. scina; 'Tibia, scina'; Wright's Voc. i. 65; 'Tibia, scyne, oððe scin-bān' [shin-bone]; id. 71. + Du. schene. + Swed. skén-ben, shin-bone. + Dan. skinne-been, shin-bone. + G. schiene; O.H.G. scina, scena. β. Origin uncertain; but note the use of G. schiene, a splint, an iron band, Dan. skinne, the same, Dan. hiulskinne, the tire of a wheel. It is probable that shin and skin are the same word; the orig. sense may have been 'thin slice,' from ✓SKA, to cut. 'The skin-bone [is] so called from its sharp edge, like a splint of wood. The analogous bone in a horse is called the splint-bone;' Wedgwood. See Skin.

SHINE, to gleam, beam, glow, be bright. (E.) M.E. shinen, shinen; pt. t. schone (better schoon), Wyclif, Matt. xvii. 2, pl. shinen (with short i), Gower, C.A. iii. 68, l. 5; pp. shinen (rare). — A.S. scinan, pt. t. scán, pp. scinen, to shine, Grein, ii. 408. + Du. schijnen. + Icel. skína. + Dan. skinne. + Swed. skina. + Goth. skinan. + G. schienen. β. All from Teut. base SKI, to shine; Fick, iii. 335. Cf. Skt. khyd, to become known; of which the orig. signification was prob. 'to shine'; Benfey, p. 248. Der. shine, sb., Timon, iii. 5. 101; shiny, Antony, iv. 9. 3. Also sheer (1), shimmer.

SHINGLE (1), a wooden tile. (L.) Formerly a common word; a shingle was a piece of wood, split thin, and cut into a square shape; used like modern tiles and slates, esp. for the fronts of houses. M.E. shingle; spelt shyngil, K. Alisaunder, 2210; hence 'shyngled shippe,' P. Plowman, B. ix. 141. A corrupt pronunciation for shindle or shindel, as shewn by the corresponding G. schindel, a shingle, splint. [Both E. shingle and G. schindel are non-Teutonic words.] — Lat. scindula, another spelling of scandula, a shingle, wooden tile. — Lat. scindere, to cut, cleave, split; pt. t. scidi (base SKID); the sb. scandula being from the base SKAD, to cut, an extension of ✓SKA, to cut. So also Gk. σινδάλαιμος, a splinter, from σινδέναι (= σινδέναι), to cleave, allied to σκάειν (= σκαδέναι), to slit. Cf. Skt. chhid, to cut.

SHINGLE (2), coarse round gravel on the sea-shore. (Scand.) I find no early use of the word. Phillips, ed. 1706, notes that shingles is 'the name of a shelf or sand-bank in the sea, about the Isle of Wight;' which is a confused statement. E. Müller takes it to be the same word as the above, with the supposition that it was first applied to flat or tile-shaped stones; but there can be little doubt that Wedgwood rightly identifies it with Norw. singl or singling, coarse gravel, small round stones (Aasen); and that it is named from the crunching noise made in walking along it, which every one must have remarked who has ever attempted to do so. Cf. Norw. singla, to make a ringing sound, like that of falling glass or a piece of money (Aasen); Swed. dial. singla, to ring, rattle; singel-skälla, a bell on a horse's neck, singel, the clapper of a bell (Rietz). The verb singla is merely the frequentative of Swed. dial. singa, Swed. sjunga, Icel. syngja, to sing; see Sing. ¶ The change from s to sh appears again in Shingles, q. v. [†]

SHINGLES, an eruptive disease. (F., — L.) 'Shingles, how to be cured;' Index to vol. ii of Holland's tr. of Pliny, with numerous references. It is a peculiarity of the disease that the eruption often encircles the body like a belt, for which reason it was sometimes called in Latin zona, i. e. a zone, belt. Put for sengles, pl. of the old word sengle, a girth. — O. F. cengle, 'a girth'; also spelt sangle, 'a girth, a sengle'; Cot. Mod. F. sangle. — Lat. cingulum, a belt, girdle. — Lat. cingere, to surround; see Cincture. Cf. the old word surcingle, a long upper girth (Halliwell).

SHIP, a vessel, barge, large boat. (E.) M.E. schip, ship; pl. shippes, Chaucer, C.T. 2019. — A.S. scip, scyp, pl. scipu; Grein, ii. 409. + Du. schif. + Icel. skip. + Dan. skib. + Swed. skepp. + Goth. skip. + G. schiff; O. H. G. scif. β. All from Teut. type SKEPA, a ship; Fick, iii. 336; from the European ✓SKAP, to shave, dig, hollow out, which is related rather to E. shave than to E. shape, though, as these words are closely allied, it does not make much difference.

γ. The etymology is clearly shewn by the Gk. σκάφος, a digging, trench, anything hollowed out, the hull of a ship, a ship; from σκάπτειν, to dig, delve, hollow out. See Shave, Scoop. Der. ship, verb, Rich. II, ii. 2. 42; shipp-er; ship-board, ship-broker, -chandler, -man, -master, -mate, -ment (with F. suffix -ment); ship-money, -wreck, -wright, -yard; shipp-ing. And see equip. Doublet (of shipper), shipp-er, q. v.

SHIRE, a county, division of land. (E.) M.E. schire, shire; Chaucer, C.T. 586. — A.S. scir, A.S. Chron. an. 1010. It can hardly be derived directly from the verb sceran, to shear, but rather from a base SKIR parallel to ✓SKAR, to shear. It is doubtless allied to Share, with the same sense of division. See Share, Shear; and observe other derivatives from ✓SKI, to cut, appearing in E. sheath, shingle (1), &c. Der. sher-iff, put for shire-reeve, see sheriff; also shire-mote, for which see meet.

SHIRK, to avoid, get off, slink from. (L.) Better spelt sherk, which appears to be merely the same word as shark, to cheat, swindle; see Nares. Abp. Laud was accused of fraud in contracting for licences to sell tobacco; and it was said of him, 'that he might have spent his time much better . . . than thus sharking and raking in the tobacco-shops;' State-Trials, 1640, Harbottle Grimstone (R.) See Shark. So also clerk as compared with Clark, a proper name; M.E. derk = mod. E. dark; M.E. berken, to bark, &c.; also mod. E. shirt from M.E. sherte.

SHIRT, a man's garment, worn next the body. (Scand.) M.E. schirte, shirte, also sherte, shurte. Spelt shirte, Havelok, 768; sherte, Chaucer, C.T. 1566; shurte, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 139, l. 16. — Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. skjorta; Dan. skjorte. + G. schurz, schürze, an apron; cf. schürzen, to tuck up. β. So called from its being orig. a short garment; from Icel. skorta, to come short off, lack, skortir, shortness; see Short. Der. shiri-ing, stuff for making shirts. Doublet, shirt.

SHITTAH-TREE, SHITTIM-WOOD. (Heb.) Shittim is a plural form, referring to the clusters of groups of the trees; we find shittim-wood in Exod. xxv. 10, &c. The sing. shittah-tree only occurs once, Isaiah, xli. 19. — Heb. shitták, pl. shittim, a kind of acacia. The medial letter is teth, not tau. [†]

SHIVE, a slice; SHEAVE, a pulley; see Shift, Shiver (2).

SHIVER (1), to tremble, shudder. (Scand.) Spelt sheuer (= shever) in Baret (1580). This word seems to have been assimilated to the word below by confusion. It is remarkable that the M.E. forms are distinct, viz. (1) cheueren or chuiueren (chiveren), to tremble, and (2) sheueren or shuiueren, to splinter. Whereas the latter word truly begins with sh, the present word is alliterated with words beginning with ch, and is spelt with ch, appearing as chuiueren, cheueren, and chuielen. 'Lolled his chekes; Wel sydder than his chyn, þei chuieloed for elde' = his cheeks lolled about, (hanging down) even lower than his chin; and they shivered through old age; P. Plowman, B. v. 193 (where other MSS. have chuieleden, cheuerid).

'Achilles at the choice men cheuert for anger' = Achilles shivered (shook) with anger at those choice men; Destruction of Troy, 9370. 'And I haue chuietide for chele' = and I have shivered with cold; Morte Arthure, 3391. 'The temple-walles gan chuiere and schake; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 144, l. 386. 'Chyueren in yse' = to shiver in ice; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 177, l. 142. β. The persistence of the initial ch is remarkable; and takes us back to an earlier form kiueren (kiueren). This I suppose to be merely a Scand. form of E. quiver; cf. Icel. kona for E. queen, Icel. kykna as a variant of kvikna, to quicken. See Quiver.

γ. The form kiu-er-en is frequentative; the orig. word is prob. to be found in Icel. kippa, to pull, snatch, kippast við, to move suddenly, quiver convulsively; Norw. and Swed. dial. kippa, to snatch, twitch with the limbs, quiver convulsively (Aasen, Rietz). Cf. also Norw. kveppa, to slip suddenly, shake, allied to prov. E. quappe, to quake, quabbe, a quagmire, and to E. Quaver, which is also related to Quiver, already mentioned above. ¶ The resemblance to O. Du. schoeveren, 'to shiver, or shake' (Hexham), appears to be accidental. The Du. huiveren, to shiver, really comes nearer to the E. word.

SHIVER (2), a splinter, small piece, esp. of wood. (Scand.) The verb to shiver means to break into shivers or small pieces; the sb. being the older word. A shiver is a small piece, or small slice; gen. now applied to wood, but formerly also to bread. M. E. shiuier (with u = v); 'And of your white breed [bread] nat but a shiuier;' Chaucer, C. T. 7422. The pl. scifren, shivers, pieces of wood, is in Layamon, 4537; spelt sciuren (= sciuren), id. 27785. β. Shiver is the dimin. of skive, a slice; 'Easy it is of a cut loaf to steal a skive;' Titus Andron. ii. 1. 87. Spelt 'a sheeve of bread;' Warner's Albion's England (R.) 'A skiuie, or shiuier, Segmen, segmentum;' Baret (1580). This skive is the same as the technical E. word sheave, a pulley, orig. a slice of a tree, disc of wood. — Icel. skífa, a slice; cf. skífa, to cut into slices. Cf. Du. schijf, Dan. skive, Swed. skifva, G. scheibe, a slice; all mentioned s. v. Shift.

γ. The base is Scand. SKIF or SKIB, to slice, cut into thin pieces; and, on comparing this with G. scheiden, to part, from a base SKID, and Icel. skilja, to part, from a base SKIL, we see that SKI-B, SKI-D, and SKI-L are all extensions from the Aryan ✓SKA, to cut, whence also ✓SKAR, to shear (see Shear), and Teut. base SKAB, to shave (see Shave). δ. Or we may simply regard the base SKIB as a weaker form of SKAB, to shave; it comes to much the same thing. The G. schiefer, a slate, a splinter, is a related word, from the same base. Der. shiuier, verb, M. E. schiuieren, shiuieren, Chaucer, C. T. 2607; shiuier-y, easily falling into fragments.

SHOAL (1), a multitude of fishes, a troop, crowd. (L.) Gen. applied to fishes, but also to people. 'A shole of shepeheardes;' Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, May, l. 20. The same word as M. E. scoule, a school, hence, a troop, throng, crowd. Thus the word is not E., but of Lat. origin. See School. β. The double use of the word appears as early as in Anglo-Saxon; see scólu, (1) a school, (2) a multitude, Grein, ii. 410. So also Du. school, a school, a shoal; and the sailors' phrase 'a school of fishes,' given by Halliwell as a Lincolnshire word. So also Irish sgol, a school, also, 'a scule or great quantity of fish.' Der. shoal, verb, Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxi. l. 191. Doublet, school. [†]

SHOAL (2), shallow; a sandbank. (Scand.) Properly an adj. meaning 'shallow;' and, indeed, it is nothing but another form of shallow. Spelt shole, adj., Spenser, On Mutability, c. vi. st. 40. Spelt schold, with excrement d, in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Schold, or schalowe, noyste depe.' The excrement d is also found in Lowland Sc. schald, shallow, also spelt schawd. 'Quhar of the dike the schawdest was' = where was the shallowest part of the dike, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 354; where the Edinb. MS. has schaldest. The true Sc. form is shaul; as 'shaul water maks mickle din,' Sc. proverb, in Jamieson. The forms shaul, shoal result from the loss of a final guttural, which is represented by -ou in the form shallow. — Icel. skjálgr, oblique, awry; hence applied to a sloping or shelving shore. Cf. Swed. dial. skjäl, oblique, slant, wry, crooked; O. Swed. skalg, oblique, transverse (Ihre). β. Ihre remarks that O. Swed. skalg is a contracted form of skal-ig; i. e. the suffix is the same as A. S. -ig (E. -y) in stán-ig, stony. The base skjál, skjal, skæl, is the same as O. Du. scheel, 'askew or askint;' Hexham; G. scheel, schel, oblique, Gk. σκολίος, crooked, σκέλας, crook-legged. Cf. Gk. σκαληνός, uneven. See Shallow, Scalene. Hence the use of shoal as a sb., meaning (1) a shallow place, from its sloping down; or (2) a sandbank, from its sloping up. It has the former sense in Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 437; the latter in Mach. i. 7. 6. Der. shoal, verb, to grow shallow; shoal-y, adj., Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1130; shoal-i-ness.

SHOAR, a prop; the same as Shore (2).

SHOCK (1), a violent shake, concussion, onset, offence. (F., — Teut.) We find only M. E. schokken, verb, to shock, jog, move or throw with violence, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1759, 3816, 3852, 4114, 4235; but the sb. was prob. also used, and is the more original word. — F. choc, 'a shock, brunt, a hustling together, valiant encounter;' Cot. Whence choquer, 'to give a shock,' id. — O. H. G. scoc, M. H. G. schoc, a shock, shaking movement; cited by Fick, iii. 329. Cf. Du. schok, a shock, jolt; schokken, to jolt, agitate, shake; Icel. skykk, a jolt, only used in dat. pl. skykkjum, tremulously. From a Teut. base SKOKA, SKOKYA, Fick, iii. 329; evidently a derivative from SKAK, to shake; see Shake. Der. shock, verb, M. E. shokken, as above; shock-ing. Doublet, shog, q. v.

SHOCK (2), a pile of sheaves of corn. (O. Low G.) 'A shocke of come in the field;' Baret (1580). M. E. schokke, Prompt. Parv. Perhaps an E. word, but not found in A. S. However, it is found in O. Du. shocke, 'a shock, a cock, or a heape,' Hexham; whence shocken, 'to shock, to cock, or heape up.' So also Swed. shock, a crowd, heap, herd. The orig. sense must have been a heap violently pushed or tossed together, from O. Du. schocken, Du. schokken, to jolt, move, agitate, shock, shake; and the word is doubtless allied to Shock (1). Similarly sheaf is formed from the verb shove. β. A shock generally means 12 sheaves; but G. schock, Dan. skok, Swed. shock mean threescore or 60.

SHOCK (3), a rough, shaggy-coated dog. (E.) A not uncommon name for a dog. Spelt shough in Mach. iii. 1. 94. 'My little shock;' Nabbes' Bride, 1640, sig. H (Halliwell). Shock-headed is rough-headed, with shaggy or rough hair. It is supposed to be a variant of Shag, q. v.

SHODDY, a material obtained by tearing into fibres refuse woollen goods. (E.) Prob. so called from being, at first, the waste stuff shed or thrown off in spinning wool (Chambers). Cf. M. E. schode, division of the hair, Chaucer, C. T. 2009; Lowland Sc. shood, a portion of land. — A. S. scædan, to shed, divide; see Shed. ¶ Another similar material is called mungo; perhaps 'mixture,' from A. S. ge-mang, a crowd, lit. a mixture; allied to minge.

SHOE, a covering for the foot. (E.) M. E. scho, shoo, Chaucer, C. T. 255; pl. shoon, schon, shon, Will. of Palerne, 14, Havelok, 860; also sceos, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 37, l. 4 from bottom. — A. S. seod, pl. seods, Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. We also find pl. gescy, Matt. iii. 11; and gescyngian, verb, to shoe, Diplomatarium, p. 616. + Du. shoen. + Icel. skór; pl. skúar, skór. + Swed. and Dan. ska. + Goth. skohts. + G. schuch, O. H. G. scôh, scôch. β. The Teut. form is SKOHA, Fick, iii. 338. Root unknown; yet it seems reasonable to refer it to ✓SKA or SKU, to cover; see Shade, Sky. Der. shoe, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 188; shod (for shoe-d); shoe-black, -horn.

SHOG, to shake, jog, move off or away. (C.) 'Will you shog off?' Hen. V, ii. 1. 47. 'I shogge, as a carte dothe,' i. e. jolt; Palsgrave. — W. ysgogi, to wag, stir, shake; ysgog, a quick motion, jolt. Allied to E. shake; from ✓SKAG, to shake; see Shake, and Jog. ¶ The A. S. scæcam, lit. to shake, was also used in the sense 'to shog off' or depart; as shewn under the word. [†]

SHOOT, to dart, let fly, thrust forward. (E.) M. E. schotien, schotien, Pricke of Conscience, 1906; spelt scotien, Layamon, 16555. — A. S. scōtian, to dart, intransitive, as in 'scōtigende steorran' = shooting stars, A. S. Chron. an. 744. β. This is merely a secondary verb, which has taken the place of the primary verb seen in M. E. scheten, sheten, which ought to have given a mod. E. form sheet; Chaucer, C. T. 3926. — A. S. scēotan, to shoot, dart, rush; pt. t. scēat, pp. scoten. (The pp. scoten is preserved in shotten herring, a herring that has spent its roe, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 143.) + Du. schieten, pt. t. shoot, pp. geschoten. + Icel. skjóta, pt. t. skaut, pp. shotinn. + Dan. skyde. + Swed. skjuta. + G. schiessen. γ. All from a Teut. base SKUT, to shoot, answering to an Aryan form SKUD; cf. Skt. skund, to jump or go by leaps, allied to Skt. skand, to jump, jump upwards, ascend; see Scansion. Der. shoot, sb., M. E. schote, Morte Arthure, 3627; off-shoot, q. v.; shoot-er, L. L. L. iv. 1. 116; shoot-ing; and see shot, shut, shutt-le, sheet, scot, scud, skitt-ish, skitt-les.

SHOP, a stall, a place where goods are sold. (E.) M. E. schoppe, shoppe, Chaucer, C. T. 4420. — A. S. scœppa, a stall or booth; but used to translate Lat. gazoophilacium, a treasury, Luke, xxi. 1. Allied to A. S. scypen, a shed for cattle; 'ne scypene his neatum ne timbreþ' = nor builds a shed for his cattle, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. i. c. 1. + Low G. schup, a shed; Brem. Wörterb. + G. schuppen, a shed, covert, cart-house; whence O. F. eschoppe, eschope, 'a little low shop,' Cot. β. The E. word might have been borrowed from F., but it seems to have previously existed in A. S.; the word is Teutonic. The form of the base is SKUP, perhaps from ✓SKU, to cover; see Sky. Cf. Gk. σκέπας, cover, Skt. āshapā, night, 'that which obscures.' Der. shop, verb; shop-lift-ing, stealing from shops, for which see Lift (2); shop-walker.

SHORE (1), the boundary of land adjoining the sea or a lake, a strand. (E.) M. E. schore, Allit. Poems, A. 230; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2161. — A. S. score, an unauthorised word, given by Somner. The orig. sense is 'edge,' or part shorn off; from scor-en, pp. of sceran, to shear. Cf. scoren cliff (=shorn cliff), a precipice, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 33, l. 4. See Shear, Score. Der. shore, verb, to set on shore, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 869.

SHORE (2), SHOAR, a prop. support. (Scand.) M.E. shore. 'Shore, undur-settyng of a thynges þat wolde falle, Suppositorium; Prompt. Parv. "Hit hadde skorters to shoue hit vp" = it (a tree) had props to keep it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. Shorier is a sb. formed from schorien, verb, to under-prop, which (by its form) is a denominative verb from the sb. shore. = Icel. skorða, a stay, prop, esp. under a ship or boat when ashore; whence skorða, verb, to under-prop, shore up; Norw. skorda, skora, a prop (Aasen). Cf. Swed. dial. skdre, a piece of wood cut off, a piece of a tree when split from end to end (Rietz). A shore is a piece of wood shorn or cut off of a required length, so as to serve as a prop. Derived from skor-, base of skorinn, shorn, pp. of Icel. skera, to shear; see Shear. We find also Du. schoor, a prop, schoren, to prop. Thus the word is closely allied to Shore (1). Der. shore, verb.

SHORE (3), a corruption of Sewer, q. v.

SHORT, curt, scanty, not long, cut down, insufficient. (E.) M.E. schort, short, Chaucer, C. T. 748. = A.S. seort, short, Grein, ii. 407. Cf. Icel. skorta, to be short of, to lack, skortir, shortness, want; O. H. G. scurz, short. β. The Teut. base is SKORTA, short, Fick, iii. 338. Apparently formed, with Aryan suffix -ta, from ✓SKAR, to cut; see Shear. Cf. Lat. curtus, curt, short, Gk. keipeiv, to shear, from a ✓KAR, to cut, which is prob. the same root SKAR with a loss of initial s. From the Lat. curtus were borrowed Icel. hortir, G. kurz, E. curt. Der. short-ly, adv., M.E. shortly, Chaucer, C. T. 717, from A.S. sceortlice; short-ness; short-coming, hand, sight-ed, wind-ed. Also short-en, verb, cf. M.E. shorten, Chaucer, C. T. 793, A.S. sceortian (Bosworth); where, however, the mod. final -en does not really represent the M.E. suffix -en, but is added by analogy with M.E. verbs in -en, such as waken, to waken; this suffix -en was at first the mark of an intransitive verb, but was made to take an active force. The true sense of shorten is 'to become short;' see Waken. Doublet, curt.

SHOT, a missile, aim, act of shooting. (E.) M.E. schot, shot, a missile, Chaucer, C. T. 2546. = A.S. ge-sceot; 'nim þin geseot' = take thy implements for shooting; Gen. xxvii. 3. = A.S. scot, stem of pp. of scēdan, to shoot; see Shoot. + O. Fries. skot, a shot. + Icel. skot, a shot, a shooting. + Du. schot, a shot, shoot. + G. schoss, schuss, a shot. Fick, iii. 337, gives the Teut. form as SKUTA. The same word as scot, a contribution; see Scot-free. Der. shot, verb, to load with shot; shot-ed. Doublet, scot (see scot-free).

SHOULDER, the arm-joint, joint in which the arm plays. (E.) M.E. shulder, shuldre, Havelok, 604. = A.S. sculder, sculdor, Gen. ix. 23. + Du. schouder. + Swed. skuldra. + Dan. skulder. + G. schulter. Root unknown. Der. shoulder, verb, Rich. III. iii. 7. 128; shoulder-blade, -belt, -knot.

SHOUT, a loud outcry. (Unknown.) Spelt shoute, showte in Palsgrave. M.E. shouten, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 614. The origin is unknown; and the etymologies offered are unsatisfactory. 1. Wedgwood calls it 'a parallel form to hoot.' 2. E. Müller thinks that shout may be the cry of a scout, to give warning. 3. Webster and others suppose a connection with shoot, but do not explain the diphthong. 4. May we compare it with Icel. skúta, skúti, a taunt? (The Icel. skúta means to jut out.) Der. shout, sb., shout-er.

SHOVE, to push, thrust, drive along. (E.) M.E. shouen, schouen; 'to shoue hit vp' = to prop it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. This is a rare verb, of a weak form; the usual strong verb is schouwen, showuen (with latter u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 3910; pt. t. shof (printed shoue in some editions), id. Parl. of Foules, 154; pp. shouen (shoven), shoue, id. C. T. 11593. = A.S. scōfian, weak verb, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 168, l. 11; the usual strong verb is scēfian, pt. t. scēf, pl. scēfon, pp. scēfen, Grein, ii. 412. + Du. schuiven. + Icel. skúfa, skýfa. + Dan. skuffe. + Swed. skuffa. + G. schieben, pt. t. schob, pp. geschoben; O. H. G. sciuban. + Goth. skiuaban. β. All from a Teut. base SKUB; Fick, iii. 338. Allied to Skt. kshubh, to become agitated; the causal form signifies to agitate, shake, impel; hence kshobha, agitation, kshobhana, shaking. Thus the primary sense was 'to shake' or 'push.' Der. shove, sb.; shove-groat, a game in which a groat (piece of money) was shoved or pushed about on a board; also shov-el, q. v.; sheaf, q. v.

SHOVEL, an instrument with a broad blade and a handle, for shoving and lifting; a sort of spade. (E.) M.E. schouel (with u = v). + With spades and with shoueles; P. Plowman, B. vi. 192. = A.S. scōf; 'Trulla, scōff, Wright's Voc. i. 289. = A.S. scōf, base of pp. of scēfian, to shove; with suffix -l (Aryan -ra). + G. schaufel. See Shove. Der. shovel, verb, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 469. Also shovel-er, a kind of duck, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. x. c. 40. [+]

explain. (E.) Shew is the older spelling; sometimes shew is used to denote the verb, and show for the sb., but without any difference of pronunciation in mod. English. M.E. schewen, shewen; Chaucer, C. T. 9380; P. Plowman, B. i. 2. = A.S. seawian, to look, see, behold; the later sense is to make to look, point out. 'Seawiað þa lillian' = behold the lilies; Luke, xii. 27. + Du. schouwen, to inspect, view. + Dan. skue, to behold. + Goth. skawjan in comp. usskawjan, to awake. + G. schau, to behold, see. β. All from ✓SKAW

(from SKU), to see, perceive; Fick, iii. 336. From the same root are Lat. cauere, to be careful, take care, orig. to look about; Skt. kavi, wise; Curtius, i. 186. Der. show, sb., M.E. schewe, Prompt. Parv.; show-bill; shew-bread, Exod. xxv. 30; show-y, Spectator, no. 434; show-i-ly; show-i-ness; shee-n; scaw-enger. Grein gives A.S. seawian, with an accent; but cf. the Gothic form.

SHOWER, a fall of rain. (E.) Orig. a monosyllable, like flower. M.E. shour, schour, Chaucer, C. T. 1. = A.S. scūr, Grein, ii. 414. + Du. schoer. + Icel. skúr. + Swed. skur. + Goth. skura, a storm; skura windis, a storm of wind, Mark, iv. 37. + G. schauer; O. H. G. scúr.

β. All from Teut. base SKŪ-RA, Fick, iii. 336. Perhaps the orig. sense was a thick dark cloud, rain-cloud, from its obscuring the sky; cf. Lat. obscurus, and see Sky. If so, the root is ✓SKU, to cover; cf. O. H. G. scūr, schauer in the sense of a pent-house or shelter, and note that sky is from the same root. Der. shower, verb, Hen. VIII. i. 4. 63; shower-y.

SHRED, a strip, fragment, piece torn or cut off. (E.) The vowel is properly long, as in the variant scree (Halliwell). M.E. shrede, Havelok, 99. = A.S. screde, a piece, strip. 'Seeda, screde,' also 'Presegmina, præcisiones, screddan' (plural); Wright's Vocab. p. 46, col. 2, and p. 40, col. 1; whence A.S. screddian, to shred. + Icel. skrjóðr, a shred. + O. Du. schroede (Kilian); whence schrooder, 'a lopper or pruner of trees,' Hexham. + G. schrot, a piece, shred, block; whence schroten, to gnaw, cut, saw. β. All from a Teut. base SKRAUD, a strengthened form of SKRUD, for which see Shroud. Der. shred, verb, M.E. shredde, Chaucer, C. T. 8103, A.S. screddian; also scroll, q. v. Doublet, screed.

SHEW, a scold, scolding woman. (E.) M.E. shrewe, schrewe, adj., wicked, bad; applied to both sexes. The Wife of Bath says her fifth husband was 'the moste shrewe,' the most churlish of all; Chaucer, C. T. 6087. Cf. P. Plowman, B. x. 437; Prompt. Parv. Spelt screwe, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 153, l. 13; which explains mod. E. screw, a vicious horse. = A.S. scréawa, a shrew-mouse; 'Mus araneus, scréawa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 1. Somner explains scréawa as 'a shrew-mouse, which, by biting cattle, so envenoms them that they die,' which is, of course, a fable. But the fable is very old; the Lat. name araneus means 'poisonous as a spider;' and Aristotle says the bite of the shrew-mouse is dangerous to horses, and causes boils; Hist. Anim. viii. 24. 'In Italy the hardy shrews are venomous in their biting;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 58. β. Hence I would interpret A.S. scréawa as 'the biter,' from the Teut. base SKRU, to cut, tear, preserved in mod. E. shred and shroud, as well as in scruple and scrutiny; see those words. Cf. Skt. kshur, to scratch, cut, make furrows; kshura (Gk. ῥυρὸν), a razor; and note the connection of rat with Lat. radere, rodere. The sense of 'biter' or 'scratcher' will well apply to a cross child or scolding woman. The M.E. schreven, to curse, whence E. be-shrew, is merely a derivative from the sb., with reference to the language used by a shrew.

¶ Wedgwood refers to a curious passage in Higden's Polychronicon, i. 334. The Lat. text has mures nocentissimos, which Trevisa translates by wel schreued mys = very harmful mice. The prov. G. scher, schermus, a mole, is from the more primitive form of the same root, viz. the ✓SKAR, to cut. Der. shrew-d, be-shrew; also shrew-ish, Com. Errors, iii. 1. 2; shrew-ish-ly, -ness; also screw (2).

SHEWED, malicious, wicked; cunning, acute. (E.) The older sense is malicious, mischievous, scolding or shrew-like, as in Middle. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 323, &c. M.E. schreued, shreued, accursed, depraved, wicked; 'shreued folk' = wicked people, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. c. 4, l. 398; cf. schreuednesse, wickedness, id. l. 401. Shreued is lit. 'accursed,' pp. of schreven, to curse, beshrew; Chaucer, C. T. 14532, 14533; and the verb is formed from the M.E. adj. schrewe, evil, malicious; see Shrew. Der. shreud-ly, -ness.

SHEW-MOUSE, an animal like a mouse; see Shrew.

SHRIEK, to screech, cry aloud, scream. (Scand.) A doublet of screech. Spenser has shriek, F. Q. vi. 5. 8; but also scrike, vi. 5. 18. Baret (1580) has scriek. M.E. skriken, Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (Group B. 4590); where other spellings are schrichen, schriken. See Screech. Der. shriek, sb., Mach. iv. 3. 168. Also shrike, q. v. Doublet, screech.

SHRIEVALTY, sheriffalty; see Sheriff.

SHRIET, SHRIVE; see Shrove-tide.

SHRIKE, the butcher-bird. (Scand.) Named from its shrill cry. — Icel. skrikja, a shrieker; also, the shriek or butcher-bird. — Icel. skrikja, to titter, but properly to shriek; see SHRIEK, SCREECH. Cf. A.S. scric; prob. borrowed from Scand. 'Turdus, scric;' Wright's Vocab. i. 281, col. 1; also p. 29, col. 1.

SHRILL, acute in sound, piercing, loud. (Scand.) M.E. shrill, shrill; pl. shrille, Chaucer, 15401; also shirle, in Levens and Palsgrave. The same word as Lowland Sc. shirl, a shrill cry; shirl, to cry shrilly. Of Scand. origin. — Norweg. skryla, skryla, to cry shrilly; skral, a shrill cry (Aasen). Cf. Swed. dial. skrdla, to cry loudly, said of children (Rietz); A.S. scralletan, to make a loud outcry (Grein). Also Low G. schrell, shrill; Bremen Wörterbuch; prov. G. schrill, shrill, schrillen, to sound shrill (Flügel).

β. From a base SKRAL, a strengthened form of Teut. base SKAL, to make a loud noise, ring, whence not only G. schallen, to resound, schall, an echo, but also M.E. schil, shil, shrill. We find the adv. skulle, shrilly (with various readings schille, schirle), in P. Plowman, C. vii. 46. The base SKAL is well represented by the Icel. strong verb skjalla, skella, pt. t. skall, pp. skolinn; and by the G. *schallen, pt. t. *scholl, pp. *schollen, only used in the comp. erschallen. Cf. Lithuan. skalti, to bark, give tongue, said of a hound; and note the E. derivative scol-d; see SCOLD. Der. shrill-y, shrill-ness.

SHRIMP, a small shell-fish. (E.) M.E. shrimp, Chaucer, C. T. 13961. Cf. Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, pinch; scrimp, scanty; 'scrimpt stature' = dwarfish stature, Burns, To Jas. Smith, l. 14. We may call it an E. word; but, instead of scrimpan, we find A.S. scrimman, used as equivalent to scrimcan, to shrink, A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 6, l. 15. Shrimp is just a parallel form to shrink; and it is probable that parallel Teut. forms, SKRIM and SKRIN, existed, as well as the longer forms SKRIMP and SKRINK.

β. Rietz makes no doubt that there was an O. Swed. skrimpa, a strong verb, as well as a shorter form skrina. Traces of O. Swed. skrimpa occur in Swed. skrumpan, Dan. skrumpan, shrivelled; and we may certainly infer the existence of an old Teut. base SKRAMP*, to pinch, whence a strong verb was formed, with infin. *scrimpan, pt. t. *scrap, pp. *scrumpan. Hence, by loss of initial s, we have the Teut. base KRAMP (Fick, iii. 49), and the E. crimp, cramp, crumple; whence lastly, by loss of initial c, we have rimple, old form of ripple, and rumple. See CRIMP, CRAMP; and see SHRINK.

γ. Even in English we have clear traces of the same strong verb, since (besides shrimp) we find prov. E. skrammed, benumbed with cold, prov. E. shrup, to shrug, shrink, and scrump, to double up. So also G. schrumpe, a wrinkle, schrumphen, to shrink.

SHRINE, a place in which sacred things are deposited, an altar. (L.) M.E. schrin; dat. schryne, K. Alisaunder, 1670. — A.S. scrin, the ark (of the covenant), Jos. iii. 8, iv. 7. — Lat. scrinium, a chest, box, case. Root uncertain. Der. en-shrine.

SHRINK, to wither, contract; to recoil. (E.) M.E. shrinken, to contract, draw together; pt. t. shronk, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 1, l. 38; pp. shrunken, Gower, C. A. i. 98, l. 27. — A.S. scrincan, pt. t. scranc, pp. scruncen, to contract, shrivel up; chiefly in comp. for-scrincan, pt. t. forseranc, Mark, iv. 6. + O. Du. schrinken, 'to grow lesser or to shrink,' Hexham. And cf. Swed. skrynka, a wrinkle; skrynkla, to wrinkle, to rumple.

β. From a Teut. base SKRANK (SKRAK), to shrivel, wrinkle, draw together; parallel to the base SKRAMP, appearing in SHRIMP, q. v.; and see SERAGGY. Further allied to SHRIVEL, and prob. to SHRUG. γ. Perhaps the orig. sense was to bend or twist together; so that, by loss of final s, we may attribute cringa, cringle, crinkle, crank, to the same root; just as crimp, cramp, crumple belong to the root SKRAMP (SKRAP).

SHRIVE, to confess; see SHROVE-TIDE.

SHRIVEL, to wrinkle, crumple up. (Scand.) Shak. has shrivel up, Per. ii. 4. 9. It does not seem to appear in Middle English. It is a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -el, from the base shrive, shrif, from an older skrip or skrap, of which we have a clear instance in the O. Northumbrian scrapa, to pine away, lit. to shrink or shrivel. In Mark, ix. 18, where the Lat. text has arescit (A.V. pineth away), the A.S. version has forserincp, the Lindisfarne MS. has scrineð, and the Rushworth MS. screpes. β. This is rather Scand. than E., and we find allied words in Norweg. skrypa, to waste, skryp, skrye, adj., transitory, frail (Aasen); Swed. dial. skrypp, to shorten, contract, skryp, weak, feeble, not durable (Rietz); Swed. skröplig, feeble, Dan. skröbelig, infirm, Icel. skrjúpr, brittle, frail (from a base skrup).

γ. Probably from the Teut. base SKRAMP, for which see SHRIMP; we may perhaps suppose shrivel (for shrivele) to result from shrimp by loss of m; cf. Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, scrimpt, diminished.

δ. It is worth noting that we not only have such words as Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, scrump, to wrinkle, and E. shrimp, shrivel, but (without initial s) E. cramp, crimp, crumple, and again (without initial c) E. rumple, rivel; where rivel and shrivel mean much the same.

SHROUD, a garment, the dress of the dead. (E.) The word had formerly the general sense of garment, clothing, or covering. M.E. shroud, schroud, P. Plowman, B. prol. 2; shrud, Havelok, 303. — A.S. scrūd, a garment, clothing, Grein, ii. 412. + Icel. skrud, the shrouds of a ship, furniture of a church; Norweg. skrud, dress, ornament; Dan. and Swed. skrud, dress, attire.

β. Closely allied to SHRED (as shewn under that word), and the orig. sense was a shred or piece of cloth or stuff, a sense nearly retained in that of winding-sheet. Chapman has shroud in the very sense of shred or scrap of stuff, tr. of Homer's Odyssey, b. vi. l. 274. Moreover, a shred is a piece roughly cut off; cf. G. schrot, a cut, a piece, schroten, to cut, saw; allied to Lithuan. skróditi, skrósti, to cut, slice, groove, skraudus, rough, brittle, and to Lithuan. skrandu, a worn-out fur coat or skin. γ. And further allied (see Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 172) to O. H. G. serintan, serindan, to burst, split, G. schrund, a rift, from the Teut. base SKRAND, to become brittle; Fick, iii. 339. Cf. also Goth. dis-skreitjan, to tear to shreds, dis-skritjan, to be rent apart; Skt. krintana, cutting, kriti, to cut; all to be referred to the widespread ✓ SKAR, to cut. Der. shroud, verb, A.S. scrýdan, Matt. vi. 30; en-shroud. Also shrouds, s. pl., K. John, v. 7. 53, part of the rigging of a vessel.

SHROVE-TIDE, SHROVE-TUESDAY, a time or day (Tuesday) on which shrift or confession was formerly made. (L. and E.) Shrove-tide is the tide or season for shrift; Shrove-tuesday is the day preceding Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent. Shrove is here used as a sb., formed from shrove, the pt. t. of the verb to shrive; except in the two above compounds, the sb. invariably takes the form shrift.

β. The verb to shrive (pt. t. shrove, pp. shriven) is M.E. schriuen, shriven, of which we find the pt. t. shrof, shroof in P. Plowman, B. iii. 44 (footnote), and the pp. shriuen in Chaucer, C. T. 7677. — A.S. scrifan, to shrive, to impose a penance or compensation, to judge; pt. t. scráf, pp. scrifen; Grein, ii. 411.

γ. But although it thus appears as a strong verb, it does not appear to be a true Teut. word. It was rather borrowed (at a very early period) from Lat. scribere, to write, to draw up a law, whence also G. schreiben (also conjugated as a strong verb), to write. The particular sense is due to the legal use of the word, signifying (1) to draw up a law, (2) to impose a legal obligation or penalty, (3) to impose or prescribe a penance; see Bosworth. B. The sb. shrift, is M.E. shrift (dat. shrifte), P. Plowman, C. xvii. 30, A.S. scrift, confession, Laws of Æthelred, pt. v. § 22, pt. vi. § 27, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 310, 322; and just as the A.S. verb scrifan is due to Lat. scribere, so A.S. scrift is due to the Lat. pp. scriptus. The Icel. skript or skrift, Swed. skrift, Dan. skifte, shrift, are all borrowed from A.S.

SHRUB (1), a low dwarf tree. (E.) M.E. shrob, schrub, P. Plowman, C. i. 2. — A.S. scrob, a shrub; preserved in Serob-scr, Shropshire, A.S. Chron. an. 1094, Serobbes-byrig, Shrewsbury (lit. Shrubs-bury), id. an. 1016, Serobbes-byrig-scr, Shrewsburyshire, the older name of Shropshire, id. an. 1006. We also find the form scrybbe, a shrubbery, Diplomatarius Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 525, l. 22.

We also have the place-name Wormwood-scrubbs, near London. + Norweg. skrubba, the dwarf cornel-tree (Aasen). β. Cf. also prov. E. shruft, light rubbishy wood, seroff, refuse of wood; the allusion is, I suppose, to the stunted mode of growth, shrub being from the Teut. base SKRAMP, to contract, noted under SHRIMP; and see SHRIVEL. Cf. prov. E. skrumpe, to shrink.

γ. In confirmation of the relation of shrub to shrimp, we find a complete parallel in the relation of prov. E. serog, a shrub or stunted bush, to shrink; see SERAGGY, SHRUG, SHRINK. δ. I believe scrub to be also closely related, as shewn under that word, but to refer to a later use, and to be, in fact, a mere derivative. Der. shrubby; shrubby-ery, a coined word, by the analogy of vine-ery, pin-ery, and the like. Also scrub, q. v.

SHRUB (2), a drink made of lemon-juice, spirit, sugar, and water. (Arab.) Chiefly made with rum. In Johnson's Dict. — Arab. shirb, shurb, a drink, a beverage. — Arab. root shariba, he drank; Rich. Dict. p. 887. Doublet, syrop. And see sherbet.

SHRUG, to draw up, contract. (Scand.) In Temp. i. 2. 367; Cor. i. 9. 4. Generally used of drawing up the shoulders, but the true sense is to shrink. 'The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrugging come over her body;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. ii. (R.) 'Shruggy, Frigulo.' Prompt. Parv. — Dan. skrugge, skrukke, to stoop; skruk-rygget, humpbacked; Swed. dial. skrukka, skrua, to huddle oneself up, to sit in a crouching position, allied to skrinka, to shrink (Rietz); see SHRINK. Cf. Icel. skrukka, an old shrimp; and see SERAGGY. Observe the proportion; shrug : shrink :: shrub : shrimp.

SHUDDER, to tremble with fear or horror. (O. Low G.) 'Alas! they make me shoder;' Skelton, Colin Clout, 68. M.E. shoderen, shuderen; pt. t. schoderide, Morte Arthure, 2106; pres. part. schudrinde, Saint Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 15, l. 12. [Not found in A.S.; but see SCUD.] It is a frequentative verb, formed with the usual suffix -er from the Teut. base SKUD, to shake, appearing in O.

Saxon skuddian. 'Skuddiat it fan iuwun skóhun' = shake it [the dust] from your shoes; Heliand, 1948. O. Du. schudden, 'to shake or to tremble'; Hexham; he also gives 'schudden een boom, to shake a tree, schudden van koude, to quake for cold; schudden het hooft, to shake or nod ones head; schudderden, to laugh with an open throat that his head shakes.' + O. H. G. scutian, G. schütten, to shoot corn, pour, shed, discharge; schütterten, to shake, tremble, quake. Perhaps the Teut. base SKUD is allied to SKUT, to shoot; Fick, iii. 338. Der. shudder, sb.

SHUFFLE, to push about, practise shifts. (Scand.) 'When we have shuffled off [pushed or shoved aside] this mortal coil'; Hamlet, iii. i. 67. Merely a doublet of Scuffle, and the frequentative of shove; but of Scand., not E. origin, as shewn by the double f. The sense is 'to keep pushing about,' as in 'shuffle the cards.' [It seems to have taken up something of the sense of shiftiness, with which it has no etymological connection.] See Scuffle, Shove. Der. shuffle, sb.; shuffle-er.

SHUN, to avoid, keep clear of, neglect. (E.) M. E. shunien, shonien, P. Plowman, B. prol. 174. — A. S. scūnian, not common except in the comp. on-scūnian, to detest, refuse, reject, Gen. xxxix. 10. In Ps. lxxix. 2, ed. Spelman, the Lat. revereantur is translated by andracian, with the various readings seonnyn, forwandian, and scūnian. The pp. gescūnned is in Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 318, last line. The orig. sense is 'to flee away' or 'hurry off'; allied words are Icel. skunda, skynda, Dan. skynde, Swed. skynda sig, to hasten, hurry, speed; O. H. G. scuntan, to urge on. See Schooner. Der. shun-less, Cor. ii. 2. 116; schoon-er. Also shun-t, q. v.

SHUNT, to turn off upon a side-rail. (Scand.) As a word used on railways, it was borrowed from prov. E. shunt, to turn aside. But the word itself is old. M. E. shuntien, to start aside, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1902; schownten, schownten, schonten, schuntien, Morte Arthur, 736, 1055, 1324, 1759, 2106, 2428, 3715, 3816, 3842; shunt, Destruction of Troy, 600, 729, 10377, 10998. 'If at 3e shap 3ow to shount' = if ye intend to escape; Alexander (Ashmole MS.), 2143; and see Ancren Riwele, p. 242, note d. β. Shuntien stands for shunden, being easier to pronounce quickly. The orig. sense is to speed, hasten, flee, escape. — Icel. skunda, to speed; see further under Shun.

SHUT, to fasten a door, close. (E.) M. E. shutten, shitten. 'To close and to shutte'; P. Plowman, B. prol. 105. 'The 3atis weren schit' = the gates were shut; Wyclif, John, xx. 19. — A. S. scyttan, to shut; 'sero, ic scytte sum loc oððe hæpsige,' i. e. I shut a lock or hasp it; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 220. To shut a door was to fasten it with a bolt or sliding bar, called a shuttle or shuttle (see Shuttle), which took its name from being shot across. We still say 'to shoot a bolt.' The A. S. scyttan stands for scut-ian (by the usual change from u to y); derived from scut, base of the plural of pt. t. of scōtan, to shoot; see Shoot. + Du. schutten, to shut in, lock up; schut, a fence, screen, partition, O. Du. schut, an arrow, dart (Hexham); from schieten, to shoot. + G. schützen, to protect, guard, shut off water; schutz, a guard, sluice, flood-gate, O. H. G. schuz, a quick movement; from schieszen, O. H. G. sciozan, to shoot. Der. shutt-er; shutt-le, q. v.

SHUTTLE, an instrument for shooting the thread of the woof between the threads of the warp in weaving. (E.) In Job, vii. 6. So called from its being shot between the threads. 'An honest weaver . . . As e'er shot shuttle'; Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act v. sc. 1. Also spelt shuttle; in Palsgrave, 'shyttell for a weaver.' M. E. schitel; spelt scyttyl, Prompt. Parv. p. 447, also schetyl, id. p. 470, l. 2. The same word as M. E. schitel, a bolt of a door, similarly named from its being shot across. 'Schyttyl, of sperynge [sparring, barraging], Pessulum'; Prompt. Parv. The A. S. form would be scyttel, but we only find the longer form scyttels, pl. scyttelas, in the sense of bar of a door. 'Scēotāþ þa ysenan scyttelas' [misprinted scyttelas in Bosworth] = shoot the iron bolts; Gospel of Nicodemus, ed. Thwaites, c. xxvii.

β. The word scyttels (= scyt-el-sa) is formed with the double suffix -el-sa from scut, base of the pl. of the pt. t. of scōtan, to shoot; see Shut, Shoot. Shuttle is the same word, but without the suffix -sa. + Dan. skytte, skytte, a shuttle; Swed. dial. skyttel, sküttel; cf. Swed. skotspole, a shuttle, lit. a shot-spool. Der. shuttle-cock, q. v.

SHUTTLE-COCK, a piece of wood or cork stuck with feathers, used as a plaything. (E.) Spelt shyttelcooke in Palsgrave; shuttel-cock, Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 804. Prob. called cock from being stuck with feathers and flying through the air. [Not shuttle-cock, as Todd fancies, contrary to evidence and probability; for they were most likely at first made of wood, and struck with a wooden battledore.] Called shuttle from being shot backwards and forwards like a weaver's shuttle; in fact, the shuttle-cock seems to have succeeded an older plaything called simply shuttle or shittle. 'Schytte, chyllys game, Sagitella'; Prompt. Parv. See further under Shuttle; and see Skittles.

SHY, timid, cautious, suspicious. (Scand.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 2. 138; v. 54. M. E. skyg, scrupulous, careful to shun (evil), Allit. Poems, B. 21. It is rather a Scand. than an E. word; we also find M. E. schey, shy, (said of a horse), Prompt. Parv. p. 444; spelt secohn (also of a horse), Ancren Riwele, p. 242, l. 9; answering to the rare A. S. seoh, timid, Grein, ii. 405. — Dan. sky, shy, skittish; Swed. skygg, skittish, starting, shy, coy; Swed. dial. sky, the same (Rietz). β. Prob. allied to M. H. G. schiech, schich, mod. G. scheu, timid, shy, and O. H. G. sciuhan, to frighten, or (intransitively) to fear, shy at, whence (through the French) we have E. eschew. Der. shy-ly, shyness; shy, verb; and see eschew, skew. [†]

SIB, related. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 26. See further under Gossip. Der. gos-sip.

SIBILANT, making a hissing sound. (L.) We call s and z 'sibilant' letters. Bacon has 'sibilation or hissing sound'; Nat. Hist. § 176. — Lat. sibilant, stem of pres. part. of sibilare, to hiss. — Lat. sibilus, adj. hissing; formed from a base SIB or SIP which is probably imitative of a whistling sound. Cf. Russ. sopiete, to pipe, to snore; and E. sip, sup. Der. sibil-ation.

SIBYL, a pagan prophetess. (L., — Gk.) Shak. has both Sibyl and Sybill; Oth. iii. 4. 70; Merch. Ven. i. 2. 116. Cotgrave has: 'Sybille, Sybill, one of the 10 Sybilla, a prophetesse.' The word was rather borrowed directly from Lat. than through the F., being known from Virgil. — Lat. Sibylla, a Sibyl; Virgil, Æn. vi. 10. — Gk. Σιβυλλα, a Sibyl. Origin uncertain; see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. i. 109. Der. sibyll-ine, adj.; from Lat. Sibyllinus. [†]

SICK, affected with disease, ill, inclined to vomit. (E.) M. E. sik, sek; pl. seke, Chaucer, C. T. 18. — A. S. secc; John, xi. 1. + Du. ziek. + Icel. siúkr. + Dan. syg. + Swed. sjuk. + G. siech. + Goth. siuks. β. All from a Teut. form SEUKA, ill; from the Teut. base SUK, to be sick or ill, appearing in the Goth. strong verb siukan, to be ill, pt. t. sauk, pp. sukans. Fick, iii. 325. Cf. Strong. Der. sick-ness, A. S. seccnes, Matt. viii. 28; sick-en, verb (intrans.) Macb. iv. 3. 173, (trans.) Hen. VIII. i. 1. 82; sick-ly, -ly, -ness; sick-ly, adj., M. E. sekly, Will. of Paleme, 1505; sick-li-ness, Rich. II. ii. 1. 142.

SICKER, SIKER, certain, secure. (L.) Siker is a well-known Lowland Sc. word. M. E. siker, Chaucer, C. T. 11451; Layamon, 15092. Not a Teut. word at all, but borrowed from Lat. securus; see Secure. The O. Fries. siker, sikur, Du. zeke, G. sicher (O. H. G. sichur), Swed. säker, Dan. sikker, W. sier, are all borrowed from the Latin, which accounts for their strong likeness in form to one another. Doublets, secure, sure.

SICKLE, a hooked instrument for cutting grain. (L.) M. E. sikil, Wyclif, Mark, iv. 29. — A. S. sicol, Mark, iv. 29. — Lat. secula, a sickle (White); formed, with suffix -u-la (Aryan -ra) of the agent, from sec-are, to cut; see Secant. ¶ The G. sichel is also from Latin; the truly English words from the same root are saw (1), scythe, and sedge.

SIDE, the edge or border of a thing, region, part, party. (E.) M. E. side, syde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 8; Chaucer, C. T. 560. — A. S. side, John, xix. 34, xx. 20. + Du. zijde. + Icel. siða. + Dan. side. + Swed. sida. + G. seite, O. H. G. sita. β. All from a Teut. base SIDA, a side, Fick, iii. 313. It is probable that the orig. sense was 'that which hangs down' or 'is extended,' as it certainly seems to be closely connected with A. S. sīd, long, wide, spacious, M. E. siid, spelt syid in the Prompt. Parv., but now obsolete; Icel. siðr, long, hanging down. Der. side-board, Milton, P. R. ii. 350; side-box, one-side-ed, many-side-ed, side-saddle, side-ways, side-wise, side-ing. Also side, verb, Cor. i. 1. 197, iv. 2. 2; side-ling, side-long, adv., Milton, P. L. vi. 197, M. E. sideling, sidlings, spelt sydyngs, Morte Arthur, 1039, where the suffix -ling or -long is adverbial, as explained under Headlong. Hence sidelong, adj. Also a-side, q. v., be-side, q. v. Also side-s-men, officers chosen to assist a churchwarden, Blount, Nomolexicon, where a ridiculous explanation from synods-men (1) is attempted, quite unnecessarily; see Notes and Queries, 5 S. xi. 504. They were also called side-men or quest-men; Halliwell.

SIDEREAL, starry, relating to the stars. (L.) Milton has sideral, P. L. x. 693. Phillips, ed. 1706, has sideréal, sideréan. Sideral is from Lat. sideralis, and is a correct form; sideré-al is coined from Lat. sideré-us, adj. All from sider, crude form of sidus, a constellation, also, a star. Root uncertain; see Silver. Der. (from Lat. sidus) con-sider.

SIEGE, a sitting down, with an army, before a fortified place, in order to take it. (F., — L.) The lit. sense is merely 'seat'; see Trench, Select Glossary. We find it in this sense in Shak. Meas. iv. 2. 101; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 39. M. E. sege, (1) a seat, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 31; (2) a siege, Barbour's Bruce, iv. 45, ix. 332. In Ancren Riwele, p. 238, l. 1, sege means 'a throne.' — O. F. siege, masc., a seat, throne; mod. F. siège. (Probably there was also a form sege, like Norman F. secl for siècle in Vie de St. Auban, 1051.) Cf. Ital. sedia, fem., seggio (for sedio), masc., a chair, seat. β. Scheler remarks that these words cannot be immediately from Lat. sedes, but are rather from a verb *sieger, suggested by assieger, to besiege, answering to Low Lat. assediare (Ital. assediare); cf. Ital. assedio, asseggio, a siege, blockade. Again, Low Lat. assediare is from a sb. assedium, formed (with prep. ad) in imitation of the Lat. obsidium, a siege.

Y. In any case, the derivation is ultimately from Lat. sedere, to sit, cognate with E. Sit, q. v. Der. be-siege. [†]

SIENNA, a pigment used in painting. (Ital.) Raw sienna and burnt sienna are the names of two pigments, made from earth, and properly from earth of Sienna, which is the name of a place in Tuscany, due S. of Florence.

SIEVE, a strainer for separating coarse particles from fine ones. (E.) M. E. sive, Chaucer, C. T. 16408; her-seve, a hair-sieve, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 7 (Stratmann). — A. S. sife; 'Cribra, vel cribellum, sife,' Wright's Vocab., i. 83, col. 1; spelt sibi in the 8th cent., id. ii. 105, col. 1. + Du. zeef. + G. sieb, M. H. G. sip. β. 'The name may prob. be taken from the implement having orig. been made of sedge or rushes;' Wedgwood. Cf. North of Eng. seave, a rush (Brockett); which is Icel. sef, sedge, Swed. säf, Dan. siv, a rush.

¶ Not to be connected with A. S. sihan, seón, to filter, G. seihen; nor with A. S. stpan, to sip. A sieve is properly for dry articles. Der. sift, q. v.

SIFT, to separate particles as with a sieve. (E.) M. E. siften, Chaucer, C. T. 16409; sive (= sieve) being in the line above. — A. S. siften, syftan, Exod. xii. 34. — A. S. sife, a sieve. + Du. ziften, to sift, zift, a sieve; from zeef, a sieve. See Sieve. β. We also find Dan. sigte, to sift, sigte, sb., a sieve or riddle; Swed. sikta, to sift, sikt, a sieve; Icel. sikta, sigta, to sift. But these are from some different source; perhaps from Icel. sigá (pp. siginn), to let sink, let slide down, let drop.

SIGH, to inhale and respire with a long deep breath. (E.) M. E. sighen, sizen, siken; in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 263, we have syked, with various readings sykede, sizhede; also syhede, syzte, id. C. xxi. 276. — A. S. sican, to sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8; ed. Sweet, p. 92, l. 35. It is a strong verb; pt. t. sác, pp. sicen; with a frequentative form siccetan, to sigh, sob. β. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. A. S. swógan, to sound; E. sough, sob; Swed. sucka, Dan. sukke, to sigh, groan. Perhaps related to Sick, q. v. Der. sigh, sb., M. E. sike, Chaucer, C. T. 11176.

SIGHT, act of seeing, that which is seen, view, spectacle. (E.) M. E. sight, Chaucer, C. T. 4982. — A. S. síht, or rather ge-síht, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 4; cap. xli. § 4. But it is almost always spelt gesíht, gesieht, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, i. 454. Formed with suffix -i or -ō (= -ā = Aryan -ta) from seg-en, geseg-en, pp. of seón, to see; see See. + Du. geziget. + Dan. sigte. + Swed. sigt. + G. sicht; O. H. G. síht. Der. sight, verb; sight-ed, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 388; sight-hole, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 171; sight-less, Macb. i. 5. 50; sight-ly, K. John, ii. 143; sight-li-ness.

SIGN, a mark, proof, token, omen, notice, (F., — L.) M. E. signe, Chaucer, C. T. 10365; Ancren Riwe, p. 70, l. 1. — O. F. signe, 'a signe, mark'; Cot. — Lat. signum, a mark, token. Root uncertain. Der. sign, verb, K. John, iv. 2. 222; sign-board, sign-manual, sign-post. Also sign-at-ure, from F. signature, 'a signature,' Cot.; from Lat. signatura; cf. the fut. part. of signare, to sign. And see sign-al, sign-et, sign-ify, re-sign.

SIGNAL, a token, sign for giving notice. (F., — L.) M. E. signal, Gower, C. A. iii. 57, l. 18. — F. signal, 'a signal'; Cot. — Low Lat. signale, neut. of Lat. signalis, belonging to a sign. — Lat. signum, a sign; see Sign. Der. signal, verb; signal-ly, signal-ise.

SIGNET, a seal, privy-seal. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 49. — F. signet, 'a signet, seal, stamp'; Cot. Dimin. of F. signe; see Sign.

SIGNIFY, to indicate, mean. (F., — L.) M. E. signifien; spelt sygnifye, Rob. of Glouc. p. 345, l. 4. And see O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28, ll. 3, 8, 11, 12. — F. signifier, 'to signifie, betoken'; Cot. — Lat. significare, to shew by signs. — Lat. signi = signo, crude form of signum, a sign; and -fic, for facere, to make; see Sign and Fact. Der. signific-ant, from Lat. significanti, stem of pres. part. of significare; hence significant, sb., 1 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 26; significance, from F. significance (Cot.), a false form which supplanted the true O. F. significance (Cot.), whence M. E. signifiance, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28, l. 20, all from Lat. significantia; significat-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 14985, from F. signification = Lat. acc. significationem; signific-at-ive, from Lat. significativus.

SIGNOR, SIGNIOR, sir. (Ital., — L.) Spelt signior, Two Gent. iii. 1. 279; &c. — Ital. signore, sir, a lord. — Lat. seniore, acc. of senior, an elder; see Senior. ¶ Cf. Span. señor, señora. Der. signor-a, from Ital. signora, a lady, fem. of signore. Doublets, sir, sire, señor, senior, seignior.

SILENCE, stillness, muteness. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. silence, Ancren Riwe, p. 22, l. 6. — F. silence, 'silence,' Cot. — Lat.

silentia, silence, a being silent. — Lat. silent-, the stem of pres. part. of silere, to be still. + Goth. silan, only in the compound ana-silan, to become silent, Mark, iv. 39. Thus the base is SIL; whence also Seldom, q. v. Der. silent (in much later use, though etymologically a more orig. word), L. L. L. ii. 24, from Lat. silent-, stem of pres. part. of silere; silent-ly.

SILEX, flint, quartz. (L.) Merely Lat. silex, flint (stem silic-). Root uncertain. Der. silic-a, silic-i-ous, coined from the stem.

SILHOUETTE, a shadow-outline or profile filled in with a dark colour. (F.) This cheap and meagre form of portrait, orig. made by tracing the outline of a shadow thrown on to a sheet of paper, was named, in derision, after Etienne de Silhouette, minister of finance in 1759, who introduced several reforms which were considered unduly parsimonious. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Sismondi, Histoire des Français, tom. xix. pp. 94, 95; Taylor, Words and Places.

SILK, the delicate, soft thread produced by certain caterpillars, and the stuff woven from it. (L., — Gk., — Chinese?) M. E. silk, Chaucer, C. T. 10927. — A. S. seole (put for sile, just as meole = mile), silk, 'Bombix, seole-wyrm; Sericum, seole'; Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 1. Cf. Icel. silki, Swed. silke, Dan. silke; all of which, like A. S. seole, are mere adaptations of Lat. sericum, silk, by the common change of r into l.

β. Lat. sericum is the neut. of Sericus, of or belonging to the Seres. — Gk. Σήρες, pl., the name of the people from whom the ancients first obtained silk; gen. supposed to be the Chinese. Professor Douglas writes: 'The Lat. Seres and Sericum are probably derived from the Chinese word for silk, which is variously pronounced se (English e), sei, sai, sat, sz, &c.; see Williams, Chin. Dict. p. 835.' Cf. Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 182. Der. silk-mercer, silk-weaver; silk-worm, A. S. seole-wyrm, as above; silk-en, A. S. seolcen, Wright's Vocab. i. 40, l. 3; silk-y, silk-i-ness. Also serge, q. v.

SILL, the timber or stone at the foot of a door or window. (E.) The true sense seems to be 'base' or 'basis'; sometimes 'floor.' M. E. sille, syll. 'Sylle of an howse, Silla, soliva'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt selle, Chaucer, C. T. 3820. — A. S. syl, a base, support. 'Basis, syl'; Wright's Vocab. i. 86, col. 1; a later copy of the same vocabulary has: 'Bassis, sulle'; id. 95, col. 2. + Icel. syll, svill, a sill, door-sill. + Swed. syll; Swed. dial. svill (Rietz). + Dan. syld, the base of a frame-work building. + G. schwelle, O. H. G. swelli, a sill, threshold, beam. + Goth. suja, the sole of a shoe, properly a foundation, whence gasuljan, to found, lay a foundation for, Matt. vii. 25; Luke, vi. 48. β. The base is SUL, put for an older SWAL, as shewn by the Icel. svill, G. schwelle; so that the derivation is from the Teut. base SWAL, to swell (Fick, iii. 327, 363); from the 'swell' or 'rise' in the doorway caused by the bar or beam used as a sill or threshold; see Swell. Similarly, a rising of the sea is called a swell; cf. G. schwellen, to raise, einen Bach schwellen, to cause a brook to rise by means of a wooden dam across it. γ. The connection with Lat. sōla, the sole of the foot, is doubtful, as it is not easy to connect this with the Teut. base. ¶ Not to be confused with A. S. syl, a pillar, column, in Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. i. § 4; this is quite a different word, with a different sense, though possibly connected; it answers to G. säule, a pillar. Der. ground-sill, q. v.

SILLABUB, SYLLABUB, a mixture of wine with milk and sugar. (E. and Scand.) Spelt sillibub in Minshew, ed. 1627, who derives it from swilling bubbles. But the form is corrupt, a better form being sillibouk. 'Sillibouke or sillibub, Laict aigre'; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. Cotgrave gives: 'Laict aigre, whay; also, a sillibub or merribouke.' Halliwell gives 'sillybawk, a sillabub,' as a Lincolnshire word. It is obvious that a corruption from bouk to bub is easy, whereas a change from bub to bouk is phonetically impossible. We may therefore assume sillibouk as the older form, at the same time noting that another name for it is merribouk. Cf. 'merrybawks, a cold posset, Derbyshire'; Halliwell.

β. The prov. E. bouk is a well-known word for 'belly'; Mr. Peacock notes bouk as the Lincolnshire form; so that merri-bouk = 'merry belly,' presumably from the exhilarating effects of the wine in the mixture, in contradistinction to small beer or belly-vengeance, as it is commonly termed (Halliwell). Bouk is from Icel. búkr, the belly; see Bulk (2). γ. The meaning of silly-bouk is not certainly known; but, as the word is Northern, we might suppose silly-bouk to be a parallel form to merry-bouk, assigning to silly the sense of 'lean, meagre,' as in Jamieson, or weakly, infirm, as in Brockett. It might then denote the unsubstantial nature of the drink, as regards its sustaining powers.

δ. A derivation from swill-bouk or swell-bouk is more probable; the loss of the w can be justified by supposing a Scand. origin, as in the curious Icel. sygr, a drink, a beverage, allied to Icel. sulla, to swill; see Swill. The O. Du. swel-buyck, 'a drie or a windie dropsie,' Hexham, is worth notice; from O. Du. swellen, to swell, and buyck, a 'bouk' or belly.

SILLY, simple, harmless, foolish. (E.) The word has much changed its meaning. It meant 'timely'; then lucky, happy, blessed, innocent, simple, foolish. M.E. sely, Chaucer, C. T. 3601, 4088, 5952, 13442; Havelok, 477; P. Plowman's Crede, 442; and see sely, seely, seilye in Gloss. to Spec. of English, ed. Skeat. — A.S. sēlig, more usually gēdlig (the prefix ge- making no difference), happy, prosperous, fortunate; see Sweet, A.S. Reader. Formed with the common adj. suffix -ig (E. -y) from A.S. sēl, a time, season, occasion, happiness (very common); Grein, ii. 395. + Du. zalig, blessed. + Icel. sæll, blest, happy; sæla, bliss. + Swed. säll, blest, happy. + G. selig, O.H.G. sālik, good, excellent, blest, happy. + Goth. sels, good, kind. β. All from a Teut. base SALA, SĀLYA, good, happy, fortunate; Fick, iii. 320. Allied to O. Lat. sollus, favourable, complete, whence sollistimum, solistimum, that which is very lucky, a favourable omen; also to Lat. salvus, whole, safe; see Safe. Another allied word is probably Solace, q.v. All from ✓ SAR, to preserve; see Serve. Der. silli-ly, ness.

SILT, sediment, sand left by water that has overflowed. (Scand.) M.E. silte, badly spelt cilte. 'Cilte, soonde [sand], Glarea; Prompt. Parv. p. 77. Formed with the pp. suffix -t from the verb sile, to drain, filter, strain. 'And sithene syle it thorowe a hate clathe' = and then strain it through a hot cloth; MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, fol. 281; Halliwell. — Swed. sila, to strain, filter, sil, a filter. Here the l is an addition, as we also find Icel. sia, to filter, Dan. sie, to filter (Dan. si, a filter); words cognate with A.S. sthan, to filter.

β. For some account of A.S. sthan, see Leo and Ettmüller; the h is dropped in the compounds āsēnda, straining out, Matt. xxiii. 24 (Rushworth MS.) and ūsēnde, oozing out, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 7. Thus we see that Swed. sila stands for sih-la, with a lost guttural; so that prov. E. sile, to filter, has a long i. γ. Further, the A.S. sthan, cognate with O.H.G. sthan, G. sehen, is a mere variant of A.S. sigan, Icel. sigá, to let drop, let fall, sink; this is a strong verb, from the Teut. base SIG, to let drop, equivalent to Aryan ✓ SIK, to let drop, as in Skt. sikh, to sprinkle, discharge, let drop, Gk. ἵκναι, moisture.

SILVAN, SYLVAN, pertaining to woods. (L.) 'All sylyan offsprings round; Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. xix. 599. [The spelling with y is false, and due to the habit of spelling Lat. silva with y, in order to derive it from Gk. ὑλη, a wood, with which it is (at most) only cognate.] — Lat. silvanus, belonging to a wood, chiefly used of the wood-god Silvanus. — Lat. silva, a wood. + Gk. ὑλη, a wood. The relationship of the Lat. and Gk. words is doubted by some, and the root is uncertain; see Curtius, i. 466. Der. (from Lat. silva) savage, q.v.

SILVER, a well-known white metal. (E.) M.E. siluer, Chaucer, C. T. 16707. — A.S. seolfor (for silfor, like meolc for milk, seolc for silk); Matt. xxvii. 6. + Du. zilver. + Icel. silfr. + Dan. sølv. + Swed. silfver. + G. silber. + Goth. silubr. + Russ. серебро. + Lithuan. sidubras. β. Perhaps named from its whiteness; cf. Lithuan. siduas, bright, Lat. sidus, a star. Der. silver, verb; silver-ing; silver-ling, a small piece of silver, with double dimin. -ling (as in duck-ling), Isaiah, vii. 23, also in Tyndale's version of Acts, xix. 19, and Coverdale's of Judges, ix. 4, xvi. 5, the A.S. form being sylfring, Gen. xlv. 22; silver-smith; silver-y. Also silver-n, adj., in some MSS. of Wyclif, Acts, xix. 24, A.S. sylfren, Gen. xlv. 2.

SIMILAR, like. (F., — L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave, — F. similaire, 'similar'; Cot. As if from Lat. *similaris, extended from simil-is, like, by the suffix -aris. Allied to simul, together, Gk. ἵνα, together, and E. same; from the Aryan base SAMA, the same; see Same. Der. similar-ly, similar-i-ty; also simile, q.v., simili-tude, q.v. And see simul-ate, simul-ta-ne-ous, semblance, as-semble, dis-semble.

SIMILE, a comparison. (L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. i. 45. — Lat. simile, a like thing; neut. of similis, like; see Similar.

SIMILITUDE, a comparison, parable. (F., — L.) M.E. similitude, Chaucer, C. T. 10894; Wyclif, Luke, vii. 4. — F. similitude, 'a similitude'; Cot. — Lat. similitudinem, acc. of similitudo, likeness. — Lat. similis, like; see Similar.

SIMIOUS, monkey-like. (L.) Coined from Lat. simia, an ape. Cf. L. simus, Gk. σῆμα, flat-nosed.

SIMMER, to boil gently. (E.) Formerly also simber (see Richardson) and simper. Halliwell cites: 'Simper, to simmer, East; also 'the creame of simpering milke, Florio, p. 189,' which is wrong as regards the edit. of 1598, and prob. refers to a later edition. 'I symp, as lycour dothe on the fyre byfore it begynneth to boyle; Palsgrave. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, and with excrement p or b in some authors, from a base SIM, probably imitative of the slight sound of gentle boiling. Cf. Dan. summe, G. summen, Swed. dial. summa, to hum, to buzz; Swed. surra, susa, to buzz, to whistle, purr.

SIMNEL, a kind of rich cake. (F., — L.) See Simnel in Halliwell. M.E. simnel, Prompt. Parv.; simenel, Havelok, 779. — O.F. simenel, bread or cake of fine wheat flour; Roquefort. — Low Lat. siminellus, bread of fine flour; also called simella; Ducange. β. Here siminellus stands for *similellus, as being easier to pronounce; both *simil-ellus and simel-la being derived from Lat. simila, wheat flour of the finest quality. Perhaps allied to semen, seed. And cf. G. semmel, wheat-bread.

SIMONY, the crime of trafficking in ecclesiastical preferment. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) In early use; spelt symonye, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 89, l. 7. — F. simonie, 'simony, the buying or selling of spiritual functions or preferments'; Cot. — Low Lat. simonia; Ducange. Named from Simon Magus (Gk. Σίμων), because he wished to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost with money; Acts, viii. 18. — Heb. Shim'on, Simeon, Simon, lit. hearing, obedience; one who hears. — Heb. root shama, he heard. Der. simoni-ac, simoni-ac-al.

SIMOOM, a hot, poisonous wind. (Arab.) See Southey, Thalaba, b. ii, last stanza, and the note. — Arab. sammū, a sultry pestilential wind, which destroys travellers; Rich. Dict. p. 850. So called from its poisonous nature. — Arab. root samma, he poisoned; samm, poisoning; id. p. 847.

SIMPER, to smile sillily or affectedly, to smirk. (Scand.) 'Yond simpering dame; K. Lear, iv. 6. 120. 'With a made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and smiling; Sidney, Arcadia, b. i (R.) Cotgrave explains F. coquine by 'a begger woman, also a cockney, simperdecokit, nice thing.' We find traces of it in Norweg. semper, fine, smart (Aasen); Dan. dial. semper, simper, 'affected, coy, prudish, esp. of one who requires pressing to eat: as, she is as semper as a bride'; Wedgwood. Also O. Swed. semper, one who affectedly refrains from eating.

β. All these are formed (with a suffix -er which appears to be the same as the E. suffix -er of the agent) from a base SIMP, which is a nasalised form of SIP. Without the nasal, we find O. Swed. sipp (also simp), a woman who affectedly refuses to eat (Ihre); Swed. sipp, adj., finical, prim; Dan. sippe, a woman who is affectedly coy (Molbeck). And note particularly Low G. sipp, explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch as a word expressing the gesture of a compressed mouth, and affected pronunciation; a woman who acts thus affectedly is called Jumper Sipp, Miss Sipp, and they say of her, 'She cannot say sipp.' Also Low G. den Mund sipp trekken, to make a small mouth; De Bruut sitt so sipp, the bride sits so prim. γ. This appears to be only a particular use derived from the verb to sip, meaning to take a little drink at a time, hence, to be affected over food, to be prim and coy. See Sip. δ. We find also prov. G. zimpern, to be affectedly coy, zipp, prudish, coy (Flügel); but these are most likely borrowed from Low German, as the true High G. z answers to E. t. Der. simper, sb.

SIMPLE, single, elementary, clear, guileless, silly. (F., — L.) In early use. M.E. simple, The Bestiary, l. 790; in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris. — F. simple, 'simple'; Cot. — Lat. simplicem, acc. of simplicis (stem simplic-), simple; lit. 'one-fold,' as opposed to duplex, two-fold, double. — Lat. sim-, from the base *sama, the same, which appears also in Lat. sin-guli, one by one, sem-per, always alike, sem-el, once, sim-ul, together; and -plic-, from plic-are, to fold. See Same and Ply. Der. simple-ness, simpl-y. Also simples, s. pl., simple herbs; whence simpl-er, simpl-ist, both in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Also simplic-i-ty, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 171, from F. simplicité, from Lat. acc. simplicitatem; simply-fi, in Barrow's Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 34 (Todd), a coined word, answering to late F. simplicifier (Litré), where the suffix -fier = Lat. -ficare, from facere, to make; see Fact. Hence simplic-i-at-ion. Also simple-ton, q.v.

SIMPLETON, a foolish fellow. (F., — L.) 'A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down; L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson). Formed with the F. suffix -on (= Lat. acc. -onem) from F. simplet, masc., simplette, fem., a simple person (Litré). Cotgrave only gives the fem. simplette, 'a little, simple wench, one that is apt to believe, and thereby soon deceived.' These are formed from simple, simple, with the dimin. suffix -et or -ette. Thus simple-t-on exhibits a double suffix -t-on, which is very rare; yet there is at least one more example in the old word musk-et-on, a kind of musket, F. mousquet-on. [†]

SIMULATE, to pretend, feign. (L.) Shak. has simulation, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 151. Simulate first occurs with the force of a pp.; 'because they had vowed a simulate chasty; Bale, Eng. Votaries, pt. ii (R.) — Lat. simulatus, pp. of simulare, to feign, pretend, make like. — Lat. simul, adv., together with; similis (= similis), like. See Similar. Der. simulat-ion, from F. simulation, 'simulation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. simulationem, a feigning; simulat-or. Also dis-simulation. And see semblance, as-semble, dis-semble. Also simultaneous. [†]

SIMULTANEOUS, happening at the same moment. (L.) 'Whether previous or simultaneous;' Hammond's Works, vol. iv. ser. 2 (R.); p. 570 (Todd). Englished directly from Lat. *simultaneus, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. This is hardly a true Lat. word, and is not even in Ducange; but is formed from Low Lat. simul-im, at the same time, by analogy with Lat. momentaneus; and cf. E. instantaneous. β. The Low

Lat. simul is extended from Lat. simul, together, with adv. suffix -tim, as in minuta-tim. See Simulate, Similar. Der. simultaneous-ly.

SIN, wickedness, crime, iniquity. (E.) M.E. sinne, synne; pl. synnes, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 2, 5, 6. — A.S. syn, sinn, senn; gen., dat., and acc. synne; Grein, ii. 518. + Du. zonde. + Icel. synd, older form synd. + Dan. and Swed. synd. + G. sünde, O.H.G. sunja, sumdja.

β. Thus the E. sin stands for sind, and the A.S. word has lost a final d. All from Teut. base SUNDYA, a fem. form; Fick, iii. 326. It is the abstract sb. answering to Lat. sons (stem sonit-), sinful, guilty; and Curtius refers this (along with Icel. sannr, true, very, Goth. sunja, the truth, sooth) to the ✓AS, to be: remarking that 'the connection of son(t)s and soniticus with this root has been recognised by Clemm, and established (Studien, iii. 328), while Bugge (iv. 205) confirms it by Northern analogies. Language regards the guilty man as the man who it was;' Gk. Etym. i. 470. This is a very likely view; cf. Skt. satya (for sant-ya), true, from sant (for as-ant), being; and even in English, the A.S. sindon, syndon, they are, comes near to *sind, *synd, of which sin or syn is an abbreviated form. See Sooth. Der. sin, verb, M.E. sinnen, but also singen, sungen, sinegen (see P. Plowman, A. ix. 17, B. viii. 22, C. xi. 23), from A.S. syngian, gesyngian, Grein, ii. 519, which forms probably stand for *syndian, *gesyndian, being derived from *synd, orig. form of A.S. syn. Also sin-ful, A.S. synfull (Grein); sin-ful-ly, sin-ful-ness; sin-less, A.S. synleas; sin-less-ly, sin-less-ness; sinn-er, sin-offering.

SINCE, after that, from the time that, past, ago. (E.) Since is written for sins, to keep the final s sharp (voiceless); just as we write pence for pens, mice for mys, twice for twies, and the like. Again, sins is an abbreviation of M.E. sithens, also spelt sithence in later English, with the same intention of shewing that the final s was voiceless. Sithence is in Shak. Cor. iii. i. 47; All's Well, i. 3. 124; sithens in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 51.

β. Next, the word sithen-s arose from the addition of -s or -es (common as an adverbial ending, as in need-s, twi-es, thri-es) to the older form sithen, which was sometimes contracted to sin. We find sipen, Havelok, 399; sithen, Wyclif, Luke, xiii. 7; sin, Chaucer, C. T. 5234, and see numerous examples in Stratmann, s. v. sippan.

γ. Lastly, sithen or sipen is for sippen, the oldest M.E. form, whence were made sipen, sithen, sithen-es, sithen-s, as well as (by loss of -n or -en) sithe, sippe, sith, and (by contraction) sin or sen. — A.S. siddan, siddon, syddan, seoddan, sioddan, after that, since (very common), Grein, ii. 445. This siddan is a contraction from siddan, put for sidd dām, after that; where dām, that, is the dat. case masc. of the demonstrative pronoun used as a relative, for which see Them, That. The A.S. sidd, after, used as a prep., was orig. an adv. with the force of a comparative. We find sidd, after, later, both as adj. and adv., Grein, ii. 444. [Not the same word as A.S. sidd, journey, time (Grein, ii. 443), which is cognate with Goth. sint, discussed under Send.] This A.S. sidd is cognate with Goth. seithus, late, whence the adv. seithu, late, Matt. xxvii. 57, John, vi. 16; also with G. seit, O.H.G. sit, after. The G. seit-dem, since, is exactly the A.S. sidd-dan; in Gothic we find a somewhat similar compound in the expression ni thana-seiths, no longer, Mark, ix. 8. Other allied words are Icel. senin, slow, late, Lat. se-ro, late; see Fick, iii. 312.

SINCERE, true, pure, honest, frank. (F., — L.) 'Of a very sincere life;' Frith's Works, p. 117, last line. — O.F. sincere, syncere, 'sincere;' Cot. Mod. F. sincère. — Lat. sincerus, pure, sincere. β. The origin of Lat. sincerus is doubtful; perhaps it means 'wholly separated,' and we may take sin- to be the same as in sin-guli, one by one, sim-plex, single-folded, sem-el, once, sim-ul, together, for which see Simple, Same; whilst -cerus may be from cer-nere, to separate, for which see Discern. Some connect it with cera, wax; putting sincerus = sine cera, which is unlikely. Der. sincere-ly; sincer-i-ty, from F. sincerité, 'sincerity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sinceritatem.

SINCIPUT, the fore-part of the head, from the forehead to the top. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Used as distinct from occiput, the back part of the head. The lit. sense is 'half-head.' — Lat. sinciput, half a head; contracted from semi-, half; and caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Semi- and Head. And compare Megrim.

SINDER, the correct spelling of Cinder, q. v. 'Thus all in flames I sinder-like consume;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew; Works, i. 117.

SINE, a straight line drawn from one extremity of an arc or sector perpendicular to the radius at the other extremity. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Englished from Lat. sinus, a bosom, properly a curve, fold, coil, curl, esp. the hanging fold of the upper part of a toga. The use of the word in the math. sense is fanciful, and would better apply to the arc itself. Probably the sine was regarded as subtending the half-arc or 'curve' cut off by a chord; it being very necessary to distinguish between the half-arc and whole arc, and between the sine and the chord. Root uncertain. Doublet, sinus, q. v.

SINECURE, an ecclesiastical benefice without the cure of souls, salary without work. (L.) 'One of them is in danger to be made a sine cure;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act ii. sc. 2. Englished from Lat. sine cura, without cure of souls. — Lat. sine, prep. without, lit. 'if not,' compounded of si, if, and ne, not; and cura, abl. case of cura, cure; see Cure. Der. sinecur-ist, one who holds a sinecure.

SINEW, a tendon, that which joins a muscle to a bone. (E.) M.E. sinewe; spelt synewe, Prompt. Parv. — A.S. sinu, seonu, sionu, a sinew; Grein, ii. 439. + Du. zenuw. + Dan. sene. + Swed. senä. + G. sehne; O.H.G. senawa, senewa, senewa. And cf. Icel. sin, a sinew, pl. sinar.

β. The Teut. base is SINWA, a sinew; Fick, iii. 321. The lit. sense is 'a band,' or that which binds; from a root SIN, to bind, appearing (according to Fick) in Lettish sinu, I bind, and in Skt. si, to bind, a verb of the fifth class, making 1 pers. pres. sinomi, I bind.

γ. Fick suggests that Skt. snāva, a tendon, sinew, is the same word, and stands for sin-āva, the short i being dropped; if so, the A.S. form explains the Sanskrit. But the Skt. snāva may be related to E. nerve, snare. Der. sinew, verb, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 6. 91; sinew-y, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308.

SING, to resound, to utter melodious sounds, relate musically or in verse. (E.) The orig. sense is simply to ring or resound. 'We hear this fearful tempest sing;' Rich. II, ii. i. 263. M.E. singen, pt. t. sang, song, pl. sungen, pp. sungen, songen; Chaucer, C. T. 268, 1511, 3332. — A.S. singan, pt. t. sang, pl. sungen, pp. sungen; Grein, ii. 452. + Du. zingen, pt. t. zong, pp. gezongen. + Icel. syngja, pt. t. saung, söng, pp. sunginn. + Dan. syng. + Swed. sjunga. + Goth. siggwan (written for singwan). + G. singen.

β. All from a base SANGW or SANG; Fick, iii. 316. Prob. an imitative word, like ring, used orig. of the clash of weapons, resonance of metals, and the rush of a missile through the air. Fick connects it with SAG, to say, which may also be right, without interfering with its imitative origin. See Say. Der. sing-er, in place of the A.S. sangere (which would have given a mod. E. songer); see Songstress. Also sing-ing, sing-ing-master, sing-song; singe. And see Song.

SINGE, to scorch, burn on the surface. (E.) For senge. M.E. sengen; spelt seengyn, Prompt. Parv.; senge, Chaucer, C. T. 5931. The curious pp. seind occurs, as a contraction for sengid; Chaucer, C. T. 14851. — A.S. sengan, to singe, burn; occurring in the comp. besengan, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8. § 4; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 184, l. 18. In Matt. xiii. 6, the Lindisfarne MS. has besenced (for besenged), scorched, burnt or dried up. The A.S. sengan stands for *sang-ian, causal of singan (pt. t. sang), to sing. Thus the lit. sense is 'to make to sing,' with reference to the singing or hissing noise made by singed hair, and the sound given out by a burning log; see Sing. + Du. zengen, to singe, scorch; causal of zingen, to sing. + G. sengen, to singe, scorch, parch, burn; causal of singen, to sing. Cf. Icel. sangr, singed, burnt.

SINGLE, sole, separate, alone. (L.) 'So that our eye be single;' Tyndale's Works, p. 75, col. 1. He refers to Matt. vi. 22, where the Vulgate has simplex, and Wyclif has simple. — Lat. singulus, single, separate, in late Latin; in classical Latin we have only the pl. singuli, one by one.

β. Singuli stands for sin-culi or sim-culi, with double suffix as in homon-culus. The base sim- is the same as in sim-plex, and is allied to E. same; see Simple, Same. Der. single, verb, L. L. L. v. 1. 85; singl-y; single-ness, Acts, ii. 46; single-hearted, single-minded; also single-stick, prob. so called because wielded by one hand only, as distinguished from the old quarter-staff, which was held in both hands. And see singul-ar. [+]

SINGULAR, single, alone, uncommon, strange. (F., — L.) M.E. singular; Gower, C. A. iii. 184, l. 11. 'A singular persone' = an individual, Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, Group B, l. 2626. — F. singulier, 'singular, excellent;' Cot. — Lat. singularis, single, separate. Formed with suffix -aris from singul-i, one by one; see Single. Der. singular-ly; singular-i-ty, from F. singularité, 'singularity, excellence,' Cot., from Lat. acc. singularitatem.

SINISTER, on the left hand, inauspicious, evil. (L.) Not from F., but from Lat., like dexter. Common as an heraldic term. 'Some secret sinister information;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1447 b. — Lat. sinister, left, on the left hand, inauspicious or ill-omened, as omens on the left hand were supposed to be. ¶ But it must be noted that this is a Greek notion, due to the Greeks turning to the North, and having the West (unlucky quarter) on their left; the true Roman notion was, originally, that sinister meant lucky, because their augurs, turning to the South, had on their left the East. Root uncertain. Der. sinistr-ous, sinistr-al.

SINK, to fall down, descend, be overwhelmed; also, to depress. (E.) We have merged the transitive and intransitive forms in one; properly, we ought to use sink intransitively, and the trans. form should be sench or senk; cf. drink, drench. 1. M.E. sinken, intrans., pt. t. sank, pp. sunken, sonken. The pt. t. sank is in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 67. This is the original and strong verb. — A. S. sincan, pt. t. sanc, pl. suncon, pp. sincon; Grein, ii. 451. + Du. zinken. + Icel. sökkva (for sönkva), pt. t. sökk (for sönk), pp. sökkinn. + Dan. synke. + Swed. sjunka. + G. sinken. + Goth. sigkwan, siggkwan (written for sinkwan, sigkwan). — β. All from the Teut. base SANKW or SANK; Fick, iii. 318. This is a nasalised form of a base SAK, perhaps corresponding to Aryan ✓SAG, to hang down; but this is not very clear.

2. The true trans. form appears in the weak M. E. senchen, not common, and now obsolete. 'Hi bisencheð us on helle' = they will sink us into hell; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 107, l. 18. — A. S. sencan, to cause to sink; 'bisenched on sæs grund' = caused to sink (drowned) in the bottom of the sea, Matt. xviii. 6. For *sancian, formed from sanc, pt. t. of sincan, to sink. Cf. Goth. saggkwan, causal form of siggkwan. This verb still exists in Swed. sänka, Dan. sænke, G. senken, to immerse. Der. sink-er. Also sink, sb., a place where refuse water sinks away, but orig. a place into which filth sinks or in which it collects, Cor. i. 1. 126.

SINOPLÉ, green, in heraldry. (F., — L., — Gk.) English heralds call 'green' vert; the term sinople is rather F. than E. It occurs as early as in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox: 'of gold, of sable, of siluer, of yellow, assure, and cynope, thyse sixe colouris;' ed. Arber, p. 85. — F. sinople, 'sinople, green colour in blazon;' Cot. — Low Lat. sinopis, signifying both reddish and greenish (Littre). — Lat. sinopis, a kind of red ochre, used for colouring. — Gk. sinopis, also sinopikē, a red earth found in Cappadocia, and imported into Greece from Sinope. — Gk. Σινώπη, Sinope, a port on the S. coast of the Black Sea.

SINUS, a bay of the sea, &c. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Sinus, . . a gulph or great bay of the sea. . . In anatomy, sinus is taken for any cavity in or between the vessels of an animal body. In surgery, it is when the beginning of an imposthume or ulcer is narrow, and the bottom large, &c. — Lat. sinus, the fold of a garment, a bay, the bosom, a curve; &c. Root uncertain. Der. sinu-ous; 'a scarfing of silver, that ran sinuously in works over the whole caparison,' Chapman, Mask of the Middle Temple, § 5; from F. sinuëux, 'intricate, crooked, full of hollow turnings, windings, or crinkle-crankles,' Cot.; from Lat. sinuosus, winding, full of curves. Hence sinuos-i-ty, from F. sinuosité, a hollow turning or winding; Cot. Also sinu-ate, with a waved margin (botanical); sinu-at-ion; in-sinu-ate, in-sinu-at-ion. Doublet, sine.

SIP, to sup or drink in small quantities, to taste a liquid. (E.) M. E. sippen, Chaucer, C. T. 5758. It answers to an A. S. *syppan, not found, but equivalent to *supian, a regular formation from sup, stem of the pl. of the pt. t. of supan, to sup; see Sup. The lit. sense would thus be 'to make to swallow,' or 'cause to sup;' whence it would easily acquire its present sense. + O. Du. sippen, 'to sip, to sup, to taste little by little,' Hexham; from O. Du. zuypen, Du. zuipen, to sup. Der. sip, sb., Chaucer, Annelida, 196; sipper. And see sipp-el.

SIPHON, a bent tube for drawing off liquids. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. siphon, 'the cock or pipe of a conduit,' &c.; Cot. (He notes its use by Rabelais.) — Lat. siphonem, acc. of sipho, a siphon. — Gk. σίφων, a small pipe or reed; allied to σῖφλος, hollow. Perhaps allied to sibilare, to whistle, pipe; see Sibilant.

SIPPET, a little sip, a little sop. (E.) Properly, there are two separate words. 1. A little sip. 'And ye wyll gyue me a syppe Of your stale ale;' Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 367. This is the dimin. of sip; with suffix -et, of F. origin. 2. A little sop, a piece of sopped toast. 'Green goose! you are now in sippets;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule A Wife, iv. 1, last line. This is the dimin. of sop, with vowel-change and the same dimin. suffix.

SIR, SIRE, a respectful title of address. (F., — L.) Sire is the older form. M. E. sire, as in 'Sire Arthur,' Layamon, 22485. — F. sire, 'sir, or master;' Cot. Formed from Lat. senior, nom., lit. older; the F. seigneur being due to the accus. seniorem of the same word. It is now well established that the Lat. senior produced an O. F. senre, of which sire is an attenuated form; the same word appears in the curious form sendra in the famous Oaths of Strasburg, A.D. 842; see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, col. 4, l. 17. See Littre, Scheler, and Diez. β. The last remarks that the word is prob. of Picard or Northern origin, since Picard sometimes puts r for ndr or nr, as in terons for tiendrons, tere for tendre. ¶ It may be added that this word gave the old French etymologists a great deal of trouble; the word was even written cyre to make it look like the Gk. κύριος, a lord! The Prov. sira, sir, Span. ser, Ital. ser, are merely borrowed from French; so also Icel. sira; see Sirrah. Doublets, senior, seignior, señor, signor; though these really answer only to the acc. form seniorem. [†]

SIREN, a fabulous nymph who, by singing, lured mariners to death. (L., — Gk.) M. E. serein, which is from F. sereine, 'a mermaid,' Cot. 'Men clepen hem sereins in Fraunce;' Rom. of the Rose, 684.

But we took the mod. E. word immediately from the Latin. Spelt siren, Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 47. — Lat. siren. — Gk. σειρήν, a nymph on the S. coast of Italy, who enticed seamen by the magic sweetness of her song, and then slew them. At first the sirens were but two in number; Homer, Od. xii. 39, 167. It also means a wild bee, a singing-bird. β. Usually derived from σειρά, a cord, rope, as if they enticed mariners by pulling them; this is rather a bad pun than an etymology. It is more likely that the word is connected with σῦργε, a pipe; and that both seip- and sup- are from the ✓SWAR, to sound, whence Skt. svri, to sound, Vedic Skt. to praise; so that the sense is 'piper' or 'singer.' Cf. Russ. sviriele, a pipe, reed, G. surren, to hum, buzz, E. swar-m; see Swarm. [†] SIRLOIN, an inferior spelling of Surloin, q. v.

SIRNAME, a corruption of Surname, q. v.

SIROCCO, a hot, oppressive wind. (Ital., — Arab.) In Milton, P. L. x. 706. — Ital. sirocco, 'the south-east wind;' Florio. Cf. Span. siroco. — Arab. sharq, the east; Rich. Dict. p. 889. The etymology is well discussed in Devic, Supp. to Littre, who remarks that the introduction of a vowel between r and q, when the Arabic word was borrowed by European languages, presents no difficulty. Or there may have been some confusion with the closely-allied word shurūq, rising (said of the sun). The Eastern wind in the Mediterranean is hot and oppressive. — Arab. root sharaga, (the sun) arose; Rich. Dict. p. 889. See Saracen.

SIRRAH, a term of address, used in anger or contempt. (Icel., — F., — L.) Common in Shak. Temp. v. 287; &c. Schmidt remarks that it is never used in the plural, is used towards comparatively inferior persons, and (when forming part of a soliloquy) is preceded by ah; as 'ah, sirrah;' As You Like It, iv. 3. 166; 'ah, sirrah, quoth-a;' 2 Hen. IV, v. 3. 17; cf. Romeo, i. 5. 31, 128. Minshew has: 'Sirra, a contemptuous word, ironically compounded of Sir and a, ha, as much as to say ah, sir, or ah, boy.' Minshew is not quite right; for, though the word is a mere extension of sir or sire, the form is Icelandic. Levins writes serrrha, and translates it by Lat. heus and io. It is also spelt sirrrha in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 10 (in a story of Apelles), ed. 1634, p. 538, l. 7 from bottom. — Icel. sírra, sirrah, a term of contempt; formerly sir, in a good sense; borrowed from F. in the 13th cent. — F. sire, sir; cf. Prov. sira; see Sir. ¶ Some suggest Irish sirreach, poor, sorry, lean, which has nothing to do with the matter.

SIR-REVERENCE, save your reverence. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 2. 93. See Save-reverence in Nares, who shews that it was used also in the form save-reverence and save-your-reverence; the latter is in Romeo, i. 4. 42. 'This word was considered a sufficient apology for anything indecorous;' Nares. A translation of Lat. saluū reuerentiā, reverence to you being duly regarded. — Lat. saluū, fem. abl. of saluus, safe; and reuerentiā, abl. of reuerentia, reverence; see Safe and Reverence.

SIRUP, another spelling of Syrup, q. v.

SISKIN, a migratory song-bird. (Dan.) Mentioned in a tr. of Buffon, Nat. Hist., London, 1792, ii. 90. The Carduelis spinus; also called abderdevine; also Fringilla spinus. — Dan. sisgen, a siskin. Cf. Swed. siska, a siskin; Norweg. sisk or sisk (Aasen). The word means 'chirper' or 'piper;' from Swed. dial. sis, a verb used to express the noise made by the wood-grouse (Rietz). Cf. Du. sissen, to hiss, Lincolnsh. sis, sissle, to hiss (Peacock); Swed. dial. sistra, Swed. syrsa, a cricket; Polish czyż, a canary.

SISTER, a girl born of the same parents with another. (Scand.) M. E. suster, Chaucer, C. T. 873; rarely sister, syster, as in Prompt. Parv., and in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 766. It is extremely remarkable that the Scand. form sister has supplanted the E. form suster. — Icel. systir; Swed. syster; Dan. søster. + A. S. sweostor, swuister (whence M. E. suster); Grein, ii. 509. + Du. zuster. + Goth. swistar. + G. schwester; O. H. G. suester, suister. + Russ. sestra. β. The Teut. forms are all from the base SWESTAR, Fick, iii. 360. Further related to Lithuan. sesū (gen. seseres); Lat. soror (for older sosor); Skt. svastī.

γ. Etymology uncertain; perhaps it means 'she who pleases or consoles;' cf. Skt. svasti, joy, happiness; Max Müller, Essays, i. 324. Der. sister-hood, -like, -ly; sister-in-law. Also cousin, q. v.

SIT, to rest on the haunches, rest, perch, brood. (E.) M. E. sitten, pt. t. sat; pl. seten, Chaucer, C. T. 10406 (where Tyrwhitt prints saten); pp. seten, siten, id. 1454 (where Tyrwhitt prints sitten). — A. S. sittan, pt. t. sæt, pl. sæton, pp. seten; Grein, ii. 454. + Du. zitten. + Icel. sija, pt. t. sat, pp. setinn. + Dan. sidde. + Swed. sitta. + Goth. sitan. + G. sitzen; O. H. G. sizzan. β. All from Teut. base SAT, to sit; cognate with Aryan ✓SAD, to sit, whence Skt. śad, Gk. ἔσθαι (for ἐδ-εσθαι), Lat. sedere, Lithuan. sėdėti, Russ. sidiati, to sit. Der. sitt-er, sitt-ing. Also (from Lat. sedere) as-sess, as-sid-uous, as-size, dis-pos-sess, dis-sid-ent, in-sid-i-ous, pos-sess, pre-side, re-side, re-sid-ue, sed-ate, sed-entary, sed-iment, sess-ile, sess-ion, sub-side, sub-sid-y; super-sede; also siege, be-siege, size (1), size (2), size-ar. Also (from Gk. ἑξάγων) octa-hedron, tetra-hedron, poly-hedron, cath-(h)edral; chair, chaise. Also (from Teut. SAT) set, settle (1); settle (2), in some senses; also seat, dis-seat, un-seat; and see saddle.

SITE, a locality, situation, place where a thing is set down or fixed. (F., -L.) 'After the site, north or south;' Chaucer, On the Astro-labe, pt. ii. c. 17. l. 24. = F. site, sit. 'Sit, a site, or seat;' Cot. = Lat. situm, acc. of situs, a site. = Lat. situs, pp. of sinere, to let, suffer, permit, of which an older meaning seems to have been to put, place. Root uncertain; the form of the root should be SI or SA. The Lat. ponere (= po-sinere) is certainly a derivative of sinere. Der. situ-ate, situ-ation (see below); also the derivatives of ponere, for which see Position. ¶ We frequently find the odd spelling scite.

SITH, since. (E.) In Ezek. xxxv. 6. See Since.

SITUATE, placed. (L.) In Shak. L. L. l. i. 2. 142. = Low Lat. situatus, pp. of situare, to locate, place; a barbarous word, found A.D. 1317 (Ducange). = Lat. situ-, stem of situs, a site; see Site. Der. situat-ion, 2 Hen. IV. i. 3. 51, from F. situation, 'a situation,' Cot.

SIX, five and one. (E.) M. E. six, sine, P. Plowman, B. v. 431. = A. S. six, six, six; Grein, ii. 454. + Du. zes. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. sex. + G. sechs; O. H. G. sehs. + Goth. saihs. + Russ. sheste. + W. chwech. + Gael. and Irish se. + Lat. sex. + Gk. ἑξ (for σέξ). + Lithuan. szeszi. + Pers. shash; Palmer's Dict. col. 382. + Skt. shash. Origin unknown. Der. six-fold, six-pence. Also six-teen, A. S. six-tine, six-tine (see Ten); six-teen-th; six-ty, A. S. six-tig (see Forty); six-tie-th; six-th, A. S. six-ta, whence M. E. sixte, sente, Gower, C. A. iii. 121, l. 8, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 300, now altered to sixth by analogy with four-th, seven-th, eight-th, nin-th, ten-th, just as fif-th is altered from A. S. fif-ta. Also (from Lat. sex) sex-agenarian, sex-agesima, sex-ennial, sex-tant, sex-tuple.

SIZAR, a scholar of a college in Cambridge, who pays lower fees than a pensioner or ordinary student. (F., -L.) Spelt sizer in Todd's Johnson. There was formerly a considerable difference in the social rank of a sizar, who once had to perform certain menial offices. At Oxford the corresponding term was servitor, defined by Phillips as 'a poor university scholar that attends others for his maintenance.' Probably one of his duties was to attend to the sizings of others. 'Size is a farthings worth of bread or drink, which scholars in Cambridge have at the buttry, noted with the letter S., as in Oxford with the letter Q. for half a farthing, and Qa. [Quadrans] for a farthing. And whereas they say in Oxford, to battal in the buttry-book, i.e. to set down on their names what they take in bread, drink, butter, cheese, &c., in Cambridge they call it a sizing;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The word size is also in Minshew, and is a mere abbreviation of assise, i.e. quantity or ration of bread, &c. 'Assise of bread, i.e. setting down the price and quantity of bread;' Minshew, ed. 1627. See Assize, and Size (1).

SIZE (1), an allowance or ration of food; hence, generally, magnitude. (F., -L.) 'To scant my sizes,' K. Lear, ii. 4. 178; see Sizar. Size is merely short for assise, M. E. assise, the usual old word for an allowance, or settled portion of bread, &c. doled out for a particular price or given to a dependent. We even find it used, at a very early period, almost as a general word for provisions. 'Whan ther comes marchandise, With corn, wyn, and steil, othir [or] other assise;' K. Alisaundér, 7074. Hence size came to mean dimension, magnitude, &c., as at present; also bulk, as in Merry Wives, iii. 12. For the etymology, see Assize. Der. size-ar, q. v. [†]

SIZE (2), weak glue, a stiffening gluey substance. (Ital., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Hence blood-sized, rendered sticky with gore; Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 99; 'o'er-sized with coagulate gore,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484. Cotgrave has: 'assiette à dorer, size to gild with, gold size.' It is not a F. word, but borrowed, like some other painters' terms, from Italian. = Ital. sisa, 'a kind of syse or glew that painters vse;' Florio, ed. 1598. And Ital. sisa is an abbreviation of assisa, 'size that painters vse; also, an assise or manner; also, a luerie, a guise or fashion, an assise or session;' id. He also gives assisare, 'to sise, to sesse, to assise, to sute well;' and assiso, 'seated, situated.' Assisa is the verbal sb. from assisare, which in its turn is from assiso, pp. of assidere, to situate. The sense is 'that which makes the colours lie flat,' so that, in Florio's phrase, they 'sute well.' The Ital. assidere is from Lat. assidere, to sit at or near. = Lat. ad, near; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. We speak of 'making a thing sit,' which is just the idea here required. ¶ Thus size (2), size (1), and assise are all, really, the same word. See Size (1), and Assize. [†]

SKAIN, SKENE, SKEIN, a dagger, knife. (Irish.) 'Skain, a crooked sword, or scimitar, used formerly by the Irish;' Halliwell. He cites the expression 'Irryshmen, armed . . with darts and skaynes' from Hall, Hen. V. fol. 28. 'Carrying his head-peece, his skeane, or pistoll;' Spenser, State of Ireland; Globe ed., p. 631, col. 2. = Irish (and Gael.) sgian, a knife. + W. ysgien. a slicer, scimitar; cf. ysgi, a cutting off, a parer. β. Apparently from a base SKI; cf. Lat. scindere (base SKID), to cut. Der. (possibly) skains-mate, a companion in arms, comrade, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skein.

SKATE (1), a large flat fish of the ray family. (Scand., -L.) Spelt scate in Levins, ed. 1570. M. E. scate, Prompt. Parv. = Icel. skata, a skate; Norweg. skata (Aasen). = Lat. squatulus, also squatina, a kind of shark, skate. Cf. Irish and Gael. sgat, a skate. ¶ The A. S. seceadde is perhaps a shad, not a skate.

SKATE (2), SCATE, a frame of wood (or iron) with a steel ridge beneath it, for sliding on ice. (Du.) Properly, the word should be skates, with a pl. skateses; the final s has been mistaken for the pl. suffix, and so has dropped off, just as in other words; see Pea, Sherry, Cherry. Spelt scheets in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 1, 1662; skeates in Pepys's Diary, same date. 'Scate, a sort of pattern, to slide upon ice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cotgrave explains O. F. eschasses by 'stilts, or scatches to go on;' here scatches is merely another form of skateses; 'the point in which stilts and skates agree is that they are both contrivances for increasing the length of stride,' Wedgwood. = Du. schaatsen, 'skates,' Sewel; where -en is the pl. suffix, so that the word itself is schaats; as in 'schaatsryder, a skates-slider;' Sewel [misprinted schaarsryder by an obvious error]. O. Du. schaetsen, 'skates [with] which they slide upon the yoe in Holland;' Hexham, ed. 1658. (Hence also is derived F. échasse, O. F. eschasse, a stilt).

β. The etymology of Du. schaatsen is obscure; but as we not unfrequently meet with a substitution of t for k, it is probably from the Low G. schake, a shank, leg, the same word as E. shank, which inserts the nasal sound n; see Shank. Note the Low G. phrase de schaken voort teen, to go swiftly, lit. 'to pull one's shanks out;' and A. S. seccan, secan, to shake, to go swiftly, to flee; see Shake, from which E. shank is derived. γ. If this be right, we have, from the Teut. base SKAK, to shake, go swiftly, the Low G. schake, a 'swift-goer,' leg, or shank; whence O. Du. schaetsen (for schaeksen) might have been formed with suffix -s (-sa) and vowel-change. And as to the sense, the words scatches and skates merely mean 'shanks,' i.e. contrivances for lengthening the leg. The Low Lat. scacia, scatia, both meaning a stilt, shew the interchange of c and t, and are borrowed from the Low German. ¶ The Dan. skôte, a skate, is prob. borrowed; the Swed. word is skridsko or skid (see Skid).

SKEIN, SKAIN, a knot of thread or silk. (C.) Generally defined as 'a knot of thread or silk,' where probably 'knot' means a quantity collected together; a skein is a quantity of yarn, folded and doubled together. 'Layde downe a skeyne of threde, And some a skeyne of yarne;' Skelton, Elinor Rummung, 310. M. E. skeyne, Prompt. Parv. A household word of Celtic origin. = Irish sgainne, a flaw, crack, fissure; a skein or clue of thread. Cf. Gael. sgeinnidh, flax or hemp, thread, small twine.

β. I think we may explain skein as meaning in the first instance 'a break' or 'flaw;' whence the meaning might easily be extended to so much yarn as is contained in each piece, from break to break. = Irish sgainin, I split, cleave, burst; Gael. sgain, to burst asunder, read apart. = ✓ SKAN, longer form of ✓ SKA, to cut; cf. Skt. khan, to dig, to pierce. ¶ The O. F. escaigne, 'a skain,' Cot., is of Celtic origin. Der. (perhaps) skains-mates, companions in winding thread, companions, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skain. This solution is advocated in Todd's Johnson, which see; and cf. the phrase 'as thick [intimate] as inkle-weavers,' i.e. weavers of tape.

SKELETON, the bony frame-work of an animal. (Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary. Spelt skeleton, sceleton in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Gk. σκελετόν, a dried body, a mummy; neut. of σκελετός, dried up, parched. = Gk. σκέλλω (for σκέλλω), to dry, dry up, parch. Der. skeleton-key.

SKEPTIC, the same as Sceptic, q. v.

SKETCH, a rough draught of an object, outline. (Du., -L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To make a sketch;' Dryden, Parallel between Painting and Poetry (R.) Not used much earlier. = Du. schets, 'a draught, scheme, model, sketch;' Sewel. [The E. sketch is a mere corruption of the Du. word, and stands for skets.] The same word as G. skizze, a sketch; which was prob. borrowed from the Dutch, who, as being fond of painting, introduced the term from the Italian. At any rate, both Du. schets and G. skizze are from Ital. schizzo, 'an ingrossment or first rough draught of anything;' Florio. = Lat. schedium, an extemporaneous poem, anything hastily made. = Lat. schedius, adj., made hastily. = Gk. σχέδιος, sudden, off-hand, on the spur of the moment; also near, close to. Cf. Gk. σχεδόν, near, hard by, lit. 'holding to.' These words, like σχέσις, habit, state, σχε-τι-μός, retentive, are from the Gk. base σχε-, to hold, appearing in Gk. σχεῖν (= σχέειν), 2 aorist infin. of εἶχειν, to hold, and in E. sche-me. See Scheme.

β. Thus scheme and sketch, the meanings of which are by no means remote, are from the same root, but by very different paths. Der. sketch, verb; sketch-y, sketch-i-ness.

SKEW, oblique, wry. (O. Low G.) 'To look skew, or a-skew, to squint or leer; Phillips, ed. 1706. It seems first to have been used chiefly as a verb. 'To skue, or walk skuing, to waddle, to go sideling along;' Phillips. 'To skewe, linis oculis spectare;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Our service Neglected and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, A. ii. sc. i. (Putske). 'This skew'd-eyed carrion;' id., Wild-geese Chase, iv. 1 (Mirabel). M. E. skewen, to turn aside, slip away, escape; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1562. Of O. Low G. origin; cf. O. Du. schouwen, 'to avoid or to shunne,' also spelt schuuen, Hexham; Low G. schouen, schuuen, to avoid. + O. H. G. sciuhen, M. H. G. schuhen, to avoid, get out of the way, G. schuen, to shun, avoid; derived from the adj. appearing as M. H. G. schiech, schich, G. schue, shy, timid. β. Thus skew is really the verb corresponding to the adj. shy; to skew or skue is to shy as a horse, to start aside from, hence, to move obliquely. The allied Icel. phrase á ská suggested the E. askew as an adverb; see ASKEW; and hence skew came to be used (in place of the pp. skew'd) as an adjective.

γ. Other closely related forms are seen in Icel. á ská, adv., askew, skáðr, askew, skelfr, askew, oblique; Dan. skiev, oblique, whence skieve, to slope, deviate, swerve; Swed. skef, oblique, whence skefva, to skew, skefva med ögonen, to skew with the eyes, to look askint; Du. schief, oblique, G. schief. δ. From the base SKIU, which from ✓SKÜ, to move, fly, swerve; cf. Skt. chyu (for original chhyu, Benfey), to move, depart, fly, swerve; Goth. skewjan, to go along, Mark, ii. 23. The orig. sense has reference to motion sideways; see further under SHY, ESCHEW. Der. a-skew, q. v. Also skew-bald.

SKEWBALD, piebald. (Hybrid; O. Low G. and C.) In Halliwell. It means marked or spotted in a skew or irregular manner. From SKew and Bald, q. v. And cf. pie-bald.

SKEWER, a pin of wood or iron for holding meat together. (Scand.) In Dryden, tr. of Homer, b. i. l. 633. Skewer is a by-form of prov. E. skiver, a skewer (West); cf. skiver-wood, dogwood, of which skewers are made; Halliwell. And skiver is really an older and better form of shiver, a splinter of wood, dimin. of Icel. skifja, Swed. skifva, a slice, a shive; see SHIVER (2). The form skiver exactly corresponds to Dan. and Swed. skifer, a slate; O. Du. scheversteen, 'a slate or a slate-stone,' Hexham; similarly named from its being sliced into thin flakes. Doublet, skiver (2). Der. skewer, verb.

SKID, a contrivance for locking the wheel of a carriage. (Scand.) Halliwell gives: 'skid-pan, the shoe with which the wheel of a carriage is locked.' Ray has: 'To skid a wheel, rotam sufflaminare, with an iron hook fastened to the axis to keep it from turning round upon the descent of a steep hill; Kent.' The latter sense is merely secondary, and refers to a later contrivance; the orig. skid was a kind of shoe placed under the wheel, and in the first instance made of wood. [The word skid is merely the Scand. form of M. E. schide, a thin piece of wood; see SHIDE.]—Icel. skíð, a billet of wood; also, a kind of snow-shoe; Swed. skid, 'a kind of scate or wooden shoe on which they slide on the ice,' Widegren. + A. S. scíde, a billet of wood; whence scíde-weall, a wall of railings, Wright's Vocab. i. 37, col. 2; note 2. + G. scheit, a log, billet of wood. + Lithuan. skėda, a splint, splinter; derived from skėdu, I cleave.—✓SKID, to separate; see SHEATH, SHED (1). Closely allied to sheath. A skid forms a sheath for the lower part of the wheel.

SKIFF, a small light boat. (F.,—M. H. G.) 'Olaus fled in a little skiffe;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 14. And in Minshew.—F. esquif, 'a skiffe, or little boat,' Cot.—M. H. G. skif, schif, G. schiff, a ship; cognate with E. Ship, q. v. Der. skiff, verb, to cross in a skiff, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. 37. Doublet, ship.

SKILL, discernment, discrimination, tact. (Scand.) M. E. skil, gen. in the sense of 'reason,' Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 22; skile, id. p. 306, l. 17.—Icel. skil, a distinction, discernment; cf. skilja, to part, separate, divide, distinguish. + Dan. skiel, a separation, boundary, limit; cf. skille, to separate. + Swed. skäl, reason; cf. skilja, to separate. β. From ✓SKAL, to separate, divide, orig. to cleave, as appears by Lithuan. skelti, to cleave. This is from ✓SKAR, to shear; see SHEAR. And see SHELL, SCALE, SHILLING. Der. skilful, M. E. skilfulle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 311, l. 17; skilful-ly, skilful-ness; skil-less, Ormulum, 3715; skill-ed, i. e. endowed with skill, Rich. III, iv. 4. 116. Also skill, verb, in the phrase it skills not—it makes no difference, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 134; from Icel. skilja, to separate, which is frequently used impersonally, with the sense 'it differs.'

SKILLET, a small pot. (F.,—L.) In Othello, i. 3. 273. Spelt skellet, Skelton, Elinour Rummung, 250. Halliwell explains it as a small iron or brass pot, with a long handle.—O. F. escuellette, 'a little dish;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. escuelle, a dish.—Lat. scutella, a salver; dimin. of scutra, scuta, a tray, dish, platter; prob. allied to scutum, a shield. Doublet, scuttle (1). The Suffolk word skillet, meaning a thin brass perforated implement used for skimming milk (Moor, Nall), perhaps acquired its peculiar sense from confusion with the Icel. skilja, to separate; but the sense of 'dish' will suffice, as the orig. skimmer must have been a simple dish. The odd fancy in Phillips, that a skillet is derived from Low Lat. skeletta, a little bell [from Du. schel, a bell], on the ground that skillels are made of bell-metal, is to be rejected. Othello's helmet can hardly have been made of bell-metal, and a skillet is usually of brass or iron.

SKIM, to clear of scum, to pass lightly over a surface. (Scand.) 'Skim milk;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 36. A variant of scum; the change of vowel from u to i (y) is precisely what we should expect; but we only find a change of this character in the cognate G. schäumen, to skim, from schaum, scum.—Dan. skumme, to skim; from skum, scum; Swed. skumma mjölk, to skim milk, from skum, scum. Note also Irish sgem-im, I skim; from sgeim, foam, scum. See SCUM. ¶ We find a similar vowel-change in dint, M. E. dunt; in fill, derived from full; in list, verb, from lust, sb.; in trim, verb, from A. S. trum; &c. Der. skimmer; skim-milk, i. e. skimmed milk.

SKIN, the natural covering of the body, hide, bark, rind. (Scand.) M. E. skin, Chaucer, C. T. 3809; bere-skin or beres skin, a bear-skin, id. 2144. Not an early word; the A. S. scinn is very rare, and borrowed from Norse.—Icel. skinn, a skin; Swed. skinn; Dan. skind. β. Referred by Fick to Teut. type SKENDA, a skin (iii. 331). The Icel. skinn may stand for skind, by the assimilation common in that language; so also the Swed. skinn. The d is preserved in G. schinden, to skin, flay, O. H. G. scintan, scindan, sometimes a strong verb, with pt. t. schant, pp. geschunden, shewing that the base takes the form SKAND, which is prob. an extension from ✓SKA, to cut. Cf. Skt. chho, to cut. Perhaps allied to skin, q. v. Cf. also W. cen, skin, peel, scales; ysgen, dandriff. Der. skin, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147; skin-deep; skinn-er; skin-flint, a miser who would even skin a flint, if possible; skinn-y, Macb. i. 3. 55; skinn-i-ness.

SKINK, to draw or serve out wine. (E.) Obsolete. Shak. has under-skinker, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 26. Dryden has shinker, tr. of Homer, b. i. l. 803. The verb is fully explained under NUNCTION, q. v. SKIP, to leap lightly, pass over quickly. (C.) M. E. skippen, Chaucer, C. T. 3259; King Alisaunder, 768; pt. t. skipte, P. Plowman, B. xi. 103. Of Celtic origin.—Irish sgíob, to snatch, found in the pp. sgíobtha, snatched away, also used in the sense of 'active;' cf. sgíob, sb., a snatch; also sgobaim, I pluck, pull, whip, bite; Gael. sgíob, to start or move suddenly; to snatch or pull at anything, sgíob, to snatch, pluck, bite, twitch; W. ysgipio, to snatch away, ysgip, a quick snatch, cipio, to snatch, whisk away, cip, a quick pull. [It may be added that the E. word skipper, a master of a ship, is spelt sgíoboir in Irish; shewing the likeness in sound between E. skip and Irish sgíob.] Thus the orig. sense is to snatch, jerk, twitch.

β. The above words bear a remarkable likeness to Skt. hship [standing for ship], to throw, move quickly, impel, whence hshipra, adj. quick. Cf. also Icel. skoppa, to spin like a top, whence skoppara-kringla, a top, North E. scopperil spinner, a teetotum (Whitby Glossary), named from its skipping about.—✓SKAP, to throw; cf. Skt. hshap, to throw; Fick, i. 234. Der. skip, sb., skip-rop.

SKIPPER, the master of a merchant-ship. (Du.) 'In ages pass'd, as the skipper told me, ther grew a fair forrest in that channel where the Texel makes now her bed;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 5, dated from Amsterdam, April 1, 1617. Thus Howell picked up the word in Holland.—Du. schipper, 'a marriner, a shipper, a saylour, a navigator;' Hexham. Formed, with suffix -er (= E. -er) of the agent, from Du. schip, cognate with E. Ship, q. v. So also Dan. skipper, from skib; Swed. skeppare, from skepp.

SKIRMISH, an irregular fight, contest. (F.,—O. H. G.) Also spelt scrimmage; and even scaramouch is but the Ital. form of the same word. M. E. scarmiske, a slight battle, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 934, v. 1507; whence the verb to scarmish, Romance of Partenay, 2079. Spelt scarmoge, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 34.—O. F. escarmouche, 'a skirmish, bickering;' Cot. β. The change of vowel, from scarmish to skirmish, was due to the fact that we already had in our language the related M. E. skirmen, to fence or skirmish; the pt. t. skirmiden occurs very early in Layamon, 8406. This M. E. skirmen is from O. F. eskermir (Burguy), later escrimer, 'to fence, or play at fence, also, to lay hard about him;' Cot.—O. H. G. scirman, M. H. G. skirmen, to defend, fight; especially, to defend oneself with a shield.—O. H. G. scirm, schirm, G. schirm, a shield, screen, shelter, guard, defence.

γ. The etymology of the G. schirm does not seem to be known. It thus appears that the orig. sense of skirmish is 'to fight behind cover,' hence to take advantage of cover or slight shelter in advancing to fight. δ. Diez and Scheler shew clearly that the F. escarmouche, Ital. scaramuccia, are due to O. H. G. skerman, which is a mere variant of scirman. The ending of Ital. scaramuccia is a mere suffix; we find also Ital. scherm-ugio, a skirmish, scherm-ita, fencing, schermire, schermare, to fence, schermo, a defence, arms; also O. F. escarm-ie, answering to Ital. scherm-ita. The attempt to explain Ital. scaramuccia from O. H. G. scara, a troop (G. schaar), and O. F. musser, to hide, is quite wrong. Der. skirmish, verb, as above; skirmish-er. Doublets, scrimmage, scaramouch. [†]

SKIRT, the part of a garment below the waist, edge, border, margin. (Scand.) This is a doublet of skirt, but restricted to the sense of the lower part of the shirt or garment. Spelt skort, Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. i. l. 28. M. E. skirt. 'Skirt of a garment, Frames;' Prompt. Parv. — Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. skjorta, Dan. skjorte, a shirt. β. The cognate G. schurz has the sense of 'apron;' and special attention was called to the lower part of the shirt by the etymological sense, which signifies 'a short garment;' see Shirt. And see remarks on Kirtle. The general sense of 'edge' comes from that of 'lower edge,' or place where the garment is cut short. Der. skirt, verb, Milton, P. L. v. 282.

SKITTISH, frisking, full of frisks, said of a horse or unsteady person, fickle. (Scand.) 'Unstaid and skittish in all motions else;' Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 18. 'Some of theyr skyttyske condycyons;' Fabyan's Chronicle, an. 1255–6, ed. Ellis, p. 339. Formed from the verb to skit, a Lowland Sc. word, meaning 'to flounce, caper like a skittish horse,' Jamieson. Of Scand. origin. We find nearly related words in Swed. skutta, to leap, Swed. dial. skutta, skötta, to leap, Swed. dial. skytta, to go a-hunting, to be idle, skytla, to run to and fro; all of which (as Rietz says) are mere derivatives from Swed. skjuta, to shoot. To skit is a secondary verb, of Scand. origin, from the verb to shoot; and means to be full of shootings or quick darts, to jerk or jump about; hence the adj. skittish, full of frisks or capers. See further under Shoot.

β. We may also note Swed. skytt, Icel. skytta, skytja, skytta, Dan. skytte, an archer, marksmen (lit. 'a shooter'), whence the verb to skit also means 'to aim at' or reflect upon a person. 'Skit, verb, to reflect on;' E. D. S. Gloss. B. i; A. D. 1781. This explains the sb. skit, 'an oblique taunt,' Jamieson. Vigfusson notices E. skit with reference to Icel. skúti, skúta, skating, a scoff, taunt; perhaps these also may be referred to the same prolific Teut. base skut. ¶ The surname Sheat, M. E. sheat, swift, in King Alisaunder, 5637, Icel. skjóttr, swift, fleet, is likewise from Icel. skjóta, to shoot; and is closely related.

SKITTLES, a game in which wooden pins are knocked down by a ball. (Scand.) Formerly keels or hayles or nails; see Kails. Also kettle-pins or skittle-pins. Todd cites: 'When shall our kittle-pins return again into the Grecian skytals?' Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43. Halliwell gives kettle-pins, skittles. 'The Grecian skytals' is an invention, evidently suggested by Gk. σκυτάλη, a stick, staff, from which Sadler probably imagined that skittles was 'derived,' in the old-fashioned way of 'deriving' all English words from Latin and Greek. As kittle-pins never came from Greek, there is no reason why it should be expected to 'return' to it.

β. From comparison of skittles with kittle-pins, we may infer that the old name was skittle-pins, i. e. pins to be knocked down by a skittle or projectile. Skittle is, in fact, a doublet of shuttle, signifying, originally, anything that could be shot or thrown; thus the M. E. schitel meant the bolt of a door. Cf. M. E. schytte, a child's game, Lat. sagittella, Prompt. Parv.; though there is a doubt whether this refers to skittles or to shuttle-cock.

γ. Shuttle is the English, but skittle the Scand. form. — Dan. skytel, a shuttle, Swed. dial. skytel, sköttel, a shuttle; Norweg. skutel, (1) a harpoon, (2) a shuttle; Icel. skutill, an implement shot forth, a harpoon, a bolt or bar of a door. — Icel. skut, base of pl. of pt. t. of the strong verb skjóta, to shoot, cognate with E. Shoot, q. v. And see Shuttle. Also see Skittish.

SKUE, old spelling of Skew, q. v.

SKULK, the same as Sculk, q. v.

SKULL, SCULL, the bony casing of the brain, the head, cranium. (Scand.) M. E. skulle, sculle, Chaucer, C. T. 3933; spelt schulle, Ancren Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; scolle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 17. Named from its bowl-like shape; the same word as Lowland Sc. skull, skoll, a bowl to hold liquor, goblet (Jamieson). — Icel. skál, a bowl; Swed. skål, a basin, bowl; Dan. skaal, a bowl, cup. See further under Scale (1). Der. scull (2), q. v.; also skull-cap.

SKUNK, a N. American quadruped. (N. American Indian.) Modern; imported from N. American. 'Contracted from the Abenaki seganku;' Webster. Abenaki is a dialect of the Algonquin race of N. American Indians, spoken in Lower Canada and Maine.

SKY, the clouds, the heavens. (Scand.) M. E. skie, skye, in the sense of 'cloud;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 510. Used in the mod. general sense, King Alisaunder, 318. — Icel. ský, a cloud; Dan. and Swed. sky, a cloud. Cf. A. S. scúa, scíwa, a shade, Grein, ii. 412; Icel. skuggi, shade, shadow. All from the √SKU, to cover; whence also scu-m, show-er, hide, and ob-scu-re; Fick, iii. 337. Cf. Skt. sku, to cover; Lat. ob-scu-rus. Der. sky-blue, -lark, -light, -rocket, -sail; skyward, toward the sky. Also sky-ey, adj., Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 9.

SLAB (1), a thin slip or flat piece of stone or wood. (Scand.) Now gen. used of stone; but formerly also of timber. 'Slab, the outside plank of a piece of timber, when sawn into boards;' Ray, North-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also used of pieces of tin; Ray, Account of Preparing Tin. 'Saw slab of thy timber for stable and stie;' Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 17, st. 35. (E. D. S.) M. E. slab, rare; but we find the expression 'a slab of ire,' i. e. a piece of iron, in Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 135, l. 141. Cf. also Prov. E. slappel, a piece, part, or portion, given as a Sussex word in Ray's South-Country Words. The word is rather Scand. than E., and means 'a smooth piece;' being connected with North E. slape, smooth, which is borrowed from Icel. sléipr, slippery. The word slab itself stands for slap or slape, from the Icel. strong verb sléppa (pt. t. slapp), to slip; see Slip. We use the very same idiom when we speak of a slip or thin slip, meaning a slice. This is confirmed by the Norweg. sléip, adj., slippery, smooth; whence sléip, sb., a smooth piece of timber for dragging anything over, chiefly used of a row of pieces of timber laid down as the foundation of a road (Aasen). β. This Norweg. word explains not only slab, but sleeper, well known as a name for a block of wood on which the rails of a railway rest. So named, not from being always asleep, but from forming a slape or smooth foundation. So also the Norfolk slaper, sleeper, the stump of a tree cut off short, M. E. sléipr, slippery (Halliwell). The Swed. släpa means a sledge; from its slipping along.

γ. We may also note that the O. Du. slippen means 'to tear, or cut in peeces, to slit,' as well as 'to slip;' Hexham. Hence slab = that which is cut smooth, a smooth slip. ¶ Mahn refers us to W. llab, a slip, stripe, stroke, strip, evidently allied to W. llabio, to slap; which does not much help us, and prob. belongs to slap rather than to slip. A slab is an outside plank, because it only need be smooth on one side. [†]

SLAB (2), viscous, slimy. (C.) 'Make the gruel thick and slab;' Macb. iv. 1. 32. 'Slabby, sloppy, dirty;' Halliwell. — Irish slab, slab, Gael. slaib, mire, mud left on the strand of a river; Gael. slaibeach, miry. Cf. Icel. sléipja, slime. See Slop.

SLABBER, to slaver, to let the saliva fall from the mouth, to make wet and dirty. (O. Low G.) The forms slabber, slobber, slubber, are mixed up. Slubber (q. v.) is the Scand. form. Again, we have also the form slaver; this appears to be a modified and, as it were, a more 'genteel' form of slabber. It is best to treat these four forms all together. Shak. has sloberry, wet and foul; Hen. V. iii. 5. 13; also slubber, to sully, Oth. i. 3. 227; slubber, to do carelessly and negligently, Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39. 'Her milke-pan and cream-pot so slabbered and sost [dirtied];' Tusser's Husbandry, April, sect. 48, st. 20. (E. D. S.) M. E. slabber. 'Then come sleuthe al bislabeled' = then came Sloth, all be-slabbared; P. Plowman, B. v. 392; where another MS. has byslobred. [Also slavener; 'His mounthe slavens,' Pricke of Conscience, 784; see Slaver.] Not found in A. S. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, from an infin. slabben. — O. Du. slabben, beslabben, to slaver; een slabbe, or slab-doeck, a child's bib, or slaving clout [where doeck = G. tuch, cloth]; Hexham. Hexham also gives slabben, 'to lappe as dogges doe in drinking, to sup, or to lick;' with the frequentative slabberen, 'to sup up hot broth.' Low G. slabben, to lap, lick; whence slabbern, beslabbern, to let fall drops in drinking, to slaver; also slubbern, to lap, sip. + G. schlabbern, schlabben, to lap, to slaver, slabber; schlabberig, slabby, slobbery; cf. schlabbe, the mouth of animals, in vulgar language, as being used for lapping up. Probably allied to Gael. and Irish slaib, mud, mire, Irish slabaire, a dirty person; see Slab (2), Slop.

β. The form of the base appears to be SLAB, or SLAP; probably a related form to Aryan LAB, LAP, to lick; see Lap. Cf. prov. E. slap, to eat quickly, lick up food. γ. Or it is quite possible that slabber, like slab (1), is related to slip and slop (1). We have distinct traces of two Teut. roots, SLAP, to lick, and SLAP, to slip, which were probably orig. identical. Doublets, slaver, which is a Scand. form; so also is slubber.

SLACK, lax, loose. (E.) M. E. slak. 'With slake paas' = with slow pace; Chaucer, C. T. 2903 (Group A, 2901). — A. S. slac, slack, slow, Grein, ii. 455. 'Lentus, vel piger, slac;' Wright's Vocab. i. 49, col. 2; 74, col. 1. + Icel. slakr, slack; whence slakna, to slacken, become slack. + Swed. and Dan. slak. + Provincial G. schlack, slack (Flügel); M. H. G. slach, O. H. G. slah.

β. All from a Teut. base SLAKA, slack; Fick, iii. 358. This answers to an Aryan base SLAG, SARG, which appears to be represented by Skt. srij, to let flow, let loose, connected with sri, to flow, from √SAR, to flow; see further under Slag. It seems probable that the Aryan base LAG, loose, is the same as SLAG with the loss of the initial s; if so, we may consider lag, languish, lax as related words. Der. slack-ly, slack-ness. Also slack, verb, Oth. iv. 3. 88, spelt slacke in Palsgrave; of which slake is a doublet; see Slake. Also slack-en, properly 'to become slack,' though often used in the trans. sense; the M. E. form is slaknen (Stratmann). Also slag, q. v., slug, q. v., slouch, q. v.

SLAG, the dross of metal, scoria. (Swed.) 'Another furnace they have, . . . in which they melt the slags, or refuse of the litharge; Ray, On the Smelting of Silver (1674); in reprint of Ray's Glossaries, Glou. B. 15, p. 10. (E. D. S.) It also occurs in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil (1582), Æn. iii. 576; ed. Arber, p. 89, l. 4. The word is Swedish.—Swed. slagg, dross, dross of metal, slag; järnslag, dross of iron; slaggarv, a heap of dross and cinders (Widegren). So called from its flowing over when the metal is fused; cf. Icel. slagna, to flow over, be spilt, slag, slagi, wet, dampness, water penetrating walls.

β. Slag is a weakened form of slack, loose, orig. fluid; see Slack. This is clearly shewn by G. schlacke, 'dross, slacks, sediment,' Flügel; schlackenofen, furnace to melt scoria; schlackenstein, stone coming from scoria (i.e. slag); schlackern, to trickle, rain heavily, to become slack; schlack, slack, drossy, sloppy. So also Low G. slakke, scoria; Bremen Wörterbuch. Even in the Prompt. Parv., we find M. E. slag synonymous with slak, in the sense of muddy.

γ. This helps out the derivation of slack, as it shews that the orig. sense of slack was 'fluid'; cf. Skt. stij, to let loose, let flow, effuse, shed. See Slack. Der. slagg-y.

SLAKE, to slacken, quench, mix with water. (E.) To slake or slack lime is to put water to it, and so disintegrate or loosen it. 'Quick-lime, taken as it leaves the kiln, and thrown into a proper quantity of water, splits with noise, puffs up, produces a large disengagement of vapour, and falls into a thick paste;' Weale, Dict. of Terms in Architecture, &c. Slake is an older spelling than slack, of which it is a doublet. M. E. slaken, to render slack, to slake. 'His wrappe for to slake;' Will. of Palerne, 728; spelt slakie, Layamon, 23345, later text.—A. S. slæcian, to grow slack or remiss; found in the comp. slæccian, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 610, l. 16, ii. 98, l. 15.—A. S. slæc, slack; see Slack.

β. There is also a M. E. slæken, to quench, extinguish, Prompt. Parv. This is from A. S. slæccan, Grein, ii. 455, which is nothing but a doublet of slæccian, with vowel-change consequent on the loss of i. + Icel. slökva, to slake; which, however, was orig. a strong verb, with pp. slökinn; still it is from the same Teut. base SLAK. + Swed. släcka, to quench, put out, allay, slack; from slak, slack.

SLAM, to shut with violence and noise. (Scand.) Orig. a Northern word. 'To slam one, to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently; he slamm'd to the door; North;' Grose's Provincial Glossary, ed. 1790.—Norweg. slamba, to smack, bang, bang or slam a door quickly; also spelt slemma, slamra; Swed. dial. slämma, to slam, strike or push hastily, to slam a door (Aasen, Rietz); Icel. slamra, slambra, to slam. Cf. Swed. slamra, to prate, chatter, jingle; slammer, a clank, noise. To slam is to strike smartly, and is closely related to Slap; see Slap. Note prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently; Halliwell.

SLANDER, scandal, calumny, false report, defamation. (F., —L., —Gk.) A doublet of scandal, as will appear. M. E. scalandre, Chaucer, C. T. 8598; scalandre, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; K. Alisaunder, 757.—O. F. esclandre, 'a slander;' Cot. The oldest F. form was scandele, whence proceeded the forms escandele, escandle, escandre (Burguy); and lastly, by insertion of l, the form esclandre.—Lat. scandalum; see Scandal. Der. slander, verb, M. E. slawndre, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21; slander-er; slander-ous, from O. F. esclandreux (Cot.); slander-ous-ly. Doublet, scandal.

SLANG, low, vulgar language, a colloquial and familiar mode of expression. (Scand.) Not in early use. In the Slang Dict., the earliest known instance is given as follows. 'Let proper nurses be assigned, to take care of these babes of grace [young thieves] . . . The master who teaches them should be a man well versed in the cant language commonly called the slang patter, in which they should by all means excel;' Jonathan Wild's Advice to his Successor; London, J. Scott, 1758. The same book gives: 'Slang, to cheat, abuse in foul language; Slang-uhanger, a long-winded speaker; also, out on the slang, to travel with a hawker's licence; slang, a watch-chain, a travelling-show.' The word is derived from slang, pt. t. of the verb to sling, i. e. to throw, cast. This is shewn by Wedgwood, following Aasen; E. Müller thinks it unsatisfactory, but actual reference to Aasen's Norwegian Dict. ought to settle the matter; I cite the most material statements. β. We find, for example, Norweg. sleng, a slinging, also an invention, device, stratagem; also, a little addition, or burthen of a song, in verse and melody; ettersleng (lit. after-slang), a burthen at the end of a verse of a ballad; slenga, to dangle (which shews why slang sometimes means a watch-chain); slengja, to sling, cast, slengja kjefsten (lit. to sling the jaw), to use abusive language, to slang; slengjenamn, a nickname (lit. a slang-name), also, a name that has no just reason; slengjeord (lit. a slang-word), an insulting word or allusion, a new word that has no just reason, or, as Aasen puts it, forærmelige Ord eller Hentydninger, nye Ord som ikke have nogen rigtig Grund. It is difficult to see how a more exact and happy definition of a slang word could be given. The use of slang in the sense 'to cheat' reminds us of Icel. slyng, slunginn, versed in a thing, cunning. And that all the above Norweg. and Icel. words are derivatives from sling is quite clear; see Sling. I see no objection to this explanation; which is far preferable to the wholly improbable and unauthorized connection of slang with E. lingo and F. langue, without an attempt to explain the initial s, which has been put forward by some, but only as a guess.

¶ Taylor, in his Words and Places, gives, without any proof or reference, the following explanation. 'A slang is a narrow strip of waste land by the road-side, such as those which are chosen by the gipsies for their encampments. [This is amplified from Halliwell, who merely says: 'Slang, a narrow piece of land, sometimes called slanket.'] To be out on the slang, in the lingo used by thieves and gipsies, means to travel about the country as a hawker, encamping by night on the roadside slangs. [Amplified from the Slang Dict., which says not a word about these night-encampments.] A travelling-show was also called a slang. It is easy to see how the term slang was transferred to the language spoken by hawkers and itinerant showmen.' To this I take exception; it is not 'easy to see;' surely no one would dream of calling thieves' language a travelling-show, or a camping-place. On the other hand, it is likely that a slang (from the verb sling, to cast) may have meant 'a cast' or 'a pitch;' for both cast and pitch are used to mean a camping-place, or a place where a travelling-show is exhibited; and, indeed, Halliwell notes that 'a narrow slip of ground' is also called a slinget. But I leave this to the reader, merely protesting against the conclusion which Mr. Taylor so hastily draws, and remarking that it only takes us back to the same original.

SLANT, to slope. (Scand.) We also have slant, adj. sloping; the verb should rather take the form to slent. Lowland Sc. slent, sklent, sklent, to give a slanting direction, to dart askance (in relation to the eyes), to pass obliquely, to render sloping (Jamieson). M. E. slenten, to slope, to glide; 'it slented doune to the erthe,' Morte Arthure, ii. 281, as cited in Halliwell, p. 755. 'A fote ynto the erthe hyt slente;' MS. Camb. Ff. ii. 38, fol. 113; cited in Halliwell, p. 711. [The insertion of e, as in slenten, occurs again in M. E. slendre for mod. E. slender.]—Swed. dial. slenta, slänta, lit. 'to cause to slide;' causal form of the strong verb slinta (pt. t. slant, pp. slantit), to slide, slip with the foot (Rietz). Cf. O. Swed. slinta, to slip with the foot (Ihre); Swed. slinta, to slip, miss one's step, to glance (as a chisel on a stone), to slip or glance (as a knife); Widegren. Also Swed. slutta (= slunta), to slant, slope.

β. The form SLINT is a nasalised derivative from the Teut. base SLID, to slide; see Slide. It is also a parallel formation to slink; see Slink. The E. adj. slant, sloping, answers to the Swed. dial. slant, adj. slippery, esp. used of a path; the connection between sloping and slippery, in this case, is obvious. Cf. Low G. slindern, to slide on the ice; nasalised form from Teut. base SLID, as above. Also O. Du. slinderen, slidderen, 'to dragge or to traine;' Hexham. The Cornish slentya, to slide, to glide along, is worth notice; perhaps it was borrowed from English; we find also W. ysglent, a slide. Der. slant-ly, slant-wise; also a-slant, q. v.

SLAP, to smack, to strike with the flat open hand (E.?) Rare in literature; but we find M. E. slappe, sb., a smart blow; Palladius on Husbandry, b. iv. l. 763. Perhaps we may call it an E. word; it occurs both in Low and High German. + Low G. slapp, the sound of a blow, a sounding box on the ears. 'Slapp! sloog ik em an de snute, I hit him on the snout, slap!' Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. schlapp, interj., slap! schlapp, sb., a slap; schlappen, verb, to slap. [Quite a different word from Swed. slapp, lax, loose, Dan. slap, slack, &c.] β. Perhaps an imitative word, to express the sound of a blow; it is certainly closely allied to slam; cf. prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently (Halliwell). At the same time, the particular form of the word may have been influenced by the common Teut. base SLAH, to strike; see Slay. Der. slap, sb., M. E. slappe, as above; slap, adv., slap-bang, violently.

SLASH, to cut with a violent sweep, cut at random or violently. (F., —O. H. G.?) M. E. slashen, very rare. In Wyclif, III Kings, v. 18, the Lat. dolauerunt is translated by han ouerscorehede in the earlier text, with the various reading han slascht; the later text has heuiden. 'Hewing and slashing;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 15. 'Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slash;' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 90. 'But presently slash off his traitorous head;' Green, Alphonsus; ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 23. 'Slash, a cut or gash, Yorks.;' Halliwell. Slashed sleeves are sleeves with gashes in them, as is well known. Slish and slash are both variants of slice.—O. F. eslecher, eslescher, the same as esclischer, to dismember, sever, disunite; eslesche, a portion or part, a severing, dismemberment (Roquefort). 'Esleche, Eslesche, a dismembering, or separation; also, a part or piece dismembered;' Cot. 'Esleché, dismembered, rent, or torn from;' id. He also gives esleché, dismembered; and eslicher is the same as eslicher, whence E. slice; see Slice. The vowel a appears in the related word slate; see Slate. All from O. H. G. slāzan, to slit, split, rend, destroy; cognate with E. slit; see Slit. If this be right, slice, slish, slash, slate are all from the Teut. base SLIT. ¶ This is a new explanation. The only other suggested etymologies are quite out of the question; viz. (1) from Icel. slasa, to strike (Johnson); (2) from Swed. slaska, to paddle in water (Wedgwood). In the first place, the Icel. slasa really means 'to have an accident,' and is allied to slays, 'a mishap, mischance, accident;' which has nothing to do with the sense of slash. And secondly, the Swed. slaska accounts only for prov. E. slashy, wet and dirty, and Lowland Sc. slash, to work in wet, slatch, to dabble in mire, slatch, to bedaub; which are words wholly unrelated to the present one, but allied to prov. E. slosh and slush. Der. slash, sb. ¶ Slash, to whip, is a mere corruption of lash, q. v.

SLATE, a well-known stone that is easily split, a piece of such stone. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. slat, usually scelat, Wyclif, Luke, v. 19. So called from its fissile nature. — O. F. esclat, 'a shiver, splinter, or little piece of wood broken off with violence; also a small thin lath or shingle,' Cot. [A shingle is a sort of wooden tile.] — O. F. esclater; whence s'esclater, 'to split, burst, shiver into splinters;' Cot. — O. H. G. slizān, slizān (mod. G. schleissen), to slit, split, cognate with E. slit, q. v. β. Diez remarks that this derivation is sufficiently regular; the prefixed e is due to the difficulty, in French, of sounding the initial combination sl, and the vowel a answers to O. H. G. ei in seleizan, an occasional spelling of slizān. Cf. G. schleisse, a splinter, answering exactly to F. esclat. The O. F. esclat = mod. F. éclat; hence éclat is the same word. Der. slate-pencil, slat-er, slat-ing, slat-y. Doublet, éclat.

SLATTERN, a sluttish, untidy woman. (Scand.) It is used both by Butler and Dryden; Todd's Johnson (no reference). The final -n is difficult to account for; it is either a mere addition, as in bitter-n, or slattern is short for slatterin = slattering. Ray, in his North-Country Words, has: 'Dawgos, or Dawkin, a dirty slattering woman.' The word is formed from the verb to slatter, to waste, use wastefully, be untidy. 'Slatter, to waste; or rather, perhaps, not to make a proper and due use of anything; thus they say, take care, or you'll slatter it all away; also, to be untidy or slovenly;' Halliwell. 'Slatter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about;' Forby. Slatter is the frequentative (with the usual suffix -er) of slat, to dash or throw about. 'Slat, to strike, slap, throw or cast down violently or carelessly;' Halliwell. M. E. slatten; in the Ancien Riwle, p. 212, l. 6, we have: 'heo sleateð [various readings, sclettēs, sclettēs] adun boā two hore earen' = they negligently cast down both their two ears, i. e. they refuse to hear. Cf. King Alisaunder, 2262. — Icel. sletta, to slap, dab, squirt out liquids, dash them about; cf. the sb. sletta, a dab, a spot, blot (of ink). Cf. Norweg. sletta, to fling, cast, jerk off one (Aasen). β. The Norweg. sletta, verb, also has an allied sb. slett, a blow, answering to A. S. gesleht, a smiting, A. S. Chron. an. 937, formed (with suffix -t) from sleg-en (= sleh-en), pp. of sleān, to smite, slay; see Slay. Thus a slattern is one who knocks or flings things about, with especial reference to dashing water about and splashing things; hence, wasteful, careless, and untidy. See Sleet. Der. slattern-ly. ¶ It is usual to connect slattern with slut; I suppose them to be from different sources, viz. slattern from the weak verb sletta, to fling, and slut from the strong verb sletta, to dangle.

SLAUGHTER, a slaying, carnage, butchery. (Scand.) M. E. slaghter, Pricke of Conscience, 3367; also slauir, spelt slawtyr in Prompt. Parv. The word is strictly Scand., from Icel. slátr, a slaughtering, butcher's meat, whence slátra, verb, to slaughter cattle. If the E. word had been uninfluenced by the Icel. word, it would have taken the form slaght or slought; in fact, the commonest forms in M. E. are slayt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 56, l. 2; slaught, Gower, C. A. i. 348, l. 16; directly from A. S. sleahst, Grein, ii. 455. β. The A. S. sleahst is cognate with Du. and Dan. slagt, G. schlacht, from a Teut. base SLAH-TA, a slaying (Fick, iii. 358); whilst the Icel. slátr is a neut. sb., closely related to it, with the same sense. γ. All from the base SLAH, whence E. slay; see Slay. Der. slaughter, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 302; slaughter-man, -house; slaughter-ous, Macb. v. 5. 14; slaughter-er.

SLAVE, a serf, one in bondage. (F., — G., — Slavonic.) Not in early use. In A Deuise of a Maske for the right honourable Viscount Mountacute, Gascoigne introduces the words slawe and slaueries; see Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 82, ll. 15, 20; i. 81, l. 13. — F. esclave, 'a slave;' Cot. — G. sklave, M. H. G. slave, a slave; G. Slave, a Slavonian, one of Slavonic race captured and made a bondman by the Germans. 'From the Euxine to the Adriatic, in the state of captives or subjects . . . they [the Slavonians] overspread the land; and the national appellation of the Slaves has been degraded by chance or malice from the signification of glory to that of servitude;' Gibbon, Decline of the Roman Empire, c. 55. β. The name Slave meant, in Slavonic, 'glorious,' as Gibbon intends us to understand; from Russ. slava, glory, fame, a word which is cognate with E. glory; see Glory. Der. slave, verb, K. Lear, iv. 1. 71; slav-er, slav-er-y, slav-ish, -ly, -ness; slave-trade; also en-slave. [†]

SLAVER, to slubber. (Scand.) 'His mouthe slavers;' Pricke of Conscience, 784. Slaveryt [for slaveryth] is used to translate F. bave; Walter de Bibbesworth, l. 12, in Wright's Vocab. i. 143. — Icel. slafra, to slaver; cognate with Low G. slabbern, to slaver, slubber; see Slabber. Der. slaver, sb., from Icel. slafir (also slefa), sb.; slaver-er. Doublet, slabber.

SLAY (1), to kill. (E.) Orig. to strike, smite. M. E. sleen, slee, Chaucer, C. T. 663; pt. t. slouh, slou (slew in Tyrwhitt), id. 989; pp. slain, id. 994. — A. S. sleān (contracted form of slahan), to smite, slay; pt. t. slōh, slōg, pl. slōgon; pp. slegen; Grein, ii. 455, 456. + Du. slaan, pt. t. sloeg, pp. geslagen. + Icel. slá. + Dan. slaa. + Swed. slå. + Goth. slahan. + G. schlagen; O. H. G. slahan. β. All from Teut. base SLAH, to smite; Fick, iii. 358. The words slay, slap, slam, sling, slit, all express violent action, and may be ultimately related. Der. slay-er, M. E. sle-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2007; also slaughter-er, q. v.; slatter-n, q. v.; slay (2), q. v.; sledge-hammer, q. v.; sleet, q. v., sly, q. v.

SLAY (2), SLEY, a weaver's reed. (E.) 'Slay, an instrument belonging to a weaver's loom that has teeth like a comb;' Phillips. 'Slay, a weavers' tool;' Palsgrave. — A. S. slē; [Pe]c[t]ica, slē; Wright's Vocab. i. 282; also (in the 8th century) 'Pectica, slahae,' id. ii. 117. So called from its striking or pressing the web tightly together. — A. S. sleān, to strike, smite; see Slay (1). 'Percusso feriunt insecti pectine dentes;' Ovid, Metam. v. 58. Cf. Icel. slá, a bar, bolt.

SLEAVE, SLEAVE-SILK, soft floss silk. (Scand.) 'Ravell'd sleeve,' i. e. tangled loose silk, Macb. ii. 2. 37. See Nares and Halliwell. — Dan. sløife, a bow-knot, i. e. loose knot; Swed. slejf, a knot of ribbon. + G. schleife, a loop, knot, springe, noose; lit. a slip-knot, from schleifen, to glide, slip. + Low G. sløpe, slepe, a noose, slip-knot; from slepen, to slip. See Slip. Thus the orig. notion is that of slipping about, or looseness; cf. G. schlaff, Low G. slapp, loose, slack. ¶ I suspect the word to be rather Flemish than Scand., but cannot find the right form. Some dictionaries cite Icel. slefa, a thin thread; there is nothing like it in Egilsson or Cleasby and Vigfusson, except slafast, to slacken, become slovenly, which helps to explain sleave.

SLED, SLEDGE, SLEIGH, a carriage made for sliding over snow or ice. (Scand.) M. E. slede, Prompt. Parv. Pl. sledis, Wyclif, 1 Chron. xx. 3; spelt sleddis in the later text. — Icel. sleði; Dan. slæde; Swed. slæde, a sledge. + Du. slæde, a sledge. + O. H. G. slito, slitā; G. schlitten. All from Teut. base SLID, to slide; see Slide. So also Irish and Gael. slao, a sledge, from slao, to slide. β. The different spellings may be thus explained. 1. The right form is sled. 2. The form sledge (perhaps from the pl. sleds) appears to be due to confusion with the commoner word sledge in the sense of 'hammer;' see Sledge-hammer. 3. The form sleigh is due to contraction by the loss of d. Thus the Norwegian has both slæde and slee; so also Du. sleekeets, a sleigh-coach, stands for sledekeets.

SLEDGE-HAMMER, a mallet or heavy hammer. (E.) Properly sledge; sledge-hammer means 'hammer-hammer,' and shews reduplication. Sledge is a weakened form of M. E. slegge, Romans of Partenay, 3000. — A. S. sleoge, a heavy hammer, in a gloss (Bosworth). Lit. 'a smiter;' regularly formed from sleg-en, pp. of sleān, to smite, slay; see Slay (1). + Du. slegge, slei, a mallet. + Swed. slägga, a sledge. + Icel. slegga. Cf. also G. schlägel, Du. slegel, a mallet; from the same verb. We even find G. schlag-hammer, with hammer suffixed, as in English.

SLEEK, SLICK, smooth, glossy, soft. (Scand.) 'I sleek, I make paper smoth with a sleek-stone, Je fais glissant;' Palsgrave. 'And if the cates skyn be slyk and gay;' Chaucer, C. T. Group D, 351, Ellesmere MS.; other readings slike, slycke. Tyrwhitt prints sleke, l. 5933. Spelt slike, adv., smoothly, Havelok, 1157. — Icel. slíkr, sleek, smooth; whence slíki-steinn, a fine whetstone (for polishing). Cf. O. Du. sleyck, 'plaine, or even;' Hexham. β. The Du. slíjk, Low G. slíkk, G. schlick, grease, slime, mud, are closely related words; so also is the strong verb which appears in Low G. sliken (pt. t. sleek, pp. sleken), G. schleichen (pt. t. slích, pp. geschlichen). O. H. G. slíhan, to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly (as if through mire); see Slink.

γ. The verbs slí-nk, slí-de, slí-p, are all obviously related; from √ SAR, to flow, glide. The orig. sense of sleek is 'greasy,' like soft mud. In exactly the same way, from the verb to slip, we have Icel. sleipr, slippery (North E. slape), and slípa, to make smooth, to whet, Du. slíppen, to polish, G. schleifen, to glide, to whet, polish; connected with G. schliefen, to crawl, just as the words above are with G. schleichen, to crawl.

SLEEP, to slumber, repose. (E.) M. E. slepen, Chaucer, C. T. 10. Properly a strong verb, with pt. t. slep, which is still in use provincially, and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 98. — A. S. slēpan, slēpan, pt. t. slēp; Grein, ii. 455. + Du. slapen. + Goth. slēpan, pt. t. sai-slēp (with reduplication). + G. schlafen; O. H. G. slāfan.

β. In connection with these is the sb. which appears as E. sleep, A. S. slēp, Du. slaap, Goth. slēps, G. schlaf, O. H. G. slāf; of which the orig. sense is drowsiness, numbness, lethargy; as shewn more clearly by the related adjective in Low G. slapp, G. schlaff, lax, loose, unbent, remiss, flabby, answering in form to Icel. slæppr, slippery, as well as to Russ. slabuii, weak, feeble, faint, slack, loose; Fick, iii. 359. γ. Again, the Icel. slæppr is derived from the strong verb slæppa, pt. t. slapp, to slip, cognate with E. slip, q. v. Thus all the above words can be referred back to the verb to slip; and it is easy to see how the sense of 'slippery' led to that of 'remiss' or 'lax'; whence sleep, the period of remissness or inattention to outward circumstances. This sense still survives in our common use of sleepy for inactive. Der. a-sleep, q. v.; sleep-er, sleep-less, sleep-less-ly, sleep-less-ness; sleep-walk-er, sleep-walk-ing; sleep-y, sleep-i-ly, -ness.

SLEEPER, a block of wood on which rails rest. (Scand.) From Norweg. slæip; explained under Slab, q. v.

SLEET, rain mingled with snow or hail. (Scand.) M. E. sleet, Chaucer, C. T. 11562. Of Scand. origin; and closely related to Norweg. slætta, sleet (Aasen). So named because it slats or splashes the face. — Norweg. slætta, to fling; Icel. slætta, to slap, dab, esp. with liquids; answering to North E. slat, to strike, slap, cast down violently, itself a derivative of slay, to smite, as shewn under Slattern. Hence the frequentative verb slatter, to waste, throw about, be slovenly, particularly used of throwing about liquids, as shewn in Yorksh. slat, a spot, stain (Icel. slætta, a spot, blot), slattery, wet, dirty; slatter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about (Forby); and see Halliwell. And see Slattern.

¶ The Dan. slud, sleet, can hardly be related; it answers to Icel. sludda, sleet, cold rain, wet, allied to Icel. sludda, a clot of spittle or mucus. The A. S. slit means 'slaughter'; the sense of 'sleet' rests only on the authority of Sommer; if right, it takes us back to the same root SLAH, to smite. Der. sleet-y, sleet-i-ness.

SLEEVE, part of a garment, covering the arm. (E.) M. E. sleeue, sleve (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 193. — A. S. slēfe, or slēf, a sleeve, also spelt slýfe or slýf. 'On his twām slýfum' = in his two sleeves; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 376. Slēf-leas, sleeveless; Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 1. 'Manica, slýf'; id. i. 81, col. 2; pl. slýfa, id. i. 25, col. 2. We also find the verb slēfan, to put on, to clothe; Life of St. Guthlac, c. 16. The long e (é) results from a long o, pointing back to a base slōf. + O. Du. sloove, 'a vaile, or a skin; the turning up of anything'; whence slooven, 'to turn up ones sleeves, to cover ones head'; Hexham. Also O. Du. sleve, 'a sleeve'; id. + G. schlaube, a husk, shell (Flügel). Allied to M. H. G. sloufen, to let slip, cover, clothe, a causal form allied to M. H. G. sliefen, O. H. G. slifan, to slip, glide, cognate with A. S. slīpan, to slip.

β. From the verb to slip, as shewn by the G. form; cf. Goth. slīpan (pt. t. slaup, pp. slupans), to slip, creep into. We talk of slipping into clothes, of slipping clothes on and off, and of slippers for the feet. A sleeve is the part of a garment into which one's arms are slipped, a loose covering put on by pushing the arms through.

γ. There is a difficulty in the change from p to f; but we may note that the Dan. form of slip was slibe, whence the M. E. slive in the sense of 'slip.' Thus Palsgrave has: 'I slive downe, I fall downe sodainly, Je coule;' see slive in Halliwell. Wedgwood further cites: 'I'll slive on my gown and gang wi' thee,' Craven Glossary; also a quotation from Clare, where slives occurs in the sense of slips. The p is preserved in Slop (2), q. v. The double form for slip in A. S., viz. slūpan, slīpan, allows of great variation in the vowel-sounds. Der. sleeve-less, A. S. slēf-leas, as above. Horne Tooke explains a sleeveless errand (Troil. v. 4. 9) as meaning 'without a cover or pretence,' which is hardly intelligible; I suspect it to refer to the herald's tabard, which had no sleeves; in which case, a sleeveless errand would be such an one as is sent by a herald, which frequently led to no useful result. [†]

SLEIGHT, the same as Sled, q. v. [†]

SLEIGHT, cunning, dexterity. (Scand.) M. E. sleighte, Chaucer, C. T. 606; sleighte, sleithe, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 98; sleighte, Will. of Palerne, 2151; sleighte, Layamon, 17212 (later text, where the first text has liste, the E. word). — Icel. slægt (put for slægt), slyness, cunning. Formed with suffix -g (Aryan -ta), from slægr (put for slægr), sly; see Sly. + Swed. slögd, mechanical art, dexterity (which is one sense of E. sleight); from slög, handy, dexterous, expert; Widgren. β. Thus sleight (formerly sleight) is equivalent to sly-th, i. e. slyness. Der. sleight-of-hand.

SLENDER, thin, narrow, slight, feeble. (O. Low G.) M. E. slendre, Chaucer, C. T. 589; Richard Cœur de Lion, 3530. Slender stands, by vowel-change, for an older form slinder. Not found in A. S. — O. Du. slinder, 'slender, or thinn'; Hexham. The same word is also used as a sb., meaning 'a water-snake;' whilst slinderen or slidderen means 'to dragge or to traine.' Allied to G. schlender, the train of a gown, an easy lounging walk; schlenderen, to saunter, loiter; also to Low G. slender, a long, easy, trailing gown, slindern, to slide on the ice, as children do in sport.

β. All these are nasalised derivatives from the Teut. base SLID, to slide, trail along, Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 58; thus slender is 'trailing,' dragging, or long drawn out, whence the sense of thin; slinder is a long snake, from its trailing; and the other senses are obviously connected. See Slide. Der. slender-ly, -ness. [†]

SLICE, a thin, broad piece. (F., — O. H. G.) The sb. slice is older than the verb. M. E. slice, sclice, a thin piece, shiver, splinter. 'They braken speres to sclyces;' King Alisaunder, 3833. — O. F. eschice, a shiver, splinter, broken piece of wood; from the verb eschier, eschicer, to slit, split, break (Burguy). — O. H. G. slāzan, to slit; cognate with E. Slit, q. v. Closely allied words are Slate, Slash. Der. slice, verb; 'sliced into pieces,' Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxii. l. 298; slice-r. [†]

SLICK, the same as Sleek, q. v.

SLIDE, to glide, slip along, fall. (E.) M. E. sliden, slyden, Chaucer, C. T. 7958; pt. t. slood, Wyclif, Lament. iii. 53, later text; pp. sliden, spelt slyden, ibid., earlier text. — A. S. slīdan, pt. t. slīd, pp. sliden; only found in compounds. The pt. t. æt-slīd is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 512, l. 10; the pp. ā-slīden in the same, i. 492, l. 11. From the Teut. base SLID, to slide (Fick, iii. 359); whence also A. S. slīdōr, slippery, Icel. slēði, a sledge, slīðrar, fem. pl., a scabbard (into which a sword slides); G. schlitten, a sledge, schlittschuh, a skate (lit. slide-shoe); O. Du. slinder, a water-snake, slinderen, slidderen, 'to dragge or to traine,' Hexham; &c. See Slender.

β. Further related to Irish and Gael. slao, to slide, Lithuan. slīdus, slippery, slīsti, to slide, Russ. slīde, a foot-track. Slīp and slīde are both extensions from a base SLI, answering to Aryan ✓ SAR, to flow; cf. Skt. sri, to flow, sriti, gliding, sliding. See Slip. Der. slide, sb., slīd-er; also sled, sledge, or sleigh (under Sled); also slower, q. v.

SLIGHT, trifling, small, weak, slender. (O. Low G.) M. E. slīst, slyst. 'So smole, so smal, so seme slyst,' said of a fair young girl; Allit. Poems, A. 190. The orig. sense is even, flat, as a thing beaten flat. — O. Du. slīcht, 'even, or plaine'; slēcht, 'slight, simple, single, vile, or of little account'; slēcht ende recht, 'simple and right, without deceit or guile'; Hexham. Thus the successive senses are flat or even, smooth, simple, guileless, vile; by a depreciation similar to that which changed the sense of silly from that of 'guileless' to that of 'half-witted.' The verb to slight was actually once used in the sense of 'to make smooth'; thus Hexham explains O. Du. slīchten by 'to slight, to make even or plaine.' + O. Fries. slīucht; as 'een slīuchter eed' = a slight oath. + O. Low G. slīgt, even, smooth, simple, sily, poor, bad. + Icel. sléttr, flat, smooth, slight, trivial, common. + Dan. slæt, flat, level, bad. + Swed. slät, smooth, level, plain, wretched, worthless, slight. + Goth. slaihts, smooth; Luke, iii. 5. + G. schlicht, smooth, sleek, plain, homely.

β. All from Teut. type SLEH-TA, smooth, beaten flat; formed with the participial suffix -TA from Teut. base SLAH, to smite; see Slay (1). Fick, iii. 358. Der. slight-ly, slight-ness; slight, verb, to consider as worthless.

SLIM, weak, slender, thin, slight. (Du.) Not in early use. Noticed in Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671, as being in common use in Lincolnshire. Halliwell has: 'Slim, distorted or worthless, sly, cunning, crafty, slender, thin, slight'; also slam, tall and lean, the slope of a hill. The orig. sense was 'lax' or 'bending,' hence 'oblique,' or 'transverse'; then sly, crafty, slight, slender (in the metaphorical sense of unsubstantial); and hence slender or slight in the common sense of those words. This transference, from a metaphorical to a common sense, is unusual, but borne out by the history of the word; see Todd's Johnson. Thus Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy, says: 'that was a slim [slight, weak] excuse;' Todd. Perhaps the earliest instance in which it approaches the modern sense is: 'A thin slim-guttred fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost;' L'Estrange [in Todd]. It is clear that the use of the word has been influenced by confusion with the (unrelated) word slender, which sounds somewhat like it. 'Slim, naughty, crafty, Lincolnsk.; also, slender;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. — O. Du. slīm, 'awry, or byas-wise; craftie'; Hexham. + Dan. and Swed. slēm, bad, vile, worthless. + Icel. slām, vile, bad. + G. schlimm, bad, evil, sad, unwell, arch, cunning.

β. The form slam, i. e. bending, stands for slamp, nasalised form of Low G. slapp, lax; cf. G. schlappen, to dangle; schlappen, to hang down; see Sleep. Der. slīm-ness.

SLIME, any glutinous substance, viscous mire, mucus. (E.) M. E. slīme, slyme, or slīm (with long i); Gower, C. A. iii. 96, l. 2; spelt slīm, Ancrén Riwe, p. 276, l. 18. — A. S. slīm; as a various reading in Ps. lxxviii. 2 (Spelman). + Du. slīm, phlegm, slime. + Icel. slīm. + Swed. slēm. + Dan. slīm, mucus. + G. schleim. + Russ. slīna, saliva, drivel; cf. slīze, slime, mucus. β. Not to be connected with Lat. limus, mud (of which the sense is somewhat different), but with Lat. saliva, saliva, Gk. σάλιον, spittle, Lithuan. seile, spittle, slaver; Curtius, i. 465. Der. slim-y, slim-i-ness. Doublet, saliva.

SLING, to fling, cast with a jerk, let swing. (E.) M. E. slingen, pt. t. slang, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 132, l. 2; pp. slongen, Sir Percival, 672, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. — A. S. slingan, pt. t. slang, pp. slungen, very rare (Bosworth). + Du. slingeren, to toss, sling; a weak frequentative form. + Icel. slyngva, slongva, pt. t. slong, slauung, pp. slunginn, to sling, fling, throw. + Dan. slynge, weak verb. + Swed. slinga, weak verb. + G. schlingen, pt. t. schlang, pp. geschlungen, to wind, twist, entwine, sling. β. All from the Teut. base SLANG, to twist, wind round; Fick, iii. 359. Fick compares Russ. slakii, bent, bowed, crooked; Lithuan. slinkti, to creep; perhaps the latter (at least) is allied rather to G. schleichen, to creep, and to E. sleek, slink. The words sli-ng, sli-de, sli-p, sli-nk, seem to be all extensions from the Aryan ✓SAR, to flow, whence the sense of winding (as a river) would easily arise. Der. sling, sb., King Alisaunder, 1191; sling-er. Also slang, q. v.

SLINK, to sneak, crawl away. (E.) 'That som of þow shall be riȝt feyn to sclynk away and hyde'; Tale of Beryn, 3334. — A. S. slincan, Gen. vi. 7. A nasalised form of an A. S. *slican, to creep, not found, but cognate with the strong Low G. verb sliehen (pt. t. sleek, pp. sleken) and the G. schleichen (pt. t. slich, pp. geschlichen), to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly; see Sleek. + Lithuan. slinkti, to creep; and cf. Russ. sliahi, bent, bowed, crooked. β. The A. S. slincan was prob. a strong verb; we still use slunk as the past tense; see Titus Andron. iv. i. 63.

SLIP, to creep or glide along, to slink, move out of place, escape; also, to cause to slide, omit, let loose. (E.) We have confused the strong (intransitive) and weak (transitive) forms; or rather, we have preserved only the weak verb, with pt. t. slipped, pp. slipped or slipt. The strong verb would have become *slipe, pt. t. *slope, pp. *slippen, long disused; but Gower has him slipeth (used reflexively), riming with wipeth, C. A. ii. 347. Gower also has he slipte (wrongly used intransitively), from the weak verb slippen; C. A. ii. 72; the pp. slipped (correctly used) is in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 244. — A. S. *slippan, not found; transitive weak verb, derived from A. S. slipan (pt. t. sláp, pp. slipen), to slip, glide, pass away. 'Sóna seo fastnys tó-slepeð' = soon the costiveness will pass away; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 164, l. 20. The A. S. adj. sliper, slippery, is from the stem of the pp.; it occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 92, l. 16. It must further be remarked that there is yet a third form of the verb, occurring as A. S. sleopan or slúpan (pt. t. sleáp, pp. slopan); Grein, ii. 457. + Du. slippen (weak), to slip, escape. + Icel. sleppa (weak), to let slip; causal of sleppa (strong, pt. t. slapp, pp. slippinn), to slip, slide, escape, fail, miss. + Dan. slippe (pt. t. slap), to let go, also to escape. + Swed. slippa (weak), to get rid of, also to escape. + M. H. G. slipfen, G. schliefen, to glide away; weak verb, from O. H. G. slifan, G. schleifen, to slide, glance, also to grind, whet, polish (i. e. make slippery or smooth). In the last sense, to polish, we find also Du. slippen, Swed. slipa, Dan. slibe, Icel. slípa; the forms require careful arrangement. β. All these are from a Teut. base SLAP, SLIP, to slip, glide. There is also a base SLUP; whence Goth. sluþan (pt. t. slauþ, pp. sluþans), to slip or creep into, 2 Tim. iii. 6; A. S. sleopan, slúpan, as above; Du. sluipen, to sneak, G. schlüpfen, to slip, glide. γ. All from Aryan ✓SARP, to creep; whence E. Serpent, q. v. But see Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 163. Der. slip, sb.; slip-knot, slip-shod; also slipp-er, a loose shoe easily slipped on, K. John, iv. 2. 197, called in A. S. slype-scós (slype-scó?), a slip-shoe; see Wright, Vocab. i. 289, l. 7. Also slipp-er-y, adj., formed by adding -y (=A. S. -ig) to M. E. sliper (A. S. sliper), slippery, which occurs, spelt slipper, as late as in Shak. Oth. ii. i. 246, and Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 153; slipper-i-ness. Also slope, q. v., sleeve, q. v., slops, q. v. And perhaps slop (1), slab (1), sleep.

SLIT, to split, tear, rend, cut into strips. (E.) Just as we make slip do duty for two forms slip and slipe (see Slip), so we use slit in place of both slit and slite. M. E. slitten, weak verb, Chaucer, C. T. 14402; from sliten, strong verb, whence the pp. slityn (with short i), Prompt. Parv. The latter is derived from A. S. slitan, pt. t. slát, pp. sliten (short i); Grein, ii. 456. + Icel. slíta, pt. t. sléit, pp. slitinn, to slit, rend. + Dan. slide. + Swed. slita, to tear, pull, wear. + Du. sliften, to wear out, consume. + O. H. G. slizan, G. schleissen, to slit, split; whence the weak verb schlitzen, to slit, slash, cleave. β. All from Teut. base SLIT, to slit, Fick, iii. 359. Perhaps cognate with Lat. lādere (lādere in compounds) and Skt. śridh, to injure. Der. slit, sb., A. S. slite, Matt. ix. 16. Also slate, q. v., slice, q. v., slash, q. v., éclat, q. v. (But not sléat.)

SLIVER, a splinter, twig, small branch broken off, slice. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 174. M. E. sliver, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1015. Sliver is the dimin. of slive, just as shiver is of shive, and splinter of splint. Prov. E. slive, a slice, chip, from the verb slive, to cut or slice off; Halliwell. The verb slive is M. E. sluven, to cleave, spelt slyven in Prompt. Parv. — A. S. slifan (pt. t. sláf, pp. slifen), to cleave, in a gloss (Bosworth). This verb appears to be exactly parallel to A. S. slitan (pt. t. slát, pp. sliten), and a mere variant of it; see Slit.

SLOE, a small sour wild plum. (E.) M. E. slo, pl. slon (with long o), King Alisaunder, 4983. — A. S. slá, pl. slán. 'Moros, slán'; Wright's Voc. i. 285, col. 1. + Du. slee, formerly sleu. + Dan. slæen. + Swed. slán. + G. schlehe, pl. schlehen; O. H. G. sléha. + Lithuan. slywa, a plum. + Russ. sliva, a plum. β. Sloe is 'the small astringent wild plum, so named from what we call setting the teeth on edge, which in other languages is conceived as blunting them; see Adelung; Wedgwood. This is quite right; see Fick, iii. 358. Cf. O. Du. sleuw, 'sharpe or tart'; slee or sleuw, 'tender, slender, thinnor blunt'; de sleuwigheydt der tanden, 'the edgness or sowrenesse of the teeth'; Hexham. The Du. sleuw is the same word as E. slow; see Slow. The sloe is the slow (i. e. tart) fruit.

SLOGAN, a Highland war-cry. (Gaelic.) Englished from Gael. sluagh-ghairm, 'the signal for battle among the Highland clans.' — Gael. sluagh, a host, army; and ghairm, a call, outcry, from gairm, to call, cry out, crow as a cock, which is from ✓GAR, to cry out; see Crow. The sense is 'cry of the host.'

SLOOP, a one-masted ship. (Du.) 'Sloop, a small sea-vessel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Mentioned in Dampier, Voyages, an. 1680 (R.); and in Hexham. — Du. sloop; O. Du. sloope, sloepken, 'a sloop, or a boate,' Hexham, ed. 1658. β. The etymology is doubtful, because it would appear that O. Du. sloope is a contraction of F. chaloupe, whence E. shallop; see Shallop. γ. If sloope were a real Du. word, it might be derived (like O. Du. sloope, a cave, sloepen, to filch) from the verb which appears in E. as Slip, q. v. In this case, a sloop might mean a vessel that slips or steals along; which is the etymology usually given; see Diez, s. v. chaloupe. Shallop is older than sloop, as far as English is concerned; further light is desired. Doublet, shallop (?).

SLOP (1), a puddle, water or liquid carelessly spilt. (E.) M. E. sloppe, a pool, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3923. — A. S. sloppe, slýppe, the sloppy droppings of a cow; occurring in cú-sloppe, a cow-slop (now cowslip), Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2, and oxan-sloppe, an ox-slop (now oxlip). We also find A. S. slype, a viscid substance, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 18, l. 27, spelt slípe in the next line. The etymology is from A. S. slop, stem of pp. of slúpan, to dissolve, closely allied to slipan, to slip. 'þá wearð heora heorte tó-slopan' = then was their heart dissolved, made faint; Joshua, v. 1. β. This is made more probable by the fact that slop (2) is from the same verb. Perhaps slop, a pool, merely meant 'a slippery place,' a place slippery with wet and mire. Cf. Icel. slöp, slimy offal of fish, sleppa, slime; Gael. and Irish slab, mire, mud. The words slab (2), slabber, slaver are probably related. Der. slop, verb, to spill water, esp. dirty water; slopp-y, slopp-i-ness. Also cow-slip, q. v., ox-(s)lip, q. v.

SLOP (2), a loose garment. (Scand.) Usually in the pl. slops, large loose trousers, 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 34. M. E. sloppes, Chaucer, C. T. 16101. We find 'in stolum vel on oferslopum' = in stoles or over-slops, as a gloss to in stolis in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xx. 46. The word is Scand. rather than E., the A. S. word being oferslype (dative case), Ælfric's Homilies, i. 456, l. 19. — Icel. sloppr, a slop, gown, loose trailing garment; whence yfirslóppr, an outer gown or over-slop. — Icel. slúpp, stem of pt. t. pl. of sleppa, to slip, a strong verb; so called from its trailing on the ground. β. So also A. S. slype (or slýpe), a slop, from A. S. slúpan, to glide; Dan. slæb, a train, from slæbe, to trail; G. schleppe, a train, from schleppen, to trail. And cf. O. Du. slope, later sloop, a slipper; Hexham, Sewel. γ. Similarly Du. slodder-broek, slops, slop-breeches, is connected with O. Du. slodse, slippers, and with the E. verb to slide. And see Sleeve.

SLOPE, an incline. (E.) 'Slope, or oblique;' Minshew. M. E. slope. 'For many times I have it seen That many have begiled been For trust that they have set in hope Which fell hem afterward a-slope;' Rom. of the Rose, 4464. Here a-slope, lit. on the slope, means 'contrary to expectation,' or 'in a disappointing way.' It is the same idiom as when we talk of 'giving one the slip.' It is a derivative of the verb to slip; formed, probably, from the pt. t. sláp of the A. S. slúpan, to slip, by the usual change of á to o (as in stán = stone), rather than from the pp. slopan of the form slúpan; see Slip. Thus a-slope is 'ready to slip,' or likely to disappoint; hence, in a disappointing way. Cf. prov. E. slope, slippery, which is from the Icel. sléipr, slippery. Der. slope, verb, Macb. iv. i. 57; a-slope.

SLOT (1), a broad, flat wooden bar which holds together larger pieces, bolt of a door. (O. Low G.) 'Still in use in the North, and applied to a bolt of almost any kind;' Halliwell. 'Slotte of a dore, loquet;' Palsgrave. Spelt slot, sloot; Prompt. Parv. — Du. slot, a lock (Sewel); de sloten van kisten, 'the locks of chests'; de sloten van huysen, 'the closures of houses'; Hexham. The Du. slot also means a castle. Derived from the verb sluiten, to shut (pt. t. sloot, pp. gesloten). So also O. Fries. slot, from sluta, to shut; Low G. slot, from sluten.

β. From the Teut. base SLUT, to shut, appearing in Du. sluiten; O. Fries. sluta; Low G. sluten; Swed. sluta (pt. t. slöt, pp. sluten); G. schliessen, M. H. G. sliezen, O. H. G. sliozan. γ. Cognate with Gk. κλείειν, to shut, Lat. claudere, to shut. 'We may give SKLU as the root; the Lat. and Teut. verb shew us a d suffixed'; Curtius, i. 184. See CLOSE (1).

SLOT (2), the track of a deer. (Scand.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Also spelt slouth, as in the derivative Lowland Sc. slouth-hound (Jamieson). M. E. slouth, a track, Barbour's Bruce, vii. 21; whence slouth-hund, slouth-hund, a hound for tracking deer, id. vi. 36, 484, 669. Also slouth, Cursor Mundi, 1254; Ormulum, 1194. = Icel. slóð, a track or trail in snow or the like; cf. slæða, to trail, slæður, a gown that trails on the ground. Allied to sléði, a sledge; from Teut. base SLID, to slide; see SLIDE. Fick, iii. 359.

SLOTH, laziness, sluggishness. (E.) Lit. 'slowness.' M. E. sloth, Chaucer, C. T. 15726; slenthe, P. Plowman, B. v. 392. = A. S. slōth, sloth; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xviii. § 3; lib. ii. pro. 7. Formed with suffix -ō (= Aryan -ia) from A. S. slāw, slow; see SLOW. Der. sloth, sb., an animal; sloth-ful, 1 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 7; sloth-ful-ly; sloth-ful-ness.

SLOUCH, to have a clownish look or gait. (Scand.) Now a verb; but formerly a sb. 'Slouch, a great, unwieldy, ill-fashioned man'; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Slouch, a great lubberly fellow, a meer country-bumpkin'; Phillips. Hence to slouch is to act as a lout. Slouch is a weakened form of slouk or sloke; cf. prov. E. sloek, loose, Sussex; Halliwell. = Icel. slókr, a slouching fellow; allied to slakr, slack. Cf. Swed. sloka, to droop; slokörva, having drooping ears; slokig, hanging, slouching; Dan. sluköret, slugöret, crest-fallen, lit. having drooping ears. Thus slouch is a derivative of SLACK, q. v. And see SLUG.

SLOUGH (1), a hollow place filled with mud, a mire. (C.) M. E. slogh, slough, Chaucer, C. T. 7147, 14804. = A. S. slōh (stem slōg); Kemble's A. S. Charters, 59, 123, 354, 554 (Leo). Not an A. S. word, but borrowed from Celtic, which explains it. = Irish sloc, a pit, hollow, pitfall, allied to slugholl, a whirl-pool; so named from swallowing one up; from slugaim, I swallow, devour, gorge. + Gael. sloc, a pit, den, grave, pool, gutter, allied to slugaid, a slough or deep miry place, slugan, a whirlpool, gulf; from slug, to swallow, absorb, devour. Cf. W. llawg, a gulp, from llawcio, to gulp, gorge. The Irish slug, to swallow, is cognate with Swed. sluka, Low G. sluken, to swallow, and G. schlucken, to swallow, hiccup (O. H. G. sluccan, cited by Curtius); and with Gk. ἀλγεῖν (for ἀλγ-yein), to hiccup, sob; Curtius, i. 461. The form of the root is SLUG.

SLOUGH (2), the cast off skin of a snake; the dead part which separates from a sore. (Scand.) Pronounced sluf. Spelt slough, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 473; ed. Arber, p. 58. M. E. slosh, slow, Pricke of Conscience, 520 (footnote), where it is used in the sense of caul or integument. Spelt slughe, slohu, slouze, in the sense of skin of a snake; Cursor Mundi, 745. From its occurrence in these Northern poems we may presume that the word is Scandinavian. The corresponding word occurs in Swed. dialects as slug (Jutland), with a similar form sluve or sluv (see sluv in Rietz), with the sense of 'covering.' The Norweg. form is slo (Aasen). β. [With the latter form sluve we may compare Low G. slu, sluve, a husk, covering, the pod of a bean or pea, husk of a nut; answering to the Cleveland word slough, the skin of a gooseberry (Atkinson); O. Du. sloove, 'a vaile or a skinne'; Hexham; cf. slooven, 'to cover ones head'; id.; G. schlaube (provincial), 'a shell, husk, slough.' The etymology of the latter set of forms is from the verb to slip, and they seem to be much the same word as Sleeve, q. v. The sense is 'that out of which a snake slips,' or 'a loose covering.' The O. Du. sloup, a pillow-case, covering for a pillow (Sewel), shews an older form, and may be immediately compared with Du. sloup, pt. t. of sluypen, to slip away (Sewel). See SLIP.]

γ. But the E. slough and Jutland slug are allied to G. schlauch, a skin, bag, also the gullet; and these words appear to be connected with G. schlucken, Swed. sluka, to swallow. Cf. Dan. slug, the gullet, sluge, to swallow; and see SLUGH (1). Thus there would appear to be a real connection between slough (1) and slough (2), and a total absence of connection between slough (2) and G. schlaube. [†]

SLOVEN, a careless, lazy fellow. (Du.) Spelt sloven, sloveny, in Palsgrave. 'Some sluggish sloveny, that slepe day and nyght'; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 191. M. E. sloveny, Coventry Myst. p. 218. The suffix -eyn = F. -ain, from Lat. -anus, as in M. E. scriv-ein = O. F. escriv-ain, from Low Lat. scrib-anus; see SCRIVENER. This O. F. suffix may have been added at first to give the word an adjectival force, which would soon be lost. = O. Du. slof, sloef, 'a careless man, a sloven, or a nasty fellow,' Hexham; whence sloefachtiglick, 'negligent, or slovenly,' id. We also find the verb sloeven, 'to play the sloven'; id. Sewel gives Du. slof, careless; slof, sb., an old slipper, slof, sb., neglect, sloffen, to drabble with slippers. + Low G. sluf, slovenly; sluffen, sluffern, to be careless; sluffen, to go about in slippers, sluffen, slippers; obviously connected with slupen, to slip. Cf. also G. schlumpe, a slut, slattern, schlumpen, to drabble; allied to schlupfen, to slip.

β. For a similar substitution of v for p in derivatives of slip, see Sleeve, Sleeve. The base is obviously the Low G. slup, as seen in Goth. slup-ans, pp. of slupan, to slip; see SLIP. Note also Irish and Gael. slapach, slovenly, slapag, a slut. ¶ Not allied to slow. Der. sloven-ly, sloven-li-ness.

SLOW, tardy, late, not ready. (E.) M. E. slow, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 26; slaw, Prompt. Parv. (where it has the sense of blunt, or dull of edge). = A. S. slāw, Matt. xxv. 26. + Du. slēe. + Icel. slór. + Dan. sløv, blunt, dull. + Swed. slö, blunt, dull, dead, weak. + M. H. G. slē, O. H. G. sléo, blunt, dull, lukewarm. β. All from the Teut. base SLAIWA, blunt, weak, slow; Fick, iii. 358. Root unknown. Some suppose it to be connected with E. slack, but this is very doubtful; it may, however, be allied to slip, slid, slin. Der. slow-ly, slow-ness. Also slō-th (for slow-th), q. v. Also sloe, q. v.

SLOW-WORM, a kind of snake. (E.) The allied words shew that it cannot mean 'slow worm,' but the sense is rather 'slayer' or 'striker,' from its (supposed) deadly sting. Indeed, the Swedish word is equivalent to an E. form worm-slow, i. e. 'worm-striker' or stinging serpent, shewing clearly that the word is compounded of two substantives. It was (and still is) supposed to be very poisonous. I remember an old rime: 'If the adder could hear, and the blind-worm see, Neither man nor beast would ever go free.' But it is quite harmless.

β. So persistent is the belief in the etymology from slow, that even Dr. Stratmann suggests that the spelling slo-wurm in Wright's Vocab. i. 91, col. 1, ought to be altered to slow-wurm, and the A. S. Dictionaries alter the spelling of the old glosses with the same view, viz. to make the evidence fit in with a preconceived popular etymology! = A. S. slā-wyrn. We find: 'Stellis, slā-wyrn'; Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 1; and again, id. i. 78, col. 2. Here slā is (I suppose) contracted from slaha = smiter, from slahan, usually slēan, to smite; the parallel form slaga occurs in Exod. xxii. 2; see SLAY. + Swed. slå, usually ormslå, a blindworm (where orm = E. worm); from slā, to strike (Rietz, p. 618, where the dialectal form slo is given). + Norweg. slo, a blindworm; also called ormslo (Aasen); from slaa, to strike.

¶ Quite distinct from Swed. slö, blunt, dull, the cognate form with slow.

SLUBBER, to do carelessly, to sully. (Scand.) 'I slubber, I fyle [defile] a thyng'; Palsgrave. And see Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 8, 39; Oth. i. 3. 227. = Dan. slubbe, to slubber; Swed. dial. slubbra, to be disorderly, to slubber, slubber with the lips, a frequentative verb with suffix -ra (for -era) from slubba, to mix up liquids in a slovenly way, to be careless (Rietz). + Du. slobberen, 'to slap, to sup up'; Sewel. + Low G. slubbern, to lap, sip. From the base SLUP, equivalent to SLAP, to lick up; see SLABBER.

SLUG, to be inactive. (Scand.) 'To slug in slouth'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 23. M. E. sluggen, Prompt. Parv.; where we also find slugge, adj., slothful; sluggy, adj., the same; sluggydnesse, slugnes, sloth. 'I slogge, I waxe slowe, or draw behind'; Palsgrave. The verb is now obsolete. = Dan. slug, weakened form of sluk, appearing in slugöret, sluköret, with drooping ears; allied to Norweg. sloka, to go heavily, to slouch, Swed. sloka, to hang down, droop. Cf. Icel. slókr, a slouching fellow; and see SLOUCH, SLACK. [The Du. stek, a slug, a snail, is derived at once from the base SLAK.] Note also Low G. slukkern, slakkern, to be loose, slukk, melancholy, downcast; from slakk, slack, loose. Der. slugg-ish, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 10; slugg-ish-ly, slugg-ish-ness. Also slugg-ard, Rich. III, v. 3. 225, with the F. suffix -ard (= O. H. G. -hart, cognate with E. hard); slugg-ard-y, M. E. slogardie, Chaucer, C. T. 1044. Also slug, sb., a snail.

SLUICE, a sliding gate in a frame for shutting off, or letting out, water; a floodgate. (F., -L.) In Shak. Venus, 956; Lucrece, 1076. = O. F. escluse, 'a sluice, floodgate'; Cot. Cf. Span. exclusa, a sluice, floodgate. = Low Lat. exclusa, a floodgate; lit. 'shut off (water)'. = Lat. exclusa, fem. of exclusus, pp. of excludere, to shut out; see EXCLUDE.

SLUMBER, to sleep lightly, repose. (E.) The b (after m) is excrement. M. E. slumeren, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 221 (Stratmann); slumberen, slombren, P. Plowman, A. prol. 10, B. prol. 10. Frequentative form of M. E. slumen, to slumber, Layamon, 17995, 18408, 32058. And this verb is from the sb. slume, slumber, spelt slombe in Allit. Poems, C. 186. = A. S. sluma, sb., slumber; Grein, ii. 457. This is formed, with the substantival suffix -ma, from a base SLU, the meaning of which does not appear. + Du. slumeren. + Dan. slumre, frequentative of slumme, to slumber. + Swed. slumra, verb; slummer, sb. + G. schlummern, verb; schlummer, sb. β. Probably connected with Lithuan. snusti (base snud), to slumber, snudis, a slumberer; Russ. sno-videtse, a slumberer, dreamer, sno-videnie, a dream. Der. slumber, sb., slumber-er, slumber-ous.

SLUR, to soil, contaminate, reproach, pass over lightly with slight notice. (Scand.) 'With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;' Dryden (in Todd). 'They impudently slur the gospel;' Cudworth, Sermons, p. 73 (Todd). 'Without some fingering trick or slur;' Butler, Misc. Thoughts; Works, ed. Bell, iii. 176. M. E. sloor, slore, mud, clay, Prompt. Parv.; whence slooryyd, muddy, id. Prov. E. slur, thin washy mud; Halliwell, Forby. The orig. sense is 'to trail,' or draggle; hence, to pass over in a sliding or slight way, also, to trail in dirt, to contaminate. — Icel. slóra, to trail, contracted form of slóðra, to drag or trail oneself along; cf. slæða (for slæða), to trail, slæður, a gown that trails the ground, slóð, a track, trail (whence E. slot, a deer's track); see Slot (2). All derivatives from the Teut. base SLID, to slide, glide; see Slide. Cf. Fick, iii. 359. [Thus the key to this word is that a th or d has been dropped; it stands for slother or sloder; cf. prov. E. skither, to slide, slodder, slush, wet mud.] So also Swed. dial. slóra, to be careless or negligent; Norweg. sløre, to sully, to be negligent, slöda, slöe, a train, trail, slöda, slöe, to trail, draggle. + Low G. sluren, contracted form of sluddern, to hang loosely, to be lazy; slurig, sludderig, lazy. + O. Du. sluren, sluoren, to drag, trail, slourig, 'filthie or sluttish'; slodder, a sloven, slodde, a slut; Hexham. Der. slur, sb.

SLUT, a slovenly woman, slattern. (Scand.) M. E. slutte, Coventry Myst. p. 218; scutte, p. 404; and in Palsgrave. 'Slutte, Cenosis, Cenosa;' Prompt. Parv. Slutte occurs also in Occleve, Letter of Cupide, st. 34. Hence sluttish, Chaucer, C. T. 16104. — Icel. slöttir, a heavy, loglike fellow; Swed. dial. slåta, an idle woman, slut, slåter, an idler; Norweg. slott, an idler; Dan. slatte, a slut. — Icel. slota, to droop, Swed. dial. slota, to be lazy, Norweg. sluta, to droop; allied to Dan. slat, loose, flabby, also spelt slatten, slattet. β. The Dan. forms slatten, slattet have a pp. suffix, such as can only come from a strong verb. This verb appears in Norweg. sletta (pt. t. slatt, pp. slottet), to dangle, hang loose like clothes, to drift, to idle about, be lazy (Aasen).

γ. A nasalised form of this verb appears again in Swed. dial. slinta (pp. slant, pp. sluntit), to slide, glide, slip aside, with its derivatives slanta, to be idle, and slunt, 'a lubber, lazy sturdy fellow,' Widegren. These words are related to E. slant, sloping, which is a nasalised form from Teut. base SLID, to slide, as noted under Slant, q. v. δ. The notion of slipperiness or sliding about leads to that of clumsiness and sluttishness; of which there are numerous examples, as in E. slip-shod, &c. The corresponding Du. word keeps the d of the verb to slide; the word is slodde, 'a slut, or a careless woman,' allied to slodder, 'a careless man,' slodder-hosen, 'large and wide hosen,' slodse, 'slippers'; Hexham. So also Icel. slóði, (1) a trail, (2) a sloven. And there is a most remarkable parallel in Irish and Gael. slodaire, a lazy person, sluggard, from the verb slao, to slide; as well as in Irish and Gael. slapaire, slapair, a sloven, allied to Gael. slapach, trailing, drawing, slovenly, and to E. slip.

¶ Not allied to slattern, q. v. Der. sluttish, -ly, -ness.

SLY, cunning, wily. (Scand.) M. E. slie, sly, Chaucer, C. T. 3201; sley, Havelok, 1084; sléh, Ormulum, 13498. — Icel. slægr (for slægr), sly, cunning. + Swed. slug. + Dan. slug, slu. + Low G. slou. + G. schlau. β. Cf. also Swed. slög, cunning, dexterous; also Icel. slægr, kicking, said of a horse who is ready to fling out or strike with his heels. The word is certainly from the Teut. base SLAH (SLAG), to strike; see Slay. 'From the use of a hammer being taken as the type of a handicraft;' Wedgwood; and see Fick, iii. 358, who adduces G. verschlagen, cunning, crafty, subtle, sly, from the same root. Der. sly-ly, sly-ness. Also sleight (i.e. sly-ly), q. v.

SMACK (1), taste, flavour, savour. (E.) M. E. smak, a taste; Prompt. Parv. — A. S. smæc, taste; Grein, ii. 457; whence the verb smecgan, smæccan, to taste. 'Gusto, ie gesmece,' Wright's Vocab. i. 17, col. 2. + O. Du. smack, 'tast, smack, or savour;' whence smacken, 'to savour,' Hexham; Du. smaken, to taste. + Dan. smag, taste; smage, to taste. + Swed. smak, taste; smaka, to taste. + G. geschmack, taste; schmecken, to taste. β. All from a base SMAK, signifying 'taste'; remoter origin unknown. We may note the remarkable A. S. smæcc, taste, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 550, l. 11; which seems to be a parallel form. γ. Wedgwood says of smack that it is 'a syllable directly representing the sound made by the sudden collision or separation of two soft surfaces, as a blow with the flat hand, the sudden separation of the lips in kissing, or of the tongue and palate in tasting.' The cognate languages, however, keep the words for smack, a taste, and smack, a blow, remarkably distinct; as shewn under Smack (2). I conclude that the above illustration is not borne out by the forms actually found.

SMACK (2), a sounding blow. (E.?) We find smack, sb., a loud kiss, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 180. But the word does not seem to be at all old, and its supposed connection with Smack (1) is disproved by the forms found. It has been confused with it, but is quite distinct. It seems to be of imitative origin, and may be an E. word, unless borrowed from Scandinavian.

β. The related words are Swed. smacka, to smack (distinct from smaka, to taste); Swed. dial. smakka, to throw down noisily, smäkk, a light quick blow with the flat hand, smäkka, to hit smartly; Dan. smække, to slam, bang (distinct from smage, to taste), smæk, a smack, rap (distinct from smag, taste). Also Low G. smakken, to smack the lips (distinct from smekken, to taste); O. Du. smacken, Du. smakken, to cast on the ground, fling, throw (distinct from Du. smaken, to taste); Du. smak, a loud noise. Also G. schmatzen, to smack, to fell (a tree), as distinct from schmecken, to taste. And see Smash. γ. We are certainly not justified in connecting the two senses of smack, when we observe what pains are taken in other languages to keep the forms separate. Cf. knack, crack. Der. smack, verb; smatt-er, q. v., smash, q. v.

SMACK (3), a fishing-boat. (Du.) In Sewel's Du. Dict. Doubtless borrowed from Dutch, like hoy, skipper, boom, yacht, &c. — O. Du. smacke, 'a kind of a long ship or boate,' Hexham; smak, 'a hoy, smack,' Sewel, ed. 1754. + Dan. smakke, a smack. β. Generally supposed to be a corruption for snack, allied to snaek; cf. A. S. snacc, a smack, small vessel, A. S. Chron. an. 1066, in the Laud MS., ed. Thorpe, p. 337; Icel. snekja, a kind of sailing-ship, so called from its snake-like movement in the water. The Dan. snekke means (1) a snail, (2) a vessel or smack; from the verb represented in E. by sneak; see Snake, Sneak. ¶ For the interchange of sm- and sn-, see Smatter. [†]

SMALL, little, unimportant. (E.) M. E. smal; pl. smale, Chaucer, C. T. 9. — A. S. smal, small, thin; Grein, ii. 457. + Du., Dan., and Swed. smal, narrow, thin. + Goth. smals, small. + G. schmal, narrow, thin, slim. β. All from Teut. base SMALA, small, Fick, iii. 357; closely related to which is the base SMĀHA, small (id. 356), appearing in Icel. smár, Dan. smaa, Swed. små, O. H. G. smāhe, small. γ. Perhaps further related to Gk. σμῆλη, small, Lat. macer, lean, thin, for which a base SMAK, small, has been assumed. Der. small-ness; small-pox (see Pox); small-age, q. v.

SMALLAGE, celery. (Hybrid; E. and F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Smallage, a former name of the celery, meaning the small ache or parsley, as compared with the great parsley, olus atrum. See Turner's Nomenclator, A. D. 1548; and Gerard's Herbal; Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. M. E. smalege, Wright's Vocab. i. 225, note 6. — A. S. smal, small (see above); and F. ache, parsley, from Lat. apium, parsley.

SMALT, glass tinged of a deep blue, used as a pigment. (Ital., — O. H. G.) 'Smalt, a kind of blew powder-colour, us'd in painting; blue enamel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Ital. smalto, 'amell [enamel] for goldsmiths;' Florio. — O. H. G. smalzjan, M. H. G. smelzen, to smelt; cognate with E. Smelt, q. v. ¶ The Du. smalt (in the present sense) is borrowed from Italian.

SMARAGDUS, a precious stone, emerald. (L., — Gk.) Also smaragd; M. E. smaragde, An O. E. Miscellany, p. 98, l. 174. — Lat. smaragdus. — Gk. σμάραγδος, an emerald. See Emerald. Doublet, emerald.

SMART, to feel a pain, to be punished. (E.) M. E. smerten, Havelok, 2647; spelt smoerten, Ancræn Riwe, p. 238, last line. Once a strong verb; the pt. t. smart occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 21, l. 27. — A. S. smeoran (Somner); this word is unauthorised, but is clearly the correct form; the old strong pt. t. shews that the word is almost certainly A. S. The A. S. pt. t. would be *smært, and the pp. *smorten. + Du. smarten, to give pain; smart, pain. + Dan. smerte, vb. and sb. + Swed. smärta, vb. and sb. + O. H. G. smernaz, sometimes used as a strong verb (pt. t. smarz), G. schmerzen, to smart; O. H. G. smernaz, G. schmerz, smart, pain. + Lat. mordere (with lost initial s), to bite, pain, sting. + Skt. mid (for smard), to rub, grind, crush. β. All from ✓SMARD, to pain; see Fick, i. 836. But Fick (i. 175) excepts the Lat. and Skt. forms, which he refers to ✓MARD, extension of ✓MAR, to grind, pound. In any case, the form of the root of the present word is SMARD, as above; the Latin word seems more closely connected in sense than is the Skt. one. See Mordacity. Der. smart, sb., M. E. smerte, Chaucer, C. T. 3811; also smart, adj., M. E. smerte, i. e. painful, Havelok, 2055. The use of the adjective has been extended to mean pungent, brisk, acute, lively, witty. Hence smart-ly, smart-ness.

SMASH, to crush, break in pieces. (Scand.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. According to Webster, it is used by Burke. It is well known in the North (see Brockett and Jamieson), and is clearly a dialectal word adopted into more polite speech. Like many Northern words, it is of Scand. origin. — Swed. dial. smaske, which Rietz explains by smällkyssa, meaning to kiss with a sounding smack; smak, a slight explosion, crack, report. Closely allied to smiska, to slap, occurring in the very sense of 'to smash glass' or 'to smash a window-pane, which is the commonest use of the word in ordinary E. conversation. We also find Swed. dial. smakka, to throw down smack, i.e. with a sounding blow, smikk, to slap, strike quickly and lightly, smökkse, to slap down anything soft so as to make a noise. Also Low G. smakken, smaksen, to smack with the lips, to kiss with a sounding smack. β . It is thus clear that smaske stands for smake (by the common interchange of sk and ks, as in ax = ask); and smak-se is formed, by the addition of s (with transitive sense, as in clean-se, to make clean), from the base SMAK, meaning a smack or slight report; hence smash (= smak-s) is to make a smack, cause a report, produce the sound of breaking, as in 'to smash a window.' γ . This solution, considered doubtful by E. Müller, is quite satisfactory. Other solutions have no value, nor even any plausibility. The best of them is the supposition that smash is produced (by some mysterious prefixing of s, which is explained as having an intensive force) from mask; but mask means to mix up; and no one has ever yet heard of 'masking a window!' On the other hand, the saying that a ball was thrown 'smack (or smask) through a window' is sufficiently common. And cf. G. schmatzen, to fell a tree; from schmätz, a smack.

SMATTERING, a superficial knowledge. (Scand.) From the old verb to smatter, to have a slight knowledge of; the orig. sense was, perhaps, 'to prate.' 'I smatter of a thyng, I have lytell knowledge in it;' Palsgrave. 'For I abhorre to smatter Of one so deuyllyshe a matter;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 711. M.E. smateren, to make a noise; Songs and Carols, ed. Wright, no. lxxii (Stratmann).—Swed. smattra, to clatter, to crackle. A mere variant of Swed. snattra, to chatter, cognate with Dan. snaddre, to jabber, chatter, G. schmatern, to cackle, chatter, prattle. β . Again, the Swed. snattra (for snakra) is a weakened frequentative form of snacka, to chat, prate; cognate with which are Dan. snakke, to chat, prate, and G. schnacken, to prate; note further the substantives, viz. Swed. snack, chat, talk, Dan. snak, twaddle, G. schneck, chit-chat. And further, cf. Swed. smacka, to smack (make a noise), to croak; Dan. smaske, snaske, to gnash, or smack with the lips in eating. γ . Hence smatter (or snatter) is a frequentative verb from a base SMAK, SNAK, denoting a smacking noise with the lips, hence, a gabbling, prating. See Smack (2). \parallel For the interchange of sm- and sn-, see Smack (3).

SMEAR, to daub with something greasy or sticky. (E.) M.E. smerien, smeren, Ormulum, 994; also smirien; also smurien, Ancrén Riwle, p. 372, l. 6.—A.S. smerien, Ps. xlv. 9; smirian, Mark, xvi. 1. A weak verb, from the sb. smeru, fat, Levit. viii. 25, whence M.E. smere, fat, fatness, Genesis and Exodus, 1573. + Du. smeren, to grease; from smeer, fat. + Icel. smyrja, to anoint; from smjör, smör, grease. + Dan. smöre; from smör, sb. + Swed. smörja; from smör, sb. + G. schmierien; from schmeier, sb. β . The general Teut. form of the sb. is SMERWA, fat, grease; Fick, iii. 356; allied to which are Goth. smairthr, fatness, smarna, dung. All from a base SMAR; cf. Lithuan. smarsas, fat, smala, tar; Gk. ῥύπον, an unguent, ῥύπος, emery for polishing. γ . The base seems to be SMA, to rub, as seen in Gk. σμά-ειν, σμή-χειν, to smear, rub, wipe. Der. smear, sb., at present signifying the result of smearing, and a derivative of the verb; not in the old sense of 'grease.' And see smir-ch, smelt (1).

SMELL, an odour. (E.) M.E. smel, Chaucer, C. T. 2429; Ancrén Riwle, p. 104, l. 16; also smul, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 99, l. 1, Not found in A.S., but prob. a true Eng. word. Allied to Du. smuelen, 'to smoke hiddenly,' i.e. to smoulder; Low G. smelen, to smoulder. β . The idea is evidently taken from the suffocating vapour given off by smouldering wood; the l, as usual, stands for an older r, and we find a more original word in A.S. smoran or smorian, to suffocate, whence the pt. pl. smoradun, Matt. xiii. 9 (Rushworth MS.). See further under Smoulder and Smother. Der. smell, verb, M.E. smellen, Chaucer, C. T. 3691, smullen, O. Eng. Hom. ii. 35, l. 3.

SMELT (1), to fuse ore. (Scand.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; but not noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. I have little doubt that the word is really Swedish, as Sweden was the chief place for smelting iron ore, and a great deal of iron is still found there; (cf. slag).—Dan. smelte, to fuse, smelt; Swed. smälta, to smelt, run, liquefy; smälta malm, to smelt ore; Widegren. + O. Du. smiltien, smelten, 'to melt, mollify, make liquid, or to found;' Hexham. Note here the use of found where we should now say smelt. + G. schmelzen, O. H. G. smalzjan, to smelt. β . All these are secondary or weak verbs, connected with an older strong verb appearing in the Swed. smälta, to melt, i.e. to become liquid, for which Rietz gives the pt. t. smalt and supine smultið, and cites O. Swed. smälta (pt. t. smalt, pp. smultin). It also appears in G. schmelzen, (pt. t. schmolz), to melt, dissolve, become liquid. γ . The orig. sense of this base SMALT was 'to become oily' or become soft, like butter or fat, as shewn by O. Du. smalt, 'grease or melted butter;' smalts, smalsch, 'liquid, soft, or fatt' (Hexham); O. H. G. smalz, fat, grease (G. schmalz). Further, this O. H. G. smalz may be compared with Lithuan. smarsas, fat, Goth. smairthr, fat, and other words discussed under smear, of which the orig. sense was 'to anoint with fat,' or rub over with grease. δ . Thus SMALT is for SMART (Aryan SMARD), formed as an extension from SMAR, grease; for which see Smear; Fick, iii. 836. ϵ . We may also compare Gk. μέλδομαι, to become liquid. But the connection with melt is by no means so certain as might appear. It is common to call smelt a 'strengthened' form of melt, made by prefixing s, though there is no reason why s should be prefixed; if the connection is real, it may well be because smelt was the older form, and s was dropped. In that case the \checkmark MAR, to pound (whence E. melt), is to be referred to \checkmark SMA, to rub (whence E. smelt), as the more original form. Der. smalt, q. v.; enamel, q. v., And see mute (2).

SMELT (2), a kind of fish. (E.) M.E. smelt, Prompt. Parv.—A.S. smelt. 'Sardina, smelt,' in a list of fish; Wright's Voc. i. 281, col. 2. + Dan. smelt. + Norweg. smelta (1), a mass, lump; (2) the name of various kinds of small fish, as Gadus minutus, also a small whiting. β . The name prob. means 'smooth;' cf. A.S. smœlt, smylt, serene, smooth (of the sea), orig. liquid; from the verb to smelt; see Smelt (1). \parallel Webster says: 'from the peculiar smell;' with this cf. the scientific name Osmorus (Gk. ὀσμῶρος, fragrant). This I believe to be simply impossible, though this imaginary 'etymology' may have originated the 'scientific' name. We have yet to find the verb to smell in A.S.; and we must explain the t.

SMILE, to laugh slightly, express joy by the countenance. (Scand.) M.E. smilen, Chaucer, C. T. 4044; Will. of Palerne, 991. Not a very old word in E.—Swed. smila, to smile, smirk, fawn, simper; Dan. smile. + M. H. G. smielen, smieren, smiren, to smile. + Lat. mirari, to wonder at; mirus, wonderful. β . All from the base SMIR, an extension from \checkmark SMI, to smile; cf. Skt. smi, to smile; Fick, iii. 836, 837. See Miracle, Admire, Smirk. Der. smil-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2001; smile, sb., St. Brandan, 4 (Stratmann); see smir-k.

SMIRCH, to besmear, dirty. (E.) 'And with a kind of umber smirch my face;' As You Like It, i. 3. 114. Allied to the old word smore. 'I smore ones face with any grease or soute [soot], or such lyke, le barbouille;' Palsgrave. And since smore is another form of smear, it is clear that smirch (weakened form of smier-k) is an extension from M. E. smeren, to smear; see Smear.

SMIRK, to smile affectedly, smile, simper. (E.) M.E. smirken; St. Katharine, 356.—A.S. smiercian, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxiv. 12 (lib. iii. pr. 11). Cf. M. H. G. smieren, smiren, to smile; shewing that A.S. smiercian is from the base SMIR-K, extended from SMIR, whence E. smile. See Smile. Der. smirk, sb.; also obsolete adj. smirk, trim, neat, Spenser, Shep. Kal, Feb. l. 72.

SMITE, to strike, beat, kill. (E.) M.E. smiten, pt. t. smat, smot, pp. smiten. The pt. t. is spelt smoot, Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 50; with pl. smyten (= smiten), id. xxiii. 48.—A.S. smitan, pt. t. smát, pp. smiten; Grein, ii. 458. + Du. smijten. + Swed. smida, to forge. + Dan. smide, to fling. + G. schmeissen, to smite, fling, cast; O. H. G. smizân, to throw, to stroke, to smear. Cf. Goth. bismitan, to anoint, besmear, John, ix. 11.

β . The orig. sense would appear to be 'to rub' or smear over, a sense which actually appears in the O. H. G. and Gothic; and even in A.S. this sense is not unknown; note also O. Swed. smita, to smite, smeta, to smear (Ihre), Icel. smita, to steam from being fat or oiled; and see further under Smut. The connection between 'to rub' and 'to smite' is curious, but the latter sense is a satirical use of the former; we had the phrase 'to rub down with an oaken towel,' i.e. to cudgel; and, in the Romance of Partenay, l. 5653, a certain king is said to have been 'so well Anointed' that he had not a whole piece of clothing left upon him; the orig. French text says that he was bien oingt. γ . Curtius connects the O. H. G. smizân with Skt. meda, fat, from mid, to be unctuous, from a \checkmark SMID; i. 420. Cf. E. smear, q. v. Der. smit-er.

SMITH, a worker in metals. (E.) M.E. smith, Chaucer, C. T. 2027.—A.S. smið; Grein, ii. 457. + Du. smid. + Icel. smiðr. + Dan. and Swed. smed. + G. schmied, M. H. G. smiit, smid. + Goth. smitha, in comp. aiza-smitha, copper-smith. β . All from the Teut. base SMITHA, a smith; Fick, iii. 357. It is usual to explain this (after the method of Home Tooke, which is known to be wrong) as he that smiteth, from 'the sturdy blows that he smites upon the anvil;' Trench, Study of Words. But there is no support for this notion to be had from comparative philology; we might as well connect kith with kite, as far as phonetic laws are concerned. γ . The most that can be said is that smi-th and smi-te may be from a common base, with the notion of rubbing smooth. But the word with which smith has a real and close connection is the word smooth; see Smooth. Der. smith-y, M.E. smiðe, Ancrén Riwle, p. 284, l. 24, A.S. smiðe, Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2; Icel. smiðja. Also gold-smith, silver-smith; &c.

SMOCK, a shirt for a woman. (E.) M. E. smok, Chaucer, C. T. 3238. — A. S. smoc. 'Colobium, smoc vel syre' [sark]; Wright's Voc. i. 25, col. 2. Put for *smog or *smoog; and so called because 'crept into;' from smogen, pp. of the strong verb smēgan, smūgan, occurring in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxiv. § 1 (lib. iii. pr. 2). Cf. Shetland smook, 'to draw on, as a glove or a stocking'; Edmondston. + Icel. smokkr, a smock; from smoginn, pp. of smjúga, 'to creep through a hole, to put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through.' Cf. O. Swed. smog, a round hole for the head; Ihre. Also Icel. smeygja, to slip off one's neck, causal of smjúga. See further under SMUG and SMUGGLE.

SMOKE, vapour from a burning body, esp. wood or coal. (E.) M. E. smoke, Chaucer, C. T. 5860. — A. S. smoca (rare). 'Pone wlacon smocan wāces flæscas' = the warm smoke of weak flax; Be Dómes Dæge, ed. Lumby, l. 51. — A. S. smoc, stem of smocen, pp. of strong verb smēcan (pt. t. smēde), to smoke, reek, Matt. xii. 20. Hence also the various forms of the sb., such as smēc, smýc; the latter occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 202, l. 4 from bottom. The secondary verb smocgan (derived from the sb. smoca) occurs on the same page, l. 24. + Du. smook, sb. + Dan. smøge, weak verb, to smoke. + G. schmauch, smoke. — β. All from a Teut. base SMUK. If the Gk. σμήναι, to burn slowly in a smouldering fire, be a related word, the common Aryan root would take the form SMU (see SMOTHER); cf. Irish smuid, vapour, smoke, much, smoke, W. mug, smoke, and perhaps Lithuan. smaugti, to choke. Der. smoke, vb., A. S. smocgan, as above; smok-er, smok-y, smok-i-ness.

SMOOTH, having an even surface. (E.) M. E. smoothe, Rom. of the Rose, 542; also common in the form smethe (due to vowel-change from ó to æ (= e), Rob. of Glouc. p. 424, l. 20, Pricke of Conscience, 6349. — A. S. smēðe, Luke, iii. 5, where the Northumb. versions have smoðe; cf. Aspera, unsmoðe, Wright's Voc. ii. 7, col. 1. The preservation of the (older) vowel ó in mod. E. is remarkable. β. Related to O. Du. smēdigh, smijdigh, 'handeable, or soft' (Hexham), Du. smijdig, malleable, G. geschmeidig, malleable, ductile, smooth; and hence clearly connected with E. smith. Cf. Low G. smede, a smithy, smid, a smith, smeden, to forge; Dan. smed, a smith, smede, to forge, smidig, pliable, supple. γ. The connection between the ó of smooth and the i of smith is difficult to follow; but may be accounted for by the supposition that there was once a lost strong verb which in Gothic would have taken the form *smēithan, to forge, with pt. t. *smāith, and pp. *smithans, corresponding to which would have been an A. S. *smīþan, to forge (pt. t. *smādō, pp. *smiðen). We could then deduce smooth from the A. S. pt. t. smādō, and smith from the pp. smiðen. δ. Now this lost verb is actually still found in Swedish dialects; Rietz gives the normal form as smida, with pt. t. smed, pp. smiden; and another trace of it occurs in Icel. smið, smith's work, as noted in the Icel. Dict. Thus the orig. sense of smooth is forged, or flattened with the hammer. Der. smooth, verb, answering to A. S. smēðian, Wright's Vocab. i. 28, col. 2; smooth-ly; smooth-ness, A. S. smēðnys, Wright's Voc. i. 53, col. 2.

SMOTHER, a suffocating smoke, thick stifling dust. (E.) Smother stands for smother, having lost an r, which was retained even in the 14th century. M. E. smother; spelt smorþre, smorþur, P. Plowman, C. xx. 303, 305 (some MSS. have smolder, id. B. xvii. 321). Smor-ther is 'that which stifles'; formed with the suffix -ther (Aryan -tar) of the agent, from A. S. smor-ian, to choke, stifle, Matt. xiii. 7 (Rushworth MS.), preserved in Lowland Sc. smoor, to stifle; see Burns, Brigs of Ayr, l. 33.

β. Cognate with A. S. smorian are Du. smooren, to suffocate, stifle, stew, and G. schmoren, to stew. Cf. O. Du. smoor, 'smother, vapour, or fume' (Hexham); which is the sb. from which Du. smooren is derived. Similarly the A. S. weak verb smorian must be referred to a sb. *smor, vapour; cf. Dan. smul, dust.

γ. Smother is certainly related to smoulder and smell; we may conjecture an Aryan root SMU, with the sense perhaps of 'stifle'; this would also account for smo-ke; see SMOKE. Der. smother, verb, M. E. smotheren, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 7. And see smoulder.

SMOULDER, to burn with a stifling smoke. (E.) 'I smolder, as wete wood doth; I smolder one, or I stoppe his brethe with smoke'; Palsgrave. M. E. smolderen, Allit. Poems, B. 95; from the sb. smolder, a stifling smoke. 'Smoke and smolder,' P. Plowman, B. xvii. 321; where the later text has 'smoke and smorþer' (= E. smother), id. C. xx. 303; and see Palladius on Husbandry, i. 929.

β. The M. E. smolder and smother are, in fact, merely two spellings of the same word, and could therefore be used convertibly. The change of r into l is very common, and the further change of smother into smolder followed at the same time, to make the word pronounceable.

γ. [The Dan. smuldre, to crumble, moulder, from smul, dust, may be ultimately related, but is not the original of the E. word, being too remote in sense.] The E. smoulder is closely connected with Low G. smölen, smelen, to smoulder, as in dat holt smelet weg = the wood smoulders away (Bremen Wörterbuch);

Du. smelden, 'to smook hiddenly,' Sewel. See SMELL. δ. The interchange of r and l may be curiously illustrated from Dutch. Thus, where Hexham gives smoel, with the senses (1) sultry, (2) drunk, Sewel gives smoorheet, excessively hot, and smoordronken, excessively drunk; this links smoel with smoor, and both of them with Du. smooren, to stifle.

SMUDGE, to sully; see SMUT below.

SMUG, neat, trim, spruce. (Scand.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 49; &c. 'I could have brought a noble regiment Of smug-skinnde Nunnes into my countrey soyle;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572; Works, i. 393. Spelt smoog, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 474; ed. Arber, p. 59. A weakened form of smuk, = Dan. smuk, pretty, fine, fair, as in det smukke høn = the fair sex; O. Swed. smuk, elegant, fine, fair, also spelt smück (Ihre). Hence Swed. smýcka, to adorn (by vowel-change from u to y). + Low G. smuk, neat, trim. + G. schmuck, trim, spruce; cf. schmuck, sb., ornament, schmücken, to adorn. β. The M. H. G. smücken or smucken meant not only to clothe, adorn, but also to withdraw oneself into a place of security, and is said to be a derivative from the older strong verb smiegen, to creep into (G. schmiegen, to wind, bend, ply, cling to); see Wackernagel. This M. H. G. smiegen is cognate with A. S. smūgan, smēgan, to creep.

γ. This links smug with smock, which shews the opposite change from g to k, as shewn under that word. A smock, orig. so named from the hole for the neck into which one crept, became a general term for dress, clothes, or attire, as in the case of G. schmuck, attire, dress, ornament, adornment, &c.; and smug is merely the corresponding adjective, meaning 'dressed,' hence spruce, neat, &c. See further under SMOCK and SMUGGLE.

SMUGGLE, to import or export secretly, without paying legal duty. (Scand.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the phrase 'to smuggle goods.' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has: 'Smugglers, stealers of customs, well known upon the Thames.' Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1749, gives: 'Sluyken, to smuggle; sluyker, a smuggler.' The word is not Dutch, the Du. smokkelen, to smuggle, being modern, and unnoticed by Sewel and Hexham. It is, however, plainly a sailor's word, and of Scand. origin. — Dan. smugle, to smuggle; a frequentative form (with usual suffix -le) from the old strong verb found in Norweg. smjuga (pt. t. smaug), to creep; whence also Dan. smug, adv., secretly, privately, and smughandel, contraband trade. Closely allied to Dan. smøge, a narrow (secret) passage, Swed. smuga, a lurking-hole, Icel. smuga, a hole to creep through, smugall, penetrating, smugligr, penetrating.

β. All from the strong verb found in Icel. smjúga (pt. t. smaug, pl. smugu, pp. smoginn), to creep, creep through a hole, put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through; cf. Swed. smuga, to sneak, to smuggle. Cognate with A. S. smēgan, smūgan, to creep (pt. t. smēdg, pl. smugon, pp. smogen); M. H. G. smiegen, strong verb, to press into (Fick, iii. 357); all from Teut. base SMUG, to creep. Cf. Lithuan. smukti, to glide, i-smukti, to creep into. Der. smuggl-er; see SMOCK, smug.

SMUT, a spot of dirt, esp. of soot. (Scand.) Not a very old word; formerly smutch (really a corruption of smuts), which is therefore more correct. 'Smutchte on ones face, barboylement;' Palsgrave. 'Hast smutchted thy nose;' Winter's Tale, i. 2. 121. — Swed. smuts, smut, dirt, filth, soil; whence smutsa, verb, to dirt, to sully. + Dan. smuds, filth; whence smudse, to soil, dirty, sully. The Dan. form accounts for E. smudge, to smear, to soil (Halliwell), and for M. E. smoge, with the same sense (id.) + G. schmutz, smut; whence schmutzen, to smudge.

β. The Swed. smut-s is formed with suffix -s (= Aryan -as, Schleicher, Compend. § 230) from the base which appears in E. as the verb to smite. From the same source are Swed. smel, grease, filth, smeta, to bedaub, smitta, contagion, smitta, to infect; Dan. smitte, contagion; Icel. smeyta, fat steam, as if from cooking, smita, to steam from being fat or oiled. Also Du. smoddig, smutty, smotsen, to smudge. γ. We have the same idea in M. E. smoterlich, which I explain as 'wanton,' like prov. E. smutty, Chaucer, C. T. 5961; and in M. E. besmotred, i. e. smutted, dirtied, id. 76. Also in A. S. smittian, to spot, Wright's Voc. ii. 151, besmittan, to pollute, defile, Mark, vii. 15, derivatives of smitan, to smite, hence, to infect; cf. Shakespeare's use of strike, Cor. iv. 1. 13. See SMITE. Der. smut, verb; smutty, smut-i-ly, smut-i-ness.

SNACK, a part, portion, share; see SNATCH.

SNAFFLE, a bridle with a piece confining the nose, and with a slender mouth-piece. (Du.) 'A bitte or a snaffle;' Baret (1580). Short for snaffle-piece = nose-piece. 'With a snaffle and a brydle;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 (R.) And in Shak. Antony, ii. 2. 63. 'A snaffle, Camus; to snaffle, rudere;' Levins. — Du. snavel, a horse's muzzle; O. Du. snabel, snavel, 'the nose or snout of a beast or a fish;' Hexham. Dimin. of O. Du. snabbe, snebbe, 'the bill or neb of a bird;' id. The lit. sense of snabbe is 'snapper;' it is a weakened form of *snapp-a (with suffix -a of the agent), from O. Du. snappen, 'to snap up, or to intercept; id. See SNAP. + G. schnebel, bill, snout; dimin. of schnappe, a vulgar term for mouth; from schnappen, vb.

SNAG, an abrupt projection, as on a tree where a branch has been cut off, a short branch, knot, projecting tooth. (C.) 'Which with a staffe, all full of little snags;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 23; cf. iv. 7. 7. [The word knag, which has much the same sense, is of Celtic origin; see KNAG.] Snag is a sb. from the prov. E. verb snag, to trim, to cut off the twigs and small branches from a tree; the tool used (a kind of bill-hook) is called a snagger; hence also the Kentish snaggle, to nibble (Halliwell). — Gael. snagair, to carve or whittle away wood with a knife, snaigh, to hew, cut down, reduce wood into shape, trim; Irish snaigh, a hewing, cutting. Cf. also Gael. snag, a little audible knock; Irish snag, a wood-pecker. Thus the lit. sense of the verb to snag is to chip or cut away gradually, to trim, to prune. Hence also Icel. snagi, a clothes-peg.

SNAIL, a slimy creeping insect. (E.) M.E. snayle, Prompt. Parv. The i (y) is due to an earlier g, precisely as in hail (1), nail. — A. S. snagl, snegel; Wright's Voc. i. 24, l. 4; i. 78, col. 2. Snagl (= snag-el) is a weakened diminutive, with g for c, from A. S. snaca, a snake, a creeping thing; see SNAKE. The lit. sense is 'a small creeping thing,' or little reptile. Cf. M. E. snegge (prov. E. snag), a snail, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 32; and G. schnecke, a snail, Swed. snäcka. + Icel. snigill, a snail. + Dan. snegl.

SNAKE, a kind of serpent. (E.) The lit. sense is 'a creeping thing,' which is also the sense of serpent and of reptile. M. E. snake, Wyclif, Rom. iii. 13. — A. S. snaca, to translate Lat. scorpio, Luke, x. 19. The sense is 'creeper,' but the corresponding A. S. verb is only found in the form snican, with a supposed pt. t. *snac, pp. *snicen; see SNEAK, which is the mod. E. form. Perhaps the former a of the A. S. word was orig. long, as in Icelandic. + Icel. snákr; also snókr. + Dan. snog. + Swed. snok. And cf. Skt. nága, a serpent; Schmidt, Vocalismus, ii. 472. Der. snail.

SNAP, to bite suddenly, snatch up. (Du.) In Shak. Much Ado, v. 1. 116. 'A snapper-up of uncon sidered trifles;' Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 26. 'I snappe at a thing to catche it with my tethe;' Palsgrave. Not an old word. — Du. snappen, to snap, snatch; 'to snap up, or to intercept;' Hexham. + Dan. snappe; Swed. snappa, to snatch away. + G. schnappen, M. H. G. snaben, to snap, snatch. β. All from Teut. base SNAP, to snatch, parallel to SNAK; see SNATCH. Der. snappish, i. e. ready to bite or snap; snappish-ly, -ness. Also snap-dragon, a plant, so called because the lips of the corolla, when parted, snap together like a dragon's mouth; also a game in which raisins are snapped out of a flame, as if from a fiery dragon. Also snap-hance, a fire-lock (Nares), from Du. snaphaan, a fire-lock, O. Du. snaphaen, 'a robber that snaps upon one in the highway, or a snaphaunce' (Hexham); from Du. snappen, to snap, and haan, a cock, also a cock of a gun, allied to E. Hen, q. v. Also snaff-le, q. v. And see snip. It may be added that there may have been an old strong verb snip, pt. t. snap; Rietz, indeed, gives such a verb as still found in Swed. dialects, viz. infin. snippa, pt. t. snapp, old pp. snuppt, with the sense to snap, to snatch. This at once accounts for E. snip; also for snub (weakened form of snup); also for snuff (2), to snap or nip off the end of the wick of a candle. Parallel to this is the base SNAK, to gasp, hence to snatch; here also we find O. Du. snick or snack, a gasp (Hexham), and Low G. snukken, to sob. Yet again, we not only have E. sniff, but also E. snuff (1), besides Swed. snaffla, to snuffle. We thus recognise (1) the base SNAP, to bite at quickly (variants snip, snup); (2) the base SNAK, to gasp, snatch at (variants snik, snuk); and (3) the base SNAP, to inhale breath (variants snif, snuf). All perhaps from the same orig. root.

SNARE, a noose, trap. (E.) Properly a noose, a trap formed with a looped string. 'Hongide himself with a snare;' Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 5. — A. S. snear, a cord, string; Grein, ii. 459. + Du. snear, a string. + Icel. snara, a snare, halter. + Dan. snare. + Swed. snara. + O. H. G. snaralkha, a noose; cited by Fick, iii. 350, Curtius, i. 392. β. From the Teut. type SNARHA (the h being preserved in O. H. G.); and this is from the Teut. strong verb SNARH, appearing in M. H. G. snarhen, to bind tightly, cited by Fick, and in Icel. snara, to turn quickly, twist, wring (though this is a weak verb). We may also note G. schuur, a lace, string, line, cord, which is prob. an allied word; so also Icel. snari, a twisted rope. γ. The Teut. SNARH answers to Aryan SNARK, to draw together, contract, whence Gk. ράση, cramp, numbness; see NARCISSUS. δ. The Aryan SNARK is an extension from ✓ SNAR, to twist, wind; whence Lithuan. ner-ti, to thread a needle, draw into a chain, Lat. ner-uis, a sinew, nerve; see NERVE.

ε. And we may further note the O. Irish snáithe, thread, cited in Curtius, i. 393; this suggests that the ✓ SNAR, to twist, wind, is related to ✓ SNA, to wind, spin, whence Lat. nere, to spin. Cf. Skt. snasá, snáya, snáva, a tendon, sinew. Der. snare, verb, Temp. ii. 2. 174. M. E. snaren, Prompt. Parv.; snar-er, en-snare. Also (obsolete) snar-l, a noose, Trevisa, ii. 385.

SNARL, to growl as a surly dog. (E.?) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 150. The -l is a frequentative suffix; the sense is 'to keep on snarring.' 'I snarre, as a dogge doth under a door whan he sheweth his tethe,' Palsgrave; spelt snar, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 12. 27. Of O. Low G. origin; perhaps E., though not found in A. S. — O. Du. snarren, 'to brawl, to scold, or to snarl;' Hexham. + G. schnarren, to rattle the letter R, to snarl, speak in the throat. Cf. also Icel. snörgla, to rattle in the throat; snörgl (pronounced snörfl), a rattling sound in the throat. Evidently related to SNEER, SNORE, SNORT, which see. ¶ Evidently also a parallel form to gnarl, to snarl; see GNARL.

SNATCH, to seize quickly, snap up. (E.) M. E. snacchen, Alisaunders, ed. Stevenson, 6599 (Stratmann); spelt sneccchen, Ancrer Riwele, p. 324, l. 27. Snacchen is a weakened form of snakken, and may be considered as an E. word, though not found in A. S. The h is preserved in the sb. snack, a portion, lit. a snatch or thing snatched up; Lowland Scotch snak, a snatch made by a dog at a hart, a snap of the jaws, Douglas, tr. of Virgil, xii. 754 (Lat. text). 'Snack, a share; as, to go snacks with one;' Phillips, ed. 1706. + Du. snakken, to gasp, desire, long, aspire; 'de Visch snackt na het water, the fish gasps for water;' Hexham. The Low G. snakken, prov. G. schnakken, to chatter, is the same word in a different application; cf. also G. schnattern, to cackle, chatter. β. All from a Teut. base SNAK, to catch at with the mouth, move the jaws, parallel to SNAP (as in E. snap) and to SNAT (as in G. schnattern, to chatter). These bases are all imitative, with the notion of a movement of the jaws. Der. snatch, sb.; body-snatcher. Also snack, sb., as above. Also prov. E. sneek, the 'snap' or latch of a door. ¶ See remarks on SNAP.

SNEAK, to creep or steal away slyly, to behave meanly. (E.) In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 246. M. E. sniken. 'Snikeð in ant ut nedden' = adds creep in and out; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251. The mod. E. word has kept the orig. sound of the A. S. 4. — A. S. snican, to creep; Grein, ii. 459. Supposed to be a strong verb (pt. t. *snac, pp. *snicen); the Icel. pp. snikinn occurs, from an obsolete verb, with the sense of covetous, hankering after. We also find Icel. snikja (weak verb), to hanker away, to beg for food silently, as a dog does; Dan. snige sig, to sneak, slink. Also Swed. dial. sniga, to creep, strong verb (pt. t. sneg); snika, to hanker after, strong verb (pt. t. snek). β. All from a Teut. base SNIK, to creep; cf. Irish and Gael. snaigh, snag, to creep, crawl, sneak. Der. snake, q. v., snail, q. v.

SNEAP, to pinch, check. (Scand.) See SNUB.

SNEER, to express contempt. (Scand.) 'Sneer, to laugh foolishly or scornfully;' Phillips, ed. 1706; prov. E. sneering-match, a grinning match (Forby). Rare. M. E. sneren, to deride. 'pai snered me with snering swa, Bot gnaisted over me with thaire tethe tha' = they derided me so with sneering, also they gnashed upon me with their teeth; Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), Ps. xxiv. 16; and see Ps. ii. 4. — Dan. snærre, to grin like a dog; Hunden snærrede ad hem, the dog shewed its teeth at him (Molbeck). This is closely allied to the obsolete E. snar; for which see SNARL.

SNEEZE, to eject air rapidly and audibly through the nose. (E.) 'Looking against the sunne doth induce sneezing;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 687. M. E. snesen, Trevisa, v. 389 (Stratmann). In Chaucer, Group H, l. 62 (l. 17011, ed. Tyrwhitt), the right reading is fueseth, not sneeth. But snesen is doubtless either a modification of fuesen, or a parallel form to it; the initial s is perhaps due to Dan. snuse, to sniff, for which see SNOUT.

β. We find also fuesynge, violent blowing, Wyclif, Job, xli. 18. — A. S. fneðsan, to sneeze; whence fneðsung, stemutatio, printed sneosing (by error) in Wright's Vocab. i. 46, col. 1. Allied to A. S. fneast, a puff, blast, Grein, i. 307; Icel. fnaasa, to sneeze, snort. + Du. fniezen, to sneeze. + Swed. fnyssa, Dan. fnyse, to snort. γ. We thus arrive at a base FNUS, evidently a mere variant of HNUS, to sneeze, Fick, iii. 82; for which see NEESE. Der. sneeze, sb. And see neese.

SNIFF, to scent, draw in air sharply through the nose. (Scand.) Not common in old books. Johnson defines snuff, sb., as 'resentment expressed by sniffing.' M. E. sneuen or sneuen (with u=v), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 37, l. 25; ii. 207, l. 16; this would give a later E. *sneuve, whence was formed snivle, to snivel, given in Minshew. — Icel. *snefja, a lost verb, of which the pp. snaför, sharp-scented, occurs (Acts, xvii. 21); Dan. snive, to sniff, snuff; and cf. Swed. sniffa, to sob. And cf. Icel. snippa, to sniff with the nose, snapa, to sniff. Allied to Snuff (1), q. v. Der. sniff, sb.; sniv-el, q. v.

SNIP, to cut off, esp. with shears or scissors. (Du.) Shak. has snip, sb., L. L. L. iii. 22; also snipt, pp., All's Well, iv. 5. 2. He connects it with snap, id. v. 1. 63. — Du. snippen, to nip, clip. A weakened form of Du. snappen, 'to snap up, or to intercept;' Hexham; see SNAP. + G. schnippen, to snap; weakened form of schnappen, to snap, to catch. ¶ It has probably been influenced in use by the similar word nip, which comes however from the Teut. base KNIB; see Nip. Der. snip, sb.; snipp-et, a small piece, dimin. of snip, sb., Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 824. Also snip-snap, Pope, Dunciad, ii. 240.

SNIPER, a bird with a long bill, frequenting marshy places. (Scand.) M. E. snyper. 'Snyper, or snyte, byrde, Ibeix;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hic ibis, or hic ibex, a snyper;' Wright's Voc. i. 220. 'Snipe, or snyte;' Baret (1580). [Snipe and snyte are parallel names for the same bird; it is possible that the vowel of snipe has been affected by that of snyte, which is the older word, found as A. S. snytt, Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2, and i. 62, col. 1. The A. S. snytt prob. has reference to the bird's long bill, and is allied to snout; see Snout.] β. Similarly, snipe (otherwise snyper, which in prov. E. means a woodcock, see Halliwell) is from Icel. snipa, a snipe, found in the comp. mýri-snipa, a moor-snipe; Dan. sneppe, a snipe, Swed. snäppa, a sandpiper. + Du. snip, sneep; O. Du. snippe, sneppe, a snipe (Hexham). + G. schnepfe, a snipe. γ. The word means 'a snipper' or 'a snapper;' the standard form appears in Swed. snäppa, formed by the addition of a suffix -a (for -ya or -ia) and vowel-change, from the Teut. base SNAP, to snap up; see Snape. Cf. O. Du. snabbe, snebbe, 'the bill of a bird,' Hexham, which is the same word, with the same sense of 'snapper.' See Snaffle.

SNITE (1), to wipe the nose. (Scand.) See Snout.

SNITE (2), a snipe. (E.) See under Snipe.

SNIVEL, to sniff continually, to have a running at the nose, to whimper. (Scand.) Formerly snevil; spelt sneuyll, Skelton, Colin Clout, 1223. M. E. sneuelen (with u=v), P. Plowman, B. v. 135, footnote; other MSS. have nyuelynge, neuelynge. Snevil is merely the frequentative, with the usual suffix -le, of sniff; and similarly M. E. sneuelen is the frequentative of M. E. sneuen, to sniff; see Sniff. Cf. Dan. snövle, to snuffle, which is a parallel form; see Snuffle. So also Icel. snefill, a slight scent; allied to snippa, to sniff. ¶ The A. S. snoft, mucus, is unauthorised. Der. snivell-er; snivel, sb.

SNOB, a vulgar person. (Scand.) Prov. E. snob, a vulgar ignorant person; also a journeyman-shoemaker (Suffolk); see Halliwell. 'Snap, a lad or servant, now mostly used ludicrously;' Thoresby's letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17); 'Snape, a pert youth, North,' Halliwell. Lowland Sc. snab, a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin. - Icel. snápr, a dolt, idiot, with the notion of impostor or charlatan, a boaster, used as a by-word; Swed. dial. snópp, a boy, anything stumpy. The same Icel. word means the pointed end of a pencil; both senses may be explained from Swed. dial. snóppa, to cut off, make stumpy, hence to snub. Cf. Swed. snopen, out of countenance, ashamed. See Snub, Snubnosed.

SNOOD, a fillet, ribbon. (E.) 'Her satin snood;' Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, c. i. st. 19; and see note 2 D. M. E. snod (12th century); Wright's Voc. i. 89, col. 1. - A. S. snód. 'Vitta, snód;' id. i. 74, col. 2. The orig. sense is 'a twist;' from the Teut. base SNU, SNIW, to turn, twist, appearing in Icel. snúa, to turn, twist, Dan. snoe, to twist, entwine, Swed. sno, to twist, twine; also in Swed. sno, sb., a twist, twine, string, answering in sense to E. snood, and Icel. snúör, a twist, twirl, answering in form to A. S. snód. β. The Teut. SNU, SNIW, further appears in Goth. snivan, to go, A. S. sneivan, to hasten, whence the sense of 'turn about' or 'turn' seems to have been evolved; see Fick, iii. 351. Cf. Gk. vév, to swim, Skt. snu, to flow. The sense of 'flow' seems the oldest; hence to proceed, go, turn about, turn, twine.

SNORE, to breathe hoarsely in sleep. (E.) M. E. snoren, Chaucer, C. T. 5210. The only trace of it in A. S. is the sb. snora, a snoring, in a gloss (Bosworth). + O. Du. snorren, 'to grumble, mutter,' Hexham; snarren, 'to brawle, scoude, snarle,' id. + G. schnarren, to rattle, snarl. β. All from Teut. base SNAR, to make a growling or rattling noise in the throat, hence, to snore. It is used in the sense of 'snore' in some Teut. tongues only in the extended form SNARK; as, e.g. in G. schnarchen, to snore, snort, Du. snorken, Low G. snorken, snurken, Dan. snørke, Swed. snorka, to threaten (orig. to snort with rage), Icel. snærkja, snarka, to make a sputtering noise, like a light with a damp wick. See Snarl, Snear. Der. snore, sb., snor-er. Also snor-t, q. v.

SNORT, to force air violently through the nose, as a horse. (Scand.) M. E. snorten, to snore, Chaucer, C. T. 4161. Put for *snorken, by the occasional change of k to t at the end of a syllable, as in bat (animal) from M. E. bakke, &c. - Dan. snørke, to snort; Swed. snorka, to threaten (orig. to snort, fume, be angry). + Du. snorken, to snore, snort. + G. schnarchen, to snore, snort, bluster. β. All from Teut. base SNARK, to snort, an extension from SNAR, to snore, growl; see Snore. Der. snort-er; snort, sb.

SNOT, mucus from the nose. (O. Low G.) M. E. snotte, snothe, Prompt. Parv. The A. S. forms are unauthorised. - O. Fries. snotte; Du. snot; Low G. snotte. + Dan. snot. Supposed to be from the pp. snoten of a lost strong verb, which would appear as A. S. *sneotan; q in any case, it is closely related to snout and to prov. E. snyte, to wipe the nose; see further under Snout.

SNOUT, the nose of an animal. (Scand.) M. E. snoute, Chaucer, C. T. 15011; snute, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1082. Not found in A. S. - Swed. snut, a snout, muzzle; Dan. snude. + Low G. snute. + Du. snuit. + G. schnauze.

β. From a Teut. type SNUTA; whence Icel. snýta, to wipe the nose, Swed. snýta, Dan. snýde, the same; whence E. snyte, to blow the nose (Halliwell). So also G. schnüezen, schneuzen, to blow the nose, snuff a candle. γ. The form SNUTA is probably due to a lost strong verb, given in Ettmüller as A. S. *sneotan (pt. t. *snedt, pp. *snoten), perhaps 'to sniff;' at any rate, the E. snot, mucus, is closely related. Another allied word is snyte, a snipe, mentioned under Snipe. δ. We find shorter forms in Dan. snue, to sniff, snuff, snort, Low G. snau, prov. G. schnau, a snout, beak; all from a base SNU. And it is clear that Swed. dial. snok, a snout, prov. G. schnuff, a snout, E. snuff, sniff, Dan. snuse, to snuff or sniff, go back to the same base, which seems to have indicated a sudden inspiration of the breath through the nose.

SNOW, a form of frozen vapour. (E.) M. E. snow; hence snow-white, Chaucer, C. T. 8264. - A. S. snāw; Grein, ii. 458. + Du. sneeuw. + Icel. snær, snjár, snjóör. + Dan. snee. + Swed. snö. + Goth. snaivus. + G. schnee. + Lithuan. snėgas. + Russ. snieg. + Lat. nix (gen. niuis). + Gk. acc. νίφα; whence νίφας, a snow-flake. + Irish and Gael. sneachd. + W. nyf.

β. The Teut. base is SNIW, for SNIG; from ✓ SNIGH, to snow, whence Lat. ningit, it snows (with inserted n), Lithuan. snigiti, sningiti, to snow, Greek νίφει, it snows, Zend gnizh, to snow; Fick, i. 88. The orig. sense of ✓ SNIGH was prob. to wet, moisten; cf. Skt. sneha (= snih-a), oil, moisture; snih, vb., whence pp. snigdha, oily, wet, dense, cooling; note also Gael. snidh, to ooze through in drops, Irish snidhe, a drop of rain. The Skt. nij, to cleanse, Gk. νίειν, to wash, are from a ✓ SNIG, which may be related; see Curtius, i. 395. Der. snow, verb; snow-blind, -drift, -drop, -plough, -skoe, -slip; also snow-y, snow-i-ness.

SNUB, to check, scold, reprimand. (Scand.) 'To snub one, to take one up sharply;' Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt snubbe in Levins, ed. 1570. The older form is sneb or snib; spelt snebbe, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. l. 125; snib, id. Mother Hubbard's Tale, 372. M. E. snibben, Chaucer, C. T. 523. - Dan. snibbe, 'to set down, blow up,' i. e. reprimand (whence E. snib); Swed. snubba, to snub, to check (whence E. snub); Icel. snubba, to snub, chide. The orig. sense was to snip off the end of a thing; cf. Icel. snubbóttr, snubbed, nipped, the pointed end being cut off; moreover the final b is weakened from p, cf. Icel. snupra, to snub, chide.

β. Another form of snub appears in sneap, to check, pinch, nip, L. L. L. i. 1. 100; Wint. Tale, i. 2. 13. This is from Icel. sneypa, orig. to castrate, then used as a law-term, to outrage, dishonour, and in mod. usage to chide or snub a child; whence sneypa, sb., a disgrace. This is a related word, and cognate with Swed. snöpa, to castrate, Swed. dial. snöppa, to cut off, to snuff a candle, snubba, to clip, cut off. γ. The root appears in Teut. SNAP, to snap, to snip; see remarks upon Snape and see Snuff (2). Der. snub, sb.; also snub-nosed, q. v. Doublet, snuff (2).

SNUBNOSED, having a short nose. (Scand. and E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. It means, literally, with a short or stumpy nose, as if cut off short. Cf. snubbes, s. pl., the short stumpy projections on a staff that has been roughly cut and trimmed, Spenser, F. Q. i. 8. 7. Snub is from the Swed. dial. snubba, to clip, snip; whence Swed. dial. snubba, a cow without horns or with cut horns, Icel. snubbóttr, snipped, clipped, with the end cut off. See Snub above. And see Nose.

SNUFF (1), to sniff, draw in air violently through the nose, to smell. (Du.) 'As if you snuffed up love by smelling love;' L. L. L. iii. 16. Spelt snuffe in Levins, ed. 1570. It is a mere variant of sniff, M. E. sneven, a word of Scand. origin; see Sniff.

β. The change of spelling from sneve or sniff may have been due to confusion with snuff (2) below. But it was rather borrowed directly from O. Du. snuffen, snuyven (Du. snuiven), 'to snuffe out the filth out of one's nose' (Hexham); cf. Du. snuf, smelling, scent, snuffelen, to smell out. Cf. Swed. snuffa, a cold, catarrh; snufven, a sniff or scent of a thing; Swed. dial. snavla, snäfta, snuffla, to snuffle (which is the frequent. form); Dan. snövle, to snuffle. We also find Swed. snafsta, to snuffle, speak through the nose; G. schnupfen, a catarrh, schnupfen, to take snuff; prov. G. schnuffeln, schnüffeln, to snuffle, to smell (Flügel). γ. These forms all go back to a base SNUF or SNAF, of which an older form was SNUF or SNAP, as appears from the related Icel. snippa, to sniff, snöppa, a snout, snapa, to snuffle. The orig. sense of the Teut. base SNAP was probably 'to gasp,' or draw in breath quickly, and there is no reason why it may not be ultimately identical with snap, to catch up quickly. See remarks on Snape. Der. snuff, sb., powdered tobacco; snuff-box, snuff-y.

SNUFF (2), to snip the top off a candle-wick. (Scand.) M. E.

snuffen, to snuff out a candle, Wyclif, Exod. xxv. 38, note y (later version); the earlier version has: 'where the snoffes ben quenched' = where the candle-snuffs are extinguished. This form snuffen is a variant, or corruption of *snuppen, not found, yet more correct; it agrees with prov. E. snop, to eat off, as cattle do young shoots (Halliwell). — Swed. dial. snöppa, to snip or cut off, esp. to snuff a candle (Rietz); cf. Dan. snubbe, to nip off, the same word as E. snub; see Snub. Der. snuff (of a candle), sb., M. E. snoffe, as above; snuff-dishes, Exod. xxv. 38; snuff-ers, Exod. xxxvii. 23. Doublet, snub.

SNUG, comfortable, lying close and warm. (Scand.) 'Where you lay snug;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 24. Shak. has 'Snug the joiner;' Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 66. Cf. prov. E. snug, tight, handsome, Lancashire (Halliwell); snog, tidy, trimmed, in perfect order (Cleveland Glossary). — Icel. snöggr, smooth, said of wool or hair; O. Swed. snugg, short-haired, smooth, trimmed, neat, Swed. snugg, cleanly, neat, genteel; Norweg. snögg, short, quick; Dan. snög (also snyg, snök), neat, smart, tidy (Molbech). β. The orig. sense was 'trimmed' or 'cropped'; from a verb of which the only surviving trace in Scand. is in Norweg. and Swed. dial. snikka, to cut, to joiner's work; whence also North E. snick, to notch, to cut, South E. snig, to cut or chop off, whence Devon. snig, close and private (i. e. snug); see Halliwell. Der. snug-ly, snug-ness.

SO, thus, in such a manner or degree. (E.) M. E. so, Chaucer, C. T. ii. 11; Northern sa, Barbour's Bruce (passim); also swa, Chaucer, C. T. 4028, where the Northern dialect is imitated. — A. S. swá, so; Grein, ii. 497. + Du. zoo. + Icel. svá, later svó, svö, so. + Dan. saa. + Swed. så. + G. so. + Goth. swa, so; swie, just as; swa-swie, just as. β. All from Teut. base SWA, adv., so; this from an oblique case of the Teut. SWA, one's own, Aryan SWA, one's own, oneself, a reflexive pronominal base; whence Skt. sva, one's own self, own, Lat. suus, one's own. Thus so = in one's own way, in that very way. See Curtius, i. 491; Fick, iii. 360.

SOAK, to steep in a fluid. (E.) It also means to suck up, imbibe. 'A sponge, that soaks up the king's countenance;' Hamlet, iv. 2. 16. This is the orig. sense; the word is a mere doublet of to suck. M. E. soken, (1) to suck, (2) to soak; 'Sokere, or he that sokythe, Sugens;' Prompt. Parv. 'Sokyn yn lycure, as thyng to be made softe;' id. — A. S. súcan (also súgan), to suck; also to soak. 'Gif hyt man on þam wætere gesýgð þe heo on bið' = if one soaks it in the water in which the wort is; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 134. Cf. A. S. ásúcan, ásúgan, to suck dry, whence the pp. dsocene, dsogene; Grein, i. 43. β. We should have expected to find an A. S. *socian, to make to suck, as a causal form, made from the pp. socen of súcan, to suck; and indeed, such a form appears in Bosworth's Dict., but is absolutely unauthorised. There is, however, the sb. soc, or gesoc, a sucking, Gen. xxi. 7, 8. We may also compare W. suga, soaked, sgugno, to suck, but only by way of illustration; for the word is E., not Celtic. See Suck. Der. soak-er.

SOAP, a compound of oil or fat with soda or potash, used for washing. (E.?) M. E. sape, Rob. of Glouc. p. 6, l. 19. [The long o is due to A. S. á, as in stone from A. S. stán, &c.] — A. S. sápe, soap; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 472, l. 6; Wright's Voc. i. 86, l. 13. + Du. zeep. + Icel. sápa. + Dan. sæbe. + Swed. såpa. + G. seife, M. H. G. saifā, O. H. G. seiphā. β. By some supposed to be a Teutonic word, connected with Low G. spēn, to trickle; and perhaps connected with Sap. The difficulty lies chiefly in the relationship of the Lat. sapo, soap; we have to discover whether the Teut. word was borrowed from the Lat. sapo, or whether, on the other hand, the Lat. sapo (see Pliny, xxviii. 12. 51) was not rather borrowed from the Teutonic. (From the Lat. acc. saponem came F. savon, Ital. sapone, Span. xabon, &c.) The truly cognate Lat. word would appear to be sebum, tallow, grease. The W. sebon, Gael. siopunn, siabunn, Irish siabunn, seem to be borrowed from the Lat. acc. saponem. See Curtius, ii. 63. Der. soap, verb; soapy.

SOAR, to fly aloft. (F., = L.) M. E. soren. 'As doth an egle, when him list to sore;' Chaucer, C. T. 10437. A term of hawking, and accordingly of F. origin. — F. essorer, 'to expose unto, or lay out in, the weather; also, to mount or soar up;' Cot. Cf. Ital. sorare, 'to soar in the air;' Florio. — Low Lat. *exaurare (not found), to expose to the air; regularly formed from ex, out; and aura, a breeze, the air. β. The Lat. aura was either borrowed from, or is cognate with Gk. álpa, a breeze; it is formed with the suffix -ra from av- or af-, to blow, from ✓AW, to blow. And the ✓AW is another form of ✓WA, to blow, whence E. wind; see Wind, Air.

SOB, to sigh convulsively, with tears. (E.) M. E. sobben. 'Swowed and sobbed and syked' [sighed]; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 326. It answers to A. S. siofian, seofian, to lament; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxvi. § 1, lib. iv. pr. 1; from a base SUF, variant of Teut. base SUP, to sup, sip, suck in. The word represents the convulsive sucking in of air. β. This is clearly shewn by the allied G. seufzen, to sigh, M. H. G. siuften, süften, O. H. G. súftion, to sigh, formed from the O. H. G. sb. súft, a sigh, sob; this sb. being again formed from O. H. G. súfan, to sup, sip, cognate with E. sup; see Sup. So also Icel. eyptir, a sobbing. Der. sob, sb.

SOBER, temperate, sedate, grave. (F., = L.) M. E. sobre, Chaucer, C. T. 9407. — F. sobre, 'sober'; Cot. — Lat. sobrius, acc. of sobrius, sober. Compounded of so-, prefix; and ebrius, drunken. The prefix so-, as in so-cors, signifies apart from, or without; and sobrius, not drunken, is thus opposed to ebrius. So- is another form of se-, which before a vowel appears as sed-, as in sed-itis, lit. 'a going apart.' See Se-, prefix, and Ebriety. Der. sober-ly, sober-ness; also sobrie-ty, from F. sobriété, 'sobriety,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sobrietatem.

SOBRIQUET, a nickname, assumed name. (F., = L. and C.) Sometimes spelt soubriquet, but sobriquet is the mod. F. form. Modern, not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. sobriquet, 'a surname, nickname, . . . a jeast broken on a man;' Cot. Another form is sozbriquet, also in Cotgrave.

β. Etym. disputed and uncertain. If sobriquet be right, and not (as is probable) an intentional misspelling for the sake of suggesting an etymology, it may be compounded of F. sot, a sot, foolish person, and briquet, borrowed from Ital. brichetto, a little ass, dimin. of Ital. bricco, an ass. For the F. sot, see Sot. The Ital. bricco is prob. allied to briccone, a rogue, knave, supposed by Diez to be derived from G. brechen, to break, cognate with E. Break, as if the orig. sense were house-breaker or law-breaker, and so the word became a term of reproach. In that case, the orig. sense is 'foolish young ass,' or 'silly knave,' hence a nickname, and finally an assumed name.

γ. Cotgrave also spells the word soubriquet, and Littré and Scheler note the occurrence of soubzbrquet in a text of the 14th century with the sense of 'a chuck under the chin.' Here soubz (mod. F. sous) answers to Lat. sub, and briquet is the same as E. brisket; see Sub- and Brisket. Wedgwood's account of the word is as follows. 'Norm. bruchet, the bole of the throat, breast-bone in birds. Fouler sus l'bruchet, to seize by the throat. Hence soubriquet, sobriquet, properly a chuck under the chin, and then "a quip or cut given, a mock or flout, a jeast broken on a man," [finally] "a nickname;" Cotgrave. "Percussit super mentonem faciendo dictum le soubriquet;" Act a. d. 1335 in Archives du Nord de la France, iii. 35. "Donna deux petits coups appelés soubzbrquets des dois de la main sous le menton;" Act a. d. 1335, ibid. in Hericher, Gloss. Norm. In the same way soubarbe, 'the part between the chin and the throat, also a check, twitch, jerk given to a horse with his bridle, endurer une soubarbe, to endure an affront;' Cot.

δ. Wedgwood's account seems the right one. If so, the sense is 'chuck under the chin,' hence, an affront, nickname. At the same time, Cotgrave's sobriquet must be due to a popular etymology.

SOC, SOCAGE, law-terms. (E.) See Soke.

SOCIABLE, companionable. (F., = L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 188. — F. sociable, 'sociable'; Cot. — Lat. sociabilis, sociable; formed with suffix -bilis from sociare, to accompany. — Lat. socius, a companion, lit. 'a follower.' — Lat. base soc-, allied to sec- or sek-, appearing in sequi (= sek-wi), to follow; all from ✓SAK, to follow; see Sequence. Der. sociabl-ty, sociable-ness, sociabili-ty. From Lat. socius is also formed the adj. socialis, whence E. social, with the adv. social-ly, also social-i-ty, social-ise, social-ist, social-ism. Also societ-ly, L. L. L., iv. 2. 166, from F. société, 'society,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. societatem. Also dis-sociate, as-sociate.

SOCK, a sort of half stocking, buskin. (L.) M. E. socke, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. — A. S. soc; Wright's Vocab., i. 26, col. 1, has: 'Callicula [= caligula], rocc, a mere misprint for soc, as Somner correctly prints it in his edition of Ælfric's Gloss, p. 61, l. 11. — Lat. soccus, a light shoe, slipper, sock, worn by comic actors, and so taken as the symbol of comedy, as in Milton, L'Allegro, 132. β. Perhaps allied to Gk. σάκρεν (= sák-yeu), to load, furnish, equip. Der. sock-et.

SOCKET, a hollow into which something is inserted. (F., = L.) M. E. soket, King Alisaunder, 4415. — O. F. soket, given by Roquefort only as (1) a dimin. of F. soc, a plough-share, and (2) a dimin. of F. souche, a stump or stock of a tree. β. [Of these, the F. soc is of Celtic origin; cf. W. swch, a snout, a ploughshare, and with this word we have here nothing to do.] But souche must be a variant of an older form *soc, as shewn by the dimin. soket, and by the Ital. zocco, a stump or stock of a tree. Again, the Ital. zocco appears to be the same as Span. zoco, only used in the sense of wooden shoe or clog, Port. socco, a sock, wooden shoe, clog. The interchange of s and z is not uncommon (initially) in Italian; thus Florio gives zocolo, 'a wooden patten,' as a variant of socolo, with the same sense. Cf. mod. F. socque, a clog. γ. Diez supposes all these words last mentioned to be alike derived from Lat. soccus, a sock, shoe. The accident that shoes were frequently made of wood caused the extension of meaning to wooden shoe, clog, block of wood, log, stump, &c. We may particularly notice F. socle, a plinth, pedestal, used as an architectural term, and coming very near to the idea of E. socket, whilst the corresponding Ital. zoccolo means both a plinth and a wooden shoe.

6. We may conclude that soek-et is a dimin. of sock, notwithstanding the great change in sense. A 'small wooden shoe' gives no bad idea of a socket in which to erect a pole, &c. One sense of E. shoe is 'a notched piece in which something rests' (Webster); used as a term in speaking of machinery. See Sock.

SOD, turf, a surface of earth covered with growing grass. (E.) 'A sod, turfe, cespes;' Levins, ed. 1570. So called from the sodden or soaking condition of soft turf in rainy weather or in marshy places. That the connection with the verb to seethe is real is apparent from the cognate terms. + Du. zode, sod, green turf; O. Du. zode, 'seething or boiling,' also 'a sodde or a turfe;' Hexham. Also contracted to zoo in both senses; 'zoo, a sod; het water is aan de zoo, the water begins to seeth;' Sewel. Note also O. Du. sood, a well (Hexham), so named from the bubbling up of the water, and cognate with A. S. seðð, a well, a pit, from the same verb (seethe). + O. Fries. satha, sada, sod, turf; allied to sath, sad, a well. + Low G. sode, sod; allied to sood, a well. + G. sode, sod, turf, allied to G. sod, broth, also, a bubbling up as of boiling water. See Seethe, Suds.

SOD, SODDEN; see under Seethe.

SODA, oxide of sodium. (Ital., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = Ital. soda, soda; O. Ital. soda, 'a kind of feame ashes wherof they make glasses;' Florio. Fem. of Ital. sodo, 'solide, tough, fast, hard, stiffe;' Florio. This is a contracted form of Ital. solido, solid; see Solid. So called, apparently, from the firmness or hardness of the products obtained from glass-wort; at any rate, there can be no doubt as to the etymology, since the O. F. soude, 'saltwort, glasswort,' can only be derived from the Lat. solida (fem. of solidus), which Scheler supposes must have been the Lat. name of glass-wort. There is no need of Littré's remark, that the etymology is 'very doubtful.'

β. Note that the Span. name for soda is sosa, which also means glass-wort; but here the etymology is quite different, the name being given to the plant from its abounding in alkaline salt. Sosa is the fem. of Span. soso, insipid, orig. 'salt;' from Lat. salsus, salt; see Sauce. Der. sod-ium, a coined word.

SODER, the same as Solder, q. v.

SODOMY, an unnatural crime. (F., = L., = Gk., = Heb.) In Cot. = F. sodomie, 'sodomy;' Cot. So called because it was imputed to the inhabitants of Sodom; Gen. xix. 5. = F. Sodome, Sodom. = Lat. Sodoma. = Gk. Σόδομα. = Heb. Sedóm (with initial samech); explained to mean 'burning' in Stanley's Sinai and Palestine, cap. vii; but this is quite uncertain.

SOFA, a long seat with stuffed bottom, back, and arms. (Arab.) 'He leaped off from the sofa in which he sat;' Guardian, no. 167 [not 198], Sept. 22, 1713. The story here given is said to be translated from an Arabian MS.; this may be a pretence, but the word is Arabic. = Arab. suffat, suffah, 'a sofa, a couch, a place for reclining upon before the doors of Eastern houses, made of wood or stone;' Rich. Dict., p. 936. = Arab. root saffa, to draw up in line, put a seat to a saddle; ibid.

SOFT, easily yielding to pressure, gentle, easy, smooth. (E.) M. E. softe, Wyclif, Matt. xi. 8, 9; Chaucer, C. T. 12035. = A. S. softe, gen. used as an adv., Grein, ii. 464. The adj. form is commonly sēfte (id. 423), where the ē is further modified to ē. + O. Sax. sāfto, softly; only in the compar. sāftur; Heliand, 3302. + G. sanft, soft; O. H. G. samfto, adv., softly, lightly, gently. β. Root uncertain; but perhaps allied to Icel. sefa, O. Icel. svefa, to soothe, soften, one of the numerous derivatives from the ✓SWAP, to sleep; see Soporific.

¶ The G. sacht, Du. zacht, soft, may perhaps be from the same root; see the Addenda. Der. soft-ly, M. E. softely (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 4209; soft-ness, Layamon, 25549. Also soft-en, in which the final -en is added by analogy with length-en, &c.; the M. E. soften would only have given a later E. verb to soft; cf. softeð in Ancren Riwe, p. 244, l. 27. The right use of soften is intransitive, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 2. 40. [†]

SOIL (1), ground, mould, country. (F., = L.) M. E. soile; spelt soyle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1039. = O. F. soel, suel, later sueil, 'the threshold of a door;' Cot. = Lat. solea, a covering for the foot, a sole, sandal, sole of the foot, timber on which wattled walls are built. The Lat. Lat. solea also means 'soil, or ground,' by confusion with Lat. solum, ground, whence F. sol, 'the soil, ground;' Cot.

β. We cannot derive E. soil from F. sol, on account of the diphthong; but it makes little difference, since Lat. solea, sole of the foot, and solum, ground, are obviously closely connected words, and O. F. sol and sueil are confused.

γ. The root of Lat. sol-ea, sol-um is uncertain; perhaps l stands for d, as in Lat. lacruma for dacruma, and the root may be ✓SAD, to sit; cf. Lat. solum, a seat, throne. The soil may be that whereon a thing rests; cf. F. sol, 'soil, foundation;' Cot. See Sole (1), Sole (2). The word euile is connected. Doublets, sole (1), sole (2). [†]

SOIL (2), to defile, contaminate. (F., = L.) M. E. soilen, Ancren Riwe, p. 84, l. 23; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 2. [Quite a distinct word from M. E. sullen, and mod. E. sully.] The sense is to cover with mire; to take soil, lit. to betake oneself to muddy water, was a term of the chase; see Halliwell. = O. F. soillier (12th cent., Littré), F. souiller, 'to soil,' Cot.; whence 'se souiller (of a swine), to take soil, or wallow in the mire;' id. = O. F. soil, souil; 'soil, or souil de sanglier, the soil of a wilde boare, the slough or mire wherein he hath wallowed;' Cot. [Cotgrave also gives the same meaning to O. F. sueil, but this is really due to confusion; the last word properly means 'a threshold of a door,' and is treated of above, under Soil (1).] Cf. O. Ital. sogliare, 'to sully, defile, or pollute,' Florio; also sogliardo (mod. Ital. sugliardo), 'slovenly, sluttish, or hoggish;' id. Soz also cites Prov. solh, mire, sulhar, to soil; and sulha, a sow, which last is (as he says) plainly derived from Lat. sueula, a young sow, dimin. of sus, a sow. See Sow.

β. Similarly, he explains the F. souil from the Lat. adj. suillus, belonging to swine, derived from the same sb. We may further compare Port. sujar, to soil, sujo, nasty, dirty; and note the curious confirmation of the above etymology obtained by comparing Span. ensuciar, to soil, with Span. emporcar, used in precisely the same sense, and obviously derived from Lat. porcus, a pig.

γ. There is therefore (as Diez remarks) neither need nor reason for connecting soil with E. sully and its various Teutonic cognates.

δ. It will be observed that the difference in sense between soil (1) = ground, and soil (2), sb. = mire, is so slight that the words have doubtless frequently been confused, though really from quite different sources. There is yet a third word with the same spelling; see Soil (3). Der. soil, sb., a spot, stain, a new coinage from the verb; the old sb. soil, a wallowing-place (really the original of the verb), is obsolete. The A. S. solu, mire, is not the orig. of E. soil, but of prov. E. soal, sole, a dirty pool, Kent; E. D. S. Gloss, C. 3.

SOIL (3), to feed cattle with green grass, to fatten with feeding. (F., = L.) See Halliwell; the expression 'soiled horse,' i. e. a horse high fed upon green food, is in King Lear, iv. 6. 124. [Quite distinct from the words above.] Better spelt soil; Halliwell gives 'soil, to be satisfied with food.' = O. F. saoler (Burguy), later saouler, 'to glut, cloy, fill, satiate;' Cot. Mod. F. soûler. = O. F. saol, adj. (Burguy), later saoul, 'full, cloied, satiated,' Cot. Mod. F. soûl. = Lat. satullus, filled with food; a dimin. form from satur, full, satiated, akin to satis, enough. See Sate, Satiate, Satisfy. [†]

SOIRÉE, an evening party. (F., = L.) Borrowed from French. 'A friendly swarry;' Pickwick Papers, c. 36; spelt soiree in the heading to the chapter. = F. soirée, 'the evening-tide,' Cot.; hence a party given in the evening. Cf. Ital. serata, evening-tide. Formed as a fem. pp. from a (supposed) *Low Lat. verb serare, to become late; from Lat. serus, late in the day, whence Ital. sera, F. soir, evening. The orig. of Lat. serus is doubtful.

SOJOURN, to dwell, stay, reside. (F., = L.) M. E. soioernen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 3, last line; soioernen, Chaucer, C. T. 4568. (Here i = j.) = O. F. sojorner, sojournner, to sojourn; also spelt sojornner, sejournner (Burguy). Mod. F. séjournner; cf. Ital. soggiornare. This verb answers to a *Low Lat. type subdiurnare, composed of Lat. sub, under, and diurnare, to stay, last long, derived from the adj. diurnus, daily; see Sub- and Diurnal or Journal. Der. sojourn-er; sojourn, sb., K. Lear, i. 1. 48, M. E. soioerne, soiorn, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 369, vii. 385. [†]

SOKE, SOC, a franchise, land held by socage. (E.) 'Soc, signifies power, authority, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the shire, circuit, or territory, wherein such power is exercised by him that is endued with such a privileged or liberty;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. (Blount rightly notes the word as 'Saxon,' but under socage gives a wrong derivation from F. soc, a plough-share.] 'Soc and Soc; soc was the power and privilege of hearing and determining causes and disputes, levying of forfeitures and fines, executing laws, and administering justice within a certain precinct; see Ellis, Introduction to Domesday Book, i. 273. Soc or Socn was strictly the right of investigating or seeking, or, as Spelman defines it, Cognitio quam dominus habet in curia sua, de causis litibusque inter vassallos suos exorientibus. It was also the territory or precinct in which the sacu and other privileges were exercised;' Gloss. to Thorpe's Diplomatarium, at p. 394 of which we find: 'ic an heom þefero saca and sócna' = I grant them thereover the privileges of sacu and sócna. See further in Schmid, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, ed. 1858, p. 653.

β. Etymologically, sac (A. S. sacu) is the same word as E. sake; the orig. sense is 'contention,' hence a law-suit, from A. S. sacan, to contend; see Sako. Soke (A. S. sóc) is 'the exercise of judicial power,' and soken (A. S. sócn, sócna) is 'an enquiry; * both these words are closely connected with mod. E. seek, to investigate, and are derived from A. S. sóc, pt. t. of the same verb sacan; see Seek. Hence Portsoeken (ward) in London, which Stow explains by 'franchise at the gate.' Der. soc-age, a barbarous law term, made by adding the F. suffix -age (Lat. -aticum) to A. S. sóc. (The o is long.)

SOLACE, a comfort, relief. (F., -L.) M. E. solas, King Alisaunder, l. 14; Chaucer, C. T. 13712. - O. F. solaz, solace; Burguy. (Here z=ts.) - Lat. solatium, a comfort. - Lat. solatus, pp. of solari, to console, comfort. (But some spell the sb. solacium, as if from an adj. solax *; this, however, would still be allied to the verb solari.) β . Allied to saluare, seruare, to keep, preserve. - \checkmark SAR, to preserve; see Serve. Der. solace, verb, M. E. solacen, P. Plowman, B. xix. 22, from O. F. solacier, solacer, to solace (Burguy). And see con-sol.

SOLAN-GOOSE, the name of a bird. (Scand. and E.) The E. goose is an addition; the Lowland-Scotch form is soland, which occurs, according to Jamieson, in Holland's poem of the Houlate (Owlet), about A. D. 1450. [Here the d is excrement, as is so common after n; cf. sound from F. son.] - Icel. súla, a gannet, solan goose; Norweg. sula, havsula, the same (Aasen). The Norweg. hav (Icel. haf) means 'sea.' β . As the Icel. súla is feminine, the definite form is súlan=the gannet; which accounts for the final n in the E. word. Similarly, Dan. sol=sun, but solen=the sun; whence the Shetland word sooleen, the sun (Edmonston).

SOLAR, belonging to the sun. (L.) 'The solar and lunar year;' Ralegh, Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) - Lat. solaris, solar. - Lat. sol, the sun. + Icel. sól. + Goth. sauil. + Lithuan. saulė. + Russ. solntse. + W. haul (for saul). + Irish. sul. β . The allied Gk. word is σείρος, the dog-star, Sirius; cf. σείρος, hot, scorching; Curtius, ii. 171. The allied Skt. words are sura, súra, the sun, svar, the sun, splendour, heaven. All from \checkmark SWAR, to glow; whence Skt. sur, to shine, A. S. sweolan, to glow, prov. E. sweal, to burn, and E. sultry; see Sultry. And see Serene. Der. sol-stice, q. v.

SOLDER, a cement made of fusible metal, used to unite two metallic substances. (F., -L.) Sometimes spelt soder, and usually pronounced sodder [sod-ur]. Rich. spells it soulder. 'To soder such gold, there is a proper glue and soder;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 5. 'I soulder a metall with soulder, le soudle;' Palsgrave. - O. F. soudure (14th cent., Littré), later also souldure, 'a soldering, and particularly the knot of soulder which fastens the led [lead] of a glasse window;' Cot. Mod. F. soudure, solder; Hamilton. - O. F. soulder, soulder (orig. solder), 'to soulder, consolidate, close or fasten together;' Cot. [Hence also M. E. souden, souden, to strengthen; 'anoon his leggis and feet weren *sowd*id togidere;' Wyclif, Acts, iii. 7.] - Lat. solidare, to make firm. - Lat. solidus, solid, firm; see Solid. And see Soldier. Der. solder, verb, formerly soder, as above. β It is usual to derive, conversely, the sb. solder from the verb; this is futile, as it leaves the second syllable entirely unaccounted for. The O. F. verb soudure yielded the M. E. verb souden, as shewn above, which could only have produced a modern E. verb sod or sud. In no case can the E. suffix -er be due to the ending -er of the F. infinitive. The French for what we call solder (sb.) is soudure, and in this we find the obvious origin of the word. The pronunciation of final -ure as -er occurs in the common word figure, pronounced [fig-ur], which is likewise from the F. sb. figure, not from a verb.

SOLDIER, one who engages in military service for pay. (F., -L.) The common pronunciation of the word as sodger [soj-ur] is probably old, and might be defended, the l being frequently dropped in this word in old books. [Compare soder as the usual pronunciation of solder; see the word above.] M. E. soudiour, Will. of Palerne, 3954; souder, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 109, l. 14; schavaldur, sodiour, souldier, Barbour's Bruce, v. 205, and various readings. So called from their receiving soude (i. e. pay). 'He wolde paye them their souldye or wagis . . . [he] hadde gotten many a soudiour;' Reynard the Fox (Caxton's translation), ed. Arber, p. 39. - O. F. soldier (Burguy), also soldoier, soudoier; Cot. has souldoyer, 'a souldier, one that fights or serves for pay.' Cf. O. F. soude, 'pay or lendings for souldiers;' id. Also F. soldat, a soldier. β Of these words, O. F. soldier answers to Low Lat. soldarius, a soldier; the O. F. soude=Low Lat. soldum, pay; and F. soldat=soldatus, pp. of Low Lat. soldare, to pay. All from Low Lat. solidus, a piece of money, whence is derived (by loss of the latter part of the word) the O. F. sol, 'the French shilling,' Cot., and the mod. F. son. We still use L. s. d. to signify libra, solidi, and denarii, or pounds, shillings, and pence. The orig. sense was 'solid' money. - Lat. solidus, solid; see Solid. Der. soldier-like, soldier-ship, soldier-y.

SOLE (1), the under side of the foot, bottom of a boot or shoe. (L.) M. E. sole. 'Sole of a foot, Planta; Sole of a schoo, Solea;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. sole, pl. solan (for solan). 'Solen, soleæ;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. - Lat. solea, the sole of the foot or of a shoe. See Soil (1). Doublet, soil (1), which is the F. form. Der. sole, verb.

SOLE (2), a kind of flat fish. (F., -L.) M. E. sole. 'Sole, fysche, Solia;' Prompt. Parv. - F. sole, 'the sole-fish;' Cot. - Lat. solea, the sole of the foot, the fish called the sole. The sole of the foot is taken as the type of flatness. See Sole (1). [†]

SOLE (3), alone, only, solitary, single. (F., -L.) M. E. sole, Gower, C. A. i. 320, l. 18. - O. F. sol, mod. F. seul, sole. - Lat. sólus, alone. Prob. the same word as O. Lat. solius, entire, complete in itself (hence alone). See Solemn. Der. sole-ly, sole-ness. From Lat. solus are also de-sol-ate, sol-i-logy, sol-i-tar-y, sol-i-tude, solo.

SOLECISM, impropriety in speaking or writing. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshew and Cotgrave. - O. F. solecisme, 'a solecisme, or incongruity;' Cot. - Lat. solecismus, acc. of solecismus. - Gk. σολοικισμός, sb. - Gk. σολοικίζω, to speak incorrectly. - Gk. adj. σολοικός, speaking incorrectly, like an inhabitant of Σόλοι in Cilicia, a place colonised by Athenian emigrants, who soon corrupted the Attic dialect which they at first spoke correctly. Others say it was colonised by Argives and Lydians from Rhodes, who spoke a corrupt dialect of Greek. See Diogenes Laertius, i. 51; and Smith, Class. Dict. Der. solec-is-tic-al.

SOLENN, attended with religious ceremony, devout, devotional, serious. (F., -L.) M. E. solempne. 'In the solempne dai of pask;' Wyclif, Luke, ii. 41. Hence solempnely, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 276. - O. F. solempne (Roquefort); the mod. F. has only the derivative solennel. - Lat. solemnem, acc. of solemnis, older forms solennis, sollennis, yearly, annual, occurring annually like a religious rite, religious, festive, solemn. - Lat. sol-lus, entire, complete; and annus, a year, which becomes ennus in composition, as in E. bi-ennial, tri-ennial. Hence the orig. sense of solemn is 'recurring at the end of a completed year.'

β . For Lat. annus, see Annual. The O. Lat. sol-lus is cognate with Gk. ὅλος (Ion. ὄλος), whole; Skt. sarva, all, whole. The proposed connection with \checkmark SAR, to protect, is doubtful. See Curtius, ii. 171. Der. solemn-ly, solemn-ness; solemn-ise, spelt solempnyse in Palsgrave; solemn-is-er, solemn-is-at-ion; also solemn-i-ty, M. E. solempnitee, Chaucer, C. T. 2704.

SOL-FA, to sing the notes of the gamut. (L.) M. E. solfe, solfe; P. Plowman, B. v. 423; Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 292. 'They . . . solfa so alamyre' = they sol-fa so a-la-mi-re; Skelton, Colin Clout, 107. To sol-fa is to practise singing the scale of notes in the gamut, which contained the notes named ut, re, mi, sol, fa, la, si. These names are of Latin origin; see Gamut. Der. solfe-ggio, from Ital. solfe-ggio, sb., the singing of the sol-fa or gamut. Also sol-mi-s-at-ion, a word coined from the names of the notes sol and mi.

SOLICIT, to petition, seek to obtain. (F., -L.) M. E. soliciten; spelt solycite in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 70, l. 24. - F. soliciter, 'to solicit;' Cot. - Lat. solicitare, to agitate, arouse, excite, incite, urge, solicit. - Lat. solicitus, lit. wholly agitated, aroused, anxious, solicitous. - Lat. solli-, for sollo-, crude form of O. Lat. sollus, whole, entire; and citus, pp. of cere, to shake, excite, cite; see Solemn and Cite. Der. solicit-at-ion, Oth. iv. 2. 202, from F. solicitation, 'a solicitation,' Cot. Also solicit-or (solicitour in Minshew), substituted for F. soliciteur, 'a solicitor, or follower of a cause for another,' Cot.; from Lat. acc. solicitatores. And see Sollicitous.

SOLICITOUS, very desirous, anxious, eager. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 428. Englished from Lat. solicitus, better spelt sollicitus, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, strenu-ous, &c. See Solicit. Der. solicitous-ly; solicit-ude, q. v.

SOLICITUDE, anxious care, trouble. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1266 h. - F. solicitude, 'solicitude, care;' Cot. - Lat. solicitudinem, acc. of solicitudo (better sollicitudo), anxiety. - Lat. solicitus, solicitous; see Sollicitous.

SOLID, firm, hard, compact, substantial, strong. (F., -L.) M. E. solide, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 17, l. 15. - F. solide, 'solid;' Cot. - Lat. solidum, acc. of solidus, firm, solid. Allied to Gk. ὅλος, whole, entire, and Skt. sarva, all, whole; see Solemn. Der. solid-ly, solid-ness. Also solid-ar-i-ty, 'a word which we owe to the F. Communists, and which signifies a fellowship in gain and loss, in honour and dishonour, . . . a being, so to speak, all in the same bottom,' Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Cotgrave has the adj. solidaire, 'solid, whole, in for [or] liable to the whole.' Also solid-i-ty, from mod. F. solidifier, to render solid; solid-i-fic-at-ion. Also solid-i-ty, from F. solidité, which from Lat. acc. soliditatem. From Lat. solidus are also con-solid-ate, con-sols, sold-er (or sod-er), sold-ier, sol-i-ped. And cf. catholic (from Gk. ὅλος), holo-caust.

SOLILOQUY, a speaking to oneself. (L.) Spelt soliloquie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. soliloquium, a talking to oneself, a word formed by St. Augustine; see Aug. Soliloq. ii. 7, near the end. - Lat. sol-i-, for solo-, crude form of solus, alone; and loqui, to speak; see Sole (3) and Loquacious. Der. soliloqu-ise, a coined word.

SOLIPED, an animal with an uncloven hoof. (L.) 'Solipeds or firm-hoofed animals;' Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6. § 9. A contraction for solipedes, which would be a more correct form. — Lat. soliped-, stem of solipedes, solid-hoofed, whole-hoofed; Pliny, x. 65; x. 73. — Lat. solid-, for solido-, crude form of solidus, solid; and pes, a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Solid and Foot.

SOLITARY, lonely, alone, single. (F., — L.) M. E. solitarie, P. Plowman, C. xviii 7. — O. F. *solitarie, not found, but the correct form; usually solitaire, as in mod. F. — Lat. solitarium, acc. of solitarius, solitary. β. Formed as if contracted from *solitarius, from solitat-, stem of solitas, loneliness; a sb. formed with suffix -ia from solit = solo-, crude form of solus, alone; see Sole (3). Cf. heredit-ary, milit-ary from the stems heredit-, milit-; also propriet-ary, similarly formed from the sb. proprietas. Der. solitari-ly, -ness. Also solitaire, from F. solitaire. And see solitude, sol-o.

SOLITUDE, loneliness. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. solitude, 'solitude'; Cot. — Lat. solitudo, loneliness. — Lat. solit- = solo-, crude form of solus, sole; with suffix -itudo. See Sole (3).
SOLMISATION, a singing of sol-mi; see Sol-fa.

SOLO, a musical piece performed by one person. (Ital., — L.) 'Solos and sonatas;' Tatler, no. 222; Sept. 9, 1710. — Ital. solo, alone. — Lat. solum, acc. of solus, sole; see Sole (3).

SOLSTICE, one of the two points in the ecliptic at which the sun is at his greatest distance from the equator; the time when the sun reaches that point. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. solstice, 'the solstice, sun-stead, or stay of the sun'; Cot. — Lat. solstitium, the solstice; lit. a point (in the ecliptic) at which the sun seems to stand still. — Lat. sol, the sun; and stitum, put for statum, supine of stare, to make to stand still, a reduplicated form from stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand; see Solar and Stand. Der. solstiti-al, adj., from F. solstitial or solstitial. (Cot.)

SOLUBLE, capable of being dissolved. (F., — L.) Spelt soluble and solubil in Levens, ed. 1570. — F. soluble (13th cent., Littré). — Lat. solubilem, acc. of solubilis, dissolvable. Formed, with suffix -ibilis, from solu-, found in solutus, pp. of soluere, to solve, dissolve; see Solve. Der. solubili-ty, a coined word.

SOLUTION, a dissolving, resolving, explanation, discharge. (F., — L.) M. E. solucion, Gower, C. A. ii. 86, l. 5; it was a common term in alchemy. — F. solution, 'a discharge, resolution, dissolution'; Cot. — Lat. solutionem, acc. of solutio, lit. a loosing. — Lat. solutus, pp. of soluere, to loose, resolve, dissolve; see Solve.

SOLVE, to explain, resolve, remove. (L.) Not an early word. In Milton, P. L. viii. 55. — Lat. soluere, to loosen, relax, solve; pp. solutus. A compound verb; compounded of so-, put for se-, or sed-, apart; and luere, to loosen. For the prefix, see Sober. Luere is from the base LU, to set free, appearing also in Gk. λύειν, to set free, release; see Loose. Der. solu-able, from F. solvable, orig. 'payable,' Cot. Also solu-ent, having power to dissolve or pay, from Lat. soluent-, stem of pres. part. of soluere; and hence solu-ency. Also solu-er; ab-solve, ab-solute, as-sol-; dis-solve, dis-solute; re-solve, re-solute. And see soluble, solution.

SOMBRE, gloomy, dusky. (F., — L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson. — F. sombre, 'close, dark, cloudy, shady, dusky, gloomy'; Cot. It answers to Span. adj. sombrio, adj., shady, gloomy, from the sb. sombra, shade, dark part of a picture, also a ghost. So also Port. sombrio, adj., from sombra, shade, protection, ghost. And cf. Span. a-sombrar, to frighten, terrify. β. Diez refers these words to a Lat. form *sub-umbrare, to shadow or shade; a conjecture which is supported by the occurrence of Prov. solz-ombrar, to shade (Scheler). There is also an O. F. essombre, a dark place (Burguy), which is probably due to a Lat. form *ex-umbrare, and this suggests the same form as the original of the present word, a solution which is adopted by Littré.

γ. Scheler argues that the suggestion of Diez is the better one; and instances the (doubtful) derivation of F. sonder, to sound the depth of water, from Lat. *sub-undare, as well as the curious use of F. sombrer as a nautical term, 'to founder,' to go under the waves.

δ. We may conclude that sombre is founded upon the Lat. umbra, a shadow, with a prefix due either to Lat. ex or to Lat. sub, probably the former. See Umbrage. Der. sombre-ness.

SOME, a certain number or quantity, moderate in degree. (E.) M. E. som, sum; pl. summe, somme, some. 'Summe seeds' = some seeds; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 4. 'Som in his bed, som in the depe see' = one man in his bed, another in the deep sea; Chaucer, C. T. 3033. — A. S. sum, some one, a certain one, one; pl. sume, some; Grein, ii. 493. + Icel. sumr. + Dan. somme, pl. + Swed. somliga, pl. (= some-like). + Goth. sums, some one. + O. H. G. sum. β. All from a Teut. type SOMA, some one, a certain one, Fick, iii. 311; allied to E. same; see Same. The like change from a to u (o) occurs in the suffix -some, which see. Der. some-body, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 121; some-how; some-thing = A. S. sum 'thing'; some-time, M. E. sometime, Chaucer, C. T. 1245; some-times, formed from sometime by the addition of the adverbial suffix -s, the sign of the gen. sing., not of the nom. pl. (cf. need-s, whil-s, twi-ce, &c.); some-what, M. E. somhwat, Ancren Riwle, p. 44, l. 9 = A. S. sum hwæt; some-where, M. E. som-hwar, Ormulum, 6929; some-whither, Titus Andron. iv. 1. 11.

SOME, suffix. (E.) A. S. -sum, as in wyn-sum (lit. love-some), E. win-some. The same suffix appears in Icel. fríð-samr, peaceful, G. lang-sam, slow. Thus the orig. form is -SAMA, which is identical with Teut. SAMA, the same; and win-some = win-same, G. lang-sam = long-same, and so on. See Winsome and Same.

SOMERSAULT, SOMERSET, a leap in which a man turns heels over head. (F., — Ital., — L.) Commonly pronounced summer-set, where -set is a corruption of -sault or -saut. Spelt summersaut in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 6 (R); somersaut in Harrington's Ariosto, xxxv. 68 (Nares); see further in Rich. and Nares. — F. soubresault, 'a sobresault or summersault, an active trick in tumbling'; Cot. — Ital. sopra salto; where sopra = 'above, over, aloft, on high,' and salto = 'a leape, a skip, a iumpe, a bound, a sault'; Florio. — Lat. supra, above; and saltum, acc. of saltus, a leap, bound, formed from saltus, pp. of salire, to leap. See Supra and Salient.

SOMNAMBULIST, one who walks in his sleep. (L.; with Gk. suffix.) A coined word; an early example is given in Todd's Johnson, from Bp. Porteus' Sermons, A. D. 1789. The suffix -ist = F. -iste, from Lat. -ista = Gk. -ιστης; as in bapt-ist. — Lat. somnus, sleep; and ambul-are, to walk. See Somniferous and Ambulation. Der. somnambul-ism.

SOMNIFEROUS, causing sleep. (L.) 'Somniferous potions;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. i. sect. 2. memb. 1, subsect. 5. Coined by adding suffix -ous (properly = F. -eux, from Lat. -osus) to Lat. somni-fer, sleep-bringing. — Lat. somni-, for somno-, crude form of somnus, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. Bear, verb.

β. The Lat. somnus represents an older form *sopnus, cognate with Skt. svapna, sleep, and allied to sop-or, sleep; from √ SWAP, to sleep; see further under Soporific.

SOMNOLENCE, sleepiness. (F., — L.) M. E. somnolence, spelt somnolence, Gower, C. A. ii. 92, l. 13. — F. somnolence (Littré); doubtless in early use, though not so recorded. — Lat. somnolentia, better somnulentia, sleepiness. — Lat. somnulentus, sleepy; formed with suffix -lentus (as in temu-lentus, drunken) from somnu-s, sleep, allied to sopor, sleep; see Somniferous, Soporific. Der. somnolent, adj., from F. somnolent, Lat. somnulentus.

SON, a male child or descendant. (E.) M. E. son (properly a dissyllable); Chaucer, C. T. 79; older form sume, Ancren Riwle, p. 26, l. 1. — A. S. sunu, a son; Grein, ii. 496. + Du. zoon. + Icel. sunr, sonr. + Dan. søn. + Swed. son. + G. sohn. + O. H. G. sunu. + Goth. sumus. + Lithuan. sumus. + Russ. syn'. + Gk. υἱός (for ουἱός). + Skt. sinu, a son.

β. All from the Aryan form SUNU, a son; Fick, i. 230. — √ SU, to beget; as seen in Skt. su, sū, to beget, bear, bring forth. Thus son = one who is begotten, a child. Der. son-in-law; son-ship; a coined word.

SONATA, a kind of musical composition. (Ital., — L.) 'An Italian sonata;' Addison, in Todd (no reference). — Ital. sonata, 'a sounding, or fit of mirth'; Florio. Hence used in the technical sense. — Lat. sonata, fem. of sonatus, pp. of sonare, to sound; see Sound (3), and Sonnet. [†]

SONG, that which is sung, a short poem or ballad. (E.) M. E. song, Chaucer, C. T. 95. — A. S. sang, later form song; Grein, ii. 390. — A. S. sang, pt. t. of singan, to sing; see Sing. + Du. zang. + Icel. söngr. + Swed. sång. + Dan. and G. sang. + Goth. saggus (= sangus). Der. song-ster, used by Howell, L'Estrange, and Dryden (Todd, no references); from A. S. sangstre-ess (better sangestre), given in Wright's Vocab. i. 72, as a gloss to Lat. cantrix; formed with double suffix -es-tre from sang, a song; as to the force of the suffix, see Spinster. Hence songstr-ess, Thomson's Summer, 746; a coined word, made by needlessly affixing the F. suffix -esse (Lat. -issa, from Gk. -ισσα) to the E. songster, which was orig. used (as shewn above) as a feminine sb. Also sing-song, Fuller's Worthies, Barksheire (R.); a reduplicated form.

SONNET, a rimed poem, of fourteen lines. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 2. 69. See 'Songes and Sonettes' by the Earl of Surrey, in Tottell's Miscellany. — F. sonnet, 'a sonnet, or canzonet, a song (most commonly) of 14 verses'; Cot. — Ital. sonetto, 'a sonnet, canzonet'; Florio. Dimin. of sono, 'a sound, a tune'; Florio. — Lat. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound; see Sound (3). Der. sonnet-eer, from Ital. sonettiere, 'a composer of sonnets,' Florio; the suffix -eer (Ital. -iere) is due to Lat. suffix -arius.

SONOROUS, loud-sounding. (L.) Properly sonórous; it will probably, sooner or later, become sonorous. 'Sonórous metal;' Milton, P. L. i. 540; and in Cotgrave. Doubtless taken directly from the Lat. sonorus, loud-sounding, by the change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, and numerous other words. [The F. sonoreux, 'sonorous, loud,' is in Cotgrave; this would probably have produced an E. form sonorous, the length of the Latin penultimate being lost sight of.]—Lat. sonor (gen. sonōr-is), sound, noise; allied to sonus, sound; see Sound (3). Der. sonorous-ly, -ness. [†]

SOON, immediately, quickly, readily. (E.) M. E. some (disyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 13442.—A. S. sōna, soon; Grein, ii. 465. + O. Fries. sān, sān. + O. Sax. sān. + O. H. G. sān. β. We find also Goth. sims (or sīms), soon, at once, immediately, Matt. viii. 3. I believe the connection to be with E. so, A. S. sūwā, from the pronominal base SA, rather than with A. S. se, from the pronominal base SA. See So.

SOOT, the black deposit due to smoke. (E.) M. E. sot (with long o); King Alisaunder, 6636.—A. S. sōt, soot; 'Fuligine, sōtē,' Wright's Voc. ii. 36, col. 1; we also find ge-sōtig, adj. sooty, and besutian, verb, to make dirty (Leo). + Icel. sōt. + Swed. sot. + Dan. sod (for sot). + Lithuan. sōdis, soot; usually in the pl. form sōdžei; whence the adj. sodžotas, sooty, and the verb apsōdinti, to blacken with soot, besmut. β. We find also Irish suth, Gael. suith, W. swta; but these may be words not originally Celtic; the Lithuan. form is valuable as shewing that the form soot is truly Teutonic. Root unknown. Der. soot-y, soot-i-ness.

SOOTH, adj., true; sb., truth. (E.) The adjectival sense is the older one. M. E. soth (with long o), adj., true; Pricke of Conscience, 7687. Commoner as a sb., meaning 'the true thing,' hence 'the truth'; Chaucer, C. T. 847.—A. S. sōð, adj., true (very common); Grein, ii. 460. Hence sōð, neuter sb., a true thing, truth; id. 462. The form sōð stands for *sanð, the n being lost before the aspirate, as in tōð, a tooth, which stands for *tanð; the loss of n causes the o to be long. + Icel. sannr (for sanðr). + Swed. sann. + Dan. sand. β. All from Teut. base SANTHA, true; Fick, iii. 318. And again, SANTHA is certainly an abbreviation for ASANTHA, orig. signifying 'being,' or 'that which is,' hence that which is real, truth; a present participial form from the ✓ AS, to be. The same loss of initial a occurs in the Lat. -sens as found in præ-sens (stem præ-sent-), preserved in E. pre-sent; and again in the Skt. satya, true (put for *as-ant-ya); so also we have G. sind = Lat. sunt = Skt. santi, they are, all answering to Aryan as-anti. In the Gk. êreôs, true, not only this initial a but also the following s has been lost, so that êreôs (for as-êreôs) represents only the portion -oath of the E. word. Hence Curtius says of êreôs that 'the root is es, to be [Aryan as]. The meaning "true," "real," appears already in the Skt. participle sat, the shorter form for sant = (a)sant (Lat. præ-sent-). γ. Hence we conclude that the very interesting word sooth meant orig. no more than 'being,' and was at first the present participle of AS, to be. See Are, Essence, and Sin. Der. for-sooth, = for a truth, A. S. for sōð, as in 'wite þu for sōð' = know thou for a truth, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. ii. pr. 2, cap. vii. § 3. Also sooth-fast, true (obsolete), from A. S. sōðfest, Grein, ii. 463, where the suffix is the same as in stead-fast and shame-fast (now corrupted to shame-faced). And see sooth-say, and soothe.

SOOTHE, to please with gentle words or flattery, to flatter, appease. (E.) The orig. sense is 'to assent to as being true,' hence to say yes to, to humour by assenting, and generally to humour. 'Sooth, to flatter immoderately, or hold vp one in his talke, and affirme it to be true, which he speaketh;' Baret (1580). 'Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?' Com. of Errors, iv. 4. 82. 'Soothing the humour of fantastic wits;' Venus and Adonis, 850. Cf. the expression 'words of sooth,' Rich. II. iii. 3. 136. M. E. sōthien, to confirm, verify; whence isoðet, confirmed, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 261, l. 8.—A. S. ge-sōðian (where the prefix ge- makes no difference), to prove to be true, confirm; Dooms of Edward and Guthrum, sect. 6, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 170. Cf. A. S. gesōð, a parasite, flatterer, in a gloss (Bosworth).—A. S. sōð, true; see Sooth. Cognate verbs occur in the Icel. sanna, Dan. sande, to verify, confirm. [†]

SOOTHESAY, to foretell, tell the truth beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Antony, i. 2. 52. Compounded of sooth and say; see Sooth and Say. We find the sb. soothsayer, spelt zob-zigger (in the O. Kentish dialect) in the Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 256, l. 3 from bottom; spelt sothsaiser, Gower, C. A. iii. 164, l. 24. We also find the A. S. sb. sōðsagen, a true saying, in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 250, l. 11; and the adj. sōðsagol, truth-speaking, Wright's Vocab. i. 76, l. 18. Der. sooth-say-er; sooth-say-ing, Acts, xvi. 16.

SOP, anything soaked or dipped in liquid to be eaten. (E.) M. E. sop, soppe; 'a sop in wyn,' Chaucer, C. T. 336; spelt soppe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 175.—A. S. *soppa, *soppe, not found; but we find the derived verb soppigan, to sop, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 228, last line, and the compound sb. sop-cuppe (written sōp-cuppe), a sop-cup, in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 553, 554; so that the word is certainly English.—A. S. *sopen, not found, but the regularly formed pp. of the strong verb sōpan, to sup; see Sup. + Icel. soppa, a sop; soppa af vīni = a sop in wine; from sōpin, pp. of sōpa, to sup; cf. also sopi, a sup, sip, mouthful. These Icel. forms make the A. S. forms certain. + O. Du. soppe, 'a sop'; Hexham. ¶ Soup is a F. form of the same word, and has been borrowed back again into some Teutonic tongues, as e.g. in the case of G. suppe, soup, broth. Der. sop, verb, spelt soppe in Levins, from A. S. soppigan, to sop, mentioned above. Also sopp-y, soaking, wet. Also milk-sop = one who sops milk; see Milksop. Doublet, soup, q. v.

SOPHIST, a captious reasoner. (F., —L., —Gk.) Not in early use; Todd cites an example from Temple. It is remarkable that the form in use in old authors was not sophist, but sophister. Frith has sophisme, sophistry, and sophister all in one sentence; Works, p. 44, col. 2. Shak. has sophister, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 191. The final -er is needlessly added, just as in philosoph-er, and was probably due (in a similar way) to an O. F. form *sophistre, substituted for the true form sophiste. —F. sophiste, 'a sophister'; Cot. —Low Lat. sophista. —Gk. σοφιστής, a cunning or skillful man; also, a Sophist, a teacher of arts and sciences for money; see Liddell and Scott. —Gk. σοφίζεω, to instruct, lit. to make wise. —Gk. σοφός, wise; allied to σάφης, orig. 'tasty,' hence of a keen, decided taste, and so clear, evident, sure. Further allied to Lat. sapere, to taste, whence sapiens, wise; see Sapient. Curtius, ii. 64. Der. sophist-r-y, M. E. sophistrie, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 137, from F. sophisterie, 'sophistry,' Cot. Also sophist-ic, from Lat. sophisticus, which from Gk. σοφιστικός; sophist-ic-al, sophist-ic-al-ly; sophist-ic-ate, used in the pp. sophisticatid by Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 110, from Low Lat. sophisticatus, pp. of sophisticare, to corrupt, adulterate. Also sophism, (used by Frith as above), from F. sophisme, 'a sophisme, fallacy, trick of philosophy,' Cot., which from Lat. sophisma = Gk. σόφισμα, a device, captious argument. Also philosophy, q. v.

SOPORIFEROUS, causing or inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporiferous medicines;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 975. Coined by adding the suffix -ous (properly = F. -eux, from Lat. -osus) to Lat. soporifer, sleep-inducing. —Lat. sopori-, crude form of sopor, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, cognate with E. Bear, verb. β. Lat. sopor stands for *swap-or, from ✓ SWAP, to sleep, appearing in Skt. svap, to sleep, Gk. ύπνος, sleep, A. S. swefen, a dream; see Curtius, i. 360. See soporific and somniferous.

SOPORIFIC, inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporific or anodyne virtues;' Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 23 (R.) A coined word, as if from Lat. *soporificus; from sopori-, crude form of sopor, sleep; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make. See Soporiferous and Fact. And see Somniferous.

SOPRANO, the highest kind of female voice. (Ital. —L.) A musical term. —Ital. soprano, 'sovereigne, supreme, also, the treble in musicke;' Florio. —Low Lat. superanus, sovereign; see Sovereign. Doublet, sovereign.

SORCERY, casting of lots, divination by the assistance of evil spirits, magic. (F., —L.) M. E. sorcerie, Chaucer, C. T. 5177; King Alisaunder, 478.—O. F. sorcerie, casting of lots, magic. —O. F. sorcier, a sorcerer. —Low Lat. sortarius, a teller of fortunes by the casting of lots, a sorcerer. —Low Lat. sortiare, to cast lots, used A. D. 1250 (Ducange); cf. Lat. sortiri, to obtain by lot. —Lat. sorti-, crude form of sors, a lot; see Sort. Der. sorcer-er, Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 49, where the final -er is needlessly repeated, just as in poulter-er, upholster-er; the form sorcer would have sufficed to represent the O. F. sorcier mentioned above. Also sorcer-ess, coined as a fem. form of sorcer-er by the addition of -ess (F. -esse, Lat. issa, Gk. -ισσα) to the short form sorcer as appearing in sorcer-y; the M. E. sorceresse occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 49, l. 24. [†]

SORDID, dirty, mean, vile. (F., —L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 23. —F. sordide, 'sordid'; Cot. —Lat. sordidus, vile, mean, orig. dirty. —Lat. sordi-, crude form of sordes, dirt, smuttiness, orig. blackness; allied to E. swart and Swarthy; see Swarthy. Der. sordid-ly, -ness.

SORE, wounded, tender or susceptible of pain, grieved, severe. (E.) M. E. sor (with long o), grievous, Ancræn Riwe, p. 208, l. 2; much commoner as sore (disyllabic), adverb, Chaucer, C. T. 7961.—A. S. sār, painful; Grein, ii. 391; the change from ā to long o being quite regular, as in stone, bone, from A. S. siān, bān. + Du. zeer, sore; also as adv. sorely, very much. + Icel. sárr, sore, aching. + Swed. sår. + O. H. G. sér, wounded, painful; cf. O. H. G. séro, mod. G. sehr, sorely, extremely, very; G. ver-sehren, to wound, lit. to make sore. β. All from Teut. base SAIRA, sore; Fick, iii. 313. Der. sore, adv., M. E. sore, A. S. sāre, Grein; sore-ly, sore-ness. Also sore, sb., orig. a neuter sb., and merely the neuter of the adjective, occurring as A. S. sār (Grein), cognate with Du. zeer, Icel. sár, Swed. sår, O. H. G. sér, all used as sbs. Also sorr-y, q. v.

SORREL (1), a plant allied to the dock. (F., —M. H. G.) 'Sorell, an herbe;' Palsgrave. —O. F. sorel, 'the herb sorrell or sourdock'; Cot. Mod. F. surelle (Littre). So named from its sour taste; formed with the suffix -el (Lat. -ellus) from F. sur, 'sowre, sharp, eager, tart'; Cot. —M. H. G. súr, sour, cognate with E.

Sour, q. v. Hence also we find A. S. sûre, sorrel, Cockayne's & Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. ii; from A. S. sûr, sour.

SORREL (2), of a reddish-brown colour. (F., = Tent.) 'Sorrell, colour of an horse, sorrel;' Palsgrave. He also gives: 'Sorell, a yonge bucke;' this is properly a buck of the third year, spelt sorel, L. L. L. iv. 2. 60, and doubtless named from its colour. A dimin. form from O. F. sor (Burguy), F. saur, adj. 'sorrell of colour, whence harenc saur, a red herring,' Cot. Hence saure, sb. m., 'a sorrell colour, also, a sorrell horse;' id. Cf. Ital. soro, a sorrell horse, also spelt sauro; see Diez. = Low G. soor, sear, dried, or withered up; Du. zoor, 'dry, withered, or seare,' Hexham; cognate with E. Sear, adj., q. v. The reference is to the brown colour of withered leaves; cf. Shakespeare's 'the sere, the yellow leaf,' Macb. v. 3. 23. The F. harenc saur, explained by Cotgrave as a red herring, meant originally a dried herring; indeed Cot. also gives F. sorer, 'to dry in the smoak,' formed directly from Low G. soor. [†]

SORROW, grief, affliction. (E.) M. E. sorwe, Chaucer, C. T. 1221; also sor3e, Will. of Shoreham, p. 32, l. 7. = A. S. sorg, sorh, sorrow, anxiety; gen. dat. and acc. sorge (whence M. E. sor3e, sorwe); Grein, ii. 465. + Du. zorg, care, anxiety. + Icel. sorg, care. + Dan. and Swed. sorg. + G. sorge. + Goth. saurga, sorrow, grief; whence saurgan, to grieve. β. All from Teut. base SORGA, care, solicitude; Fick, iii. 329. Perhaps related to Lithuan. sirgti (1 p. s. pr. sergu), to be ill, to suffer; whence sarginti, to take care of a sick person, like G. sorgen, to take care of. γ. It is quite clear that sorrow is entirely unconnected with sore, of which the orig. Teut. base was SAIRA, from a √ SI (probably 'to wound'); but the two words were so confused in English at an early period that the word sorry owes its present sense to that confusion; see SORRY.

Der. sorrow-ful, answering to A. S. sorgful, Grein, ii. 466; sorrow-ful-ly, sorrow-ful-ness.

SORRY, sore in mind, afflicted, grieved. (E.) Now regarded as closely connected with sorrow, with which it has no etymological connection at all, though doubtless the confusion between the words is of old standing. The spelling sorry with two r's is etymologically wrong, and due to the shortening of the o; the o was orig. long; and the true form is sor-y, which is nothing but the sb. sore with the suffix -y (A. S. -ig), formed exactly like ston-y from stone, bon-y from bone, and gor-y from gore (which has not yet been turned into gorry). We find the spelling soarye as late as in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 651, ed. Arber, p. 64, l. 18. The orig. sense was wounded, afflicted, and hence miserable, sad, pitiable, as in the expression 'in a sorry plight.' Cf. 'a salt and sorry [painful] rheum;' Oth. iii. 4. 51. M. E. sory (with long o and one r), often with the mod. sense of sorrowful; 'Sori for her synnes,' P. Plowman, B. x. 75. Also spelt sary, Pricke of Conscience, 3468. = A. S. sárig, sad; 'sárig for his synnum' = sorry for his sins, Grein, ii. 392; sár-nys, sorrow, lit. sore-ness, Ælfric's Homilies, 3rd Ser. vi. 321. Cf. sár-lic, lit. sore-like, used with the same sense of 'sad.' Formed with suffix -ig (as in stán-ig = ston-y) from A. S. sár, a sore, neut. sb., due to the adj. sár, sore. See SORE. Cognate words appear in Du. zeerig, full of sores, Swed. sárig, sore; words which preserve the orig. sense. Der. sorri-ly, sorri-ness.

SORT, a lot, class, kind, species, order, manner. (F., = L.) 'Sorte, a state, sorte;' Palsgrave. A fem. sb., corresponding to which is the masc. sb. sort, a lot, in Chaucer, C. T. 846. = F. sorte, sb. fem. 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind, quality, calling;' Cot. Related to F. sort, sb. masc. 'a lot, fate, luck,' &c.; id. Cf. Ital. sorta, sort, kind, sorte, fate, destiny; Florio gives only sorte, 'chance, fate, fortune, also the state, quality, function, calling, kinde, vocation or condition of any man,' whence the notion of sort (=kind) easily follows. 'Sort was frequently used in the sense of a company, assemblage (as in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 5), as lot is in vulgar language;' Wedgwood. All the forms are ultimately due to Lat. sortem, acc. of sors, lot, destiny, chance, condition, state. Probably allied to serere, to connect, and to series, order; see SERIES. Der. sort, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 261; as-sort, q. v.; con-sort, q. v. Also sort-er, sb.; sort-ance, 2 Hen. IV. iv. 1. 11; sorc-er-y, q. v.

SORTIE, a sally of troops. (F., = L.) A modern military term, and mere French. = F. sortie, an issue, going forth; Cot. Fem. of sorti, 'issued, gone forth,' id.; which is the pp. of sortir, 'to issue, sally,' id. Cf. Span. surtida, a sally, sortie; from Span. surtir, 'to rise, rebound,' Minshew, obsolete in this sense. Also Ital. sortita, a sally; from sortire, to make a sally, go out. β. According to Diez and others, Ital. sortire, to sally, is quite a different word from sortire, to elect, the latter being plainly connected with Lat. sortiri, to obtain by lot; whereas Ital. sortire, to sally, O. Span. surtir, to rise, answer to a Lat. type *surrectire, to rouse or rise up, formed from surrectum, supine of surgere, to rise; see SOURCE. We may further note Ital. sorto, used as the pp. of sorgere, to rise; shewing that the contraction of *surrectire to sortire presents no difficulty; and see RESORT.

SOT, a stupid fellow, a drunkard. (F., = C.?) M. E. sot, in early use; Layamon, 1142; Ancren Riwle, p. 66, l. 1; in the sense of 'foolish.' We even find sotscipe = sot-ship, i. e. folly, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1131; ed. Earle, p. 260, l. 8; but this is in the late Laud MS., and the word is rather to be considered as French, with the A. S. suffix -scipe. The entry 'Sottus, sot' is in an A. S. Glossary of the 11th century; in Wright's Vocab. i. 76, col. 1. = O. F. and F. sot (fem. sotte), 'sottish, dull, dunsical, grosse, absurd;' Cot. We also find O. Du. zot, 'a foole or a sot,' Hexham; and Span. and Port. zote, a stupid person, blockhead. The O. F. sot is an old word, occurring in the 12th century, and doubtless earlier. β. The origin is very doubtful; possibly Celtic; we find Bret. sôt, sôd, stupid, but it is not known whether this is a true Celtic word; also Irish suthaire, a dunce, suthan, a dunce, a booby, unless these words be due to the E. sot. [As to the form, cf. Irish suth, soot, with E. soot.] We also find Irish sotal, pride, southir, proud; Gael. sotal, pride, vainglory, whence the notion of 'foolish' may have arisen. See Diez, s. v. zote, where is also noted a proposed derivation from a Rabbinic word schoteh [or shotek], meaning 'a fool;' but this is very improbable. It is known that Theodulf, bishop of Orleans, punned upon the words Scotus and sottus (Scot and sot), in a letter to Charles the Great; see Ducange, s. v. sottus. Der. sott-ish, sott-ish-ly, sott-ish-ness.

SOU, a French copper coin, five centimes. (F., = L.) Merely borrowed from F. sou; Cotgrave uses sous as an E. word. = O. F. sol, later son, 'the sous, or French shilling, whereof ten make one of ours;' Cot. The value varied. = Lat. solidus, adj. solid; also, as sb., the name of a coin, still preserved in the familiar symbols l. s. d. (= libre, solidi, denarii). See SOLID and SOLDIER. Der. soldier, q. v.

SOUBRIQUET, a nickname; see Sobriquet.

SOUGH, a sighing sound, as of wind in trees. (Scand.) Stanyhurst has soughing, sb., tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 631, ed. Arber, p. 63. 'My heart, for fear, gae sough for sough;' Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 7. = Icel. súgr, a rushing sound; in the comp. arn-súgr, the sound of an eagle's flight. β. We also find M. E. swough, Chaucer, C. T. 1981, 3619; better swogh, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 759, where it has the sense of 'swaying motion;' formed as a sb. from the A. S. verb swógan, to sound, resound, make a noise, as in swógað windas = the winds whistle; Grein, ii. 516. [The A. S. sb. is swég, with mutation of ó to é.] Cf. O. Sax. swógan, to rustle (Heliand). Probably (like sig) of imitative origin.

SOUL, the seat of life and intellect in man. (E.) M. E. soule, Chaucer, C. T. 9010; also saule, Layamon, 27634; gen. sing. soule, Gower, C. C. i. 39, l. 8; pl. soulen, Ancren Riwle, p. 30, l. 16. = A. S. sáwul, sáwul, sáwul; also sáwul, sáwle; gen. sing. sáwle; Grein, ii. 392. + Du. ziel. + Icel. sála, later form sál. + Dan. sial. + Swed. sjál. + G. seele. + Goth. saiwala. β. All from Teut. type SAIWALA, the soul. Origin unknown; but the striking resemblance between Goth. saiwala, soul, and saiws, sea, suggests a connection between these words. Perhaps (as Curtius suggests) the word sea may be connected with √ SU, to press out juice, which appears to be identical with √ SU, to generate, produce. The Skt. su has the senses to produce, generate, express juice (esp. the Soma juice); and soul may thus signify 'life,' as produced by generation. See SEA. γ. Otherwise, from √ SU, to stir up, toss about; cf. Gk. σάειν, σαλεύειν. Der. soul-ed, high-soul-ed; soul-less. Also soul-sot, A. S. sáwul-sceat, Wright's Vocab. i. 28, col. 2.

SOUND (1), adj., whole, perfect, healthy, strong. (E.) M. E. sound, Chaucer, C. T. 5570. = A. S. sund, sound; Grein, ii. 494. + Du. gezond (with prefix ge-). + Swed. and Dan. sund. + G. gesund (with prefix -ge). Origin uncertain; possibly connected with Lat. sanus, used with just the same meanings; see SANE. Der. sound-ly, sound-ness.

SOUND (2), a strait of the sea, narrow passage of water. (E.) M. E. sound, King Horn, 628, in Ritson's Met. Romances, ii. 117; spelt sund, Cursor Mundi, 621. = A. S. sund, (1) a swimming, (2) power to swim, (3) a strait of the sea, so called because it could be swum across; Grein, ii. 494. Hence A. S. sund-hengest, a sound-horse, i. e. a ship. + Icel., Dan., Swed., and G. sund. β. From the Teut. type SUNDA, orig. a swimming, and doubtless put (as Fick suggests) for SWOMDA, by the common change from wo to u and the inevitable change of m to n before the following d. Formed, with suffix -da, from swom- or swim-, base of the pp. of A. S. swimman, to swim; see SWIM. Fick, iii. 362. Der. sound, the swimming-bladder of a fish; spelt sounde, Prompt. Parv. p. 466; this is merely another sense of the same word; cf. Icel. sund-magi, lit. sound-maw, the swimming-bladder of a fish.

¶ We cannot admit a derivation of A. S. sund from sundor, separate; it is like deriving wind from window, and indeed worse, since in the latter case there really is some connection.

SOUND (3), a noise. (F., = L.) The final d (after n) is crescent, just as in the vulgar gound for goun, in the nautical use of bound for M. E. boun (ready), and in the obsolete round, to whisper, put for roun. M. E. soun, Chaucer, C. T. 4983; King Alisaunder, 772; spelt son, Will. of Palerne, 39. — F. son, 'a sound'; Cot. — Lat. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound. + Skt. svana, sound. — ✓ SWAN, to sound, resound; as in Skt. svan, to sound; Fick, i. 256. Der. sound, verb, M. E. soumen, Chaucer, C. T. 567, from F. sonner, Lat. sonare. Also see son-ata, sonnet, son-or-ous, per-son, par-son, as-son-ant, con-son-ant, dis-son-ant, re-son-ant, re-sound, uni-son.

SOUND (4), to measure the depth of water with a plummet, to probe, test, try. (F., — Scand.) 'I sounde, as a schyppe-man soundeth in the see with his plummet to knowe the deppeth of the see, ye pilote;' Palsgrave. — F. sonder, 'to sound, prove, try, feel, search the depth of'; Cot., cf. sonde, 'a mariner's sounding-plummet,' id. β. Diez supposes that this answers to a Lat. form *subundare, to submerge; a similar contraction possibly occurs in the instance of sombre as connected with sub umbrā. If so, the etymology is from Lat. sub, under; and unda, a wave; see Sub- and Undulate. γ. But the Span. sonda means, not only a sounding-line, but also a sound or channel; and it is far more likely that the F. sonder was taken from the Scand. word sund, a narrow strait or channel of water; see Sound (2). This is corroborated by the following entries in Ælfric's Glossary, pr. in Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 1, 'Bolidis, sundgyrd;' and 'Cataprorates, sund-line.' So also: 'Bolidis, sundgyrd in scipe, ððe rap i. met-rap' = a sounding-rod in a ship, or a rope, i.e. a measuring rope; id. ii. 11, col. 1. Here bolidis represents Gk. βολίς (gen. βολίδος), a missile, a sounding-lead; and sund-gyrd = sound-yard, i.e. a sounding-rod. Similarly sund-line must mean a sounding-line, let down over the prow (κατὰ πρῶρον). There is always a probability in favour of a nautical term being of Scand. or E. origin. We find 'sund, sea,' even in Hexham's O. Du. Dict. But it is remarkable that there is no trace of the verb except in French, Span., and Portuguese; so that we must have taken the verb from French. Der. sound-ing.

SOUP, the juice or liquid obtained from boiling bones, &c., seasoned. (F., — Teut.) In Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 162. — F. soupe, 'a sop, potage or broth, brewis'; Cot. Of Teut. origin. — O. Du. sop, zop, 'the broth or bruise of porridge; soppe, zoppe, a sop, or steeped bread'; Hexham. So also Swed. soppa, a sop; words cognate with E. Sop, q. v. ¶ The G. suppe is perhaps from the French, though the word was orig. Teutonic. See also Sup.

SOUR, having an acid taste, bitter, acrid. (E.) 'Sour douz,' leaven; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 33. — A. S. sūr; 'sūr meole' = sour milk, Wright's Voc. i. 28, l. 2. + Du. zuur. + Icel. súrr. + Dan. suur. + Swed. sur. + O. G. H. sūr; G. sauer. β. All from Teut. type SURA, sour; Fick, iii. 327. Further related to W. sur, sour; Russ. surovii, raw, coarse, harsh, rough; Lithuan. surus, salt. Root unknown. Der. sour-ly, sour-ness; sour, verb, Cor. v. 4. 18; sour-ish. Also sour-el (1).

SOURCE, rise, origin, spring. (F., — L.) M. E. sours, Chaucer, C. T. 7925; said of the 'rise' of a bird in flight, id. 7520, 7523. — O. F. sorse, surse, sorce, surce, later source, 'a source,' Cot. Here sorse is the fem. of sors, the old pp. of sordre (mod. F. sourdre), to rise. The O. F. sordre is contracted (with intercalated d) from Lat. surgere, to rise. See Surge. Der. re-source; and see sortie, re-surrection.

SOUSE, pickle. (F., — L.) 'A soused [pickled] gurnet;' 1 Hen. IV. iv. 2. 13. M. E. souse, souse. 'Hoc succidium, Anglice souse;' Wright's Vocab. i. 199, col. 2. Hence also M. E. souser, another form of saucer; id. 200, col. 1. In fact, souse is a mere doublet of sauce. — O. F. sause, later sauce, 'a sauce'; see Sauce. Der. souse, verb, to pickle, immerse in brine, plunge in liquid, esp. in dirty liquid; hence, to deluge in rain, and even to plunge upon suddenly, strike, dash, or throw; see Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 8, iv. 4. 30. 'I souse fyshe, I laye it in souse to preserve it; I souse in the water, I souse in the myar' [mire]; Palsgrave. It seems to have been confused with the prov. E. soss, a mess of food, anything sloppy; see Cesspool. ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. susa, to rustle, G. sausen, &c.

SOUTH, the point of the compass where we see the sun at mid-day. (E.) M. E. south, Chaucer, C. T. 4913. — A. S. sūð, Grein, ii. 492; also sūða, sb. masc., the south, southern region; sūðan, adv., from the south. + Du. zuid, south; zuider, southern (as in Zuider Zee, southern sea); zuiden, the south. + Icel. súðr, old form also sunnr, south; sunnan, adv., from the south; cf. súðrey, southern island, pl. Súðreyjar, Sodor, the Hebrides. + Dan. syd, south; sønder, southern. + Swed. syd, south; söder, the south; sunnan, the south. + O. H. G. sund, south, mod. G. süd; O. H. G. sundan, the south, also, from the south, G. süden. β. All from the Teut. base SUNTHA, south; whence Teut. SUNTHANA, adv., from the south (= A. S. sūðan); SUNTHRA, neut. sb. and adv., the south, southwards (= Icel. súðr, sunnr); and SUNTHRONYA (= southern, see below); Fick, iii. 324. γ. Further, the type SUN-THA is formed from SUN, base of Teut. type SUNNA, the sun; the suffix -tha = Aryan -ta, so that the lit. sense is 'the sunned' quarter. See Sun. ¶ The loss of n before th is common in A. S.; so also tooth for toonth; hence the ú is long. Der. south-east, south-east-ern, south-east-er-ly; south-west, south-west-ern, south-west-er-ly; south-ward (see Toward). Also south-ern, M. E. sothern, Chaucer, C. T. 17342, A. S. súðerne (Grein); cognate with Icel. súðrann and O. H. G. sundróni; the last stands for sunda-róni, i.e. running from the south, and hence E. south-ern is to be similarly explained; see Northern. Hence south-er-ly, put for south-ern-ly.

SOUVENIR, a remembrancer, memorial. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. souvenir, sb., 'a remembrance'; Cot. It is merely the infin. mood souvenir, 'to remember,' used substantively; cf. Leisure, Pleasure. — Lat. subuenire, to come up to one's aid, to occur to one's mind. — Lat. sub, prefix; and uenire, cognate with E. come; see Sub- and Come.

SOVEREIGN, supreme, chief, principal. (F., — L.) The g is well known to be intrusive; as if from the notion that a sovereign must have to do with reigning. We find 'sovereigne power'; Hamlet, ii. 2. 27 (first folio); but the spelling with g does not seem to be much older than about A. D. 1570, when we find soveraygne in Levins. Palsgrave (A. D. 1530) has soverayne. M. E. soverain (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 6630; sovereyn, Rob. of Glouc. p. 30, l. 17. — O. F. soverain (Burguy); later soverain, 'sovereign, princely'; Cot. — Low Lat. acc. superanum, chief, principal; formed with suffix -anus from Lat. super, above; see Super-. Der. sovereign, sb., a peculiar use of the adj.; sovereign-ty, M. E. soverainete, Chaucer, C. T. 6620, from O. F. soverainte, later soveraineté, 'soverainety,' Cot.

SOW (1), to scatter seed, plant. (E.) M. E. sowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 3; strong verb, pt. t. sew, id. xiii. 31; pp. sowen, sowun, id. xiii. 19. — A. S. sáwan, pt. t. seóu, pp. sáwen; Grein, ii. 392. The long á becomes long o by rule; the pt. t. now in use is sowed, but the correct form is sew; the like is true for the verb to mosw (A. S. máwan). + Du. zaaijen. + Icel. sá. + Dan. saas. + Swed. sá. + O. H. G. sáwen, sáhen; G. säen. + Goth. saian. β. All from a Teut. base SÁ, to sow; Fick, iii. 312. Further related to W. has, to sow; Lithuan. sėti (pres. sing. sėju, I sow); Russ. sieiatie, to sow; Lat. serere (pt. t. se-ui, pp. sa-tum). All from ✓ SA, to sow; of which the orig. sense was prob. 'to cast.' Perhaps even Skt. sasya, fruit, corn, grain, belongs here; Fick, i. 789. Der. see-d, q. v.; and, from the same root, se-min-al, dis-se-min-ate.

SOW (2), a female pig; an oblong piece of metal in a lump larger than a pig of metal. (E.) M. E. sowe, Chaucer, C. T. 2021; spelt zoze (for soghe), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61; sauue, Ancrén Riwe, p. 204. The w is substituted for an older g. — A. S. sugu, contracted form sú; Grein, ii. 492. + Du. zog. + Icel. sýr. + Dan. so. + Swed. sugga, so. + O. H. G. sú; G. sau. β. Referred by Fick to a Teut. type SŪI; iii. 324. The word is further related to numerous cognates, viz. W. hwch (whence E. Hog, q. v.); Irish suig; Lat. sus; Gk. ὄς or ὄvis; Zend hu, a boar (Fick, i. 801). All from the ✓ SU, to produce; as in Skt. su, to generate, to produce; from the prolific nature of the sow. 2. In the sense of 'a large mass of metal,' see explanation under Pig; we find 'sowe of leed' in Palsgrave. Der. sow-thistle, A. S. sugebistel, Gloss. to vol. iii. of A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also soil (2). And see swine.

SOY, a kind of sauce. (Japanese.) 'Japan, from whence the true soy comes;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1688 (R.). And see tr. of Thunberg's Travels, vol. iv. p. 121, ed. 1795 (Todd). 'The Japanese ... prepare with them [the seeds of the Dolichos soja, a kind of bean] the sauce termed sooja, which has been corrupted into soy;' English Cyclopædia. It appears to be a Japanese word, being the name for the bean whence soy is made.

SPA, a place where there is a spring of mineral water. (Belgium.) Called spaw in Johnson's Dict., and in Bailey, ed. 1735. The name, now generally used, is taken from that of Spa, in Belgium, S.W. of Liège, where there is a mineral spring, famous even in the 17th century. 'The spaw in Germany;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent. 'Spaw, Spa, a town in Liege, famous for medicinal waters;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684.

SPACE, room, interval, distance. (F., — L.) M. E. space (dis-syllabic), Assumption of Mary, ed. Lumby, 178; Chaucer, C. T. 35. — F. espace, 'space'; Cot. — Lat. spatium, a space; lit. 'that which is drawn out.' — ✓ SPA, to draw out; cf. Gk. σπάειν, to draw, draw out, Skt. spṛáhy, to swell, increase, spṛáta, enlarged. See Span. Der. space, verb; space-i-ous, from F. spacieux (for which Cot. has 'spatieux, spacious'), from Lat. spatiosus, roomy; space-i-ous-ly, space-i-ous-ness. ¶ The prefixed e in F. espace is due to the difficulty of sounding words beginning with sp in French; in English, where there is no such difficulty, the e is dropped.

SPADE, an instrument to dig with. (E.) M. E. spade (dis-syllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 555; Ancrén Riwe, p. 384, l. 16. — A. S. spædu; 'Vanga, vel fossorium, spædu,' Wright's Voc. i. 84, col. 2;

later spade, id. 94, col. 2. Also spada, id. 16, col. 1. + Du. spade. + Icel. spadi. + Dan. and Swed. spade. + G. spate, spaten. + Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, of wood or metal, a spatula, blade of an oar, blade of a sword, spathe or sheath of a flower (whence Lat. spatha was borrowed, which further gave rise to F. épée, O. F. espee, a sword). β. All from ✓SPA, to draw out, extend; the implement being named from its broad flat surface; see SPAN. Der. spade (at cards); spaddle, the same word as paddle (2), q. v.; spat-u-la, q. v.; spad-ille, spelt spadillo in Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 49, the ace of spades at the game of quadrille, F. spadille, borrowed from Span. espadilla, a small sword, the ace of spades, dimin. of spada, a sword, from Lat. spatha = Gk. σπάθη. And see epaulet. [†]

SPALPEEN, a mean fellow. (Irish.) Sometimes introduced into novels relating to Ireland. = Irish spailpin, a mean fellow, rascal, stroller; from spail, a beau, also pride, self-conceit. + Gael. spailpean, a beau, fop, mean fellow; from spail, pride, self-conceit; cf. spail, verb, to strut, walk affectively. [†]

SPAN, to measure, extend over, grasp, embrace. (E.) M. E. spannen, very rare. 'Thenne the kinge spanes his spere' = then the king grasps his spear; Avowyn of Arthur, st. xiii. l. 1. = A. S. spannan (pt. t. spenn), to bind; gespannan, to bind, connect; Grein, ii. 467, i. 456. + O. H. G. spannan, to extend, connect, a strong verb, pt. t. spian; hence G. spannen, weak verb. Further related words appear in the Du. spannen, pt. t. spande (weak), but pp. gespannen (strong), to stretch, span, put horses to; Dan. spænde (for spænne), to stretch, strain, span, buckle; Swed. spänna, to stretch, strain, draw, extend; Icel. spenna (= spannja, a causal form), to span, clasp. β. All from the Teut. verb SPANNAN, to extend, orig. a reduplicating verb with pt. t. spespann; Fick, iii. 352. The base SPAN is extended from ✓SPA, to span, extend; whence Gk. σπάω, to draw, draw out, Lat. spat-ium, extension, space, Skt. spādy, to swell, enlarge, spāta, spāta, enlarged, &c.; Fick, i. 829. And see Spin, Space, Speed.

Der. span, sb., a space of about 9 inches, the space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger when the fingers are most extended, also, the stretch of an arch or a space of time, from A. S. span (better spanm); we find 'span, vel hand-bred' = span, or hand-breadth, in Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2; so also Du. span, Icel. spinn, Dan. spand (for spann), Swed. spänn, G. spanne. Hence span-long, Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2, l. 23 from end; span-counter, a game, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 2, 166. ¶ For span-new, see that word, which is unconnected with the present one.

SPANGLE, a small plate of shining metal. (E.) M. E. spangel, of which the sense seems to have been a lozenge-shaped spangle used to ornament a bridle; see Prompt. Parv., p. 313, note 3, and p. 467, note 1. It is the dimin. of spang, a metal fastening; with suffix -el (which is commonly French, but occasionally English, as in kernel from corn). 'Our plumes, our spangs, and al our quaint aray;' Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 377; 'With glittering spangs that did like starres appeare.' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 45. = A. S. spange, a metal clasp or fastening, Grein, ii. 467; also gespong, id. i. 456. + O. Du. spange; 'een spange van metael, a thinn peecce of mettle, or a spangle;' Hexham; 'een spange-maecker, a buckle-maker or a spangle-maker,' id. + Icel. spöng, explained by 'spangle,' though it seems rather to mean a clasp. + G. spange, a brooch, clasp, buckle, ornament.

β. Root uncertain; the sense of 'clasp' suggests that it was early regarded as connected with the verb to span, since the G. spannen has the sense of 'tie' or 'fasten;' but the E. spangle is always regarded as involving the sense of 'glittering;' cf. prov. E. spanged, variegated, spanky, showy (Halliwell). The form of the root is rather spag or spang than span, and the sense of 'glitter' appears in Lithuan. spingėti, to glitter (Schleicher), not noted by Nesselmann, who only gives the form spindėti, to shine, spindulus, sunshine. It is probable that the root is ✓SPAG, to shine, which Fick assumes to account for Gk. φέγγος; see Fick, i. 831. The Lithuan. forms spogalas, brightness, spiguls, shining, are of importance in this connection, and are cited by Fick and Vanček; but they do not appear in Nesselmann. And note Gael. spang, a spangle, anything shining or sparkling.

SPANIEL, a Spanish dog. (F.) = Span., -L.) M. E. spaniel, Chaucer, C. T. 5849; spelt spaynel in five MSS., Group D, 267; spanzeole, Wright's Voc. i. 187. = O. F. espagneul, 'a spaniel;' Cot. = Span. español, Spanish. = Span. España, Spain. = Lat. Hispania, Spain. The origin of the name of the country is unknown.

SPANK, to beat or slap. (E.) 'Spank, a hard slap; to move energetically; Spanker, a man or animal very large, or excessively active; Spanking, large, lusty, active,' &c.; Halliwell. An E. word, though not found in old authors. + Low G. spakkern, spenkern, to run and spring about quickly.

β. Both from a Teut. base SPARK, significant of quick motion or violent action. Compare the roots SPAD and SPAR, both significant of quick motion; Fick, i. 831. Der. spank-er, an after-sail in a barque.

SPAN-NEW, entirely new. (Scand.) M. E. spannewe, Havelok, 968; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1671; span-neoue, K. Alisaunder, 4055. (The term is Scand., not E.; otherwise it would have been spoon-new which is the corresponding E. form, as will appear). = Icel. spánnýr, also spánýr, span-new; compounded of spánn, a chip, shaving, made by a plane, knife, or axe; and nýr, new, cognate with E. New, q. v. Another sense of Icel. spánn is a spoon; see Spoon. + M. H. G. spánniue (E. Müller), answering to mod. G. spanneu (id.); from M. H. G. spán, G. span, a chip, splinter, and ninwe or neu, new. β. We also use the phrase spick and span new, which is also of Scand. origin; see the very numerous phrases of this character given by Rietz, who instances spik-spångende ny, completely new, answering to Swed. till splint och spån ny, with its varying forms spingspångande ny, sprittspångande ny, splittspångande ny, and 18 more of the same character. So also Du. spikspeldernieuw, lit. spick-and-spill-new; since speld is a spill or splinter. So also Swed. spillerny, lit. spill-new. So also Dan. splinterny, lit. splinter-new. The Swed. and Du. spik are forms of Spike; hence spick and span new = spike and chip new. All the terms signify fresh from the hands of the workman, fresh cut from the block, chip and splinter new; Wedgwood.

SPAR (1), a beam, bar, rafter; a general term for yards, gaffs, &c. (E.) M. E. sparre (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 992. The A. S. sb. is not found, but the word is doubtless E.; we find the derived verb sparran, to fasten with a bar, to bolt, as in 'gesparrado dure' = the door being fastened, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarne MS.). + Du. spar. + Icel. sparr, sperra. + Dan. and Swed. sparre. + O. H. G. sparro; M. H. G. sparre; G. sparren. Cf. also Gael. and Irish spar, a spar, joist, beam, rafter. β. The orig. sense seems to have been stick or pole, perhaps used by way of weapon; it is almost certainly related to Spear, q. v. For the probable root, see Spar (3). Der. spar, verb, to fasten a door, bar it, P. Plowman, B. xix. 162 (foot-note).

SPAR (2), a kind of mineral. (E.) An old prov. E. mining-term; spelt sparr in Manlove's Liberties and Customs of the Lead-mines, A. D. 1653, l. 265 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 8). = A. S. spar, found in the compound spar-stán (spar-stone); 'Creta argentea, spar-stán;' Wright's Voc. i. 37, col. 2, l. 2; 'Gipsus, sparren,' id. ii. 109 (8th cent.). Cf. G. sparkalk, plaster.

β. The true G. name is spat or spath; this is a different word, and prob. connected with G. spaten, a spade (cognate with E. Spade), from the flaky nature of spar. The sense of the A. S. spar-stán may be 'bar-stone,' from its crystallisation; if so, spar (2) is really the same word as spar (1). See Spar (1). Der. sparr-y.

SPAR (3), to box with the hands, dispute, wrangle. (F.) = Teut. 'To sparre, as cocks do, configere;' Levinus (1570). It was thus a term in cock-fighting, and orig. used of striking with the spurs, as cocks do. Many terms of the chase and sports are F., and this is one of them. = O. F. esparer, 'to fling or jerk out with the heels, as a horse in high manage;' Cot. Mod. F. éparer, little used (Littré); which Littré connects with Ital. sparare, of which one sense is 'to kick;' but this must be a different word from Ital. sparare (= Lat. exparare), to unfurnish, to let off a gun.

β. I suppose O. F. esparer to be of Teut. origin; from Low G. sparre, sb., a struggling, striving, Bremen Wörterbuch, iv. 945. Cf. G. sich sperren, to struggle against, resist, oppose; which Fick refers to the widely spread ✓SPAR, to tremble, quiver, throb, vibrate, jerk, used of rapid jerking action. From this root are Skt. spṛur, to throb, to struggle; Gk. σπαίρειν (= σπάειν), ἀσπαίρειν, to struggle convulsively, and prob. Lat. spernere, to despise, as well as E. Spur, Spurn, Spear, Sprawl, and even (by loss of initial s) the words Palestra, Palpable, Palpitate, and perhaps Poplar. The cognate Lithuan. word is spirti, to stamp, kick, strike out with the feet, resist, which exactly brings out the sense; so also E. spurn. The Russ. sporite, to quarrel, wrangle, spor, a dispute, bear a striking resemblance to the E. word. See Curtius, i. 358; Fick, i. 831. Der. spar-er, sparr-ing. And see spar (1), spar (2), sparre, sparre, spur, spurn. ¶ Mahn refers us to A. S. spyrian, but this means 'to track out,' Lowland Scotch speir, and is related to spur; the root is the same.

SPARE, frugal, scanty, lean. (E.) M. E. spar (rare); 'vpon spar wyse' = in a sparing manner, temperately; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 901. = A. S. spar, spare, sparing; found in the compounds spar-hynde, sparing, spar-lic, frugal, sparnis, frugality, all in various glosses (Leo); the derived verb sparian, to spare, is not uncommon; Grein, ii. 467. + Icel. sparr, sparing. + Dan. spar in sparsom, thrifty. + Swed. spar in sparsam. + G. spär in spärllich. + Gk. σπαρβός, rare, lacking. And cf. Lat. parum, little, parcus, sparing, parcere, to spare; which have lost initial s.

β. The orig. sense seems to have been scanty, or thinly scattered; from ✓SPAR, to scatter, whence Gk. σπαίρειν, to scatter, to sow, G. spreu, chaff; and this is only a particular sense of the wide spread ✓SPAR, to quiver; see Spar (3). See Curtius, i. 358; Fick, iii. 354. Der. sparre, verb, M. E. sparren, Chaucer, C. T. 6919, from A. S. sparian (Grein), as above; cognate with Du. and G. sparen, Icel. and Swed. spara, Dan. spare, and allied to Lat. parcere. Also spare-ness, spare-rib; spar-ing, spar-ing-ly.

SPARK (1), a small particle of fire. (E.) M.E. spärke, Havelok, 91.—A.S. spearca, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. c. 12; cap. xxxv. § 5. (Here spearca stands for an older sparca *.) + O. Du. sparke (Hexham). + Low G. sparke; Brem. Wört. β. So called from the crackling of a fire-brand, which throws out sparks; Icel. spraka, Dan. sprage, to crackle. The Teut. base SPRAK corresponds to Aryan ✓SPARG, to make a noise, crackle, burst with a noise, appearing in Lithuan. spragiti, to crackle like burning fir-wood, Gk. σπάραγος, a cracking, crackling, Skt. spṛurj, to thunder. This ✓SPARG is an extension of ✓SPAR, to quiver; cf. Skt. spṛur, to quiver, with Skt. spṛurj, to thunder. See Speak, and Spark (2). Der. spark-le, a little spark, with dimin. suffix -le for -el (cf. kern-el from corn), M.E. sparle, Chaucer, C. T. 13833; also spark-le, verb, M.E. sparklen, C. T. 2166. [†]

SPARK (2), a gay young fellow. (Scand.) In Shak. ii. 1. 25. The same word as Wiltsh. sprack, lively. M.E. sparklich, adv., also spelt sprackliche; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 10, and footnote.—Icel. språkri, lively, sprightly, also spelt sprækri, by the shifting of the r so common in E. and Scand. Hence Icel. sprækligri, which = M.E. sprackliche, adj. + Swed. dial. språker, språk, språg, cheerful, talkative (Rietz); Norweg. språk, ardent, cheerful, lively (Aasen). β. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'talkative,' or 'noisy,' from Teut. base SPRAK, to make a noise, also to speak; see Speak, and Spark (1). ¶ The prov. E. sprack is pronounced sprag by Sir Hugh, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 84.

SPARROW, a small well-known bird. (E.) M.E. sparwe, Chaucer, C. T. 628; sparwe, Wyclif, Matt. x. 29.—A.S. spearwa (for sparwa), Matt. x. 29. + Icel. sparv (rare). + Dan. sparv. + Swed. sparf. + O. H. G. sparo (gen. sparwa), also sparwe; M. H. G. spar; whence G. sper-ling, a sparrow, with double dimin. suffix -ling. + Goth. sparwa. β. All from Teut. type SPARWA, a sparrow; lit. 'a flutterer;' from ✓SPAR, to quiver, hence, to flutter; see Spar (3). This is shewn by comparing Lithuan. sparwa, a gad-fly (from its fluttering); and Lithuan. sparnas, a bird's wing, a fish's fin, the leaf of a folding door (from the movement to and fro). Der. sparrow-hawk, M.E. sperhauke, P. Plowman, B. vi. 199. A.S. spearhafoc, Wright's Voc. i. 62, col. 1, short for spearwahafoc *, as shewn by the cognate words, viz. Icel. sparrhaukr (where sparr is the stem of sparv), Swed. sparfhök (from sparf), Dan. sparvehög (from sparv), O. H. G. sparuári (=sparrow-er), in mod. G. corrupted to sperber.

SPARSE, thinly scattered. (L.) Modern; yet the verb sparse, to scatter, occurs as early as 1536 (see Todd); and Spenser has 'spersed aire,' F. Q. i. 1. 39.—Lat. sparsus (for sparg-sus); pp. of spargere, to scatter, sprinkle.—✓SPARK, to sprinkle; cf. Skt. spṛig, to sprinkle; an extension of ✓SPAR, to scatter (Gk. σπειρεν). See Spare, Sprinkle. Der. sparse-ly, -ness. Also a-sperse, di-sperse, inter-sperse.

SPASM, a convulsive movement. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Those who have their necks drawne backward . . . with the spasme;' Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 5; ed. 1634, ii. 41 d.—F. spasme, 'the cramp;' Cot.—Lat. spasmus, acc. of spasmus.—Gk. σπασμός, a spasm, convulsion.—Gk. σπάειν, to draw, pluck.—✓SPA, to draw, extend; see Span, Spin. Der. spasm-od-ic, formed with suffix -ic from Gk. adj. σπασμωδής, convulsive; spasm-od-ic-al, spasm-od-ic-al-ly.

SPAT, the young of shell-fish. (E.) In Webster. Formed from spat, the pt. t. of spit; see Spatter. And compare Spot.

SPATE, a river-flood. (C.) 'While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate;' Burns, Brigs of Ayr. And see Jamieson. From the Gaelic, but not given in Macleod and Dewar; the corresponding Irish word is speid, a great river-flood.

SPATTER, to besprinkle, spit or throw out upon. (E.) 1. 'Which th' offended taste With spattering noise rejected;' Milton, P. L. x. 567. Here Milton uses it for sputter, the frequentative of Spit (2), q. v. 2. The usual sense is to be spotted, and it is a frequentative form, with suffix -er, formed from Spot, q. v. An equivalent word is M.E. spatlen (Stratmann), whence the sb. spotlunge, spitting, Ancren Riwle, p. 188, l. 10. Cf. A.S. spátl, spittle, John, ix. 6, spelt spotil in Wyclif.

SPATULA, a broad-bladed knife for spreading plasters. (L.,—Gk.) Spelt spatule in Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 7 [not 17], l. 24 from the end. This is F. spatule, as in Cot.—Lat. spatula, also spatula; dimin. of spatha, an instrument with a broad blade.—Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, a spatula, a paddle; cognate with E. Spade, q. v.

SPAVIN, a swelling near the joints of horses, producing lameness. (F.,—Teut.) In Shak. Hen. VIII. i. 3. 12. M.E. spaveyne, 'horsys maledy;' Prompt. Parv.—O. F. esparvain, 'a spavin in the leg of a horse,' Cot. Cf. O. Ital. spavano, 'a spavin,' Florio; Ital.

spavenio; Span. esparavan (1) spavin, (2) a sparrow-hawk; Port. esparavão, mod. F. éparvin.

β. A comparison of the forms (of which O. Ital. spavano is put for sparvano) shews that they answer to a Low Lat. type sparavanus * or sparvanus *, parallel to Low Lat. sparaverius, sparvarius, a sparrow-hawk (F. éparvier). And just as sparvarius is formed with suffix -arius from O. H. G. sparwe, a sparrow (or is Latinised from O. H. G. sparuári, a sparrow-hawk, which comes to the same thing), so Low Lat. sparvanus * is formed with suffix -anus from the same word. The lit. sense is, accordingly, 'sparrow-like,' from the hopping or bird-like motion of a horse afflicted with spavin. The O. H. G. sparwe is cognate with E. Sparrow, q. v. ¶ Ménage, who is followed by Diez and Littré, gives much the same explanation, but says that the disease is named from the sparrow-hawk (not the sparrow) because the horse lifts up his legs after the manner of sparrow-hawks. It is obvious that the sparrow is at least ten times more likely than the sparrow-hawk to be the subject of a simile, and it is also clear, by philology, that the Span. esparavan only means a sparrow-hawk because it first meant 'of or belonging to sparrows,' and hence 'sparrow-hunting,' exactly as in the parallel word sparvarius, which is formed in a similar way from the same word. When this correction is applied, I think the etymology may be accepted. The O. Du. spat, G. spath, also means cramp, convulsion, spavin; but cannot well be a related word, unless it be a corruption.

SPAW, the same as Spa, q. v.

SPAWN, the eggs of fish or frogs. (F.,—L.) 'Your multiplying spawn;' Cor. ii. 2. 82. 'Spawn of a fysshe;' Palsgrave. The verb occurs in Prompt. Parv., p. 467: 'Spawyn, spawyn, as fischys, Pisciculus.' Etym. uncertain. If we may take M. E. spanen, to spawn, as the oldest form, it is probable that (as Wedgwood suggests) the etymology may be from O. F. espandre, 'to shed, spill, pour out, to spread, cast, or scatter abroad in great abundance;' Cot. So also Ital. spandere, to spill, shed, scatter. The sense suits exactly, and the loss of the d may be accounted for by supposing that M. E. spanen was rather taken from the equivalent O. F. espanir, 'to blow, or spread as a blooming rose, or any other flower in the height of its flourishing' (= mod. F. épanouir); which, notwithstanding the difference of form and sense, is nothing but another form of the same word. The word spannishing, to express the full blooming of a rose, actually occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 3633.

β. If this be right, the etymology is from Lat. expandere, to spread out, hence, to shed abroad; see Expand. ¶ The suggestion of Mahn, that the word is related to A. S. spanu, a teat, udder, is unsatisfactory. Der. spawn-er. [†]

SPEAK, to utter words, say, talk. (E.) This word has lost an r, and stands for speak. We can date the loss of the r at about A. D. 1100. The MSS. of the A. S. Gospels have sometimes sprecan and sometimes specan, so that the letter was frequently dropped as early as the 11th century, but it appears occasionally in the latest of them; the same is true for the sb. spræc or spæc, mod. E. speech (for spreech); see John, iv. 26, &c. M.E. speken, pt. t. spak, pp. spoken, spoke; Chaucer, C. T. 792, 914, 31.—A. S. sprecan (later specan), pt. t. spræc (later spæc), pp. spreccan; Grein, ii. 472.—Du. sprecken. + O. H. G. sprekhan; G. sprechen, pt. t. sprach. β. All from Teut. base SPRAK, to speak, of which the orig. sense was merely to make a noise, crackle, cry out, as in Icel. spraka, Dan. sprage, to crackle, Dan. sprække, to crack, burst; see Spark (1).—✓SPARG, to make a noise; as in Lithuan. spragiti, to crackle, rattle, Gk. σπάραγος, a cracking, crackling, Skt. spṛurj, to thunder. Cf. Lowland Sc. crack, a talk. Der. speak-er; speak-er-ship; speech, q. v.; spokes-man, q. v.

SPEAR, a long weapon, spiked pole, lance. (E.) M.E. sper (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 2551.—A. S. sper, John, xix. 34.—Du. speer. + Icel. spjör. + Dan. spar. + G. speer; O. H. G. sper. + Lat. sparus, a small missile weapon, dart, hunting-spear. β. All from an Aryan form SPARA, a dart, spear (Fick, i. 832); probably from ✓SPAR, to quiver, and closely related to E. spar, a beam, pole, rod. See Spar (1) and Spar (3). Der. spear-man, Acts, xxiii. 23; spear-grass, i. Hen. IV. ii. 4. 340; spear-mint; spear-wort, A. S. sperewyrt, A. S. Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. iii.

SPECIES, a group of individuals having common characteristics, subordinate to a genus, a kind. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; the M. E. form was spice (see Spice).—Lat. species, a look, appearance, kind, sort.—Lat. specere, to look, see; see Spy. Der. speci-al, q. v. Also specie, money in gold or silver, a remarkable form, evolved as sing. sb. from the old word species = 'money paid by tale,' as in Phillips, ed. 1706; probably by confusion with the Lat. ablative specie, as if paid in specie = paid in visible coin. Also speci-fy, q. v., speci-men, q. v., speci-ous, q. v. Also especi-al (doublet of special); fronti-spice, q. v. Doublet, spice.

SPECIFY, to particularise. (F., -L.) M. E. specifien, Gower, C. A. i. 33, l. 2. - O. F. specifier, 'to specify, particularize'; Cot. - Lat. *specificare, only found in the pp. specificatus, to specify. - Lat. adj. specificus, specific, particular. - Lat. speci-, for species, a kind; and -ficus, i. e. making, from Lat. facere, to make; see Species and Fact. ¶ It thus appears that specific is a more orig. word, but specify is much the older word in English. Der. specific, O. F. specificque, 'special', Cot., from Lat. specificus, special, as above; specific-al, specific-al-ly, specific-at-ion. And hence specify, verb (as above).

SPECIMEN, a pattern, model. (L.) 'Specimen, an example, proof, trial, or pattern'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. specimen, an example, something shewn by way of sample. - Lat. speci-, for specere, to see; with suffix -men (= Aryan -ma-na, Schleicher, Compend. § 219). See SpY.

SPECIOUS, showy, plausible. (F., -L.) M. E. specious, slightly, beautiful; see Trench, Select Glossary. - O. F. specieux, 'specious, goodly, fair'; Cot. - Lat. speciosus, fair to see. - Lat. speci-, for specere, to behold; with suffix -osus; see SpY. Der. specious-ly, -ness.

SPECK, a small spot, blemish. (E.) Specke in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Spekke, clowte, Pictacium,' i. e. a patch; Prompt. Parv. - A. S. specca, a spot, mark, pl. speccan; 'Notæ, speccan,' Wright's Voc. ii. 60, col. 1. Cf. Low G. spaken, to spot with wet, spakig, spotted with wet; Brem. Wört. iv. 931; O. Du. spickelen, 'to speckle, or to spott'; Hexham. β. The O. Du. spickelen is obviously the frequentative of O. Du. spicken, to spit, and Wedgwood's suggestion that 'the origin lies in the figure of spattering with wet' is prob. correct. Cf. G. spucken, to spit. Thus speck is 'that which spots,' a blot; from Teut. base SPAK, to spit, to which speck is related precisely as spot is to spit; so also speckle is to be compared with spatter. All evidently from the same ultimate root. See Spew.

Der. speck, verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 429. Also speck-le, a little spot, dimin. form, Spenser, tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 250; cf. Du. spikkel, a speckle. Hence speckle, verb.

SPECTACLE, a sight, show. (F., -L.) M. E. spectacle, Wyclif, 1 Cor. iv. 9. - F. spectacle, 'a spectacle'; Cot. - Lat. spectaculum, a show. Formed with suffixes -culu (= Aryan -ka-ra, Schleicher, Compend. §§ 231, 220), from Lat. specta-re, to see. - Lat. spectrum, supine of specere, to see; see SpY. Der. spectacles, pl. glasses for assisting the sight, pl. of M. E. spectacle, a glass through which to view objects, Chaucer, C. T. 6785; hence spectacl-ed, Cor. ii. 1. 222. And see spectator, spectre, speculate.

SPECTATOR, a beholder. (L.; or F., -L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 46; spelt spectatour, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 27. [Perhaps from F. spectateur, 'a spectator'; Cot.] - Lat. spectator, a beholder; formed with suffix -tor (Aryan -tar) from specta-re, to behold. - Lat. spectrum, supine of specere, to see; see Spectacle, SpY.

SPECTRE, a ghost. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 430. - F. spectre, 'an image, figure, ghost'; Cot. - Lat. spectrum, a vision. Formed with suffix -trum (Aryan -tar, Schleicher, Compend. § 225) from specere, to see; see Spectacle, SpY. Der. spectr-al. Doublet, spectrum, a mod. scientific term, directly from Lat. spectrum.

SPECULAR, suitable for seeing, having a smooth reflecting surface. (L.) 'This specular mount'; Milton, P. R. iv. 236. - Lat. specularis, belonging to a mirror. - Lat. speculum, a mirror. - Lat. specere, to see; see SpY. ¶ Milton's use of the word is due to Lat. specula, fem. sb., a watch-tower, a closely allied word. Der. specul-ate, from Lat. speculatus, pp. of speculari, to behold, from specula, a watch-tower; hence specul-at-ion, Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. speculation, 'speculation,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. speculationem; specul-at-or = Lat. speculator; specul-at-ive, Minshew, from Lat. speculatiuus. We also use specul-um = Lat. speculum, a mirror.

SPEECH, talk, language. (E.) M. E. speche (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 8729, 13851. Put for spreche, by loss of r. - A. S. spæc, later form of spræc, Grein, ii. 471. - A. S. sprecan, to speak; see Speak + Du. spraak; from spreken + G. sprache; from sprechen. Der. speech-less, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 164; speech-less-ly, -ness.

SPEED, success, velocity. (E.) The old sense is 'success' or 'help.' M. E. sped (with long e); 'iuel sped' = evil speed, ill success, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 310. - A. S. spéd, haste, success; Grein, ii. 467. Here é is due to ó, by the usual change, (as in foot, A. S. fót, pl. fēt, A. S. fēt), and spéd stands for *spódi. + O. Sax. spód, success (Heliand). + Du. spoed, speed. + O. H. G. spuot, spót, success. β. All from Teut. type SPÓDI, speed, success (Fick, iii. 355). Here the -di is a suffix, answering to Aryan -ti (Schleicher, Compend. § 226), and the cognate Skt. word is spṛiti, increase, prosperity, put for spháy-ti, from spháy, to increase, enlarge; Benfey, p. 1087.

γ. The A. S. spéd is, similarly, from the strong verb spówan, to succeed, Grein, ii. 471; and the O. H. G. spuot is allied to the verb spuon, to succeed, an irregular weak verb.

δ. All from ✓ SPA, to draw out, extend, hence to have room, succeed; appearing in numerous derivatives, such as Skt. spháy, to increase, Lat. spatium, room, spes, hope, prosper, prosperous, Lithuan. spetas, leisure, opportunity, &c. See Span. Fick, i. 829. Der. speed, verb, A. S. spédan, weak verb, pt. t. spédde, Grein, ii. 468; speed-y, A. S. spédig, id.; speed-i-ly, speed-i-ness.

SPEIR, to ask. (E.) See Spur.

SPELICANS, a game played with thin slips of wood. (Du.) Imported from Holland, which is famous for toys. Englished from O. Du. spelleken, a small pin (Hexham); formed with the O. Du. dimin. suffix -ken (= G. -chen, E. -kin) from O. Du. spelle, a pin, splinter of wood, cognate with E. Spell (4), q. v.

SPELL (1), a form of magic words, incantation. (E.) M. E. spel, dat. spelle, Chaucer, C. T. 13821. - A. S. spel, spell, a saying, story, narrative; Grein, ii. 469. + Icel. spjall, a saying. + O. H. G. spel, a narrative. + Goth. spill, a fable, tale, myth. β. All from Teut. type SPELLA, a tale, narrative, saying; Fick, iii. 355. Root unknown. Der. spell (2), q. v.; go-spel, q. v. [†]

SPELL (2), to tell the names of the letters of a word. (E.) M. E. Spellen; 'Spellyn letters, Sillabico; Spellynge, Sillabacacio; Spellare [speller], Sillabicator'; Prompt. Parv. 'Lere hem litum and litlum . . . Tyl þei couthe speke and spelle,' &c. = teach them by little and little till they could pronounce and spell; P. Plowman, B. xv. 599, 600. - A. S. spellan, to declare, relate, tell, speak, discourse; Grein, ii. 469; and see examples in Bosworth. - A. S. spel, spell, a discourse, story; see Spell (1). ¶ 1. Cotgrave has O. F. espeler, 'to spell, to speale, to join letters or syllables together'; but this is not the origin of the E. word, being itself derived from Teutonic; cf. Du. spellen, to spell, M. H. G. spellen, to relate, Goth. spillon, to narrate, all cognate with the E. word. 2. The orig. sense was 'to say' or 'tell' the letters; but it would seem that the word was sooner or later confused with the old and prov. E. spell, in the sense of a splinter of wood, as though to spell were to point out letters with a splinter of wood. Thus Palsgrave has 'festue to spell with'; where festue is F. festu, 'a straw, rush, little stalk or stick' (Cot.), from Lat. festuca; and Halliwell cites from a Dict. written about A. D. 1500 the entry 'To speldyr, Sillabicare,' agreeing with the form 'spelder of woode' in Palsgrave; indeed, speldren, to spell, occurs in the Ormulum, 16347, 16440. So even in Hexham's O. Du. Dict. we have 'spelle, a pin,' with a striking resemblance to 'spellen, to spell letters or words.' Nevertheless, this resemblance, brought about by long association, is due to the assimilation of the word for 'splinter' to the verb rather than the contrary; see Spell (4). See spellen in Stratmann's O. Eng. Dict. Der. spell-er, spell-ing, spell-ing-book. [†]

SPELL (3), a turn of work. (E.) 'To Do a Spell, in sea-language, signifies to do any work by turns, for a short time, and then leave it. A fresh spell, is when fresh men come to work, esp. when the rowers are relieved with another gang; to give a spell, is to be ready to work in such a one's room'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Not found in M. E., but it is almost certainly due to A. S. spelian, to supply another's room, to act or be proxy for (Bosworth). Whelock, in his edition of Ælfred's tr. of Bede, p. 151, quotes the following sentence from a homily: 'Se cyning is Cristes sylfes spelgend' = the king supplies the place of Christ himself. So also the following: 'Næs ðæð Isaac ofslagen, ac se ramm hine spelode' = Isaac, however, was not slain himself, but the ram supplied his place, or took his spell; Ælfric's Hom. ed. Thorpe, ii. 62. β. The A. S. spelian is doubtless the same word as Du. spelen, Icel. spila, Dan. spille, Swed. spela, G. spielen, to play, act a part: all of these being denominative verbs, formed from the sb. which appears as Swed. and Du. spel, Icel. and Dan. spil, G. spiel, O. H. G. spil, a game. All from a base SPILL; root unknown.

SPELL (4), SPILL, a thin slip of wood, splinter; a slip of paper for lighting candles. (E.) This word has been assimilated to the verb to spell, from the use of a slip of wood, in schools of the olden times, to point out letters in a book. See remarks on Spell (2). The true form is rather speld. M. E. speld, a splinter; pl. speldes, splinters of a broken spear, Will. of Palerne, 3392; hence the dimin. spelder, a splinter (Palsgrave), spelt spildur, Avowynge of Arthur, xiii. 6. - A. S. speld, a torch, spill to light a candle with, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. speld, a pin; spil, the pin of a bobbin, spindle, axis. + Icel. speld, speldi, a square tablet, orig. a thin slice of board; spilda, a flake, a slice. + Goth. spilda, a writing-tablet. + M. H. G. spelte, a splinter. β. All from the Teut. type SPELDA, a splinter, slice, tablet; Fick, iii. 354; and this from the Teut. base SPALD, to cleave, split, appearing in Icel. spilla (for *spilda, *speldja) to destroy, G. spalten, to cleave. Cf. Shetland speld, to split (Edmonds-ton). See Spill (2). Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is split off,' a flake, slice, &c. Der. spelicans, q. v. Doublet.

SPILL (1).

SPELT, a kind of corn. (E.) Called 'spelt come' in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in M.E. — A.S. spelt. 'Faar [i.e. Lat. far], spelt; Wright's Voc. i. 287, col. 1. + Du. spelt. + G. spelz, spelt. β. Cf. G. spelze, chaff, shell, beard of ear of corn. Levins, ed. 1570, has: 'To spelt come, tundere, eglumare,' i.e. to thresh corn, remove the chaff; which suggests a connection with the verb to split. See Split, Spelt (4). And cf. spelt, a splinter (Halliwell).

SPELTER, pewter, zinc. (E.?) 'Spelter, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zinc;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. I cannot find an early example of the word; whether it is E. or not is uncertain; but it is prob. Teutonic, in any case, and occurs again in Low G. spialter, pewter, Bremen Wörterbuch; Du. spialuter. It is obviously the original of Ital. peltro, pewter, and an older form of pewter, so that it must be as old as the 14th century. Perhaps it is a variant of M.E. spelder, a splinter (Palsgrave), and refers to pieces of mixed metal. See Spelt (4). Pewter.

SPENCER, a short over-jacket. (F., — L.) Much worn about A.D. 1815; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. x. 356. 'Two noble earls, whom, if I quote, Some folks might call me sinner, The one invented half a coat, The other half a dinner;' Epigram quoted in Taylor, Words and Places. The reference is to Earl Spencer and Earl Sandwich. It thus appears that the spencer was named after the celebrated Earl Spencer, viz. John Charles Spencer, third earl, born 1782, died 1845. See further under Spend.

SPEND, to lay out (money), consume, waste. (L.) M.E. spenden, Chaucer, C. T. 302. — A.S. spendan; occurring in the compounds d-spendan and for-spendan; see examples in Sweet's A.S. Reader. Not an A.S. word, but merely borrowed from Low Lat. dispendere, to spend, waste, consume. Cf. Low Lat. dispendium, dispensa, expense, of which the shorter forms spendium, spensa are also found. We also find Low Lat. spendibilis moneta, spending money, i.e. money for current expenses, occurring as early as A.D. 922 (Ducange). So also Ital. spendere, to spend, spendio, expense, where spendio = Lat. dispendium. Observe also O.F. despendre, 'to dispend, spend, expend, disburse,' Cot.; despenser, 'to dispend, spend,' id.; despensier, 'a spender, also a cater [caterer], or clark of a kitchen,' id. β. In exactly the same way, the O.F. despensier became M.E. spencere or spensere, explained by cellerarius in the Prompt. Parv., and now preserved in the proper name Spencer or Spenser, formerly Despenser. Hence even the buttery or cellar was called a spence, as being under the control of this officer; 'Spence, botery, or celere,' Prompt. Parv. γ. The Lat. dispendere is compounded of dis-, apart, and pendere, to weigh; see Dis- and Pendant. ¶ The etymology sometimes given, from Lat. expendere, is certainly wrong; the s represents dis-, not ex-; precisely the same loss occurs in sport for disport. Der. spend-er; spend-thrift, i.e. one who spends what has been accumulated by thrift, Temp. ii. 1. 24.

SPERM, animal seed, spawn, spermaceti. (F., — L., — Gk.) M.E. sperme, Chaucer, C. T. 14015. — F. sperme, 'sperm, seed;' Cot. — Lat. sperma. — Gk. σπέρμα, seed. — Gk. σπερμαίνω (= σπερ-μαίνω), to sow; orig. to scatter with a quick motion of the hand. — ✓ SPAR, to quiver; see Spar (3) and Sparsæ. Der. spermat-ic, Gk. σπερματ-ικός, from σπερματ-, stem of σπέρμα; spermat-ic-al. Also sperm-oil, sperm-whale; spermaceti, spelt parmaceti in i Hen. IV. i. 3. 58, from Lat. sperma ceti, sperm of the whale, where ceti is the gen. case of cetus = Gk. κῆτος, a large fish; see Cetaceous. And see spor-ad-ic, sphere.

SPEW, SPOUE, to vomit. (E.) M.E. spewen, P. Plowman, B. x. 40. — A.S. splūwan, strong verb, pt. t. splāw, pp. splūwen; Grein, ii. 470. + Du. spuuen (Sewel). + Icel. spýja. + Dan. spye. + Swed. spy. + O.H.G. splūwan; G. speien. + Goth. splūwan. + Lat. spuere. + Lithuan. spjauti. + Gk. πρῆναι (for σπῆναι). β. All from ✓ SPU, to spit forth; Fick, i. 835. Expressive of the sound of spitting out; cf. Skt. skṭiv, skṭiv, to spit, similarly intended. Der. (from same root), tip (1), puke (1). And see spit.

SPHERE, a globe, orb, circuit of motion, province or duty. (F., — L., — Gk.) M.E. sphere, Chaucer, C. T. 11592, 11595. Later sphere, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 56. — O.F. esphere, a sphere (Litttré); later sphere, 'a sphere;' Cot. — Lat. sphæra. — Gk. σφαῖρα, a ball, globe. β. Gk. σφαῖρα = σφαρ-α = σπαρ-α, 'that which is tossed or thrown about;' cf. σπερμαίνω, to scatter seed, throw or toss about. See Sparsæ. Der. spher-ic, Gk. σφαιρικός, like a sphere; spher-ic-al, spher-ic-al-ly, spher-ic-i-ty; spher-o-id, that which is like a sphere, from σφαῖρα, for σφαῖρος, round, and εἶδος, form, shape, appearance (from ✓ WID, to see). Hence spheroid-al.

SPHINX, a monster with a woman's head and the body of a lioness, who destroyed travellers that could not solve her riddles. (L., — Gk.) 'Subtle as Sphinx;' L. L. L. iv. 3. 342. Spelt Spinx by Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i. — Lat. sphinx (gen. sphingis). — Gk. σφίγξ (gen. σφίγγος), lit. 'the strangler,' because she strangled the travellers who could not solve her riddles. Though the name is Greek, the legend is Egyptian; Herodotus, ii. 175, iv. 79. — Gk. σφίγγειν, to throttle, strangle, orig. to bind, compress, fix; cognate with Lat. figere, to fix, according to Curtius, i. 229. According to Vaniček, it is allied to Lat. fascis, a bundle.

SPICE, an aromatic vegetable for seasoning food, a small quantity or sample. (F., — L.) A doublet of species. 'Spice, the earlier form in which we made the word our own, is now limited to certain aromatic drugs, which, as consisting of various kinds, have this name of spices. But spice was once employed as species is now;' Trench, Select Glossary, q. v. M.E. spice. 'Absteyne you fro al yuel spice,' Wyclif, 1 Thess. v. 22; where the Vulgate has 'ab omni specie malā.' In early use. 'Hope is a swete spice;' Ancræn Riwle, p. 78, last line. — O.F. espice, spice; Cot. — Lat. speciem, acc. of species, a kind, species; in late Latin, a spice, drug; see Species. Der. spice, verb; spiced, Chaucer, C. T. 528; spicer, an old word for spice-seller, answering to the mod. grocer, P. Plowman, B. ii. 225; spicer-y, from O.F. espicerie, 'a spicery, also spices,' Cot.; spic-y, spic-i-ly, spic-i-ness.

SPICK AND SPAN-NEW, quite new. (Scand.) In North's Plutarch, p. 213 (R.); Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 4, let. 2 (Jan. 20, 1624). Lit. 'spike and spoon new,' where spike means a point, and spoon a chip; new as a spike or nail just made and a chip just cut off. See further under Span-new. And see Spike and Spoon.

SPIDER, an insect that spins webs. (E.) M.E. spither, spelt spilre, Avenbite of Inwytt, p. 164, l. 6 from bottom. Not found in A.S., but easily explained; the long i is due to loss of n before the following th, and spider (spither) is for *spin-ther. This loss of n before a dental letter is a peculiarity of A.S., and occurs in A.S. tōð for *tonð, a tooth, A.S. ōðer for *onðer = *anðar, other. The suffix -ther (= Aryan -tar) denotes the agent; so that spider = *spin-ther, the spinner; from the verb to spin; see Spin. Cf. prov. E. spinner, a spider. + Du. spin, a spider. + Dan. spinder (for spinner), a spider; from spinde (for spinne), to spin. + Swed. spinnel, a spider; from spinna, to spin. + G. spinne, a spider, spinner.

SPIGOT, a pointed piece of wood for stopping a small hole in a cask. (C., — L.) M.E. spigot, Wyclif, Job, xxxi. 19. Of Celtic origin. — Irish and Gael. spioicad, a spigot; dimin. of Irish spice, a spike, long nail. Cf. W. pigoden, a prick; from pig, a point, peak, pike, spike; ysbigod, a spigot, ysbig, a spike (though the latter are borrowed words, having the y prefixed on account of the difficulty of pronouncing initial sp in Welsh). All from Lat. spica; see Spike.

SPIKE, a sharp point, large nail, an ear of corn. (L.) M.E. spik, an ear of corn; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 120. Somner gives an A.S. spleing, a large nail; but it is doubtful. In any case the word was borrowed (perhaps early) directly from Lat. spica, an ear of corn, also, a point, a pike. Evidently allied to spina, a thorn, and from the same root. With loss of initial s, we have Irish pic, Gael. pic, W. pig, a peak, pike, with numerous derivatives in English; see Pike. β. We also find Du. spijker, a nail, Icel. spik, Swed. spik, Dan. spiger, G. spieker; but all are due (as shewn by their close resemblance) to the same Lat. spica, a word easily spread from its use both in agriculture and military affairs. Der. spike-nard, q. v.; spigot, q. v.; spik-y; spike, verb; spik-ed.

SPIKENARD, an aromatic oil or balsam. (Hybrid; L. and F., — L., — Gk., — Pers., — Skt.) 'Precious oynement spikenard;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 3; where the Vulgate has 'alabastrum unguenti nardi spicati pretiosi.' Thus spike-nard should rather be spiked nard; it signifies nard furnished with spikes, in allusion to the mode of growth. 'The head of Nardus spreads into certain spikes or eares, whereby it hath a twofold vse, both of spike and also of leaf; in which regard it is so famous;' Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xii. c. 12 (in Holland's translation). The word nard is French, from a Skt. original; see Nard. The Lat. spicatus, furnished with spikes, is derived from spica, a spike, ear of corn; see Spike.

SPILL (1), a splinter, thin slip of wood. (E.) 'Spills, thin slips of wood or paper, used for lighting candles;' Halliwell. M.E. spille. Stratmann cites from the Life of Becket, ed. W. H. Black, 1845, l. 850: 'hit nis noȝt worȝ a spille' — it is not worth a splinter or chip. The same word as Spelt (4), q. v. See also Spill (2).

SPILL (2), to destroy, mar, shed. (E.) Often explained by 'spoil,' with which it has no etymological connection. It stands for spild, the ld having passed into ll by assimilation. M.E. spillen, commonly in the sense to destroy or mar; also, intransitively, to perish; see Chaucer, C. T. 6480, 5235, &c.; Hamlet, iv. 5. 20. In mod. E., only to shed, pour out, effuse. — A.S. spildan, and (by assimilation) spillan, to destroy; Grein, ii. 470. Hence the compound for-spildan, to destroy utterly; Grein. — A.S. spild, destruction; id. β. The orig. sense of spild was 'a splitting,' cleaving, or hewing in pieces; from the Teutonic base SPALD (G. spalten), to cleave, split. See Spell (4) and Split. Also Spill (1). Der. spill-er; & split-th (= A. S. spild), Timon, ii. 2. 169.

SPIN, to draw out into threads, cause to whirl rapidly. (E.) The second sense comes from the rapid motion of the spinning-wheel. The former sense is original. M. E. spinnen, strong verb, pt. t. span, pp. sponnen; P. Plowman, B. v. 216. — A. S. spinnan, pt. t. spann, pp. spunnen; Matt. vi. 28. + Du. spinnen, + Icel. and Swed. spinna. + Dan. spinde (for spinne). + G. spinnen. + Goth. spinnan (pt. t. spann). β. All from Teut. base SPAN, to draw out; extended from SPA, to draw out, as in Gk. σπινδεν. See Span, a closely related word. Fick, iii. 830. Der. spinn-er; spinn-ing; spin-dle, q. v.; spin-ster, q. v.; spi-der, q. v.

SPINACH, SPINAGE, an esculent vegetable. (Ital. = L.) Spinage is a weakened form of spinach, as it was formerly written. Spelt spinache in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Spynnage, an herbe, espinars,' Palsgrave. The spelling spinach is due to the sound of Ital. spinace, where ce is pronounced as E. chai in chain. — Ital. spinace, 'the hearbe spinage'; Florio. He also gives the form spinacchia. Cf. mod. F. épinard (with excrement d), O. F. espinars, espinar (Cotgrave); Span. espinaca; Port. espinafre; G. spinat. β. All said to be derivatives of Lat. spina, a thorn, a prick; because 'the fruit is a small round nut, which is sometimes very prickly.' Eng. Cyclopædia. The Ital. and Span. forms are due to a Lat. adj. *spinaceus, prickly, formed from spina, a thorn; the F. seems to answer to a Lat. adj. *spinarius; the G. spinat = Lat. *spinatus; and perhaps the Port. espinafre = Lat. spinifer, prickly. Perhaps the Ital. spinace is from Ital. spina, a thorn; F. épinard, from F. épine; Span. espinaca, from Span. espina; and Port. espinafre from Port. espinha, espinha. See Spine. But see Addenda. [*]

SPINDLE, the pin or stick from which a thread is spun. (E.) The d is excrement, as is so common in English after n; cf. soun-d, thun-d-er; and spindle stands for spin-le. 'Spinnel, a spindle; North,' Halliwell. In Walter de Bibbesworth (in Wright's Vocab. i. 157, l. 6) we meet with M. E. spinel, where another MS. has spindele. — A. S. spint; 'Fusus, spint,' Wright's Voc. i. 82, col. 1; 281, col. 2. Formed, with suffix -l (= Aryan -ra) denoting the agent, from A. S. spinn-an, to spin; see Spin. + Du. spil, O. Du. spille (Hexham); by assimilation for *spinele. + O. H. G. spinala (E. Müller); whence G. spindel (with inserted d), as well as G. spille (by assimilation). ¶ Wedgwood derives spin from spindle, which is impossible; the shorter form must precede the longer. Besides, spin is a strong verb, and its base is SPAN. Der. spindle-shank, with shanks as thin as a spindle. Spindle-tree (Eunonymus), because used for spindles or thin rods, named in German spindelbaum for a like reason; from its use for making skewers it was formerly called prick-wood, i. e. skewer-wood, or prick-timber; see prickwood and spindle tree in Phillips.

SPINE, a prick, the backbone of an animal. (F., — L.) 'Roses, their sharp spines being gone;' Two Noble Kinsmen, first line. — O. F. espine, 'a thorn, prick, prickly'; Cot. — Lat. spina, a thorn, prick; also, the spine, the backbone. Closely allied to Lat. spica, an ear of corn; see Spice. ¶ Observe that, in the sense of 'backbone,' the word is Latin, rather than French; from the use of Latin in medical treatises. Der. spin-ach or spin-age, q. v.; spin-al; spin-y, spin-i-ness; spin-ous; spin-ose; also spin-et, q. v.; spinn-ey, q. v.

SPINET, a kind of musical instrument, like a harpsichord. (F., — Ital., — L.) Obsolete. It was so called because struck with a spine or pointed quill. In Phillips, ed. 1706. — O. F. espinette, 'a paire of virginals'; Cot. — Ital. spinetta, 'a paire of virginals; also, a little tap, spigot, or gimblet, a prick, a thorne'; Florio. Dimin. of Ital. spina, a thorn. — Lat. spina, a thorn; see Spine. [†]

SPINK, a finch, small bird. (Scand.) Lowland Sc. and prov. E. spink, chiefly used of the gold-finch. M. E. spink. 'Hic rostellus, Anglice, spynke;' Wright's Voc. i. 189, col. 1. — Swed. dial. spink, a field-fare, sparrow; gul-spink, a goldfinch (Rietz); Norweg. spikke (by assimilation for spinke), a small bird, sparrow, finch. + Gk. σπινγος, a finch; cf. σπινγν, to pipe, chirp as a small bird. β. The Aryan form is SPINGA (Fick, i. 831), corresponding to the Teutonic types SPINKA (as above), and FINKA (E. fink), the latter form being due to loss of s and the usual sound-shifting from p to f.

γ. The root is SPANG, to make a noise, hence, to chirp, pipe as a bird, as in Lithuan. spengti, to resound, make a noise, Gk. φθγγουαι, I utter a clear loud sound. Without the nasal, we have the SPAG, whence Gk. σπίζα, σπίζη (= σπινγ-ya), a finch or spink, σπίζεν, to chirp, pipe. δ. Since the notions of giving a clear sound and of producing a bright light are closely associated, it is probable that Lithuan. spingėti, to glitter, Gk. φέγγος, lustre, and E. spangle are all ultimately connected with spink.

SPINNEY, a kind of thicket. (F., — L.) 'Or shelter'd in Yorkshire spinneys;' Hood, Miss Kilmansegg, Her Accident, st. 3. — O. F. espinoye, 'a thicket, grove, or ground full of thorns, a thorny plot';

Cot. Mod. F. épinaye (Littre). — Lat. spinetum, a thicket of thorns — Lat. spina, a thorn; see Spine.

SPINSTER, a woman who spins, an unmarried female. (E.) Formerly in the sense of a woman who spins. 'She spak to spynnesters to spynnen it oute;' P. Plowman, B. v. 216. Formed from the verb to spin (A. S. spinnan) by means of the suffix -estre (mod. E. -ster).

¶ This suffix (hitherto imperfectly explained) presents no real difficulty; it is the same as in Lat. olea-ster, Low Lat. poeta-ster (see Poet), and is due to the conjunction of the Aryan suffixes -as- and -tar, discussed in Schleicher, Compend. §§ 230, 225. [The Lat. suffix -is-ter, appearing in min-is-ter, mag-is-ter, is not quite the same thing, being compounded of the Aryan comparative suffixes -yans- and -tara-; but the method of compounding such suffixes is well exhibited by these examples.]

β. This A. S. suffix -es-ter was used to denote the agent, and was conventionally confined to the feminine gender only, a restriction which was gradually lost sight of, and remains only in the word spinster in mod. English. Traces of the restriction remain, however, in semp-ster-ess or sempstress, and song-ster-ess or songstress, where the F. fem. suffix -ess has been superadded to the E. fem. suffix -ster. The restriction was strictly observed in A. S., and is retained in Dutch; cf. Du. spin-ster, a spinster, zangster, a female singer (fem. of zanger), bedriegster, a female impostor (fem. of bedrieger), inwoonster, a female inhabitant (fem. of inwooner); &c.

γ. Examples in A. S. are the following: 'Textrix, webbestre,' a webster, female weaver, fem. of 'Textor, webba,' answering to Chaucer's webbe (Prol. 364), and the name Webb. 'Citharista, hearpestre,' a female harper, fem. of 'Citharedus, hearpere,' a harper; see Wright's Vocab. i. 59, 60. So also: 'Fidicen, fiðelere;' Fidicina, fiðelestre; Saltator, kleðpere; Saltatrix, kleðpestre; id. p. 73. A striking example is afforded by A. S. witegestre, a prophetess, Luke, ii. 36, the word being almost always used in the masc. form witega, a prophet. See further under Spin.

SPIRACLE, a breathing-hole, minute passage for air. (F., — L.) M. E. spyrakle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 408. — F. spiracle, 'a breathing-hole'; Cot. — Lat. spiraculum, an air-hole; formed with suffix -culum (Aryan -ka-ra) from spirare, to breathe; see Spirit.

SPIRE (1), a tapering body, sprout, point, steeple. (E.) M. E. spire, used of a blade of grass or young shoot just springing out of the ground. 'Thilke spire that in-to a tree shoulde waxe,' Test. of Love, bk. iii, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 314, col. 1. 'Or as an ook cometh of a litel spire;' Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1335; spelt spir, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 180. — A. S. spír (rare); 'hreodes spír,' a spike (or stalk) of a reed, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 266, l. 10. + Icel. spíra, a spar, a stilt. + Dan. spire, a germ, sprout. + Swed. spira, a sceptre, a pistol. + G. spiere, a spar.

β. Perhaps allied to Spear and Spar; but I would rather connect it with Spike and Spine. Der. spire, verb, to germinate, spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52, spelt spyer in Palsgrave; spir-y, spelt spirie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592. ¶ Not connected with spire (2).

SPIRE (2), a coil, wreath. (F., — L.) 'Amidst his circling spires;' Milton, P. L. ix. 502. [Perhaps directly from Lat. spira.] — F. spire, 'a rundle, round, or circle, a turning or winding compass'; Cot. — Lat. spira, a coil, twist, wreath. + Gk. σπειρα, a coil, wreath, — SPAR, to wind or twine round; whence also Gk. σπρίς, Lat. sporta, a woven basket, Lithuan. spartas, a band. Fick, i. 832. Der. spire, verb, to spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52; spiral, from F. spiral, 'circling'; Cot., Lat. spiralis; spir-al-ly; spir-y, Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georgic i. l. 334.

SPIRIT, breath; the soul, a ghost, enthusiasm, liveliness, a spirituous liquor. (F., — L.) The lit. sense is 'breath,' but the word is hardly to be found with this sense in English. M. E. spirit, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 203; pl. spirites, Chaucer, C. T. 1371. — O. F. espirit (Littre), later esprit, 'the spirit, soul'; Cot. — Lat. spiritum, acc. of spiritus, breath, spirit. — Lat. spirare, to breathe. Root uncertain. Der. spirit-ed, Hen. V. iii. 5. 21; spirit-ed-ly, -ness; spirit-less, 2 Hen. IV. i. 1. 70; spirit-stirring, Oth. iii. 3. 352; spirit-u-al, Gower, C. A. ii. 191, l. 15, from F. spirituall, 'spirituall'; Cot., from Lat. spiritu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from spiritu-, crude form of spiritus; spiritu-al-ly, spiritu-al-i-ty, M. E. spirituall, P. Plowman, B. v. 148; spiritu-al-ise, spiritu-al-ism, spiritu-al-ist; spiritu-ous. Also (from Lat. spirare) a-spire, con-spire, ex-pire (for ex-spire), in-spire, per-spire, re-in-spire, re-spire, su-spire, tram-spire; also di-spire; and see spir-a-cle, spright-ly. Doublet, sprite.

SPIRT, the same as Spurt, q. v.

SPIT (1), a pointed piece of wood, skewer, iron prong on which meat is roasted. (E.) M. E. spite, spyte. 'And yspyted hym thorowt myd an yrene spyte;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 207, l. 3; where it rhymes with byte (bite), so that the i seems to have been orig. long. See also Octavian Imperator, l. 122, in Weber, Met. Romances, vol. iii. — A. S. spitu or spitu; 'Vern, spitu;' Wright's Voc. i. 27, 82; later spite, id. i. 93. + Du. spit. + Dan. spid. + Swed. spett. + M. H. G. spiz.

β. We also find Icel. spýta, a spit, spjót, a spear, lance, Dan. spyd, a spear, Swed. spjut, a spear, G. spieß, O. H. G. spioz; these answer to a Teut. type SPEUTA, Fick, iii. 355. Root uncertain; but it would seem reasonable to connect spit with spike, spine, and spire (1); all of these words contain the notion of 'sharp point'; cf. W. pid, a tapering point. Der. spit, verb, M. E. spiten, spytten, as in Rob. of Glouc., cited above. Hence also prov. E. spit, the depth a spade goes in digging, about a foot (Halliwell), with reference to the point, i. e. blade of the spade; cf. Du. spitten, to dig (lit. to spit); quite distinct from spade.

SPIT (2), to throw out from the mouth. (E.) Spelt spet in Baret (1580). M. E. spitten, P. Plowman, B. x. 40; pt. t. spette, Wyclif, John, ix. 6. — A. S. spittan, Matt. xxvii. 30 (Rushworth MS.); akin to speitan, with the same sense, pt. t. spētte, Mark, xv. 19, John, ix. 6. + Icel. spýta. + Dan. spytte, to spit, to sputter. + Swed. spotta. + G. spützen; with which cf. G. spucken in the same sense. All from the Teut. base SPUT, extension of ✓SPU; see Spew. Der. spitt-le, formerly spettle (Baret), also spettle, spelt spatyll in Palsgrave, spotil in Wyclif, John, ix. 6; A. S. spāt, John, ix. 6; spitt-oon, not in Todd's Johnson, an ill-coined word. ¶ Note that spat is not the orig. past tense of spit, but is due to A. S. spētte above, used with the same sense as the true pt. t. spit (Meas. for Meas. ii. i. 86).

SPITE, vexation, grudge, ill-will. (F., — L.) M. E. spyt; 'but spyt more.' — without further injury, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1444. It is merely a contraction of M. E. despit, mod. E. despite. This is best shown by the phrase in spite of, formerly in despite of, as in Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 132, Much Ado, ii. i. 398, iii. 2. 68, iii. 4. 89, &c. So also we have sport for disport, spend for dispend, M. E. spenser for dispenser. And observe M. E. spitous, Rom. of the Rose, 979, as a form of despitous, Chaucer, C. T. 6343. See further under Despise. Der. spite, verb, Much Ado, v. 2. 70; spite-ful, Macb. iii. 5. 12, short for despite-ful, As You Like It, v. 2. 86; spite-ful-ly, -ness.

SPITTLE (1), saliva. (E.) See Spit (2).

SPITTLE (2), a hospital. (F., — L.) 'A spittle, hospitall, or lazharhouse,' Baret, 1580. M. E. spitel. Spitel-vuel = hospital evil, i. e. leprosy; Ancren Riwe, p. 148, l. 8. — O. F. ospital (Burguy), the same as O. F. hospital, a hospital; see Hospital. ¶ The loss of initial o must have been due to an E. accent on the i. Doublet, hospital.

SPLASH, to dash about water or mud, to bespatter. (Scand.) 'To plash, to dash any liquid upon; Splashy, wet, watry;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1731. Coined by prefixing s (O. F. es = Lat. ex, used for emphasis, as in sequen (Richardson) for quench), to plash, in the same sense. 'Plasky waies, wet under foot; to plash in the dirt; all plash'd, made wet and dirty; to plash a traveller, to dash or strike upon the dirt upon him;' MS. Lansd. 1033, by Bp. White Kennett, died A. D. 1728. Stanyhurst (1582) has plash for 'a splashing noise;' tr. of Virgil (Æn. i. 115), ed. Arber, p. 21, l. 17. — Swed. plaska, to splash; short for platska, as shewn under Plash (1), q. v. + Dan. pladske, to splash. Cf. Swed. dial. plattska, to strike gently, pat, tap with the fingers; extended from plätta, to tap, pat (Rietz). From Teut. base PLAT, to strike; see Pat. Der. splash, sb.; splash-y; splash-board, a board (in a vehicle) to keep off splashes.

SPLAY, to slope or slant (in architecture); to dislocate a shoulder-bone. (F., — L.) A contraction of display; cf. sport for disport, spite for despite, spend for dispend, &c. The sense 'to dislocate' is due to the fact that display formerly meant to carve or cut up a crane or other bird, by disjoining it and so displaying it upon the dish in several pieces. 'Dysplays that crane;' 'splays that breame;' The Boke of Keruyng, pr. in 1513, repr. in 1867; see The Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 265. In architecture, to display is to open out, hence to slope the side of a window, &c. 'And for to splay out hir leves in brede;' Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 33. See further under Display. Der. splay-foot-ed, in Minshew, and in Ford, The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. i (R.), i. e. with the foot displayed or turned outward, as if dislocated at the knee-joint; shortened to splay-foot, as in 'splay-foot rhymes,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 192; splay-mouth, a mouth opened wide in scorn, a grimace, Dryden, tr. of Persius, sat. i. l. 116. [†]

SPLEEN, a spongy gland above the kidney, supposed by the ancients to be the seat of anger and ill-humoured melancholy. (L., — Gk.) M. E. splen, Gower, C. A. iii. 99, l. 23; iii. 100, l. 9. — Lat. splen. — Gk. σπλήν, the spleen. + Skt. plīhan, plīhan, the spleen (with loss of initial s). The true Lat. word is lien (with loss of initial sp). The Russ. selezénka, spleen, is also related. The Aryan form is supposed to have been SPARGHAN, later SPLEGHAN, Fick, i. 835. Der. splen-et-ic, from Lat. spleneticus; splen-et-ic-al, splen-et-ic-al-ly; splen-ic, from Lat. splenicus; spleen-it-ive, Hamlet, v. i. 285; spleen-ful, 2 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 128; spleen-y, Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 99.

SPLENDOR, SPLENDOR, magnificence, brilliance. (L.; or F., — L.) Spelt splendor in Minshew, ed. 1627. According to Richardson, it is spelt splendour in Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Jane Pawlet, in Underwoods, no. 100, l. 32. — F. splendeur, 'splendor, light'; Cot. — Lat. splendorem, acc. of splendor, brightness. [Or directly from Lat. nom. splendor.] — Lat. splendere, to shine. + Lithuan. splendēti, to shine. Root unknown. Der. splend-id, Milton, P. L. ii. 252, directly from Lat. splendidus, shining, bright; splend-id-ly. Also splend-ent, spelt splendant in Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. viii. st. 84, l. 3, but from Lat. splendens, stem of pres. part. of splendere. And see re-splendent.

SPLINT, the same as Splint, q. v.

SPLUCHAN, a tobacco-pouch. (Gael.) In Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook, st. 14. — Gael. spluchan, a tobacco-pouch; Irish spluchan, a bladder, pouch, purse.

SPLICE, to join two rope-ends by interweaving the strands. (Du.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Like many sea-terms, borrowed from Dutch. — O. Du. splissen, 'to wreath or lace two ends together, as of a rope'; Hexham. So named from the splitting of the rope-ends into separate strands before the splicing is begun; from Du. splitten, to splice (which is really the older form). Formed by the addition of s to the base of Du. splijten, to split, O. Du. splijten, splaten, or splitten (Hexham). See Split. + Dan. splidse, splidse, to splice (weakened form of splitte); from splitte, to split. Cf. Swed. spissa, to splice; G. spissen, to splice, spiss, a cleft, spissen, to split. Der. splice, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706.

SPLINT, SPLINT, a thin piece of split wood. (Scand.) Formerly usually splint. 'A little splint to staie a broken finger;' Baret (1580). 'Splint for an house, laite;' Palsgrave. It also meant a thin steel plate, for armour. 'Splint, harness for the arme, garde de bras;' Palsgrave. M. E. splint, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2061. — Swed. splint, a kind of spike; esp. (in nautical language) a forelock, i. e. a flat piece of iron driven through the end of a bolt, to secure it. — Swed. splinta, to splint, splinter, or split; nasalised form of Swed. dial. splitta, to separate, split (Rietz). So also Dan. splint, a splinter; from splitte, to split. + Low G. splinte, a forelock; from splaten, spliten, to split. + G. splint, a thin piece of iron or steel, a forelock, perhaps borrowed. See Split. Der. splint-er, Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill, Act i. sc. 3 (Ismeria), to split into shivers, a frequentative form (with the usual frequentative suffix -er) from Swed. splinta, to split, shiver; we actually find the frequentative form in Dan. splintre, to splinter, Du. splintren, to splinter. Hence splint-er, sb., a shiver, small piece or chip, Cor. iv. 5. 115, with which cf. Du. splinter, a splinter, splinterig, full of splinters; splint-er-y, adj.

SPLIT, to cleave lengthwise, to tear asunder, rend apart. (Scand.) Spelt splīt in Minshew, ed. 1627. [Palsgrave has: 'I spllette a fysshe a-sonder, Je ouuers;' but this is rather M. E. splatten, to lay open, lay flat, as in Palladius on Husbandry, b. ii. l. 123.] — Dan. splitte, to split; Swed. dial. splitta, to disentangle or separate yarn (Rietz). + Du. splijten, to split. + G. splessen. We also find Dan. split, Du. spleet, a slit, split, rent, Swed. split, discord (a sense not unknown to English). G. splisse, a splinter, a shiver, O. Du. splete, 'a split or a cleft' (Hexham). β. The O. Du. splete, Du. spleet, shew that the orig. vowel was a (as remarked in Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 57), so that the form of the base is SPALT, a mere variant of SPALD, to split, cleave, treated of under Spell (4) and Spill (2). Compare also prov. E. sprit, to split, Swed. spricka, to split, and Teut. base SPRAK, to burst; see Spark (1). Der. split, sb.; also splint, q. v., splice, q. v., spelt, q. v.

SPLUTTER, to speak hastily and confusedly. (Scand.) Added by Todd to Johnson; and see Halliwell. By the common substitution of l for r, it stands for sprutter; cf. prov. E. spruttled, spruttled, sprinkled over, Leicestersh. (Halliwell, Evans). It is the frequentative, with the usual suffix -er, of spout, to talk fluently, orig. to squirt out, a word which has lost an r and stands for spout, as shewn in its due place; see Spout. In the sense 'to talk,' the latter word occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 4: 'Pray, spout some French, son.' To splutter is to talk so fast as to be unintelligible. The old Leicest. word spirtle, to sprinkle, used by Drayton (Evans) is merely another form of the same word, formed as the frequentative of Spurt. Cf. Low G. sprutten, to spout, spurt, sprinkle. And see Sputter.

SPOIL, to plunder, pillage. (F., — L.) M. E. spoil, Wyclif, Mark, iii. 27. [The sb. spoil occurs even earlier, in King Alisaunder, 986.] — F. spolier, 'to spoil, despoil'; Cot. — Lat. spoliare, to strip of spoil, despoil. — Lat. spolium, spoil, booty; the skin or hide of an animal stripped off, and hence the dress of a slain warrior stripped from him. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Gk. σπῶλον, spoil; Curtius, i. 107, ii. 358. ¶ It is probable that spoil has been to some extent confused with its compound de-spoil, q. v. Cf. 'Dyspoilyn or Spoylyn, Spolio;' Prompt. Parv. Der. spoil, sb., M. E. spoil, as above; spoil-er; spoli-at-ion, from F. spoliation, 'a spoiling;' Cot., from Lat. acc. spoliatiōnem; spoli-ate (rare), from pp. spoliatus.

☞ The M. E. spillen, to destroy, being now retained only in the particular sense of 'to shed liquids,' the sense of 'destroy' or 'waste' has been transferred to spoil; see Spill (2).

SPOKE, one of the bars of a wheel, from the nave to the rim. (E.) M. E. spoke, Chaucer, C. T. 7839, 7840. — A. S. spāca, pl. spācan; 'Radii, spācan,' Wright's Vocab. i. 284, col. 2. [The change from ā to long o is perfectly regular; cf. stān, a stone, bān, a bone.] + Du. spak, a lever, roller; speek, a spoke. + G. speiche, O. H. G. speichā; prov. G. spache (Flügel). β. All from a type SPAICA, a strengthened form of SPIK, the base of spike; see Spike. Accordingly, the word is formed rather on a Latin than on a Teutonic base.

SPOKESMAN, one who speaks in behalf of others. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 1. 152; and in Exod. iv. 16. (A. V.) The form of the word is hardly explicable; we should rather have expected to meet with spoke-s-man, formed by analogy with hunt-s-man, or else with speech-man. As it is, the pp. spoke (for spoken) has been substituted for the infin. speak; see Speak and Man.

SPOLIATION, (F., — L.) See under Spoil.

SPONDEE, in classical poetry, a foot containing two long syllables. (L., — Gk.) Called pondeus in Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, pt. ii. c. 3. Ben Jonson has: 'The staidie spondæes' to translate 'Spondeos stables' in his tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, l. 256. Englished from Lat. spondeus or spondeus. — Gk. σπονδαίος, in metre, a spondee, so called because slow solemn melodies, chiefly in this metre, were used at σπονδαί. — Gk. σπονδαί, a solemn treaty or truce; pl. of σπονδή, a drink-offering, libation to the gods (such as was made at a treaty). — Gk. σπένδειν, to pour out, make a libation. Root uncertain. Der. spond-a-ic, Lat. spondaiicus, Gk. σπονδαϊκός.

SPONGE, the porous framework of an animal, remarkable for sucking up water. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. sponge, Ancren Riwle, p. 262, l. 2. — O. F. esponge, 'a sponge,' Cot. Mod. F. éponge. — Lat. spongia. — Gk. σπογγία, a sponge; another form of σπόγγος (Attic σπόγγος), a sponge. + Lat. fungus, a fungus, from its spongy nature (unless this Lat. word is merely borrowed from Gk. σπόγγος). Supposed to be allied to Gk. σπομφός, spongy, and to E. swamp; see Swamp. Cf. Goth. swamms, a sponge, G. schwamm, a sponge, fungus. ¶ Also A. S. sponge, Matt. xxvii. 48, directly from Latin.

Der. sponge, verb; spong-y, spong-i-ness; also sponge-cake; spunk, q. v. SPONSOR, a surety, godfather or godmother. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. sponsor, a surety, one who promises for another. — Lat. spons-us, pp. of spondere, to promise. Probably allied to Gk. σπονδαί, a treaty, truce, and σπένδειν, to pour a libation, as when making a solemn treaty; see Spondee. Der. sponsor-i-al, sponsorship. And see spouse. Also (from Lat. spondere) de-spond, re-spond, cor-re-spond.

SPONTANEOUS, voluntary, acting on one's own impulse. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. spontaneus, willing; by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. Formed with suffix -aneus from spont-, appearing in the gen. spontis and abl. sponte of a lost sb. *spons. Sponte is used to mean 'of one's own accord'; and spontis occurs in the phrase suæ spontis esse, to be at one's own disposal, to be one's own master. Perhaps allied to Skt. chhand, to please; whence chhanda, flattering, sva-chhanda, spontaneous. Der. spontaneous-ly; spontane-i-ty, a coined word.

SPOOL, a reel for winding yarn on. (O. Low G.) M. E. spole, Prompt. Parv. p. 470. Imported from the Netherlands, with the Flemish weavers. — O. Du. spoel (Hexham); Du. spoel, a spool, quill; Low G. spole (Bremen Wörterbuch). + Swed. spole, a spool, spoke. + Dan. spole. + G. spule, a spool, bobbin, quill; O. H. G. spuolo, spuola. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Icel. spólr, a rail, a bar; and possibly to E. spār, a bar.

SPOOM, to run before the wind. (L.) An old sea-term; see examples in Nares. Lit. 'to throw up foam' by running through the water. As Nares remarks, it means to sail steadily rather than swiftly. From spume, foam; see Spume.

SPOON, an instrument for supping liquids. (E.) The orig. sense was simply 'a chip,' then a thin slice of wood, lastly a spoon (at first wooden). M. E. spoon (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 10916. — A. S. spón, a chip, a splinter of wood; see examples in Bosworth. In Wright's Vocab. i. 39, col. 1, the Lat. fomes, a chip for firewood, is glossed by 'geswāled spoon, vel tynder,' i. e. a kindled chip, or tinder. + Du. spaan, a chip, splint. + Icel. spánn, spónn, a chip, shaving, spoon. + Dan. spaan, a chip. + Swed. spån, a chip, splint. + G. span, O. H. G. spān, a very thin board, chip, splint, shaving. β. The Teut. type is SPĀNI, a chip, Fick, iii. 352. Root uncertain. Der. spoon-bill, a bird; spoon-ful, spelt spoonefull in Minshew, ed. 1627, sponeful in Sir T. More, Works, p. 617 (R.); spoon-meat, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 61.

SPOOR, a trail. (Du.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Introduced from the Cape of Good Hope. — Du. spoor, a spur; also a trace, track, trail. Cognate with E. Spur, q. v. Doublet, spur.

SPORADIC, scattered here and there. (Gk.) 'Sporadici Morbi, diseases that are rife in many places,' Phillips, ed. 1706. It thus arose as a medical term. The Late Lat. sporadicus is merely borrowed from Gk. σποραδικός, scattered. — Gk. σποράδ-, stem of σποράδ, scattered. — Gk. σπείρειν, to sow, to scatter abroad. See Sperm.

SPORE, a minute grain which serves as a seed in ferns, &c. (Gk.) Modern and botanical. — Gk. σπόρος, seed-time; also, a seed. — Gk. σπείρειν, to sow. See Sperm.

SPORRAN, a leathern pouch, worn with the kilt. (Gael.) In Scott's Rob Roy, c. xxxiv. — Gael. sporan, a purse. + Irish sparan, a purse, a pouch.

SPORT, play, mirth, merriment, jest. (F., — L.) 'Sporte, myrthe,' Palsgrave. Merely a contracted form of disport, desport, by loss of di- or de-; just as we have splay for display, spend for dispend. Stratmann cites sport as occurring in the Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, p. 185. Disport is in Chaucer C. T. 77; see further under Disport. Der. sport, verb, spelt sporte (also disporte) in Palsgrave; sport-ing; sport-ful, Tw. Nt. v. 373; sport-ful-ly, sport-ful-ness; sport-ive, All's Well, iii. 2. 109, sport-ive-ly, -ness; sport-s-man (coined like hunt-s-man), sport-s-man-ship.

SPOT, a blot, mark made by wet, a discoloured place, small space, stain. (E.) M. E. spot, Prompt. Parv.; pl. spottes, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 315. [I suspect that spat in Ancren Riwle, p. 104, note e, is a misprint for swat.] Lowland Sc. spat (Jamieson). From a base spat- occurring in A. S. spāt, spittle, John, ix. 6, which Wyclif writes as spotil; and see spatyll, spittle, in Palsgrave, spattle in Halliwell. Cf. also A. S. spētan, to spit, pt. t. spētte (= mod. E. spat), Matt. xxvi. 67. From the notion of spitting; a spot is lit. 'a thing spat out,' hence a wet blot, &c. 'To bespette one all over, Conspuo;' Baret (1580). See Spit. + Du. spat, a speck, spot; spatten, to spatter, to bedash (Sewel). + Swed. spott, spittle, slaver; spotta, to spit. + Dan. spatte, a spot, speckle. Cf. E. Speck, formed in a similar way, with the same orig. sense. ¶ The Icel. and Swed. spott, mockery, derision (G. spott, Dan. spot), is prob. the same word, in a metaphorical sense; but this is not quite certain. Der. spot, verb, chiefly in the pp. spott-ed, as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 26, Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35; spott-y, spott-i-ness; spot-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 178, spot-less-ly, spot-less-ness. And see spatter.

SPOUSE, a husband or wife. (F., — L.) One of the oldest words in the language of F. origin. M. E. spuse, fem. sb., O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 13, l. 5; the comp. sb. spushād, spousehood, also occurs in the 11th century, O. Eng. Hom. i. 143, l. 24, having already acquired an E. suffix. The form is rather fem. than masc. — O. F. espous (Burguy), later espoux (époux), 'a spouse, bridegroom,' Cot.; fem. form espouse (épouse), 'a spouse, a wife,' id. The former answers to Lat. sponsus, acc. of sponsus, a betrothed, a bridegroom; the latter to sponsa, fem., a betrothed woman. — Lat. sponsus, promised, pp. of spondere, to promise; see Sponsor. Der. espouse, verb, q. v.; also spons-al, M. E. sponsaile, Gower, C. A. i. 181, l. 12, a doublet of espousal, M. E. espousaile, Gower, C. A. ii. 322, l. 9; see under espouse.

SPOUT, to throw out a liquid violently, to rush out violently as a liquid from a pipe. (Scand.) This word has certainly lost an r, and stands for sprout, just as speak stands for spreak. The r appears in the related form spurt and in prov. E. spruttled, sprinkled over, Leicestersh. (Halliwell); and is represented by l in E. splutter; see Splutter. M. E. spouter, Chaucer, C. T. 4907. — Swed. sputa, noted by Wiedgren as an occasional form of spruta, which he explains by 'to squirt, to syringe, to spout.' There is also the sb. spruta, a squirt, a syringe, a pipe through which any liquor is squirted, a fire-engine. + Dan. sprude (also sprutte), to spout, spurt; spröite, to squirt. + Du. spuiten, to spout, syringe, squirt; also sput, sb. a spout, squirt, syringe, fire-engine (here the r is dropped as in English, but the identity of these words with the Swedish ones is obvious from the peculiar senses in which they are used). + G. spritzen (also sprützen, E. Müller), sprudeln, to spout, squirt. We may also note that the Low G. has both forms, viz. sprutten, to spout (in which the r is retained), and the frequentative sputtern, with the same sense (in which the r is dropped).

β. From the Teut. base SPRUT, appearing in A. S. spruton, pl. of the pt. t. of the strong verb spreōtan, to sprout, to germinate; see Sprout, Spurt. Thus spout (= sprout), to spurt, is a secondary Scand. form of sprout in the sense to germinate, by a transference from the shooting out of a bud to the shooting out of water.

γ. We find also Irish and Gael. spu, to spout, squirt; but these words are prob. borrowed from English. (If real Celtic words, they are prob. allied to Lat. sputare, to spit, rather than to E. spout.) There can be little doubt that the loss of r in the present word has been caused by the influence of the word spit, with which it has no real connection, as shewn by the difference of vowel; see Spit. Der. spout, sb., M. E. sputte, spelt sputte in Prompt. Parv., from Swed. spruta, as above. And see splutter, sputter.

SPRACK, SPRAG, quick, lively. (Scand.) See Spark (2).

SPRAIN, to overstrain the muscles of a joint. (F., — L.) A late word. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it as a sb. The older word with much the same sense is strain; and sprain is formed from O. F. espreindre just as strain is from O. F. estreindre. — O. F. espreindre, 'to press, wring, strain, squeeze out, thrust together'; Cot. Mod. F. épreindre. — Lat. exprimere, to press out; whence espreindre is formed (as if for *espreimere) by change of m to n, with an excrement d. — Lat. ex, out; and primere, to press; see EX- and PRESS. And cf. Express. Der. sprain, sb., answering to O. F. espreinte, 'a pressing, straining,' Cot., from the pp. espreint.

SPRAT, a small sea-fish. (Du.) M. E. sprot or sprotte. 'Hec epimera, a sprot,' in a list of fishes; Wright's Voc. i. 222, col. 2. Borrowed from Du. — Du. sprot, 'a sprat, a fish;' Hexham. He also gives 'sprot, a sprout, or a sprigg of a tree, or the young of every thing;' which is the same word. 'Sprat, a small fish, considered as the fry of the herring;' Wedgwood. Cf. prov. E. sprats, small wood (Halliwell); lit. sprouts. See SPROUT.

SPRAWL, to toss about the limbs, stretch the body carelessly when lying. (Scand.) M. E. spraulen, Gower, C. A. ii. 5, l. 11; Havelok, 475. Sprawl stands for sprattle, by loss of t; the same word as North E. sprattle, to struggle (Halliwell). — Swed. sprattla, to sprawl; of which the dialectal forms are spralla and sprala, by loss of t (Rietz). + Dan. spratte, to sprawl, flounder, toss the legs about; whence the frequentative forms spralle, spralde, to sprawl, flounder, toss the body about. Cf. Icel. sprakka, to sprawl. + Du. spartelen, to flutter, leap, wrestle; whence spartelbeenen, to wag one's legs. The Du. spartelen also means to sparkle. β. All formed, with frequentative suffix -la, from the Teut. base SPART, to toss the limbs about (Icel. sprita, to sprawl), a parallel form to SPARK, with the same sense, appearing in Dan. sparke, Swed. sparka, to kick (Icel. sprökla, sprökla, to sprawl). Both forms are extensions from ✓SPAR, to quiver, well preserved in E. spar, to box, O. F. esparer, to kick; see SPAR (3). Thus sprawl is, practically, the frequentative of spar, to kick, to box; and signifies 'to keep on sparring,' to be continually tossing the limbs about. We may also compare Spark (1), Spark (2), Sprack, Speak, all from the same ultimate root. Der. sprawl-er.

SPRAY (1), foam tossed with the wind. (E.?) 'Commonly written spry. "Winds raise some of the salt with the spry;" Arbuthnot.' Johnson's Dict. But no example of the spelling spry is given, and it is not easy to find one. It is remarkable that the word does not appear in any early author; yet it would appear to be English. Perhaps (says E. Müller) from A. S. sprégan, to pour; which only occurs in the comp. geondsprégan, to pour out, Life of S. Guthlac, cap. 7. l. 6. Perhaps allied to Icel. sprana, a jet or spring of water, sprana, to jet, spurt out; Norweg. spræn, a jet of water (Aasen). The base SPRAG is perhaps a weak form of SPARK, as appearing in M. E. sparkelen, to sprinkle; see Sprinkle. [+]

SPRAY (2), a sprig or small shoot of a tree. (Scand.) The same as prov. E. sprag, a sprig (Webster). M. E. spray, Chaucer, C. T. 13700; Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, 275. — Dan. sprag, a sprig, spray (Molbech); Swed. dial. spragge, spragg, a spray (Rietz). Hence spray from sprag, by the usual change of g to y, as in may from A. S. mag-an, day from A. S. dæg. β. Allied to Icel. sprek, a stick (whence smá-sprek, small sticks, twigs, sprays); A. S. spreca, a spray (an unauthorised word cited by Sommer). All from a Teut. base SPRAK appearing in Icel. spraka, Dan. sprage (for *sprake), to crackle; the orig. sense being to crackle, split, burst, hence to bud, burgeon, produce shoots, as clearly shewn by other cognate words from the Aryan ✓SPARG, to crackle or burst with a noise. Cf., e. g., Lithuan. sprogti, to crackle, split, sprout or bud as a tree; whence sproga, a rift, a sprig or spray of a tree, sprugas, a knot or eye in a tree. Also Gk. ἀσπάργος, asparagus, of which the orig. sense was perhaps merely 'sprout' or shoot. Fick gives the Aryan form as SPARGA, i. 253, cf. ii. 281; from ✓SPARG, to crackle, burst with a noise, whence also E. speak and spark; see Speak, Spark (1), Spring. Doublet, sprig (and perhaps asparagus).

SPREAD, to scatter abroad, stretch, extend, overlay, emit, diffuse. (E.) M. E. spreiden, pt. t. spradde, sprede, pp. sprad, sprede, P. Plowman, B. iii. 308; pt. t. spradde, Gower, C. A. i. 182, l. 24. — A. S. sprædan, to spread out, extend, a rare word. It occurs as gespræad, imper. sing. = extend thou, stretch out, in the Northumb. version of Matt. xii. 13; and the comp. ofer-sprædan, to spread over, in the (unprinted) Rule of St. Bennet (Bosworth). + Du. spreiden, to spread, scatter, strew. + Low G. spreiden, spreien, spreien. + G. spreiten. β. All from a Teut. base SPRAID, evidently an unoriginal, and probably a causal form, from the older base SPRID, to become extended, spread out, as in Swed. sprida, to spread; cf. Dan. sprede, to spread, scatter, disperse. We find also Swed. dial. sprita, to spread (Rietz); from a parallel base SPRIT. Clearly allied to Icel. sprita, to sprawl, and from the same ultimate root as sprawl, viz. ✓SPAR, to quiver. See Sprawl, Sprout, Sprit. Der. spread, sb.

SPREE, a merry frolic. (C.) Modern and colloquial. — Irish spre, a spark, flash of fire, animation, spirit. Cf. Irish sprac, a spark, life, motion, spraic, strength, vigour, sprightliness, Gael. spraic, vigour, exertion.

SPRIG, a spray, twig, small shoot of a tree. (E.) M. E. sprigge, a rod for beating children, stick; P. Plowman, C. vi. 139 (footnote). — A. S. sprea, a spray, twig; an unauthorised word, given by Sommer. + Icel. sprek, a stick. + Low G. sprikk, a sprig, twig, esp. a small dry twig or stick. Allied to Dan. sprag, a spray (Molbech); see further under Spray (2).

SPRIGHTLY, SPRITELY, lively. (F., — L.; with E. suffix.) The common spelling sprightly is wholly wrong; gt is a purely E. combination, whereas the present word is French. The mistake was due to the very common false spelling spright, put for sprite, a spirit; see Sprite. The suffix -ly is from A. S. -lic, like; see Like. Der. spright-li-ness.

SPRING, to bound, leap, jump up, start up or forth, issue. (E.) M. E. springen, strong verb, pt. t. sprang, pp. sprungen, sprongen; Chaucer, C. T. 13690. — A. S. springan, sprincan; pt. t. sprang, spranc, pp. sprungen. The spelling springan is the usual one, Matt. ix. 26. But we find sprineð = springs, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxv (lib. iii. met. 2). And in Matt. ix. 26, where the A. S. version has 'þes hlisa sprang ofer eall þæt land' = this rumour spread abroad over all the land, the Northumbrian version has spranc. + Du. springen, pt. t. sprong, pp. gesprongen. + Icel. springa, to burst, split. + Swed. springa. + Dan. springe. + G. springen. And cf. Lithuan. sprugti, to spring away, escape; allied to Lithuan. sprogti, to crack, split; also Russ. sprugate, to spring, jump, skip. β. All from the Teut. base SPRANG, a weakened form of SPARKN, as shewn by the A. S. forms. And this is the nasalised form of Teut. SPRAK = Aryan ✓SPARG, to crack, split, crackle; see Spark (1), Speak.

The word to spring is frequently applied in M. E. poetry to the leaping forth of a spark from a blazing log of wood. 'He sprang als any sparke one [read of] glede' = he leapt forward like a spark out of a live coal, Sir Isambard, ed. Halliwell, p. 107; and see my note to Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 2094. We still say of a cricket-bat that is cracked or split, that it is sprung; and cf. prov. E. (Eastern) sprinke, a crack or flaw (Halliwell), where we even find the original E. final k; also Essex sprunk, to crack, split, from the base of the A. S. pp. spruncon. Besides, the sense 'to split, burst' is that of Icel. springa. Der. spring, sb., a leap, also the time when young shoots spring or rise out of the ground, also a source of water that wells up, a crack in a mast, &c.; spring-y; spring-halt (in horses), Hen. VIII, i. 3. 13; spring-time, As You Like It, v. 3. 20; spring-flood, M. E. spring-flod, Chaucer, C. T. 11382; spring-tide; day-spring, off-spring, well-spring. Also springe, a snare that is provided with a flexible rod, called a springe in M. E., as in P. Plowman, B. v. 41. And see sprink-le. ¶ To spring a mine is to cause it to burst; cf. Swed. spränga, to cause to burst, causal of springa, to burst.

SPRINKLE, to scatter in small drops. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13. A better form is sprengle, written sprenkyl by Palsgrave, and sprenkelyn in the Prompt. Parv. Sprengle is the frequentative form of M. E. sprengen, to scatter, cast abroad, sprinkle. 'Sprengeð ou mid hali water' = sprinkle yourselves with holy water, Ancien Riwe, p. 16, l. 9. — A. S. sprengan, sprencan, to sprinkle, scatter abroad, Matt. xxv. 24, Exod. xxiv. 8; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 264, l. 15. The lit. sense is 'to make to spring or leap abroad'; it is the causal of A. S. springan, to spring, leap abroad, regularly formed by the change of a (in the pt. t. sprang) to e, as if for sprangian *. See Spring. Cf. also Icel. sprengja, to make to burst, causal of springa, to burst (spring); Swed. spränga, to spring a mine, causal of springa, to spring, burst; Dan. sprænge, causal of springe; G. sprengen, causal of springen. + Du. sprenhelen, to sprinkle, frequentative of sprengen, the causal of springen. + G. sprenheln, to speckle, spot, be-spot, frequent. of sprengen. Under the word prick, I have referred to sprinkle, and regarded sprinkle as if nasalised from a form sprickle *, which I refer to a ✓SPARK, to sprinkle, appearing in Lat. spargere (for *sparcere) and Skt. sprī, to touch, to sprinkle. The history of the word shews this to be wrong as regards sprinkle, which belongs rather to ✓SPARG, to burst. Still, it is probable that the roots SPARK and SPARG were orig. but one; the notion of 'bursting' leads to that of 'scattering,' as in the bursting of a seed-pod. Der. sprinkle, sb., a holy-water sprinkler, see Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13; sprinkl-er.

SPRIT, a spar set diagonally to extend a fore-and-aft sail. (E.) The older sense is merely a pole or long rod, and an older spelling is found in M. E. spret. 'A spret or an ore' = a sprit or an oar; Will. of Palerne, 2754; spelt spreot, King Alisaunder, 858. — A. S. spreot, a pole. 'Contus, spreot;' Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 2. 'Trudes, spreotas,' in a list of things belonging to a ship; id. 48, col. 1. The orig. sense is 'a sprout,' or shoot, hence a branch, pole, &c. Formed from the A.S. strong verb spreotan, to sprout, cognate with G. spruessen; see further under SPROUT. + Du. spruit, a sprit. + Dan. sprød. Der. sprit-sail, bow-sprit. Doublet, sprout.

SPRITE, SPRIGHT, a spirit. (F., = L.) The false spelling spright is common, and is still in use in the derived adj. sprightly. Spelt sprite in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 40, 43; but spright, id. i. 2. 2, 3. 'Legions of sprights,' id. i. 1. 38. M.E. sprit, sprite, spyte; 'the holy spyte,' Rich. Coer de Lion, 394. = F. esprit, 'the spirit,' Cot. = Lat. spiritum, acc. of spiritus. It is, of course, a doublet of Spirit, q. v. Der. spright-ly or sprite-ly; spright-ed, haunted, Cymb. ii. 3. 144; spright-ful or sprite-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 177; spright-ful-ly, Rich. II. i. 3. 3; spright-ing, Temp. i. 2. 298. Doublet, sprit.

SPROUT, to shoot out germs, burgeon, bud. (O. Low G.) Spelt sprut in Fitzherbert, Husbandry, § 13, l. 38. (E.D.S.) M.E. spruten, Cursor Mundi, 11216; O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 217, l. 23. [Not from A.S. spreotan, as A.S. eo does not pass into Mod. E. ou (as in out). Nor from A.S. sprýtan, as A.S. long y passes into E. long i. The word is, in fact, Frisian.] = O. Fris. spruta, strong verb, pp. spruten, to sprout (Richtofen); Low G. spruten, sproten, to sprout. + Du. spruiten. + G. spruessen, to sprout, pt. t. spross, pp. gesprossen. And cf. the A.S. strong verb spreotan, occurring in the comp. áspreotan (Grein), pt. t. spreoti, pp. sproten. The cognate Swed. spruta is only used in the sense to spout or squirt out water, and is the word whence E. spout is derived, by loss of r; see Spout, Spurt (1).

β. All from a Teut. type SPREUTAN, Fick, iii. 256, from a base SPRUT. And doubtless allied to the strong verb appearing in Icel. spretta, to spurt or spout out water, to start or spring, to sprout or grow, pt. t. spratt, pl. spruttu, pp. sprottinn. The base of this verb is SPRANT, since the pt. t. spratt stands for *sprant, and spretta is for *spranta; cf. M. H. G. sprengen, to spout; see Fick, as above. γ. This base SPRANT is a nasalised form of SPRAT, to burst, appearing in prov. G. spratzen, to crack, crackle, said of things that burst with heat (Flügel); and the formation of SPRANT from SPRAT is just parallel to that of SPRANG, to spring, orig. to burst, from SPRAK, to crack, crackle, burst with a noise. It is obvious that the Teut. bases SPRAT and SPRAK, with the same sense, are mere variants, and the form with the guttural is the older. The ultimate root is Aryan ✓ SPARG, to crack, split; see Spark (1), Speak, Spring.

δ. We may also notice that E. sprout as a sb. is related to Du. spruit, Icel. sproti, G. spross, a sprout; and that E. sprit, q. v., is a doublet of the same word. So also spray (2) and sprig, with just the same sense as sprout, are due to the allied base SPRAK above mentioned. Der. sprout, sb. And see sprit, sprat, spruit, splutter, sputter. Doublet, spout, q. v.

SPRUCE, fine, smart, gaily dressed. (F., = G.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'It was the custom of our ancestors, on special occasions, to dress after the manner of particular countries. The gentlemen who adopted that of Prussia or Spruce seem, from the description of it, to have been arrayed in a style, to which the epithet spruce, according to our modern usage, might have been applied with perfect propriety. Prussian leather (corium Prussianum) is called in Baret by the familiar name of spruce.' Richardson; see Baret, art. 781. He then quotes from Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 1, as follows: 'And after them came syr Edward Hayward, than Admyral, and wyth hym Syr Thomas Parre, in doublettes of crimosin veluet, voyded lowe on the backe, and before to the cannell-bone, lased on the breastes with chaynes of siluer, and ouer that shorte clokes of crimosyn satyne, and on their heades hattes after dauncers fashion, with feasauntes fethers in them: They were appareyled after the fashion of Prussia or Spruce.' There may have been special reference to the leather worn; the name of spruce was certainly given to the leather because it came from Prussia. Levins has: 'Corium pumicatum, Spruce,' col. 182, l. 14. 'Spruce leather, corruptly so called for Prussia leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Spruce leather, grauw leer, Prussisch leer,' i.e. gray leather, or Prussian leather; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict., 1749. [E. Müller objects that it is difficult to see why Prussia should always be called Spruce, not Pruce, in this particular instance; but the name, once associated with the leather, would easily remain the same, especially as the etymology may not have been very obvious to all. It is a greater difficulty to know why the s should ever have been prefixed, but it may be attributed to the English fondness for initial s; thus we often say squash for quash, splash for plash (the older word), and so on.] It is sufficient to make sure that Spruce really did mean Prussia, and really was used instead of Pruce. Of this we have positive proof as early as the 14th century. 'And yf ich sente ouer see my seruaut to brugges, Oper in-to prus my prentys' = and if I sent my servant over the sea to Bruges, or sent my apprentice to Prussia; P. Plowman, C. vii. 279; where two MSS. read spruce for prus, and one MS. has pruys-londe = Prussian land, the land of Prussia. In the corresponding passage of P. Plowman, B. xiii. 393, three MSS. have pruslonde, pruys londe, and pruce-lond respectively; but a fourth has spruce-land. Pruce is the form in Chaucer, C. T. 53 (a well-known passage). β. We conclude that to dress sprucely was to dress after the Prussian manner; that Spruce was early used in place of Pruce, particularly with reference to Prussian leather; and consequently that spruce is derived from O. F. Pruce, mod. F. Prusse, Prussia. = G. Preussen, Prussia (or from an older form of the same). Der. spruce-ly, spruceness. And see below. [†]

SPRUCE-BEER, a kind of beer. (G.; confused with F. and E.) 'Spruce-beer, a kind of physical drink, good for inward bruises;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Essence of spruce is obtained from the young shoots of the black spruce fir. . . . Spruce beer is brewed from this essence. . . . The black beer of Dantzic is similarly made from the young shoots of another variety of fir;' Eng. Cycl. Supp. to Arts and Sciences. 'A decoction of the young shoots of spruce and silver fir was much in use on the shores of the Baltic as a remedy in scorbutic, gouty, and rheumatic complaints. The sprouts from which it was made were called sprossen in German and jopen in Dutch, and the decoction itself sprossen-bier [in German] or jopenbier [in Dutch]. From the first of these is spruce-beer. See Beke in N. and Q. Aug. 3, 1860. And doubtless the spruce-fir, G. sprossenfichte, takes its name as the fir of which the sprouts are chiefly used for the foregoing purpose, and not from being brought from Prussia, as commonly supposed;' Wedgwood. β. The above explanation may be admitted; but with the addition that the reason why the G. word sprossen-bier was turned into spruce-beer in English is precisely because it was commonly known that it came from Prussia; and since sprossen-bier had no sense in English and was not translated into sprouts-beer, it was natural to call it Spruce-beer, i.e. Prussian beer. The facts, that Spruce meant Prussia as early as the 14th century, and that spruce or spruce-leather was already in use to signify Prussian leather, have been proved in the article above; see Spruce. Thus spruce-beer for sprossen-bier was no mere corruption, but a deliberate substitution. Accordingly, we find in Evelyn's Sylva, ch. 22, the remark: 'For masts, &c., those [firs] of Prussia which we call Spruce.' γ. With this understanding, we may now admit that spruce-beer is one of the very few words in English which are derived immediately from German. = G. sprossenbier, spruce-beer, lit. 'sprouts-beer'; G. sprossenfichte, spruce-fir; sprossenessenz, spruce-wine. = G. sprossen, pl. of sprosse, a sprout, cognate with E. sprout; and bier, cognate with E. beer; see Spout and Beer. Note also Du. jopenbier, 'spruce-beer'; Sewel's Du. Dict. ed. 1754. The word spruce = Prussia, is French, from G. Preussen, as shewn above.

SPRY, active, nimble, lively. (Scand.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Given by Halliwell as a Somersetsh. word, but more general. = Swed. dial. sprygg, very lively, skittish (as a horse), Rietz; allied to Swed. dial. språg, språk, or språker, spirited, mettlesome. In fact, spry is a weakened form of prov. E. sprag (Halliwell), which again is a weakened form of sprack, active, a Wiltshire word. See Sprack, Spark (2). Doublet, sprack.

SPUE, the same as Spew, q. v.

SPUME, foam. (L.) Not common. M.E. spume, Gower, C. A. ii. 265, l. 12. = Lat. spuma, foam. β. It would seem simplest to derive this from Lat. spuere, to spit forth; see Spew. But Fick gives the Aryan form as SPAINA or SPAIMA, whence also Skt. phena, foam, Russ. piena, foam, A.S. fim; see Foam. And he gives the root as ✓ SPA, to swell, as if the sense were 'surge'; cf. Skt. spḥáy, to swell, to which verb Benfey refers Skt. phena; see Span. Der. spoom, verb, q. v.; pum-ice, q. v.; pounce (2), q. v. Doublet, foam.

SPUNK, tinder; hence, a match, spark, spirit, mettle. (C., = L., = Gk.) Also spunk; see examples in Jamieson and Halliwell. 'In spunk or tinder;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virg. Æn. i. 175; ed. Arber, p. 23. The orig. sense is tinder or touchwood. = Irish and Gael. spone, sponge, tinder, touchwood; applied to touchwood from its spongy nature. = Lat. sporgia, a sponge; hence pumice-stone, or other porous material. = Gk. σπογγία, σπόγγος, a sponge; see Sponge.

SPUR, an instrument on a horseman's heels, for goading on a horse, a small goad. (E.) M.E. spure, spore, Chaucer, C. T. 475; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 12. = A.S. spura, spora. 'Calcar, spura;' Wright's Voc. i. 84, l. 3. Cf. hand-spore, a hand-spur, Beowulf, 986 (Gloss.). + Du. spoor, a spur; also a track; see Spoor. + Icel. spori. + Dan. spore. + Swed. sporre. + O. H. G. sporo; M. H. G. spor; G. sporn. β. All from a Teut. type SPORA, a spur. From the ✓ SPAR, to quiver, to jerk, which appears in G. sich sperren, to struggle against; one sense of this root is to kick, jerk out the feet, as in Lithuan. spirti, to resist, to kick out as a horse; cf. Skt. spḥur, spḥar, to throb, to struggle. Hence the sense of spur is 'kicker.' γ. A closely allied word occurs in A.S. spor, a foot-trace, Du. spoor, Icel. spor, G. spur (see Spoor); whence was formed the verb appearing as A.S. spyrjan, Icel. spyrja, G. spüren, to trace a foot-track, to investigate, enquire into, represented by Lowland Sc. spair, to enquire, ask, search out. Der. spur, verb, M. E. spurius, sporien, Layamon, 21354, Romance of Partenay, 4214. Also spur-wheel; and see spoor, spier, spurn.

SPURGE, a class of acrid plants. (F., = L.) 'Spurge, a plant, the juice of which is so hot and corroding that it is called Devil's Milk, which being dropped upon warts eats them away;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. And hence the name. M. E. spurge, Prompt. Parv.; spourge, Wright's Voc. i. 191, col. 2. — O. F. spurge, a form given in Wright's Voc. i. 140, col. 1; more commonly espurge, 'garden spurge;' Cot. — O. F. espurger, 'to purge, clear, cleanse, rid of; also, to prune, or pick off the noysome knobs or buds of trees;' Cot. Hence, to destroy warts. — Lat. expurgare, to expurgate, purge thoroughly. — Lat. ex, out, thoroughly; and purgare, to purge; see Ex- and Purge.

SPURIOUS, not genuine. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 391. Englished from Lat. spurius, false, spurious, by the common change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. The orig. sense is 'of illegitimate birth;' perhaps allied to Gk. σπορά, seed, offspring, σπειρειν, to sow; see Sperm. Der. spurious-ly, -ness.

SPURN, to reject with disdain. (E.) Properly 'to kick against,' hence to kick away, reject disdainfully. M. E. spurnen, to kick against, stumble over, Ancren Riwle, p. 188, l. 2. 'Spornayng, or Spurnyng, Calcitratio;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. speornan, gespeornan, to kick against, Grein; cf. also at-speornan, Matt. iii. 6, John, xi. 9. A strong verb; pt. t. spearn, pl. spurnon, pp. spornen. — Icel. spærna, pt. t. spærna, to spurn, kick with the feet. — Lat. spernere, to spurn, despise (a cognate form, not one from which the E. word is borrowed, for the E. verb is a strong one). — β. All from the Aryan base SPARN, to kick against, an extension from √SPAR, to quiver, jerk, also to kick against; see Spur and Spar (3). See Fick, i. 252.

Der. spurn, sb., Timon, i. 2. 146, Chevy Chase (oldest version), near the end.

SPURRY, the name of a herb. (F., = G.) In Cotgrave. — O. F. spurrie, 'spurry or frank, a Dutch herb, and an excellent fodder for cattle;' Cot. By 'Dutch' he prob. means 'German;' we find Du. spurrie, 'the herb spurge,' in Hexham; but this can hardly be other than the F. word borrowed. The etymology of the F. word is doubtful, but it may be German, as Cotgrave seems to suggest. We find in German the forms spark, spengel, spörgel, all meaning spurry. β. But the difficulty is to account for these forms, from the second of which the late Lat. spergula, spurry, is plainly taken. The G. spengel means 'asparagus,' and is a corrupted form of that word; on the other hand, the Du. spurrie means 'spurge.' It would seem that spurry was named from some fancied resemblance either to asparagus or to spurge, or was in some way confused with one or other of those plants.

SPURT (1), SPIRT, to spout, jet out, as water. (E.) 'With toonge three-forked furth spirts fyre;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. ed. Arber, p. 59. The older meaning is to sprout or germinate, to grow fast; as in Hen. V. iii. 5. 8. We even find the sb. spurt, a sprout; 'These nuts . . . have in their mids a little chit or spirt;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xv. c. 22. Cf. 'from Troy blud spirted;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. ed. Arber, p. 35. By the common metathesis of r (as M. E. brid for bird) spurt stands for sprut, the E. form corresponding to the Low G. form spruten. M. E. spruten; 'pe wið þet sprutteð ut' = the willow that sprouts or shoots out. — A. S. spryttan, spritten; 'spritte seó eorðe grówende gærð' = let the earth shoot out growing grass; Gen. i. 11. A weak verb, allied to the A. S. strong verb spreótan, to sprout; see Sprout. And see Spout.

SPURT (2), a violent exertion. (Scand.) Used by Stanyhurst in the sense of 'space of time;' as, 'Heere for a spirt linger,' tr. of Virgil, Æn. iii. 453. Not the same word as the above, though often confused with it, no doubt. — Icel. spreittr, a spurt, spring, bound, run; from the strong verb spretta (pt. t. spratt), to start, to spring; also to spout out water; also to sprout. Cf. Swed. spritta, to start, startle. The relationship of this verb (of which the base is SPRANT) to Sprout (of which the base is SPRUT), is explained under Sprout, q. v. ¶ Spurt (2) and spurt (1) are both allied to sprout, and therefore to one another; but they were differently formed. The orig. n of the base SPRANT is remarkably preserved in prov. E. sprunt, a convulsive struggle, Warwickshire (Halliwell).

SPUTTER, to keep spouting or jerking out liquid, to speak rapidly and indistinctly. (Scand.) 'And lick'd their hissing jaws, that sputter'd flame;' Dryden, tr. of Æneid, ii. 279 (ii. 211, Lat. text). The frequentative of Spout, q. v.; so that the sense is 'to keep on spouting.' β. Under Spout, it is shewn that spout has lost an r, and stands for sprout; hence the true frequentative should be sprutter, which is actually preserved in E. splutter; so that sputter and splutter are really but one word; see Splutter. In Low German, spruttern and sputtern are used alike, in the sense to sprinkle. Cf. spirtle, to sprinkle, used by Drayton (Halliwell), sprittle, to sprinkle, a Leicest. word (Evans); these are mere variants of sputter or splutter. ¶ Not to be confused with spatter, which is quite a different word, and allied to spot and spit.

SPY, to see, discover. (F., = O. H. G.) Short for espy. M. E. spien, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 40, l. 14. [The M. E. spie, sb., a spy, occurs in Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, l. 332.] The same word as M. E. espian, Chaucer, C. T. 4744; Layamon, vol. ii. p. 204. — O. F. espier, to espy. — O. H. G. spehôn, M. H. G. spēhen (mod. G. spähen), to watch, observe closely. — Lat. specere, to look. — Gk. σκέπτομαι, I look. — Skt. pag, spag, to spy; used to form some tenses of drig, to see. — √SPAK, to see; Fick, i. 251, 830. Der. spy, sb., as above; spy-glass; also (from espy) espi-on-age, espi-al. From Lat. specere we have spec-i-es, spec-i-al, espec-i-al, spec-i-men, spec-i-fy, spec-i-ous, spec-u-late; au-spice, con-spic-u-ous, de-spic-able, fronti-spice, per-spic-u-ous, su-spic-i-ous; de-spise, de-spite; a-spect, circum-spect, ex-spect, in-spect, intro-spect-ion, per-spect-ive, pro-spect, re-spect, dis-re-spect, ir-re-spect-ive, retro-spect, su-spect, spect-a-cle, spect-a-for, spect-re, spect-rum; also spite. From Gk. σκέπτομαι we have scept-i-c; and see scope, epi-scop-al, bishop.

SQUAB, 1. to fall plump; 2. a sofa; a young bird. (Scand.) 'Squab, an unfledged bird, the young of an animal before the hair appears (South); a long seat, a sofa; also, to squeeze, beat (Devon);' Halliwell. Halliwell also cites from Coles: 'A squab to sit on, pulvinus mollicellus;' this is not in the edition of 1684. Squab, a sofa, is in Pope, Imitation of Earl of Dorset, l. 10. Johnson also explains squab as 'unfeathered; fat, thick and stout;' and gives squab, adv., 'with a heavy, sudden fall, plump and flat,' with a quotation from Lestrangle's Fables: 'The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock;' also squab, verb, to fall down plump or flat; cf. prov. E. squap, to strike. In all senses, the word is of Scand. origin. 1. The Swed. dial. sqvapp, a word imitative of a splash (Rietz), explains Lestrangle's squab and the verb 'to fall plump,' hence to knock, beat; cf. G. schwapp, a slap, E. swap, to strike; see Swap and Squabble. 2. The senses 'fat,' 'unfledged,' and 'soft' (as a sofa) are best explained by Swed. dial. sqvabb, loose or fat flesh, sqvabba, a fat woman, sqvabbig, flabby; from the verb appearing in Norweg. sqvapa, to tremble, shake (hence, to be flabby). This can hardly be connected with Swed. dial. sqvapp, but is rather to be compared with Norweg. kveppa (pt. t. kvaþp), to slip suddenly, shake, shudder, and the M. E. quappen, to throb, mentioned under Quaver, q. v. And note Icel. kvap, jelly, jelly-like things.

SQUABBLE, to dispute noisily, wrangle. (Scand.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 281. — Swed. dial. skvabbel, a dispute, a squabble (corresponding to a verb *skvabbla, not given); Rietz. The verb *skvabbla is the frequentative of Swed. dial. skvappa, to chide, scold slightly, lit. make a splashing; from the sb. skvapp, a splash, an imitative word from the sound of dabbling in water; Rietz. Cf. Icel. skvampa, to paddle in water. Thus the base is SKWAP, a word intended to imitate a dashing or splashing sound; prov. E. sqvap, a blow. We find also the parallel bases SKWAK and SKWAD; from the former is the Swed. dial. skvakka, to chide, scold slightly (cf. E. quack, squeak), Icel. skvakka, to give a sound as of water shaken in a bottle, prov. E. swack, a blow or fall, prov. E. swacket (Sussex), to make a disagreeable noise with the mouth (Halliwell); whilst from the latter is O. Du. swadderen, to dabble in water as a duck, stir up the mud, make a noise, mutter (Hexham), and prov. E. squad, sloppy dirt (Lincolnsh.). We may also further compare Norweg. svabba, to dabble in water (Aasen), prov. E. swap, a blow, the noise of a fall, to strike swiftly, swab, to splash over, swabble, to squabble, swobble, to swagger in a low manner (East). 'Swablynge, swabbing, or swaggynge;' Prompt. Parv. Also G. schwabbeln, to shake fluids about. See Swap. ¶ The interchange of initial sqv and sw is common; Levins writes sqwayne for swain. Der. squabble, sb., squabbl-er.

SQUAD, a small troop. (F., = Ital., = L.) We speak of 'an awkward squad.' — O. F. esquadre, escadre, 'a squadron of footmen;' Cot. — Ital. squadra, 'a squadron;' Florio. See further under Square. Der. squad-r-on.

SQUADRON, a troop of soldiers, a body of cavalry, number of ships. (F., = Ital., = L.) In Oth. i. 1. 22; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 2. — O. F. esquadron, 'a squadron, a troop of soldiers ranged into a square body or battalion,' Cot. — Ital. squadrona, 'a squadron, a troupe or band of men;' Florio. The augmentative form (with suffix -one) = Lat. acc. -onem) of Ital. squadra, 'a squadron, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler, also a certain part of a company of soldiers of 20 or 25 [25 is a square number], whose chief is a corporal;' id. Doubtless so called, at first, from a formation into squares; see further under Square. And see squad.

SQUALID, filthy, dirty. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 13. — Lat. squalidus, stiff, rough, dirty, foul. — Lat. squālere, to be stiff, rough, or parched, to be dirty. Cf. Gk. κηλιδόν, to sully, from κηλιδ-, stem of κρηλίς, a stain, spot. Der. squalid-ly, -ness. Also squal-or (rare).⁵⁰ from squal-ere.

SQUALL, to cry out violently. (Scand.) 'The raven croaks, the carrion-crow doth squall;' Drayton, Noah's Flood (R.) = Icel. skvala, to squeal, bawl out; skval, a squalling. + Swed. svala, to stream, gush out violently; sval, an impetuous running of water; sval-regn, a violent shower of rain (whence E. squall, sb., a burst of rain). + Dan. squaldre, to clamour, bluster; squvalder, clamour, noisy talk. Cf. Swed. dial. skvala, skvåla, to gush out with a violent noise, to prattle, chatter; Gael. sgal, a loud cry, sound of high wind, sgal, to howl. β. From a base SKWAL, expressive of the outburst of water; allied to Teut. base SKAL, to resound, as in G. schallen, Icel. skella (pt. t. skull); Fick, iii. 334. Cf. SKWAP, the base of Squabble, q. v. Der. squall, sb., as above; squall-y. Doublet, squeal.

SQUANDER, to dissipate, waste. (Scand.) Now used only of profuse expenditure, but the orig. sense was to scatter or disperse simply, as still used in prov. E. 'His family are all grown up, and squandered [dispersed] about the country;' Warwicksh. (Halliwell). 'Squandered [scattered] abroad;' Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 22. 'Spaine . . . hath many colonies to supply, which lye squandered up and down;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. ix, ed. Arber, p. 45. 'All along the sea They drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 67. Mr. Wedgwood's solution of this curious word is plainly the right one, viz. that it is a nasalised form (as if for squanter *) of Lowland Sc. squatter, to splash water about, to scatter, dissipate, or squander, to act with profusion (Jamieson). This is the same as prov. E. swatter, to throw water about, as geese do in drinking, also, to scatter, waste (Halliwell); also as prov. E. swattle, to drink as ducks do water, to waste away (id.). These are frequentatives from Dan. svatle, to splash, spurt; figuratively, to dissipate, squander; cf. squat, sb., a splash. So also Swed. svätta, to squander, lavish one's money (Wiedgren); frequentative of svätta, to squirt (id.); Swed. dial. skvätta, a strong verb (pt. t. skvätt, supine skvättit), to squirt. Note also Icel. skvetta, to squirt out water, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug, skvettr, a gush of water poured out. The d appears in O. Du. swadderen, 'to dabble in the water as a goose or duck,' Hexham; and in Swed. dial. skvadra, verb, used of the noise of water gushing violently out of a hole (Rietz). The word is now used metaphorically, but the orig. sense was merely to splash water about somewhat noisily; and the base is a form SKWAT, expressive of the noise of splashing water about; cf. prov. E. swat, to throw down forcibly (North); swash, a torrent of water. See Squabble and Squall, words of similar formation. The particular form SKWAT of the base may have been suggested by SKAT, the base of Scatter, q. v. Der. squander-er. And see Squirt.

SQUARE, having four equal sides and angles. (F., -L.) M. E. square (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1078. = O. F. esquarré, 'square, or squared,' Cot.; esquarre, sb., a square, or squareness. The sb. is the same as Ital. quadrato, 'a quadron, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler; cf. Ital. quadrare, 'to square,' id. All formed from a Low Lat. verb *exquadrare, not found, but a mere intensive of Lat. quadrare, to square, make four-cornered, by prefixing the prep. ex. The verb quadrare is from quadrus, four-cornered, put for *quater-us, from quatuor, four, cognate with E. four. See Ex-, Quarry, Quadrant, and Four. Der. square, sb., square, verb, square-ly, -ness. Also squire (2), q. v., squad, squadron.

SQUASH, to crush, to squeeze flat. (F., -L.) No doubt commonly regarded as an intensive form of quash; the prefix s- answering to O. F. es- = Lat. ex-. But it was originally quite an independent word, and even now there is a difference in sense; to quash never means to squeeze flat. M. E. squachen, Barlaam and Josaphat, l. 663, pr. in Altenglische Legenden, ed. Horstmann, p. 224. = O. F. esquacher, to crush (Roquefort, who gives a quotation); also spelt escacher, 'to squash, beat, batter, or crush flat;' Cot. Mod. F. écacher. This answers to Span. acachar, agachar, only used reflexively, in the sense to squat, to cower (Diez). Also the F. cacher answers to Sardinian cattare, to press flat (id.). Diez further shews that this F. cacher (Sard. cattare) answers to Lat. coactare, to constrain, force, hence to press. The prefix es- = Lat. ex-, extremely; hence es-cacher is 'to press extremely,' crush flat, squash. = Lat. ex-; and coact-us, pp. of cogere (= co-agere), lit. to drive together; see Ex-, Cogent; also Con- and Agent. And see Squat, a closely allied word. Der. squash, sb., a soft, unripe peascod. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 166.

SQUAT, to cower, sit down upon the hams. (F., -L.) 'To squatte as a hare doth;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Here squat is to lie flat, as if pressed tightly down; and the old sense of squat is, not uncommonly, to press down, crush, much like the sense of Squash, which is a closely related word. [This is well exemplified in Spanish; see below.] 'His grief deepe squatting,' where the Lat. text has premit;

Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. 209. M. E. squatten, to press or crush flat. 'The foundementis of hillis ben togidir smyten and squat' = the foundations of the hills are smitten together and crushed; Wyclif, 2 Kings, xxii. 8. 'Squat sal he hevedes' = he shall crush the heads (Lat. conquassabit capita), Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cviii. (or cix.) 6. This explains prov. E. squat, to make flat, and squat, adj., flat. It is important also to note that quat is used in the same sense as squat; indeed, in the Glossary to the Exmoor Scolding, the word squat is explained by 'to quat down;' which shews that the s- in squat is a prefix. = O. F. esquatur, to flatten, crush (Roquefort). = O. F. es- = Lat. ex-, extremely; and quatur, to press down, hence, reflexively, to press oneself down, to squat, cower. 'Ele se quatist deles lun de pilers' = she squatted down beside one of the pillars; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 282, l. 16. The corresponding word is Span. acachar, agachar, whence acacharse, 'to crouch, lie squat' (Meadows), agacharse, 'to stoop, couch, squat, cower' (id.). Minshew's O. Span. Dict. has: 'agachar, to squat as a hare or conie.' Without the prefix, we find Span. cacho, gacho, bent, bent downward, lit. pressed down; Ital. quatto, 'squatte, husht, close, still, lurking' (Florio), quattare, 'to squat, to husht, to lye close' (id.). Diez shews that O. F. quatur and Ital. quatto are due to Lat. coactus, pressed close together (whence also F. se cacher, to squat, cacher, to hide). Thus the etymology of squat is from Lat. ex-, co- for cum, together, and actus, pp. of agere, to drive. See Ex-, Con-, and Agent; and see Squash. Der. squatt-er.⁵¹ Any connection of squat with Dan. svatle, to splash, is entirely out of the question; the E. word related to Dan. svatle is Squander, q. v.

SQUAW, a female, woman. (W. Indian.) 'Squaw, a female, woman, in the language of the Indian tribes of the Algonkin family. = Massachusetts squa, eshqua; Narragansett squaws; Delaware ochqueu and khqueu; used also in compound words (as the names of animals) in the sense of female;' Webster.

SQUEAK, to utter a shrill sharp cry. (Scand.) In Hamlet, i. 1. 116. 'The squeaking, or screeking of a rat;' Baret (1580). = Swed. sväka, to croak; cf. Norweg. skvaka, to cackle (Aasen); Icel. skvakka, to give a sound, as of water shaken in a bottle, skak, a noise. And cf. Swed. svälla, to squeal. Allied to Squeal, Quack, Cackle; expressive of the sound made. So also G. quaken, to quack; quäken, quieken, to squeak. Der. squeak, sb.

SQUEAL, to utter a shrill prolonged sound. (Scand.) In Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 24. M. E. squelen, Cursor Mundi, l. 1344. = Swed. svälla, to squeal; Norweg. skvella, to squeal (Aasen). Used (in place of *squeak) as a frequentative of squeak; the sense is 'to keep on squeaking;' see Squeak. ¶ Notwithstanding the close similarity, squall is not quite the same word, though the words are now confused. Both, however, are expressive of continuous sounds. See Squall. Der. squeal, sb.

SQUEAMISH, scrupulously fastidious, over-nice. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) 'To be squamous, or nice, Delicias facere;' Baret (1580). This is one of the cases in which initial squ is put for sw; cf. sqaine, a swain (Levins); squaltern, to swelter (Prompt. Parv.). M. E. sweymous. 'Sweymous, or skeymouse, Abominativus;' Prompt. Parv., p. 482; also written queymous, p. 419. Squamous, in Chaucer, 3337, means fastidious, sparing, infrequent, retentive, with occasional violent exceptions; see l. 3805. In a version of the Te Deum from a 14th-century primer given by Maskell (Mon. Rit. ii. 12) we have 'Thou wert not skeymous of the maidens wombe;' see Notes and Queries, 4 S. iii. 181. The word is formed (with the suffix -ous = O. F. -eus = Lat. -osum) from the M. E. sweem, in the sense of 'vertigo' or dizziness, or what we now call a 'swimming' in the head. 'Sweem, or swaim, subita agrotatio,' Gouldman; cited by Way to illustrate 'Sweem, of mornyng [mourning], Tristicia, molestia, meror' in Prompt. Parv. Sweem, a swoon, trance, occurs in The Crowned King, l. 29, pr. in App. to P. Plowman, Text C. 'Soche a sweine hys harte can swalne' = such a dizziness overpowered his heart, Le Bone Florence, l. 770, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii. Swem, a sore grief, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 391. The word is from a Scand. source, so that the putting of squ (a Scand. combination) for sw is the less remarkable. For further illustrations, see 'Swaimish, Swaimous, hesitating, diffident' in the Cleveland Glossary; sweamen, to grieve, vex, displease, in the Ancien Riwle, pp. 312, 330, 398, 404. The orig. sense is dizzy, as if from a swimming in the head, hence overcome with disgust or distaste, faint, expressing distaste at, and so over-nice, fastidious, squeamish. = Icel. sveimr, a bustle, a stir (the sense 'a soaring' is out of place, as there is no real connection with swimma); Norweg. sveim, a hovering about, a sickness that comes upon one, esp. a contagious disease, a slight intoxication (Aasen). More common as Icel. svimi, a swimming in the head, Swed. svimning, a swoon, swooning, Dan. svimmel, giddiness, dizziness, svime, a fainting-fit, A. S. swima, a swoon (Grein), Du. zuijm, a swoon; cf. also Low G. sweimen, swemen, to hover or totter, to swoon, A.S. ásweinan, to wander (Grein). β. The simple verb appears in Icel. svima (frequent. svimra), to be giddy; O. Swed. svima, to be dizzy (Ihre), mod. Swed. svimma, to faint, Dan. svime, besvime, to faint. All from the base SWIM, as seen in E. swim, to be dizzy. Fick supposes this to be a different word from the usual E. swim, to float; and it is just as well to keep these verbs apart. See Swim (2).

¶ That squeamish was confused with qualmish is very probable; it seems to have affected the meaning of the word qualm, which was properly 'destruction,' from the verb to quell. That the words have no real connection, is clear from the utter difference between the verbs swim and quell. Der. squeamish-ly, -ness.

SQUEEZE, to crush or press tightly, to crowd. (E.) 'To squise, or thrust together;' Baret (1580). The initial s is prefixed for emphasis, being due to the O. F. ex- = Lat. ex-, an intensive prefix; to squeeze = to squeeze out. M. E. queisen; 'queise out the jus' = squeeze out the juice, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 302 (Stratmann). — A. S. cwisan, to squeeze, crush; generally written cwýsan, and used in the compound tócwýsan, to crush to pieces, squeeze to death, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 60, 512; ii. 26, 166, 294, 510. Also cwýsan; in Luke, xii. 18, where the earlier version has tócwýst (short for tó-cwýsēð), the latter has tócwýsēð (short for tócwýsēð). β. Leo and Etymüller have the spelling cwissan, but adduce no authority; in the quotations given by Leo, it is not really so spelt in the MSS. They wish to force a connection with A. S. cwiðan, to lament (Grein); as if cwissan were its causal. γ. It seems more likely to be related to Goth. kwiستان, to destroy. Cf. Swed. qvása, to squeeze, bruise, wound; G. quetschen, to squash, bruise. From the Teut. base KWIS, to destroy, Fick, iii. 55; where is further compared Lithuan. gaiszi, to destroy (Nesselmann, p. 245), Skt. ji, to overpower; perhaps from ✓GI, to overpower; Fick, iii. 570. Der. squeeze, sb.

SQUIB, (1) a paper tube, filled with combustibles, like a small rocket; also (2) a lampoon. (Scand.) 1. 'Can he tie squibs i' their tails, and fire the truth out?' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, v. 2. 6. 'A squibbe, a ball or dart of fire;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Spenser has it in the curious sense of 'paltry fellow,' as a term of disdain; Mother Hubbard's Tale, 371. Squibs were sometimes fastened slightly to a rope, so as to run along it like a rocket; 'The squib's run to the end of the line, and now for the cracker' [explosion]; Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. 1. 'Hung up by the heels like meteors, with squibs in their tails;' Ben Jonson, News from the New World (2nd Herald). β. Squib is a weakened form of swip, a word significant of swift motion; a squib was so named from its swift darting or flashing along. [A squib fastened to a ring on a string, or laid on very smooth ground, will run swiftly along backwards.] M. E. swippen, swippen, to move swiftly, fly, sweep, dash; 'the swyppand water' = the dashing or sweeping water, Anturs of Arthur (in Three Met. Romances), st. v. 'When the saul fra the body swippes, i. e. flies; Prick of Conscience, l. 2196. 'Tharfor þai swippe [dart] þurgh purgatory, Als a foul [bird] that flies smerly;' id. l. 3322. 'Isuip forð' = hurried away, snatched away, Ancrén Riwe, p. 228, l. 4. — Icel. svipa, to flash, dart, of a sudden but noiseless motion; svipa, a swift movement, twinkling, glimpse; Norweg. svipa, to run swiftly (Aasen). The Teut. base SWIP was also used to express the swift or sweeping motion of a whip; so that we also find A. S. swipe, a whip (John, ii. 15), Du. zweep, a whip, G. schwippe, a whip-lash, a switch. Note also Dan. svippe, to crack a whip, svip, an instant, moment, i et svip, in a trice, Swed. dial. svipa, sweipa, to sweep, swing, lash with a whip.

γ. All from Teut. base SWIP, to move with a turning motion, move swiftly, sweep along (Fick, iii. 365); see further under Sweep, Swoop, Swift. Thus a squib is 'that which moves swiftly,' 'that which sweeps along;' cf. 'suyppyr, agilis' in Prompt. Parv. 2. A squib also means a political lampoon; but it was formerly applied, not to the lampoon itself, but to the writer of it. 'The squibs are those who, in the common phrase of the world, are call'd libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers; their fireworks are made up in paper;' Tatler, no. 88; Nov. 1, 1709. It has been noted above that Spenser uses squib as a term of derision; it was equivalent to calling a man a firework, a flashy fellow, making a noise, but doing no great harm. 3. The sense of child's squirt is due to its resemblance to a squib; it squirts water instead of spouting fire.

SQUILL, a genus of bulbous plants allied to the onion. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. squille. 'Squille, herba, Cepa maris, bulbus;' Prompt. Parv. — F. squille, 'the squill, sea-onion; also, a prawn, shrimp;' Cot. — Lat. scilla, also scilla, a sea-onion, sea-leek; a kind of prawn. — Gk. σκίλλα, a squill; cf. σχιζος, a squill. β. Prob. for σκιδ-λα, σχιδ-ρος, from its splitting into scales; the prawn might be also named from its scaly coat; cf. σχιζέω (= σκιδ-γέω), to split, cleave; see Schism.

SQUINANCY, the old spelling of Quinsy, q. v.

SQUINT, to look askew. (Scand.) The earliest quotation is the following: 'Biholdēð o luft and asquint' = looks leftwards and askew; Ancrén Riwe, p. 212, l. 3. Like most words beginning with sq, the word is prob. Scandinavian; and I suppose the initial sq to stand for sw, as in other instances; see Squeamish. Moreover, the final t probably stands for an older k; as preserved in prov. E. (Suffolk) squink, to wink (Halliwell). Thus the oldest form would be swink. — Swed. svinka, to shrink, to flinch (whence the notion of looking aside or askance), nasalised form of svika, to balk, fail, flinch. Cf. O. Swed. svinka, to beguile. β. This Swed. svika is cognate with A. S. swican, to defraud, betray, also to escape, avoid; the orig. sense was prob. 'to start aside' or flinch; see the Teut. base SWIK in Fick, iii. 364. ¶ More light is desired regarding this word. The derivation above given is the best I can suggest.

SQUIRE (1), the same as Esquire, q. v. (F., — L.) It occurs, spelt squire, as early as in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 360. Doublet, squire.

SQUIRE (2), a square, a carpenter's rule. (F., — L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 474. M. E. squire, Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, 325. — O. F. esquiere, 'a rule, or square;' Cot. Mod. F. équierre. Merely another form of O. F. esquarre, a square; see Square. Doublet, square, sb.

SQUIRREL, a nimble, reddish-brown, rodent animal. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. squirrel (with one r), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 2777. Also scuriel. 'Hic scurillus, a scurille;' Wright's Voc. i. 251; cf. p. 188. — O. F. escurel (Burguy); spelt escurie in Cotgrave. Mod. F. écureuil. — Low Lat. scurillus (as above), also scuriolus (Ducange). Put for *sciurellus, *sciuriolus, diminutives of sciurus, a squirrel. — Gk. σκίονπος, a squirrel; lit. 'shadow-tail,' from his bushy tail. — Gk. σκῆν, for σκία, a shadow, from ✓SKA, to cover (see Scene); and οὐρά, a tail, for which see Curtius, i. 434. **[†]

SQUIRT, to jet, throw or jerk out water. (Scand.) 'I squyrte with a squyrte, an instrument;' Palsgrave. It is difficult to account for the r, which appears to be intrusive. It is doubtless allied to prov. E. squitter, to squirt (Somersetsh.), and squitter, a lask or loose-sense, diarrhoea. Thus Palsgrave has both: 'Squyrte, an instrument;' and 'Squyrte, a lax, foire.' Cotgrave gives O. F. foire, 'squirt, a laske.' — Swed. dial. skvittär, to sprinkle all round; frequentative of skvitta (pt. t. skvatt), a strong verb, with the same sense as Swed. skvätta, to squirt (Wiedgren), which is the causal form; see Rietz. Icel. skvettja, to squirt out, throw out, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug; skvetttr, a gush of water poured out. Dan. skvatte, to splash. See further under Squander. The prov. swirt, to squirt, is the same word, with sw for sq; we even find bilagged wit swirting = dirtied with squirting, in Walter de Bibbesworth, Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 1. Der. squirt, sb., in Palsgrave.

STAB, to pierce with a sharp instrument. (C.) 'I stabelle in with a dagger or any other sharpe wepyn;' Palsgrave. M. E. stabelle, sb.; 'Stabbe, or wovnde of smytynge, Stigma;' Prompt. Parv. I believe this word to be of Celtic origin, and to signify, originally, the driving into the ground of a sharpened wooden stake. — Irish stobaim, I stab; Gael. stob, to thrust or fix a stake in the ground, to stab, thrust, from stob, a stake, a pointed iron or stick, a stub or stump. This Gael. stob is cognate with E. staff; see Staff, Stub. (So also Russ. stavka, a setting, also a stake; stavite, to set, put, place.) Der. stab, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 63.

STABLE (1), a stall or building for horses. (F., — L.) M. E. stable, King Alisaunder, 778. — O. F. estable, 'a stable;' Cot. Mod. F. étable. — Lat. stabulum, a standing-place, abode, stall, stable. Formed with suffix -bu-lum from stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. Der. stable, verb, stabil-ing.

STABLE (2), firm, steady. (F., — L.) M. E. stable, Rob. of Glouc., p. 54, l. 9. — O. F. estable, stable (Burguy). — Lat. stabilis, acc. of stabilis, stable, standing firmly; formed with suffix -ilis from sta-re, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. Der. stabil-y; stable-ness, Mach. iv. 3. 92; stabil-ty, spelt stabiltyte, Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 38 (R.), coined from Lat. stabilitas, firmness. Also stabilish, M. E. stabilisen, Chaucer, C. T. 2997, the same word as establish, q. v.

STACK, a large pile of wood, hay, corn, &c. (Scand.) M. E. stak, stak. 'Stakke or heep, Agger;' Prompt. Parv. Stac in Havelok, 814, is prob. merely our stack. [Stacke, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Luxuria (Tyrwhitt), is an error for stank; see Group I, 841.] — Icel. stakkr, a stack of hay; cf. Icel. stakka, a stump, as in our chimney-stack, and in stack, a columnar isolated rock; Swed. stack, a rick, heap, stack; Dan. stak. The sense is 'a pile,' that which is set or stuck up; the allied E. word is Stake, q. v. Der. stack, verb, as in Swed. stacka, Dan. stakke, to stack; stack-yard, answering to Icel. stak-garðr, a stack-garth (garth being the Norse form of yard); also hay-stack, corn-stack.

STAFF, a long piece of wood, stick, prop, pole, cudgel. (E.)

M.E. staf, pl. staves (where u=v). 'Ylik a staf;' Chaucer, C. T. 594. 'Two staves;' P. Plowman, B. v. 28. = A.S. staf, pl. stafas, Exod. xxi. 19, John, vii. 15. The pl. stafas also meant letters of the alphabet; this meaning seems to be nearly preserved in staves as a musical term. + Du. staf. + Icel. stafur, a staff, also a written letter (see Icel. Dict.). + Dan. støb, stav. + Swed. staf. + G. stab; O.H.G. stap. + Gael. stob, a stake, stump. And cf. Lat. stipes, a stock, post, log; Goth. stabs, a letter, hence, an element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. β. The word is parallel to stüb, with much the same orig. sense, viz. a prop, support, a post firmly fixed in the ground; as shewn by Skt. sthāpaya, to place, set, establish, causal of sthā, to stand; from ✓STA, to stand; see Stand. So also Gael. stob, to fix in the ground as a stake, Irish stobaim, I. stab. And see Stub, Stab. Der. distaff (for dis-staff), q. v. Doublet, stave, sb.

STAG, a male deer. (Scand.) The word was also applied to the male of other animals. 'Stagge, ceruus;' Levins. 'Steggander [=steg-gander, male gander], anser;' id. Lowland Sc. stag, a young horse; prov. E. stag, a gander, a wren, a cock-turkey. - Icel. steggr, steggi, a he-bird, a drake, a tom-cat. Allied to Swed. steg, a step, a round of a ladder (lit. something to mount by). The sense is 'mounter;' from Icel. stiga, to mount. See Stair. Der. stag-hound.

STAGE, a platform, theatre; place of rest on a journey, the distance between two such resting-places. (F., -L.) M.E. stage, Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, 255; King Alisaunder, 7684. - O.F. estage, 'a story, stage, loft, or height of a house; also a lodging, dwelling-house;' Cot. Mod. F. étage; Ital. staggio, a prop; Prov. estage, a dwelling-place (Bartsch). Formed as if from a Lat. type *staticum (not found), a dwelling-place; due to Lat. statum, supine of stare, to stand, with suffix -icus, -icum. See Stable (1), Stand. Der. stage-coach, a coach that runs from stage to stage; stage-player; stag-ing, a scaffolding.

STAGGER, to reel from side to side, vacillate; also, to cause to reel, to cause to hesitate. (Scand.) 'I stagg, I stande not sted-fast;' Palsgrave. Stagger is a weakened form of stacker, M.E. stakeren. 'She rist her up, and stakereth heer and ther;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 37 from end. - Icel. stakra, to push, to stagger; frequentative of staka, to punt, to push. We also find stjaka, to punt, push with a pole, derived from stjaki, a punt-pole, a stake; similarly staka must be derived from an old form (staki?) of stjaki, which is cognate with E. Stake, q. v. So also Dan. stage, to punt with a pole, from stage, a pole, a stake. Thus the orig. sense was 'to keep pushing about,' to cause to vacillate or reel; the intransitive sense, to reel, is later. + O. Du. staggeren, to stagger as a drunken man (Hexham); frequent. of staken, staecken, to stop or dam up (with stakes), to set stakes, also 'to leave or give over worke,' id. In this latter view, to stagger might mean 'to be always coming to a stop,' or 'often to stick fast.' Either way, the etymology is the same. Der. staggers, s. pl., vertigo, Cymb. v. 5. 234.

STAGNATE, to cease to flow. (L.) A late word; stagnate and stagnant are in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. stagnatus, pp. of stagnare, to be still, cease to flow, to form a still pool. - Lat. stagnum, a pool, a stank. See Stank. Der. stagnat-ion; also stagnant, from Lat. stagnant-, stem of pres. part. of stagnare. Also stanch, q. v.

STAID, steady, grave, sober. (F., -O. Du.) It may be observed that the resemblance to steady is accidental, though both words are ultimately from the same root, and so have a similar sense. Staid stands for stay'd, pp. of stay, to make steady; and the actual spelling stay'd is by no means uncommon. 'The strongest man o' th' empire, Nay, the most stay'd... The most true;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 6. 11. 'The fruits of his stay'd faith;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 24 (R.). Spenser even makes the word dissyllabic; 'Held on his course with stay'd stedfastnesse,' F. Q. ii. 12. 29. See Stay. Der. staid-ly, staid-ness.

STAIN, to tinge, dye, colour, sully. (F., -L.) An abbreviation of distain, like sport for disport, spend for dispend. M.E. steinen, Gower, C. A. i. 225, l. 19; short for distainen, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 255. - O. F. desteindre, 'to distain, to dead or take away the colour of;' Cot. 'I stayne a thyng, I destayns,' Palsgrave. Thus the orig. sense was 'to spoil the colour of,' or dim; as used by Chaucer. - Lat. dis-, away; and tingere, to dye. See Dis and Tinge. Der. stain, sb.; stain-less, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 278.

STAIR, a step for ascending by. (E.) Usually in the plural. [The phrase 'a pair of stairs' = a set of stairs; the old sense of pair being a set of equal things; see Pair.] M.E. stair, steire, steyer. 'Ne steyers to steye [mount] on;' Test. of Love, b. i; near the beginning. 'Heih is þe steire' = high is the stair; Ancien Riwle, p. 284, l. 8; the pl. steiren occurs in the line above. - A.S. stæger, a stair, step; 'Ascensorium, stæger,' Wright's Voc. i. 26, col. 2, l. 3. [The g passes into y as usual, and just as A.S. dæg became day, so A.S. stæger became stayer, steyer, stair.] The lit. sense is 'a step to climb by,' 'a mounter;' from A.S. stáh, pt. t. of stigan, to climb. + Du. steiger, a stair; allied to stegel, a stirrup, steg, a narrow bridge; all from stijgen, to mount. Cf. also Icel. stigi, stegi, a step, ladder (whence prov. E. stee, a ladder), stigr, a path, foot-way (orig. an uphill path); from stiga, to mount. + Swed. steg, a round of a ladder, stega, a ladder; from stiga, to mount. + Dan. stige, a ladder, sti, a path; from stige, to mount. + G. steig, a path; from steigen, to mount. β. All from Teut. base STIG, to climb, mount (Fick, iii. 347), answering to Aryan ✓STIGH, to climb, ascend, whence also Skt. stigh, to ascend, Gk. σείχειν, to ascend, march, go, Goth. steigan, to ascend; also E. stile, q. v., stirrup, q. v. Der. stair-case; stair-work, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 75.

STAITHE, a landing-place. (E.) A provincial word; also spelt staitth, stathe (Halliwell). - A.S. stæð, a bank, shore (Grein); also A.S. stæð, Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 147, l. 5. Cf. Icel. stöð, a harbour, roadstead. Allied to Stead, q. v.

STAKE, a post, strong stick, pale. (E.) M.E. stake, Chaucer, C. T. 2620 (dissyllabic). - A.S. staca, a stake, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. cap. 5; also a sharply pointed pin, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 230, l. 14. The latter sense is important, as pointing to the etymology. From the Teut. base STAK, to pierce; appearing in G. stach, pt. t. of the strong verb stechen, to pierce, stick into. See Stick (1). Thus, the orig. sense is 'a piercer,' the suffix -a marking the agent, as in A.S. hunt-a, a hunter; hence a pin, a sharply pointed stick. + O. Du. stake, staek, 'a stake or a pale, a pile driven into water, a stake for which one playeth;' Hexham (Du. staak). Cf. steken, to stab, put, stick, prick, sting; id. + Icel. stjaki, a stake, punt-pole. + Dan. stage, a stake. + Swed. stake, a stake, a candle-stick. And cf. G. stake, a stake, pole (perhaps borrowed); stachel, a prick, sting, goad. β. The sense of a sum of money to be played for may be borrowed from Dutch, being found in O. Dutch, as above. It occurs in Wint. Tale, i. 2. 248; and the phr. at stake or at the stake occurs five times in Shak. (Schmidt). In this sense, a stake is that which is 'put' or pledged; cf. O. Du. hemselves in schuld't steken, 'to runne himself into debt;' Hexham.

¶ A closely allied word is stack, a pile, a thing stuck up; see Stack.

STALACTITE, an inverted cone of carbonate of lime, hanging like an icicle in some caverns. (Gk.) Modern. So called because formed by the dripping of water. Formed, with suffix -ite (Gk. -ιτης), from σταλακτ-ος, trickling; cf. σταλακτῖς (base σταλακτιδ-), that which drops. - Gk. σταλάζειν (= σταλάγ-ειν), to drop, drip; lengthened form of σταλάειν, to drip. We also find στακτός, trickling, from στάζειν (= στάγ-ειν), to drip, from the base σταγ- of σταγάν, a drop, στάγμα, a drop. β. The notion seems to be that of becoming stagnant, as in the case of water that only drips, not flows; and both bases (σταλ- and σταγ-) may perhaps be referred to the prolific ✓STA, to stand, be firm. See Stank. And see Stalagmite.

STALAGMITE, a cone of carbonate of lime on the floor of a cavern formed by dripping water. (Greek.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ite (Gk. -ιτης), from στάλαγμα, a drop; from σταλάζειν (= σταλάγ-ειν), to drip. See Stalactite.

STALE (1), too long kept, tainted, vapid, trite. (Scand.) Stale is also used as a sb., in the sense of urine. Palsgrave gives it in this sense; and see escloy in Cotgrave. These senses are certainly connected, as shewn in O. Dutch. Hexham gives: 'Stel, stale; stebier, stale-beere; stel-pisse, stale-pisse, or urine.' Stale, adj., is in Chaucer, C. T. 13694, as applied to ale. The word is either of Low German or Scand. origin; we may, perhaps, consider it as the latter. - Swed. stalla, to put into a stall, to stall-feed; also, to stale, as cattle; Dan. stalde, to stall, stall-feed, stalle, to stale (said of horses). - Swed. stall, a stable; Dan. stald, a stable (whence also staldmög, stable-dung). These words are cognate with E. Stall, q. v. Hence stale is that which reminds one of the stable, tainted, &c. β. In one sense, we may explain stale as 'too long exposed for sale,' as in the case of provisions left unsold; cf. O. F. estaler, 'to display, lay open wares on stalls' (Cot.), from estal, 'the stall of a shop, or booth, any place where wares are laid and shewed to be sold.' But since this F. estal is merely borrowed from the Teutonic word stall, it comes to much the same thing.

¶ Wedgwood, following Schmeller, explains stale, sb., from stopping the horse to let him stale; and cites Swed. ställa en hest, to stop a horse. But, here again, the Swed. ställa is derived from Swed. stall, orig. a stopping-place; and this again brings us back to the same result. The etymology is certain, whatever may be the historical explanation. Der. stale, verb, Antony, ii. 2. 240; stale-ness, Per. v. i. 58.

STALE (2), a decoy, snare. (E.) 'Still as he went, he crafty stales did lay;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. M.E. stale, theft; hence stealth, deceit, slyness, or a trap; it occurs in Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 9, l. 24. Compare the phrase cumen bi stale = to come by stealth, to surprise; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 249, l. 20. - A.S. stalu, theft, Matt.

xv. 19. — A.S. stelan, to steal; see Steal. Cf. A.S. stælhrán, a decoy ^φreindeer.

STALE (3), STEAL, a handle. (E.) Chiefly applied to the long handle of a rake, hoe, &c.; spelt Steale in Halliwell. Stale also means a round of a ladder, or a stalk (id.) M.E. stale. 'A ladel . . . with a long stale' (2 MSS. have stale); P. Plowman, C. xxii. 279. — A.S. stæl, stel; the dat. pl. stælum (in another MS. stælum) occurs in A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 154, in the sense of 'stalks.' + Du. steel, a stalk, stem, handle. + G. stiel, M.H.G. stīl, a handle, broom-stick, stalk. β. The form stale seems put for stale; the orig. vowel appears to be i, as in M.H.G. stīl. The etymology is not clear; but it may be only a weakened form of Stall; a stall might mean the handle to which a tool is made fast, or by which it is held tight; see Still.

γ. Cf. further Gk. σταλς, a stake to which nets were fastened, στελεόν, στελεών, στελεών, a handle or helve of an axe, στήλη, a column; these are certainly allied to Gk. στέλλειν, to set, place, and therefore allied also to Stall, Still. We may also compare Gk. στερεός, firm, solid, G. starr, firm, stiff; words which spring from the same prolific ✓STA, to stand, and are related to the words already cited. ¶ It is not likely that A.S. stæl or stel is a mere derivative from Lat. stilus, in the sense of stem. Der. stalk (1) and (2), q. v.

STALK (1), a stem. (E.) M.E. stalke, of which one sense is the stem or side-piece of a ladder. 'To climben by the ronges [rungs] and the stalke;' Chaucer, C. T. 3625. A dimin. form, with suffixed -ke, of M.E. stale, stale, a handle, A.S. stæl, stel, a stalk; see Stale (3). + Icel. stílk, a stalk; Dan. stilk; Swed. stjélk. Cf. also Gk. στέλεχος, a trunk, stem (of a tree), allied to στελεόν, a handle; also στήλη, a column; see Curtius, i. 261. Der. stalk (2), q. v.

STALK (2), to stride, walk with slow steps. (E.) M.E. stalken, to walk cautiously. 'Stalkeden ful stilly;' Will. of Palerne, 2728. 'With drefful foot [timid step] than stalketh Palamon;' Chaucer, C. T. 1481. — A.S. stalcun, to go warily; stalcung, a stalking. These words are due to Somner, and unauthorized; but the word also occurs in Danish, and he is probably right. + Dan. stálke, to stalk. Cf. A.S. stealc, lofty, high (Grein). The notion is that of walking with lifted feet, so as to go noiselessly; the word is prob. connected with Stilt, q. v., and with Stalk (1) above. Halliwell has Stalk, the leg of a bird; stálke, to go slowly with, a quotation from Gower, C. A. i. 187; also stílt, the handle of a plough, which (like stalk) is clearly an extension of Stale (3). We may explain stalk, verb, as to walk on lengthened legs or stalks, to go on tiptoe or noiselessly. Der. stalk-er; stalk-ing-horse, a horse for stalking game, explained in Dictionarium Rusticum, 1726, quoted at length in Halliwell.

STALL, a standing-place for cattle, shed, division of a stable, a table on which things are exposed for sale, a seat in a choir or theatre. (E.) All the senses are from the notion of fixed or settled place or station. Indeed, station is from the same root. M.E. stal; dat. stalle, Chaucer, C. T. 8083. — A.S. stæl, a place, station, stall; Grein, ii. 480; also stæl, id. 477. + Du. stal, + Icel. stallr, a stall, pedestal, shelf; cf. stall, an altar. + Dan. stald (for stall), a stable. + Swed. stall. + G. stall; O.H.G. stal. + Lithuan. stalas, a table. + Skt. sthala, sthāla, firm ground, a spot drained and raised, a terrace. And cf. Gk. στήλη, a column; στέλλειν, to place, set.

β. All with the sense of firm place or station; from ✓STA, extended from ✓STA, to stand fast. See Stand. The base STA is the same as STAR, appearing in Gk. στερεός, firm, G. starr, firm, Skt. sthira, firm, fixed, steady, sure; see Stare. Der. stall-age, from O.F. estallage, 'stallage,' Cot., where estal, a stall, is borrowed from Teutonic, and the suffix -age answers to Lat. -aticum. Also stall, verb, Rich. III, i. 3. 206; stall-ed, fattened in a stall, Prov. xv. 17, from Swed. stalla, Dan. stalle, to stall-feed, feed in a stall. Also stall-feed, verb; stall-fed, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. xv. 161. Also stall-i-on, q. v. From the same root are sta-tion, sta-ble, &c.

STALLION, an entire horse. (F., — O.H.G.) Spelt stalland in Levens, with excrement d; stallant in Palsgrave, with excrement t. M.E. stalon, Wright's Vocab. i. 187, col. 1, Gower, C. A. iii. 280, l. 24. — O.F. estalon, 'a station for mares;' Cot. Mod. F. étalon; cf. Ital. stallone, a stallion, also a stable-man, ostler. So called because kept in a stall and not made to work; Diez cites equus ad stalum from the Laws of the Visigoths. — O.H.G. stal, a stall, stable; cognate with E. Stall, q. v.

STALWART, sturdy, stout, brave. (E.) A corruption of M.E. stalworth, Will. of Palerne, 1950; Pricke of Conscience, 689; Havelok, 904. It is noticeable that e sometimes appears after the l; as in stelewurde, O. Eng. Hom. i. 25, l. 12; stelewurde, Juliana, p. 45, l. 11; stelewurde, St. Margaret, p. 15, l. 3 from bottom. — A.S. stæl-wyrðe (plural), A.S. Chron. an. 896. β. Bosworth explains this word as 'worth stealing,' and therefore 'worth having.' In the A.S. Chron. it is applied to ships, and means 'serviceable'; we are told that the men of London went to fetch the ships, and they broke up all they could not remove, whilst those that were serviceable (stæl-wyrðe) they brought to London. As applied to men, it is not improbable that the sense meant 'good at stealing,' clever at fetching off plunder, hence, excellent, stout, brave. The spellings stelewurðe, stelewurðe suggest a connection with A.S. stalu, theft; whilst it is certain that the A.S. stæl in composition commonly refers to the same. Thus we have stælgast, a thievish guest (Grein); stalgang, supposed to mean a stealthy step (id.); stælhære, a predatory army, A.S. Chron. 897 (close to the passage where stælwyrðe occurs). We may also note A.S. stælhrán, a decoy reindeer, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. i. § 15. If this be right, we must refer the prefix to A.S. stelan, to steal; see Steal.

γ. On the other hand, Leo suggests 'stall-worthy,' worthy of a stall or place; if this were right (which I doubt), the prefix would be Stall, q. v. We might then compare it with stead-fast. [Ettmüller cites 'stealweard, adjutorium;' this would be 'stall-ward' in mod. E., and that cannot be the same word, having a different suffix.] We should then expect to find an occasional M.E. stallewurðe rather than stelewurðe; it seems certain that M.E. stale (with one l) could not have been understood as meaning stall.

8. For the latter part of the word, see Worth, Worthy. STAMEN, one of the male organs of a flower. (L.) The lit. sense is 'thread.' A botanical term. The pl. stamina, lit. threads, fibres, is used in E. (almost as a sing. sb.) to denote firm texture, and hence strength or robustness. — Lat. stamen (pl. stamina), the warp in an upright loom, a thread. Lit. 'that which stands up;' formed with suffix -men (Aryan -man) from stare, to stand; see Stand. Cf. Gk. λόρός, a warp, from the same root. Der. stamin or tammy.

STAMIN, TAMINE, TAMINY, TAMIS, TAMMY, a kind of stuff. (F., — L.) The correct form is stamin or stamine; the other forms are corruptions, with loss of initial s, as in tank (for stank). M.E. stamin, Ancrén Riwle, p. 418, l. 20. — O.F. estamine, 'the stuffe tamine;' Cot. — Lat. stamineus, consisting of threads. — Lat. stamin-, base of stamen, a thread, stamen; see Stamen.

STAMMER, to stutter, to falter in speech. (E.) M.E. stameren, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 65; Arthur and Merlin, 2864 (Stratmann). Formed as a verb from A.S. stamer or stamur, adj., stammering. 'Balbus, stamer,' Wright's Voc. i. 45, col. 2; 'Balbus, stamur,' id. 75, col. 2. The suffix -er, -ur, or -or is adjectival, expressive of 'fitness or disposition for the act or state denoted by the theme;' cf. bit-or, bitter, from bítan, to bite; March, A.S. Grammar, § 242. Thus stamer signifies 'disposed to come to a stand-still,' such being the sense of the base stam-, which is an extension of the ✓STA, to stand; see Stumble. + Du. stameren, stamelen, to stammer. + Icel. stamr, stammering; stamma, stama, to stammer. + Dan. stamme, to stammer. + Swed. stamma (the same). + G. stammern, stammeln (the same); from O.H.G. stam, adj., stammering. + Goth. stamms, adj., stammering, Mark, vii. 32. Der. stammer-er.

STAMP, to strike the foot firmly down, tread heavily and violently, to pound, impress, coin. (E.) M.E. stampen, Chaucer, C. T. 12472. 'And stamped heom in a mortar;' King Alisaunder, 332. — A.S. stempen; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 378, l. 18. + Du. stampen. + Icel. stappa (for stampa, by assimilation). + Swed. stampa. + Dan. stampe. + G. stampfen (whence F. estamper, étamper); cf. G. stampfe, O.H.G. stamph, a pestle for pounding. + Gk. στέμνειν, to stamp. + Skt. stambh, to make firm or immovable, to stop, block up, make hard; cf. stamba, sb., a firm post, stambha, a post, pillar, stem. β. All from ✓STABH, to prop, to stem, to stop; one of the numerous extensions of ✓STA, to stand. See Fick, i. 821. 'The notions of propping and stamping are united in this root;' Curtius, i. 262. To which we may add the notion of 'stopping;' see Stop. Der. stamp, sb., Cor. ii. 3. 11; stamp-er; also stamp-ede, q. v.

STAMPEDE, a panic, sudden flight. (Span., — Teut.) 'Stampede, a sudden fright seizing upon large bodies of cattle or horses, . . . leading them to run for many miles; hence, any sudden flight in consequence of a panic;' Webster. The e represents the sound of Span. i. — Span. (and Port.) estampido, 'a crash, the sound of anything bursting or falling;' Neuman. Formed as if from a verb *estampir, akin to estampar, to stamp. The reference appears to be to the sound caused by the blows of a pestle upon a mortar. The Span. estampar is of Teut. origin; see Stamp.

STANCH, STAUNCH, to stop the flowing of blood. (F., — L.) M.E. staunchen, to satisfy (hunger), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 3, l. 1948, b. iii. met. 3, l. 1961; to quench (flame), Gower, C. A. i. 15, l. 13. — O.F. estancher, 'to stanch, stop an issue of blood, to slake or quench hunger, thirst, &c.;' Cot. Cf. Span. estancar, to stop, check. — Low Lat. stancare, to stop the flow of blood; cf. Low Lat. stancia, a dam to hem in water. The Low Lat. stancare is a variant of stagnare, also used in the same sense of to stop the flow of blood (Ducange). See Stagnant and Stank. Der. stanch or staunch, adj., firm, sound, not in early use; Phillips (ed. 1706) gives stanch, 'substantial, solid, good, sound;' this is derived from the verb, which Baret (1580) explains by 'to staie, or stanch blood, . . . also to staie, to confirme, to make more strong;' it was suggested by the F. pp. estanché, 'stanché, stopped, stayed' (Cot.), or (as a nautical term) by Span. stanco, water-tight, not leaky, said of a ship. Hence stanch-ly or staunch-ly; stanch-ness or staunch-ness. Also stanch-less, Macb. iv. 3. 78; stanch-ion, q. v.

STANCHION, a support, an upright beam used as a support, a bar. (F., = L.) 'Stanchions (in a ship), certain pieces of timber which, being like pillars, support and strengthen those call'd waste-trees;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — O. F. estancion, estanson, 'a prop, stay;' Cot. (Cf. O. F. estancer, 'to prop, to stay,' id. This is a doublet of estancher, 'to stanch, stop, or stay;' id. See Stanch.) However, estancion (mod. F. étancion) is not derived from this verb, but is a dimin. of O. F. estance, a situation, condition (Burguy), also used, according to Scheler, in the sense of stanchion. — Low Lat. stantia, a house, chamber (Ducange); lit. 'that which stands firm.' — Lat. stanti-, crude form of pres. part. of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand. ¶ The final result is much the same either way. See Stanza.

STAND, to be stationary or still, to rest, endure, remain, be firm, &c. (E.) M. E. standen, pt. t. stood, stod, pp. stonden, standen. The pp. stonden is in Chaucer, C. T. 9368; and in the Earl of Tolouse, l. 322, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii. — A. S. standan, standan, pt. t. stōð (misprinted stōð in Grein), pl. stōdon, pp. stoden; Grein, i. 475. + Icel. standa. + Goth. standan, pt. t. stoth. β. Here the base is STAND; the A. S. pt. t. stōð may be explained as put for stond = stand, the long o being due to loss of n. The same base occurs in other Teut. languages, though the infinitive mood exhibits contracted forms. Thus we have Du. stond, I stood, pt. t. of staan; Dan. stod, pt. t. of staae; Swed. stod, pt. t. of så; G. stand, pt. t. of stehen. γ. In other languages, the base is STA or STĀ, as in Lat. stare; Gk. ἵστην (I stood); Russ. stoiat, to stand; Skt. sthā, to stand. All from Aryan √ STA, to stand; one of the most prolific roots, with numerous extended forms, such as STAP, causal, to make to stand, STAR, to stand fast, STAK, to stick, fix, STABH, to stop; see Fick, i. 244, iii. 340. Der. stand, sb., Merch. Ven. v. 77; stand-er, Troil. iii. 3. 84; stand-er-by (the same as by-stand-er), Troil. iv. 5. 190; stand-ing, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 431; stand-ing-bed, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 7; standish (for stand-dish), a standing dish for pen and ink, Pope, On receiving from Lady Shirley a Standish and two Pens. Also under-stand, with-stand. Also stand-ard, q. v. Also (from Lat. stare) stable (1), sta-ble (2), sta-bl-ish, e-sta-bl-ish, stage, staid, sta-men, con-sta-ble, stay (1); ar-re-st, contra-st, ob-sta-cle, ob-stet-ric, re-st (2); (from supine stat-um) state, stat-us, stat-ion, stat-ist, stat-ue, stat-ute, estate, armi-stice, con-stit-ute, de-stit-ute, in-stit-ute, inter-stice, pro-stit-ute, re-in-state, re-stit-ut-ion, sol-stice, sub-stit-ute, super-stit-ion; (from pres. part., base stant-) circum-stance, con-stant, di-stant, ex-tant (for ex-stant), in-stant, in-stant-a-e-ous, in-stant-er, stanz-a, sub-stance, sub-stant-ive. Also (from Lat. sistere, causal of stare) as-sist, con-sist, de-sist, ex-sist (for ex-sist), in-sist, per-sist, re-sist, sub-sist. Other Lat. or F. words from the same root are stagnate, stanch, stanchion, stank or tank, stolid, sterile, destine, obstinate, predes-tine, stop, stoppel, stupid; stedevore (Spanish). Words of Gk. origin are sto-ic, stat-ics, ster-eo-scope, apo-sta-sy, ec-sta-sy, meta-sta-sis, sy-st-em; stole, epi-stle, apo-stle, stetho-scope, &c. Besides these we have numerous E. words from numerous bases; as (1) from base STAP, staple, step, stab (Celtic), stub, stump, staff, stave, stamp, stiff, stifle; (2) from base STAL, stall, still, stale (1), stale (3), stal-k, stil-t, stow-t (for stolt); (3) from base STAM, stem (1), stem (3), stamm-er, stum-ble; (4) from base STAD (cf. E. stand), stead, stead-fast, stead-y, stud (1), stead, stith-y, staithe. See also stare, steer (1), steer (2), stud (2), steel, stool, stow, store, story (2).

STANDARD, an ensign, flag, model, rule, standing tree. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. standard, in early use; it occurs in the A. S. Chronicle, an. 1138, with reference to the battle of the Standard. — O. F. estandard, 'a standard, a kind of ensigne for horsemen used in old time; also the measure . . . which we call the Standard;' Cot. In all senses, the orig. idea is 'something fixed;' the flag was a large one, on a fixed pole. Formed with suffix -art (= G. -hart, suffix, the same word as hart, adj.), cognate with E. hard, brachet, Introd. § 196) from O. H. G. stand-an, to stand, now only used in the contracted form stehen. This O. H. G. standan is cognate with E. Stand, q. v. β. This etymology is adopted by Scheler, in preference to that of Diez, who takes the O. F. estandard (also in Cotgrave) as the better form, and derives it from O. F. estendre = Lat. extendere, to extend. This is supported by the Ital. form standardo; on the other hand, we have E. standard, Span. estandarite; and the E. standard of value and standard-tree certainly owe their senses to the verb to stand. So also O. Du. standaert, 'a standard, or a great trophy, a pillar or a column, a mill-post;' Hexham.

STANG, a pole, stake. (Scand.) Spelt stangue in Levens (with added -ue, as in tongue). M. E. stange, Gawain and Green Knight, 1614. [Rather from Scand. than from A. S. steng (Grein).] — Icel.

sting (gen. stangar), a pole, stake; Dan. stang; Swed. stäng. + Du. stang. + G. stange. From the pt. t. of the verb sting; see Sting. Cf. Icel. stanga, to goad.

STANK, a pool, a tank. (F., = L.) A doublet of tank, of which it is a fuller form. Once a common word; see Halliwell. M. E. stank; spelt stanc, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1018; see Spec. of English, pt. ii. p. 162, l. 1018. — O. F. estang, 'a great pond, pool, or standing water;' Cot. Cf. Prov. estanc, Span. estanque, Port. lanque. — Lat. stagnum, a pool of stagnant or standing water. Put for *stancum; from the base STAK, to be firm, be still; cf. Lithuan. stokas, a stake, Skt. stak, to resist; extended from √ STA, to stand. See Stake, Stand. Fick, i. 820. Der. stagn-ate, stanch, stanch-ion. Doublet, tank. [†]

STANNARY, relating to tin-mines. (L.) 'The Stannary courts in Devonshire and Cornwall;' Blackstone, Comment. b. iii. c. 6 (R.) 'Stannaries in Cornwall;' Minshew, ed. 1627. — Low Lat. stannaria, a tin-mine (Ducange). — Lat. stannum, tin; also, an alloy of silver and lead, which is perhaps the older sense; Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 16. β. Also spelt stagnum, whence stagnus, adj.; and it is thought to be merely another sense of Lat. stagnum, a pool, applied to a mass of fused metal. See Stank. Cf. Corn. stean, W. ystaen, Bret. stean, Irish stan, Gael. staoin, Manx stainney; all cognate with Lat. stannum, or else (which is more likely) borrowed from it. And see Tin.

STANZA, a division of a poem. (Ital., = L.) Used by Dryden in his Pref. to the Barons' Wars (R.) We find stanzo (mod. edit. stanza) and stanze (now stanza) in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 5. 18, L. L. L. iv. 2. 107; Minshew has stanze, ed. 1627. 'Staffe in our vulgar poesie . . . the Italian called it stanza, as if we should say a resting-place;' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, b. ii. c. 2. — Ital. stanza, O. Ital. stantia, 'a lodging, chamber, dwelling, also a stanze or staffe of verses or songs;' Florio. So named from the stop or halt at the end of it. — Low Lat. stantia, an abode. — Lat. stanti-, crude form of pres. part. of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. And see Stanchion.

STAPLE (1), a loop of iron for holding a pin or bolt. (E.) M. E. stapel, stapil; spelt stapylle in the Prompt. Parv.; stapil, stapul in Cursor Mundi, 8288; stapel, a prop or support for a bed. Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 201. — A. S. stapul. 'Patronus, stapul;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 2. (Here patronus = a defence; the gloss occurs amongst others having reference to parts of a house.) The orig. sense is a prop, support, something that furnishes a firm hold, and it is derived from the strong verb stapan, to step, to tread firmly. — Teut. base STAP, to step, tread firmly; allied to Skt. stambh, to make firm or immovable. See Step, Stamp. And see Staple (2). + Du. stapel, a staple, stocks, a pile; allied to stappen, to step; O. Du. stapel, 'the foot or trevet whereupon anything rests;' Hexham. + Dan. stabel, a hinge, a pile. + Swed. stapel, a pile, heap, stocks, staple or emporium; cf. stappla, to stumble (frequentative form). + G. stapfel, a step of a ladder, a step; provincially, a staple or emporium; stapel, a pile, heap, staple or emporium, stocks, a stake; cf. stapfen, stappen, to step, to strut.

STAPLE (2), a chief commodity, principal production of a country. (F., = Low G.) 'A curious change has come over this word; we should now say, Cotton is the great staple, i. e. the established merchandise, of Manchester; our ancestors would have reversed this and said, Manchester is the great staple, or established mart, of cotton;' Trench, Select Glossary. 'Staple signifieth this or that towne, or citie, whether [whither] the Merchants of England by common order or commandement did carrie their woolles, wool-fels, clothes, leade, and tinne, and such like commodities of our land, for the vtterance of them by the great' [wholesale]; Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. estaple, later estape, 'a staple, a mart or general market, a publique store-house,' &c.; Cot. Mod. F. étape. — Low G. stapel, a heap, esp. one arranged in order, a store-house of certain wares in a town, where they are laid in order; whence such wares were called stapel-waaren; Brem. Wörterbuch, q. v. This is the same word as Staple (1), the meanings of which are very various; it has the sense of 'heap' in Du., Dan., Swed., and G., though not in English; shewing that this particular use of the word was derived through the French. Prob. the word came into use, in the special sense, in the Netherlands, where were the great commercial cities. ¶ I think it clear that the F. word was of Low G., not High G., origin. The word stapel, in mod. G., is clearly borrowed from Low G., the true G. form being stapfel. As E. Müller well remarks, the successive senses were prop, foundation or support, stand for laying things on, heap, heaped wares, store-house. The one sense of 'firmness' or 'fixedness' runs through all these; and it is quite conceivable that many Englishmen regard the word as having some connection with stable or established; such a connection does indeed, ultimately, exist, but not in the way of deriving 'staple' from 'stable,' which would be impossible, as the mod. F. étape at once shews.

STAR, a heavenly body, not including the sun and moon. (E.) M. E. sterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2063. — A. S. steorra; Grein, ii. 482. + Du. ster (in composition, sterre). + O. H. G. sterro. (There are also forms with final -n (-na), viz. Icel. stjarna, Swed. stjerna, Dan. stjerne, Goth. stairno, G. stern.) + Lat. stella (for ster-ula, a dimin. form; the Lat. astrum is borrowed from Gk.) + Gk. ἀστρον, gen. ἀστέρος, with pros-thetic a. + Corn. and Bret. steren; W. seren (for steren). + Skt. tārā (for stārā), also stīrī. β. The sense is 'strewer' or 'spreader,' or disperser of light. — ✓ STAR, to spread, strew, as in Skt. stīrī, Lat. ster-nere, to spread; see STRATUM. 'Previous to the confusion of the Aryan tongues, the root star, to strew, was applied to the stars, as strewing about or sprinkling forth their sparkling light;' Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. ii. 237 (8th ed.). Der. star, verb; star-fish, star-gaz-er, star-light; starr-ed; starr-y; day-star, lode-star. And see aster, stellar, stare (2); also straw, stratum, street, strew, structure.

STARBOARD, the right side of a ship, looking forward. (E.) Spelt starboard in Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. sterebourde, Mortre Arthur, 745; stereburde, id. 3665. — A. S. steorbord, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. i, where it is opposed to bæcbord, i. e. larboard; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 18. There is no doubt whatever that steorbord = steer-bord, and it is certain that the steersman stood on the right side of the vessel to steer; in the first instance, he probably used a paddle, not a helm. The Icel. stjörn means steerage, and the phr. á stjörn, lit. at the helm (or steering-paddle), means on the right or starboard side. Thus the derivation is from A. S. stéor, a rudder (whence also steórmann, a steersman) and bord, a board, also the side of a ship; see STEER and BOARD. + Du. stuurbord; from stuur, helm, and boord, board, also border, edge. + Icel. stjörn-borði, starboard; from stjörn, steerage, and borð, a board, side of a ship; cf. borði, a border. + Dan. styrbord; from styr, steerage, and bord. + Swed. styrbord (the same).

STARCHE, a gummy substance for stiffening cloth. (E.) 'Starche for kychreys,' i. e. starch for kerchiefs; Prompt. Parv. So named because starch or stiff; starch being properly an adjective, and merely a weakened form of Stark, q. v. So also bench from A. S. benc, arch from F. arc, beseech for besek, &c. Cf. G. stärke, (1) strength, (2) starch; from stark, strong. Der. starch, adj., in the sense of 'formal,' due rather to starch, sb., than to a mere change of form and sense of the adjective stark; not an early word, and rare; see an example in Todd's Johnson; hence starch-ly, formally, and starch-ness; also starch-y. Also starch, verb, to stiffen with starch, as in 'starched beard,' Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, A. iv. sc. 4 (Carlo).

STARE (1), to gaze fixedly. (E.) M. E. staren, Chaucer, C. T. 13627. — A. S. starian, to stare; Grein, ii. 477. A weak verb, from a Teut. type STAR, adj., fixed; appearing in G. starr, stiff, inflexible, fixed, staring; cf. Skt. sthira (put for sthāra), fixed, firm. This adj. is formed by adding the Aryan suffix -ra, often adjectival (Schleicher, Compend. § 220) to the ✓ STA, to stand, be firm; see STAND. + Icel. stara, to stare; cf. Icel. stira, Swed. stirra, Dan. stirre, G. stieren, to stare. ¶ Hence to stare is also 'to be stiff,' as in 'makest . . . my hair to stare,' Jul. Caesar, iv. 3. 280. Der. stare, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 95. And see sterile, stereoscope.

STARE (2), to shine, glitter. (E.) M. E. staren. 'Staryn, or schynyn, and glyderyn, Niteo, rutilo,' Prompt. Parv. 'Starynge, or schynynge, as gaye thyngys, Rutilans, rutilus;' id. We still speak of staring, i. e. very bright, colours. The same word as Stare (1). The Prompt. Parv. also has: 'Staryn withe brode eyne, Patentibus oculis respicere.' From the notion of staring with fixed eyes we pass to that of the effect of the stare on the beholder, the sensation of the staring look. In the word glare, the transference in sense runs the other way, from that of gleaming to that of staring with a piercing look. See Stare (1). ¶ No original connection with star, of which the M. E. form was sterre, with two r's and a different vowel.

STARK, rigid, stiff; gross, absolute, entire. (E.) 'Stiff and stark;' Romeo, iv. i. 103. M. E. stark, stiff, strong, Chaucer, C. T. 9324, 14376. — A. S. stearc (for starc), strong, stiff; Grein, ii. 481. + Du. sterk. + Icel. sterkr. + Dan. sterk. + Swed. and G. stark. β. In most of these languages, the usual sense is 'strong'; but the orig. sense may very well have been rigid or stiff, as in English; cf. Goth. gastaurknith, lit. becomes dried up, used to translate Gk. ἐγκαταρρα in Mark, ix. 18, and Lithuan. strēgti, to stiffen, to freeze. γ. The notion of rigidity is further due to that of straining or stretching tightly; this appears in G. strecken, to stretch, (whence the phr. alle kräfte an etwas strecken, to strain, strive very hard, do one's utmost), Lat. stringere, to draw tight, bind firmly. The root-form is STARG, to stretch, an extension of ✓ STAR, to spread out; Fick, i. 826. See Stretch. And see Strong, which is a mere variant of stark. Der. stark-ly, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 70; stark-ness. Also stark, adv., wholly, as in stark mad. Also starch, q. v. But not stark-naked, q. v.

STARK-NAKED, quite naked. (E.) In Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 274. This phrase is doubtless now used as if compounded of stark, wholly, and naked, just as in the case of stark mad, Com. of Err. ii. 1. 59, v. 281; but it is remarkable that the history of the expression proves that it had a very different origin, as regards the former part of the word. It is an ingenious substitution for start-naked, lit. tail-naked, i. e. with the hinder parts exposed. Startnaked occurs in The Castell of Love, ed. Weymouth, l. 431; also in the Ancræn Riwe, pp. 148, 260, where the editor prints sterc-naked, steorc-naked, though the MS. must have steri-naked, steorti-naked, since stark is never spelt steorc. The same remark applies to steorti-naket in St. Marharete, p. 5, l. 19, where the editor tells us (at p. 109) that the MS. may be read either way. In St. Juliana, pp. 16, 17, we have steorti-naket in both MSS. β. The former element is, in fact, the M. E. stert, a tail, Havelok, 2823, from A. S. steort, a tail, Exod. iv. 4. It is still preserved in E. redstart, i. e. red tail, as the name of a bird. The Teut. type is STERTA, a tail, from ✓ STAR, to spread out; Fick, iii. 346; see STRATUM. + Du. stert, a tail. + Icel. stertir. + Dan. stiert. + Swed. stjert. + G. stierz. ¶ The phrase was early misunderstood; see Trevisa, iii. 97, where we have streigt blynde = wholly blind, with the various readings start blynde and stark blynde; here start-blynde is really nonsense. There is also stareblind, Owl and Nightingale, l. 241; but this answers to Dan. sterblind, from ster a cataract in the eye. We may also note prov. G. stierzvoll (lit. tail-full), wholly drunk, cited by Schmeller, Bavar. Dict. col. 785, l. 48, but apparently not understood by him.

STARLING, the name of a bird. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. i. 3. 224. M. E. sterlyng, Wright's Voc. i. 188, col. 2; formed (with double dimin. suffix -ling) from M. E. stare, a starling, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 348. — A. S. stær, a starling. 'Turdus, stær;' Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2; 'Sturnus, stær;' id. 63, l. 6. It also means a sparrow, Matt. x. 29. (Lind. MS.) We also find the forms stærn, stearn. 'Beatica, stearn;' Wr. Voc. i. 63, col. 2; 'Stronus [stornus?], stærn;' id. 29, col. 2. + Icel. starri, stari. + Dan. star. + Swed. stare. + G. staar. + Lat. sturnus. See Fick, iii. 825. Perhaps allied to Gk. ψάπ; Curtius, i. 443. Root uncertain.

START, to move suddenly, to wince, to rouse suddenly. (E.) M. E. sterlen, Chaucer, C. T. 1046. We also find stert, sb., a start, quick movement, Chaucer, C. T. 1705; Havelok, 1873. The verb does not appear in A. S., but we find the pt. t. stirte, Havelok, 873; spelt sturte, storte in Layamon, 23951. We may call it an E. word. Ettmüller gives an A. S. strong verb steortan * (pt. t. steart *, pp. storten *), but it is a theoretical form; and the same seems to be the case with the cognate O. H. G. sterzan * (pt. t. stanz *), to which he refers us. Stratmann cites an O. Icel. steria, but I cannot find it; there are traces of it in Icel. stertimadr, a man who walks proudly and stiffly, and Icel. uppstertr, an upstart, both given in Egilsson. β. Allied words are Du. storten, to precipitate, plunge, spill, fall, rush; Dan. styrte, to fall, precipitate, hurl; Swed. störta, to cast down, ruin, fall dead; G. stürzen, to hurl, precipitate, ruin, overturn. Note also Swed. dial. stjärta, to run wildly about (Rietz); Low G. steerten, to flee; these latter words certainly appear to be connected with Swed. stjert, Low G. steerd, a tail. The G. stürzen is derived from the sb. sturz, a sudden fall, tumble, precipice, waterfall, but also used in the sense of stump (i. e. tail); G. sturz am Pflug = E. plough-tail, prov. E. plough-start. The O. Du. steerten, 'to flee, to run away, or to save ones selfe' (Hexham), is, doubtless, to turn tail, from O. Du. steert, 'a taile, the crupper' (id.); cf. steertbollen, 'to tumble over one's head.' γ. I conclude that the verb is much more likely to be derived from the sb. start, a tail, than contrariwise the sb. from a strong verb steortan * which has not yet been found. If this be so, the orig. sense was to shew the tail, to tumble over suddenly, which seems to be precisely the sense to which the evidence points. On the sb. start, see under Stark-naked. If up-start can be thus explained as 'with one's tail up,' it is a very graphic expression.

In the Icel. Dict. we find: 'Sámr gekk mjök upp stertr = Sámr stalked very haughtily, prob. from the fine dress (sterta).' But why not from Icel. stertr, a tail? Cf. 'skera tagl upp í stert, to dock a horse's tail,' just two lines above. Der. start, sb., M. E. stert, as above; start-er; start-up, an upstart, Much Ado, i. 3. 69; up-start, q. v. Also start-le, the frequentative form, M. E. sterilen, to rush, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 1736, also to stumble along, Debate of Body and Soul, l. 120, pr. in Alteng. Sprachproben, ed. Mätzner, i. 94, and in Mapes' Poems, ed. Wright, p. 335.

STARVE, to die of hunger or cold, to kill with hunger or cold. (E.) Orig. intransitive, and used in the general sense of 'to die,' without reference to the means. M. E. steruen (with u = v), strong verb; pt. t. starf, Chaucer, C. T. 935, pp. storum, or i-storum, id. 2016. — A. S. steorfan, to die, pt. t. stearf, pp. storfen; 'starf of hunger' = died of hunger, A. S. Chron. an. 1124, last line. Hence was formed the trans. verb sterfan, to kill, weak verb; appearing in astarfed, pp., Matt. xv. 13 (Rushworth gloss). The mod. E. has confused the two forms, making them both weak. + Du. sterven, pt. t. stierf, storf, pp. gestorven. + G. sterben, pt. t. starb, pp. gestorben. β. All from Teut. base STARB, according to Fick, iii. 347; he also cites Icel. starf, labour, toil, starfa, to toil, as belonging to the same root. Der. starve-l-ing, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 1. 76. Also starv-at-ion, a ridiculous hybrid word, now in common use; it is an old Scottish word [?], but unknown in England till used by Mr. Dundas, the first Viscount Melville, in an American debate in 1775. That it then jarred strangely on English ears is evident from the nickname Starvation Dundas, which in consequence he obtained. See Letters of H. Walpole and Mann, vol. ii. p. 396, quoted in N. and Q. no. 225; and another proof of the novelty of the word, in Pegge's Anecdotes of the Eng. Language, 1814, p. 38.—Trench, Eng. Past and Present.

STATE, a standing, position, condition, an estate, a province, a republic, rank, dignity, pomp. (F., -L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. stat, Ancrén Riwle, p. 204, l. 2. — O. F. estat, 'estate, case, nature, &c.' Cot. — Lat. statum, acc. of status, condition. — Lat. statum, supine of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. — ✓ STA, to stand. ¶ Estate is a fuller form of the same word. Der. state, verb, quite a late word; stat-ed, stat-ed-ly; state-ment, a coined word; state-paper, state-prisoner, state-room; state-s-man, coined like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; state-s-man-like, state-s-man-ship. Also state-ly, M. E. estalich, Chaucer, C. T. 140, a hybrid compound; state-li-ness. And see stat-ion, stat-ist, stat-ue, stat-ure, stat-us, stat-ute. Doublets, estate, status.

STATICS, the science which treats of the properties of bodies at rest. (Gk.) Spelt staticks in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed as a plural from the adj. statick. 'The statick aphorisms of Sanctorius,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 7. § 2. — Gk. στατικός, at a standstill; ἡ στατική (sc. ἐπιστήμη), statics, the science of the properties of bodies at rest. — Gk. στατός, placed, standing, verbal adj. from στα, base of ίσταμι, I place, I stand. — ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. hydro-statics.

STATION, a standing, a post, assigned place, situation, rank. (F., -L.) M. E. station, Gower, C. A. iii. 91, l. 14. — F. station, 'a station'; Cot. — Lat. stationem, acc. of statio, a standing still. — Lat. status, pp. of stare, to stand; see Stand. Der. station-ary, from F. stationnaire (Cot.), Lat. adj. stationarius. Also station-er, a bookseller, Minsheu, ed. 1627, but orig. merely one who had a station or stand in a market-place for the sale of books; see Trench, Select Glossary; hence station-ery.

STATIST, a statesman, politician. (F., -L.; with Gk. suffix.) So in Shak. Hamlet. v. 2. 33. A hybrid word, coined from the sb. state by adding the suffix -ist (F. -iste = Lat. -ista = Gk. -ιστής). See State. Der. stat-ist-ic, i. e. relating to the condition of a state or people; whence stat-ist-ics (like statics from static).

STATUE, an upright image. (F., -L.) Sometimes statuē, trisyllabic, in which case it is generally printed statua in mod. edd. of Shakespeare, as if directly from Lat. statua. But it may be observed that Cotgrave writes statuē for the F. form. However, statua certainly occurs in Bacon, Essays 27, 37, 45. M. E. statue, Chaucer, C. T. 14165. — O. F. statuē, 'a statue'; Cot. Mod. F. statue. — Lat. statua, a standing image. — Lat. statu-, crude form of status, a standing, position, state; see State. Der. statu-ary, from F. statuaire, 'a statuary, stone-cutter, from Lat. statuarius; statu-ette, from Ital. statuetta, dimin. of statua; statu-esque, formed with suffix -esque (F. -esque = Ital. -esco = Lat. -iscus), see Brachet, Introd. § 219, note 4.

STATURE, height. (F., -L.) Used with special reference to the upright posture of a human being. M. E. stature, Chaucer, C. T. 8133. — F. stature, 'stature'; Cot. — Lat. statura, an upright posture, height, growth. — Lat. statum, supine of stare, to stand; see State, Stand.

STATUS, condition, rank. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. status, condition, state. See State. Doublets, state, estate.

STATUTE, an ordinance. (F., -L.) M. E. statute, Gower, C. A. i. 217, last line but one. — F. statut, a statute; Cot. — Lat. statutum, a statute; neut. of statutus, pp. of statuere, to set, establish. — Lat. statu-, crude form of status, position, state; see State, Stand. Der. statut-able, a coined word; statut-ably; statut-or-y, a coined word. Here belong also con-stitute, de-stitute, in-stitute, pro-stitute, sub-stitute, re-stitute-ion.

STAUNCH, adj. and verb; see Stanch.

STAVE, one of the pieces of a cask, a part of a piece of music, a stanza. (E.) 1. Merely another form of staff, due to the dat. sing. stave (= stave), Owl and Nightingale, 1167, and the pl. staves.

(= staves), Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 48. Perhaps the special sense is rather Scand. than E. Cf. Icel. stafr, a staff, also a stave; Dan. stav, a staff, stave, a stave. 2. A stanza was formerly called a staff, as forming a part of a poem; prob. suggested by the older use of A. S. staf, Icel. stafr, G. buchstab, in the sense of a letter or written character. Cf. Icel. stef, a stave in a song; Goth. stabs, a letter, element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. 'Staffs in our vulgar poesie I know not why it should be so called, vnless it be for that we vnderstand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad;' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poetrie, b. ii. c. 2. See Staff. Der. stave, verb; usually to stave in, to break into a cask, or to stave off, to ward off as with a staff; the verb readily puts v for f, as in strive from strife, live from life. Doublet, staff. [†]

STAY (1), to remain, abide, wait, prop, delay. (F., -O. Du.) 'Steyn [= steyn], stoppyn, styntyn, or cesyn of gate, Restito, obsto;' Prompt. Parv. The pt. t. staid occurs in Lydgate, Minor Poems, 103 (Stratmann). — O. F. estay, 'to prop, shore, stay, underse'; Cot. Mod. F. étayer. — O. F. estay, sb. fem., 'a prop, stay, supporter, shore, buttresse.' This is mod. F. éai, a prop; used as a masc. sb., by confusion with the nautical term éai; see Stay (2). Thus the orig. use was to support, whence the senses to hold, retain, delay, abide, were easily deduced.

β. The O. F. estay is of Low G. origin, and certainly from Du. or Flemish, as will appear. — O. Du. stade, or staeye, 'a prop or a stay'; Hexham. He also gives staey, 'stay, or leisure'; geen staey hebben, 'to have noe time or leisure.' The O. Flem. word was also staey, a prop; Delfortrie, p. 341; at p. 340 Delfortrie also gives stad, stede, a stead, or place; which he says is not to be confounded with staden, stade, or staye, a word still in use in Antwerp in the sense of 'leisure.' He must mean that the senses are not to be confounded, for the O. Du. stade remains the same word, in all its senses of 'commodious time,' 'aide, helpe, or assistance,' 'a haven, port, or a roade,' and 'a prop, or a stay'; Hexham. The orig. idea is that of fit or fixed place, hence a fit time. Cognate words are A. S. stede, a stead, a place (see also Staithe); Dan. stad, a town; Swed. stad, a town; G. stadt, a town, statt, a place, stead; Goth. staths, a place, stead; the mod. Du. form is stad, a town, also stade in the phr. te stade komen, to come in due time (lit. 'to the right place'). These words are closely allied to E. stead; and are all from ✓ STA, to stand. See Stead.

γ. We know the word to be Du. or Flemish, because it is only thus that we can explain the loss of d between two vowels, whereby stade became staeye. This is a peculiarity of the Du. language, and occurs in many words; e. g. broër for broeder, a brother (Sewel), teeder for teder, tender (id.). Der. stay, sb., spelt staye in Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 130 (R.), from O. F. estay, as above; this is really a more orig. word in F., though perhaps later introduced into English. Also staid, q. v.; put for stay'd = stayed, pp. Also stay-s, pl., lit. supports; it is remarkable that bodice is also, properly, a plural form.

STAY (2), as a nautical term, a large rope supporting a mast. (E.) Rare in old books. Cotgrave uses it to translate O. F. estay, which is the same word, the F. word being of Teut. origin. I find no example in M. E. — A. S. stæg, a stay; in a list of the parts of a ship in Wright's Voc. i. 63, col. 2. The change from A. S. stæg to E. stay is just the same as from A. S. dæg to E. day. + Du. stag. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. stag. + G. stag. β. Perhaps orig. named from its being used to climb up by, and related to A. S. stéger, a stair, Swed. stege, a ladder. See Stair, Stag. Der. stay-sail.

STEAD, a place, position, place which another person had or might have. (E.) M. E. stede, in the general sense of place. 'In twenti stedes' = in twenty places; Havelok, 1846. — A. S. stede, a place; Grein, ii. 478. Closely allied to A. S. stæð, stæð, a bank, shore; see Staithe. + Du. stad, a town; O. Du. stade, opportunity, fit time (orig. place); O. Du. stede, 'a farme'; Hexham. + Icel. staðr, a stead, place, staða, a place. + Dan. and Swed. stad, a town; Dan. sted, a place. + G. stadt, statt, a town, place; O. H. G. stat. + Goth. staths, a stead, place. Cf. Lat. statio, a station; Gk. στάσις; Skt. sthiti (for sthāti), a standing, residence, abode, state. β. From the Teut. base STAD, extension of ✓ STA, to stand; appearing (in a nasalised form) in E. Stand, q. v. Der. stead-fast, q. v., stead-y, q. v., home-stead, q. v.; bed-stead. And see stay (1), staithe, station.

STEADFAST, STEDFAST, firm in its place, firm, constant, resolute. (E.) M. E. stedfast, appearing as a trisyllable in Gower, C. A. iii. 115, l. 4; and in the Ormulum, l. 1597. — A. S. stedfæste, firm in one's place, steadfast; Battle of Maldon, 127, 249; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. [Spelt stedefast in Grein, which is surely wrong.] — A. S. stede, a place; and fæst, fast. See Stead and Fast. + O. Du. stedevast, 'steadfast'; Hexham; from O. Du. stede, a farm (orig. a place), and vast, fast. + Icel. staðfast, from staðr, a stead, and fastr, fast. + Dan. stadfast.

STEADY, firm, fixed, stable. (E.) Spelt stedye in Palsgrave M. E. stedi or stedy, very rare; Stratmann only cites one instance, from the Ormulum, 9885, where, however, it appears as stidij. — A. S.

stæðdig, steady, appearing in unstæðdig, unsteady, giddy, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 480, last line. [Not from A. S. stædig, which means sterile, barren, Gen. xxxi. 38; though the words are connected.] Formed, with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y), from A. S. stæð, a place, stead, shore, which is closely allied to stede, a place; see STEAD, STAITHE. + O. Du. stedigh, 'continuall, firme,' Hexham; from stede, a stead. + Icel. stöðugr, steady, stable; from staðr, a place. + Dan. stadig, steady; from stade, a stall, stad, a town, orig. a place. + Swed. stadig; from stad, a place. + G. stättig, continual; from statt, a place. ¶ Perhaps the spelling with d is due to Danish influence. Der. stead-i-ly, -ness. Also steady, verb.

STEAK, a slice of meat, esp. beef, ready for cooking. (Scand.) M. E. steike; spelt steyke in Prompt. Parv. — Icel. steik, a steak; so called from its being roasted, which was formerly done by placing it upon a wooden peg before the fire. — Icel. steikja, to roast, esp. on a spit or peg; cf. stikna, to be roasted or scorched. In the words steikja, stikna, the 'ei' and 'i' indicate a lost strong verb. This lost strong verb answers to E. stick, to pierce (pp. stuck); see STICK (1). And cf. Icel. stika, a stick, stika, to drive piles. A steak is a piece of meat, stuck on a stick to be roasted. + Swed. stek, roast meat; steka, to roast; cf. stick, a stab, prick, sticka, to stick, stab. + Dan. steg (for stek), a roast; ad vende steg, to turn the spit; steg, to roast; cf. stik, a stab, stikke, to pierce; stikke, a stick. Cf. G. anstecken, to put on a spit, anstecken, to pierce. Der. beef-steak; whence F. bifteck.

STEAL, to take away by theft, to thieve. (E.) M. E. stelen, Chaucer, C. T. 564; pt. t. stal, id. 3993; pp. stolen. — A. S. stelan, pt. t. stal, pl. stædon, pp. stolen; John, x. 10. + Du. stelen. + Icel. stela. + Dan. stæle. + Swed. stjåla. + G. stehlen; O. H. G. stelan. + Goth. stilan. The base is STAL, as seen in the pt. t.; Fick, iii. 347. β. Curtius, i. 263, compares it with Gk. στέρομαι, I am deprived of, στερείω, I deprive; it seems better to connect it (as he seems to allow that it may be connected) with Gk. στέλλειν, to get ready, which 'has in certain connections the notion of secretness and stealth'; Curtius. Either way, the form of the root is STAR; and if we may take the form STAR which is the root of Gk. στέλλειν, we may connect steal with stall and still, words which certainly seem as if they should be related. Prob. steal meant to 'put by.' See STALL, STILL. We may also note Skt. sten, to steal; stena, a thief. Der. steal-th, M. E. stalpe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 197, l. 11, perhaps of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. stuldr, Dan. styld, Swed. stöld, theft. Hence stealth-y, stealth-i-ly, -ness. Also stale (2).

STEAM, vapour. (E.) M. E. steem, which also meant a flame or blaze. 'Steem, or lowe of fyre, Flamma; Steem, of hotte lycure, Vapor;' Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 591, stem is a ray of light, described as resembling a sun-beam. 'Two stemynge eyes' = two flaming eyes; Sir T. Wiat, Sat. i. 53. — A. S. stæam, a vapour, smell, smoke; Grein, ii. 480. — Du. stoom, steam. β. The final -m is certainly a suffix (Aryan -ma), as in sea-m, gleam. The diphthong ed = Goth. au; from orig. u. Thus the base is STU, which in Teutonic means 'to stand upright' (cf. Gk. στύειν, to erect), and is another form of STA, to stand. Fick, iii. 342. The orig. sense was probably 'pillar,' just as in the case of beam, which meant (1) a tree, (2) a pillar of fire, (3) a sun-beam; see BEAM. The orig. steam may have been the pillar of smoke and flame rising from an altar or fire; cf. Gk. στυλος, a pillar, any long upright body like a pillar; Skt. sthūla, a pillar, a post. γ. This sense of pillar exactly suits the passage in Havelok above referred to, viz. 'Of hise mouth it stod a stem Als it were a sunnebeam' = out of his mouth it [a ray of light] stood like a pillar of fire, just as if it were a sun-beam. See STUD (2). Der. steam, verb, M. E. stemmen, Chaucer, C. T. 202, A. S. stēman, as in be-stēman, Grein, i. 94; steam-boat, -engine; steam-er, steam-y.

STEED, a horse, esp. a spirited horse. (E.) M. E. stede, Chaucer, C. T. 13831; Havelok, 1675. — A. S. stēda, masc., a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 210, l. 14; also gestēd-hors, used as convertible with stēda in Ælfric's tr. of Bede, b. ii. c. 13, where it is also opposed to myre, a mare, as being of a different gender. Cf. A. S. stōdmyre, a stud-mare, Laws of Ælfric (political), § 16, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 71. β. By the usual vowel change from ō to é (as in fōt, a foot, pl. fēt, feet, and in a great number of instances), stēda is derived from stōd, a stud; with the addition of the masc. suffix -a. Thus stēd-a = 'studder,' i. e. stud-horse or stallion, for breeding foals. See STUD (1). γ. The Irish stead, a steed, appears to be borrowed from English. More remarkable is the Gael. steud, a horse, a race, as connected with steud, to run, to race; this appears to be a mere apparent coincidence, as it expresses a different idea, and has a different vowel-sound. The word steed is certainly E., not Celtic, and is allied to G. stute, a mare, Icel. stедda, a mare, stōðestr, a stallion, stōdmerr, a stud-mare or brood-mare.

STEEL, iron combined with carbon, for tools, swords, &c. (E.)

M. E. steel, Chaucer, C. T. 10300. — A. S. *stēl or *stēle (the true form); but only found with the spelling stýle, and in the compounds stýl-ecg, steel-edged, and stýlen, made of steel; Grein, ii. 490. 'The writing of é for ē is common both in Early West-Saxon and Late West-Saxon; although in Late West-Saxon it generally undergoes a further change into ý;' Sweet's A. S. Reader, 2nd ed., p. 26. This change has certainly taken place in the above instances. + Du. staal. + Icel. stál. + Dan. staal. + Swed. stål. + G. stahl, contracted from O. H. G. stahal. β. The O. H. G. form furnishes the clue to the etymology; all the forms are due to a Teut. type STAHLA, Fick, iii. 344, formed with suffix -la (Aryan -ra) from the Teut. base STAH, answering to an Aryan base STAK, to be firm or still, appearing in Skt. stak, to resist, Lithuan. stokas, a stake, Lat. stagnum (for stacnum), standing-water. See STANK. Thus the long vowel in steel is due to loss of h before l. Der. steel, verb, from A. S. stýlan, to steel; cf. Icel. stala, to steel (derived from stál by the usual vowel-change), G. stählen (from stahl). Also steel-yard, q. v.

STEELYARD, a kind of weighing-machine. (E.) Sometimes explained as a yard or bar of steel, which may suit the appearance of the machine, but is historically wrong. It was so called because it was the machine in use in the place called the Steelyard in London, and this was so named as being a yard in which steel was sold. 'Next to this lane [Cosin Lane], on the east, is the Steelyard, as they term it, a place for merchants of Almayne [Germany], that use to bring hither . . . steel, and other profitable merchandises;' Stow's Chronicle, ed. Thoms, p. 67; see the whole passage. The Steelyard was a factory for the Hanse Merchants, and was in Dowgate ward. 'The marchantes of the styliarde' are mentioned in Fabyan's Chron., an. 1527-8. And see Stilyard in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

STEEP (1), precipitous. (E.) M. E. steep, steep. 'Theo path . . . was narwe and stepe;' King Alisaunder, 7041. — A. S. stēap, steep, high, lofty; Grein, ii. 481. Cf. O. Friesic stap, high, Icel. steypðr, steep, rising high. β. The A. S. stēap is commonly applied to hills; the derived verb stēpan means to erect, exalt, Grein, ii. 480. The Icel. steypðr is allied to steypa, to overthrow, cast down, lit. to make to stoop, causal of the rare verb stúpa, to stoop, which is the same word as Swed. stupa, (1) to fall, (2) to tilt. Cf. Swed. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward; whence it appears that steep is a derivative from stoop, and meant, originally, made to stoop, tilted forward, sloping down. So also Norweg. stupa, to fall, tumble head-long, stup, a steep cliff. See STOOP (1), and STOUP. Der. steep-ly, -ness; also steep-le, q. v.; steep-y, Timon, i. 1. 74.

STEEP (2), to dip or soak in a liquid. (Scand.) M. E. stepen. 'Stepyn yn water or other licure, Infundo, illiqueo;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt stepe, Palladius, b. ii. l. 281. — Icel. steypa, to make to stoop, overturn, to pour out liquids, to cast metals; causal of stúpa, to stoop; see STOOP, and see STEEP (1). So also Swed. stōpa, to cast (metals), to steep, to sink; stōpa korn, 'to steep barley in water' (Widegren); Dan. stōbe, to cast, mould (metals), to steep (corn), stōb, the steeping of grain, steeped corn. The succession of senses is perfectly clear; viz. to make to stoop or overturn, to pour out or cast metals, to pour water over grain.

STEEPLE, a pointed tower of a church or building. (E.) M. E. stepel, Rob. of Gloucester, p. 528, l. 5. — A. S. stýpel, a lofty tower, Luke, xiii. 4; the Hatton MS. has stepel. So called from its 'steepness,' i. e. loftiness or height; from A. S. stēap, lofty, high, mod. E. steep. The vowel-change from ed to y is quite regular; see STEEP (1). Der. steeple-chase, modern, not in Todd's Johnson.

STEER (1), a young ox. (E.) M. E. steer, Chaucer, C. T. 2151. — A. S. stéor; 'Juvenus, vel vitula, stéor;' Wright's Voc. i. 23, col. 2. + Du. and G. stier, a bull. + Icel. stjórr. + Goth. stiur. + Lat. taurus (for staurus), a bull. + Gk. ταῦρος (for στᾱύρος). + Russ. tur. + Ir. and Gael. tarbh, W. tarw. β. The word signifies 'full-grown' or 'strong,' and is merely an adj. used as a sb. The adj. appears in Skt. sthūla, put for an older form sthūra, great, powerful, coarse; which appears as a sb. in the form sthūra, a man, sthūrin, a pack-horse, Zend stāora, a beast of burden (cited by Benfey, p. 1081). γ. We even find the adj. in Teutonic, viz. A. S. stor, large, Icel. stórr, Dan. and Swed. stor, large, O. H. G. sturi, stūri, large. δ. The etymology of the Skt. word is known; it is allied to sthāvara, fixed, firm, stable; and all the words cited above are from the same ✓STU, to be firm, stand fast, a by-form of the wide-spread ✓STA, to stand. See STAND. Thus a steer is a firm, full-grown animal, esp. a young bull. Fick, i. 822, iii. 342. See also STEER (2). Der. stir-k, a young bullock or heifer (Jamieson), A. S. stýric, Luke, xv. 23, formed with dimin. suffix -ic, and consequent vowel-change from ed to y.

STEER (2), to direct, guide, govern. (E.) M. E. stereen, P. Plowman, B. viii. 47. — A. S. stéoran, stýran, to direct, steer, Grein, ii. 481, 491. + Du. sturen. + Icel. stýra. + Dan. styre. + Swed. styra. + G. steuern, O. H. G. stiurjan, stiuran. + Goth. stiurjan, to establish, confirm. β. All from the Teut. base STIURYAN, to steer (orig. to strengthen, confirm, hence, hold fast, direct); Fick, iii. 342. This is a denominative verb, from the sb. of which the base is STIURA, a rudder (lit. that which strengthens or holds fast). This sb. is now obsolete in E., but appears in Chaucer as stere, C. T. 4868, 5253; so also Du. stuur, a rudder, Icel. stýri, a rudder, Dan. styr, steerage, G. steuer, a rudder, O. H. G. stiura, a prop, a staff, a paddle or rudder. It is still retained in E. in the comp. star-board, i. e. steer-board (rudder-side of a ship). Y. Closely allied to this sb. is Icel. staurr, a post, stake, Gk. στυπός, an upright pole or stake; from STU, to set upright, variant of STA, to stand. Thus steer (2) and steer (1) are from the same root; see Steer (1). The development of sense is easy; a steer meant a firmly fixed post or prop, then a pole to punt with or a paddle to keep the ship's course right, then a rudder; whence the verb to steer, to use a stake or paddle, to use a helm. Der. steer-age, Romeo, i. 4. 112, with F. suffix; steers-man, Milton, P. L. ix. 513, formed like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; also star-board, q. v., stern, q. v.

STELLAR, belonging to the stars. (L.) 'Stellar virtue'; Milton, P. L. iv. 671. — Lat. stellaris, starry. — Lat. stella, a star; short for *ster-ul-a, a contracted dimin. from the same source as E. star; see Star. Der. (from stella) stell-ate, stell-at-ed; stell-ul-ar, from the dimin. stellula, a little star. Also stell-i-fy, obsolete; see Chaucer. Ho. of Fame, ii. 78.

STEM (1), the trunk or stalk of a tree or herb, a little branch. (E.) M. E. stem, a trunk of a tree, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 296, l. 8. — A. S. stefn, stefn, stemma, (1) a stem of a tree, (2) the stem or prow of a vessel, (3) a stem or race of people, Grein, ii. 479. [The change from fn to mn is regular; so also A. S. hlófmaesse is now Lammas.] We also find a longer form stefna, stefna, a stem or prow of a ship (Grein). Both these forms are mere extensions from A. S. staf, a staff; a stem of a tree is the staff or stock, or support of it; the stem of a vessel is the upright post in front of it. See further under Staff. + Du. stam, a trunk, stem, stock; stevan, prow. + Icel. stafn, later stamm, the stem of a vessel (from stafir, a staff); also written stefni, stemni, also stofn, stomn, the stem of a tree. + Dan. stamme, the trunk of a tree; stavn, the prow of a vessel. + Swed. stam, trunk; stäf, prow; framstam, fore-stem, prow, bakstam, back-stem, stern. + G. stamm, a trunk; stevan or vorder steven, the stem, prow-post; cf. hinter steven, stern-post.

STEM (2), the prow of a vessel. (E.) Spelt stam in Morte Arthure, l. 1664; but this is rather the Scand. form; the pl. stemmes is in Baret (1580). It is precisely the same word as when we speak of the stem of a tree; see further under Stem (1). ¶ As the orig. signification was merely 'post,' there was no particular reason (beyond usage) why it should have been used more of the prow-post than of the stern-post; accordingly, the Icel. stafn sometimes means 'prow,' and sometimes 'stem;' and in G. the distinction is made by saying vorder steven (fore-stem) for stem or prow-post, and hinter steven (hind-stem) for stern or stern-post.

STEM (3), to check, stop, resist. (E.) 'Stem, verb, to oppose (a current), to press forward through; to stem the waves, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 6. 36; stemming it, Caesar, i. 2. 109; Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. The verb is a derivative of stem, sb., in the sense of a trunk of a tree; throwing a trunk of a tree into a river stems or checks its current. It was then extended to the idea of a ship's stem pressing forward through waves. The idea is not confined to E.; cf. Icel. stemma, to dam up; Dan. stemme, to stem, from stamme, a stem of a tree; G. stemmen, to fell trees, to prop, to dam up water, from stamme, a trunk. See Stem (1) and Stem (2). [†]

STENCH, a bad smell. (E.) M. E. stenc, Rob. of Glouc. p. 405, l. 3. — A. S. stenc, a strong smell, common in the sense of sweet smell or fragrance; Grein, ii. 479. — A. S. stanc, pt. t. of stincan, to smell, to stink; see Stink. [Stench from stink, like drench from drink.] + G. stank, a stench; from stinken. Cf. Icel. stakja, a stench.

STENCIL, to paint or colour in figures by means of a stencilling-plate. (F., — L.) In Webster; he defines a stencil (as a stencilling-plate is sometimes called) as 'a thin plate of metal, leather or other material, used in painting or marking; the pattern is cut out of the plate, which is then laid flat on the surface to be marked, and the colour brushed over it.' Various guesses have been made at the etymology of this word, all worthless. I think it probable that to stencil is from O. F. estinceller, 'to sparkle, . . . to powder, or set thick with sparkles;' Cot. It was an old term in heraldry. Littré gives a quotation of the 15th century; 'L'aurmoire estoit tute par dedans de fin or estinceles' = the box (?) was all (covered) within with fine gold scattered in stars. This peculiar kind of ornamentation (star-work) is precisely what stencilling must first have been used for, and it is used for it still. Since the pattern is cut quite through the plate, it must all be in separate pieces, so that no better device can be used than that which, to quote Cotgrave, is set thick with sparkles. In short, stencil stands for stinsel, the orig. form of tinsel, which has lost its initial s; see Tinsel. Tinsel was commonly used for ornamentation of various kinds. 'Pourfiter d'or, to purfle, tinsell, or overcast with gold thread;' Cot. [†]

STENOGRAPHY, short-hand writing. (Gk.) Not a very new word; spelt stenographie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined from Gk. steno-, crude form of στενός, narrow, close; and -γραφία, writing (as occurring in ὀρθογραφία, orthography), from γράφειν, to write. Der. stenograph-er, stenograph-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STENTORIAN, extremely loud. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he rightly explains it with reference to the voice of Stentor. — Gk. Στέντωρ, Stentor, a Greek at Troy, famous for his loud voice, Homer, Iliad, v. 785. — Gk. στέν-ειν, to groan, make a noise; with suffix -ωρ of the agent, as in Lat. ama-tor, a lover. — STA, STAN, to make a noise; as in Skt. stan, to sound, to thunder. Cf. E. stun. Stentor = stunner.

STEP, a pace, degree, round of a ladder, foot-print. (E.) M. E. steppe, in the sense of foot-step, Iwain and Gawain, 2889, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81. — A. S. stape, a pace, Jos. x. 12. — A. S. stapan, to go, advance, a strong verb, pt. t. stóp, pp. stapen. This verb is not quite mod. E. step, which is rather the denominative weak verb steppan (see below); but it is a strong verb now obsolete, appearing in Chaucer in the pp. stopen, advanced, C. T. 9388, 14827. The pt. t. stóp occurs frequently; see Grein, ii. 476. β. The orig. sense is 'to set the foot down firmly;' from STAP or STABH, to prop, to stop, to stem, to stop, one of the numerous extensions of STA, to stand; see further under Stamp, which is merely the nasalised form. The E. word is well illustrated by Russ. stopa, the sole of the foot, a foot-step, a step; cf. also Du. stap, G. stapfe, a footprint, footstep. Der. step, verb, A. S. steppan, Grein, ii. 480, a weak verb, formed from the strong verb stapan; foot-step; door-step; stepping-stone, in Wright's Voc. i. 159, where it is misprinted seping-stone, by an obvious error.

STEPCHILD, one who stands in the relation of child through the marriage of a parent. (E.) The pl. step-children occurs in Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. xciii. 6. Stepmoder is in Gower, C. A. i. 104, l. 8. — A. S. steopchild, Exod. xxii. 22; John, xiv. 18, q. v. For the etymology of cild, see Child. β. The prefix steop- occurs also in steop-bearn, a stepbairn, stepchild, steopfader, stepfather, steopmóder, stepmother, steopsunu, stepson, and steopdohtor, stepdaughter; see Wright's Voc. i. 52, col. 1, 72, col. 1. γ. The sense of steop is 'orphaned,' or 'deprived of its parent;' so that it was first used in the compounds stepchild, stepbairn, stepson, stepdaughter, and afterwards extended, naturally enough, so as to form the compounds stepfather, stepmother, to denote the father or mother of the child who had lost one of its first parents. Thus the Lat. 'Fiant filii ejus orfan' is translated in the Early Kentish Psalter by 'sien beam his asteapte;' Ps. cviii. 9, ed. Stevenson. 'Aslépnas, orbatio,' occurs in a gloss (Bosworth). δ. The Teut. type is STIUPA, adj., with the sense of 'orphaned' or 'deprived;' the root is unknown; Fick, iii. 347. We only know that it is wholly unconnected with step above; it may, however, be related to Stoop (1), q. v. + Du. stiefkind; so also stiefzoon, stiefdochter, stiefvader, stiefmoeder. + Icel. stjúpbarn, a step-bairn; so also stjúpson, -dóttir, -fjafir, móðir. + Dan. stedbarn, a corrupt form. + Swed. stýfbarn. + G. stiefkind; so also stiefsohn, -lochter, -vater, -mutter; cf. O. H. G. stuf- = G. stief-, and O. H. G. stiusan, to deprive of parents, also to deprive of children. See also Steep (1).

STEPPE, a large plain. (Russ.) In Webster. Perhaps in Mids. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 69, such being the reading of the first quarto; most edd. have steep. — Russ. stepe (with final e mute), a waste, heath, steppe.

STEREOSCOPE, an optical instrument for giving an appearance of solidity. (Gk.) Modern. First constructed in 1838. Coined from Gk. στερεός, for στερεός, stiff, hard, firm, solid; and σκοπεῖν, to behold.

β. Gk. στερεός is cognate with G. starr, stiff; and σκοπεῖν is allied to ἀνέτρομαι, I look round; see Stare (1) and Scope or Sceptic. Der. stereoscop-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STEREOTYPE, a solid plate for printing. (Gk.) 'Stereotype was invented (not the thing, but the word) by Didot not very long since;' Trench, Eng. Past and Present, 4th ed., 1859. — Gk. στερεός, for στερεός, hard, stiff; and type. See Stereoscope and Type. Der. stereotype, verb.

STERILE, unfruitful, barren. (F., — L.) Spelt steril in Levins. — O. F. sterile, 'sterile;' Cot. — Lat. sterilem, acc. of sterilis, barren. From the base STAR appearing in Gk. στερεός, στερεός, hard, stiff, firm, sterile, and in the G. starr, rigid; for which see Stare (1). Cf. also Gk. στέρπα, a barren cow. A sterile soil is a hard, stony, unproductive one. Der. steril-i-ty, from F. sterilité, 'sterility;' Cot., from Lat. acc. sterilitatem.

STERLING, genuine, applied to money. (E.) M. E. starling, sterling, Chaucer, C. T. 12841; P. Plowman, B. xv. 342; Rob. of Glouc. p. 294, l. 8. In all these passages it is a sb., meaning 'a sterling coin,' a coin of true weight. Thus Rob. of Glouc. speaks of 'Four pousend pound of sterlynges.' Of E. origin; the M.H.G. sterline, cited by Stratmann, is borrowed from it. First applied to the E. penny, then to standard current coin in general. Wedgwood cites from Ducange a statute of Edw. I, in which we meet with 'Denarius Anglie, qui vocatur Sterlingus;' also a Charter of Hen. III, where we have 'In centum marcis bonorum novorum et legalium sterlingorum, tredecim solidi. et 4 sterling, pro quolibet marca computetis.' That is, a mark is 13s. and 4d., a sterling being a penny.

β. Wedgwood adds: 'The hypothesis most generally approved is that the coin is named from the Easterlings or North Germans, who were the first moneyers in England. Walter de Pinchbeck, a monk of Bury in the time of Edw. I, says: "sed moneta Anglie fertur dicta fuisse a nominibus opificum, ut Florenti a nominibus Florentiorum, ita Sterlingi a nominibus Esterlingorum nomina sua contraxerunt, qui hujusmodi monetam in Anglia primum componebant." He adds that 'the assertion merits as little credit in the case of the sterling as of the florin.'

γ. But I see no reason for doubting either assertion; the florin was not exactly named from Florence itself, but because the Florentine coin bore a lily, from Ital. fiore (= Lat. acc. florem), a flower; see Diez, who remarks that the O. Port. word for florin was frolença (i.e. florença), in which the very name of the town itself was commemorated. See Florin.

δ. The Esterlings were the 'merchants of Almaine,' as Stow terms them, or the Hanse Merchants, to whom, 'in the year 1259, Henry III, at the request of his brother Richard, Earl of Cornwell, king of Almaine, granted that [they]... should be maintained and upholden through the whole realm, by all such freedoms, and free usages or liberties, as by the king and his noble progenitors' time they had and enjoyed;' Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thoms, p. 87. For this charter, see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 457; and see pp. 213, 417, 529. Fabian mentions 'the marchauntes Esterlynges,' an. 1468-9. Cotgrave gives 'Esterlin, a penny sterling, our penny.' The word is English, though the orig. form was probably esteling or esternling, formed with the double suffix -ling from A.S. eastan, adv., from the east, or eastern, eastern. It has evidently been Latinised, and perhaps Normanised, for use in charters, &c. The suffix -ling is peculiarly E.; it is also found in G., but then suffers change before introduction into E., as in the case of chamberlain. See East.

STERN (1), severe, harsh, austere. (E.) M.E. sterne, Wyclif, Luke, xix. 22; also sturne, Rob. of Glouc. p. 27, l. 1. — A.S. styrne, stern, Grein, ii. 492; where we also find styrn-môd, of stern mood, stern-minded, styrnan, to be severe. The A.S. y often becomes M.E. u, as in A.S. wyrn, M.E. wurm, a worm; A.S. fyr, M.E. furs or firs, furze. Certainly stern should rather be spelt sturn; it has been assimilated to the word below.

β. The suffix -ne is adjectival (Aryan -na), as in Lat. Africa-nus; with the base stur- we may compare Du. stursch (short for stuur-isch), stern, austere, sour, Swed. stursk (short for stur-isk), refractory, and perhaps Icel. stúra, gloom, despair, Goth. andstaurran, to murmur against. γ. The base appears to be STUR, prob. allied to STOR, as seen in Icel. stórr, large, Lithuan. storas, large, thick, strong, heavy, deep-voiced, rough, and also to STAR, as seen in G. starr, rigid, stiff. It can no doubt be referred to the ✓ STA, to stand, which appears in Teutonic in all three forms, viz. STA, STO, and STU; see Fick, iii. 340, 341, 342. The idea of sterness is closely allied to those of stiffness and roughness of manner. Der. stern-ly, -ness.

STERN (2), the hinder part of a vessel. (Scand.) M.E. sterne, P. Plowman, B. viii. 35, footnote; other MSS. have stere, steere, stiere, meaning a rudder. Spelt steorne, a rudder, id. A. ix. 30. — Icel. stjórn, a steering, steerage; hence the phr. sitja við stjórni, to sit at the helm; whence stern became recognised as a name for the hinder part of the vessel. Extended from stjór- (occurring in stjóri, a steerer, ruler), which answers to M.E. stere, a rudder. See Steer (2). Compare Icel. stjórnborði with E. starboard (= steer-board). Thus stern is an extension of steer, in the obsolete sense of rudder. ¶ The A.S. steórni is unauthorised; the word is clearly Scandinavian. Der. stern-most; stern-sheets, where sheet has (I suppose) the nautical sense of 'rope.'

STERNUTATION, sneezing. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, l. 1. — Lat. sternutationem, acc. of sternutatio, a sneezing. — Lat. sternutatus, pp. of sternutare, to sneeze, frequent. of sternere, to sneeze. Allied to Gk. σπινδοβαί, to sneeze. β. The bases star-, stap-, seem to be variants from the ✓ SPAR, expressive of violent action; see Spar (3). Der. sternutat- or -y.

STERTOROUS, snoring. (L.) Modern. Coined (as if from Lat. *stertorosus) from stertere, to snore. Prob. of imitative origin. Der. stertorous-ly.

STETHOSCOPE, the tube used in auscultation, as applied to the chest. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Modern; lit. 'chest-examiner.' Coined from Gk. στήθω, for στήθος, the chest; and σκόπεω, to consider, examine.

β. The Gk. στήθος is so named from its presenting a firm front; allied to σταθερός, standing fast, fixed, firm. And σταθ-ερός is from a base stadh-, answering to Teut. STAD, as in E. stead; this base being extended from ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. γ. For -scope, see Scope or Sceptic. Der. *stethoscop-*ic.

STEVEDORE, one whose occupation it is to load and unload vessels in port. (Span., = L.) Webster has stevedore, which is a well-known word in the mercantile world, and stewe, verb, to stow, as cotton or wool in a vessel's hold. The word is Spanish, Spain being a wool-producing country and once largely engaged in sea-traffic. — Span. estivador, 'a packer of wool at shearing;' Neuman. It may also mean a stower of cargo, as will be seen. Formed with suffix -dor (= Lat. acc. -torem) from estiva-r, to stow, to lay up cargo in the hold, to compress wool. — Lat. stipare, to crowd together, press together; allied to Gk. στίβειν, to tread or stamp on, tread under foot, and to E. step, stamp. — ✓ STAP, allied to STABH, to prop, stem, also to lean on, stop or stop up; see Step, Stamp, Stop. This is one of the numerous extensions from ✓ STA, to stand. The verb appears also in Ital. stivare, to press close, Port. estivar, to trim a ship. There is also a verbal sb., viz. Ital. stiva, ballast of a ship, Span. estiva, the stowage of goods in a ship's hold, O. F. estive, 'the loading or lading of a ship;' Cot. From the same root are stip-end, stip-ul-at-ion, con-stip-ate, co-stive.

STEW, to boil slowly with little moisture. (F., = Teut.) M. E. stuwyn. 'Stuwyn, or stuyne mete, Stupho; Stuwyn or bathyn, or stuyne in a stew, Balneo;' Prompt. Parv. The older sense was to bathe; and the verb was formed from the old sb. stew in the sense of bath or hot-house (as it was called), which was chiefly used in the pl. stews, with the low sense of brothel-houses. See Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 242. The old spelling of the pl. sb. was stues, stuwes, stives, stuyves, styves, P. Plowman, B. vi. 72, A. vii. 65, all variously Anglicised forms of O. F. estuve, of which Cotgrave explains the pl. estuves by 'stews, also stoves or hot-houses.' Cf. Ital. stufa, Port. and Span. estufa, a stove, a hot-house; mod. F. étuve.

β. Of Teut. origin. The O.H.G. form is stupa, a hot room for a bath; the mod. G. stube merely means a room in general. The corresponding E. word is Stove, q. v. We may particularly note O. Du. stove, 'a stewe, a hot-house, or a baine' [bath], een stove om te baden, 'a stewe to bathe in;' Hexham. The stews in Southwark were chiefly filled with Flemish women, and it is not improbable that the E. word was influenced rather by the O. Du. than by the O. H. G. word. Der. stew, sb., in the sense of stewed meat; this is merely a derivative from the verb. The pl. sb. stews is treated of above; cf. 'The bathes and the stews bothe,' Gower, C. A. iii. 291.

STEWARD, one who superintends another's estate or farm. (E.) M. E. stiward, Havelok, 666; Ancren Riwe, p. 386, l. 5 from bottom. — A.S. stiuward (probably); but spelt stiward, A. S. Chron. an. 1093, and an. 1120. 'Econumus, stiward;' Wright's Voc. i. 28, l. 13; also in Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 570, l. 12. The full form of the word would be *stigward, lit. a sty-ward; from A.S. stigo, a sty, and ward, a guardian, warden, keeper. The orig. sense was one who looked after the domestic animals, and gave them their food; hence, one who provides for his master's table, and generally, one who superintends household affairs for another. See Sty and Ward. β. For the change of sound, cf. the name Seward, formerly Siward, Mach. iii. 6. 31. The Icel. stjórnari, gen. assigned as the origin of E. steward, occurs but rarely; the Icel. Dict. gives but one reference, and adds the remark that it is 'from the English.' It seems to be rather a late word, being somewhat rare in A.S. also; but it is found in Layamon, l. 1475, and is tolerably common after A.D. 1200. γ. Grein (ii. 484) draws especial attention to the parallel form stig-wita, also stiwita, in the same sense of steward, the suffix being the A.S. wita, a wise man, one who is skilled. Der. steward-ship, Luke, xvi. 2; steward-ess, with F. suffix.

STICK (1), to stab, pierce, thrust in, to fasten by piercing; to adhere. (E.) The orig. sense is to stab or pierce (cf. sting), hence to fasten into a thing by thrusting it in; hence, the intransitive use, to be thrust into a thing and there remain, to cling or adhere, to be set fast, stop, hesitate, &c. Two verbs are confused in mod. E., viz. (1) stick, to pierce, and (2) stick, to be fixed in. 1. STRONG FORM. M. E. steken, strong verb, to pierce, fix, pt. t. stak, Rom. of the Rose, 358; pp. steken, stiken, stoken (see Stratmann), also stoke, Gower, C. A. i. 60, l. 4, which = mod. E. stuck. — A.S. *stecan, pt. t. *stæc, pp. *stecan or *stocen, a strong verb, which does not appear, though it must once have existed, to produce the M. E. verb above cited; moreover, it appears in O. Saxon, where we find the pt. t. stak, Heliand, 5707. To which we may add that the E. strong verb to sting is nothing but the nasalised form of it; see Sting. Cognate words are Low G. steken, to pierce, stick, pt. t. stak, pp. steken; and G. stechen, to sting, pierce, stick, stab, pt. t. stach, pp. gestochen. Cf.

also Goth. staks, a mark, stigma; stiks, a point, a moment of time. β . The base is properly STAK, answering to an Aryan \checkmark STAG, but we only find the latter in the sense 'pierce,' in the weaker \checkmark STIG, to pierce (Fick, i. 823, iii. 343); whence Gk. $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\kappa\epsilon\upsilon$ (= $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\kappa\epsilon\upsilon$ -yew), to prick, Lat. instigare, to instigate, prick on, Skt. tij, to be sharp, tejaya, to sharpen; see Stigma, Instigate, Sting. 2. WEAK VERB. M. E. stikien, to be infixed, to stick into, cling to, adhere; a weak verb; also used in a trans. sense. 'And anon he stykede faste'=he stuck fast, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1246; pp. ystiked, Chaucer, C. T. 1565. — A. S. stician, pt. t. sticode, both trans. and intrans., Grein, ii. 482. Cognate words are Du. steken, to stick, Icel. stika, to drive piles, Dan. stikke, to stab, Swed. stikka, to stab, sting, stitch, prick, G. stecken, to stick, set, plant, fix at, also, to stick fast, remain. Thus the sense of 'stick fast' appears in G. as well as in E., but G. restricts the strong form stechen to the orig. sense, whilst stecken has both senses. Der. stick (2), q.v.; stick-y, spelt stickie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 583, stick-iness; stick-le-back, q.v.; stikh, q.v.; and see sting, stang, stagger, stack, stake, steak, stock, stoker. From the same root are di-sting-uish, di-stinct, ex-ting-uish, ex-tinct, in-stinct, pre-stige, in-stig-ate, sti-mu-late, style, stig-ma.

STICK (2), a staff, small branch of a tree. (E.) M. E. stikke, Chaucer, C. T. 16733. — A. S. sticca, a stick, also a peg or nail, Judges, iv. 21, 22. So called from its piercing or sticking into anything; the orig. sense was 'peg,' then any small bit of a branch of a tree. 'Se teldsticca sticode þurh his heafod'=the tent-peg stuck through his head, Judges, iv. 22. + Icel. stika, a stick. See Stick (1), Steak, and Stake. Der. stick-le-back. And see stitch. Also single-stick; see under quarterstaff.

STICKLEBACK, a small fish. (E.) So called from the stickles or prickles on its back; cf. thornback. M. E. stykylbak, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 85. Corruptly sticklebag, Walton's Angler, p. i. c. 5 (R.), and still more corruptly littiebat (Halliwell). In the Prompt. Parv., and in Wright's Voc. i. 222, there is mention of a fish called a stikling. The sb. stikel or stickle is from A. S. sticel, a prickle, sting, used of the sting of a gnat in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 6, cap. xvi. § 2. — A. S. stician, to stick; just as prickle is from prician, to prick. See Stick (1) and Stitch. The suffix -el (= Aryan -ra) denotes the instrument; it is not (in this case) a diminutive, as is often imagined; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 228. For back, see Back. Cf. O. Du. stichel, 'a prick or a sting'; Hexham.

STICKLER, one who parts combatants or settles disputes between two men fighting. (E.) Nearly obsolete; once common; see Halliwell, Nares, and Trench, Select Glossary. Now only used in the sense of a man who insists on etiquette or persists in an opinion. See Troil. v. 8. 18. The verb to stickle meant to part combatants, act as umpire. 'I stykyl betwene wrastlers, or any folkes that prove mastries [try conclusions] to se that none do other wronge, or I parte folkes that be redy to fyght;' Palsgrave. It is common to explain this word (with profound contempt for the l in it) by saying that the umpire must have parted combatants by means of sticks, or else that the umpire arbitrated between men who fought with single-sticks. Both assertions are mere inventions; and a stickle is not a stick at all, but a prickle. If this were the etymology, the word would mean 'one who uses prickles!' β . I have no doubt at all that stickle represents the once common M. E. stichtlen or stichtlen, to dispose, order, arrange, govern, subdue, &c. It was commonly used of a steward, who disposed of and arranged everything, and acted as a master of the ceremonies; see Will. of Palerne, 1199, 2899, 3281, 3841, 5379; Destruction of Troy, 117, 1997, 2193, 13282; Gawayn and Grene Knight, 2137; &c. 'When þay com to þe courte, keppte wern þay fayre, Styhtled with þe steward, stad in þe halle'; Allit. Poems, B. 90. 'To styzle the peple'=to keep order among the people; P. Plowman, Crede, 315; and cf. P. Plowman, C. xvi. 40. γ . This M. E. stizlen is the frequentative of A. S. stihtan, stihtian. 'Willelm weolde and stihste Engeland'=William ruled and governed England, A. S. Chron. an. 1087 (Thorpe renders it by 'held despotic sway'). It is probable that stihtan stands for *stifan, as would appear from the cognate forms. + O. Du. stichten, 'to build, edifice, bound, breed or make (a contention), impose or make (a lawe)'; Hexham; mod. Du. stichten, to found, institute, establish, excite, edify. This may stand for *stiften, just as Du. luht, air, stands for luft. + Dan. stifte, to found, institute, establish; stifte forlig=to reconcile, stifte fred=to make peace (just exactly to stickle). + Swed. stifta, also stikta, similarly used. + G. stiften, to found, institute, cause, excite; Fremdschaft stiften=to make friendship.

δ . Taking the Teut. base to be STAF, this gives us an Aryan base STAP; cf. Skt. sthāpaya, to establish, to found (which exactly agrees in sense), causal of sthā, to stand. — \checkmark STA, to stand. And see Stop. ϵ . I conclude that a stickler was one who stopped a quarrel, or settled matters; he probably often had to use something more persuasive than a stick.

ζ . After writing this, I found that Wedgwood has already said that δ the proper reading of this word should be stichtlers, as signifying those who have the arrangement or disposition of the field, from A. S. stihtian, O. E. [M. E.] stiztle, to govern or dispose.' He also refers to the A. S. Chronicle and to Sir Gawain. He adds the important remark, that the word is spelt stichtler in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 23, where it means a stickler. This clinches the matter.

STIFF, rigid, obstinate, formal. (E.) The vowel was once long; and remains so in North E. stive, muscular, and in the derivative stifle. M. E. stif, Chaucer, C. T. 7849; the superl. is spelt styuest, steuest, steeffest, stiffest, P. Plowman, C. vii. 43. — A. S. stif, stiff (Somner); this form is verified by the derivative astifian. 'Heora hand astifedon'=their hands became stiff; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 598, l. 11. + Du. stijf, stiff, hard, rigid, firm. + Dan. stiv. + Swed. stif. [The G. stef is supposed to be borrowed from Dutch.] β . Allied to Lithuan. stiprus, strong, stipti, to be stiff, Lat. stipes, a stem, trunk of a tree. And further to E. staff and Skt. sthāpaya, to establish, make firm, causal of sthā, to stand. — \checkmark STA, to stand; see Stand, Staff. Der. stiff-ly, -ness, stiffen (Swed. stifna, Dan. stivne), Hen. V. iii. 1. 7, stiff-neck-ed, Acts, vii. 51; stif-le.

STIFLE, to suffocate. (Scand.; confused with F., = L.) 'Stifil, Stifle, suffocare;' Levins. 'Smored [smothered] and stifled;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 68 f. — Icel. stifla, to dam up, prop. used of water; hence, to block up, choke. Norweg. stivla, to stop, hem in, check, lit. 'to stiffen'; cf. stivra, to stiffen; both are frequent. forms of stiva (Dan. stive), to stiffen. [Cf. also M. E. stiven, to stiffen, Will. of Palerne, 3033; Swed. stifva, Du. stijven, G. steifen, to stiffen.] All these words are derived from the adj. appearing as A. S. stif, stiff; the vowel of which was once long, and is still so in prov. E. Halliwell gives 'Stive, strong, muscular, North;' which is nothing but M. E. stive, an occasional spelling of stiff; see Stiff. The loss of the adj. 'stiff' in Icel. is remarkable, as it is preserved in Swed., Dan., and Norwegian; the O. Icel. form was stif, cited by E. Müller.

γ . We cannot derive stifle from the verb stive, to pack close, the change from v to f being clean contrary to rule; but it is very probable that stifle has been frequently confused with stive, which, though it properly means to pack close, easily comes to have much the same sense, as in prov. E. stiving, close, stifling (Worcestershire). Stive is a F. word, from O. F. estiver=Lat. stipare, to compress, pack tight, as explained under Stevodore. Any further connection with stew or stiff (with quite different vowels) is out of the question. We may, however, note that E. stiff and Lat. stipare are closely related words, from the same root.

STIGMATISE, to brand with infamy, defame publicly. (F., = Gk.) 'Stigmatized with a hot iron;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 470 (R.). [Shak. has stigmatic, naturally deformed, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 215; stigmatical, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 22.] — F. stigmatiser, in Cotgrave stigmatizer, 'to brand, burn, or mark with a red hot iron, to defame publicly.' = Gk. $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma\epsilon\upsilon$, to mark or brand. — Gk. $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma$, base of $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\mu\alpha$, a prick, mark, brand. — \checkmark STIG, to prick, as in $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\epsilon\upsilon$ (= $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\epsilon\upsilon$ -yew), to prick; whence also E. stick; see Stick (1). Der. (from Gk. $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma$) stigmat-ic, stigmat-ic-al. We also use now stigma, sb., from Gk. $\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\gamma\mu\alpha$.

STILE (1), a step or set of steps for climbing over a fence or hedge. (E.) M. E. stile, style, Chaucer, C. T. 10420, 12626. — A. S. stigel, a stile; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 146, l. 6. Formed with suffix -el, denoting the means or instrument (Aryan -ra), from stig-, base of pp. of A. S. stigan, to climb, mount. See Sty (1). The A. S. stigel first became stizel, and then stile; so also A. S. stigel=mod. E. tile. + O. H. G. stigila, a stile (obsolete); from O. H. G. stigan, to climb. And cf. Shetland stiggy, a stile (Edmonston); from the same root.

STILE (2), the correct spelling of Style, q. v.

STILETTO, a small dagger. (Ital., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Ital. stiletto, 'a little poynard'; Florio. Dimin. of stilo, O. Ital. stillo, now a gnomon, formerly a dagger (Florio). — Lat. stilum, acc. of stilus, a style; see Style.

STILL (1), motionless, calm, silent. (E.) M. E. stille, Chaucer, C. T. 11782. — A. S. stille, still, Grein, ii. 484. Allied to A. S. stillan, verb, to rest, be still, id.; lit. 'to remain in a stall or place'; a sense well shewn by the adv. still=continually. — A. S. steal, stai, a place, station, stall; see Stall. + Du. stil, still; stilen, to be still; stellen, to place; from stal, a stall. + Dan. stille, still, hushed; stille, to still, also, to set, post, station, put in place; from stald (formerly stall), a stall. + Swed. stilla, still, stilla, to quiet; from stall. + G. still, still; stullen, to still; stellen, to place; from stall. β . Fick explains the G. verb stullen as standing for a Teut. type STELLYA, to make still, put into a place, from STALLA, a stall. There is, undoubtedly, a connection between G. stullen and G. stellen, and the latter is regularly formed from stall. The sense of still is 'brought to a stall or resting-place.' Der. still, adv., M. E. stille, silently, Havelok, 2997, from A. S. stille (Grein); this adverb has preserved the sense of 'continually' or 'abidingly,' and has come to mean always, ever, as in the strange compound still-vened = always vexed, Temp. i. 2. 229. Also still, verb, A. S. stillan; stil-ly, adj., M. E. stillich (= still-like), Layamon, 2374; stil-ly, adv.; still-ness; still-born, 2 Hen. IV, i. 3. 64; still-stand, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 64; stand-still.

STILL (2), to distil, to trickle down. (L.; or F., = L.) In a few cases, still represents Lat. stillare, to fall in drops; as, e.g., in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 7. 35. But it is more often a mere contraction for distil, just as spoil is for dispoil, spend for dispend, and spite for despite. Thus Tusser writes: 'The knowledge of stiling is one pretie feat; May's Husbandry, st. 33; where stiling plainly stands for distilling. See Distil. Der. still, sb., an apparatus for distilling, a contraction for M. E. stillatorie, in the same sense, Chaucer, C. T. 16048, answering to a Low Lat. *stillatorium, from stillatus, pp. of stillare. And see di-stil, in-stil.

STILT, a support of wood with a foot-rest, for lengthening the stride in walking. (Scand.) M. E. stille. 'Stylte, calepodium, lignipodium;'. Prompt. Parv. = Swed. stylda, Dan. stylte, Norweg. styldra, a stilt; cf. Dan. style, to walk on stilts, also to stalk, walk slowly. We also find Swed. dial. stilt, a prop (Rietz). + Du. stelt, a stilt. + G. stelze, a stilt; O. H. G. stelza, a prop, a crutch.

β. We may particularly note prov. E. stilt, the handle of a plough, which is clearly connected with Stale (3) and Stalk (1). In fact, stilt is a parallel form to stalk, sb., whilst the Dan. stylda, to stalk along, is parallel to stalk, verb. Both are extensions from the base STAL, as seen in E. stale, a handle, Gk. σῆλη, a column, σῆλεόν, a handle; whilst Swed. dial. stilt, a prop, finds its parallel in Gk. σῆλις, a prop; see Curtius, i. 261. The sense of height, as expressed by the stilt or lengthened leg, is again paralleled by A. S. stealc, high, lofty; and see further under Stout.

γ. Indeed, there is yet a third form of extension of the base STAL, with added p; so that we have all three forms: (1) STAL-K, as in E. stalk, A. S. stealc, high, and stealcen, to stalk; (2) STAL-T, as in E. stilt, Dan. stolt, proud (i. e. high), and in Dan. style, to stalk; and (3) STAL-P, as in Icel. stólpi, Dan. stolpe, Swed. stolpe, a pillar, post, prop; with which cf. Banffshire stilper, awkward walking by lifting the feet high, commonly used of one who has long legs (Macgregor).

δ. Lastly, the base STAL is an extension from ✓STA, to stand; see Stand. The orig. sense of stilt is a high post or upright pole; hence a stilt, a crutch, or a prop, according to the use to which it is put. Note M. E. stalke, one of the uprights at the side of a ladder; Ch. C. T. 3625. Der. stilt-ed.

STIMULATE, to instigate. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. stimulation is in Minshew, ed. 1627.] = Lat. stimulus, pp. of stimulare, to prick forward. = Lat. stimulus, a goad; put for *stig-mulus, formed with suffixes -mu-lu (Aryan -ma-ra) from ✓STIG, to stick, to prick; see Stick (1). Der. stimulat-ion, from F. stimulation, 'a pricking forward,' Cot.; stimulat-ive; stimulant, from Lat. stimulans, base of pres. part. of stimulare. We also now use Lat. stimulus as an E. word.

STING, to prick severely, pain acutely. (E.) M. E. stingen, strong verb; pt. t. stang, stong; pp. stungen, stongen, Chaucer, C. T. 1081. = A. S. stingan, pt. t. stang, pp. stungen; Grein, ii. 484. + Dan. stinge + Swed. stinga + Icel. stinga, pt. t. stakk (for stang), pp. stunginn. Cf. Goth. us-stiggan (for us-stingan), to push out, put out, Matt. v. 29. β. The base is STANG (Fick, iii. 344); a nasalised form of the base STAK, to prick; see Stick (1). Fick expresses some doubt, but we may notice how this result is verified by the prov. E. stang, a pole (a derivative from STANG), which is the nasalised form of stake (a derivative from STAK). See Stang, Stake. Der. sting, sb., A. S., Dan., and Swed. sting. Also sting-y, q. v.

STINGY, mean, avaricious. (E.) Pronounced stinji. 'Stingy, niggardly;'. Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A stingy, narrow-hearted fellow;'. L'Estrange (Todd). It is the same word as prov. E. stingy [pronounced stinji], common in Norfolk in the sense of 'nipping, unkindly,' and esp. used of a cold East wind. Forby defines it: (1) cross, ill-humoured, (2) churlish, biting, as applied to the state of the air. See Stingy in Ray's Glossary (E. D. S. B. 16), and my notes upon it, esp. at p. xix. It is merely the adj. formed from sting, sb., by the addition of -y, and means (1) stinging, keen, (2) churlish; by an easy transition of sense, which is exactly paralleled by the Swed. sticken, pettish, waspish, fretful, from sticka, to sting.

β. The sounding of g as j causes no difficulty, as it is still common in Wiltshire, where a bee's sting is called a stinge [stinj]. See Sting.

¶ Todd's derivation, from M. E. chinche, stingy, is impossible; we might as well derive sting from chink. Wedgwood suggests that stingy stands for skingy, meaning (1) cold, nipping, as applied to the weather, and (2) stingy (Halliwell reverses these meanings). But skingy may stand for stingy, the change being due to confusion with skinching, narrow-minded, from skinch, to give scant measure (Halliwell). And skinch is merely a weaker form of skink, to deal out portions, a word fully explained under Nuncheon. Der. sting-i-ly, -ness. [†]

STINK, to smell strongly. (E.) M. E. stinken, strong verb; pt. t. stank, stonk, Chaucer, C. T. 14535; pp. stonken. = A. S. stincan, pt. t. stanc, stone, pp. stuncen, Grein, ii. 484. This verb not only means to stink, or to be fragrant, but has the singular sense of to rise as dust or vapour. 'Dust stanc to heofonum' = dust rose up to heaven.

+ Du. stinken. + Icel. stökkva, pt. t. stökk (for stönk), pp. stökkinn (for stönkinn), to spring up, take to flight; the pp. stökkinn means bedabbled, sprinkled. + Dan. stinke. + Swed. stinka. + G. stinken. + Goth. stiggkwan (= stingkwan), to strike, smite, thrust; whence bistuggkwas, a cause of offence, 2 Cor. vi. 3.

β. The form of the root is STAG; the orig. sense is uncertain; perhaps 'to strike against.' As to the possible connection with Gk. ραγγός, rancid, and Lat. tangere, see Fick, i. 823. Der. stink, sb., stink-pot; also stench, q. v.

STINT, to limit, restrain. (E.) Properly 'to shorten,' or 'curtail.' M. E. stinten, stynten, gen. in the sense to stop, cause to cease, P. Plowman, B. i. 120; also, intransitively, to pause, id. v. 585. Also spelt stenten, Chaucer, C. T. 905, 2734. = A. S. stytan, of which the traces are slight; for stytan (= Lat. contundere), in a gloss (Bosworth). Also gestentan, to warn, perhaps to restrain, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 6, l. 24. The proper sense is rather 'to make dull,' as it is a causal verb, formed (by vowel-change from u to y) from the adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, Matt. v. 22; cf. stuntscipe, folly, Mark, vii. 22. + Icel. styttla (by assimilation for stynta), to shorten; from the adj. stuttur (put for stuntur), short, stunted. + Swed. dial. stynta, to shorten; from stunt, small, short (Rietz). + Norweg. styttla, stutta, to shorten, tuck up the clothes; from stutt, small, short (Aasen).

β. The E. word comes nearer to the sense of the Icel. word; the A. S. stunt is used metaphorically, in the sense of 'short of wit.' However, to stint is certainly formed from Stunt by vowel-change; see further under Stunt. Der. stint, q. v.

STIPEND, a salary, settled pay. (L.) 'Yearly stipendes;'. Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii. ed. Arber, p. 130. = Lat. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute, stipend. Put for stip-pendium or stipi-pendium, a payment of money; from stipi- or stip-, crude form or base of stips, small coin or a contribution in small coin, and -pendium, a payment, from pendere, to weigh out, to pay.

β. Stips is supposed to mean a 'pile' of small money, allied to stipare, to compress, heap together, and stipes, a post (hence probably a pillar or pile); from the ✓STAP, to make firm, extension of ✓STA, to stand. For pendere, see Pendant. Der. stipendi-ar-y, from Lat. stipendiarius, receiving pay.

STIPPLE, to engrave by means of dots. (Du.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he calls it a modern term in art. = Du. stippelen, to speckle, cover with dots. = Du. stippel, a speckle, dimin. of stip, a point. Hexham gives stip, stup, or stippelken, 'a point, or a small point;' also stippen, 'to point, or to fix;' stippen or stieken met de naelde, 'to stitch with the needle,' stip-naelde, 'a stitching-needle.' He also gives another sense of stippen, 'to make partitions, or hedges, to fence about.' The word is clearly allied to Stab, q. v.

STIPULATION, a contract, agreement. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The verb to stipulate is prob. later, but is used by Cotgrave to translate F. stipuler.] = F. stipulation, 'a stipulation, a covenant;' Cot. = Lat. stipulationem, acc. of stipulatio, a covenant, bargain. = Lat. stipulari, to settle an agreement, bargain; lit. to make fast. = O. Lat. stipulus, fast, firm; 'stipulum apud veteres firum appellabatur,' Justiniani Institutiones, iii. 15 (White). Allied to stipes, a post. = ✓STAP, to make firm, extension of ✓STA, to stand; see Stipend and Stand. Der. (from Lat. stipulatus, pp. of stipulari) stipulate, verb.

¶ The story about stipula, a straw, noticed in Trench, Study of Words, is a needless guess; stipulate simply keeps the sense of the root. It may be noted that Lat. stipula = E. stubble.

STIR, to rouse, instigate, move about. (E.) M. E. stiren, sturen (and even steren, but properly always with one r), Chaucer, C. T. 12280, 16746. = A. S. styrian, to move, to stir, Gen. vii. 21, ix. 3; Grein, ii. 491. [Various forms are given in Etymüller, which seem to have been altered and accented in order to bring the word into connection with stear; but its true connection is rather with storm. Grein keeps styrian, to stir, and stýran, stiéran, to steer, quite distinct.] Allied to Icel. stýrr, a stir, disturbance, Du. storen, to disturb, interrupt, vex, Swed. störa, G. stören, to disturb, O. H. G. stoeren, stören, to scatter, destroy, disturb. The last is plainly allied to Lat. sternere, to strew, to scatter. = ✓STAR, to spread, scatter, strew, overturn, dissipate; see Stratum and Strew; also Storm. Fick, i. 824; iii. 345.

¶ The orig. sense is well illustrated by 'wind styreð lãð gewiðru' = the wind spreads (brings) bad weather, i. e. rouses the storms (Grein). Der. stur-geon; and see stor-m.

STIRK, dimin. of Steer (1), q. v.

STIRRUP, a ring or hoop suspended from a saddle. (E.) Put for sty-rope, i. e. a rope to climb by; the orig. stirrup was a looped rope for mounting into the saddle. Spelt styrop in Palsgrave. M. E. stirop, Chaucer, C. T. 7247. — A. S. stirap. 'Scansile, stirap,' Wright's Voc. i. 23, col. 1; fuller form stigráp, id. p. 84, l. 1. — A. S. stige, base of stigen, pp. of stigan, to climb, mount; and ráp, a rope. See Stile (1) or Sty (1), and Rope. + O. Du. stegel-reep, or steegh-reep, 'a stirrope-leather,' Hexham. [This is really a better use of the word; that which we now call a stirrup is called in Du. stijgbeugel, i. e. 'the little bow' or loop whereby to mount.] Similarly formed from Du. stijgen, to mount, and reep, a rope. + Icel. stig-reip; from stiga and reip. + G. stegreif, a stirrup; from steigen and reif; cf. steigbügel, a stirrup.

STITCH, a pain in the side, a passing through stuff of a needle and thread. (E.) The sense of 'pain in the side,' lit. 'pricking sensation,' is very old. M. E. stiche. 'Styche, peyne on þe syde,' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. stice, a pricking sensation; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 370. § 10. — A. S. stician, to prick, pierce; see Stick (1). So also G. stich, a prick, stitch, from stechen, to prick; also sticken, to stitch, from the same. Der. stitch, verb; also stich-wort, a herb good for the stitch, spelt stichworte in Palsgrave; stitch-er, stitch-er-y, Cor. i. 3. 75.

STITH, an anvil. (Scand.) 'Vulcan's stith,' Hamlet, iii. 2. 89; some edd. have stithy, properly a smithy. M. E. stith, Chaucer, C. T. 2028; Havelok, 1877. — Icel. stéti, an anvil. Allied to stadr, a place, i. e. fixed stead; and so named from its firmness. Cf. A. S. stæðol, a foundation, basis, stæðol, firm. From the same root as Stead, q. v. + Swed. stād, an anvil. Der. stith-y, properly a smithy, but also used with the sense of anvil.

STIVER, a Dutch penny. (Du.) In Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 2, 1641. — Du. stuiver, formerly stuyver, 'a stiver, a Low-Countrie peece of coine, of the value of an English penny,' Hexham. β. Allied to G. stüber, a stiver; which appears to be related to G. stieben, to start, drive, fly about, be scattered, stäuben, to dust, powder, stäubchen, an atom, staub, dust. Perhaps the orig. sense was atom or small piece.

STOAT, an animal of the weasel kind. (Scand.) 'Stoat, a stallion-horse, also, a kind of rat,' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. M. E. stot; in the Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 218, l. 14, a scribe says to the woman taken in adultery: 'Therefore come forth, thou synkyngne stott;' and in l. 19: 'To save suche stottys, it xal [shall] not be.' Here the sense is probably stoat. The M. E. stot means (1) a stoat, (2) a horse or stallion, (3) a bullock; see Chaucer, C. T. 617; and my note to P. Plowman, C. xxii. 267. The reason is that the word is a general name for a male animal, and not confined to any one kind; the word stag is in the same case, meaning a hart, a gander, and a drake; see Stag. The vowel was orig. long, but has been shortened into stot in the case of the horse and bullock, though Bailey (as above) also has stoat for the former. — Icel. stútr, a bull; Swed. stut, a bull, also a hard blow with a rod; Dan. stúd, a bullock; Swed. dial. stút, (1) a young ox, (2) a young man; Norweg. stut, (1) a bullock, (2) an ox-horn. β. The orig. sense is 'pusher,' hence its use in the sense of 'ox-horn' or 'hard blow,' also, a strong creature, a male. The verb appears in Du. stooten, to push, thrust, whence Du. stooter, sb., a thruster, also a stallion, stootig, adj., butting, goring; Swed. stöta, to push, Dan. støde, G. stossen (strong verb), Goth. stautan, to strike. γ. The Gothic is the orig. form; from the Teut. base STUT, appearing also in Stutter, q. v. Fick, iii. 348.

STOCCADO, STOCCATA, a thrust in fencing. (Ital., — Teut.) Stoccado, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 234. Stoccata, Romeo, iii. 1. 77. Stoccado is an accommodated form, prob. from O. F. estocade, with the same sense, with a final o to imitate Spanish; cf. Shakespeare's barri-cado with E. barricade. [The true Span. form was estocada, 'a stocada or thrust with a weapon;' Minshew.] Stoccata is the better form. — Ital. stoccata, 'a foyne, a thrust, a stoccado given in fence;' Florio. Formed as if from a fem. pp. of a verb *stoccare, which is made from the sb. stocco, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword, an arming sword;' Florio. — G. stock, a stick, staff, trunk, stump; cognate with E. Stock, q. v. And see Stoke. Cf. O. Du. stock, 'a stock-rapier;' Hexham.

STOCK, a post, stump, stem, &c. (E.) In all its senses, it is the same word. The sense is 'a thing stuck or fixed,' hence a post, trunk, stem (metaphorically a race or family), a fixed store or fund, capital, cattle, trunk or butt-end of a gun; the pl. stocks signify a place where a criminal is set fast, or a frame for holding ships fast, or public capital. See Trench, Study of Words, which partly follows Horne Tooke's Divisions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 4. M. E. stok, trunk of a tree, Pricke of Conscience, 676; pl. stokkes, the stocks, P. Plowman, B. iv. 108. — A. S. stoc, a post, trunk; Deut. xxviii. 36, 64. β. The word is clearly allied to stake, and derived (like stake) from the verb to stick, with the sense of stuck fast. The A. S. strong verb *stecan must once have existed, though it has not yet been found; the pt. t. must have been *stæc, and the pp. is generally given as *stecen, to accord with the M. E. pp. steken; by analogy with A. S. eten, to eat, pt. t. æt, pp. eten. But it is reasonable to suppose that a pp. *stocen was also once in use, as we find M. E. stoken, and still have stuck; cf. G. gestochen, pp. of stechen, and the analogy of A. S. brecan, to break, pt. t. bræc, pp. brocen. We might then deduce stoc directly from this pp. *stocen of the strong verb *stecan, which would suit both sense and form. However this may have been, the etymology from stick, verb, is quite certain. See Stick. + Du. stok, stick, handle, stocks; O. Du. stock; whence O. Du. stockduyne, a stock-dove, stockvisch, stock-fish; stockroose, 'a rose so called beyond the sea,' i. e. stocks; Hexham. + Icel. stokkr, trunk, log, stocks, stocks for ships. + Dan. stok, a stick. + Swed. stock, a beam, log. + G. stock; O. H. G. stock; from gestoch-en, pp. of stechen. Der. stock, verb, M. E. stokken, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iii. l. 381; stock-broker; stock-dove, Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 429; stock-exchange, stock-holder, stock-jobbing; stock-fish (prob. from Du. stokvisch), Prompt. Parv., and Temp. iii. 2. 79; stock-ish, i. e. log-like, Merch. Ven. v. 81; stock-still, i. e. still as a post (cf. O. Du. stock-stille, 'stone-still, or immoveable,' Hexham); stock, a flower, called stocke-gyllofer (stock-gilliflower) in Palsgrave; stock-ing, q. v., stoke, q. v. Also stoc-cado, stoc-cata; and stock-ade, q. v.

STOCKADE, a breast-work formed of stakes stuck in the ground. (E.; with F. suffix.) A modern word; it occurs in Mason's Eng. Garden, b. ii, spelt stoccade (R.) But it is a coined word; for the F. estocade only means a stoccata, or thrust in fencing; still, it is made in imitation of it, and the F. estocade is borrowed from Ital. stoccata; see Stoccado.

STOCKING, a close covering for the foot and leg. (E.) 'A stocking, or paire of stockings,' Minshew, ed. 1627. Formerly called stockes; 'Our knit silke stockes, and Spanish lether shoes;' Gascoigne, Stele Glas, l. 375. 'He rose to draw on his strait stockings, and, as the devil would, he hit vpon the letter, bare it away in the heele of his stocke,' &c.; Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1532 (R.) 'Un bas de chausses, a stocking, or nether-stock;' Cot. He also has: 'Un bas de manches, a half-sleeve;' which we may compare with 'Manche Lombarde, a stock-sleeve, or fashion of halfe sleeve;' id. β. 'The clothing of the legs and lower part of the body formerly consisted of a single garment, called hose, in F. chausses. It was afterwards cut in two at the knees, leaving two pieces of dress, viz. knee-breeches, or, as they were then called, upper-stocks, or in F. haut de chausses, and the netherstocks or stockings, in F. bas de chausses, and then simply bas. In these terms the element stock is to be understood in the sense of stump or trunk, the part of a body left when the limbs are cut off. In the same way G. strumpf, a stocking, properly signifies a stump; Wedgwood. Similarly, a stock-sleeve is a truncated sleeve, a half-sleeve. γ. To this I may add that stock-ing is a dimin. form, the nether-stock being the smaller portion of the cut hose; it was sometimes called stock simply, but also nether-stock or stock-ing (= little stock); and the last name has alone survived.

STOIC, a disciple of Zeno. (L., — Gk.) From Lat. Stoicus. — Gk. Στωικός, a Stoic; lit. belonging to a colonnade, because Zeno taught under a colonnade at Athens, named the Ποικίλη (ποικίλη). — Gk. στοά (Ionic στωά, Attic στωά), a colonnade, place enclosed by pillars. So called from the upright position of the pillars; from Gk. στρα-, base of στημι, I set up, make to stand. — ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. stoic-al, stoic-al-ly, stoic-ism.

STOKER, one who tends a fire. (Du.) We have now coined the verb to stoke, but only the sb. appears in Phillips, Bailey, &c. 'Stoaker, one that looks after a fire and some other concerns in a brew-house;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Dutch, and came in as a term in brewing. — Du. stoker, 'a kindler, or a setter on fire;' Hexham. — Du. stoken, 'to make or kindle a fire, to instigate, or to stirre up;' id. This is the same word as O. F. estiquer, M. E. stoken, to stab; see Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 2546 (Six-text), altered in Tyrwhitt to stike, l. 2548; and is derived from the same source, i. e. in the present case, from O. Du. stock, a stick, stock, also a stock-rapier (stabbing rapier); no doubt from the use by the stoker of a stock (thick stick) to stir the fire with and arrange the logs; see Stoccado. The O. Du. stock (Du. stok) is cognate with E. Stock, q. v. Der. stoke, in the mod. sense (as distinct from M. E. stoken, to stab, which is from O. F. estiquer).

STOLE, a long robe, a long scarf for a priest. (L., — Gk.) In very early use. A. S. stole; 'Stola, stole;' Wright's Voc. i. 81. — Lat. stola. — Gk. στολή, equipment, a robe, a stole. — Gk. στέλλειν, to equip, lit. to set in order; from the same base as E. Stall, q. v.

STOLID, dull, heavy, stupid. (L.) A late word. 'Stolid, foolish;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. — Lat. stolidus, firm, stock-like; hence, dull, stupid. — Lat. base STAL, to set firm, extension of ✓ STA, to stand; cf. Gk. στέλλειν, and Lat. stallus; see Stultify. And see Stout. Der. stolid-i-ty, coined from Lat. stoliditas.

STOMACH, the bag for food within the body. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. stomak, Prompt. Parv. [Now accommodated to the Gk. spelling.] - F. estomac, spelt estomach in Cotgrave. - Lat. stomachum, acc. of stomachus. - Gk. στόμαχος, a mouth, opening, the gullet, the stomach; dimin. of στόμα, the mouth. Prob. connected with στρένυ, to groan, sigh, Stk. stan, to sound, as meaning that which makes a noise; see STUN. The Zend word for mouth is staman; Fick, i. 824. Der. stomach, verb, to resent, Antony, iii. 4. 12, from the use of stomach in the sense of anger, i Hen. VI, iv. 1. 141; stomach-er, an ornament for the breast, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 226; stomach-ic.

STONE, a hard mass of mineral matter, piece of rock, a gem. (E.) M. E. ston, stoon, Chaucer, C. T. 7997. - A. S. stán (common); the change from á to long o is usual, as in bán, a bone, bár, a boar. + Du. steen. + Icel. steinn. + Dan. and Swed. sten. + G. stein. + Goth. stains. β. All from Teut. type STAINA, a stone; Fick, iii. 347. Cf. Russ. stiena, a wall. The base is STI, appearing in Gk. στία, a stone, pebble. Curtius, i. 264. Der. stone, verb; stone-blind, as blind as a stone; stone-bow, used for shooting stones, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 51; stone-chat, a chattering bird; stone-cutter, K. Lear, ii. 2. 63; stone-fruit; stone-still, K. John, iv. 1. 77; stone-ware; stone's cast or stone's throw, the distance to which a stone can be cast or thrown; ston-y, A. S. stánig; ston-y-heart-ed, i Hen. IV, ii. 2. 28.

STOOL, a seat without a back. (E.) M. E. stool, Prompt. Parv.; dat. stole, P. Plowman, B. v. 394. - A. S. stól, a seat, a throne; Grein, ii. 485. + Du. stoel, a chair, seat, stool. + Icel. stóll. + Dan. and Swed. stol, a chair. + Goth. stol, a seat. + G. stuhl, O. H. G. stul, stual. + Russ. stol, a table. + Lithuan. stólas, a table. β. All from the type STO-LA, a thing firmly set; cf. Gk. στήλη, a pillar. And STO is put for STÁ, from ✓STA, to stand. The same base appears in stow and stud (1). Der. stool-ball, a game played with a ball and one or two stools, Two Noble Kinsman, v. 2; see stool-ball in Halliwell.

STOOP (1), to bend the body, lean forward, condescend. (E.) M. E. stoupen, Wyclif, John, xx. 5. - A. S. stúþian, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. 24. § 1. + O. Du. stuypen, 'to bowe'; Hexham. + Icel. stúpa (obsolete). + Swed. stupa, to fall, to tilt; cf. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward. β. From a Teut. base STUP, apparently meaning to lean forward; hence also are steep (1) and steep (2), the latter of which is merely the causal of steep. γ. And perhaps the step in step-child is from the same root; it is not improbable that step-, meaning 'orphaned,' may be from the notion of overturning (hence destroying) implied in steep (2). Der. steep (1); steep (2).

STOOP (2), a beaker; see Stoup.

STOP, to obstruct, hinder, restrain, intercept, to cease. (L.) M. E. stoppen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 72, l. 19. - A. S. stopþian, in the comp. for-stopþian, to stop up, an unauthorised word noted by Somner, but prob. genuine; it is not a form which he would have been likely to invent. So also Du. stoppen, to fill, stuff, stop; Swed. stoppa, to fill, stuff, cram, stop up; Dan. stoppe, to fill, stuff, cram, &c.; G. stopfen. Not a Teut. word, but the same as Ital. stoppare, to stop up with tow, Low Lat. stupare, to stop up with tow, also used in the general sense of cram, stop. β. All from Lat. stupa, stuppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow; cognate with Gk. στύπη, στύπνη, with the same sense. Allied to Stub, Stupid, and Stump. Cf. Skt. stumbh, to stop, allied to stambh, to stop, orig. to make firm. The base of stupa is STUP, to make firm or hard, an extension from ✓STU, by-form of ✓STA, to stand; see Stand. Cf. E. stump with Skt. stambha, a post, a pillar. Der. stop, sb., K. John, iv. 2. 239; stop-cock, stop-age (with F. suffix), stopper; also stoppe-le, M. E. stoppell, Prompt. Parv. (with E. suffix, signifying the instrument). Doublets, estop, to impede, bar, a law term, borrowed from O. F. estoper (mod. F. étouper), from Low Lat. stupare, as above; also stuff, verb. [+]

STORAX, a resinous gum. (L., -Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 25, heading. - Lat. storax, styrax. - Gk. στράγαξ, a sweet-smelling gum produced by the tree called στράγαξ; Herodotus, iii. 107. STORE, provision, abundance, stock. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. stor, stoor, Chaucer, C. T. 600; Rob. of Glouc. p. 395, l. 13; the derived verb storen occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13412, later text. 'Stoor, or purveyance, Staurum;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. estor, which Roquefort explains by 'a nuptial gift; closely allied to O. F. estoire, store, provisions. - Low Lat. staurum, the same as instaurum, store. - Lat. instaurare, to construct, build, restore, renew; Low Lat. instaurare, to provide necessities. Cf. O. F. estorer, 'to build, make, edifice; also to store; Cot. - Lat. in, prep. as prefix; and *staurare, to set up, place, found also in the comp. restaurare, to restore. β. This form *staurare is due to a lost adj. *staurus, cognate with Gk. στυαρός, an upright pole or stake, orig. 'upright,' and Skt. sthāvara, fixed, stable, immovable. The Skt. sthā-va is from sthā, to stand; hence *staurus is formed from the ✓STA, to stand, by help of the Aryan suffixes -wa-ra; see Stand. Der. store, verb, M. E. storen,

O. F. estorer, as above; stor-age, with F. suffix -age = Lat. -aticum; store-house; also re-store, q.v.; stor-y (2), q.v. [+]

STORK, a wading bird. (E.) M. E. stork, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 361. - A. S. store, Wright's Voc. i. 77, col. 1, 280, col. 2. + Du. stork. + Icel. storkr. + Dan. and Swed. stork. + G. stork, O. H. G. storch, stork. β. Root uncertain; but almost certainly the same word as Gk. τόργος, a large bird, Fick, iii. 346; which Fick considers as allied to E. stark, as if the orig. sense were 'the strong one.' γ. Or rather, 'the tall one'; cf. A. S. steale, high, noticed under Stalk (2). Stark and stark are prob. connected with Gk. στερεός, firm, and all are from the ✓STA, to stand. Der. stork's-bill, a kind of geranium, from the shape of the fruit.

STORM, a violent commotion, tempest. (E.) M. E. storm, Chaucer, C. T. 1982. - A. S. storm, Grein, ii. 485. + Icel. stormr. + Du., Swed., Dan., storm. + G. sturm. β. All from Teut. base stor-ma (Fick, iii. 346), meaning 'that which lays low,' or strews or destroys trees, &c.; the suffix -ma is the same as in bloo-m, doo-m. - ✓STAR, to strew; cf. Lat. sternere, to lay low, strew, prostrate. See Strew, Star, Stir. We also find Gael. and Irish stoirim, Bret. stourm, a storm. Der. storm, verb, A. S. styrman, with vowel-change; storm-y, storm-i-ness.

STORY (1), a history, narrative. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. storie, Chaucer, C. T. 1203, 15503; Havelok, 1641; Ancrén Riwe, p. 154, l. 24. - O. F. estoire, estore [and prob. estorie], Burguy; variants of O. F. histoire, history. - Lat. historia; see History. Der. stori-ed, i.e. painted with stories, representing tales, Milton, Il. Pens. 159; cf. O. F. historie, 'beautified with story-work,' Cot. Doublet, history.

STORY (2), the height of one floor in a building, a set of rooms at one level. (F., -L.) Bacon, in his Essay 45 (On Building), speaks of 'the first story,' 'the under story,' 'the second story,' &c. The M. E. story in the following passage seems to be the same word: 'Hii byggonne her heye tounes strengly vaste aboute, Her castles and stourys, þat hii myghte be ynne in doute' = they began fast about to strengthen their high towns, their castles and buildings, that they might be in [them] when in fear; Rob. of Glouc. p. 181, l. 9. Here the word is plainly used in the more gen. sense of building; and story represents O. F. estorée, a thing built. - 'Estorée, built, made, erected, edified; also furnished, stored; Cot. This is the pp. of estorer, to build, to store; see Store. ¶ Wedgwood adds: 'I cannot find that estorée was ever used in the sense of E. story.' This is prob. right; the sense in E. seems to have been at first simply a thing built, a building; the restriction of the word to one floor only is peculiar to English. Just in the same way, a floor is properly only a boarded (or other) covering of the ground, but was used, by an easy extension of meaning, as synonymous with story. There can be no doubt as to the derivation, as is best shewn by the strange attempts that have been made to fashion story out of staurie [not found] = stagrie [not found] = stagery (!), an extension of stage; or to derive it from stair-y [not found], or, in desperation, from Gael. staidhir, a stair, flight of stairs! Der. clear-story or clere-story, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479, a story lighted with windows, as distinct from the blind-story, as the triforium was sometimes called (Lee, Gloss. of Liturgical Terms; Oxford Glossary, p. 57).

STOT, (1) a stallion; (2) a bullock. (Scand.) See Stoat.

STOUP, STOOP, a vessel or flagon. (E.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 68. M. E. stope. 'Hec-cupa, a stope;' Wright's Voc. i. 235. - A. S. steap, a cup; Grein, ii. 481. [The change from ed to long o is rare, but occurs in chose (A. S. ceas), and though, miswritten for thogh (A. S. þeah).] + Du. stoop, a gallon. + Icel. staup, a knobby lump, also a stoup, beaker, cup. + Swed. stop, a measure, about 3 pints. + G. stauf, a cup; O. H. G. staup, stouph. β. All from the Teut. type STAUPA, Fick, iii. 343. The orig. sense seems to have been a lump or mass, as in Icelandic; properly a mass of molten metal, as shewn by Icel. steypa (put for *staup-ja), to pour, cast, found, Dan. støbe, to cast, mould, steep. See further under Steep (2).

STOUT, bold, strong, robust. (F., -O. Low G.) M. E. stout, Chaucer, C. T. 547. - O. F. estout, stout, furious, also rash, stupid (Burguy). - O. Du. stolt, stout, 'stout, bold, rash;' Hexham. Low G. stolt, the same; A. S. stolt (Bosworth), a rare word; cognate with G. stolz, proud. β. Further cognate with Lat. stolidus, of which the orig. sense was 'firm;' from the base STAL, extension of ✓STA, to stand. See Stolid, Stall. Der. stout, sb., a strong kind of beer; stout-ly, ness.

STOVE, a hot-house, an apparatus for warming a room. (Du.) 'This word has much narrowed its meaning; [a] bath, hot-house. . . was a stove once;' Trench, Select Glossary. 'A stove, or hot-house;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Not an old word. [The A. S. stofe, suggested by Somner, can hardly be right; or, if so, the word was, at any rate, re-introduced.] - O. Du. stove, 'a stowe, a hot-house, or a baine;' Hexham. Low G. stove, stave, the same. + Icel. stofa, older form stufa, a bathing-room with a stove, a room. + G. stube, a room;

O. H. G. stufā, a heated room. β. Root unknown; supposed to be a Teut. word, but even this is doubtful. The Ital. stufa, Span. estufa, F. étuve, are borrowed from German. γ. Still, the Icel. stó, occurring in eldstó, a fire-stove or fire-place, a hearth, suggests a close connection with Stow, q. v.

STOVER, fodder for cattle. (F., - L.?) In Shak. Temp. iv. 63. M. E. stouer (with v = u), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2606. - O. F. estover, estovoir, necessities, provisions; orig. the infin. mood of a verb which was used impersonally with the sense 'it is necessary'; Burguy, Diez. On the difficult etymology see Diez, who refers it either to Lat. stare, or (rather) to Lat. studere, to study, endeavour, desire; see Student.

STOW, to arrange, pack away. (E.) M. E. stowen, Allit. Poems, B. 113. Lit. 'to put in a place'; a verb made from M. E. stowe, a place, Layamon, 1174. - A. S. stōw, a place, Mark, i. 45. + O. Fries. sto, a place. We also find Icel. stó, in the comp. eldstó, a fire-place, hearth. Cognate with Lithuan. stowa, the place in which one stands; from stóti, to stand. β. All from the base STO, put for STĀ, from ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. See Fick, iii. 341. Der. stow-age, with F. suffix, Cymb. i. 6. 192. Also be-stow, q. v. ☞ Possibly stove is a closely related word.

STRADDLE, to stand or walk with the legs wide apart. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Spelt striddil and stridle in Levins, ed. 1570. The frequentative of stride, used in place of striddle. See Stride. Cf. prov. E. striddle, to straddle; Halliwell.

STRAGGLE, to stray, ramble away. (E.) Formerly stragle, with one g, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. x. l. 158; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. Put for strackle; cf. prov. E. strackling, a loose wild fellow (North); strackle-brained, dissolute, thoughtless; Halliwell. It is the frequentative of M. E. straken, to go, proceed, roam; 'Pey our lond strakeþ' = they roam over the land; P. Plowman's Creed, l. 82; and cf. Cursor Mundi, l. 1845, Trin. MS. 'To strake about, circuire'; MS. Devonsh. Gloss., cited in Halliwell. Formed from A. S. strāc, pt. t. of strican, to go, also to strike (Stratmann). See Strike, Stroke. ☞ No doubt often confused, in popular etymology, with stray, but the frequentative of stray would have taken the form strail, and could not have had a g. Der. straggl-er.

STRAIGHT, direct, upright. (E.) Spelt strayght in Palsgrave. It is identical with M. E. streit, the pp. of strecchen, to stretch. 'Sithe this flesch, lord, was first perceyued And, for oure sake, laide streit in stalle;' Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 252, l. 46. - A. S. streht, pp. of strecan, to stretch; see Stretch. 2. The adverbial use is early; 'William streit went hem to;' Will. of Palerne, l. 3328; spelt straught, Gower, C. A. iii. 36, l. 6. Der. straight-ly, straight-ness; straight-forward-ly; straight-way = in a straight way, directly, spelt straightway, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 73; straight-en, verb, a late coinage. ☞ Quite distinct from strait, which is, however, from the same root.

STRAIN, to stretch tight, draw with force, overtask, constrain, filter. (F., - L.) M. E. streinen, Chaucer, C. T. 9627. - O. F. estraindre, 'to straine, wring hard'; Cot. - Lat. stringere, to draw tight; pt. t. strinxit, pp. strictus. Allied to Gk. σπαγγός, twisted, σπαγγίζεω, to press out, Lithuan. strėgti, to become stiff, freeze into ice, A. S. streccan, to stretch. See Stretch. Der. strain, sb., strain-er; con-strain, di-strain, re-strain; and see strait, stringent.

STRAIT, strict, narrow, rigid. (F., - L.) M. E. streiit, Chaucer, C. T. 174; Layamon, 22270. - O. F. estreit, later estroiet, 'strait, narrow, close, contracted, strict'; Cot. Mod. F. étroit = Lat. strictum, acc. of strictus, strict, strait. See Strict. Der. strait, sb., used to translate O. F. estroiet, sb., in Cotgrave; strait-ly, -ness; strait-laced; strait-en, a coined word, Luke, xii. 50. Doublet, strict.

STRAND (1), the beach of the sea or of a lake. (E.) M. E. strand, often strond, Chaucer, C. T. 5245. - A. S. strand, Matt. xiii. 48. + Du. strand. + Icel. strönd (gen. strandar), margin, edge. + Dan., Swed., and G. strand. Root unknown; perhaps ultimately due to ✓ STAR, to spread, strew; see Stratum. Der. strand, verb; cf. Du. stranden, 'to arrive on the sea-shore,' Hexham.

STRAND (2), one of the smaller strings that compose a rope. (Du.?) 'Strand, in sea-language, the twist of a rope;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It is most probable that the d is excrement, as commonly in E. after n final, and that the word is Dutch. - Du. streen, 'a trivial word, a skain;' Sewel. Sewel further identifies this form with Du. streng, 'a skain, hank; een streng gaeren, a hank of thread;' the words are prob. not identical, but only nearly related. + G. strähne, a skein, hank; prob. closely related to G. strang, a rope, cord, string, skein. See String.

STRANGE, foreign, odd. (F., - L.) M. E. strange, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 22; Chaucer, C. T. l. 13. - O. F. estranger, 'strange'; Cot. Mod. F. étrange; Span. extraño, Ital. estranio, estranco. - Lat. extraneum, acc. of extraneus, foreign; lit. 'that which is without.' - Lat. extra, without, outside; see Extra. Der. strange-ly, -ness; ☞ strang-er, from O. F. estrangier, 'a stranger,' Cot. Also estranger, q. v. Doublet, extraneous.

STRANGLE, to choke. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. stranglen, Havelok, 640. - O. F. estrangler, 'to strangle, choke'; Cot. - Lat. strangulare, to throttle, choke. - Gk. σπαγγαλέω, to strangle; also σπαγγαλίξω. - Gk. σπαγγάλη, a halter. - Gk. σπαγγός, twisted. - ✓ STRAG, STAR, to stretch, strain, twist; Fick, iii. 826. See Stretch. Der. strangl-er; strangul-ation, from F. strangulation, 'a strangling,' Cot., from Lat. acc. strangulationem.

STRANGURY, extreme difficulty in discharging urine. (L., - Gk.) Modern and medical. - Lat. stranguria. - Gk. σπαγγουρία, retention of the urine, when it falls by drops. - Gk. σπαγγ, base of σπάγγε, that which oozes out, a drop; and οὐρ-ov, urine. The Gk. σπάγγε is allied to σπαγγός, twisted, compressed. See Strangle and Urine.

STRAP, a narrow strip of leather. (L.) Frequently called a strop in prov. E., and this is the better form. M. E. strophe, a noose, loop; 'a rydyng-knotte or a strophe,' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 33. 'A thonge, . . . a strophe, or a loupe,' Elyot, 1559; cited in Halliwell. - A. S. stropp. 'Struppis, strop, vel ár-wiððe;' Wright's Voc. i. 56, col. 2. - Lat. struppis, a strap, thong, fillet. Allied to Gk. σπρόφος, a twisted band or cord; from σπρόφω, to twist. See Strophe. From the same Lat. word are borrowed Du. strop, a halter, F. étrope, &c. Doublet, strop. And see strappado.

STRAPPADO, a species of torture. (Ital., - Teut.) In i Hen. IV, ii. 4. 262. The word has been turned into a Spanish-looking form, but it is rather Italian. In exactly the same way, the Ital. stoccata also appears as stoccado; see Stoccado. - Ital. strappata, a pulling, wringing; the strappado. - Ital. strappare, to pull, wring. - High-German (Swiss) strappen, to pull tight, allied to G. straff, tight (Diez). Perhaps G. straff is not a real Teut. word, but due to Lat. struppis, a strap, twisted cord; see Strap. [+]

STRATAGEM, an artifice, esp. in war. (F., - L., - Gk.) Spelt stratageme, Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 37. - O. F. stratageme, 'a stratagem'; Cot. - Lat. strategema. - Gk. στρατήγημα, the device or act of a general. - Gk. στρατηγός, a general, leader of an army. - Gk. στρατός, an army; and ἀγ-ειν, to lead. β. The Gk. στρατός means properly an encamped army, from its being spread out over ground, and is allied to Gk. στέρνυμι, I spread out, and Lat. sternere; see Stratum. The Gk. ἀγειν is cognate with Lat. agere; see Agent. Curtius, i. 265.

Der. strateg-y, from Gk. στρατηγία, generalship, from στρατηγός, a general; strateg-ic, Gk. στρατηγικός; strateg-ic-al, -ly; strateg-ist.

STRATUM, a layer, esp. of earth or rock. (L.) In Thomson, Autumn, 745. - Lat. stratum, that which is laid flat or spread out, neut. of stratus, pp. of sternere. Allied to Gk. στέρνυμι, I spread out. - ✓ STAR, to scatter, spread out; see Star. Der. strati-fication, strat-ify, coined words. And see street, con-ster-nat-ion, prostrate, stratagem; also strew, straw.

STRAW, a stalk of corn when thrashed. (E.) M. E. straw, Chaucer, C. T. 11007; also stre, stree, id. 2920. - A. S. strew, strewu, strea; it occurs in stred-berige, a strawberry, Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2, and in the derivative strew-ian, to strew, as below. + Du. stroo. + Icel. strá. + Dan. straa. + Swed. strå. + G. stroh, O. H. G. strou, strao. Cf. Lat. stra-men, straw, litter, stru-ere, to heap up; Goth. straujan, to strew.

β. From the base STRU, to scatter, allied to STRA (as in Lat. stra-men, stra-tum); variants of ✓ STAR, to spread out, scatter; see Star. Der. straw-y; strew, verb, q. v.; straw-berry, A. S. stredberige, as above, from the resemblance of its runners or suckers to straws.

STRAY, to wander, rove, err. (F., - L.) M. E. straien: the derivative a-strayed, pp., is in Gower, C. A. ii. 132, l. 11; and see the Prompt. Parv. - O. F. estraier, to stray; Burguy.

β. A consonant has been lost, as usual in O. F., between ai and er, and this consonant is, doubtless, d. See Diez, who compares Prov. estradiér, one who roves about the streets or ways, one who strays, from Prov. estrada, a street; also O. F. estree, a street. This is confirmed by O. Ital. stradiotto, 'a wanderer, gadder, trauller, earth-planet, a high-waist-keeper,' Florio, from Ital. strada, a street. γ. Thus the lit. sense is 'one who roves the streets.' All from Lat. strata, a street; see Street.

☞ The Low Lat. extrarius, cited by Wedgwood, would have become estraire in O. F., whereas the O. F. adj. was estraier or estrayer (see Cotgrave). The Low Lat. forms for stray, sb., given by Ducange, are estraeria, estrajeria, extraeria, which are rather borrowed from F. than true Lat. words. The explanation given by Diez is quite satisfactory. Cf. mod. F. battuer d'estrade, a loiterer (Hamilton). Der. stray, sb., oddly spelt streyue, strayue, in P. Plowm. B. prol. 94, C. i. 92, old form also estray (Blount, Nomo-lexicon), from O. F. estraier, to stray, as above.

STREAK, a line or long mark on a differently coloured ground.

(Scand.) M.E. streke, Prompt. Parv. [The M.E. word of A.S. origin is strike, Chaucer, on the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 7, l. 6; from A.S. strica, a line, formed from stric-, base of pp. of strican, to go, proceed, also to strike.] — Swed. strek, a dash, stroke, line; Dan. streg, a line, streak, stroke, stripe. Allied to Swed. stryka, to stroke, rub, strike; Dan. stryge. + Goth. striks, a stroke with the pen. See Strike and Stroke.

¶ It may be noted that M.E. striken sometimes means to go or come forward, to proceed, advance; see Gloss. to Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, and P. Plowman, B. prol. 183. Cf. also Du. streek, a line, stroke, course. A streak is properly a forward course, a stroke made by sweeping anything along. Der. streak, verb, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 257; streak-y.

STREAM, a current or flow. (E.) M.E. streem, Chaucer, C. T. 466, 3893. — A.S. strēam, Grein, ii. 488. + Du. stroom. + Icel. straumr. + Swed. and Dan. ström. + G. strom; O.H.G. strauum, stroum.

β. All from the Teut. base STRAU-MA, where -ma is the Aryan suffix -ma; the word means 'that which flows,' from the Teut. base STRU, to flow. The orig. root is ✓SRU, to flow; cf. Skt. śru, to flow, Gk. πέω (put for ἀπέω), to flow, Irish sroth, a stream, Lithuan. sroua, a stream. The t seems to have been inserted, for greater ease of pronunciation, not only in Teutonic, but in Slavonic; cf. Russ. struia, a stream. See Curtius, i. 439; Fick, i. 837, iii. 349. The putting of sr for str occurs, contrariwise, in Irish sraid, a street, from the Lat. strata; see Street. From the same root we have rheum, rhythm, ruminate, catarrh. Der. stream, verb, M.E. stremen, streamen, Ancren Riwe, p. 188, note e; stream-er. Hen. V, iii. chor. 6; stream-l-et, a double diminutive; stream-y.

STREET, a paved way, a road in a town. (L.) M.E. strete, Wyclif, Matt. xii. 19. — A.S. stræt, Grein, ii. 487. — Lat. strata, put for strata uia, a paved way; strata is fem. of stratus, pp. of sternere, to strew, scatter, pave. — ✓STAR, to spread out; see Stratum and Star. ¶ The G. strass is likewise borrowed from Latin; so also Ital. strada, &c. Der. stray, q. v.

STRENGTH, might. (E.) M.E. strengthe, Chaucer, C. T. 84. — A.S. strengþu, Grein, ii. 487. — A.S. strang, strong; see Strong. Der. strength-en.

STRENUOUS, vigorous, active, zealous. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. strenuus, vigorous, active. Allied to Gk. στυφής, strong, στυπίζω, to make firm, στερεός, firm; see Stereoscope. Der. strenuous-ly, -ness.

STRESS, strain, force, pressure. (F., -L.) 1. Used in the sense of distress, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 321, last line. 'Stresse, or wed take [pledge taken] by strengthe and vyolence, Vadimonium; Prompt. Parv. Here stresse is obviously short for M.E. destresse, in the sense 'distress for rent;' and stress may sometimes be taken as a short form of distress; see Distress. 2. 'Stresse, or streytynge, Constrictio; Prompt. Parv. 'I stresse, I straght one of his liberty or thrust his body to-guyther, Je estroyssye;' Palsgrave. This is from O.F. estreir (also spelt estroyssir), 'to straiten, pinch, contract, bring into a narrow compass,' Cot. This answers to a Low Lat. form *strictiare, not found, a derivative of strictus, drawn together; see Strict. We may regard stress as due, in general, to this verb, but it comes to much the same thing. ¶ The loss of the initial d occurs also in sport, splay, spend, &c.; and is therefore merely what we should expect.

STRETCH, to draw out, extend. (E.) M.E. strecchen, Chaucer, C. T. 15937; pt. t. straughte, id. 2918; pp. straught or streight, whence mod. E. straight. — A.S. streccan, John, xxi. 18; pt. t. streht, Matt. xxi. 8; pp. streht. Formed as a causal verb from A.S. strac, strec, strong, violent, of which the pl. strece occurs in Matt. xi. 12, and the derivative anstrac, resolute, in Gregory's Past. Care, c. xlii, ed. Sweet, p. 305, l. 18. This A.S. strac is a mere variant of stearc, stark, strong; see Stark. The sense of stretch is, accordingly, to make stiff or hard, as in tightening a cord, or straining it. Or we may regard streccan as a secondary verb due to Teut. base STARK, to draw tight = ✓STARG, an extension of ✓STAR, to spread out. Either way, the root is the same, and it makes but little difference. + Du. strekken. + Dan. strække, to stretch; stræk, a stretch. + Swed. sträcka. + G. strecken; from strach, adj., straight; cf. stracks, straight-way, immediately. Cf. also Lat. stringere, to draw tight, which is closely related; Gk. σπαργός, twisted-tight. Other nearly related words are string and strong; also strain, strait, stringent, strangle, strict. Der. stretch, sb., stretch-er, stretch.

STREW, STRAW, to spread, scatter loosely. (E.) Spelt straw, Matt. xxi. 8. M.E. strawen, strewen, Chaucer, C. T. 10927. — A.S. streowan, Matt. xxi. 8; Mark, xi. 8. — A.S. strewu, straw; see Straw. + Du. strooijen, to scatter; from stroo, straw. β. The E. and Du. verbs are mere derivatives from the sb., but Icel. strá, Swed. strö, Dan. ströe, and (perhaps) G. streuen, to strew, are more orig. forms, and related to Lat. struere, to heap up, sternere (pt. t. stru-ut, pp.

stratus), to scatter. All from ✓STAR, to scatter; see Straw, Stratum, Star.

STRICKEN, advanced (in years); see Strike.

STRICT, strait, exact, severe, accurate. (L.) In Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 19. — Lat. strictus, pp. of stringere; see Stringent. Der. strict-ly, -ness; strict-ure, from Lat. strictura, orig. fem. of fut. part. of stringere. Der. stress. Doublet, strait, adj.

STRIDE, to walk with long steps. (E.) M.E. striden, Cursor Mundi, 10235; Layamon, 17982; pt. t. strade, Iwain and Gawin, 3193, in Ritson's Met. Rom. vol. i; cf. bestrode, bestrode, in Chaucer, C. T. 13831. — A.S. stridan, to strive, also to stride; an unauthorised word, but a strong verb, and a true form; Lye gives bestridan, to bestride, as a derivative. The pt. t. would have been strád, and the pp. striden, as shewn by mod. E. strode, and the derivative striddle, cited under Straddle. Cf. O. Sax. and O. Fries. stríd, strife; O. Sax. stridian, O. Fries. strida, to strive.

β. That the word should have meant both to strive and to stride is curious; but is certified by the cognate Low G. striden (pt. t. streed, pp. streden), meaning (1) to strive, (2) to stride; with the still more remarkable derivative be-striden, also meaning (1) to combat, (2) to bestride, as in dat Peerd bestriden, to bestride the horse; Bremen Wörterbuch, pp. 1063, 1064. [Precisely the same double meaning reappears in Low G. streuen, (1) to strive, (2) to stride, and the sb. streue, (1) a striving, (2) a stride. Hexham notes O. Du. streuen, 'to force or to strive, to walke together;' which points to the meaning of stride as originating from the contention of two men who, in walking side by side, strive to outpace one another, and so take long steps.] γ. Other cognate words are Du. strijden (pt. t. streed, pp. gestreden), G. streiten (pt. t. striit, pp. gestritten), Dan. stride (pt. t. stred), only in the sense to strive, to contend; cf. also the weak verbs, Icel. stríða, Swed. strida, to strive. See further under Strife, Strive. Der. straddl-e, q. v.; stride, sb.; a-stride, adv., King Alisaunder, 4447; be-stride.

STRIFE, contention, dispute, contest. (F., -L.) In early use; Layamon, 29466, later text; Ancren Riwe, p. 200, last line but one. — O. F. estrif, 'strife, debate;' Cot. — Icel. stríð, strife, contention; by the common change of th to f, as in Shakespeare's fill-horse for thill-horse. + O. Sax. and O. Fries. stríd, strife. + Du. strijd. + Dan. and Swed. strid. + G. streit; O. H. G. strit. See Stride. β. Further cognate with O. Lat. stilis (gen. stili-is), strife, later Lat. lis; see Litigate. Root unknown. Der. strive, q. v.

STRIKE, to hit, dash, stamp, coin, give a blow to. (E.) M.E. striken, orig. to proceed, advance, esp. with a smooth motion, to flow; hence used of smooth swift motion, to strike with a rod or sword. 'Ase strem þat strikeþ stille' = like a stream that flows gently; Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21. 'Strek into a studie' = fell into a study; Will. of Palerne, 4038. 'A mous . . . Stroke forth sterly' = a mouse advanced boldly; P. Plowman, prol. 183. Strong verb, pt. t. strak, strek, strok, mod. E. struck; pp. striken, later stricken, mod. E. struck. The phr. 'stricken in years' = advanced in years; Luke, i. 7. — A.S. strican, to go, proceed, advance, pt. t. stríc, pp. stricen. 'Rodor striceð ymbutan' = the firmament goes round, i. e. revolves; Grein, ii. 489. + Du. strijken, to smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike. + G. streichen, pt. t. strich, pp. gestrichen, to stroke, rub, smooth, spread, strike. β. All from Teut. base STRIK; cf. Goth. striks, a stroke, dash with a pen, cognate with Lat. striga, a row, a furrow. We also find Icel. strjúka, pt. t. strauk, pp. strokin, to stroke, rub, wipe, to strike, flog; Swed. stryka, to stroke, wipe, strike, rove; Dan. stryge, the same; from a related base STRUK; Fick, iii. 349. γ. The Aryan base is STRIG, appearing in Lat. stringere, which is precisely equivalent to A.S. strican, when used in the sense to graze, or touch slightly with a swift motion. See Stringent. Der. striker, striking; also stroke, q. v.; streak, q. v. Also strike, sb., the name of a measure, orig. an instrument with a straight edge for levelling (striking off) a measure of grain.

STRING, thin cord. (E.) M.E. string, streng, Chaucer, C. T. 7649. — A.S. strenge, John, ii. 15. From its being strongly or tightly twisted. — A.S. strang, strong, violent. + Du. streng; from streng, adj., severe, rigid. + Icel. strengur; from strangr. + Dan. strang; from streng. + Swed. sträng, sb.; from sträng, adj. + G. strang. Cf. Gk. σπαργάνη, a halter; from σπαργός, hard twisted. See Strong. Der. siring, verb, properly a weak verb, being formed from the sb., but the pp. strung also occurs, L. L. L. iv. 3. 343, formed by analogy with flung from fling, and sung from sing. Also string-ed, the correct form; string-y; bow-string; heart-string.

STRINGENT, urgent, strict. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. stringent-, stem of pres. part. of stringere, to draw tight, compress, urge, &c.; pp. strictus. From the base STRIG, weakened form of STRAG, from ✓STARG, to stretch, twist, extension of ✓STAR, to spread. Fick, i. 827. See Stark, Strong. Der. stringent-ly, stringency; and see strict, strait, a-stringent, a-striction, strain, constrain, di-strain, re-strain, stress, di-stress.

STRIP, to tear off, skin, render bare, deprive, plunder. (E.) M. E. stripen, strepēn, Chaucer, C. T. 1008, 8739; pt. t. strepie, spelt strupie, Juliana, p. 63, l. 16; pp. strept, spelt i-streped, Ancrēn Riwe, p. 148, note g. — A. S. strypan, in comp. bestrypan, to plunder, A. S. Chron. an. 1065. + Du. stroopen, to plunder, strip; cf. strippen, to whip, to strip off leaves; strepēn, to stripe. + O. H. G. stroufen, cited by Stratmann.

β. The base is STRUP, to strip off; cf. O. Du. stroopen, 'to flea [flay], to skin, or to pill,' Hexham. Perhaps related to the base STRUK, to stroke, rub, wipe, as seen in Icel. strjúka; see under Strike. The equivalence of these bases appears in E. stripe as compared with stroke and streak; so also G. streifen, to graze, has just the sense of Lat. stringere, which is related to E. strike. Der. strip, sb., a piece stripped off. And see stripe, strip-ling.

STRIPE, a streak, a blow with a whip. (Du.) Not a very old word, and apparently borrowed from Dutch; prob. because connected with the trade of weaving. M. E. stripe, Prompt. Parv. — O. Du. stripe, as in strip-kleedt, 'a parti-coloured sute,' Hexham; cf. Du. streep, a stripe, streak. Low G. stripe, a stripe, strip; stripen, to stripe; striped Tüg, striped cloth. + G. streif, a stripe, streak, strip. From the notion of flaying; the O. Du. stroopen meant 'to flay,' as shewn under Strip. Hence, a strip, the mark of a lash, a stripe. ¶ Similarly E. streak is connected with E. stroke; from the mark of a blow. Der. stripe, verb.

STRIPLING, a youth, lad. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 144. 'He is but a yongling, A stalworthy strypling;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 345. A double dimin. from strip; the sense is 'one as thin as a strip,' a growing lad not yet filled out. Cf. 'you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case;' i Hen. IV, ii. 4. 273. Similarly a strippet is a very narrow stream; 'a little brooke or strippet;' Holinshed's Descr. of Scotland, c. 10. § 2. [†]

STRIVE, to struggle, contend. (F., — Scand.) M. E. struiuen, a weak verb, pt. t. struiued, Will. of Palerne, 4099. Made into a strong verb, with pt. t. strof, Chaucer, C. T. 1040; mod. E. struve, pp. struiven; by analogy with drive (drove, driven). — O. F. estrivier, 'to strive,' Cot. — O. F. estrif, strife. See Strife.

STROKE (1), a blow. (E.) M. E. stroke, strook, Chaucer, C. T. 1709. — A. S. strác, pt. t. of strican, to strike; with the usual change of d to long o. See Strike. So also G. streich, a stroke, from G. streichen, to stroke, to whip.

STROKE (2), to rub gently. (E.) M. E. stroken, Chaucer, C. T. 10479. — A. S. strician, to stroke; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. A causal verb; from strác, pt. t. of A. S. strican, to go, pass swiftly over, mod. E. strike. See Strike. So also G. streichen, to stroke, from streichen, to rub, strike.

STROLL, to rove, wander. (Scand.?) A late word. 'When stroulers durst presume to pick your purse;' Dryden, 5th prol. to Univ. of Oxford, l. 33. 'Knowing that rest, quiet, and sleep, with lesser meat, will sooner feed any creature than your meat with liberty to run and stroyle about;' Blith's Husbandry, 1652; cited by Wedgwood. The spellings stroyle, stroll, shew that a consonant has been lost; the forms are contracted as if from *strugle, or *strukle. The verb is clearly the frequentative of Dan. stryge, to stroll, as in stryge Landet om or stryge omkring i Landet, to stroll about the country; Swed. stryka, to stroke, also, to stroll about, to ramble. The l appears in Swed. dial. strykel, one who strolls about, also used in the form stryker (Rietz). The verb appears in Du. struikelen, to stumble, with a variation in the sense; so also G. straucheln.

β. All these are from the base STRUK, which, as explained under Strike, occurs in Teutonic as a variant of STRIK, to strike. The corresponding E. word from the latter base would be *strikle or *strackle; of these, the former is only represented by the simple verb appearing in M. E. striken, to flow, to advance, and G. streichen, with its derivative streicher, a stroller; but the latter is still in use in the form Straggole, q. v.

γ. I conclude that, as regards the sense, stroll is a mere doublet of straggole, the difference of vowel being due to a difference in the vowel of the base; whilst, as regards the form, stroll answers to M. E. stroglen, to struggle; see Struggle. See further under Strike. I suppose the Swiss strolchen, to rove about, cited by Wedgwood, to be equivalent to G. straucheln. Der. stroll, sb.; stroll-er.

STRONG, forcible, vigorous, energetic. (E.) M. E. strong, Chaucer, C. T. 2137, &c. 'Strong and stark;' Havelok, 608. — A. S. strang, strong; Grein, ii. 485. + Du. streng. + Icel. strangr. + Dan. streng. + Swed. strång. + G. steng, strict. β. All from Teut. type STRANGA, adj., strong, which is merely a nasalised form of Stark, q. v. The nasal also appears in Gk. σπαγγάλη, a halter (E. string), and in Lat. stringere; hence the identity in meaning between Lat. strictus and G. steng. Fick, iii. 827. Der. strong-ly, strong-hold; string, q. v.; string-th, q. v.; strength-en. Related words are stringent, strain, strict, strait, stretch, straight, strangle, &c.

STROP, a piece of leather, &c. for sharpening razors. (L.) Merely the old form of strap; from Lat. strappus; see Strap.

STROPHE, part of a song, poem, or dance. (Gk.) Formerly used also as a rhetorical term; 'Strophes, wisely deceptions, subtleties in arguing, conversions, or turnings;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Gk. στροφή, a turning, twist, trick; esp. the turning of the chorus, dancing to one side of the orchestra; hence, the strain sung during this evolution; the strophé, to which the antistrophe answers. — Gk. στροφήν, to turn. Perhaps related to strap. Der. anti-strophe, apo-strophe, cata-strophe, epi-strophe.

STROW, the same as Strew, vb., q. v.

STRUCTURE, a building, construction, arrangement. (F., — L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. — F. structure, 'a structure;' Cot. — Lat. structura, a building; orig. fem. of fut. part. of struere (pp. structus), to build, orig. to heap together, arrange. From the base STRU, allied to Goth. straujan, G. streuen, to strew, lay; from ✓ STAR, to spread out. Cf. Lat. stra-tum, from ster-nere. Fick, i. 824. See Star. Der. (from struere) con-strue, con-struct, de-stroy, de-struction, in-struct, in-stru-ment, mis-con-strue, ob-struct, super-structure.

STRUGGLE, to make great bodily efforts. (Scand.) M. E. strogelen, Chaucer, C. T. 10248. Palsgrave not only gives: 'I strogell with my bodye,' but also: 'I strogell, I murmure with wordes secretly, je grommelle.' The latter, however, is merely a metaphorical sense, i. e. to oppose with words instead of deeds. The M. E. strogelen is a weakened form of *strokelen, which is, practically, the frequentative of strike, but formed from the Scand. base STRUK instead of the E. base STRIK, as explained under Strike. The sense is 'to keep on striking,' to use violent exertion; cf. Icel. strokkr, a hand-churn, with an upright shaft which is worked up and down, strokka, to churn, from strjúka (pp. strokin), to stroke, also to strike, to beat, flog. So also the M. E. strogelen is derived from strok-, base of strok-inn, the pp. of the above strong verb. We may also note Swed. stråka, to ripple (strip) flax, stryk, sb., a beating, from stryka, to stroke, strike; Swed. dial. strok, a stroke, blow (Rietz); Dan. stryg, a beating, from stryge, to strike, stroke. The weakening of k to g is common in Danish. β. We also find cognate words in Du. struikelen, G. straucheln, to stumble, lit. 'to keep on striking one's feet.'

¶ It is worth while to notice the three frequentative verbs formed from strike, viz. (1) straggole, 'to keep on going about'; (2) struggle, 'to keep on beating or striking'; and (3) the contracted form stroll, with much the same sense as straggole, but in form nearer to struggle. The difference in sense between the first and second is due to the various senses of M. E. striken. See Stroke, Strike. Der. struggle, sb.

STRUM, to thrum on a piano. (Scand.) 'The strum-strum [a musical instrument] is made like a cittern;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1684 [R.] The word is imitative, and stands for sthrum; it is made from thrum by prefixing the letter s, which, from its occurrence in several words as representing O. F. es (= Lat. ex-), has acquired a fictitious augmentative force. So also s-plash for plash. See Thrum.

STRUMPET, a prostitute. (F., — L.) M. E. strompet, P. Plowman, B. xv. 42. The m in this word can only be accounted for on the supposition that it is an E. addition, and that the word is a strengthened form of *stropet or *strupet. The -et is a F. dimin. suffix; and the derivation is from O. F. strupe, noted by Roquefort as a variant of O. F. stupre, concubinage. — Lat. stuprum, dishonour, violation. Root uncertain. β. The curious position of the r causes no difficulty, as there must have been a Low Lat. form *strupare, used convertibly with Lat. stuprare. This is clear from Ital. strupare, variant of stuprare, Span. estrupear, variant of estuprar, to ravish, and from the O. F. strupe quoted above. Perhaps the E. word was formed directly from Low Lat. *strupata = stuprata, fem. of the pp. of stuprare. The verb strupare is from the sb. stuprum. γ. We find also Irish and Gael. striopach, a strumpet; this is rather to be referred to the same Low Lat. *strupare than to be taken as the orig. of the E. word. δ. The prob. root is ✓ STUP, to push, strike against; cf. Gk. στυφαίειν, to maltreat; Fick, i. 826.

STRUT (1), to walk about pompously. (Scand.) M. E. strouten, to spread out, swell out. 'His here [hair] strouted as a fanne large and brode;' Chaucer, C. T. 3315. 'Stroutyn, or boeyn owt [to boss out, swell out], Turgere;' Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 1779, to stroute is to make a disturbance or to brag. — Dan. strutte, strude, to strut, Swed. dial. strutta, to walk with a jolting step (Rietz). The Norweg. strut means a spout that sticks out, a nozzle; the Icel. strútr is a sort of hood sticking out like a horn; the Swed. strut is a cone-shaped piece of paper, such as grocers put sugar in. The orig. notion of strut seems to be 'to stick out stiffly.' Note further Low G. strutt, rigid, stiff, G. strauss, a tuft, bunch, strotzen, to be puffed up, to strut. The prov. E. strunt, (1) a bird's tail, (2) to strut (Halliwell), is a nasalised form of strut. Der. strut, sb.

¶ STRUT (2), a support for a rafter, &c. (Scand.) 'Strut, with carpenters, the brace which is framed into the ring-piece and principal rafters; Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The orig. sense is a stiff piece of wood; cf. Low G. strutt, rigid. It is, accordingly, closely linked with Strut (1).

STRYCHNINE, a violent poison. (Gk.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ine (F. -ine, Lat. -ina, -inus) from Gk. σπύχνος, nightshade.

STUB, the stump of a tree left after it is cut down. (E.) 'Old stocks and stubs of trees; Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 34. M. E. stubble, Chaucer, C. T. 1980. — A. S. styb, a stub; 'Styrps, styb, Wright's Voc. i. 80, col. 1; also spelt steb, id. 17, col. 1, l. 7. + Du. stobbe. + Icel. stubb, stubbr. + Dan. stubb. + Swed. stubble. β. Allied to Gk. στύκος, a stub, stump; from the base STUP, to make firm, set fast, extension of STU, by-form of ✓STA, to stand. Also allied to Gael. stob, a stake, a stub, Lithuan. stebas, an upright pillar, mast of a ship, Lat. stipes, Skt. stamba, a post, Skt. stambh, to make firm, set fast. Fick, i. 821. Der. stubb, verb, to root out stubs; stubb-y, stubb-ed, stubb-ed-ness; and see stubb-le, stubb-orn, stump, stip-ul-ate.

STUBBLE, the stubs of cut corn. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. stobil, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 25; Chaucer has stoble-goos, C. T. 4351. — O. F. estouble, 'stubble', Cot.; also estuble (Littré, s. v. étale). — O. H. G. stuppilā, G. stoppel, stubble. + Du. stoppel, stubble. + Lat. stipula, dimin. of stipes. See Stub.

STUBBORN, obstinate, persistent. (E.) M. E. stoburn, also stiborn. 'Styburne, or stoburne, Austerus, ferox,' Prompt. Parv.; stiborn, Chaucer, C. T. 6038 (Group D, 456). Cf. styburnesse, sb., Prompt. Parv. As the A. S. y is represented in later English both by i and u (as in A. S. cyssan = E. kiss, A. S. fyr = E. furze) we at once refer stiborn or stoburn to A. S. styb, a stub, with the sense of stub-like, hence immoveable, stiff, steady, &c. β. The suffix -orn is to be regarded as adjectival, and stands for -or, the -n being merely added afterwards, as in mod. E. bitter-n from M. E. bitoure; -or being the same adj. suffix as in A. S. bit-or, E. bitt-er (of course unconnected with M. E. bitoure, a word of F. origin). We should thus have, from A. S. styb, an adj. styb-orn = stub-like, stubborn, and the sb. styb-ornes, stubbornness; and the form stibor-n doubtless arose from misdividing styb-ornes as stibor-n (n).

γ. This is verified by the forms in Palsgrave; he gives the adj. as stoburne and stubburne, but the sb. as stubbernesse and stubblenesse, the latter of which could only have arisen from an A. S. form styb-ol, with suffix -ol as in vac-ol, vigilant. ¶ The suffix -ern in north-ern admits of a different explanation. Der. stubborn-ly, -ness.

STUCCO, a kind of plaster. (Ital., — O. H. G.) In Pope, Imit. of Horace, ii. 192. — Ital. stucco, 'glutted, gorged, . . . dride, stiffe, or hardned; also, a kind of stuffe or matter to build statue or image-work with, made of paper, sand, and lyme, with other mixtures; the imagerie-work at Nonesuch in England in the inner court is built of such;' Florio. — O. H. G. stucchi, a crust; Graff, vi. 631 (Diez), the same as G. stück, a piece (hence, a patch). Allied to Stock.

STUD (1), a collection of breeding-horses and mares. (E.) M. E. stood, Gower, C. A. iii. 204, l. 19, 280, l. 25; cf. stod-mare, a stud-mare, Ancren Riwle, p. 316, l. 15. — A. S. stōd, a stud; spelt stood, Wright's Voc. i. 23, l. 10; stōd, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 574, l. 20. + Icel. stōd. + Dan. stod. + G. gestüt; O. H. G. stuot, stuat. Cf. Russ. stado, a herd or drove. β. All from Teut. type STŌDI, a stud; the orig. sense is 'an establishment,' as we should call it; from Teut. base STŌ, to stand, from ✓STA, to stand. Cf. Lithuan. stoti, to stand; stodas, a drove of horses. So also E. stall, from the same root. Fick, iii. 341. Der. stud-horse; also steed, q. v.

STUD (2), a nail with a large head, large rivet, double-headed button. (E.) A stud is also a stout post; 'the upright in a lath and plaster wall,' Halliwell. It is closely allied to stub and stump, with the similar sense of stiff projection; hence it is a boss, &c. M. E. stode; Lat. bullā is glossed 'a stode,' also 'nodus in cingulo,' Wright's Voc. i. 175, l. 11. The Lat. membratas (ferro) is glossed by ystodyd = studded, id. 123, l. 1. — A. S. studu, a post, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, i. iii. c. 10; written stufu in one MS. + Dan. stød, in the sense of stub, stump. + Swed. stöd, a prop, post. + Icel. stōd, a post; whence stōda, stýða, to prop. β. The Teut. type is STUDA, a prop; Fick, iii. 343. — ✓STU, by-form of ✓STA, to stand; see Stand. Cf. Skt. sthūdā, a post. Der. stud, verb; studd-ed, Shak. Venus, 37.

STUDENT, a scholar, learner. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 38. — Lat. student-, stem of pres. part. of studere, to be eager about, to study. β. It is extremely probable that studere stands for *spudere, and is cognate with the almost synonymous Gk. σπουδερ, to hasten, to be eager about. The senses of Lat. studium and Gk. σπουδή are curiously similar; see Curtius, ii. 360. See Study.

STUDY, application to a subject, careful attention, with the wish to learn. (F., — L.) M. E. studie, Will. of Palerne, 2981, 4038, 4056. — O. F. estudie, later estude, mod. F. étude, study (Littré). — Lat. studium, eagerness, zeal, application, study. Prob. for *spudium, and cognate with Gk. σπουδή, eagerness, zeal. It is probable that E. speed is also from the same root, though with a different affix; see Speed. Der. study, verb, M. E. studien, Chaucer, C. T. 184; studi-ed; studi-ous, from F. studieuse, 'studious,' from Lat. studiosus; studi-ous-ly, -ness. Also studio, Ital. studio, study, also a school, from Lat. studium.

STUFF, materials, household furniture. (F., — L.) 1. See Luke, xvii. 31 (A.V.) 'The sayd treasure and stuffe;' Fabyan's Chron. c. 123, § 2. — O. F. estoffe, 'stuffe, matter;' Cot. Mod. F. étouffe; Ital. stoffa; Span. estofa, quilted stuff. Derived from Lat. stupa, stuppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow (used as material for stuffing things or for stopping them up); but, instead of being derived directly, the pronunciation of the Lat. word was Germanised before it passed into French. See Diez. Hence also G. stoff, stuff; but English retains the Lat. p in the verb to stop; see Stop. 2. The sense of the Lat. word is better shewn by the verb to stuff, i. e. to cram. Skelton has the pp. stuffed, Bowge of Court, 180. — O. F. estoffer, 'to stuffe, to make with stuffe, to furnish or store with all necessaries;' Cot. This answers to G. stopfen, to fill, to stuff, to quilt (note the Span. estofa, quilted stuff, above), which is a Germanised pronunciation of Low Lat. stupare, stuppare, to stop up with tow, to cram, to stop; see Stop. 3. We also use E. stuff-y in the sense of 'close, stifling;' this sense is due to O. F. estouffer, 'to stiffler, smother, choake, stop the breath,' Cot. Mod. F. étouffer. The etymology of this last word is disputed; Diez derives it from O. F. es- (= Lat. ex-) prefix, and Gk. ῥῑφος, smoke, mist, cloud, which certainly appears in Span. tubo, warm vapour from the earth. Scheler disputes this view, and supposes O. F. estouffer to be all one with O. F. estoffer; which seems reasonable. In E., we talk of 'stopping the breath' with the notion of suffocating. Littré says that the spelling estouffer is in Diez's favour, because the F. word for stop is stopper, with p, not f; but this is invalidated by his own derivation of F. étouffe from Lat. stupa, as to which no French etymologist has any doubt. In E., we certainly regard all the senses of stuff as belonging to but one word; 'I stuffe one up, I stoppe his breathe;' Palsgrave.

STULTIFY, to cause to seem foolish. (L.) A mod. word; coined (as if with F. suffix -ify, F. -ifier) from a Lat. form *stultificare, to make foolish. — Lat. stulti-, for stulto-, crude form of stultus, foolish; and -ficare, for facere, to make. β. The Lat. stultus is closely allied to stolidus, with the like sense of fixed, immoveable, hence, stupid, dull, foolish. See Stolid. Der. stultificat-ion, also a coined word.

STUMBLE, to strike the feet against obstacles, to trip in walking. (Scand.) M. E. stumblen, Wright's Voc. i. 143, l. 20; stomblen, Chaucer, C. T. 2615. The b is excrement, as usual after m, and the better form is stomelen, or stumlen. In the Prompt. Parv. pp. 476, 481, we have stomelyn, stummelyn, with the sbs. stomelare or stumliere, and stomelynge or stumlynge. The form stomeren also occurs, in the same sense, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 211 (Stratmann). β. The forms stomelen, stomeren (stumlen, stumren), are frequentatives from a base stum-, which is a duller (less clearly sounded) form of the base stam-, as seen in Goth. stammis, stammering, and E. stammer. The word is of Scand. origin. — Icel. stumra, to stumble; Norweg. stumra, the same (Aasen); Swed. dial. stambla, stamblla, stomla, stammra, to stumble, to falter, go with uncertain steps (Rietz). γ. Thus the word is, practically, a doublet of stammer, with reference to hesitation of the step instead of the speech; cf. E. falter, which expresses both. The base STAM is significant of coming to a stand-still, and is an extension of ✓STA, to stand. Thus 'to stumble' is to keep on being brought to a stand. See Stammer. ¶ The G. stümmeln, to mutilate, is not the same thing, though it is an allied word; it means to reduce to a stump, from G. stümmel, a stump, dimin. of a word not now found in G., but represented by Norweg. stumme, a stump, allied to G. stamm, a stock, trunk; we are thus led back to the base of stem and staff, and to the same ✓STA. Der. stumble, sb., stumb-er, stumb-ling-block, 1 Cor. i. 23.

STUMP, the stock of a tree, after it is cut down, a stub. (Scand.) M. E. stump, Prompt. Parv.; stompe, Joseph of Arimathea, 681. Not found in A. S. — Icel. stumpur, Swed. and Dan. stump, a stump, end, bit. + O. Du. stompe, Du. stomp. + G. stumpf. Cf. Skt. stambha, a post, pillar, stem; Icel. stúfr, a stump. Closely allied to stub, of which it is a nasalised form. See Stub. Der. stump, verb, to put down one's stumps, in cricket.

STUN, to make a loud din, to amaze with a blow. (E.) M. E. stonien, Romance of Partenay, 2940; stounien, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 301. — A. S. stunian, to make a din, resound, Grein, ii. 490. — A. S. stum (written gestum, the prefix ge- making no difference), a din, Grein, i. 459. — A. S. stum-, stem of pp. of a strong verb of which the only other relic is the pt. t. á-sten (rugiebam) in the Blickling Glosses. + Icel. stynja, to groan; stýnnr, a groan. + G. stöhnen, to groan. Further allied to Lithuan. stenėti, Russ. stenate, Gk. στένειν, to groan, Skt. stan, to sound, to thunder. — ✓ STA, STAN, to make a din; see Stentorian. Fick, i. 824. Der. a-stony, a-stound, q. v.; and see a-ston-ish.

STUNTED, hindered in growth. (E.) 'Like stunted hide-bound trees;' Pope, Misc. Poems, Macer, l. 11. Made from the A. S. adj. stunt, dull obtuse, stupid; hence, metaphorically, useless, not well grown. The proper form of the verb is stint, made from stunt by vowel-change; see Stint. Cf. Icel. stuttr (put for stuntr by assimilation), short, stunted; O. Swed. stunt, cut short (lhre); shewing that the peculiar sense is rather Scand. than E.

STUPEFY, to deaden the perception, deprive of sensibility. (F., — L.) Less correctly stupify. Spenser has stupefide, F. Q. v. 3. 17. — F. stupéfier, to stupefy, found in the 16th cent., but omitted by Cotgrave (Littre). This verb is due to the F. pp. stupéfait, formed from Lat. stupefactus, stupefied; there being no such Lat. word as stupeficere, but only stupefacere, and even the latter is rarely found except in the pp. and in the pass. form. — Lat. stupe-, stem of stupere, to be amazed; and facere (pp. factus), to make. See STUPENDOUS and Fact. Der. stupefact-ion, from F. stupefaction, from Lat. acc. stupefactionem; also stupefact-ive.

STUPENDOUS, amazing. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 351. Englished from Lat. stupendus, amazing, to be wondered at, fut. pass. part. of stupere, to be amazed, to be struck still with amazement.

β. Formed from a base STUP, due to ✓ STAP, to make firm, to fix, extension of ✓ STA, to stand. Cf. Skt. sthāpaya, to set, place, causal of sthā, to stand. γ. Similarly Gk. ἐσταφον, I was astonished, and Skt. stambh, to make immovable, to stupefy, are from ✓ STABH, to make firm, a similar extension of ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. Note also Skt. stubbh, stumbh, to stupefy. Fick, i. 821, Curtius, i. 270. Der. stupendous-ly, -ness; also stup-or, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. stupor, sb., amazement; and see stup-id, stupefact-ion.

STUPID, insensible, senseless, dull. (F., — L.) In Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 409. — F. stupide, 'stupid;' Cot. — Lat. stupidus, senseless. — Lat. stupere, to be amazed; see STUPENDOUS. Der. stupid-ly, stupid-ness; also stupid-i-ty, from F. stupidité, 'stupidity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. stupiditatem.

STURDY, resolute, stout, firm. (F., — L.?) The sense of the word has suffered considerable change; it seems to have been influenced by some notion of relationship with stout, with which it is not connected. The true sense is rash or reckless. M. E. sturdi, inconsiderate, Chaucer, C. T. 8573; sturdy, Rob. of Glouc. p. 157, l. 7; stourdy, p. 186, l. 2, p. 212, l. 20. — O. F. estourdi, 'dulled, amazed, astonished, . . heedless, inconsiderate, unadvised, . . rash, retchless, or careless;' Cot. Pp. of estourdir, 'to astonish, amaze;' id. Mod. F. étourdir, Span. aturdir, Ital. stordire, to stun, amaze, surprise. β. Of doubtful origin; Diez explains it from Lat. torpidus, torpid, dull, whence might easily have been formed a Low Lat. *extorpidire, to numb, and this might have been contracted to *extordire in accordance with known laws, by the loss of p as in F. tiède from Lat. tepidus. The Lat. extorpescere is 'to grow numb,' and *extorpidire would be the causal form. γ. Another suggestion, also in Lat., but afterwards given up by him, is to derive it from Lat. turdus, a thrush, because the Span. proverb tener cabeza de tordo = to have a thrush's head, to be easily stupefied. In the latter case, the prefix es- = Lat. ex-, can hardly be explained. See Torpid. Der. sturdi-ly, -ness.

STURGEON, a large fish. (F., — Low Lat., — O. H. G.) M. E. sturgiun, Havelok, 753. — O. F. esturgeon, later estourgeon, 'a sturgeon;' Cot. — Low Lat. sturiōnem, acc. of sturio, a sturgeon. β. Of Teut. origin; the lit. sense is 'stirrer,' from its habits. 'From the quality of floundering at the bottom it has received its name; which comes from the G. verb stören, signifying to wallow in the mud;' Buffon, tr. pub. at London, 1792. — O. H. G. sturo, sturio, M. H. G. stür, G. stör, a sturgeon. — O. H. G. storen, stæren, to spread, stir, G. stören, to trouble, disturb, rake, rummage, poke about. So also Swed. and Dan. stör, a sturgeon, from Swed. störa, to stir; Icel. styrja. If there be any doubt as to the etymology, it is quite set at rest by the A. S. form of the word, viz. styria, a sturgeon, also spelt stiriga, Wright's Voc. i. 55, col. 2, 65, col. 2. This word means 'stirrer,' from A. S. styrian, to stir, agitate; see Stir. [†]

STUTTER, to stammer. (Scand.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative of stut, which was once commonly used in the same sense. 'Her fellow did stammer and stut;' Elynour Rummyng, l. 339. 'I stutte, I can nat speake my wordes redyly;' Palsgrave. M. E. stoten; the F. s'yl ne bue is glossed 'bote he stote' = unless he stutter; Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 6. — Icel. stauta, to beat, strike; also, to read stutteringly; Swed. stöta, to strike, push, hit against; Dan. støde, to push, jolt, jog, trip against, stumble on. + G. stossen, to strike. + Goth. stautan, to strike. β. Thus the orig. sense of stut is to strike, strike against, trip; and stutter = to keep on tripping up. The Teut. base is STUT, as shewn in Goth. stautan. From ✓ STUD, to strike; whence also Lat. tundere, to beat (pt. t. tu-tud-i), Skt. tud, to strike, the initial s being lost in Skt. and Lat. See Benfey; Fick, i. 826. Der. stutter-er, stutter-ing. From the same root are con-tuse, ob-tuse, pierce; also stoat, q. v., stot.

STY (1), an enclosure for swine. (E.) M. E. stie, stye, Chaucer, C. T. 7411; sti, Ancrén Riwe, p. 128, l. 1. — A. S. stigo, a sty. In a glossary printed in Wright's Voc. i. 286, col. 2, we find: 'Incipit de subibus,' followed by: 'Vistrina, stigo;' where a sty is doubtless meant. Sommer gives the form stige, without a reference. In Thorpe's Diplomatarium, p. 612, we have: 'gif cniht binnan stig sitte' = if a servant sit within the recess; where it appears to mean a place set apart for men of rank, perhaps with a raised step. + Icel. stia, stti, a sty, a kennel; svinsti, a swine-sty; stia, to pen. + Dan. sti, a path; also, a sty, pen. + Swed. stia, 'a sty, cabin to keep hogs or geese in; whence gästia (a goose-pen), svinstia (a swinesty),' Widegren; O. Swed. stia, stiga (lhre); Swed. dial. sti, steg, a pen for swine, goats, or sheep (Rietz). Rietz also cites Dn. svijn-stige. + G. steige, a stair, steps, stile, stair-case; also a hen-roost, chicken-coop; O. H. G. stiga, a pen for small cattle, also a sow's litter (whilst lying in the sty).

β. All from Teut. type STIGA, a pen for cattle, Fick, i. 348. Ihre notes that the word was used to mean a pen for any kind of domestic animal; and its application to pigs is prob. later than its other uses. The reason for the name is not clear, though it must have been from the notion of rous or layers rising above the ground or one another, or from the use of a row of stakes; cf. Gk. στοίχος below. Just as Ettmüller derives A. S. stigo from stigan, to climb, so Rietz derives Swed. stia from stiga, to climb, and Fick (iii. 348) derives G. steige from G. steigen, to climb.

γ. The verb to sty, M. E. stizen, to climb, was once common in E., but is now obsolete; the forms of it are A. S. stigan, Du. stijen, Icel. stiga, Swed. stiga, Dan. stige, G. steigen, Goth. steigan, and it is a strong verb. Further cognate with Gk. στοίχευ, to climb, to go; whence the sb. στοίχος, a row, a file of soldiers, also (in Xenophon) a row of poles with hunting-nets into which the game was driven (i. e. a pen or sty). — ✓ STIGH, to climb; Fick, i. 826. Der. (from same root) sty (2), stile (1), stirrup, stair, acro-stic, di-stich, ve-stige.

STY (2), a small inflamed tumour on the edge of the eye-lid. (E.) The A. S. name was stigend. This is shewn by the entry 'Ordeolus, stigend' in Wright's Voc. i. p. 20, l. 12; where ordeolus = Lat. hordeolus, a sty in the eye. This stigend is merely the pres. part. of stigan, to climb, rise, and signifies 'rising,' i. e. swelling up. For the verb stigan, see Sty (1). β. As stigend is properly a pres. part., it was really a short way of saying stigend edge = a rising eye, which phrase must also have been used in full, since we meet with it again in later English in the slightly corrupted form styany, where the whole phrase is run into one word. This word was readily misunderstood as meaning sty on eye, and, as on eye seemed unnecessary the simple form sty soon resulted. We meet with 'styany, or a perle in the eye,' Prompt. Parv.; 'the styony, sycosis,' Levins, ed. 1570 (which is a very late example); also 'Styony, disease growyng within the eyeliddes, sycosis,' Huloet (cited in Wheatley's ed. of Levins). γ. Cognate words are Low G. stieg, stige, a sty in the eye, from stigen, to rise; Norweg. stigi, sti, stige, sty, also called stighöyna (where höyna = a pustule, from Icel. haun, a sore), from the verb stiga, to rise.

STYLE (1), a pointed tool for engraving or writing, mode of writing, manner of expression, way, mode. (F., — L.) M. E. stile, Chaucer, C. T. 10419, where it rhymes with stille in the sense of way over a hedge. — F. stile, style, 'a stile, form or manner of indicting, the pin of a pair of writing-tables;' Cot. — Lat. stilus, an iron-pointed peg used for writing on wax tablets; also, a manner of writing. The orig. sense is 'that which pricks or punctures;' sti-lus stands for *stig-lus, just as sti-mulus is for *stig-mulus. — ✓ STIG, to prick; see Stimulus, Stigma. ¶ The spelling style is false; it ought to be stile. The mistake is due to the common error of writing the Lat. word as stylus. This error was due to some late writers who, imagining that the Gk. στυλος, a pillar, must be the original of Lat. stilus, took upon themselves to use the Gk. στυλος with the sense of the Lat. word. As a fact, the Gk. στυλος, a pillar, post, has a distinctly different sense as well as a different form, and comes from a different root, viz. STU, by-form of ✓ STA, to stand, just as Gk. στήλη, a pillar, comes from the ✓ STA itself. β. But note, that when the E. style is used, as it sometimes is, in botany or dialling, it then represents the Gk. στυλος; see Style (2). Der. style, verb, styl-ish, -ly, -ness.

STYLE (2), in botany, the middle part of a pistil of a flower. (Gk.) 1. 'Style, or stylus, among herbalists, that middle bunching out part of the flower of a plant, which sticks to the fruit or seed;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. στυλος, a pillar, a long upright body like a pillar; see further under Style (1). Not connected with Lat. stilus, as is often imagined. 2. Another sense may be noted; 'in dialling, style is a line whose shadow on the plane of the dial shews the true hour-line, and it is the upper edge of the gnomon, cock, or needle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Here style orig. meant the gnomon itself, and answers rather to Gk. στῆλος than to Lat. stilus. Some difficulty has resulted from the needless confusion of these two unrelated words.

Der. styl-ar, pertaining to the pin of a dial.

STYPTIC, astringent, that stops bleeding. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt styptick in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 13, and in Cotgrave. -F. styptique, 'styptick,' Cot. -Lat. stypticus. -Gk. στυπτικός, astringent. -Gk. στυπεῖν, to contract, draw together, also, to be astringent; orig. to make hard or firm; allied to στέμνος, a stump, stem, block, so called because firmly set. Gk. στέμνος is allied to E. Stub, q. v. And see Stop.

SUASION, advice. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More's Works, p. 157, l. 5. -F. suasion, 'persuasion,' Cot. -Lat. suasionem, acc. of suasio, persuasion. -Lat. suasus, pp. of suadere, to persuade. -Lat. suadus, persuasive; orig. 'pleasant'; allied to Lat. suavis (put for *suad-vis), sweet. See Suave. Der. suas-ive, a coined word; suas-ive-ly, suavish-ness; see also dis-suade, per-suade.

SUAVE, pleasant, agreeable. (F., -L.) Not common; the derived word suavity is in earlier use, in Cotgrave. -F. suave, 'sweet, pleasant,' Cot. -Lat. suavis, sweet; put for *suad-vis, and allied to E. Sweet, q. v. Der. suav-ity, from F. suavité, 'suavity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suavitatem.

SUB-, a common prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) Lat. sub-, prefix (whence F. sub-); Lat. sub, prep., under. The Lat. super, above, is certainly a comparative form from sub (orig. *sup), and corresponds, in some measure, to Skt. upari, above. As to the connection of super with upari there can be no doubt, but the prefixed s in Lat. super has not been explained. [Perhaps the s corresponds to Goth. us, out, so that s-sub means 'from under;' or we may suppose (with Benfey) that s-sub = sa sub, where sa is simply the def. article, corresponding to Skt. sa, demonstr. pronoun.] Certainly Lat. super is allied to E. over; and Lat. sub to E. up. See further under Over and Up.

β. 'Sub', it is true, means generally below, under; but, like the Gk. ὑπό (hypo), it is used in the sense of 'from below,' and thus may seem to have two meanings diametrically opposed to each other, below and upward. Submittere means to place below, to lay down, to submit; sublevaré, to lift from below, to raise up. Summus, a superl. of sub, ὑψίστος (hypsistos), a superl. of ὑπό (hypo), do not mean the lowest, but the highest; Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 310, ed. 1875. And see Hypo-. γ. Sub-, prefix, becomes suc- before c following, suf- before f, sug- before g, sum- before m, sup- before p (though sup is rather the orig. form), sur- before r. And see Sus-. Der. sub-ter-, prefix; super-, prefix; sup-ra-, prefix; sur-, prefix (French); and see sum, supreme, soprano, sovereign, sup-ine. Doublet, hypo-, prefix.

SUBACID, somewhat acid. (L.) Richardson gives an example from Arbuthnot, Of Aliments, c. 3. -Lat. subacidus, somewhat acid, lit. 'under acid.' See Sub- and Acid.

SUBALTERN, subordinate, inferior to another. (F., -L.) 'Subaltern magistrates and officers of the crown;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. iii (R.) 'Subalterne, vnder another;' Minshew, ed. 1627. -F. subalterne, adj., 'subalterne, secondary;' Cot. -Lat. subalternus, subordinate. -Lat. sub, under, and alter, another; with adj. suffix -nus (Aryan -na). See Sub- and Alter. Der. subaltern, sb., a subordinate; put for subaltern officer.

SUBAQUEOUS, under water. (L.) In Pennant's Brit. Zoology, on swallows (R.) A coined word; from Lat. sub, under, and aqua, water; see Sub- and Aquatio. The true Lat. word is subaqueus.

SUBDIVIDE, to divide again into smaller parts. (L.) 'Subdivided into verses;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.) -Lat. subdividere, lit. to divide under. See Sub- and Divide. Der. subdivision.

SUBDUE, to reduce, conquer, tame, soften. (F., -L.) In Palsgrave; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 962, l. 4. The M.E. form was soduen, and this was afterwards altered to subduen for the greater clearness, by analogy with the numerous words beginning with sub-. We find 'schal be sodued' in Trevisa, iii. 123, l. 7, where two other MSS. have soduwed, sudewede, but Caxton's (later) edition has subdued. -O. F. souduire, 'to seduce,' Cot.; but the older sense must rather have been to subdue. Roquefort gives the pres. part. souduians (plural), seductive, with a quotation. -Lat. subducere, to draw away, withdraw, remove; hence to carry off, and so to overpower. [Formed like F. reduire from Lat. reducere, séduire from seducere.] -Lat. sub, from below, hence away; and ducere, to lead, carry; see Sub- and Duke. ¶ The true Lat. words for the sense of 'subdue' are rather subdere and subicere, but subdue is clearly not derived from either of these. Der. subdu-er, subdu-al, subdu-able. [†]

SUB-EDITOR; from Sub- and Editor.

SUBJACENT, lying beneath. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. i. p. 177 (R.) -Lat. subiacent, stem of pres. part. of subiacere, to lie under. -Lat. sub, under; and iacere, to lie. Iacere is due to iacere, to cast, throw. See Sub- and Jet (1); and see Subject.

SUBJECT, laid or situate under, under the power of another, liable, disposed, subservient. (F., -L.) The spelling has been brought nearer to Latin, but the word was taken from French. The O. F. word was also, at one time, re-spelt, to bring it nearer to Latin. M. E. suget, adj., Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 1; suget, subject, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 8358. -O. F. suict, suictet, later subiect, 'a subject, vassal;' Cot. Mod. F. sujet. -Lat. subiectus, subject; pp. of subicere, to place under, put under, subject. -Lat. sub, under; and iacere, to cast, throw, put. See Sub- and Jet (1). Der. subject, sb., M. E. suget, as above; subject, verb, spelt subiecte in Palsgrave; subject-ion, M. E. subiection, Chaucer, C. T. 14384, from O. F. subiection, 'subjection,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subiectionem; subject-ive, from Lat. subiectivus; subject-ive-ly, subject-ive-ness; subject-iv-ity, a late coinage.

SUBJOIN, to join on at the end, annex, affix. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. -O. F. subjoindre, 'to subjoin;' Cot. -Lat. subiungere, to subjoin. See Sub- and Join. And see subjoin-ive.

SUBJUGATE, to bring under the yoke. (L.) In Palsgrave. -Lat. subjugatus, pp. of subjugare, to bring under the yoke. -Lat. sub-, under; and iugum, a yoke, cognate with E. yoke; see Sub- and Yoke. Der. subjugat-or, from Lat. subjugator; subjugat-ion, from F. subjugation, 'a subduing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. *subjugationem, not used.

SUBJUNCTIVE, denoting that mood of a verb which expresses contingency. (L.) Spelt subiunctive, Minshew, ed. 1627. -Lat. subiunctivus, subjunctive, lit. joining on at the end, from its use in dependent clauses. -Lat. subiunct-us, pp. of subiungere, to subjoin; see Subjoin.

SUBLEASE, an under-lease. (F., -L.; with L. prefix.) From Sub- and Lease.

SUBLET, to let, as a tenant, to another. (Hybrid; L. and E.) From Sub- and Let (1).

SUBLIME, lofty, majestic. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 8. 30. [As a term of alchemy, the verb to sublime is much older; Chaucer has subliming, C. T. 16238; also sublimatorie, id. 16261; these are rather taken directly from Lat. sublimare and sublimatorium than through the F., as it was usual to write on alchemy in Latin.] -F. sublime, 'sublime,' Cot. -Lat. sublimis, lofty, raised on high. β. A difficult word; prob. it means passing under the lintel or cross-piece of a door, hence reaching up to the lintel, tall, high; if so, the part -limis is connected with limus, transverse, limes, a boundary, limen, a threshold. See Sub- and Limit. Der. sublime-ly; sublim-i-ty, from F. sublimité, 'sublimity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sublimitatem. Also sublime, verb, in alchemy = Lat. sublimare, lit. to elevate; sublim-ate, verb and sb., sublim-at-ion, sublim-at-or-y.

SUBLUNAR, under the moon, earthly. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 777. Coined from Sub- and Lunar. Der. sublunar-y, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 7.

SUBMARINE, under or in the sea. (Hybrid; L. and F., -L.) Rich. gives a quotation from Boyle's Works, vol. iii. p. 342. It occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is said to have been used by Bacon. Coined from Sub- and Marine.

SUBMERGE, to plunge under water, overflow with water. (F., -L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. 5. 94. -F. submerger, 'to submerge;' Cot. -Lat. submergere (pp. submersus); see Sub- and Merge. Der. submerg-ence; submers-ion, from F. submersion, 'a submersion,' Cot., from Lat. acc. submersionem; also submerge, from the pp. submersus; submers-ed.

SUBMIT, to refer to the judgment of another, yield, surrender. (L.) 'I submyt myselfe, Ie me submets;' Palsgrave. 'Ye been submitted;' Chaucer, C. T. 4455. It may have been taken from F. in the first instance, but, if so, was early conformed to the Lat. spelling. -Lat. submittere, to let down, submit, bow to. -Lat. sub-, under, down; and mittere, to send (pp. missus); see Sub- and Missile. Der. submission, from O. F. soumission, 'submission,' Cot., from Lat. acc. submissionem; submiss-ive, -ly, -ness; submiss, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 51, from Lat. pp. submissus.

SUBORDINATE, lower in order or rank. (L.) 'Inferior and subordinate sorts;' Cowley, Essay 6, Of Greatness (R.) 'His next subordinate;' Milton, P. L. v. 671. Coined as if from Lat. *subordinatus, not used, but formed (with pp. suffix) from sub ordinem, under the order or rank. Ordinem is the acc. of ordo, order, rank. See Sub- and Order. Der. subordinate, as sb., subordinate-ly; subordination, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 8; whence in-subordination.

SUBORN, to procure privately, instigate secretly, to cause to commit perjury. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 34. Sir T. More has subornacion, Works, p. 211 h. -F. suborner, 'to suborn,' Cot. -Lat. subornare, to furnish or supply in an underhand way or secretly. -Lat. sub, under, secretly; and ornare, to furnish, adorn. See Sub- and Ornament. Der. suborn-er; subornat-ion, from F. subornation, 'a subornation,' Cot.

SUBPŒNA, a writ commanding a person to attend in court under a penalty. (L.) Explained in Minshew, ed. 1627; and much older. — Lat. sub pœna, under a penalty. — Lat. sub, under; and pœna, abl. of pœna, a pain or penalty. See Sub- and Pain. Der. subpœna, verb.

SUBSCRIBE, to write underneath, to sign one's name to. (L.) 'And subscribed their names vndre them;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 3 h. — Lat. subscribere, to write under, sign one's name to. — Lat. sub, under; and scribere, to write. See Sub- and Scribe. Der. subscrib-er; subscript, from the pp. subscriptus; subscript-ion, from O. F. subscriptiōn, 'a subscription or subscribing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subscriptiōnem. [†]

SUBSECTION, an under-section, subdivision of a subject. (Hybrid; L. and F., — L.) From Sub- and Section.

SUBSEQUENT, following after. (L.) In Troil. i. 3. 334, and Milton, Samson, 325. — Lat. subsequent-, stem of pres. part. of sequi, to follow close after. — Lat. sub, under, close after; and sequi, to follow. See Sub- and Sequel. Der. subsequent-ly.

SUBSERVE, to serve subordinately. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 57. Englished from Lat. subseruire, to serve under a person. — Lat. sub, under; and seruire; see Sub- and Serve. Der. subservi-ent, from Lat. subservient-, stem of pres. part. of subseruire; subservient-ly, subservience.

SUBSIDE, to settle down. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has subside, subsid-ence. — Lat. subsidiere, to settle down. — Lat. sub, under; and sedere, to settle, allied to sedere, to sit, which latter is cognate with E. sit. See Sub- and Sit. Der. subsid-ence, from Lat. subsidentia, a settling down. And see subsidy.

SUBSIDY, assistance, aid in money. (F., — L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 25, iv. 8. 45. M. E. subsidie, The Crowned King, l. 36, pr. in App. to P. Plowman, C-text, p. 525; the date of the poem is about A. D. 1415. I have little doubt that it is derived from an old Norman-French subsidiē, though the usual F. form is subside, as in Cotgrave and Palsgrave. — Lat. subsidiū, a body of troops in reserve, aid, assistance. The lit. sense is 'that which sits behind or in reserve'; from Lat. sub, under, behind, and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sub- and Sit; and see Subside. Cf. Lat. præsidium, ob-sidiū, from the same verb. Der. subsidi-ar-y, from Lat. subsidiarius, belonging to a reserve; subsid-ise, a coined verb.

SUBSIST, to live, continue. (F., — L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 73. — F. subsister, 'to subsist, abide;' Cot. — Lat. subsistere, to stand still, stay, abide. — Lat. sub, under, but here used with very slight force; and sistere, orig. to set, make to stand, but also used in the sense to stand. Sistere is the causal of stare, to stand; prob. a reduplicated form, put for *sti-tere; and stare is from ✓STA, to stand; see Sub- and Stand. Der. subsist-ence, from F. subsistence, 'subsistence, continuance,' Cot., from Lat. subsistentia; subsist-ent, from the stem of the pres. part. of subsistere.

SUBSOIL, the under-soil. (Hybrid; L. and F., — L.) From Sub- and Soil.

SUBSTANCE, essential part, matter, body. (F., — L.) M. E. substance, substaunce, Chaucer, C. T. 14809. — F. substance, 'substance;' Cot. — Lat. substantia, essence, material, substance. — Lat. substanti-, crude form of pres. part. of substare, to be present, exist, lit. to stand beneath. — Lat. sub, beneath; and stare, to stand, from ✓STA, to stand. See Sub- and Stand. Der. substanti-al, M. E. substancial, Gower, C. A. iii. 92, l. 10, from F. substantiel, from Lat. adj. substantialis; substanti-al-ly; substanti-ate, a coined word. Also substant-ive, M. E. substantif, P. Plowman, C. iv. 345, from F. substantif (Littré), from Lat. substantivus, self-existent, that which denotes existence, used of the 'substantive' verb esse, and afterwards extended, as a grammatical term, to nouns substantive as distinct from nouns adjective.

SUBSTITUTE, one person put in place of another. (F., — L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'This pope may be deposed, and another substitute in his room;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1427 f. Hence used as a verb. 'They did also substitute other;' id. p. 821 d. — F. substitut, 'a substitute;' Cot. — Lat. substitutus, one substituted; pp. of substituere, to lay under, put in stead of. — Lat. sub, under, in place of; and statuere, to place, pp. statutus; see Sub- and Statute. Der. substitute, verb, as above; substitut-ion, Gower, C. A. iii. 178, l. 29, F. substitution (Cot.), from Lat. acc. substitutionem.

SUBSTRATUM, an under stratum. (L.) Lat. substratum, neut. of substratus, pp. of substernere, to spread under. See Sub- and Stratum.

SUBTEND, to extend under or be opposite to. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives subtended and subtense as mathematical terms; subtense is in Blount, ed. 1674. — Lat. subtendere (pp. subtensus), to stretch beneath. — Lat. sub, under; and tendere, to stretch; see Sub- and Tend. Der. subtense, from pp. subtensus. And see hypotenuse.

SUBTER-, under, secretly. (L.) Formed from Lat. sub, under, by help of the suffix -ter, which is properly a comparative suffix, as in in-ter; see Inter-, Other.

SUBTERFUGE, an evasion, artifice to escape censure. (F., — L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 182, l. 18. — F. subterfuge, 'a subterfuge, a shift;' Cot. — Low Lat. subterfugium, a subterfuge (Ducange). — Lat. subterfugere, to escape secretly. — Lat. subter, secretly; and fugere, to flee; see Subter- and Fugitive.

SUTERRANEAN, SUBTERRANEOUS, underground. (L.) Both forms are in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount, ed. 1674, has subterrany and subterraneous. Both are formed from Lat. subterraneus, underground; the former by adding -an (= Lat. -anus) after e, the latter by changing -us to -ous. — Lat. sub, under; and terr-a, the earth; with suffix -an-eus. See Sub- and Terrace.

SUBTLE, fine, rare, insinuating, sly, artful. (F., — L.) Pronounced [sutl]. The word was formerly spelt without b, but this was sometimes inserted to bring it nearer to the Lat. form. We also meet with the spellings subtil, subtile. M. E. sotil, sotel, Chaucer, C. T. 1056; subtil, id. 2051; the Six-text edition has the spellings sotil, sotyl, subtil, subtile, sotel, soutil, Group A, 1054, 2049. — O. F. sutil, soutil (Burguy), later subtil, 'subtill,' Cot. — Lat. subtilis, fine, thin, slender, precise, accurate, subtle. β. It is gen. thought that the orig. sense of subtilis is 'finely woven,' from sub, beneath (= closely?), and tela, a web. Tela stands for *texla, from texere, to weave. See Sub- and Text. Der. subtil-y (sometimes subtile-ly), subtile-ness (sometimes subtile-ness); also subtile-ty or subtil-ty, M. E. soteltie, sotelle, P. Plowman, B. xv. 76, from O. F. sotillez (Littré), also subtilité, from Lat. acc. subtilitatem. ¶ Note that the pronunciation without b agrees with the orig. M. E. form.

SUBTRACT, to take away a part from the whole. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. subtrah-er, pp. of subtrahere, to draw away underneath, to subtract. — Lat. sub, under; and trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See Sub- and Trace. Der. subtraction (as if from F. *subtraction, not used), from Lat. acc. subtractionem; subtract-ive; also subtrahend, in Minshew, a number to be subtracted, from Lat. subtrahend-us, fut. pass. part. of subtrahere.

SUBURB, SUBURBS, the confines of a city. (L.) Commonly used in the pl. form. 'The suburbs of the towne;' Fabyan's Chron. c. 219. — Lat. suburbium, the suburb of a town. — Lat. sub, under (here near); and urbi-, crude form of urbs, a town, city; see Sub- and Urban. Der. suburb-an, from Lat. suburbanus. [†]

SUBVERT, to overthrow, ruin, corrupt. (F., — L.; or L.) M. E. subuerten, Wyclif, Titus, iii. 11. — F. subvertir, 'to subvert.' — Lat. subvertere (pp. subuersus), to turn upside down, overthrow, lit. to turn from beneath. — Lat. sub, from under; and vertere, to turn. See Sub- and Verse. Der. subvers-ion, F. subversion, 'a subversion,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subuersionem; subvers-ive.

SUCCEED, to follow next in order, take the place of, to prosper. (F., — L.) Better spelt succede. M. E. succeden, Chaucer, C. T. 8508. — F. succeder, 'to succeed;' Cot. — Lat. succedere (pp. successus), to go beneath or under, follow after. — Lat. suc- (for sub before c), under; and cedere, to go; see Sub- and Cede. Der. success, an issue or result, whether good or bad (now chiefly only of a good result), as in 'good or ill success,' Ascham, Schoolmaster, pt. i, ed. Arber, p. 35, from O. F. succes, 'success,' Cot., from Lat. successum, acc. of successus, result, event; success-ful, success-ful-ly. Also success-or, M. E. successour, Rob. of Glouc. p. 507, l. 9, F. successeur, from Lat. acc. successorem, one who succeeds; success-ion, F. succession, 'succession,' Cot., from Lat. acc. successionem; success-ion-al; success-ive, F. successif, 'successive,' from Lat. successivus; success-ive-ly. Also succed-an-e-ous, explained by Phillips, ed. 1706, as 'succeeding, or coming in the room of another,' from Lat. succedaneus, that which supplies the place of another; succed-an-e-um, sb., neut. of succedaneus.

SUCCINCT, concise. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. succinct-us, prepared, short, small, contracted; pp. of succingere, to gird below, tuck up, gird up, furnish. — Lat. suc- (for sub before c), under, below; and cingere, to gird; see Sub- and Cincture. Der. succinct-ly, succinct-ness.

SUCCORY, chicory. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Of cykory or succory,' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 8. Minshew gives succory, cichory, and chicory. Succory is a corruption of cichory, now usually called chicory; see Chicory.

SUCCOUR, to assist, relieve. (F., — L.) M. E. socouren, Will. of Paleme, 1186. — O. F. succurre, soscorre (Burguy), later secourir, as in Cotgrave; the change to e is no improvement. — Lat. subcurrere, succurrere, to run under, run up to, run to the aid of, aid, succour. — Lat. sub, under, up to; and currere, to run; see Sub- and Current. Der. succour-er. Also succour, sb., M. E. sucurs, Ancren Riwle, p. 244, l. 9, from O. F. socors, later secours, as in Cotgrave, from Lat. subcurus, succurus, pp. of succurrere. [†]

SUCCULENT, juicy. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. succulent, 'succulent'; Cot. = Lat. succulentus, succulentus, full of juice; formed with suffix -lentus from succu-s, sucu-s, juice (the gen. is succi, but there is a collateral form with u-stem, found in the gen. pl. succum). β . Sucus is prob. cognate with Gk. ὄσος, juice, sap; perhaps with E. sap; see Opium and Sap. The root of Lat. sucus is SUK, appearing in sugere (pp. suc-tus), to suck, which is cognate with E. Suck, q. v.

SUCCUMB, to yield. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 459. = Lat. succumbere, to lie or fall under, yield. = Lat. suc- (for sub before c), under; and cumbere, to lie, a nasalised form allied to cubare, to lie. See Sub- and Incubus, Incumbent.

SUCH, of a like kind. (E.) M.E. swulc, swilc, swilch, swilch, such (with numerous other forms, for which see Stratmann). We find swulc, swile in Layamon, 31585, 1375; swilch, Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 131; swilch, such, Chaucer, C. T. 3 (see Six-text). It will thus be seen that the orig. l was lost, and the final c weakened to ch. The forms swulc, swile are from A.S. swylc, swile, swete, such, Grein, ii. 513. + O. Sax. sulic. + O. Fries. selic, selk, sullik, sulch, suk. + Du. zulk. + Icel. slitr. + Dan. slig. + Swed. salik (Ihre). + G. solch; O. H. G. solich. + Goth. swaleiks. β . The Goth. swaleiks is simply compounded of swa, so, and leiks, like; and all the Teut. forms admit of a similar explanation. Thus such is for so-like, of which it is a corruption. See So and Like; and cf. Which.

SUCK, to draw in with the mouth, imbibe, esp. milk. (E.) M.E. souken, Chaucer, C. T. 8326; once a strong verb, with pt. t. sak or sec, Ancren Riwe, p. 330, l. 6, pp. i-soke (for i-soken), Trevisa, iii. 267, l. 12. = A.S. sūcan, strong verb, pt. t. sēde, pp. socen; Grein, ii. 492, Matt. xxi. 16, Luke, xi. 27. There is also a form sūgan, and there is a double form of the Teut. base, viz. SUK and SUG. Of the former, we find examples in A.S. sūcan, E. suck, cognate with Lat. sugere. Of the latter, we have examples in A.S. sūgan, Icel. sūga, sūga (pt. t. saug, pp. sokinn), Dan. suge, Swed. suga, G. saugen, O. H. G. sūgan; which is the prevailing type. We find also W. sugno, to suck, sug, juice; Irish sughaim, I suck in, sugh, juice; Gael. sug, to suck, sugh, juice; cf. Lat. sucus, succus, juice. β . The root has a double form, SUK and SUG, Fick, i. 801; and this is best accounted for by supposing them to be both extensions from the \checkmark SU, to generate, also to express soma-juice, as seen in Skt. su (with these senses) and in the Skt. sb. so-ma, juice, nectar. This root appears in E. Son, q. v. The words succulent, opium, sap, are all related. Der. suck, verb, suck-er, sb.; suck-le, Cor. i. 3. 44, a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -le; suck-l-ing, M. E. sokling or sokeling, spelt sokelynge in Prompt. Parv., formed with dimin. suffix -ing from the form sokel=one who sucks, where the -el is the suffix of the agent (so that it is not a parallel form to suck-l-ing, which is merely a double dimin. from suck). Also honey-suckle, q. v.; suc-tion, q. v.

SUCTION, the act or power of sucking. (F., -L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 191. = F. suction, 'a sucking'; Cot. Formed, as if from L. *suctio, from suctus, pp. of sugere, to suck; see Suck.

SUDATORY, a sweating bath. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Rare. Rich. gives an example from Holyday, Juvenal, p. 224. = Lat. sudatorium, a sweating-bath; neut. of sudatorius, serving for sweating. = Lat. sudatori-, crude form of sudator, a sweater. = Lat. sudare, to sweat, allied to E. Sweat, q. v.; with suffix -tor of the agent. See sudorific.

SUDDEN, unexpected, abrupt, hasty. (F., -L.) M.E. sodain, sodein, soden, Chaucer, C. T. 4841; sodeynliche, suddenly, King Alisaunder, 3568. = O. F. sodain, sudain, mod. F. soudain, sudden. Cf. Prov. sopament, suddenly (Bartsch); Ital. subitano (also subitaneo). = Low Lat. *subitanus, for Lat. subitaneus, sudden; extended from subitus, sudden, lit. 'that which has come stealthily,' orig. pp. of subire, to go or come stealthily. = Lat. sub, under, stealthily; and ire, to go, from \checkmark I, to go. See Sub- and Itinerant. Der. sudden-ly, ness.

SUDORIFIC, causing sweat. (F., -L.) 'Sudorific herbs'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 706. = F. sudorifique, causing sweat, Cot. = Lat. sudorificus, the same. = Lat. sudori-, crude form of sudor, sweat; and -ficus, making, from facere, to make. See Sweat and Fact. Der. sudorific, sb.; and see sudatory.

SUDS, boiling water mixed with soap. (E.) 'Sprinkled With suds and dish-water'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Money, A. iii. sc. 1. Suds means 'things sodden'; and is formed as a pl. from sud, derived from the base of sodden, pp. of seethe, q. v. Hence Gascoigne uses suddes metaphorically, in the sense of 'worthless things'; see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, ii. 310, l. 9. In the suds=in the middle of a wash, is a proverbial expression for being in a sulky temper; cf. prov. E. sudded, flooded. Cf. O. Du. zode, a seething, boiling, Hexham; Icel. soð, water in which meat has been sodden; and see Sod.

SUE, to prosecute at law. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is merely to follow; it was technically used as a law-term. Spelt sawe in Palsgrave. M.E. suen, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19, 22; also sawen, sawen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 21; sawen, Ancren Riwe, p. 208, l. 5. = O. F. sevre, suir, suir (with several other forms, Burguy), mod. F. suivre, to follow. Cf. Prov. segre, seguir (Bartsch), Ital. seguire, to follow. = Low Lat. sequere, to follow, substituted for Lat. sequi, to follow; see the changes traced in Brachet. See Sequence. Der. en-sue, q. v., pur-sue; suit, suite, q. v.

SUET, the fat of an animal about the kidneys. (F., -L.) M.E. suet. 'Suète [where w=ui], suët (due syllabe), of flesche or fysche or oper lyke, Liqamen, sumen'; Prompt. Parv. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from O. F. seu, suïs (also suif, as in mod. F.), suet, fat; see Littré. Cf. Span. sebo; Ital. sevo, 'tallow, fat, sewet', Florio. = Lat. sebum, also seum, tallow, suet, grease. Prob. allied to Lat. sapo, soap; see Soap. [+]

SUFFER, to undergo, endure, permit. (F., -L.) M.E. soffren, suffren, in early use; Chaucer, C. T. 11089; Layamon, 24854 (later text). = O. F. soffrir, suffrir, mod. F. souffrir. = Lat. sufferre, to undergo, endure. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), under; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Sub- and Bear (1). Der. suffer-er, suffer-ing; suffer-able; also suffer-ance or suff-rance, M.E. suffrance, Chaucer, C. T. 11100, O. F. souffrance, later souffrance, 'sufferance', Cot., from Low Lat. sufferentia (Ducange).

SUFFICE, to be enough. (F., -L.) M.E. suffisen, Chaucer, C. T. 9908. = F. suffis-, occurring in suffis-ant, stem of pres. part. of suffire, to suffice; cf. M.E. suffisance, sufficiency, Chaucer, C. T. 492, from F. suffisance, sufficiency. = Lat. sufficere, lit. to make or put under, hence to substitute, provide, supply, suffice. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and facere, to make; see Sub- and Fact. Der. suffici-ent, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 17, from Lat. sufficient-, stem of pres. part. of sufficere; suffici-ent-ly; suffici-ency, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 8.

SUFFIX, a letter or syllable added to a word. (L.) Modern; used in philology. = Lat. suffixus, pp. of suffigere, to fasten on beneath. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and figere, to fix; see Sub- and Fix. Der. suffix, verb.

SUFFOCATE, to smother. (L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'May he be suffocate,' 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 124. = Lat. suffocatus, pp. of suffocare, to choke. Lit. 'to put something under the gullet, to throttle.' = Lat. suf- (for sub before p), and fauc-, stem of fauces, s. pl., the gullet, throat. [The same change from au to o occurs in focale, a neck-cloth.] Perhaps allied to Skt. bhūkā, a hole, the head of a fountain. Der. suffocat-ion, from F. suffocation, 'suffocation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suffocationem.

SUFFRAGE, a vote, united prayer. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 142. = F. suffrage, 'a suffrage, voice'; Cot. = Lat. suffragium, a vote, voice, suffrage. Suffragium has been ingeniously explained as 'a broken piece' such as a pot-herd, &c., whereby the ancients recorded their votes (Vaníček). If this be right, suf- is the usual prefix (= sub), and -frāgium is connected with frangere, to break, cognate with E. Break. Cf. Lat. nav-frāgium, a ship-wreck. Der. suffrag-an, M.E. suffragan, Trevisa, ii. 115, l. 9, from F. suffragant, 'a suffragan, or suffragan, a bishop's deputy,' Cot., from Lat. suffragant-, stem of pres. part. of suffragari, to vote for, support, assist; but suffragan may also represent the Low Lat. suffraganeus, a suffragan bishop. [+]

SUFFUSE, to overspread or cover, as with a fluid. (L.) 'Her suffused eyes'; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 10. = Lat. suffusus, pp. of suffundere, to pour beneath, diffuse beneath or upon. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and fundere, to pour; see Sub- and Fuse. Der. suffusion, from F. suffusion, 'a suffusion, or pouring upon,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suffusionem.

SUGAR, a sweet substance, esp. that obtained from a kind of cane. (F., -Span., -Arab., -Pers., -Skt.) M.E. sugre, Chaucer, C. T. 10928; in P. Plowman, B. v. 122, two MSS. read sucure, of which sugre is a weakened form. = F. sucre, 'sugar'; Cot. = Span. azucar, sugar. = Arab. sakkar, sokkar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 357, Freytag's Arab. Dict. ii. 334 a; whence, by prefixing the article al, the form assokkar, accounting for the prefixed a in the Span. form. = Pers. shakar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 385. = Skt. garkarā, gravel, a soil abounding in stony fragments, clayed or candied sugar; Benfey, p. 936. Prob. allied to Skt. harkara, hard; cf. Lat. calculus, a pebble. See Calx. β . From the Pers. shakar are derived Gk. σάκχαρ, σάκχαρον, and Lat. saccharum. It is quite a mistake to derive F. sucre (as Brachet does) from Lat. saccharum directly. See Saccharine. Der. sugar, verb, Palsgrave; sugar-y, sugar-cane.

SUGGEST, to introduce indirectly, hint. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 101, iii. 4. 75. = Lat. suggestus, pp. of suggerere, to carry or lay under, furnish, supply, suggest. = Lat. sug- (for sub before g); and gerere, to carry; see Sub- and Jest. Der. suggestion, Chaucer, C. T. 14727, from F. suggestion, 'a suggestion,' from Lat. acc. suggestionem; suggest-ive, a coined word; suggest-ive-ly.

SUICIDE, self-murder; one who dies by his own hand. (F., -L.)

The word was really coined in England, but on a F. model. See note at the end of the article. In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14 (R.); in the latter sense. Rich. gives a quotation for it, in the former sense, from a tr. of Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws, b. xiv. c. 12; the first E. translation appeared in 1749, immediately after its appearance in France. Littré says that suicide is in Richelet's Dict. in 1759, and is said to have been first used in French by Desfontaines not much earlier (1738). As remarked under Homicide, the same form has two senses, and two sources. 1. F. suicide, a coined word, from Lat. sui, of oneself, gen. case of se, self; and -cidium, a slaying (as in homi-cidium), from cedere, to slay. 2. F. suicide, coined from Lat. sui, of oneself, and -cida, a slayer (as in homi-cida), from cedere, to slay. β. The Lat. sui, se is connected with Skt. sa, Gk. δ, he, and with E. She; from the pronominal base SA, he. The Lat. cedere is from ✓ SKID, to cut; see Schism. Der. suicidal, -ly. ¶ Trench, in his English Past and Present, observes that Phillips notices the word, as a monstrous formation, in 1671, long before its appearance in French; and it is given by Blount, ed. 1674. It seems to have been suggested by the queer words suist, a selfish man, and suicism, selfishness, which had been coined at an earlier date, and were used by Whitlock in an essay entitled The Grand Schismatic, or Suist Anatomised, in his Zootomia, 1654. The word is clumsy enough, and by no means creditable to us, but we may rightly claim it. Littré's objection, that the form of the word is plainly French, is of no force. We had the words homi-cide, patri-cide, matri-cide, fratri-cide, already in use; and sui-cide was coined by analogy with these, which accounts for the whole matter simply enough. It may be added that, though the translator of Montesquieu uses the word, the original has only l'homicide de soi-même.

SUIT, an action at law, a petition, a set, as of clothes. (F., -L.) M. E. suite, Chaucer, C. T. 2875, 3242. = F. suite (also suite in Cotgrave), 'a chase, pursuit, suit against, also the train, attendants, or followers of a great person'; Cot. = Lat. secta, a following, a sect (whence the sense of suite or train); in Low Lat. extended to mean a suit at law, a series, order, set, a suit of clothes, &c.; see Ducange. From the base of sequi, to follow, as noted under Sect, q. v. Der. suit, verb, to clothe, As You Like It, i. 3. 118, also to fit, adapt, agree, accord, id. ii. 7. 81, Macb. ii. 1. 60; 'to suit is to agree together, as things made on a common plan,' Wedgwood. Also suit-or, L. L. L. ii. 34; suit-able, Timon, iii. 6. 92, suit-able-ness. Doublet, suite, q. v.

SUITE, a train of followers. (F., -L.) 'With fifty in their suite to his defence;' Sidney (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). = F. suite; see further under Suit.

SULCATED, furrowed, grooved. (L.) 'Sulcate, to cast up in furrows, to till;' Blount, ed. 1674. Chiefly scientific. = Lat. sulcatus, pp. of sulcare, to furrow. = Lat. sulcus, a furrow.

SULKY, obstinate, silently sullen. (E.) The word is rare in old books, and the Dictionaries omit it, till we come to Todd's Johnson, where 'the sulkiness of my disposition' is quoted from a Letter of Gray to Dr. Clarke, A.D. 1760. It is an incorrect form, and should rather be sulken; it arose from misdividing the sb. sulken-ness as sulken-ness, by analogy with happy-ness from happy, &c. The sb. appears as a-swoolkenesse, i. e. sloth, O. Eng. Hom. i. 83, l. 25; and is not uncommon in A. S., which also has the true old form of the adj. = A. S. solcen, orig. slothful, remiss; in the comp. ásolcen, slothful, remiss, lazy, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 306, l. 11, p. 340, last line; also ii. 220, l. 23, where it means 'disgusted.' The sb. ásolcen-nes is quite a common word; see Ælf. Hom. i. 602, l. 8, ii. 46, l. 11, ii. 218, l. 22, ii. 220, l. 21; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 240, l. 12; the sense comes very near to that of mod. E. sulkiness. 'Accidiosus, vel tediousus, ásolcen;' Wright's Vocab. i. 60. Another trace of A. S. solcen occurs in the comp. besolcen, used as a pp., with the sense of 'stupefied;' Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 35, ed. Sweet, p. 238, l. 3.

β. We further know that solcen was the pp. of a strong verb stolcan (pt. t. seale, pp. solcen), appearing in the comp. ásolcan (pt. t. áscale, pp. ásolcen), for which Leo refers to Ælf. Hom. ii. 592, the reference, unluckily, being wrong. We find the verb again, spelt ásolcan, in Cædmon, ed. Grein, 2167; see Grein, i. 41. γ. There is even a cognate O. High G. word, viz. the verb arselhan, Graff, vi. 216, where the prefix ar = A. S. ár. Thus the Teut. base is SALK, answering to an Aryan base SARG. δ. It is remarkable that the Skt. srij means 'to let loose, abandon,' and the pp. śrīṣṭa is 'abandoned,' which comes very near the sense of A. S. solcen. Der. sulki-ness, really put for sulken-ness, as explained above. Ettmüller, p. 753, gives a form áswoolcen, but the MS. has ásolcen, Liber Scint. § 16, fol. 16 b; also ásolcenysse, id. § 24, fol. 45 b.

SULLEN, gloomily angry, morose. (F., -L.) M. E. solain, solain, orig. merely 'solitary,' then 'hating company,' or morose, as explained in the Prompt. Parv. 'Soleyne of maners, or he that lovythe no company, Solitaris;' Pr. Parv. A mess of meat for one person was also called soleyne, as explained on the same page. 'By hym-self as a soleyne,' i. e. a lonely person; P. Plowman, B. xii. 205. In the Rom. of the Rose, 3897, solain means 'sullen,' but in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 982, and Parl. of Foules, 607, it means 'solitary' or 'lonely.' = O. F. solain, lonely, solitary, of which the only trace I find is in Roquefort, where solain is explained as 'a portion served out to a religious person,' a pittance, doubtless a portion for one. E. Müller and Mahn cite Prov. solain, solitary. These Romance forms presuppose a Low Lat. *solanus, solitary, but it does not occur; however, it is a mere extension from Lat. solus, sole, alone; see Sole. Cf. O. F. soltain, solitary (Burguy), which answers, similarly, to a Low Lat. *soltanus. Der. sullen-ly, -ness.

SULLY, to tarnish, spot, make dirty. (E.) M. E. sulien; whence sulieþ = sullieth, Owl and Nightingale, 1240; pp. ysuled = sullied, P. Plowman, Creed, 752, Ancræn Riwle, p. 396, l. 1. = A. S. sylian, to sully, defile with dirt or mud. 'Sio sugu hi wile sylian on hire sole after ðæm ðe hio ásöwegen bið' = the sow will wallow [lit. sully herself] in her mire after she is washed; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, c. liv. p. 419, l. 27. The lit. sense is to bemire, to cover with mud; a causal verb, formed (by regular vowel-change of o to y) from A. S. sol, mire, mud, for which see the quotation above. Cf. A. S. hrynnet, a hornet, from horn, a horn. + Swed. söla, to bemire; Dan. söle, to bemire, from söl, mire. + Goth. bisauljan, to sully, render impure. + G. sühen, to sully, sich herum sühen, to wallow; from sühe, slough, mire, M. H. G. sol, söl, mire. β. It thus appears that the verb is a denominative from a Teut. sb. sol, signifying 'mire.' This resembles Lat. solum, the ground, but the connection is by no means certain, since solum seems rather to mean 'basis' or 'foundation' than mud. The A. S. sol is quite as likely to be related to Skt. sara, a pond, lake, and Lat. sal, salt; see Salt.

¶ It is now the case that the verbs to sully and to soil are almost convertible; but it is quite certain they are entirely unconnected. The final -y in sully is worth noting, as representing the causal ending seen in Goth. bisaul-j-an, A. S. syli-an.

SULPHUR, brimstone. (L. = Skt.?) M. E. sulphur, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 418. Introduced, as a term in alchemy, directly from Lat. sulphur, also spelt sulfur. β. Perhaps the Lat. word was borrowed from Skt. śulvāri, sulphur; the spelling with ç (from orig. k) shews that they cannot be cognate words. Der. sulphur-e-ous, from Lat. sulphureus or sulfureus, adj.; sulphur-ous, from F. sulphureux, 'sulphurous,' Cot., from Lat. adj. sulphurosus or sulfurosus; also the coined words sulphur-ic, sulphur-et, sulphur-ett-ed, and sulph-ate (used for sulphur-ate).

SULTAN, an Eastern ruler, head of the Ottoman empire. (F., -Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 26. = F. sultan, 'a sultan or souldan,' Cot. = Arab. sultān, victorious, also a ruler, prince; cf. sultat, dominion; Rich. Dict. pp. 843, 844. β. The word occurs early, in the M. E. form soudan, Chaucer, C. T. 4597; this is from O. F. soudan, souldan, both in Cotgrave, which are corruptions of the same Arab. word. It makes no difference to the etymology. Der. sultan-ess, with F. suffix; sultan-a, from Ital. sultana, fem. of sultano, a sultan, from Arab. sultān.

SULTRY, SWELTRY, very hot and oppressive. (E.) Sultry and sweltry, both in Phillips, ed. 1706, are the same word; the latter being the fuller and older form. Shak. has sultry, Hamlet, v. 2. 101; also sweltry'd = caused to exude by heat, Macb. iv. 1. 8. The w has passed into u, a lesser change than in so from A. S. swá, and in mod. E. sword, where the w is entirely lost. The -y (= A. S. -ig) is an adjectival suffix, and sweltr-y is short for sweltr-yg, formed from the verb to swelter. 'Sweltrynge or swalterynge, or swonyng, Sincopa,' Prompt. Parv.; where the sense is 'a swooning with heat.' 'Swalteryn for hete, or febylnesse, or other cawsys, or swownyn, Exalo, sincopio,' id. p. 481.

β. Again, swelter is a frequent form (with the usual suffix -er) from M. E. swelten, to die, also to swoon away or faint. 'Sworne or swelte' = swoon or faint, P. Plowman, B. v. 154. = A. S. sweltan, to die, Grein, ii. 505. + Icel. svelta, to die, starve (pt. t. svalt, pl. sultu, pp. soltinn). + Dan. sulte. + Swed. svälta. + Goth. swiltan, to die.

β. All from Teut. base SWALT, to die; Fick, iii. 363. This Fick considers as an extension of the base SWAL, to swell; which is supported by the singular fact that the M. H. G. swellen, O. H. G. swellan, not only means to swell up, but also to swell with disease, and to pine away or starve, which is the usual sense of Icel. svelta. See Swell.

γ. At the same time, there seems to have been some confusion with the Teut. base SWAL, to glow, be hot, from which the E. word has undoubtedly received its present sense; this appears in A. S. swélan, to burn, M. E. swelen, swalen, prov. E. sweal, to waste away under the action of fire, A. S. swól, heat, with numerous cognates, of which the most notable are G. schwelen, to burn slowly, schwül, sultry, with the extended forms O. H. G. swilizo, heat, swilizon, to burn slowly. All these are from ✓ SWAR, to glow, whence also E. swart, serene, solar; see Solar, Swart. ¶ The Dan. sulte is worth notice; still the E. sultry is not Scandinavian, but formed in the same way as the Dan. word; note also Icel. pt. pl. sultu, pp. soltinn. Der. sultri-ness.

SUM, the amount, whole of a thing, substance, total, summary, fulness. (F., -L.) M. E. summe, Chaucer, C. T. 11537. - Norman-F. summe, a sum, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson; F. somme, 'a summe of money,' Cot. - Lat. summa, sum, chief part, amount; orig. fem. of summus, highest, chief, principal. Summus stands for sup-mus = uppermost, superl. form from *sup, old form of sub (cf. super); the sense of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed; see Sub-. Allied words are Gk. hira-ros, highest, with a different suffix, and E. upm-ost, which agrees all but the ending -ost; see Upmost. Der. sum, verb, M. E. sommen, Trevisa, iii. 261, l. 15, F. sommer, from Lat. summāre; summ-at-ion, from F. sommation, 'the summing of money,' Cot., due to Lat. summat-us, pp. of summāre; summ-ar-y, sb., answering to F. sommaire, 'a summary,' Cot., from Lat. summārium, a summary, epitome, which presupposes an adj. *summārius; summāry, adj., answering to F. sommaire, adj., 'summary,' Cot.; summ-ar-i-ly, summ-ar-i-ness; summ-ar-ise, a coined word. Also summ-it, q. v. And see supreme, sovereign, soprano.

SUMACH, a tree. (F., -Span., -Arab.) 'Sumach or Sumack, a kind of rank-smelling shrub that bears a black berry made use of by carriers to dress their leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt sumack, sumake, sumague in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a similar definition. - F. sumac, formerly spelt sumach; Littré. - Span. sumaque. - Arab. sumāq, a species of shrub; Rich. Dict. p. 847. Another Arab. name is samāqūl (id.); this will account for another F. form sommail, noticed by Littré. [†]

SUMMER (1), the warmest season of the year. (E.) M. E. somer, summer (with one m), Chaucer, C. T. 396. - A. S. sumor, summer, Matt. xxiv. 32. + Du. zomer. + Icel. sumar. + Dan. sommer. + Swed. sommar. + G. sommer; O. H. G. sumar. β. From a form SUM-RA or SOM-RA (Fick, iii. 327), which is prob. connected with O. Welsh ham, W. haf, summer (the initial & standing, as usual, for s), Skt. samā, a year, Zend hama, summer; words cited by Fick, as above. So also Rhys (Welsh Philology) connects W. haf with the Skt. and Zend words. Der. summer, verb, to pass the summer, Isaiah, xviii. 6; summer-house, Amos, iii. 15.

SUMMER (2), a beam. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) See Sumpter.

SUMMERSET, the same as Somersault, q. v.

SUMMIT, highest point, top. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet i. 4. 70, iii. 3. 18; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57. - F. summer, 'the top,' Cot. Dimin., with suffix -et, of O. F. som, the top, esp. of a hill; see Burguy, Littré. - Lat. summum, highest point, neut. of summus, highest; see Sum.

SUMMON, to cite to appear, call with authority. (F., -L.) The examples in the Glossary to Layamon, s. v. somniēn, shew that two distinct words were early confused, viz. A. S. samnian, somnian, to collect together (a derivative verb from saman, together, from sam, together) and O. F. somoner, semoner, mod. F. semondre. But since summons, sb., and summoner are both F. words, and the word to summon properly belongs to the law-courts, we need only here consider the F. form. We find let somony = caused to attend, in Rob. of Glouc. p. 377, l. 12; and the word sompe in Chaucer, C. T. 6943, clearly refers to the mod. E. sense of summon, though its form would suit the A. S. samnian equally well. - O. F. somoner, in which form it is very rare, being early corrupted to semoner or semondre. Cotgrave gives F. semondre, 'to bid, invite, summon, warn, cite.' Littré gives an 11th-cent. example of the form sumoner; and Roquefort gives an excellent example in which the O. F. somoner is used with the orig. sense of 'to admonish,' the word somonoit being used to translate Lat. admoneret; Dial. de Saint Grégoire, liv. 2. chap. 5. Cf. Prov. somondre, to summon, a common word (Bartsch). - Lat. summonere, to remind privily. - Lat. sum- (for sub before m); and monere, to advise; see Sub- and Monition. Der. summon-er, M. E. somponer, Chaucer, C. T. 625 (represented by mod. E. Sumner as a proper name), also somounour, P. Plowman, B. iii. 133 (footnote), from the old form (*somoneur) of F. semonneur, 'a summoner, citer, apparitor,' Cot. Also summon-s, M. E. somouns, Allit. Morte Arthure, 91, from the old form (*somons) of F. semonce, 'a warning, citation, summons,' Cot.; Littré explains that the F. semonce, formerly semonse (*somons) is, the fem. of semons (*somons), the pp. of semondre (*somondre), to summon. Cf. Prov. somonsa, a summons, cited by Littré; we also find Prov. somos, somosta, semosta used in the same sense. ¶ Thus the s at the end of summons is not due to the Lat. summones, as some have supposed.

SUMPTER, a horse for carrying burdens, a pack-horse. (F. - Low Lat., -Gk.) Two forms of the word were once in use, viz. M. E. somer, King Alisaunder, 850, and sumpter, id. 6023. The former, once the commoner form, is now lost; but it is necessary to explain it first. 1. From O. F. somier, sommier, sumer (Burguy), a pack-horse; formed, with suffix -ier of the agent, from O. F. somme, & some, saume, sume, a pack, burden. [Cotgrave gives O. F. sommier, 'a sumpter-horse, also the piece of timber called a summer.'] - Low Lat. salma, corrupt form of sagma, a pack, burden; whence sagmarius, salmarius, a pack-horse (= F. sommier). - Gk. σάγμα, a pack-saddle. - Gk. σάττειν (= σάτ-τειν, fut. σάτω), to pack, put a burden on a horse, fasten on a load, orig. to fasten. Allied to Skt. sánj, sajj, to adhere, pp. sakta, attached. - ✓ SAK, to fasten, SAG, to hang down from; Fick, i. 791.

2. The etymology of sumpter is similar; it orig. meant, not the horse, but the horse's driver; and such is the sense in King Alisaunder, 6023, where the sumpters are reckoned among the squires and guides belonging to an army. Hence, also, the mod. E. sumpter-horse, i. e. a baggage-carrier's horse, the addition of horse being necessary to the sense, whereas the M. E. somer was used alone, in the same sense. Sumpter is, accordingly, from O. F. sommeter, a packhorse-driver (Roquefort). This answers to a Low Lat. *sagmatarius, not found, but formed from the Gk. σαγματ-, the true stem of σάγμα, just as sagmarius is formed from the nom. σάγμα itself. 3. The E. word summer, noticed by Cotgrave (above) as meaning 'a beam,' is worth notice. It occurs in Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 696, and is given in Halliwell; being so called from its bearing a great burden or weight. Hence also the E. breast-summer (gen. pronounced bressomer), defined in Webster as 'a summer or beam placed breast-wise to support a superincumbent wall.' Note that sumpter in K. Lear, ii. 4. 219, probably does not mean 'a pack-horse,' but rather a packhorse-driver.

SUMPTUARY, relating to expenses. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate E. somptuaire. It is rather Englished from Lat. sumptuarius, belonging to expenses, than borrowed from French. Formed, with suffix -arius, from sumptu-, crude form of sumptus, expense, cost; see Sumptuous.

SUMPTUOUS, expensive, costly. (F., -L.) 'Sumptuous expenses of the meane people;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 28. - F. somptueux, 'sumptuous,' Cot. - Lat. sumptuosus, costly. - Lat. sumptu-, crude form of sumptus, expense, cost. - Lat. sumptus, pp. of sumere, to take, spend, consume. β. Sumere is short for subimere, comp. of sub, under, secretly, and emere, to buy, orig. to take. See Sub- and Example. Der. sumptuously, -ness.

SUN, the celestial body which is the source of light and heat. (E.) M. E. sonne, two syllables, Chaucer, C. T. 7. - A. S. sunne, a fem. sb., Exod. xvi. 21, xvii. 12 (common). + Du. zon, fem. sb. + Icel. sunna, fem., only in poetry, the common word being sól. + G. sonne, fem., O. H. G. sunna. + Goth. sunna, masc., sunno, fem. β. The Teut. type is SUNNAN, Fick, iii. 324. Here -nan is a suffix as in Teut. STERNAN, a star; and the base SUN is an extension from ✓ SU, to beget, whence also the Lat. so-l, the sun, Icel. sól, Skt. sú-rya, the sun, &c. See Solar. The sun was considered as the life-giver, the emblem of procreation, &c. See also Son, from the same root. The Skt. sūnu means both 'son' and 'sun.' Der. sun, verb; sun-beam, A. S. sunnebeám; sun-burnt; sun-rise, spelt sonne ryse in Palsgrave, where sonne (= A. S. sunnan) is the gen. case; sun-set, spelt sonne sette in Palsgrave, to which the same explanation applies. Also Sun-day, A. S. sunnan dag, lit. 'day of the sun,' where sunnan is the gen. case. Other compounds are sun-fish, -flower, -shine, -stroke, sunny, sun-less, sun-ward; and see south.

SUNDER, to part, divide. (E.) M. E. sundren, Ancren Riwle, p. 270, last line. - A. S. sundrian, gesundrian, Grein, i. 459; also syndrian, in comp. ásyndrian, Matt. x. 35; lit. 'to put asunder.' - A. S. sundor, adv., asunder, Grein, ii. 495. + Icel. sundra, to sunder; from sundr, adv., asunder. + Dan. söndre, to sunder; from sönder, adv. + Swed. söndra; from sönder, adv. + G. sondern; from sonder, adj., separate. And cf. Goth. sundro, adv., separately; Du. zonder, conj., but. β. All from the Teut. type SUNDRA, adv., separately, which is clearly a comparative form, with suffix -ra, from a positive form SUND. The origin is unknown; Fick's proposal to compare it with Lat. sine, without, is unsatisfactory; nor can we clearly connect it with the verb to send, which would appear to be the nearest Teut. form. Der. a-sunder, q. v.; sundr-y, adj., separate, hence several, divers, M. E. sundry, sondry, Chaucer, C. T. 4601, from A. S. syndrig, Luke, iv. 40, put for *sunderig, and formed with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y) from sundor, adv., as above.

SUP, to imbibe, as a liquid, gradually; also, to eat a supper. (E.) Once a strong verb; weakened by confusion with F. souper; see Supper. M. E. soupen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 96, vi. 220. - A. S. súpan (strong verb, pt. t. sēap, pl. sūpan, pp. sōpen), Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 58, ed. Sweet, p. 447, l. 1. + Du. zuipen; Low G. súpen. + Icel. súpa (pt. t. sauþ, pp. sopinn). + Swed. supa. + O. H. G. súfan. β. All from Teut. base SUP, to drink in, sup up (Fick, iii. 326); obviously a parallel form to Teut. SUK, SUG, to suck; see Suck. The ultimate root is ✓ SU, to express juice, &c. Der. sup, sb., sop, sip, sob (with which cf. O. H. G. súft, a sigh); also soup, q. v., supper, q. v. SUPER, prefix, above. (L.) Lat. super, above, prep.; orig. a comparative form of *sup, orig. form of sub; see Sub. Orig. a locative case of superus, adj., upper; whence Superior. + Gk. ὑπέρ, above; orig. a locative case of ὑπερος, upper, comparative from ὑπὸ (E. hypo-); see Hyper, Hypo. + Skt. upari, above; locative of Vedic upāra, compar. of upa, near, close to, under. See Up, Of. Der. superior, supreme, in-super-able; super-b, super-nal. Doublet, hyper-, prefix. And see supra-, prefix.

SUPERABOUND, to be more than enough. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave; and Howell, Famil. Letters, b. iv. let. 39, § 3. - F. superabonder, 'to superabound,' Cot. - Lat. superabundare, to be very abundant. - Lat. super and abundare; see Super- and Abound. Der. superabundance, from F. superabondance, 'superabundance,' Cot., Lat. superabundantia; also superabundant, adj., from the stem of the Lat. pres. part.; superabundant-ly.

SUPERADD, to add over and above. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and earlier, see Richardson. - Lat. superaddere; see Super- and Add. Der. superaddition (not in Cotgrave).

SUPERANNUATE, to be disabled by length of years. (L.) Bacon has superannate = to live beyond the year, used of annual plants; Nat. Hist. § 448. This is cited by Richardson, who misspells it. Howell has 'superannuated virgin,' Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 12; A. D. 1619. Blount, ed. 1674, has both superannate and superannuate. An ill-coined word, prob. suggested by annu-al, annuity; Bacon's superannate is countenanced by Low Lat. superannatus, that has lived beyond a year; hence F. suranner, 'to passe or exceed the compass of a year; also, to wax very old,' Cot. Thus superannate is put for superannate; coined from super, above, and annus, a year. See Super- and Annual. Der. superannuation.

SUPERB, proud, magnificent. (F., -L.) Quite a late word; in Prior, Alma, c. i. l. 383. - F. superbe, 'proud,' Cot. - Lat. superbus, proud. β. Lit. 'one who thinks himself above others;' extended from super, above, with suffix -bus as in acer-bus from acer. See Super-. Der. superb-ly.

SUPERCARGO, an officer in a merchant-ship. (Lat.; and Span., -C.) 'Supercargo, a person employed by the owners of a ship to go a voyage, to oversee the cargo,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. Partially translated from Span. sobrecargo, a supercargo, by substituting Lat. super for Span. sobre, which is the Span. form of the same word. See Super- and Cargo.

SUPEREMINENT, excellent above others. (L.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. vi. l. 305. - Lat. supereminens, stem of pres. part. of supereminere, to be eminent above others. See Super- and Eminent. Der. supereminence, from F. supereminence, 'supereminence,' Cot., from Lat. supereminentia.

SUPEREROGATION, doing more than duty requires. (L.) 'Works of supererogation,' Articles of Religion, Art. 14 (1562). From Low Lat. supererogatio, that which is done beyond what is due. - Lat. supererogatus, pp. of supererogare, to pay out beyond what is expected. - Lat. super, above, beyond; e, out; and rogare, to ask. The Lat. erogare = to lay out, expend money (lit. to ask out, require). See Super-, E, and Rogation.

SUPEREXCELLENT, very excellent. (L.; and F., -L.) Used by Spenser in a postscript to a letter to G. Harvey (R.) - Lat. super, above; and O. F. excellens; see Super- and Excellent.

SUPERFICIES, the surface of a thing. (L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. superficie and surface. - Lat. superficies, upper face, surface. - Lat. super-, above; and facies, a face; see Super- and Face. Der. superficial, from F. superficiel, 'superficial,' Cot., from Lat. superficialis; superfici-al-ly, -ness; also superfici-al-ity, spelt superficiality in Palsgrave, from O. F. superficialité, recorded by Palsgrave. Doublet, surface.

SUPERFINE, extremely fine. (L.; and F., -L.) 'Many inuentions are so superfine,' Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 50; also in Steel Glas, &c., ed. Arber, p. 31. Coined from super and fine; see Super- and Fine (1).

SUPERFLUOUS, excessive. (L.) 'Superfluous eating of bankettyng meates,' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 18. [Palsgrave gives superflue as an E. word, from F. superflu, superfluous.] Englished from Lat. superfluus, overflowing. - Lat. super, over; and fluere, to flow; see Super- and Fluent. Der. superfluously; superflu-ity, M. E. superfluite, Gower, C. A. ii. 201, l. 21, from F. superfluité, 'superfluity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. superfluitatem.

♂ SUPERHUMAN, more than human. (L.; and F., -L.) Spelt superhumane in Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Super- and Human.

SUPERIMPOSE, SUPERINCUMBENT, SUPERINDUCE; see Super- and Impose, Incumbent, Induce.

SUPERINTENDENT, an overseer. (F., -L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. - F. superintendant, 'a superintendent,' Cot. - Lat. superintendent, stem of pres. part. of superintendere, to superintend. - Lat. super, over, above; and intendere, to attend to, apply the mind. See Super- and Intend. [The verb superintend is directly from the Latin.] Der. superintendence, from F. superintendance, 'a superintendency,' Cot.

SUPERIOR, higher in rank, &c. (F., -L.) Now spelt so as to resemble Latin; spelt superiour in Palsgrave. - F. superieur, 'superiour,' Cot. - Lat. superiorem, acc. of superior, higher, comp. of superus, high, which is itself an old comp. form from sub (*sup). Hence superior is a double comparative; see Super- and Sub-. Der. superior-ity, from F. superiorité, 'superiority,' Cot., from Low Lat. acc. superioritatem.

SUPERLATIVE, superior, extreme, supreme. (F., -L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. - F. superlatif, 'superlative,' Cot. - Lat. superlativus, superlative, as a gram. term. - Lat. superlat-us, excessive; with suffix -ius; lit. 'carried beyond,' exaggerated. - Lat. super, beyond; and latus, carried, or borne. Latus = *ilatus; see Super- and Tolerate. Der. superlative-ly.

SUPERNAL, placed above, heavenly. (F., -L.) 'Supernal judge,' K. John, ii. 112. - F. supernal, 'supernall,' Cot. As if from Low Lat. *supernalis, not in use; formed by suffix -alis from super-nus, upper, extended by help of suffix -nus from super, above; see Super-. Der. supernal-ly.

SUPERNATURAL, miraculous. (F., -L.) In Macb. i. 3. 30; and in Palsgrave. - F. supernaturel, 'supernaturall,' Cot. See Super- and Natural. Der. supernatural-ly.

SUPERNUMERARY, above the necessary number. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. supernumeraire, 'supernumerary,' Cot. - Lat. supernumerarius, excessive in number. - Lat. super, beyond; and numer-us, number; see Super- and Number.

SUPERScription, something written above or without. (F., -L.) M. E. superscriptionn, Henrysoun, Complaint of Creseide, last stanza but one. - F. superscription, 'a superscription,' Cot. - Low Lat. superscriptionem, acc. of superscriptio, a writing above, Luke, xxiii. 38 (Vulg.) - Lat. superscriptus, pp. of superscribere, to write above. - Lat. super, above; and scribere, to write; see Super- and Scribe. ¶ The verb superscribe is coined directly from Lat. superscribere.

SUPERSEDE, to displace by something else, to come in place of something else. (F., -L.) The word has much changed its meaning, both in Lat. and E. Supersede in old authors means to desist, forbear, stay proceedings, &c. Thus Rich. quotes from the State Trials, 19 Hen. VIII, an. 1528: 'He [Hen. VIII] desired the bishop of Paris to certify Francis, that if the Pope would supersede from executing his sentence, until he had indifferent [impartial] judges sent who might hear the business, he would also supersede from the executing of what he was deliberated to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman see.' 'Supersede, to suspend, demurr, put off or stop an affair or proceeding, to countermand,' Phillips. Thus, the sense was to stay a proceeding, whence, by an easy transition, to substitute some other proceeding for it. A writ of supersedas is, in some cases, a writ to stay proceedings, and is mentioned in P. Plowman, C. iii. 187, on which see my note. - O. F. superseder, superceder (mod. F. superséder), 'to surcease, leave off, give over;' Cot. - Lat. supersedere, pp. supersessus, lit. to sit upon, also to preside over, to forbear, refrain, desist from. - Lat. super, above; and sedere, cognate with E. sit. See Super- and Sit. Der. supersession, from O. F. supersession, 'a surceasing, giving over, the suspension of an account upon the accountant's humble suit,' Cot. - Lat. *supersessionem, acc. of *supersessio, not used, but regularly formed from supersessus, pp. of supersedere. Doublet, surcease, q. v.

SUPERSTITION, excessiveness in religious worship or belief. (F., -L.) Skelton has supersticyous, s. pl., Philip Sparowe, l. 1350; the adj. superstitious occurs in Acts, xvii. 22, in the Bible of 1551 and in the A. V.; also, spelt supersticious, in Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. How the bishop Amphiorax, &c. - F. superstition, 'superstition,' Cot. - Lat. superstitionem, acc. of superstitio, a standing still over or near a thing, amazement, wonder, dread, religious scruple. - Lat. superstiti, crude form of superstes, one who stands near, a witness. - Lat. super, near, above; and stātum, supine of sistere, causal of stare, to stand, which is cognate with E. stand. See Super- and Stand. Der. superstitious, as above, from F. superstitieux, 'superstitious,' Cot., from Lat. adj. superstitiosus; superstiti-ous-ly.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, the upper part of a building. (L.) 'In som places, as in Amsterdam, the foundation costs more than the superstructure;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 2. let. 15, May 1, 1622. From Super- and Structure.

SUPERVENE, to occur or happen in consequence of, to occur, happen. (L.) 'Supervening follies;' Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 4 (R.) = Lat. superuenire, to come upon or over, to come upon, to follow; pp. superuentus. = Lat. super, over, upon, near; and uenire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Super- and Ven- or Come. Der. supervent-ion, regularly formed from the pp. superuentus.

SUPERVISE, to inspect, oversee. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 135. = Lat. super, above; and uisere, to survey, formed from uis-um, supine of uidere, to see. See Super- and Visit or Vision. Der. superwise, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 23; supervis-or, Oth. iii. 3. 395 (First Quarto); supervis-ion, ibid. (Folio editions); supervis-al.

SUPINE, lying on one's back, lazy. (L.) Sir T. Browne has supinity, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 5, § 3. 'Supine felicity;' Dryden, Astraea, 107. = Lat. supinus, backward, lying on one's back; extended, with suffix -inus, from sup, orig. form of sub, under, below; hence, downward. Cf. sup-er, from the same source. So also Gk. ὑπῆριος, bent backwards, backward, lying on one's back, from ὑπό, under. See Sub-. Der. supine, sb., as a grammatical term, Lat. supinum, of which the applied sense is not very obvious; supine-ly, supine-ness; also supin-i-ty, as above, prob. obsolete.

SUPPER, a meal at the close of a day. (F., = O. Low G.) M. E. soper, super; spelt super, Havelok, 1762. = O. F. soper, super, later souper, 'a supper;' Cot. It is the infin. mood used as a substantive, exactly as in the case of dinner. = O. F. soper, super, later souper, to sup, to eat a meal of bread sopped in gravy, &c. Cf. O. F. sop, supe, later soupe, 'a sop, a piece of bread in broth, also potage or broth, wherein there is store of sops or sippets,' Cot. = Low G. supen, to sup or sip up; Icel. súpa, Swed. supa, to sup; cognate with E. Sup, q. v.

SUPLANT, to take the place of, displace, undermine. (F., = L.) M. E. supplanten, Gower, C. A. i. 239, l. 11. = F. supplanter, 'to supplant, root or trip up;' Cot. = Lat. supplantare, to put something under the sole of the foot, to trip up the heels, overthrow. = Lat. sup- (sub); and planta, the sole of the foot, also a plant. See Sub- and Plant. Der. supplant-er, spelt supplantor in Gower, C. A. i. 264. l. 6.

SUPPLE, pliant, lithe, fawning. (F., = L.) M. E. souple, Chaucer, C. T. 203; Rob. of Glouc. p. 223, l. 15. = F. souple, spelt soupple in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'supple, limber, tender, pliant.' = Lat. supplicem, acc. of supplex, in the old orig. sense of 'bending under,' hence submissive, which is the usual sense in Latin. The O. F. soplier also kept the orig. sense, though the classical Lat. supplicare only means to beseech; hence Cotgrave has 'sousplié, bent or bowed underneath, subject unto.' β. The formation of souple from supplicem is precisely like that of E. double from dupplicem, treble from triplicem, simple from simplicem, &c. γ. The Lat. supplex is from sup- (sub) and the base plec-, as seen in plec-t-ere, to fold, which is from √ PLAK, to plait, fold. See Sub- and Ply; also Supplicate. Der. supple-ness.

SUPPLEMENT, that which supplies, an addition. (F., = L.) In Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, 415. = F. supplément, 'a supplement;' Cot. = Lat. supplementum, a supplement, filling up. = Lat. supple-re, to fill up; with suffix -men-tum. = Lat. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Supply. Der. supplement-al, supplement-ar-y.

SUPLIANT, entreating earnestly. (F., = L.) In Rich. II, v. 3. 75. = F. suppliant, 'suppliant;' Cot.; pres. pt. of suppliere, 'humbly to pray,' id. = Lat. supplicare, to supplicate; see Supplicate. Doublet, supplicant.

SUPPLICATE, to entreat. (L.) In Blount, ed. 1674; it seems to be quite a late word, though supplication, spelt supplication, is in Gower, C. A. iii. 348, l. 12, and supplicant in Shak. Complaint, 276. = Lat. supplicat-us, pp. of supplicare, to supplicate. = Lat. supplic-, stem of supplex, bending under or down, hence beseeching, suppliant; see Supple. Der. supplicat-ant, from the stem of the pres. pt. of supplicare; supplicat-or-y; supplicat-ion (as above), from F. supplication, 'a supplication,' Cot., from Lat. acc. supplicationem. Also suppliant, q. v.

SUPPLY, to fill up a deficiency. (F., = L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 1. 38. Levins (1570) spells it supploy, and Huloet has suppoye. = F. suppléer, 'to supply;' Cot. = Lat. supplere, to fill up. = Lat. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Sub- and Plenary. Der. supply, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 24; and see supple-ment.

SUPPORT, to endure, sustain. (F., = L.) M. E. supporten, Wyclif, 2 Cor. xi. 1. = F. supporter, 'to support;' Cot. = Lat. supportare, to carry, bring, or convey to a place; in Low Lat., to endure, sustain. = Lat. sup- (sub), near; and portare, to carry; see Sub- and Port (1). Der. support, sb., M. E. support, Gower, C. A. iii. 193. l. 11, from F. support, 'a support,' Cot.; support-er, support-able, support-abl-y.

SUPPOSE, to assume as true, imagine. (F., = L., and Gk.) M. E. supposen, Chaucer, C. T. 6368. = F. supposer, 'to suppose, to put, lay, or set under, to suborn, forge; also to suppose, imagine;' Cot. = F. sup-, prefix = Lat. sup- (sub), prefix, under; and F. poser, to place, put. Thus the orig. sense is 'to lay under, put under,' hence to substitute, forge, counterfeit; all of which are senses of Lat. supponere.

β. The F. poser is not from Lat. ponere, but from Gk., though it (with all its compounds) took up the senses of Lat. ponere. See further under Pose; and note Cotgrave's use of the verb to suppone, now obsolete. Der. suppos-er, suppos-able; but not supposition, q. v.

SUPPOSITION, an assumption, thing supposed. (F., = L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 18. = F. supposition, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th cent. (Littre). = Lat. suppositionem, acc. of suppositio, properly 'a substitution,' but extended in meaning according to the extension of meaning of the verb supponere (pp. suppositus) from which it is derived. = Lat. sup- (sub), under, near; and ponere, to place; see Sub- and Position. Der. supposit-it-i-ous, spurious, substituted, from Lat. suppositicius, formed with suffix -ic-i-us from supposit-, stem of pp. of supponere, of which one sense was 'to substitute.' Also supposit-or-y, as in 'suppositories' are used where the pacyent is weak, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5, from Lat. suppositorius, that which is placed underneath.

SUPPRESS, to crush, keep in, retain, conceal. (L.) The instance of suppressed, cited by Rich. from Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii, The Answer of Ethiocles, is not to the point; it is clearly an error for surprised. For the verb suppress, see Palsgrave. = Lat. suppressus, pp. of supprimere, to press under, suppress. = Lat. sup- (sub), under; and primere, to press; see Sub- and Press. Der. suppress-or, Lat. suppressor; suppression-ion, printed suppression in Sir T. More, p. 250 f, from F. suppression, 'suppression,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suppressionem. Also suppress-ive, a coined word.

SUPPURATE, to gather pus or matter underneath. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. suppuratus, pp. of suppurare, to gather pus underneath. = Lat. sup- (sub), beneath; and pur-, stem of pus, matter; see Sub- and Pus. Der. suppurat-ion, from F. suppuration, 'a suppuration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suppurationem; suppurat-ive, adj., from F. suppuratif, 'suppurative,' Cot., a coined word.

SUPRAMUNDANE, situate above the world. (L.) 'Supramundane deities;' Waterland, Works, i. 86 (R.); and in Blount, ed. 1674. A coined word; from Supra- and Mundane. ¶ Similarly formed is supralapsarian, antecedent to the fall, from supra, above, and laps-um, acc. of laps-us, a fall; with suffix -arian; see Lapse.

SUPREME, greatest, most excellent. (F., = L.) Accented sûpreme, Cor. iii. 1. 110; usually suprême, K. John, iii. 1. 155. = F. supreme, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); now written suprême. = Lat. suprēmus, supreme, highest. Put for *supra-inus, formed with superl. suffix -i-mus (Aryan -ya-mans) from supra, short for supera (*supara), a form cognate with Skt. upara, E. upper, a comparative form from *supa = Skt. upa, represented in Lat. by sub-, under, though the orig. sense is up. Thus supremus answers to an Aryan type *s-upa-ra-ya-mans, with both compar. and superl. affixes. See Sub- and Up. Der. supreme-ly; also supremacy, K. John, iii. 1. 156, from suprēmatie (Littre, not in Cotgrave), a word arbitrarily formed on the model of primacy (Low Lat. primatia) from primare.

SUR- (1), prefix. (L.) Put for sub- before r following; see Sub-. Only in sur-reptitious and sur-rogate.

SUR- (2), prefix. (F., = L.) F. sur, prep., contr. from Lat. super, upon, above. Exx. sur-cease, sur-charge, sur-face, &c.

SURCEASE, to cease, to cause to cease. (F., = L.) It is obvious, from the usual spelling, that this word is popularly supposed to be allied to cease, with which it has no etymological connection. It is a monstrous corruption of sursis or sursise, and is etymologically allied to supersede. It was very likely misunderstood from the first, yet Fabian spells the word with s for c, correctly. 'By whiche reason the kyngdome of Mercia surseased, that had contynued from their firste kynge;' Fabian, Chron. c. 171, § 5. β. But the verb is really due to the sb. surcease, a delay, cessation, which was in use as a law-term, and prob. of some antiquity in this use, though I do not know where to find an early example. It occurs in Shak. Macb. i. 7. 4, and (according to Richardson) in Bacon, Of Church Governments; Nares cites an example from Danett's tr. of Comines (published in 1596 and 1600).—F. sursis, masc., sursise, fem., 'surceased, intermitted;' Cot. The word was also used as a sb. (prob. in Law F.); Littré explains it by 'delay,' and says it was a law-term; he also quotes 'pendant ce sursis' = during this delay, from Ségur, Hist. de Nap. x. 2. Sursis is the pp. of surseoir, 'to surcease, pause, intermit, leave off, give over, delay or stay for a time,' Cot.—Lat. supersedere, to preside over, also to forbear, refrain, desist from, omit; see SUPERSÉDERE. The word also appears in F. as superséder, spelt also superseder in Cotgrave, and explained by 'to surcease, leave off, give over.' This shews that, not only was surcease in E. connected in the popular mind with cease, but that, even in F., superséder was similarly connected with Lat. cedere, from which cease is derived. Der. surcease, sb., really the older word, as shown above. [+]

SURCHARGE, an over-load. (F.,—L. and C.) 'A surcharge, or greater charge;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 228.—F. surcharge, 'a surcharge, or a new charge;' Cot.—F. sur, from Lat. super, over; and charge, a load; see SUR- (2) and CHARGE. Der. surcharge, vb., from F. surcharger, 'to surcharge;' Cot.

SURD, inexpressible by a rational number or having no rational root. (L.) Cotgrave translates nombre sourd by 'a surd number.' A term in mathematics, equivalent to irrational, in the math. sense.—Lat. surdus, deaf; hence, deaf to reason, irrational. The word is frequently applied to colours, when it means dim, indistinct, dull; thus surdus color = a dim colour, Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xxxiii. c. 5. So likewise Lat. sordere = to be dirty; allied to E. swart and swarthy; see SWART. Der. surd, adj., irrational; absurd, q.v.

SURE, certain, secure. (F.,—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. sur, Will. of Palerne, 973; seur, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2033.—O. F. sur, seür, oldest form segur (Burguy); mod. F. sûr.—Lat. securus, secure, sure; see SECURE. Der. sure, adv., sure-ly; sure-ly, M. E. seurte, Will. of Palerne, 1493, also suretee, Chaucer, C. T. 4663, from O. F. seürte, segurtet, from Lat. acc. securitatem. Hence sure-ty-ship, Prov. xi. 15.

SURF, the foam made by the rush of waves on the shore. (E.) This is an extremely difficult word, being disguised by a false spelling; the r is unoriginal, just as in the word hoarse, which is similarly disguised. The spelling surf is in Defoe, Robinson Crusoe, ed. 1719, pt. i, in the description of the making of the raft. 'My Raft was now strong enough . . . my next care was . . . how to preserve what I laid upon it from the Surf of the Sea.' But the earlier spelling is suffe, with the sense of 'rush,' in a remarkable passage in Hackluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 227, where we are told that certain small rafts are carried to the shore by the force of the in-rushing wave; 'the Suffe of the Sea setteth her [the raft's] lading dry on land.' β. This suffe is, I believe, a phonetic spelling of the word usually spelt sough, i. e. 'rush' or 'rushing noise;' see sough o' the sea in Jamieson, who also spells it souf and souch. [We may here note that Halliwell gives sough, a drain, with the remark that it is pronounced suff; this is a different word, but exemplifies the change of pronunciation.] The word sough is properly Northumbrian, and has lost a w after the s; the Middle-English spelling is swough or swow, in the sense of 'rush,' or 'rushing sound.' 'For swoughe of his dynates' = for the rushing sound of his blows; Morte Arthure, 1127. But it was particularly used of the swaying or rushing of the sea; 'with the swoghe of the see' = with the swaying motion [surf] of the sea; id. 759. Halliwell notes prov. E. swowe, 'to make a noise, as water does in rushing down a precipice; also, to foam or boil up,' &c. Cf. 'swowynge of watyre, rushing of water, accompanied by noise; Morte Arthure, 931. γ. The M. E. verb swowen or swozen answers to A. S. swōgan, to make a rushing noise, &c., treated of under SWOON, q.v. The derived sb. in A. S. took the form swēg (with vowel-change from ō to ē), and this word answers in force, though not in form, to E. sough. Even the verb has a secondary form swēgan, with much the same sense as the primary verb swōgan. In Luke, xxi. 25, we might almost translate swēg by surf; 'for gedrefnesse sās swēges and ýpa' = for confusion of the sound [surf] of the sea and waves; Lat. præ confusione sonitus maris. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 566, l. 7, we have: 'com seó sē fárlíce swēgende,' which Thorpe translates by 'the sea came suddenly sounding;' but it rather means rushing in, as appears by the context. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 562, l. 14, we read that a spring or well of water 'swēgde ú,' i. e. rushed out, or gushed forth, rather than 'sounded out,' as Thorpe translates it.

δ. There is thus plenty of authority for the use of M. E. sough with the sense of 'rush' or 'noisy gush,' which will well explain both Hackluyt's suffe and mod. E. surf. I believe this will be found to be the right explanation. ε. We may connect surf with Norweg. sog in some of its senses, viz. (1) a noise, tumult, rushing sound; and (2) a current in a river, the inclination of a river-bed, where the stream is swift, i. e. a rapid. [This is distinct from Norweg. sog in the sense of 'sucking.'] ¶ The usual explanation of surf from F. surflot [= Lat. superfluctus], 'the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of several waves,' as in Cotgrave, is unlikely; for (1) it interprets f as equivalent to a whole word, viz. F. flot, and (2) it is contradicted by the form suffe, which involves no r at all.

SURFACE, the upper face of anything. (F.,—L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.—F. surface, 'the surface, the superficies;' Cot. Not directly derived from Lat. superficies, but compounded of F. sur (from Lat. super, above), and face (from Lat. faciem, acc. of facies, the face); see SUR- (2) and FACE. However, it exactly corresponds to Lat. superficies, which is compounded in like manner of super and facies. Hence the words are doublets. Doublet, superficies.

SURFEIT, excess in eating and drinking. (F.,—L.) M. E. surfet, P. Plowman, A. vii. 252; surfait, id. B. vi. 267.—O. F. sorfail, excess (Burguy); orig. pp. of sorfaire, later surfaire, 'to overprise, to hold at an overdear rate;' Cot.—O. F. sor, F. sur, from Lat. super, above; and F. fait (pp. of faire), from Lat. factus (pp. of facere), to make, hence, to hold, deem. See SUR- (2) and FACT. Der. surfeit, verb, spelt surfet in Palsgrave; surfeit-ing, sb.

SURGE, the swell of waves, a billow. (L.) The orig. sense was 'a rising' or rise, or source. 'All great ryuers are gurged and assemblede of diuers surges and springes of water;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 1 (R.). 'Thus with a surge of teares bedewde;' Turberville, The Loner to his carefull Bed (R.). 'Surge of the see, uague;' Palsgrave. Coined directly from Lat. surgere, to rise; prob. suggested by O. F. source, 'the spring of a fountain, or the rising, boiling, or sprouting out of water in a spring,' Cot., which is likewise derived from the same Lat. verb. The proper F. sb. is source, E. source; see SOURCE. β. The Lat. surgere makes pt. t. surrexi, shewing at once that it is contracted from surrigere *; from Lat. sur- (for sus- or sub before r), and regere, to rule, direct; thus the orig. sense was 'to direct or take one's way from under,' hence to rise up. See SUB- and REGENT. Der. surge, verb, surg-y. Also (from surgere) in-surg-ent, re-surrect-ion, source, re-source, sortie.

SURGEON, a chirurgeon, one who cures diseases by operating upon the patient. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) A very early corruption of chirurgion. M. E. surgien, P. Plowman, B. xx. 308; surgeyn, surgen, id. C. xxiii. 310, 313; spelt cirurgian, Rob. of Glouc. p. 566, last line.—O. F. cirurgien, serurgien, a surgeon; see Littré, s. v. chirurgien.—O. F. cirurgie, later chirurgie, surgery; with suffix -en = Lat. -anus. See further under SURGERY. [+]

SURGERY, the art practised by a surgeon, operation on a patient. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. surgerie, Chaucer, C. T. 415. A singular corruption of O. F. cirurgie, sirurgie, later form chirurgie, surgery. We have, in fact, turned cirurg or sirurg into surgery.—Low Lat. chirurgia.—Gk. χειρουργία, a working with the hands, handicraft, skill with the hands.—Gk. χειρ, from χέρο, the hand; and εργειν, to work, allied to E. work; see CHIRURGEON, CHIROGRAPHY, and WORK. Der. surgeon, short for chirurgien, old form of chirurgion. ¶ The corruption was helped out by the contraction of O. F. chirurgien to M. E. surgien. There is no evidence to shew that surgery is short for surgeon-ry; it seems to have been rather, as above said, entirely a corruption of O. F. cirurgie, and due to no other form. Der. surgi-c-al, short for chirurgical, formed with suffix -al (F. -al, Lat. -alis) from Low Lat. chirurgic-us, an extended form of Low Lat. chirurgus = Gk. χειρουργός, working with the hand, skilful; hence surgi-c-al-ly. [+]

SURLAIN, the upper part of a loin of beef. (F.,—L.) Frequently spelt sirlain, owing to a fable that the loin of beef was knighted 'by one of our kings in a fit of good humour;' see Johnson. The 'king' was naturally imagined to be the merry monarch Charles II, though Richardson says (on no authority) that it was 'so entitled by King James the First.' Both stories are discredited by the use of the orig. F. word surlonge in the fourteenth century; see Littré. Indeed, Wedgwood actually cites 'A surlown beef,' vii. d. from an account of expenses of the Ironmongers' Company, temp. Henry VI; with a reference to the Athenæum, Dec. 28, 1867.—F. surlonge, 'a sirlain,' Hamilton; see Littré for its use in the 14th cent.—F. sur, from Lat. super, above, upon; and longe, a loin; see SUR- and LOIN.

SURLY, morose, uncivil. (Hybrid; F.,—L.; with E. suffix.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 3. 42; &c. 'The orig. meaning seems to have been sir-like, magisterial, arrogant. "For shepherds, said he, there doen leade As Lordes done other-where . . . Sike syryle shepherds han we none;" Spenser, Sheph. Kal. July, 185–203. Ital. signoreggiare, to have the mastery, to domineer; signoreggiare, magisterial, haughty, stately, surly; Altieri. Faire du grobis, to be proud or surly, to take much state upon him; Cotgrave:—Wedgwood. I give the quotation from Cotgrave slightly altered to the form in which it stands in ed. 1660. As to the spelling, it is remarkable that while Spenser has syryle, the Glosse to the Sheph. Kal. by E. K. has 'surly, stately and prowde.' The spelling with u may have been due to a supposed connection with F. sur, above. Cotgrave also has: 'Sourcilless, . . . surly, or proud of countenance;' with other examples. Levens (1570) has: 'Serly, imperious;' col. 100, l. 30. It is thus clear that surly is a misspelling for sirly=sir-like, compounded of Sir and Like, q.v. The change of sense from proud, stately, imperious, to that of rude, uncivil, is but slight; and the sense of the word being once somewhat changed for the worse, it has never recovered its orig. force. ¶ A suggested derivation from M. E. sur, sour, is unlikely; sur is quite an early spelling, and soon became sour, whilst sourly in the 16th century was an adverb, as now, with quite a different vowel-sound from that in surly or sirly. On the other hand, the words homely, lovely, manly, are similarly formed, being likewise adjectives, not adverbs. Der. surli-ly, surli-ness.

SURMISE, an imagination, suspicion, guess. (F.,—L.) Levens has surmise both as sb. and vb.; so has Baret (1580). Halliwell gives the obs. verb surmit, with an example.—O. F. surmise, an accusation (Roquefort); properly fem. of surmis, pp. of surmettre, to charge, accuse, lit. 'to put upon,' hence to lay to one's charge, make one to be suspected of.—F. sur, from Lat. super, upon, above; and F. mettre, to put, from Lat. mittere, to send; see Super- and Mission. Der. surmise, verb; surmis-al, Milton (R.)

SURMOUNT, to surpass. (F.,—L.) M. E. surmounten, spelt sourmounten, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 8, l. 2223.—F. surmonter, 'to surmount;' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Mount (2). Der. surmount-able, in-surmount-able.

SURNAME, a name added to the Christian name. (Hybrid; F.,—L.; and E.) In Trevisa, iii. 265, l. 10. See Trench, Study of Words. A partial translation of M. E. surnom, spelt sournoun in Chron. of Eng. 982 (in Ritson, Met. Romances, ii. 311), from F. surnom, 'a surname;' Cot.—F. sur, from Lat. super, over, above; and E. name. See Super- and Name; and see Noun. So also Span. sobrenombre, Ital. soprannome. Der. surname, verb.

SURPASS, to go beyond, excel. (F.,—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 58.—F. surpasser, 'to surpass,' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Pass. Der. surpass-ing, surpass-able, un-surpass-able.

SURPLICE, a white garment worn by the clergy. (F.,—L.) Spelt surplise, surplys, in Chaucer, C. T. 3323.—F. surplus, 'a surplus;' Cot.—Low Lat. superpellicium, a surplice.—Lat. super, above; and pellicium, neut. of pellicius, pellicius, made of skins; see Super- and Pelisse. Cf. 'surplyce, superpellicium;' Prompt. Parv. So also Span. sobrepelliz.

SURPLUS, overplus, excess of what is required. (F.,—L.) M. E. surplus, Gower, C. A. iii. 24, l. 18.—F. surplus, 'a surpluse, overplus;' Cot.—Lat. super, above; and plus, more; see Super- and Plural. Der. surplus-age, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 18; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. Of a tame tiger, &c.; see Richardson.

SURPRISE, a taking unawares. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, v. 5. 131. The verb (though from the sb. in F.) occurs earlier, Rom. of the Rose, 3225.—O. F. surprise, surprise (Burguy), also spelt surprins, 'a surprisal, or sudden taking;' Cot. Properly fem. of surpris, surpris (surpris in Cot.), pp. of sorprendre, surprendre, 'to surprise, to take napping;' Cot.—F. sur, from Lat. super, above, upon; and prendre, from Lat. prehendere, to take; see Super- and Prehensible. Cf. Ital. sorprendere, to surprise. Der. surprise, verb, surpris-al (in Cotgrave, as above), surpris-ing, -ing-ly.

SURREBUTTER; see Surrejoinder.

SURREJOINDER, a rejoinder upon, or in answer to a rejoinder. (F.,—L.) 'The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a surrejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a surrebutter;' Blackstone, Comment., b. iii. c. 20 (R.) And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The prefix is F. sur, upon, hence, in answer to; see Sur- (2) and Rejoin. And see Rebut.

SURRENDER, to render up, resign, yield. (F.,—L.) 'I surrender, ie surrends;' Palsgrave.—O. F. surrendre, to deliver up into the hands of justice, Roquefort, Palsgrave; not in Cotgrave.—F. sur, upon, up; and rendre, to render; see Sur- (2) and Render. Der. surrender, sb., Hamlet, i. 2. 23.

SURREPTITIOUS, done by stealth or fraud. (L.) 'A soden surreptitious delyte;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1278 (miscalled 1276) g.—Lat. surreptitius, better surrepticius, stolen, done stealthily.—Lat. surrept-um, supine of surrepere, to creep under, steal upon.—Lat. sur (for sub before r), under; and repere, to creep; see Sur- (1) and Reptile. Der. surreptitious-ly.

SURROGATE, a substitute, deputy of an ecclesiastical judge. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. surrogatus, pp. of surrogare, to substitute, elect in place of another.—Lat. sur- (for sub before r), under, in place of; and rogare, to ask, elect. See Sur- (1) and Rogation.

SURROUND, to encompass. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Orig. surround, with the sense 'to overflow.'—O. F. surrouder, to overflow.—Lat. super, over; and unda, from unda, a wave. See further in Addenda. [†]

SURTOUT, an overcoat, close frock-coat. (F.,—L.) 'Surtoot, Surtoot, a great upper coat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Worn over all.—F. sur tout, over all.—Lat. super totum, over the whole; see Super- and Total.

SURVEILLANCE, inspection. (F.,—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—F. surveillance, superintendence; Hamilton.—F. surveillant, pres. part. of surveiller, to superintend.—F. sur, from Lat. super, over; and veiller, from Lat. vigilare, to watch; see Sur- (2) and Vigil. F. veillance=Lat. uigilantia.

SURVEY, to look over, inspect. (F.,—L.) 'To suruey, or ouersee;' Minshew, ed. 1627. The obs. sb. surueance is in Chaucer, C. T. 12029.—F. sur, over; and O. F. veër, later veoir, 'to see,' Cot.—Lat. super, over; and videre, to see; see Super- and Vision. And see Supervise. Der. survey, sb., All's Well, v. 3. 16; survey-or, survey-or-ship. [†]

SURVIVE, to overlive, outlive. (F.,—L.) Spelt survyue in Palsgrave.—F. survivre, 'to survive;' Cot.—Lat. superuiuere, to outlive.—Lat. super, above; and uiuere, to live; see Super- and Victual. Der. surviv-al, a coined word, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. i. 638; surviv-or, Hamlet, i. 2. 90; surviv-or-ship.

SUS-, prefix. (L.) Lat. sus-, prefix; put for *sub-s, an extended form of sub, under; so also Gk. ὑψ-, aloft, ὑψ-os, height, from ὑν-ός; see Sub-. Der. sus-ceptible, sus-pend, sus-pect, sus-tain.

SUSCEPTIBLE, readily receiving anything, impressible. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. susceptible, 'susceptible, capable;' Cot.—Lat. susceptibilis, ready to undertake.—Lat. suscepi-, for suscepto, crude form of suscepius, pp. of suscipere, to undertake; with suffix -bilis.—Lat. sus-, for sub-, extension of sub, under; and capere, to take; see Sus- and Captive. Der. susceptibili-ty, a coined word; susceptive, from Lat. susceptivus, capable of receiving or admitting.

SUSPECT, to mistrust, conjecture. (F.,—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. The word was orig. a pp., as in Chaucer, where it is used adjectivally, with the sense of 'suspicious,' C. T. 8317, 8318.—F. suspect, 'suspected, mistrusted;' Cot.—Lat. suspectus, pp. of suspiciere, to look under, look up to, admire, also to mistrust.—Lat. su-, for sub-, sub-, extension of sub, under; and specere, to look; see Sub- and Spy. Der. suspic-i-on, M. E. suspicion, K. Alisaunder, 453, O. F. suspexion (Burguy), later souspexon, 'suspicion,' Cot. (mod. F. soupçon), from Lat. suspicionem, acc. of suspicio, suspicion; hence suspic-i-ous, M. E. suspicious, Chaucer, C. T. 8316; suspic-i-ous-ly, -ness.

Observe that the old spellings suspicion, suspicious, have been modified to accord more with the Lat. originals.

SUSPEND, to hang beneath or from, to make to depend on, delay. (F.,—L.) M. E. suspenden, Rob. of Glouc., p. 563, l. 7.—F. suspendre, 'to suspend;' Cot.—Lat. suspendere (pp. suspensus), to hang up, suspend.—Lat. sus-, for sub-, extension of sub, under; and pendere, to hang; see Sus- and Pendant. Der. suspend-er. Also suspense, properly an adj. or pp., as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 34, from F. suspens, 'doubtful, uncertain,' Cot., from Lat. pp. suspensus, suspended, wavering, hesitating; suspens-ion, from F. suspension, 'a suspension or suspending,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suspensionem; suspens-or-y, from F. suspensoire, 'hanging, suspensory, in suspense,' Cot.; suspens-or-y, sb., a hanging bandage, &c.

SUSPICION; see under Suspect.

SUSTAIN, to hold up, bear, support. (F.,—L.) M. E. susteinen, susteynen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 111, l. 14.—O. F. sustenir, sostenir, spelt sousstenir in Cot.; mod. F. soutenir.—Lat. sustinere, to uphold.—Lat. sus-, for sub-, extension of sub, up; and tenere, to hold; see Sus- and Tenable. Der. sustain-er, sustain-able; also sustenance, M. E. sustenance, Rob. of Glouc., p. 41, l. 23, from O. F. sustenance, spelt sousstenance in Cotgrave, from Lat. sustinentia; also sustent-at-ion, Bacon, Essay 58, from Lat. acc. sustentationem, maintenance, from sustentare, frequent form of sustinere (pp. sustentus).

SUTLER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V. ii. 1. 116.—Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually zoetelaar; in Hexham zoetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. Lat. -arius) from zoetelen, 'to sully, to sully, or to victual;' Hexham. β. This frequent verb is cognate with Low G. suddeln, to sully, whence suddeler, a dirty fellow, scullion, and sometimes a sutler (Brem. Wört.); Dan. sudle, besudle, to sully, G. sudeln, to sully, daub. All these are frequent forms, with the usual frequent suffix -el-; the simple form appears in Swed. sudda, to daub, stain, soil; whence Swed. dial. sudda, sb., a dirty woman (Rietz). These are obviously connected with Icel. suddi, steam from cooking, drizzling rain, suddaligr, wet and dank, a derivative of soð, broth in which meat has been sodden, from sjóða, to seethe. Also with E. suds, a derivative of seethe; with which cf. G. sud, a seething, brewing, sudel, a puddle, sudeln, to daub, dabble, sully, sudelkoch, a sluttish cook. γ. Every one of these words is a derivative from the Teut. base SUTH, to seethe; see Seethe. The orig. th is represented, abnormally, by t in Du. zoetelaar, and regularly by d in Du. zieden, to seethe, G. sieden, sud, sudel, sudeln.

SUTTEE, a widow who immolates herself on the funeral pile of her husband; also the sacrifice of burning a widow. (Skt.) The u represents Skt. short a, which is pronounced like u in nud. The word is properly an epithet of the widow herself, who is reckoned as 'true' or 'virtuous' if she thus immolates herself. — Skt. sati, a virtuous wife (Benfey, p. 63, col. 2); put for santi, fem. of sant, being, existing, true, right, virtuous. Santi is short for *as-anti, pres. part. of as, to be. — ✓AS, to be; see SOOTH and IS.

SUTURE, a seam. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. suture, 'a suture or seam'; Cot. — Lat. sutura, a suture. — Lat. sutus, pp. of suere, to sow; cognate with E. SEW.

SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F., — L.) Not in Johnson; hardly an E. word. — F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme'; Cot. A coined word; made from F. sus, Lat. susum or sursum, above, in the same way as sovereign is made from Lat. super; it corresponds to a Low Lat. type *suseranus, for *surseranus. β. The Lat. sursum is contracted from su-uorsum, where su- is for sub, up, and uorsum (E. -ward) means 'turned,' from Lat. uertere, to turn; see Sub- and -Ward, suffix. Der. suzerain-ty, from F. suzeraineté, 'sovereignty, but subaltern, jurisdiction,' Cot.

SWAB, to clean the deck of a vessel. (Du.) Shak. has swabber, Temp. ii. 2. 48; whence the verb to swab has been evolved. The sb. is borrowed directly from Du. zwabber, 'a swabber, the drudge of a ship'; Sewel. Cf. Du. zwabberen, to swab, do dirty work. + Swed. svab, a fire-brush, svabla, to swab; Dan. svabre, to swab; G. schwabber, a swabber, schwabber-stock, a mop-stick; schwabbern, to swab. Cf. also Norw. swabba, to splash about, G. schwabbeln, to shake to and fro. Allied to SWAP, SWOOP. Der. swabb-er.

SWADDLE, to swathe an infant. (E.) 'I swadell a chylde;' Palsgrave. Also spelt swadil, swadle in Levins. Swadell stands for swathel, and means to wrap in a swathel or swaddling-band. M. E. swæþelband, a swaddling-band; spelt swæþelband, swadling-band, swæþeling-bonde in Cursor Mundi, 1343; whence the verb swæðel, swæthel = swaddled, id. 11236. — A. S. swæðel, swæðil, a swaddling-band; in a gloss (Bosworth). The sense is 'that which swathes'; formed by suffix -el, -il (Aryan -ra), representing the agent, from the verb to swathe; see SWATHE. Der. swaddling-band; swaddling-clothes. Luke, ii. 7.

SWAGGER, to hector, to be boisterous. (Scand.) In Shaks. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79. 'To swagger in gait is to walk in an affected manner, swaying from one side to the other;' Wedgwood. It is the frequentative of swag, now almost disused. 'I swagge, as a fatte persons belly swaggeth as he goth;' Palsgrave. 'Swag, to hang loose and heavy, to sag, to swing about;' Halliwell. — Norweg. svaga, to sway; Aasen. The base is SWAG, of which the nasalised form appears in E. swing, and in the G. verb schwanken, to stagger, reel, totter, falter. See SWING and SWAY. With the sense 'to sag' cf. Swed. sviga, to give way, bend, svag, weak, bending, Icel. svęigja, to give way. Der. swagger-er.

SWAIN, a young man, peasant. (Scand.) M. E. swain, Chaucer, C. T. 4025; swein, Havelok, 273. The form is Scand., not E.; the A. S. form was swán, Grein, ii. 500, which would have given a mod. E. swone, like stone from stán. We do, indeed, find swein in the A. S. Chron. an. 1128, but this is borrowed from Scand. — Icel. svęinn, a boy, lad, servant; Dan. svend, a swain, journeyman, servant; Swed. sven, a young man, a page. + Low G. sween, a swineherd, Hannover (Brem. Wört.) + O. H. G. swein, swén, a servant. Not connected with swine; the sense, swineherd, of Low G. sween, is accidental. β. The Teut. type is SWAINA, Fick, iii. 365. The sense is 'becoming strong' or 'growing up,' just as maiden is connected with the notion of attaining full growth. Allied to Goth. swinths, A. S. swið, Icel. svinnr, strong, swift, G. geschwind, quick, swift; of which the Teut. type is SWINTHA (Fick). These forms SWAINA, SWINTHA, are from a common base SWIN, to be quick (?); see Fick, i. 843; and see SWIM (2). Der. boat-swain, cox-swain.

SWALLOW (1), a migratory bird. (E.) M. E. swalowe, Prompt. Parv.; Chaucer, C. T. 3258. — A. S. swalewe, a swallow; Wright's Voc. i. 77. + Du. swaluw. + Icel. svala, put for *swalva; gen. svölu. + Dan. svale. + Swed. svala. + G. schwalbe; O. H. G. swalawá. β. The Teut. type is SWALWA; Fick, iii. 364. The prob. sense is 'tossler about,' or 'mover to and fro;' allied to Gk. σαλεύειν, to shake, to move to and fro, to toss like a ship at sea; σάλος, the tossing rolling swell of the sea. See SWELL. Fick, i. 842. Cf. O. Du. swalpen, 'to flote, to toss, beate against with waves,' swalpe, a tossing, swalcke, a swallow; Hexham.

SWALLOW (2), to absorb, ingulf, receive into the stomach. (E.) M. E. swolowen, swolwen, Chaucer, C. T. 16985; also swolthen, Juliana, p. 74, l. 4; swolthen, Ormulum, 10224 (written swolthenn in the MS.). Thus the final w stands for an older guttural. It is a secondary form, modified from the A. S. strong verb swelgan, to swallow, pt. t. swelg, pp. swolgen; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. swelgen. + Icel. svelgja, pt. t. svalg, pp. solginn; also as a weak verb. + Dan. swalge. + Swed. svälja. + G. schwelgen, to eat or drink immoderately. β. All from Teut. base SWALG, to swallow, Fick, iii. 364. Der. ground-sel, q. v.

SWAMP, wet spongy land, boggy ground. (Scand.) Not found in old books. 'Swamp, Swomp, a bog or marshy place, in Virginia or New England;' Phillips, ed. 1706. This points to its being a prov. E. word. According to Rich., it occurs in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685. The p is excrescent, as is not uncommon after m, and this particular form is Scand. — Dan. and Swed. swamp, a sponge, fungus (hence applied to spongy ground, which seems to be exclusively an E. use); cf. Swed. svampig, spongy. + M. H. G. swam, swamp, G. schwamm, a sponge, fungus. + Du. zwam, a fungus; O. Du. swam, a sponge. + Goth. swamm, a sponge. + Low G. swamm, but more commonly swamp, a fungus. + A. S. swam; 'Fungus, vel tuber, mette-swam,' Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2. β. Connected on the one hand with Gk. σπογγος, spongy, damp, and on the other with Gk. σπόγγος, a sponge (Attic σπόγγος, whence Lat. fungus is borrowed). The common root of all these words is SWAM, to swim; for which see SWIM. See Curtius, i. 476. This root at once gives Goth. swamm, a sponge, swumsl, a swamp; Gk. σπογγος, spongy; Icel. svöppr, a sponge, of which the base is svapp-, put for svamp- by assimilation. By change of initial sw to sp (not unlike the curious change of initial sw to sq as seen in squte, an occasional form of swete, sweet) we should get a Gk. form *σπομωσ, and this easily became σπόγγος in the same way that we have E. hunch in the same sense as hump, &c. Other derivatives from the same root are Dan. and Swed. sump, G. sumpf, a swamp, which are mere duplicate forms of the Dan. and Swed. swamp, due to the common change of va to u. It is remarkable that the E. word has kept the form of Scand. swamp with the sense of Scand. sump. γ. We should also note, as far too curious to be passed over, the prov. E. swang, swank, a swamp, bog, and swanky, boggy (Halliwell); for this is the very change above noted as taking place in Gk. And we have the proportion: as E. swamp: Gk. σπογγος :: prov. E. swank: Gk. σπόγγος. δ. We may conclude that swamp, sponge, and fungus are all related words, and are all from the root of SWIM. Der. swamp, vb., swamp-y, swamp-i-ness.

SWAN, a large bird. (E.) M. E. swan, Chaucer, C. T. 206. — A. S. swan, Grein, ii. 500. + Du. zwaan. + Icel. svanr. + Dan. svane. + Swed. svan. + G. schwan; O. H. G. swan, swana. β. The Teut. type is SWANA, Fick, iii. 361. Root uncertain.

SWAP, to strike. (E.) M. E. swappen; 'Swap of his hed' = strike off his head; Chaucer, C. T. 15834. 'Beofs to him swapte' = Beofs went swiftly to him; Layamon, 26775 (later text). The orig. sense is to sweep or swoop, to strike with a sweeping stroke or to sweep along. Closely allied to SWEEP, q. v. Cf. Icel. svęipja, to sweep, swoop; G. schwappen, to swap, schweben, to hover, drive, soar; and cf. E. squabble, q. v. And see SWAB.

SWARD, green turf, grassy surface of land. (E.) It formerly meant also skin or covering; the green-sward is the turf surface of the land; the prov. E. sward-pork is bacon cured in large fitches or flakes (Halliwell, Forby). 'Swardes, or swardes of flesch, Coriana; Swardes of erpe, turf-flag, or sward of erth, Cespes;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 482, 506. — A. S. sweard, the skin of bacon, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. zwoord, skin of bacon. + Icel. svörðr, skin, hide of the walrus, sward or surface of the earth; jarðar-svörðr, earth-sward, grassvörðr, grass-sward. + Dan. flesksver, flesh-sward, skin of bacon; grön-sverð, green-sward. + G. schwarte, rind, bark, skin, outside-plank. β. The Teut. type is SWARDA, with the sense of 'rind;' Fick, iii. 363. Root unknown. Der. sward-ed, green-sward.

SWARM, a cluster of bees or insects. (E.) M. E. swarm, Chaucer, C. T. 15398. — A. S. swearms (Bosworth). + Du. zwerm. + Icel. swarmr. + Dan. sværm. + Swed. svärm. + G. swarm; M. H. G. swarm. β. All from Teut. type SWARMA, where -ma is a noun-suffix, as in bloom, doo-m. The sense is 'that which hums,' from the buzzing made by a swarm of bees. Cf. Lithuan. surma, a pipe or fife, from the sound it makes; Russ. sviriele, a pipe, G. schwirren, to buzz, whiz, suerven, to hum, buzz. — ✓SWAR, to hum, buzz; whence Skt. svri, to sound, svara, a sound, voice; Lat. sursum, a hum, whisper. See SWEAR and SIREN. Der. swarm, verb, A. S. swirman, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 384, l. 21. And see swear, swerve, siren. [†]

SWART, SWARTHY, black, tawny. (E.) The proper form is swart; thence a less correct form swarth was made, occurring in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. xix. l. 343; and hence swarth-y (= swart-y) by the help of suffix -y (A. S. -ig) occasionally added to adjectives (as in murk-y), with the same force as the suffix -ish. Shak. has swarth, Titus, ii. 3. 72; swarthy, Two Gent. ii. 6. 26; swarty, Titus, ii. 3. 72, in the quarto editions. M. E. swart, spelt swart in Rob. of Glouc. p. 490, l. 6. — A. S. sweart, black; Grein, ii. 507. +

Du. zwart. + Icel. svartr. + Dan. sort. + Swed. svart. + G. schwarz; O. H. G. swarz, swarz. + Goth. swarts. β . The Teut. type is SWARTA, Fick, iii. 362; allied to Lat. sordes, dirt, sordidus, dirty, and prob. to Lat. sardus, dim-coloured. The form of the root is certainly SWAR, with the sense 'to be dirty'; and this may easily be identified with \checkmark SWAR, to shine, glow, from the sense of scorching or blackening by intense heat; Fick, i. 257. This is made certain by the occurrence of G. schwelen, to burn by a slow fire, and other forms discussed under Sultry. The Norse god Surtur, i. e. Swart, is the god of fire. Der. swarth-y or swart-y, as above; swarth-i-ly, swarth-i-ness. And see serene, solar.

SWASH, to strike with force. (Scand.) 'Thy swashing blow,' Romeo, i. 1. 70. Swashing is also swaggering, and a swasher is a swaggerer, a bully; As You Like It, i. 3. 122, Hen. V, iii. 2. 30. — Swed. dial. swasska, to make a 'squashing' or 'swashing' noise, as when one walks with water in the shoes (Rietz); Swed. swassa, to speak or write bombast. β . By the interchange of ks and sk (as in prove E. axe = to ask), swasska stands for svak-sa or svag-sa, an extension from a base SWAK or SWAG. Norweg. svakka, to make a noise like water under the feet; Aasen. Cf. prov. E. swack, a blow or fall, swacking, crushing, huge, swag, the noise of a heavy fall (Halliwell). The base appears to be partly imitative of the noise of a blow or fall, and partly connected with Norweg. svaga, to sway or swag, as in prov. E. swag, to swing about. See Sway, Swing, Swagger.

SWATH, a row of mown grass. (E.) M. E. swathe. 'A mede . . . In swathes sweppene downe' = a meadow, mown (lit. swept) down in swaths; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2508. 'Cam him no fieres swaðe ner' = no track (or trace) of fire came near him; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 3786. — A. S. swaðu, a track, foot-track, trace, Grein, ii. 500. + Du. swaad, a swathe; also swaad, zwade, 'a swath, a row of grass mowed down,' Sewel. + G. schwad, a row of mown grass. β . The sense 'row of mown grass' is the orig. one, whence that of track or foot-track easily follows. This appears by comparing Low G. swad, a swath, with swade, a scythe; see Brem. Wörterbuch, pt. iv. 1107, where the E. Friesic swade, swae, swah, a scythe, is also cited; these are closely allied to Icel. svæðja, a kind of large knife. γ . The Icel. svað means a slippery place, a slide, whence is formed the verb svæðja, to slide or glance off, particularly used of a sword glancing off a bone or hard substance; as, 'sverðit svæðr af stál-hörðum hjálm' = the sword slides off the steel-hard helm. Hence Icel. svæðja, sb., may be explained as a knife that slices, and the Low G. swade as a blade that slides or glances over the ground, i. e. a scythe; and the E. swath may be explained as 'a slice' or 'shred,' thus bringing it into close connection with E. swathe, a shred of cloth, bandage for an infant, and swathe, verb, to bind up an infant in swaddling-bands. And as a piece of mown grass lies in rows, so any cut corn is easily formed into bundles; this explains Cotgrave's 'Javelé, swathed, or made into sheaves,' as well as prov. E. swatch, in all its senses, viz. (1) to bind with a shred, to swaddle; (2) a pattern, sample, piece, or shred cut off from anything; (3) to separate, cut off, i. e. slice off; and (4) a row of barley. We may also note Icel. sviða, a kind of halberd. δ . All the evidence points to a Teut. base SWATH, to shred or slice off, appearing in Norweg. svada, vb. act. and neut. to strip off, flake off, as in: 'Han hadde sleget seg, so Kjøtet svadde fraa Beinet' = he had struck himself so that the flesh was sliced off from the bone; with which cf. the adj. svad, smooth, slippery; see Aasen. Der. swathe, q. v.

SWATHE, to bind in swaddling-cloths, to bandage. (E.) Shak. has swath, that which the mower cuts down with one sweep of the scythe, Troil. v. 5. 25; also a swaddling-cloth, Timon, i. 3. 252; also swathing-clothes, I Hen. IV, iii. 2. 112; swathing-clouts, Hamlet, ii. 2. 401; enswathed, Complaint, 49. M. E. swathen, pt. t. swathed, Cursor Mundi, 11236. — A. S. swæðian, in comp. beswæðian, to enwrap, John, xix. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.); A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 18. l. 8. — A. S. swaðu, orig. a shred; hence (1) as much grass as is mown at once, (2) a shred of cloth used as a bandage; see further under Swath. Der. swadd-le (for swath-le).

SWAY, to swing, incline to one side, influence, rule over. (Scand.) M. E. sweyen, Gawain and Green Knight, 1429; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 151. It also means to go, walk, come, Allit. Poems, B. 788, C. 429; spelt sweze, id. C. 72, 236. Prov. E. swag, to swing about (see Swagger). — Icel. svæigja, to bow, bend as one does a switch, to bend a bow, to swing a distaff, to strike a harp; svæigjask, refl. to be swayed, to swerve; svæigja, to make to sway or swag. A causal form from a lost verb *sviga, pt. t. *svæig, pp. *svæiginn, whence also the sb. svig, a bend, curve, circuit, svigi, a switch, svigna, to bend, give way. Cf. also Swed. dial. svæg-ryggad (sway-ridged), saddle-backed, svæg, a switch, from the strong verb sviga, to bend (pt. t. svæg, sup. svæigi), Rietz; Swed. sviga, to bend, yield, svaja, to jerk, svag, weak; Dan. svaie, to swing to and fro, to sway, svag, γ weak; Du. zwaai, a turn, zwaaijen, to swing, turn, sway, brandish; also Norweg. svæigja, to bend, svæg, a switch, svige, a switch, sviga, to bend or give way. β . All from the Teut. base SWAG, to sway, swing, also to sag, give way, well preserved in Norweg. svaga, to sway, swing, reel, stagger (Aasen). The nasalised form of the base is SWANG, to swing; see Swing. And see Swell, § γ . Der. sway, sb., Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 3, M. E. svæigh, Chaucer, C. T. 4716.

SWEAL, to singe, scorch slightly. (E.) See under Sultry, § γ , and Swart, § β .

SWEAR, to affirm to be true, to affirm with an oath, to use oaths freely. (E.) M. E. sweren, strong verb, pt. t. swor, swoor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 10; pp. sworen, sworn, Havelok, 439. — A. S. swerian, pt. t. swōr, pp. sworen, to swear, Grein, ii. 506. We also find A. S. swerian, with the simple sense of speak or declare, conjugated as a weak verb, particularly in the comp. andswerian, to declare in return, to answer. The orig. sense was simply to speak aloud, declare. + Du. zweren, pt. t. zwoor, pp. gezworen. + Icel. sværja, pt. t. sór, pp. svarinn. + Dan. sværge. + Swed. svärja. + G. schwören. And cf. Goth. swaran, Icel. svara, Dan. svare, Swed. svara, to answer, reply. β . All from \checkmark SWAR, to hum, buzz, make a sound; whence also Skt. svri, to sound, to praise, svara, sound, a voice, tone, accent, Lat. susurrus, a humming, and E. swarm; see Swarm. Der. swear-ing, for-sworn; an-swer.

SWEAT, moisture from the skin. (E.) M. E. swote (Tyrwhitt prints swete), Chaucer, C. T. 16046; whence the verb sweten, id. 16047. — A. S. swát, Grein, ii. 501. (By the usual change from ó to long o, A. S. swát became M. E. swoot, and should have been swote in mod. E.; but the vowel has been modified to make the sb. accord with the verb, viz. A. S. swétan, M. E. sweten, mod. E. sweat, with the ea shortened to the sound of e in let (= M. E. leten = A. S. létan). The spelling swet would, consequently, be better than sweat, and would also be phonetic.) + Du. zweet. + Icel. svæiti. + Dan. svæd. + Swed. svett. + G. schweiss; O. H. G. sweiz. β . The Teut. type is SWAITA, sweat, cognate with Skt. sveda, sweat; from Teut. base SWIT, to sweat, of which we find traces in Icel. sviði, sweat, G. schwitzen. This answers to Aryan \checkmark SWID, to sweat, whence Skt. svid, to sweat, Lat. sudor (for svidor), sweat, Gk. id-pós, sweat. Der. sweat, verb, A. S. swétan, as above; sweat-y, sweat-i-ness; and see sud-ar-y, sud-or-i-fi-c.

SWEEP, to brush, strike with a long stroke, pass rapidly over. (E.) M. E. sweepen, Chaucer, C. T. 16404; pp. sweeped, Pricke of Conscience, 4947. This is a weak secondary verb answering to an A. S. form *swáþian = *swáþan, not found, but regularly formed from swáþan, to sweep, a strong verb with pt. t. swæþ, Grein, ii. 500. Cf. 'Pronuba, hád-swæþe,' Wright's Voc. i. 288. This A. S. swáþian is represented in mod. E. by the verb to Swoop, q. v. Der. sweep, sb., Timon, i. 2. 137; sweep-er, chimney-sweep-er (often used in the forms sweep, chimney-sweep, cf. A. S. hunta, M. E. hunte, a hunter); sweep-ings; sweep-stake, the same as swoop-stake, sweeping off all the stakes at once, Hamlet, iv. 5. 142, whence sweep-stakes, sb., the whole money staked at a horse-race that can be won or swept up at once.

SWEET, pleasing to the senses, esp. to the taste. (E.) M. E. swete, Chaucer, C. T. 3206; with the by-forms swote, sole, id. 3205. — A. S. swéte, Grein, ii. 506. + O. Sax. swōiti. + Du. zoet. + Icel. sætr. + Dan. sød. + Swed. söt. + G. süß; O. H. G. suazi, suazi. β . The A. S. é is a modified ó; cf. the oe in Du. zoet, and the ö in Dan. sød, Swed. söt. All are from a Teut. type SWÖTYA, sweet, to which Goth. sutis, sweet, is nearly related. The base is SWAT, answering to Aryan \checkmark SWAD, to please, to taste nice, whence also Skt. svad, svád, to taste, to eat, to please, svádu, sweet, Gk. hδús, sweet, Lat. suavis (for *suaduis), pleasant, suādere, to persuade. Der. sweet-ly, sweet-ness; sweet-bread, the pancreas of an animal, so called because sweet and resembling bread; sweet-briar, Milton, L'Allegro, 47; sweets, pl. sb., Cor. iii. 1. 157; sweet-ish, sweet-ish-ness; sweet-en, to make sweet, Rich. II, ii. 3. 13; sweet-en-er, sweet-en-ing; sweet-ing, formed with a dimin. suffix -ing, a term of endearment, Oth. ii. 3. 252, also a kind of sweet apple, Romeo, ii. 4. 83; sweet-pea, sweet-potato; sweet-william (from the name William). Also sweet-meat, lit. sweet food, chiefly in the pl., M. E. swete meates, Henrysoun, Complaint of Creseide, l. 14; see Meat. And see sweet-heart, below.

SWEETHEART, a lover or mistress. (E.) Used as a term of endearment. The derivation is simply from sweet and heart; it is not an absurd hybrid word with the F. suffix -ard (= O. H. G. -hart), as has been supposed. Creseide calls Troilus her 'dere herte' and her 'swete herte' both; Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1181-1183. Again, he calls her my swete herte deré, id. iii. 1210; and in the last line of bk. iii we read: 'Is with Creseide his owen herte sweté.' Further examples are needless, but may easily be found in the same poem. ¶ No ingenuity can explain herte in herte swete as a F. suffix. For a similar example, cf. beef-eater, where the simple derivation from beef and eat is too simple for most people.

SWELL, to grow larger, expand, rise into waves, heave, bulge out. (E.) M. E. swellen, strong verb, pt. t. swal, Chaucer, C. T. 6549, pp. swollen, id. 8826. — A. S. swellan, pt. t. swell, pp. swollen, Exod. ix. 10; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. zwellen, pt. t. zwoll, pp. gezwollen. + Icel. svella, pt. t. svál, pp. sollinn. + Swed. svälla. + G. schwellen. β. All from Teut. base SWAL, to swell, Fick, iii. 363; cf. Swed. swall, the swell of the sea, an agitation, which (according to Curtius, i. 465) is cognate with Gk. σάλας, σάλη, tossing, restless motion, Lat. salum, the open, tossing sea. Allied words are also Gk. σαλεύειν, to toss, wave, σάλαξ, a sieve (from its being shaken), σάλας, a quoit (as being tossed).

γ. The ultimate root is probably ✓ SU or SWA, to drive, as seen in Skt. sú, to cast, send, incite, impel, Gk. σέβειν, to drive, throw, hurl, Gk. σείειν (= σέβειν), to shake, toss, agitate. From this ultimate ✓ SWA, to drive, toss, we can form not only SWAL, to toss, agitate, boil up (hence, to swell), but also the forms SWAP, to swoop, sweep, drive swiftly over a surface, SWAG, to sway, SWANG, to swing, SWAM, to swim. See Swoop, Sway, Swing, Swim. Der. swell, sb., Antony, iii. 2. 49; swell-ing. Also swallow (1), q. v.; sill, q. v., ground-sill.

SWELTER, to be faint with heat, also, to cause to exude by excess of heat. (E.) See further under Sultry.

SWERVE, to depart from a right line, turn aside. (E.) M. E. sweruen (swerven), Gower, C. A. iii. 7. 1. 8; iii. 92. 1. 16. Once a strong verb, with pt. t. swarf, swurf (Stratmann). — A. S. swerforan, to rub, to file, to polish, pt. t. swearf, pp. sworfen, Grein, ii. 509; whence the sb. geswearf, gesworf, filings, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 336, note 15. + Du. swerven, to swerve, wander, rove, riot, revel. + O. Sax. swerban, pt. t. swarf, to wipe. + O. Fries. swerwa, to creep. + Icel. swerfa, to file; pt. t. swarf, pp. sorfinn. + Goth. bi-swarban, to wipe. β. The range of meanings is remarkable; the orig. sense seems to have been to wipe or rub, then to file, to move backwards and forwards, to wander, to turn aside. In motion over a rough surface, there is a tendency to swerve aside. The Goth. form is plainly from a base SWIR, which Wedgwood well illustrates from 'Dan. dial. svirre, to move to and fro; slæden svirre, the sledge swerves, turns to one side.' So also Dan. svirre, to whirl round, svire, to revel, riot, sviir, a revel, svarre, svarbe, to turn in a lathe, of which the latter answers in form to E. swerve. So also Swed. svirra, to murmur, to hum (Widegren), svarfva, to turn in a lathe.

γ. In fact all the various senses can be explained by the ✓ SWAR, weakened form SWIR, to hum, buzz, whirl, orig. used of noises made by rapid motion, whether of whirling or of moving swiftly to and fro; hence the Teut. base SWARB, to rub rapidly, to file with a grating noise, and finally, with a loss of the sense of the root, to go to and fro, wander, rove. See further under Swarm, which is from the same root. δ. The close connection between swarm and swerve is well shown by the use of both prov. E. swarm and prov. E. swarve in the same sense of 'to climb a tree devoid of side-boughs,' by creeping and scraping one's way up it; cf. O. Fries. swerwa, to creep, cited above.

SWIFT, extremely rapid. (E.) M. E. swift, Chaucer, C. T. 190. — A. S. swift, Grein, ii. 513. Put for swipt; cf. Icel. svipta, to pull quickly. It answers to a Teut. form SWIFTA = SWIPTA, Fick, iii. 366; from Teut. base SWIP, to move swiftly or suddenly, as seen in Icel. svipa, to swoop, flash, also to whip, lash; svipall, shift, changeable, sviptgr, unstable, sudden, swift, sviptund, the twinkling of an eye. So also A. S. swipe, a whip, G. schwiipe, a whip, schwiippen, to whip, also to heave, undulate. Allied words appear in A. S. swifan, to move quickly, as in 'swiðeð swift untiorig' = [it] revolves swiftly and untiringly, Grein, ii. 513; Icel. svifa, to turn, rove, ramble, G. schweifen, to sweep or move along, rove, ramble. β. This base SWIP, to move swiftly, is closely allied to Teut. SWAP, to sweep; see further under Swoop. Der. swift, sb., swift-ly, -ness. And see swivel.

SWILL, to wash dishes; to drink greedily. (E.) The proper sense is to wash dishes. M. E. swilten, swilen; 'dishes swillen' = wash dishes, Havelok, 919. — A. S. swilian, to wash, in the Lambeth Psalter, Ps. vi. 6 (Bosworth). β. It is to be suspected that the oldest form was from a base SKWAL, as seen in Swed. squala, to gush, stream, squal, a gush of water, squalor, washings, swill. 'Regnet squalade på gatorna, the streets were streaming with rain.' Widegren; lit. the rain swilled the streets. Hence we can explain also M. E. sqwyler, a swiller of dishes; see Scullery. By loss of w, we get Icel. skyla, Dan. skylle, to swill, rinse, wash; skylleregn (= Swed. squal-regn), a heavy shower of rain; skyllevand, dish-water. By change of kw (qu) to p, common in the Aryan languages, we get G. spülen, to swill, wash, rinse. The comparison of all these forms renders the base SKWAL, to wash, tolerably certain; Fick does not notice it. Der. swill, hog's-wash, whence swill-ing-tub, Skelton, Elinor Rummyng, 173. Hence the verb to swill, to drink like a pig, as in 'the boar that . . . swills your warm blood like wash,' Rich. III, v. 2. 9; there is no reasonable pretence for connecting swill with swallow, as is sometimes needlessly done. Hence swill-er; and see scull-er-y.

SWIM (1), to move to and fro on or in water, to float. (E.) M. E. swimnen, Chaucer, C. T. 3577. — A. S. swimman, pt. t. swamm, swomm, Grein, ii. 515. + Du. zuemmen. + Icel. svimma, pt. t. svamm, pp. summit. + Dan. svømme. + Swed. simma. + G. schwimmen, pt. t. schwamm. β. All from Teut. base SWAM, to swim; Fick, iii. 362. Perhaps an extension from ✓ SWA, to impel; cf. Skt. sú, to impel; and see Swell. Der. swim, sb., swimm-er, swimm-ing, swimm-ing-ly.

SWIM (2), to be dizzy. (E.) 'My head swims' = my head is dizzy. The verb is from the M. E. swime, sb., dizziness, vertigo, a swoon; spelt swyme, swime, Cursor Mundi, 14201; swym, Allit. Morte Arthure, 4246. — A. S. swima, a swoon, swimming in the head, Grein, ii. 515; whence dsuðman, verb, to fail, be quenched, and dsuðman, verb, to wander, id. i. 43, 44. + Icel. svimi, a swimming in the head; whence svimeia, verb, to wander about; cf. Dan. svimle, to be giddy, svimmel, giddiness, besvime, to swoon; Swed. svimma, to be dizzy, svindel, dizziness. β. The A. S. swima probably stands for *swinna; the present word is distinct from the word above, and the orig. base is rather SWIN than SWIM, as appears by the Swed. svindel, dizziness, G. schwindel, dizziness, schwinden, to disappear, dwindle, decay, fail, schwindsucht, consumption. Fick cites an O. H. G. swinan, to be quick, which is a more orig. form; note also Swed. försvinna, to disappear, Icel. svina, to subside (said of a swelling). Der. swin-dler, q. v.

SWINDLER, a cheat. (G.) 'The dignity of the British merchant is sunk in the scandalous appellation of the swindler;' V. Knox, Essay 8 (first appeared in 1778); cited in R. One of our few loan-words from High-German. — G. schwindler, an extravagant projector, a swindler. — G. schwindeln, to be dizzy, to act thoughtlessly, to cheat. — G. schwindel, dizziness. — G. schwinden, to decay, sink, vanish, fail; cognate with A. S. swinan (pt. t. swand), to languish. See Swim (2). Der. swindle, verb and sb., evolved from the sb. swindler rather than borrowed from G.

SWINE, a sow, pig; pigs. (E.) M. E. swin, with long i, pl. swin (unchanged). 'He slepte as a swin' (riming with win, wine); Chaucer, C. T. 5165. 'A flocke of many swyne;' Wyclif, Matt. viii. 30. — A. S. swin, pl. swin, Grein, ii. 515. The A. S. swin is a neuter sb., and therefore unchanged in the plural, by rule. + Du. zwijn, a swine, hog. + Icel. svín, pl. svín, neuter sb. + Dan. svin, neut., pl. svin. + Swed. svin, neut. + G. schwein, O. H. G. swin. + Goth. swein, neut. Cf. Russ. svineya, a swine, dimin. svinka, a pig, svinoi, adj., belonging to swine, svinina, pork. β. The Teut. base is SWINA, a swine; Fick, iii. 324. Fick conjectures that the form was orig. adjectival, like that of Lat. suinus, belonging to swine, an adj. not given in White's Dict., but noted by Varro (Vaniček, p. 1048); this adj. is regularly formed from sui-, crude form of sus, a sow. There can be no doubt that swine is, in some way, an extended form from Sow, q. v. Der. swin-ish, -ly, -ness; swine-herd, M. E. swyneyne-herd, Prompt. Parv.; swine-cote, M. E. swyneyne-kote, id.; swine-sty, M. E. swynesty, id., spelt swynesty, Pricke of Conscience, 9002. [†]

SWING, to sway or move to and fro. (E.) M. E. swingen, strong verb, pt. t. swang, swong, pp. swungen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1058 (or 1059), Havelok, 226. — A. S. swingan, pt. t. swang, pp. swungen, to scourge, also, to fly, flutter, flap with the wings; Grein, ii. 515. + Swed. svinga, to swing, to whirl. + Dan. svinge, to swing, whirl. + G. schwingen, to swing, soar, brandish; also, to swingle or beat flax; pt. t. schwang. β. All from Teut. base SWANG, appearing in the pt. t. of the above strong verbs. This is a nasalised form of SWAG, to sway; see Sway. Der. swing, sb.; swinge, q. v.; swingle, q. v.

SWINGE, to beat, whip. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. i. 88, &c. M. E. swengen, to beat; see Prompt. Parv. — A. S. swengan, to shake, toss; cf. sweng, a stroke, blow; see Bosworth. A. S. swengan is the causal form of swingan, to swing, to beat; and swinge (pt. t. swinged) is the causal form of swing (pt. t. swang); just as fell is from fall, and set from sit. See Swing.

SWINGLE, a staff for beating flax. (E.) 'To swingle, to beat, a term among flax-dressers;' Phillips. The verb is M. E. swinglen, Reliquiae Antiquae, ii. 197; formed from the sb. swingle. In Wright's Voc. i. 156, near the bottom, we find swingle, sb., swingle-stok, sb., and the phrase 'to swingle the flax.' — A. S. swingele, a scourging; Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 132. But the M. E. swingle answers rather to an A. S. form *swingel, not found, lit. 'a beater, formed by suffix -el (Aryan -ra) of the agent from A. S. swing-an, to beat, to swing. Thus a swingle is 'a swinger, a beater; and swingle, verb, is 'to use a swingle.' Cf. Du. zingelen, to swingle flax, G. schwingen, a swingle. See Swing. Der. swingle, verb. Also swingle-tree, q. v.

SWINGLETREE, the bar that swings at the heels of the horses when drawing a harrow, &c. (E.) See Halliwell. Also applied to the swinging bar to which traces are fastened when a horse draws a coach. Corruptly called single-tree, whence the term double-tree has arisen, to keep it company. 'A single-tree is fixed upon each end of another cross-piece called the double-tree, when 2 horses draw abreast,' Haldeman (in Webster). M.E. swingle-tree, spelt swyngletre in Fitzherbert, On Husbandry, § 15 (E.D.S.). The word tree here means a piece of timber, as in axe-tree. The word swingle means 'a swing-er,' a thing that swings; so named from the swinging motion, which all must have observed who have sat behind horses drawing a coach. See Swingle, Swing.

SWINK, to toil; obsolete. (E.) Once an extremely common word; Milton has 'swink'd hedger' = hedger overcome with toil, Comus, 293. M.E. swinken, pt. t. swank, Havelok, 788; pp. swunken, Ormulum, 6103. — A.S. swincan, pt. t. swanc, pp. swuncen, to toil, labour, work hard. This form, running parallel with A.S. swingan, pt. t. swang, pp. swungen, is clearly a mere variant of the same verb; the base is SWANK, nasalised form of SWAK, which is a by-form of SWAG, the root of sway; see Swing, Sway. Cf. G. schwanken, to totter, stagger, falter, which is clearly allied to swagger and sway. The sense of 'toil' is due to that of constant movement; from the swinging of the labourer's arms and tools. And see Switch.

SWIRL, to whirl in an eddy. (Scand.) 'Swirl, a whirling wavy motion, East;' Halliwell. A prov. E. word, now used by good writers, as C. Kingsley, E. B. Browning, &c.; see Webster and Worcester. — Norweg. svirla, to wave round, swing, whirl (Aasen), frequent. of sverra (Dan. svirre), to whirl, turn round, orig. to make a humming noise. Formed from the base SWIR, to hum, just as whirl is from whir; see further under Swerve, Swarm.

SWITCH, a small flexible twig. (Du.) In Romeo, ii. 4. 73; Dr. Schmidt notes that old editions have swits for the pl. switches. Not found in M.E., and merely borrowed from Du. in the 16th cent. Switch or swich is a weakened form of swick. — O. Du. swick, 'a scourge, a swick, or a whip;' Hexham. The same word as swick, 'a brandishing, or a shaking,' id.; Hexham notes that swanck is used with the same sense. He also gives swicken, 'to totter or to wobble.' Thus a switch is a 'shaking' or a pliant rod, one that sways about. β. The base is SWIK, weakened form of SWAK, to bend, appearing (nasalised) in Du. zwancken, to bend, G. schwanken, to totter, and in O. Du. swanck, a switch, as above. This base SWAK, to bend, is a by-form of SWAG, to bend, treated of under Sway. From the latter base we have, in like manner, Swed. svæga, a switch, green bough, sviga, to yield, svigt, vibration, svigta, to totter; so also Norweg. svige, svæg, a switch, sviga, to bend; Icel. svæigr, svigi, a switch. See further under Sway, Swink. Note the proportion; as O. Du. swick: Norw. svige: E. swink: E. swing. Der. switch, verb.

SWIVEL, a ring or link that turns round on a pin or neck. (E.) Spelt swivell in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in M.E.; it corresponds to an A.S. form *swifel, not found, but regularly formed, with the suffix -el of the agent, from swifan, to move quickly, revolve; for which see Swift. Related words are Icel. svæifla, to swing or spin in a circle, like a top, svif, a swinging round, from svifa, to ramble, to turn. The base is SWIP, to move quickly; cf. also Icel. svipall, shifty, changeable, svipa, to swoop; see Swoop. The sense is 'that which readily revolves.'

SWOON, to faint. (E.) M.E. swounen, Chaucer, C. T. 5478; also swoghenan, King Alisaunder, 5857; also swowenen (Stratmann). A comparison of the forms shews, as Stratmann points out, that the standard M.E. form is *swoznen, the 3 being represented either by gh, w, or u; and this is a mere extension of a form *swozien, with the same sense. The n is the same formative element as is seen in Goth. verbs ending in -nan; cf. E. awaken from awake, &c. β. The form *swozien appears, slightly degraded, as swowen (with w for 3), to swoon, P. Plowman, B. v. 154, xiv. 326; also as sowghen, soghen, to sigh deeply, Romans of Partenay, 1944, 2890. This is a weak verb, closely allied to the strong verb swogen, to make a loud or deep sound, to sigh deeply, droop, swoon, pt. t. swe3, pp. iswo3en or iswowen. 'Sykande ho swes3e down' = sighing, she drooped down; Gawain and Green Knight, 1796. 'Adun he feol iswo3e' = down she fell in a swoon, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 428. — A.S. swogan, to move or sweep along noisily, to sigh, to sigh, orig. used esp. of the wind. 'Swogað windas' = the winds sigh, Grein, ii. 516; cf. áswo3en, pp. choked, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, § 52, ed. Sweet, p. 411, l. 17. Mr. Cockayne points out that the form geswo3ning, a swooning, occurs in A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 176, l. 13; and that in Ælfrie's Hom. ii. 336, we find: 'Se læg . . . geswo3en betwux ðam ofslegenum' = he lay in a swoon amongst the slain. Here A.S. geswo3en = M.E. iswo3en, as cited above. This A.S. swogan is represented by mod. E. Sough, q.v. γ. It will thus be seen that the final n is a mere formative element, and unoriginal; hence it is quite out of the question to compare swoon, as is often done, with the A.S. swindan, to fail, to swoon, and the G. schwinden, to fail. With these words swoon has nothing in common but the initial sw; the vowel is widely different, and the n is not to be compared. The A.S. swogan may have been of imitative origin; in form, it is allied to the base SWAG, to sway; see Sway. δ. The A.S. áswo3nan, to swoon, is unauthorised, and due to Sommer; the A.S. áswo3nian, to languish, appears as áswo3mian in Grein, and is a doubtful and difficult word. The mod. E. swoon, not being rightly understood, seems to have led editors astray. The descent of swoon from A.S. swogan is certain; for further examples and details, see Stratmann. And cf. Low G. swögen, to sigh, swugten, to sigh, also to swoon; Brem. Wört. Der. swoon, sb.

SWOOP, to sweep along, to descend with a swift motion, like a bird of prey. (E.) Shak. has swoop, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 219. M.E. swopen, almost always in the sense to sweep. In Chaucer, C. T. 16404, where Tyrwhitt prints swepe, the Corpus MS. has swope (Group G, l. 936); two lines lower, in place of ysweped, the Lichfield MS. has yswopen. It is usual to look on swoop as a derived form from sweep; but the truth lies the other way. Sweep is a weak verb, formed from swoop by vowel-change (cf. heal from whole); and swoop was orig. a strong verb, with pt. t. sweep, and pp. yswopen, as above. — A.S. swápan, to sweep along, rush; also, to sweep; a strong verb, pt. t. swéop, pp. swápen; Grein, ii. 500. 'Swápendum windum' = with swooping (rushing) winds; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iii. 16, ed. Smith, p. 542, l. 37. 'Swift wind swápeð' = a swift wind swoops; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, met. vii (b. ii. met. 4). — Icel. svæipa, to sweep, swoop; also svæip, pt. t. of an obsolete strong verb svæipa; svæippinn, pp. of the same. Also Icel. sópa, weak verb, to sweep. And cf. G. schweifen, to rove, ramble; A.S. swifan, to move quickly; Goth. swēipans, in the comp. midja-swēipans, a deluge, Luke, xvii. 27. β. The A.S. swápan answers to a Teut. *swaipan, from the base SWIP, to move quickly; for which see Swift. Fick, iii. 366, remarks that SWIP is a weakened form of ✓SWAP, to move forcibly, cast, throw, strew (Fick, i. 841). This root appears in Gk. σβεῖν, to shake, beat, scare birds; Lat. supare, to throw about, to scatter (whence Lat. dis-sipare and E. dissipate); Lithuan. supti, to swing, toss, rock a cradle, swambalas, a (swinging) plummet, swambaloiti, to sway, swing; &c. γ. And lastly, this root SWAP, to move forcibly, is probably an extension from the ✓SWA or SU, to impel, appearing in Skt. sú, to impel, drive, Gk. σέειν (= σφέειν), to shake, σέειν, to drive. From the same root we have other extensions in swa-y, swi-ng, &c., all from the primary sense of 'impel.' See Sway, Swing. Der. swoop, sb.; also sweep, q.v.; and see swift, swiv-el.

WORD, an offensive weapon with a long blade. (E.) M.E. swerd, Chaucer, C. T. 1700. — A.S. sweord, Matt. xxvi. 47. + Du. swaard. + Icel. sværb. + Dan. sværd. + Swed. svärd. + G. schwert; M. H. G. swerte. β. The Teut. type is SWERDA, Fick, iii. 366. The prob. sense is 'the wounder,' or that which wounds; cf. M. H. G. swerde, O. H. G. suerado, pain, O. H. G. sueran, to pain; G. schwer, painful. — ✓SWAR, to hurt, wound; cf. Skt. svri, to hurt, kill, svri, to be pained; Zend gara, a wound; Fick, i. 842. We also find Skt. svaru, Indra's thunder-bolt, or an arrow. Der. sword-cane, -fish, -stick; sword-s-man, formed like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; sword-s-man-ship.

SYBARITE, an effeminate person. (L., = Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; he also has the adj. Sybaritical, dainty, effeminate. — Lat. Sybarites. — Gk. Συβάρτης, a Sybarite, an inhabitant of Sybaris, a luxurious liver, voluptuary; because the inhabitants of this town were noted for voluptuousness. The town was named from the river Sybaris (Gk. Σύβαρις), on which it was situated. This river flows through the district of Lower Italy formerly called Lucania. Der. Sybarit-ic, Sybarit-ic-al.

SYCAMINE, the name of a tree. (L., = Gk., = Heb.?) In Luke, xvii. 6 (A. V.) — Lat. sycaminus. — Gk. συκάμινος; Luke, xvii. 6. It is gen. believed to be the mulberry-tree, and distinct from the sycamore; Thomson, in The Land and the Book, pt. i. c. 1, thinks the trees were one and the same. β. That the word has been confused with sycamore is obvious, but the suffix -ine (-ivos) is difficult to explain. Thomson's explanation is worth notice; he supposes it to be nothing more than a Gk. adaptation of a Heb. plural. The Heb. name for the sycamore is shiqmák, with the plural forms shiqmóth and shiqmím; from the latter of these the Gk. συκάμινος may easily have been formed, by partial confusion with Gk. συκάμπος, a sycamore; see Sycamore.

SYCAMORE, the name of a tree. (L., = Gk.) The trees so called in Europe and America are different from the Oriental sycamore (Ficus sycomorus). The spelling should rather be sycamore; Cotgrave gives sycamore both as an E. and a F. spelling. Spelt sicomoure in Wyclif, Luke, xix. 4. — Lat. sycomorus. — Gk. συκάμπος, i.e. the fig-mulberry tree. — Gk. συκο, crude form of σῦκον, a fig; and μόρον, a mulberry, blackberry. The derivation of σῦκον is doubtful; for Gk. μόρον, see Mulberry. (See sycamine.)

SYCOPHANT, a servile flatterer. (L., — Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary; he shews that it was formerly also used to mean 'an informer.' 'That sycophants are counted idly guests;' Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 207. Cotgrave gives the F. form as sycophantin. — Lat. sycophanta, an informer, tale-bearer, flatterer, sycophant. — Gk. συκοφάντης, lit. a fig-shewer, perhaps one who informs against persons exporting figs from Attica, or plundering sacred fig-trees; hence, a common informer, slanderer, also, a false adviser. 'The lit. signification is not found in any ancient writer, and is perhaps altogether an invention;' Liddell and Scott. That is, the early history of the word is lost, but this does not affect its obvious etymology; it only affects the reason for it. — Gk. σῦκο, crude form of σῦκον, a fig; and -φάντης, lit. a shewer (appearing also in ἱεροφάντης, one who shews or teaches religious rites), from φαίνειν, to shew. See Sycamore and Phantom. Der. sycophant-ic, -ic-al, -ism; sycophantic-y.

SYLLABLE, part of a word, uttered by a single effort of voice. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. sillable, Chaucer, C. T. 10415. — O. F. sillabe (Littre), later syllabe and syllable, with an inserted unoriginal l. — Lat. syllaba. — Gk. σύλλαβή, lit. 'that which holds together,' hence a syllable, so much of a word as forms a single sound. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before following λ), together; and λαβάν, base of λαμβάνειν, to take, seize (aorist infin. λαβέν), from ✓RABH, to seize. See Syn- and Cataleptic. Der. syllab-ic, from Gk. σύλλαβικός, adj.; syllab-ic-al, syllab-i-fy. Also syllabus, a compendium, from late Lat. syllabus, a list, syllabus (White), from late Gk. σύλλαβος, allied to σύλλαβή.

SYLLOGISM, a reasoning from premises, a process in formal logic. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. silogime, Gower, C. A. iii. 366, l. 12. — O. F. silogime (Littre), later syllogisme, spelt syllogisme in Cotgrave. — Lat. syllogismus, acc. of syllogismus. — Gk. σύλλογισμός, a reckoning all together, reckoning up, reasoning, syllogism. — Gk. σύλλογιζομαι, I reckon together, sum up, reason. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before λ following), together; and λογίζομαι, I reckon, from λόγος, a word, reason, reasoning. See Syn- and Logic. Der. syllogis-, from σύλλογιζομαι; syllogis-tic, from Lat. syllogisticus = Gk. σύλλογιστικός; syllogis-tic-al, -ly.

SYLPH, an imaginary being inhabiting the air. (F., — Gk.) 'Ye sylyphs and sylyphids;' Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 73; and see Pope's Introduction to that poem (A.D. 1712). Pope tells us that he took the account of the Rosicrucian philosophy and theory of spirits from a French book called Le Comte de Gabalis. — F. sylyphe, the name given to one of the pretended genii of the air. — Gk. σίλφη, used by Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 8. 17. 8, to signify a kind of beetle or grub. β. It is usually supposed that this word suggested the name sylyph, which is used by Paracelsus. The other names of genii are gnomes, salamanders, and nymphs, dwelling in the earth, fire, and water respectively; and, as all these names are Greek, we may be sure that sylyph was meant to be Greek also. The spelling with y causes no difficulty, and is, indeed, an additional sign that the word is Greek. It is not uncommon to find y (called in F. y Grec) used in words derived from Gk., not only where it represents Gk. v, but even (mistakenly) where it represents Gk. i; thus syphon occurs instead of siphon both in F. and E.; and we constantly write syren for siren. γ. Littre accounts for the word quite differently. He says that F. sylyphe is a Gaulish (Celtic) word signifying genius, and that it is found in various inscriptions as sulfi, sylyfi, sylyphi, or, in the feminine, as sulevsa, sulevia (which are, of course, Latinised and plural forms); he cites 'Sulfi suis qui nostram curam agunt,' Orel. Helvet. 117. This I believe to be entirely beside the question; Paracelsus knew nothing of Gaulish, yet he is (by Littre's own admission) the first modern author who uses the word. Scheler, on the contrary, has no doubt that the word is Greek. Der. sylyph-id, from F. sylyphide, a false form, but only explicable on the supposition that the word sylyph was thought to be Gk., and declined as if the nom. was σίλφης (stem σίλφιδ-).

SYLVAN, a common mis-spelling of Silvan, q. v.

SYMBOL, a sign, emblem, figurative representation. (F., — L., — Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 350. — F. symbole, 'a token,' &c.; Cot. — Lat. symbolum. — Gk. σύμβολον, a token, pledge, a sign by which one infers a thing. — Gk. συμβάλλειν (aor. infin. συμβάλειν), to throw together, bring together, compare, infer. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before β), together; and βάλλειν, to throw. See Syn- and Baluster. Der. symbol-ic, from Gk. συμβολικός, adj.; symbol-ic-al, -ly; symbol-ise, from F. symboliser, spelt symbolizer in Cot., and explained by 'to symbolize'; symbol-is-er; symbol-ism, symbol-ist.

SYMMETRY, due proportion, harmony. (F., — L., — Gk.)

Spelt sinmetrie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. symmetrie, 'simmetry,' Cot. — Lat. symmetria. — Gk. συμμετρία, due proportion. — Gk. σύμμετρος, adj., measured with, of like measure with. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before μ), together; and μέτρον, a measure. See Syn- and Metre. Der. symmetr-ic-al, a coined word; symmetr-ic-al-ly; symmetr-ise, a coined word.

SYMPATHY, a feeling with another, like feeling. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spenser has sympathie and sympathize, Hymn in Honour of Beatie, ll. 99 and 92. — F. sympathie, 'sympathy;' Cot. — Lat. sympathia. — Gk. συνπάθεια, like feeling, fellow-feeling. — Gk. συνπαθής, adj., of like feelings. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together; and παθ-, base of παθ-εῖν, aor. infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer, experience, feel. See Syn- and Pathos. Der. sympath-et-ic, a coined word, suggested by pathetic; sympath-et-ic-al, -ly; sympath-ise, from F. sympathiser, 'to sympathize,' Cot.; sympath-is-er.

SYMPHONY, concert, unison, harmony of sound. (F., — L., — Gk.) There was a musical instrument called a symphony, M. E. simphonie or symphonie; see my note to Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 2005. And see Wyclif, Luke, xv. 25. — Lat. symphonia, Luke, xv. 25 (Vulgate). — Gk. συμφωνία, music, Luke, xv. 25. — Gk. σύμφωνος, agreeing in sound, harmonious. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before φ), together; and φωνεῖν, to sound, φωνή, sound. See Syn- and Phonetic. Der. sympthon-ous; sympthon-ist, a chorister, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [†]

SYMPOSIUM, a merry feast. (L., — Gk.) Blount, Gloss., ed. 1674, has symposiast, 'a feast-master,' and symposiaques, 'books treating of feasts.' The simple sb. seems to be of later use. — Lat. symposium. — Gk. συνπόσιον, a drinking-party, banquet. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together; and the base πω-, to drink, appearing in pt. t. πέ-πω-κα, I drank, aor. passive ἐ-πό-θη, and in the sb. πό-σις, drink. This base is from ✓PA, to drink; see Syn- and Potable, Potation.

SYMPTOM, an indication of disease, an indication. (F., — L., — Gk.) Properly a medical term. In Cotgrave, to translate F. symptome. — Lat. symptoma. — Gk. σύμπτωμα, anything that has befallen one, a casualty, usu. in a bad sense. — Gk. συμπίπτειν, pt. t. συμπίπτομαι, to fall together, to fall in with, meet with. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before π), together, with; and πίπτειν, to fall, from ✓PAT, to fall. See Syn- and Asymptote. Der. symptomat-ic, Gk. συμπτωματικός, adj., from συμπτωματα, stem of σύμπτωμα; symptomat-ic-al, -ly.

SYN-, prefix, together. (L., — Gk.; or F., — L., — Gk.) A Latinised spelling of Gk. σύν, together, of which an older spelling is ξύν. The simplest explanation of this difficult word is that by Curtius (ii. 161), who supposes ξύν to represent a still older form *κύν; cf. ξύνος as a form of κύνος. We can then consider *κύν as cognate with Lat. cum, with; whilst at the same time κύνος (from *κύν) is brought into relation with Lat. communis, of which the first syllable is derived from Lat. cum, with. Remoter origin unknown. We may, in any case, be sure that Gk. σύν and Lat. cum are cognate words. β. The prefix σύν becomes σύν (syl-) before l, σύν (sym-) before b, m, p, and ph, and σύν (sy-) before s or z; as in syllogism, symbol, symmetry, sympathy, symphony, system, syzygy.

SYNÆRESIS, the taking of two vowels together, whereby they coalesce into a diphthong. (L., — Gk.) A grammat. term. Spelt sinæresis in Minshew. Lat. synæresis. — Gk. συνάφαισις, lit. a taking together. — Gk. σύν, together; and αἰφαισις, a taking, from αἰφείν, to take. See Syn- and Heresy. Cf. Disæresis.

SYNAGOGUE, a congregation of Jews. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. synagoge, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 23. — F. synagogue, 'a synagogue;' Cot. — Lat. synagoga. — Gk. συναγωγή, a bringing together, assembly, congregation. — Gk. σύν, together; and ἀγωγή, a bringing, from άγειν, to bring, drive, which is from ✓AG, to drive.

SYNALPHEA, a coalescence of two syllables into one. (L., — Gk.) A grammat. term; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. synalpheia. — Gk. συναλοιφή, lit. a melting together. — Gk. σύν, together; and δαίφειν, to anoint with oil, to daub, blot out, efface, whence δαίσις, fat. The Gk. δαίφειν is allied to λίπος, fat, from ✓RIP, to besmear; cf. Skt. lip, to besmear, anoint.

SYNCHRONISM, concurrence in time. (Gk.) Blount, ed. 1674, says the word is used by Sir W. Raleigh. — Gk. συνχρονισμός, agreement of time. — Gk. συνχρονος, contemporaneous; with suffix -ισμος. — Gk. σύν (written for σύν before χ), together; and χρόνος, time. See Syn- and Chronicle. Der. synchronous, adapted from Gk. σύνχρονος, adj.

SYNCOPATE, to contract a word. (L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. syncopatus, pp. of syncopare, of which the usual sense is 'to swoon.' — Lat. syncopare, syncopra, a swooning; also syncopae, as a gram. term. — Gk. συνκοπή, a cutting short, syncopae in grammar, a loss of strength, a swoon. — Gk. σύν (written for σύν before κ), together; and κοπή, base of κόπτειν, to cut, from ✓SKAP, to cut. See Syn- and Apocope or Capon. Der. syncopat-ion, a musical term, which Blount says is in l'layford's Introd. to Music,

p. 28. Also syncope, as a grammat. term, also a swoon, from Lat. syncope = Gk. συνκοπή, as above.

SYNDIC, a government official, one who assists in the transaction of business. (F., - L., - Gk.) Spelt sindic in Minshew, ed. 1627. - F. syndic, 'a syndick, censor, controller of manners;' Cot. - Lat. syndicus. - Gk. σύνδικος, adj., helping in a court of justice; as sb., a syndic. - Gk. σύν, with; and δική, justice. The orig. sense of δική is a shewing, hence a course, custom, use, justice; from DIK, to shew. See Syn- and Diction. Der. syndic-ate, a coined word.

SYNECDOCHE, a figure of speech whereby a part is put for the whole. (L., - Gk.) Spelt synecdoche in Minshew, ed. 1627. - Lat. synecdoche. - Gk. συνεκδοχή, lit. a receiving together. - Gk. συνεκέχομαι, I join in receiving. - Gk. σύν, together; and ἐδέχομαι, I receive, compounded of ἐκ, out, and δέχομαι, I receive, from DAK, to take. See Syn-, Ex-, and Digit.

SYNOD, a meeting, ecclesiastical council. (F., - L., - Gk.) 'Synodes and counsailles;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 406 h. - F. synode, 'a synod;' Cot. - Lat. synodus, acc. of synodus. - Gk. σύνδοδος, a meeting, lit. a coming together. - Gk. σύν, together; and δός, a way, here a coming, from SAD, to go. Der. synod-ic, from Gk. συνδοικός, adj.; synod-ic-al, synod-ic-al-ly.

SYNONYM, a word having the same sense with another. (F., - L., - Gk.) The form is French; in old books it was usual to write synonima, which, by a curious blunder, was taken to be a fem. sing. instead of a neut. pl., doubtless because the Lat. synonyma was only used in the plural; and, indeed, the sing. is seldom required, since we can only speak of synonyms when we are considering more words than one. Synonyma is used as a sing. by Cotgrave and Blount. - F. synonyme, 'a synonyma, a word having the same signification which another hath;' Cot. - Lat. synonyma, neut. pl., synonyms; from the adj. synonymus, synonymous. - Gk. συνώνυμος, of like meaning or like name. - Gk. σύν, with; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Syn- and Name. Der. synonymous, Englished from Lat. adj. synonymus, as above; synonymous-ly; synonym-y, Lat. synonymia, from Gk. συνωνυμία, likeness of name.

SYNOPSIS, a general view of a subject. (L., - Gk.) Spelt synopsis in Minshew, ed. 1627. - Lat. synopsis. - Gk. σύνopsis, a seeing all together. - Gk. σύν, together; and ὄψις, a seeing, sight, from ὄψομαι, fut. from base ὄρ-, to see. See Syn- and Optics. Der. synopt-ic, from Gk. adj. συνοπτικός, seeing all together; synopt-ic-al, -ly.

SYNTAX, the arrangement of words in sentences. (L., - Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, b. ii. c. 1; spelt sintaxis in Minshew, ed. 1627. - Lat. syntaxis. - Gk. σύνταξις, an arrangement, arranging. - Gk. σύν, together; and τάξις, order, from τάσσειν (= τάττω), to arrange. See Syn- and Tactics. Der. syntact-ic-al, due to Gk. συντακτικός, adj., put in order; syntact-ic-al-ly.

SYNTHESIS, composition, combination. (L., - Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, s. v. Synthetical. - Lat. synthesis. - Gk. σύνθεσις, a putting together. - Gk. σύν, together; and θεσις, a putting; see Syn- and Thesis. Der. synthet-ic-al, due to Gk. adj. συνθετικός, skilled in putting together, from συνθετός, a putter together, where θε- is the base = to put, and -της is the suffix denoting the agent (Aryan -ta); synthet-ic-al-ly.

SYPHON, SYREN, inferior spellings of Siphon, Siren, q. v. Cot. has the F. spelling syphon; also siphon.

SYRINGE, a tube with a piston, for ejecting fluids. (F., - L., - Gk.) The g was prob. once hard, not as j. Cot., however, already has siringe. - F. syringue, 'a siringe, a squirt;' Cot. - Lat. syringem, acc. of syrinx, a reed, pipe, tube. - Gk. σῦριγξ, a reed, pipe, tube, shepherd's pipe, whistle. From the Gk. base sy-, to make a noise, whistle; with suffix -γξ as in φόρυγξ, πλάστ-γξ (prob. = Aryan -an-ga). - SWAR, to sound, resound; see Swarm. Der. syring-a, a flowering shrub so named because the stems were used for the manufacture of Turkish pipes; see Eng. Cycl., s. v. Syringa.

SYRUP, SIRUP, a kind of sweetened drink. (F., - Span., - Arab.) 'Spicery, sawces, and siropes;' Fryth's Works, p. 99, col. 1. - F. sirop, 'sirrop;' Cot. Mod. F. sirop; O. F. ysserop (Littre). - Span. xaorope, a medicinal drink; the O. F. ysserop is due to a Span. form axarope, where a represents al, the Arab. article. - Arab. sharab, shurab, wine or any beverage, syrup; lit. a beverage; Rich. Dict. p. 886, col. 1. - Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. p. 887. See Sherbet.

SYSTEM, method. (L., - Gk.) It is not an old word in F., and seems to have been borrowed from Latin directly. Spelt systeme in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. systema. - Gk. σύστημα, a complex whole, put together; a system. - Gk. σύν (put for σύν before σ), together; and the base στη-, to stand; with suffix -μα (Aryan -ma). The base στη- occurs in στήναι, to stand; from STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. system-at-ic, from Gk. adj. συστηματικός, adj., formed from συστηματ-, stem of σύστημα; system-at-ic-al, -ly; system-at-ise, a coined word; system-at-ise-r.

SYSTOLE, contraction of the heart, shortening of a syllable. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished (with y for v) from Gk. συστολή, a contracting, drawing together. - Gk. συστέλλειν, to draw together, contract. - Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and στέλλειν, to equip, set in order. See Syn- and Stole.

SYZYGY, conjunction. (Gk.) A modern term in astronomy. - Gk. σύνζυγος, union, conjunction. - Gk. σύνζυγος, conjoined. - Gk. σύν (for σύν before ζ), together; and ζυγ-, base of ζεύγνυμι, I join (cf. ζυγόν, a yoke), from the base YUG, extension of YU, to join. See Syn- and Yoke; and compare Conjunction.

TA-TE.

TABARD, a sleeveless coat, formerly worn by ploughmen, noblemen, and heralds, now by heralds only. (F., - L., - Gk.?) M. E. tabard, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 280, l. 2; Chaucer, C. T. 543. - O. F. tabart, tabard; see a quotation in Roquefort with the spelling tabart; mod. F. tabard (Hamilton, omitted in Littre). Cf. Span. and Port. tabardo; Ital. tabarro. The last form (like F. tabarre in Cotgrave) has lost a final d or t. The W. tabar is borrowed from English. We also find a M. H. G. taphart, taphart; and even a mod. Gk. ταμάρτιον.

β. Etym. unknown; Diez suggests Lat. tapet-, stem of tapete, hangings, painted cloths; see Tapestry. γ. This is almost confirmed by our use of tippet; see Tippet.

TABBY, a kind of waved silk. (F., - Span., - Arab.) Chiefly retained in the expression 'a tabby cat,' i. e. a cat brindled or diversified in colour, like the markings on tabby. 'Tabby, a kind of waved silk;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. tabis, in use in the 15th century (Littre). - Span. tabi, a silken stuff; Low Lat. (or rather O. Span.) attabi, where at was supposed (but wrongly) to represent the Arab. article al, and so came to be dropped. - Arab. utabi, a kind of rich undulated silk; Rich. Dict. p. 992. See De Vic, who calls it an Arab. word (Rich. marks it Pers.). He adds that it was the name of a quarter of Bagdad where this silk was made (Defrémery, Journal Asiatique, Jan. 1862, p. 94); and that this quarter took its name from prince Attab, great-grandson of Omeyya (Dozy, Gloss. p. 343). ¶ Hence perhaps tabi-net, spelt tabinet in Webster, and explained as 'a more delicate kind of tabby;' but Trench, Eng. Past and Present, tells us that it was named from M. Tabinet, a French Protestant refugee, who introduced the making of tabinet in Dublin; for which statement he adduces no reference or authority.

TABERNACLE, a tent used as a temple, a tent. (F., - L.) M. E. tabernacle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 20. - F. tabernacle, 'a tabernacle,' Cot. - Lat. tabernaculum, double dimin. of taberna, a hut, shed; see Tavern.

TABID, wasted by disease. (L.) Rare; in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. tabidus, wasting away, decaying, languishing. - Lat. tabes, a wasting away; whence also Lat. tabere, to waste away, languish. Allied to Gk. τήκεν, in the same sense, Lithuan. tekėti, to run, flow. - TAK, to flow; cf. Skt. tak, to start. Fick, i. 587. See Thaw. Der. tabe-fy, to cause to melt, Blount's Gloss., from F. tabifier, to waste (Cot.), due to Lat. tabefacere, to cause to melt.

TABLE, a smooth board, usually supported on legs. (F., - L.) M. E. table, Chaucer, C. T. 355. - F. table. - Lat. tabula, a plank, flat board, table. - TA, TAN, to stretch, spread out; so that the lit. sense is 'extended;' cf. Skt. tata, pp. of tan, to stretch. See Thin. Der. table-s, pl. sb., a kind of game like backgammon, played on flat boards, Rob. of Glouc. p. 192, l. 3; table, verb, Cymb. i. 4. 6; table-book, Hamlet, ii. 2. 136; table-talk, Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 93; table-land, land flat like a table; table-et, Cymb. v. 4. 109, from F. tablette, 'a little table;' Cot., dimin. of F. table. Also tabul-ar, tabul-ate, from Lat. tabula. Also tabl-eau, borrowed from F. tableau, dimin. of table. Also taffer-el, q. v.

TABOO, TABU, to forbid approach to, forbid the use of. (Polynesian.) 'Taboo, a political prohibition and religious consecration interdict, formerly of great force among the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific; hence, a total prohibition of intercourse with, or approach to anything;' Webster. It seems to be the same as the Tahitian custom of te pi, described in Max Müller, Lect. on Language, vol. ii. lect. 1. [†]

TABOUR, TABOR, a small drum. (F., - Span., - Arab., - Pers.?) M. E. tabour, Havelok, 3229. - F. tabour, 'a drum, a tabour;' Cot. Mod. F. tambour; Littre gives the spellings tabur, 11th cent.; tabour, 13th to 16th century. Cf. Prov. tabor, tanbor (cited by Littre); Span. tambor, O. Span. atambor (Minshew); Ital. tamburo. The F. word was most likely borrowed from Span. tambor, also called atambor, where the prefix a- stands for the Arab. def. art. al, shewing that the word was borrowed from the Moors. — Arab. tambūr, 'a kind of lute or guitar with a long neck, and six brass strings; also, a drum;' Rich. Dict., p. 976. He gives it also as a Pers. word, and Devic seems to think that the word was borrowed from Persian. The initial letter is the 19th of the Pers. alphabet, sometimes written th, not the ordinary t. On the same page of Rich. Dict. we also find Pers. tumbuk, a trumpet, clarion, bagpipe, tambal, a small drum; also Arab. tabl, a drum, a tambourin, Pers. tablak, a small drum, p. 964. Also Pers. tabir (with the ordinary t), a drum, kettle-drum, a large pipe, flute, or hautboy, p. 365; tabirāk, a drum, tabour, tambourin, a drum beaten to scare away birds, p. 364. See the account in Devic, who considers the form tambūr as derived from Pers. tabir; and the form tabirāk to be dimin. of Pers. *tabūr, a form not found. β. It will be observed that the sense comprises various instruments that make a din, and we may note Port. atabale, a kettle-drum, clearly derived from a for al, the Arab. article, and Pers. tambal, a drum. All the above words contain a base tab, which we may regard, with Mr. Wedgwood, as being of imitative origin, like the English dub-a-dub and tap. This is rendered likely by the occurrence of Arab. tabtabat, the sound made by the dashing of waterfalls; Rich. Dict. 963; cf. Arab. tabbāl, a drummer, ibid. Der. tabor-er, Temp. iii. 2. 160; tabour-ine, Antony, iv. 8. 37, from F. tabourin, 'a little drum,' Cot.; tabour-et, Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1. 78, a dimin. form; shortened to taboret, Gen. xxxi. 27. And see tambourine.

TABULAR, TABULATE; see Table.

TACHE (1), a fastening. (C.) In Exod. xxvi. 6. 'A tache, a buckle, a clasp, a bracelet, Spinter;' Baret, s. v. Claspe. A weakened form of tack, just as beseek is for beseek, church is for kirk, &c.; cf. the derived words att-ack, de-tack. Minshew, ed. 1627, actually gives: 'To tache, or tack.' See Tack. [†]

TACHE (2), a blot, blemish; see Tetchy.

TACIT, silent. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 430. No doubt directly from Lat., though Cot. gives F. tacite, 'silent.' — Lat. tacitus, silent. — Lat. tacere, to be silent. Cognate with Goth. thahan, to be silent, Icel. þega, Swed. tiga, to be silent. All from a base TAK, with the sense 'to be silent.' Der. tacit-urn, from F. taciturne, 'silent,' Cot.; tacit-urn-i-ty, Troilus, iv. 2. 75, from F. taciturnité, 'taciturnity,' Cot.; from Lat. acc. taciturnitatem.

TACK, a small nail, a fastening; to fasten. (C.) M. E. takke. 'Takke, or botun, Fibula,' Prompt. Parv.; where we also find: 'Taklyn, or festyn to-gedur, or some-what sowyn to-gedur.' The sb. is spelt tak, Legends of Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 145, l. 419. Of Celtic origin. — Irish taca, a peg, pin, nail, fastening; Gael. tacaid, a tack, peg, stab; Breton tach, a nail, tacha, to fasten with a nail. An initial s appears to have been lost, which appears in Irish stang, a peg, pin, Gael. stain, a peg, cloak-pin, allied to E. stake. From ✓STAG, to strike, to touch, take hold of; Fick, i. 823. See Stake, Take, and Attach.

3. The nautical use of tack is from the same source. 'In nautical language a tack is the rope which draws forward the lower corner of a square sail, and fastens it to the windward side of the ship in sailing transversely to the wind, the ship being on the starboard or larboard tack according as it presents its right or left side to the wind; the ship is said to tack when it turns towards the wind, and changes the tack on which it is sailing;' Wedgwood. Cf. to tack, to sew slightly, fasten slightly. Der. tache, q. v.; and see tack-le. Also tack-et, a small nail (Levins).

TACKLE, equipment, implements, gear, tools. (Scand.) M. E. takel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 883; takil, the tackle of a ship, Gower, C. A. iii. 291. — Swed. and O. Swed. tackel, tackle of a ship (Ihre), whence tackla, to rig; Dan. takkel, tackle, whence takle, to rig. Cf. Du. takel, a pulley, tackle, whence takelen, to rig.

β. The suffix -el (for -la = Aryan -ra) is used to form substantives from verbs, as in E. sett-le, sb., a thing to sit on, from sit, stopp-le from stop, shov-el from shove, shutt-le from shoot, gird-le from gird, and denotes the implement. Tack-le is that which takes or grasps, holding the masts, &c. firmly in their places; from Icel. taka, O. Swed. taka (mod. Swed. taga), to take, seize, grasp, hold, which had a much stronger sense than the mod. E. take; cf. Icel. tak, a grasp in wrestling, taka, a seizing, capture; and observe the wide application of tackle in the sense of implements or gear.

γ. Often derived from W. tael, an instrument, tool, tackle; but the W. word may have been borrowed from E., or they may be cognate. The E. take (of Scand. origin) may be related to E. tack (of Celtic origin), because an initial s appears to have been lost; see Tack, Take. Der. tackl-ing, Rich. III. iv. 4. 233.

TACT, peculiar skill, delicate handling. (L.) Modern; Webster gives examples from Macaulay. Todd says: 'Tact, touch, an old word, long disused, but of late revived in the secondary senses of touch, as a masterly or eminent effort, and the power of exciting the affections.' He then cites a passage containing 'sense of tact,'

i. e. touch, from Ross, Arcana Microcosmi (1652), p. 66. — Lat. tactus, touch. — Lat. tactus, pp. of tangere, to touch; see Tangent.

Der. tact-able, that may be touched, Massinger, Parl. of Love, ii. 1. 8, a coined word, made to rhyme with tractable; tact-ile, from Lat. tactilis, tangible; tact-ion, a touching, Blount.

TACTICS, the art of arranging or manœuvring forces. (Gk.) 'And teaches all the tactics;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1 (Lickfinger). — Gk. τακτικά, sb. pl., military tactics. — Gk. τακτικός, adj., fit for arranging, belonging to tactics. — Gk. τακτός, ordered, arranged; verbal adj. from τάσσειν (= τάξ-yeu), to arrange, order. Of uncertain origin; Curtius, ii. 328. The base is certainly TAK; Fick, i. 588. Der. tactic, adj., from Gk. τακτικός; tactic-i-an, a coined word.

TADPOLE, a young frog in its first stage, having a tail. (Hybrid; E. and C.) 'Young frogs, . . . while they be tadpoles and have little wriggling tails;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 10. Called bull-head in Cotgrave; he has: 'Chabot, the little fish called a gull, bull-head, or miller's thumb; also the little water-vermine called a bull-head.' Also: 'Testard, the pollard, or chevin fish, also the little black water-vermine called a bull-head.' Observe that F. chabot is from Lat. caput, a head (cf. Lat. capito, a fish with a large head); that testard is from O. F. teste, a head; that chevin is from F. chef, a head; and that bull-head contains the E. head; the striking feature about the tadpole is that it appears nearly all head, with a little tail attached which is body and tail in one. See Wedgwood, who adduces also E. dial. poll-head, Lowl. Sc. pou-head, a tadpole (which merely repeat the notion of head), E. dial. polwiggles, pollywig, a tadpole, with which we may compare wiggle or waggle, to wag the tail. β. Hence tad-pole = toad-poll, the toad that seems all poll; see Toad and Poll. The former part of the word is E., the latter (ultimately) of Celtic origin.

TAFEREL, TAFFERAIL, the upper part of the stern of a ship. (Du., = L.) 'Tafferel, the uppermost part, frame, or rail of a ship behind, over the poop;' Phillips, ed. 1706, = Du. taferel, a pannel, a picture; Hexham explains it by 'a painter's table or board,' and adds the dimin. taferelken, 'a tablet, or a small board.' The taffrail is so called because it is flat like a table on the top, and sometimes ornamented with carved work; cf. G. täfel, boarded work, flooring, wainscoting.

β. The Du. tafer-el stands for *täfel-el, a dimin. from Du. täfel, a table; just as G. täfel is from G. täfel, a table. The Du. and G. täfel are not to be considered as Teut. words; the M. H. G. form is tavele, O. H. G. tavelä, borrowed from Lat. tabula, a table, just as O. H. G. tavernä, a tavern, is from Lat. taberna. See Table. ¶ The spelling taffrail is prob. due to confusion with E. rail.

TAFFETA, TAFFETY, a thin glossy silk stuff, with a wavy lustre. (F., = Ital., = Pers.) 'Tafata, a manner of sylke, taffetas;' Palsgrave. M. E. taffata, Chaucer, C. T. 442. = F. taffetas, 'taffata,' Cot. = Ital. taffetà, 'taffeta;' Florio. = Pers. tāstak, 'twisted, woven, a kind of silken cloth, tafteta;' Rich. Dict. p. 356. = Pers. tāstān, to twist, to spin, curl, &c.; also to burn, glow, shine; ibid. It is difficult to see how it can be the same word in all the senses. β. In the sense 'to glow, burn,' it is clearly cognate with Skt. tap, to warm, to shine; see Tepid. Fick (i. 329) notes Zend tap, to burn, tafta, enraged, passionate.

TAG, a point of metal at the end of a lace, anything tacked on at the end of a thing. (Scand.) 'An aglet or tag of a poynt;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'Are all thy points so void of Reasons taggs?' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 61. A 'point' was a tagged lace; cf. 'Tag of a poynt, Ferretum;' Levins. — Swed. tagg, a prickle, point, tooth. + Low G. takk, a point, tooth.

β. The Low G. takk is the same word as E. tack, a small nail, and G. zacke, a tooth, tine, prong. Perhaps all these words are of Celtic origin. See Tack, Tache. Der. tag, verb; tag-rag, used by Stanyhurst (tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 21) to mean 'to small pieces,' but usual in the sense of 'every appendage and shred,' a shortened form of tag and rag, as in 'they all came in, both taggs and raggs,' Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 662, col. 2. So also tag and rag, Whitgift's Works, i. 315 (Parker Soc.) So also tag-rag-and-bobtail, where bobtail = short or bunched tail, from bob, a bunch; see note to Bob.

TAIL (1), the end of the back-bone of an animal, a hairy appendage, appendage. (E.) M. E. tail, tayl, Chaucer, C. T. 3876. = A. S. tagl, tagel, a tail, Grein, ii. 523. + Icel. tagl. + Swed. tagel, hair of the tail or mane. + Goth. tagl, hair, Mark, i. 6. + G. zagel, a tail.

β. Root uncertain; it has been compared with Skt. daṇḍ, the skirt of a garment, from Skt. daṇḍ, daṇḍ, to bite, allied to Goth. tahjan, to tear. Perhaps the orig. sense was a shred, hence shaggy rough hair, &c. Fick, iii. 116. Der. tail-piece, a piece or small drawing at the tail or end of a chapter or book. Also tail-ed, Rich. Coeur de Lion, l. 1868.

TAIL (2), the term applied to an estate which is limited to certain heirs. (F., = L.) Better spelt taille. 'This limitation, or taille, is either general or special;' Cowel, in Todd's Johnson; see the whole article. — F. taille, 'a cutting,' &c.; Cot. The same word as taille, a tally; see Tally, Tailor, Entail.

TAILOR, one who cuts out and makes cloth garments. (F., = L.) Properly 'a cutter.' M. E. tailor, taylor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 313, l. 5. — O. F. tailleur, later tailleur, 'a cutter;' Cot. — F. tailleur, to cut. — F. taille, an incision, a slitting. — Lat. talea, a thin rod, stick; also a cutting, slip, layer; an agricultural word. See Diez, who cites from Nonius, 4. 473; 'tales scissiones lignorum vel præsegmina Varro dicit de re rust. lib. I.; nam etiam nunc rustica voce intertaleare dicitur dividere vel excindere ramum.' This verb intertaleare is preserved in the Span. entretallar, to slash. Root unknown. Der. tailor-ing. And see tally, de-tail, en-tail, re-tail.

TAINT, a tinge, dye, stain, blemish. (F., = L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 3. 124. — F. teint, spelt teinct, 'a tincture, die, stain;' Cot. — F. teint, pp. of teindre, 'to stain,' id. — Lat. tingere; see Tinge. Der. taint, vb., Romeo, i. 4. 76. ¶ Perhaps confused with attaint, from tangere. [†]

TAKE, to lay hold of, seize, grasp, get. (Scand.) M. E. taken, pt. t. tok, pp. taken, Chaucer, C. T. 572; pp. takē, id. 2649. Not a true A. S. word, but borrowed from Norse. — Icel. taka, pt. t. tók, pp. tekinn, to lay hold of, seize, grasp (a very common word); Swed. taga, O. Swed. taka; Dan. tage. + Goth. tekan, pt. t. taitok, pp. tekans, to touch.

β. The Goth. tekan is certainly cognate with Lat. tangere (pt. t. te-tigi, pp. tec-tus = tag-tus), to touch; and the identity of the initial sounds shews that an initial s has been lost; see Curtius, i. 269. Hence the root is ✓ STAG, to touch, grasp, thrust, sting, stick or pierce; whence also Gk. τεταγ-ών, having taken, Skt. tij, to be sharp, and A. S. stician, to sting. See Stake and Stick (1). Der. tak-ing, tak-ing-ly. Allied words are stake, stick (1); also tack, tache, tag, tack-le, attach, at-tack, de-tack; tact, tang-ent, con-tact, in-tact, &c.; see under tangent. [†]

TALC, a mineral occurring in thin flakes. (F., = Span., = Arab.) 'Oil of talc;' Ben Jonson, Epigram to the Small-pox; Underwoods, lii. 11. And see Nares. — F. talc (Cot.) — Span. talco. — Arab. talq, 'talc, mica;' Rich. Dict. p. 974.

TALE, a number, reckoning, narrative. (E.) M. E. tale; see Chaucer, Cant. Tales. — A. S. talū, a number, a narrative; Grein, ii. 521. + Du. taal, language, tongue, speech. + Icel. tal, talk, a tale; tala, a number, a speech. + Dan. tale, speech. + Swed. tal, speech, number. + G. zahl, number; O. H. G. zala. β. All from Teut. type TALA, a tale, number; Fick, iii. 120. It is probable that Goth. untals, uninstructed, talzjan, to instruct, are related words. The orig. sense was prob. 'order,' whence (1) number, (2) orderly arrangement of speech, narrative. The prob. root is ✓ DAR, to see, consider; cf. Skt. dri, to consider, respect, ádara, regard, concern, care. Fick, i. 617. Perhaps E. till is related; see Till (2). Der. tale-bear-ing, tale-bear-er, tell-tale (Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave has 'a tale-bearer or tell-tale'); tale-tell-er, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. Also tell, q. v. ¶ But not talk.

TALENT, a weight or sum of money, natural gift or ability, inclination. (F., = L., = Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words, and Select Glossary. We derive the sense of ability from the parable in Matt. xxv, our talents being gifts of God. The M. E. talent occurs in the sense of will or inclination, from the figure of the inclination or tilting of a balance. M. E. talent; whence mal-talent, ill-will, Rom. of the Rose, 274, 340; and see Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 15; King Alisaunder, 1280. — F. talent, 'a talent in money; also will, desire, an earnest humour unto;' Cot. — Lat. talentum. — Gk. τάλαντον, a balance; a weight, weight or sum of money, talent. Named from the notion of lifting and bearing; allied to τάλας (stem ταλαντ-), bearing, enduring, suffering, ἐ-τλην, I endured, Lat. tol-erare, to endure, tol-ere, to lift, sustain, Skt. tal, to lift, weigh, talana, lifting, talá, a balance, weight. All from ✓ TAL (for TAR), to lift; Fick, i. 601. See Tolerate. Der. talent-ed, endowed with talent, added by Todd to Johnson, with the remark that the word is old; he gives a quotation from Archbp. Abbot, in Rushworth's Collections, p. 449; which book first appeared between 1659 and 1701, and treats of matters from 1618–1648; see an excellent note on talented in Modern English, by F. Hall, p. 70.

TALISMAN, a spell. (Span., = Arab., = Gk.) 'In magic, talisman, and cabal;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 530. The F. is also talisman, but is a late word; both F. and E. words were prob. taken directly from Spanish. — Span. talisman, a magical character; also a doctor of the Mohammedan law, in which sense Littré notes its use in French also. — Arab. tilsam, or tilism, 'a talisman or magical image, upon which, under a certain horoscope, are engraved mystical characters, as charms against enchantment;' Rich. Dict. p. 974. [Diez thinks that the Span. talisman was derived rather from the Arab. pl. tilsamán than from the sing. form; which is probable enough.] — Gk. τέλεσμα, a payment; used in late Gk. to mean initiation or mystery (Devic); cf. τελεμός, an accomplishment or completion. — Gk. τελέειν, to accomplish, fulfil, complete, end; also, to pay. — Gk. τέλος, end, completion. — ✓ TAR, to pass over; cf. Skt. trí, to pass over, accomplish, fulfil, conquer. It is remarkable that, from the same root, we have Skt. tara, a passage, also a spell for banishing demons (Benfey); so also Gk. τέλος means initiation into a mystery, whence the sense of the derived sb. τέλεσμα. Der. talisman-ic.

TALK, to discourse. (Scand., = Lithuan.) M. E. talken, Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 15; and much earlier, in St. Marharete, p. 13, Ancrén Riwle, p. 422. — Swed. tolka, Dan. tolke, to interpret, explain; Icel. tálka, to interpret, plead one's case. It is quite clear that the vowel a in the E. word is due to confusion with M. E. talien, talen, to tell tales; indeed, Tyrwhitt actually prints talken in Chaucer, C. T. 774, where the Six-text, A. 772, has talen in all the MSS. It is, however, a curious fact, that talk is not a Teutonic word at all, as will appear. β. The Icel. tálka is from tálkr, sb., an interpreter, spelt tolk in Dan. and Swed., also in Dutch, and in M. H. G.; the word even passed into E., and we find M. E. tulk in the vague sense of 'man;' Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 3. The irregularity seen in the identity of form in Swed. and M. H. G. is due to the fact that the word is non-Teutonic. — Lithuan. tulkas, an interpreter; whence tulkanti, tulkoti, to interpret. And perhaps we may further connect this with Skt. tark, to suppose, utter one's supposition, reflect, speak, tarka, sb., reasoning. ¶ This remarkable word points to a time when some communications were carried on, through an interpreter, between the Scandinavians and Lithuanians. The communication was prob. of a religious nature, since the Lithuan. per tulkas kalbėti means 'to preach by means of an interpreter.' It is the only Lithuanian word in English. Der. talk-er; talk-at-ive, a strangely coined word, spelt talcatife in The Craft of Lovers, st. 4, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341. Hence talk-at-ive-ly, ness. [†]

TALL, high in stature, lofty. (E. or C.?) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. tal. 'Tal, or semely, Decens, elegans;' Prompt. Parv. 'So humble and tall;' Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, l. 38, where the sense appears to be 'obedient or docile, or obsequious.' In old plays it means 'valiant, fine, bold, great;' Halliwell. In the Plowman's Tale, st. 3, untall seems to mean 'poorly clad.' β. The curious sense of 'docile' is our guide to its etymology; this clearly links it to Goth. tals, only used in the comp. un-tals, indocile, disobedient, uninstructed, which is allied to gattils, convenient, suitable, gatlion, to obtain. Hence, just as small corresponds to A. S. smal, we have tall corresponding to an A. S. tal. This word is very rare, but it occurs in the comp. adj. leof-tal, friendly, Grein, ii. 176. Still more important are the forms un-tala, un-tale, bad, used to gloss mali in the Northumb. Gospels, Matt. xxvii. 23. Another allied word is the adj. til, fit, good, excellent, in common use (Grein, ii. 532); and cf. tela, teala, well, excellently, id. 524. The orig. sense may have been fit, docile, suitable; from whence it is no great step to the notion of 'comely,' which is the sense suitable to its use in plays. Lye gives also A. S. ungetal, bad, inconvenient, which presupposes the adj. tal or ge-tal, good, convenient; and Somner gives ungetelnes, unprofitableness, as if from tal, profitable. These traces of the word seem sufficient. See further under Till (1). γ. Perhaps, in the sense of 'lofty,' the word may be Celtic. We find tal, tall, high, both in W. and Cornish; Williams instances tal corn, the high rock, in St. Allen. It is remarkable that the Irish talla means 'meet, fit, proper, just.' Further light is desired as to this difficult word. Der. tall-ness.

TALLOW, fat of animals melted. (O. Low G.) M. E. talgh, Reliquie Antiq. i. 53; talwz, Eng. Gilds, p. 359, l. 11; talwgh, Rich. Coer de Lion, 1552. — O. Du. talgh, talch, tallow, Hexham; mod. Du. talk, Low G. talg; Dan. and Swed. talg. + Icel. tólgr, also tólgr, tólh. β. There is an A. S. telg, tealg, a stain, dye, but its connection with tallow is very doubtful; the sense is very different; see Grein, ii. 524. It is more to the purpose to observe that the G. word is also talg, tallow, suet; whence talgen, to tallow, besmear. This G. word must either have been borrowed from Low G. (since it begins with t instead of z); or an initial s has been lost; or the word is non-Teutonic. Origin uncertain. Perhaps we may further compare the Bavarian verdalken, to besmear; Schmeller, i. 505. Some imagine a Slavonic origin.

TALLY, a stick cut or notched so as to match another stick, used for keeping accounts; an exact match. (F., = L.) M. E. taille, Chaucer, C. T. 572; whence taillen, verb, to score on a tally, P. Plowman, B. v. 429. — F. taille, 'a notch, nick, incision, notching, nicking;' . . . also, a tally, or score kept on a piece of wood; Cot. — Lat. talea, a slip of wood; see Tailor. It is probable that the final -y in tall-y is due to the frequent use of the F. pp. taillé, 'cut, nicked, notched,' as applied to the piece of wood scored, in place of the sb. taille. The final -y in lew-y, jur-y, pun-y is likewise due to the F. pp. suffix. Der. tally, verb; tally-shop. And see en-tail, de-tail, tail-or.

TALMUD, the body of Hebrew laws, with comments. (Chaldee.) See Talmud in Index to Parker Society. Spelt talmud, thalmud in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; talmud in Minshew, ed. 1627; thalmud in Cotgrave. = Chaldee talmūd, instruction, doctrine; cf. Heb. talmid, a disciple, scholar, from lāmad, to learn, limmad, to teach.

TALON, the claw of a bird of prey. (F., = L.) Spelt talant in Palsgrave (with excrement t after n). He gives: 'Talant of a byrde, the hynder clawe, talón.' Thus the talón was particularly used of the hinder claw or heel. M. E. talón, Allit. Romance of Alexander, 5454; taloun, Mandeville's Travels, in Spec. of English, p. 174, l. 130. = F. talón, 'a heel'; Cot. = Low Lat. talōnem, acc. of talō, a heel. = Lat. talus, heel. Root uncertain. [†]

TAMARIND, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (F., = Span., = Arab. and Pers.) Spelt tamarinde in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. = F. tamarind, 'a small, soft, and dark-red Indian date'; Cot. Also tamarinde, 'the Indian date-tree'; id. = Span. tamarindo. (Cf. Ital. tamarindo; Florio gives the Ital. pl. tamarindi, and Minshew the Span. pl. tamarindos, without mention of the sing. form.) = Arab. tamr, a ripe date, a dry or preserved date; and Hind, India; whence tamr'ul Hind, a tamarind, lit. date of India; Rich. Dict. pp. 446, 1691. The Arab. tamr is allied to Heb. tāmār, a palm-tree, occurring in the Bible as Tamar, a proper name. The word Hind is borrowed from Persian (which turns s into h), and is derived from Skt. sindhu, the river Indus; see Indigo.

TAMARISK, the name of a tree. (L.) Spelt tamariske in Minshew, ed. 1627. Cf. F. tamaris, 'tamarisk,' in Cot.; but the E. word keeps the k. = Lat. tamariscus, also tamarix, tamarice, tamaricum, a tamarisk. (The Gk. name is μυρίκη.) + Skt. tamāla, tamā-lakā, tamāla, a tree with a dark bark; allied to tamas, darkness; from tam, to choke (be dark); Fick, i. 593. See Dim.

TAMBOUR, a small drum-like circular frame, for embroidering. (F., = Span., = Arab., = Pers.?) In Todd's Johnson. = F. tambour, a drum, a tambour; broder au tambour, to do tambour-work; Hamilton. See further under Tabour. Der. tambour-ine, spelt tamburin in Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, June, l. 60, from F. tambourin, a tabor (Hamilton), dimin. of F. tambour.

TAME, subdued, made gentle, domesticated. (E.) M. E. tame, Wyclif, Mark, v. 4. = A. S. tam, Matt. xxi. 5; whence tamian, vb., to tame, spelt temian in Ælfric's Colloquy (section on the Fowler), in Wright's Voc. i. 7. + Du. tam. + Icel. tamr. + Swed. and Dan. tam. + G. zahn. Cf. Goth. gataujan, to tame; a causal verb. β. All from Teut. type TAMA, tame; Fick, iii. 117. = ✓ DAM, to tame; as seen in Skt. dam, to be tame, also to tame, Gk. δαμείν, Lat. domare, to tame; Curtius, i. 287. Der. tame, vb., as above; tame-ly, -ness; tam-er, tam-able; also (from same root) downt, q. v., in-dom-it-able. And see teem (2).

TAMMY, the same as Stamin, q. v. See Tamine in Nares.

TAMPER, to meddle, practise upon, play with. (F., = L.) 'You have been tampering, any time these three days thus to disgrace me;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, iv. 2 (Jacomo). The same word as temper, but used in a bad sense; to temper is to moderate, allay by influence, but is here made to mean to interfere with, to influence in a bad way. See Temper. Doublet, temper.

TAMPION, a kind of plug. (F., = Du. or Low G.) 'Tampon for a gon [gun], tampon;' Palsgrave. = F. tampon, 'a bung or stopple'; Cot. A nasalised form of tapon, 'a bung or stopple'; id. Formed with suffix -on (Lat. -onem) from F. taper (or tapper), 'to bung, or stop with a bung,' id.; marked as a Picard word, and borrowed, accordingly, from Du. or Low German. = Du. tap, 'a bunge or a stopple'; Hexham; Low G. tappe, a tap, bung. See Tap (2).

TAN, oak-bark or other bark used for converting hides into leather. (F., = Bret.) The sb. is, etymologically, the orig. word, but is rarely seen in books; Levins has only tan as a verb. Rich. quotes 'skinnies in tan-tubs' from Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 104. The M. E. tannen, verb, to tan, occurs in Eng. Gilds, p. 358, l. 16, and the sb. tanner is common, as in P. Plowman, C. i. 223, 8c. = F. tan, 'the bark of a young oak, wherever with leather is tanned'; Cot. = Bret. tann, an oak, occasionally used (but rarely) with the sense of tan; Legonidec. The G. tanne, a fir-tree, is prob. the same word, and, if so, a Celtic word; the names of oak and fir seem to have been confused; see Max Müller, Lect. vol. ii, App. to Lect. v. Der. tan, verb, as above; tann-er; tann-er-y, from F. tannerie, 'tanning,' also a tan-house; Cot. Also tann-ic, a coined word; tann-in, F. tanin (Hamilton), a coined word; tan-ling, one scorched by the sun, Cymb. iv. 4. 29. Also taun-y, q. v.

TANDEM, applied to two horses harnessed one before the other instead of side by side. (L.) So called because harnessed at length, by a pun upon the word in university slang Latin. = Lat. tandem, at a length. = Lat. tam, so, so far; and suffix -dem, allied to -dam in qui-dam. From pronom. bases TA and DA.

TANG (1), a strong or offensive taste, esp. of something extraneous. (Du.) 'It is said of the best oil that it hath no tast, that is, no tang, but the natural gust of oil therein;' Fuller, Worthies, England (R.) M. E. tongge, 'scharpnesse of lycure in tasyngne;' Prompt. Parv. Suggested by O. Du. tanger, 'sharpe, or tart upon the tongue; tangere kase, tart or byting cheese;' Hexham. The lit. sense of tanger is 'pinching.' = Du. tang, a pair of tongs, pincers, nippers; cognate with E. tongs; see Tongs, and Tang (3). Cf. M. H. G. zanger, sharp, sharp-tasted.

TANG (2), to make a shrill sound. (E.) Shak. has it both as sb. and verb. 'A tongue with a tang,' i. e. with a shrill sound, Temp. ii. 2. 52. 'Let thy tongue tang,' i. e. ring out; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 163, iii. 4. 78. An imitative word, allied to ting, whence the frequentative tingle; also to tink, whence the frequent. tinkle. Cf. Prov. ting-tang, the saints-bell; tingle-tangle, a small bell, which occurs in Randolph's Amintas (1640); Halliwell. So also O. Du. tinge-tangen, to tinkle; Hexham. Cf. F. tantan (= tang-tang), 'the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow;' Cot. See Tingle, Tinker, Twang.

TANG (3), the part of a knife which goes into the haft, the tongue of a buckle, the prong of a fork. (Scand.) See Halliwell; who cites: 'A tange of a knyfe, piramus,' from a MS. Dict. abt. 1500. It also means a bee's sting. 'Pugio, a tange;' Wright's Voc. p. 221. 'Tongge of a bee, Aculeus; Tongge of a knyfe, Piramus;' Prompt. Parv. = Icel. tangi, a spit or projection of land; the pointed end by which the blade of a knife is driven into the handle, allied to töng (gen. tangar), a smith's tongs; tengja, to fasten. So called because it is the part nipped and held fast by the handle; so the tongue of a buckle (corrupted from tang of a buckle) nips and holds fast the strap; the bee's sting nips or stings. The form tong in the Prompt Parv. answers to the sing. of E. tongs. See Tongs.

TANG (4), sea-weed; see Tangle.

TANGENT, a line which meets a circle, and, being produced, does not cut it. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Lat. tangent, touching, stem of pres. part. of tangere (base tag-), to touch; pp. tactus. + Gk. base ray-, to touch, seen in rerayón, having taken. + Goth. tekan, to touch. + Icel. taka, to take; see Take. Der. tangent-i-al, in the direction of the tangent, Tatler, no. 43; tangency; also (from pp. tactus) tact. And see tang-ible, tack, take, taste.

TANGIBLE, perceptible by the touch, that can be realised. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. tangible, 'tangible'; Cot. = Lat. tangibilis, touchable; formed with suffix -bilis from tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tangibl-y, tangibili-ty.

TANGLE, to interweave, knot together confusedly, ensnare. (Scand.) 'I tangell thynges so togyther that they can nat well be parted asonder, fembrouille;' Palsgrave. Levins has the comp. entangle. To tangle is 'to keep twisting together like sea-weed,' a frequentative verb from tang, sb., sea-weed, a Northern word. = Dan. tang, Swed. tång, Icel. þang, kelp or bladder-wrack, a kind of sea-weed; whence the idea of confused heap. We also find the dimin. Icel. þöngull, sea-weed. Cf. Norman dialect tangon (a Norse word), explained by Métiévier as Fucus flagelliformis. (The G. tang, sea-weed, was borrowed from Scand.; for it begins with t, not d.) The orig. form was THANGA, Fick, iii. 120; allied to Thong, q. v. β. We also find tangle in the sense of sea-weed (Halliwell); and the verb to tangle may have been made directly from it. It makes no great difference; cf. Icel. þöngull, as above. Der. tangle, sb., which seems to be a later word than the verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 632; en-tangle, q. v.

TANIST, a presumptive heir to a prince. (Irish.) Spelt tanistik in Spenser, View of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611. = Irish tanaiste, the second person in rank, the presumptive or apparent heir to a prince, a lord. Also spelt tanaise. = Irish tanaise, tanaiste, second. See Rhys, Celt. Britain, p. 304. Der. tanist-ry, a coined word, to signify the custom of electing a tanist; also in Spenser, as above.

TANK, a large cistern. (Port., = L.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 66; and at p. 43 in another edition (Todd). Also in Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 2. The same word as Stank, q. v. The form tank is Portuguese, which is the only Romance language that drops the initial s. = Port. tanque, a tank, pond; the same word as Span. estanque, O. F. estanc, F. étang, Prov. estanc, stanc, Ital. stagno. = Lat. stagnum, a pool; see Stank, Stagnant. [†]

TANKARD, a large vessel for holding drink. (F., = L., = Gk.?) M. E. tankard, used to translate Lat. amphora, Wright's Voc. i. 178, l. 18; and in Prompt. Parv. = O. F. tanguard, 'a tankard, in Rabelais;' Cot. Cf. O. Du. tankaert, 'a wooden [wooden] tankard,' Hexham; a word prob. borrowed from the O. F. β. The suffix -ard is common in O. F., shewing that the word was really, at some time, French; the Irish tancard must have been borrowed from E., and does not help us. γ. Origin unknown; the best suggestion is that in Mahn, that it may have been coined, by metathesis, out of Lat. cantarus, a tankard, large pot; which is from Gk. κάνθαρος, the same. ¶ The suggestion in E. Müller, that it is connected with tank, is completely disproved by chronology; the word tankard is older than tank, in English at least, by two centuries and more; besides which, tank is a corrupt form of stank, as shewn.

TANSY, a tall plant, with small yellow flowers. (F., — Low Lat., — Gk.) M. E. tansaye; 'Hoc tansetum, tansaye,' Wright's Voc. i. 226, col. 2. 'Tansy, an herbe, tansie,' Palsgrave. — O. F. tanisie, as in Palsgrave, later tanaisie, 'the herb tansie'; Cot. Other forms are Ital. and Span. tanacet; O. F. athanasie, Cot.; O. Ital. atanasia, 'the herb tansie,' Florio; Port. atanasia, athanasia; also Late Lat. tanacetum.

β. Of these, the late Lat. tanacetum (spelt tansetum above) is nothing but the Ital. form Latinised, and it means properly 'a bed of tansy,' as remarked in Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. The O. F. athanasie, O. Ital. atanasia, and Port. atanasia, athanasia, answer to a Lat. form *athanasia, which is only the Gk. ἀθανασία, immortality, in Latin spelling. Prior says that athanasia was 'the name under which it was sold in the shops in Lyte's time.' The plant is bitter and aromatic, and was (and is) used in medicine, whence, probably, the name. Prior thinks there is a reference to 'Lucian's Dialogues of the Gods, no. iv, where Jupiter, speaking of Ganymede, says to Mercury, ἀναγε αὐτὸν, ὡς ἔρμῃ, καὶ πύρρα τῆς ἀθανασίας ἀγε οὐνοχόουσα τῇ μῦν, take him away, and when he has drunk of immortality, bring him back as cupbearer to us: the ἀθανασία here has been misunderstood, like ἀμβροσία in other passages, for some special plant.' Cf. O. Ital. atanato, 'the rose campion,' Florio; lit. 'the immortal.' γ. The Gk. ἀθανασία is allied to ἀθάνατος, immortal; from ἀ, negative prefix, and θανεῖν, 2 aor. of θνήσκειν, to die.

TANTALISE, to tease or torment, by offering something that is just out of reach and is kept so. (Gk.) 'What greater plague can hell itself devise, Than to be willing thus to tantalize?' Answer to Ben Jonson's Ode (Come leave the loathed Stage), by T. Randolph, st. 2; printed in Jonson's Works, after the play of The New Inn. Formed with the suffix -ise (F. -iser, Lat. -izare, Gk. -ιζειν) from the proper name Tantalus, Gk. Τάνταλος, in allusion to his story. The fable was that he was placed up to his chin in water, which fled from his lips whenever he desired to drink. This myth relates to the sun, which evaporates water, but remains, as it were, unsated. The name Τάνταλος may be explained as 'enduring,' from the ✓ TAL, to endure; see Tolerate, Talent. Der. tantalism (with F. suffix -isme = Lat. -isma = Gk. -ισμα), Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, act ii, l. 10 from end.

TANTAMOUNT, amounting to as much, equal. (F., — L.) Rich. points out, by 2 quotations from Bp. Taylor, Episcopacy Asserted, §§ 9 and 31, that it was first used as a verb; which agrees with the fact that amount was properly at first a verb. It meant 'to amount to as much.' — F. tant, so much, as much; and E. Amount, q. v. β. The F. tant = Lat. tantum, neut. of tantus, so great; formed from pronominal base TA, he, the, so as to answer to quantus, from the base KA, who. See The. [†]

TAP (1), to strike or knock gently. (F., — Teut.) M. E. tappen, to tap; the imperative appears as tap (for tap). Ancren Riwele, p. 206, l. 4; cf. tappe, sb., a tap, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2357. — F. taper, tapper, 'to tap, strike, hit, bob, clap'; Cot. Of Teut. origin; Low G. and G. tappen, to grope, to fumble, tappe, the fist or paw, a blow, a kick. So also Icel. tapsta, to tap. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Russ. topate, to stamp with the foot; Malay tabak, to beat out corn, tapuk, to slap, pat, dab (Marsden's Dict. pp. 69, 77); Arab. tabl, a drum; E. dub-a-dub, noise of a drum, E. dab, a pat. Der. tap, sb. And see tip (2).

TAP (2), a short pipe through which liquor is drawn from a cask, a plug to stop a hole in a cask. (E.) M. E. tappe, Chaucer, C. T. 3890. Somner gives A. S. tappe, a tap, and tappan, to tap; but they are not found; we do, however, find the sb. tappere, one who taps casks; 'Caupo, tabernarius, tappere,' Wright's Gloss., p. 28, l. 10. + Du. tap, sb.; whence tappen, verb. + Icel. tappi, sb.; tappa, vb. + Dan. tap, sb.; tappe, vb. + Swed. tapp, a tap, handful, wisp; whence tappa, vb. + G. zapfen, sb. and vb.; O. H. G. zapfo, sb. (Fick).

β. All from Teut. base TAPAN, a tap; Fick, iii. 117. The Swed. tapp means a wisp, handful, and G. zapfen is bung, stopple. Prob. the orig. idea (as Wedgwood suggests) was a bunch of some material to stop a hole with, a tuft of something. We may connect it, as Fick does, with E. top, G. zapf; the G. zapf means a top of a tree, a weft or tuft of hair, a 'pig-tail'; and the Icel. toppr means, first of all, a tuft or lock of hair. We even find Gael. tap, tow wreathed on a distaff, a forelock. Certainly tap, tuft are related words; see Top, Tuft. Der. tap, vb., Merry Wives, i. 3. 11; tap-room; tap-root, a root like a tap, i. e. conical, cf. G. zapfen, a tap, cone of a fir, zapfenwurzel, a tap-root. Also tapster, M. E. tapstere, Chaucer, C. T. 241, A. S. tæppestre, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 36, l. 13, a fem. form of A. S. tæppere, a tapper, as above; for the suffix -ster, see Spinster. Also tampion, q. v.

TAPE, a narrow band or fillet of woven work, used for strings, &c. (L., — Gk.) M. E. tape, Chaucer, C. T. 3241; also tappe. 'Hec tenece, tappe,' in a list of ornaments, Wright, Voc. i. 196, col. 2. — A. S. tappe, a tape, fillet. 'Tenia, tappan vel dol-smeltas,' where tappan is a pl. form; Wright, Voc. i. 16, l. 4 from end. The orig. sense must have been 'a covering' or 'a strip of stuff'; it is closely allied to A. S. tæppet, a tippet, and the use of the pl. tappan is suggestive of strips of stuff or cloth. Not an E. word, but borrowed from L. tapete, cloth, hangings, tapestry, a word borrowed from Greek. See Tapestry, Tippet. In like manner we find O. H. G. tepih, teppi (mod. G. teppich) tapestry, with the same sense as O. H. G. tepit, from the same Lat. word. Der. tapet-worm.

TAPER (1), a small wax-candle. (C. f.) M. E. taper, Rob. of Glouc., p. 456, l. 5. — A. S. tapor, taper, a taper; Wright, Voc. i. 81, col. 1; 284, col. 1. Perhaps not E., but Celtic; cf. Irish tapar, a taper; W. tampr, a taper, torch. In the latter case, we may compare it with Skt. tapas, fire, tap, to shine, to glow; and the orig. sense may have been 'glowing torch.' See Tepid.

TAPER (2), long and slender. (C. ?) 'Her taper fingers,' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. i. l. 676. Here the fingers are likened to tapers or small wax-candles; and the word is nothing but a substitution for taper-like. This appears more clearly from the use of taper-wise, i. e. in the form of a taper, in Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16: 'the French box [box-tree] . . . groweth taper-wise, sharp pointed in the top, and runneth vp to more than ordinarie height.' As wax tapers were sometimes made smaller towards the top, the word taper meant growing smaller towards the top, not truly cylindrical; whence the adj. tapering with the sense of taper-like, and finally the verb to taper. We find A. S. taper-ax, a tapering axe, A. S. Chron. an. 1031; also 'tapering top' in Pitt, tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. v. l. 489 of Lat. text. Der. taper-ing, taper, vb. [†]

TAPESTRY, a kind of carpet-work, with wrought figures, esp. used for decorating walls. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'A faire and pleasant lodgeyng, hangd with riche arasse or tapestry;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 2 (fol. 144). Tapestry is a corruption of tapisserie; Palsgrave gives: 'Tapisserie worke, tapisserie.' — F. tapisserie, tapisry; Cot. — F. tapisser, 'to furnish with tapisry'; id. — F. tapis, 'tapisry hangings'; id. (Cf. Span. tapiz, tapestry, tapete, small floor-carpet; Ital. tappeto, a carpet, tappezzare, to hang with tapestry; tappezzaria, tapestry.) — Low Lat. tapeticus, tapestry, A. D. 1010. — Lat. tapete, cloth, hangings. — Gk. ταπηρ, stem of τάπηρ, a carpet, woollen rug. Cf. Pers. tabastak, a fringed carpet or cushion, Rich. Dict., p. 362. See also Tape, Tippet, Tabard. Der. We say 'on the tapis;' from F. tapis, carpet.

TAPIOCA, the glutinous and granular substance obtained from the roots of the Cassava plant of Brazil. (Brazilian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'The fecula or flour [of the cassava] . . . is termed mou-chaeo in Brazil. . . . When it is prepared by drying on hot plates, it becomes granular, and is called tapioca;' Eng. Cyclopaedia, art. Tapioca. — Brazilian tipioka, 'the Tupi-Guarani [Brazilian] name of the poisonous juice which issues from the root of the manioc [cassava] when pressed;' Littré. He refers to Burton, ii. 39, who follows The Voyage to Brazil of the Prince de Wied-Neuwied, i. 116.

TAPIR, an animal with a short proboscis, found in S. America. (Brazilian.) Called the tapir or anta in a tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 250; where the animal is said to be a native of Brazil, Paraguay, and Guiana. — Brazilian tapyra, a tapir (Mahn, in Webster's Dictionary).

TAR, a resinous substance of a dark colour, obtained from pine-trees. (E.) M. E. terre, Prompt. Parv.; spelt tarre, P. Plowman, C. x. 262. — A. S. teoru, tar; the dat. teorwe occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 132, l. 5; also spelt teru in a gloss (Bosworth); also tyrwa, Gen. vi. 14; Exod. ii. 3. + Du. teer. + Icel. tjara. + Dan. tiære. + Swed. tjåra. And cf. G. theer, prob. borrowed from Low G. tår or Du. teer. We find also Irish tearr, prob. borrowed from E., as the word is certainly Teutonic.

β. We also find Icel. tyri, tyrfi, a resinous fir-tree; whence tyrutré, tyruðr, tyrvitré, all with the sense of 'tar-wood.' Proved to be Teutonic by the cognate Lithuan. darwa, derwa, resinous wood, particularly the resinous parts of the fir-tree that easily burn (Nesselmann); and this is allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, derevo, a tree, wood, timber, W. derw, an oak-tree, and E. Tree, q. v. See Fick, iii. 118; Curtius, i. 295.

γ. Thus the orig. sense was simply 'tree' or 'wood,' esp. resinous wood, as most in request for firing; hence the resin or tar itself. 2. Tar is also a sailor, as being supposed to be daubed with tar, though the word is really short for tarpaulin, used in the sense of sailor; see Tarpauling. Der. tarr-y; also tar-pauling, q. v. [†]

TARAXACUM, the dandelion. (Arab.) 'Taraxacum or Tarax-

acon, the herb dandelion or sow-thistle; Phillips, ed. 1706. The common dandelion is Leontodon taraxacum. The etymology of this strange word is given by Devic, Supp. to Littré. He shews that it is not Greek, but Arabic or Persian. We find Pers. tarkhashqūn, wild endive; Rich. Dict. p. 967; but Devic says he can only find, in Razi, the statement that 'the tarashaqūq is like succory, but more efficacious,' where he thinks we evidently ought to read tarashaqūn, and to explain it by dandelion or wild succory. In Gerard of Cremona he finds Arab. tarasacūn, explained as a kind of succory; and a chapter on taraxacūn in a Latin edition of Avicenna, Basle, 1563, p. 312.

TARDY, slow, sluggish, late. (F., -L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 51. = F. tardif, 'tardy,' Cot. Cf. Ital. tardivo, tardy. These forms correspond to Low Lat. *tardius, formed with suffix -ius from Lat. tardus, slow.

β. Tardus is allied to terere, to rub, to wear away, waste, as in the common phrase terere tempus, to waste time; hence tardus, wasteful of time. = ✓TAR, to rub; see TRITE. Der. tardi-ly, -ness; (from Lat. tardus) re-tard.

TARE (1), a plant like the vetch. (E.) M. E. tare, Chaucer, C. T. 3998; pl. taris, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 25. Palsgrave has: 'taare, a come like a pease, lupins;' also: 'tarefyche [= tare-vetch], a come, lupins.' Halliwell gives prov. E. tare, eager, brisk (Hereford); which we may compare with prov. E. tear, to go fast, which is only a peculiar use of the verb tear, to rend. The word is peculiarly E., and may mean 'quick-growing' or 'destructive' plant; in any case, it may safely be referred to A. S. teran, to tear. Cf. also tearing, great, rough, noisy, blustering (Halliwell). See TEAR (1) and TARRY.

TARE (2), an allowance made for the weight of the package in which goods are contained, or for other detriment. (F., -Span., -Arab.) A mercantile term; explained in Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tare, 'losse, diminution, . . . waste in merchandise by the exchange or use thereof;' Cot. = Span. tara, tare, allowance in weight. (Cf. Ital. and Port. tara, the same.) = Arab. tarha (given by Devic); from tarh, throwing, casting, flinging. Richardson, Pers. Dict. p. 967, gives Arab. tirh, turrah, thrown away, from tarh. The orig. sense is 'that which is thrown away,' hence loss, detriment. From the Arab. root taraha, he threw prostrate; Rich., as above. [†]

TARGET, a small shield, buckler, a mark to fire at. (E.; with F. suffix.) The mark to fire at is named from its resemblance to a round shield. It is remarkable that the g is hard; indeed, the pl. is spelt targattes in Ascham, Toxophilus, bk. i. ed. Arber, p. 69, l. 28; and we find tergat in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 18, § 2. This may be accounted for by considering the word as mainly of E. origin; though we also had targe as a F. word as early as in Rob. of Glouc., p. 361; and see Chaucer, C. T. 473. The dimin. suffix -et is the usual F. dimin. so common in E. = A. S. targe, a target, shield, pl. targan, in a will dated 970; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 516. + Icel. targa (perhaps a foreign word), a target, small round shield. + O. H. G. zarga, a frame, side of a vessel, wall; G. zarge, a frame, case, side, border.

β. We find also F. targe, 'a kind of target or shield,' Cot.; Port. targa, an escutcheon on a target, a border; Span. targa, a shield; Ital. targa, a buckler; words which Diez explains to be of Teut. origin.

γ. Again, the G. tartsche and O. Du. tartsche (Hexham), are borrowed back from F. targe. And we even find Irish and Gael. targaid, a target, shield, which must have been taken from M. E. targat; cf. Rhys, Lect. ii. δ. Fick gives the Teut. type as TARGA, enclosure, border, hence rim, shield; iii. 119. He compares the Lithuan. daržas, a garden, enclosure, border or halo round the moon; and supposes the Teut. base to be TARG, to hold fast, corresponding to Skt. darh, to hold fast; i. 619.

¶ Among the words of Teut. origin Diez includes the Port. and Span. adarga; the Port. adarga is a short square target, and the Span. adarga is explained by Minshew to be 'a short and light target or buckler, which the Africans and Spaniards doe vse.' But this word is plainly Moorish, the a being for al, the Arab. article, and the etymology is from Arab. darakat, darakat, 'a shield or buckler of solid leather;' Rich. Dict., p. 664. It is remarkable that Cotgrave explains F. targe as 'a kind of target or shield, almost square, and much in use along the Spanish coast, lying over against Africk, from whence it seems the fashion of it came.' He is, of course, thinking only of the Moorish square shield; but the O. F. targe occurs as early as the 11th cent., and the A. S. targe can hardly be of Moorish origin. Still, the resemblance is remarkable.

TARGUM, a Chaldee paraphrase of the Old Testament. (Chaldee.) See Targums in Index to Parker Society. In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The Thargum or paraphrase of Jonathan;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 1. § 4. = Chaldee targūm, an interpretation; from targēm, to interpret (Webster). Cf. Arab. tarjuman, an interpreter; for which see DRAGOMAN.

TARIFF, a list or table of duties upon merchandise. (F., -Span., -Arab.) = Tariff, a table made to shew . . . any multiple or product . . . a proportional table . . . a book of rates agreed upon for duties, &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tariffe, 'arithmetick, or the casting of accompts;' Cot. = Span. tarifa, a list of prices, book of rates. = Arab. tarīf, giving information, notification (because a tariff does this); Rich. Dict. p. 416. = Arab. arf, knowing, knowledge; from Arab. root arafa, he knew; Rich. Dict. p. 1003. See further in Devic, Supp. to Littré.

TARN, a small lake, a pool. (Scand.) In Levins. M. E. terne, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1041. = Icel. tjörn (gen. tjarnar), a tarn, pool; Swed. dial. tjörn, tjörn, a tarn, pool without inlet or outlet (Rietz); Norweg. tjörn, tjörn, tjörn, tjörn, tjörn, a tarn (Aasen). β. Perhaps allied to M. H. G. trinnen (pt. t. trann), to separate oneself; cf. G. trennen, to sever, disjoin. It may thus have meant a pool lying asunder from any other water.

TARNISH, to soil, diminish the lustre of, to dim. (F., -O. H. G.) Also to grow dim, as in Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 249; this appears to be the orig. sense in E. = F. terniss, stem of pres. part. of se ternir, 'to wax pale, wan, discoloured, to lose its former luster;' Cot. Cf. terni, pp. 'wan, discoloured, whose luster is lost;' id. = M. H. G. ternen, O. H. G. tarnan, tarnjan, to obscure, darken; cf. tarnhut, tarnkappe, a hat or cap which rendered the wearer invisible. + A. S. dernan, dyrnan, to hide, Gen. xlv. 1; causal verb from derne, dyrne, hidden, secret, Grein, i. 214; and this adj. is cognate with O. Sax. derni, O. Fries. deru, hidden, secret. Cf. Gk. θάλαμος, a secret chamber, lurking-place, den, hole, darkest part of a ship. = ✓DHAR, to hold, secure; cf. Skt. dharī, to maintain, support.

TARPAULING, TARPAULIN, a cover of coarse canvas, tarred to keep out wet. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. It was once oddly used to denote also a sailor, whence our modern tar, in the same sense, rather than from an extension of tar to mean a man daubed with tar; though it makes little ultimate difference. 'Tarpauling, or Tarpaulin, a piece of canvass tar'd all over, to lay upon the deck of a ship, to keep the rain from soaking through; also a general name for a common seaman, because usually clothed in such canvass;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips, ed. 1706. And see Trench, Select Gloss., who gives two quotations for tarpaulin = sailor, viz. from Smollett, Rod. Random, vol. i. c. 3, and Turkish Spy, letter 2. Compounded of tar and palling.

β. A palling is a covering, from pall, verb, to cover, which from pall, sb., Lat. palla; see PALL. 'Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell;' Macb. i. 5. 52. 'Pauling, a covering for a cart or waggon, Lincolnshire;' Halliwell.

TARRAGON, the name of a plant. (Span., -Pers., -Gk.) 'Tarragon, a certaine hearbe, good to be eaten in sallads with lettuce;' Baret (1580); Taragon in Levins. = Span. taragontia; Minshew also gives the form taragoncia, which he explains by 'an herbe called dragons.' [Hence also F. targan, 'the herb tarragon;' Cot.] = Pers. tarkhūn, dragon-wort; Rich. Dict. p. 389. = Gk. δράκων, a dragon; see DRAGON. Thus the strange form tarragon is nothing but dragon in a form changed by passing through an Oriental language, and decked in Spanish with a Low Latin suffix (viz. -tia). The botanical name is Artemisia dracunculus, where dracunculus is a double dimin. from Lat. acc. draconem.

TARRY, to linger, loiter, delay. (E.; confused with F., -L.) The present form is due to confusion of M. E. tarien, to irritate, with M. E. targen, to delay. The sense goes with the latter form. 1. M. E. targen, to delay, tarry. 'That time thought the king to targe no longer;' Alexander, fragment A, l. 211, pr. with Will. of Palerne. = O. F. targer, to tarry, delay; allied to tarder, with the same sense; Cot. = Low Lat. *tardicare, an extension of Lat. tardare (= F. tarder), to delay. = Lat. tardus, slow; see TARDY. 2. M. E. tarien, terien, to irritate, vex, provoke, tire. 'I wol nat tarien you, for it is prime;' Chaucer, C. T. 10387, where it might almost be explained by 'delay.' In the Prompt. Parv. we have: 'terryn, or longe abydyn, Moror, pigritor;' but also 'terryn, or ertyn, Irrito.' = A. S. tergan, to vex; a rare word. 'Tredað þec and tergað and heora torn wrecað' = they will tread on thee and vex thee and wreak their anger; Gúthlác, l. 259. Closely allied to tirian, to tire; see TIRE.

TEAR (1). ¶ We also find O. F. tarier, to vex (Burguy); this is the same word, borrowed from O. Du. tergen, 'to vex' (Hexham), which is cognate with A. S. tergan. So also G. zergen, Dan. targe, to irritate; all from ✓DAR, to tear.

TART (1), acrid, sour, sharp, severe. (E.) 'Very tarte vinegar;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22. § 15. Spelt tarte also in Palsgrave. 'Poudre-marchant tart' = a sharp (tart) kind of flavouring powder; Chaucer, C. T. 381 (or 383). [Not a tart, as in Stratmann.] = A. S. teart, tart, sharp, severe; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 344, l. 4 from bottom; ii. 590, l. 4 from bottom. Lit. 'tearing,' just as bitter is from the notion of biting. = A. S. tar, pt. t. of teran, to tear; see TEAR (1). Der. tart-ly, -ness.

TART (2), a small pie. (F., -L.) M. E. tarte; pl. tartes, Rom. S s of Rose, 7043. — O. F. tarte, 'a tart'; Cot. So called from the paste being twisted together; it is the same word as F. tourte, a tart, which must once have been spelt torte, as shewn by the dimin. forms tortel, a cake (Roquefort), torteau, a pancake (Cotgrave). So also Ital. tartera, 'a tarte', florio, a pie, tart, Span. torta, a round cake; Du. taart, Dan. tarie, G. torie, not Teutonic words. — Lat. torta, fem. of tortus, twisted, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture, Torsion. Der. tart-let, from F. tartellette, 'a little tart'; Cot.

TARTAN, a woollen stuff, chequered, much worn in the Highlands of Scotland. (F., — Span., — L.?) In Jamieson; borrowed, like many Scottish words, from French. — F. tiretaine, 'linsie-wolsie, or a kind thereof, worn ordinarily by the French peasants'; Cot. — Span. tiritana, a thin woollen cloth, sort of thin silk; so named from its flimsiness. — Span. tiritar, to shiver, shake with cold. So also Port. tiritana, a very light silk; from tiritar, to shake. Prob. from a lost Latin verb, allied to Gk. raprapizein, to shake with cold; see Tartar (3).

TARTAR (1), an acid salt which forms on the sides of casks containing wine; a concretion which forms on the teeth. (F., — Low Lat., — Arab.) This is one of the terms due to the alchemists. Called sal tartre in Chaucer, C. T. 16278; and simply tartre, id. 16281. — F. tartre, 'tartar, or argall, the lees or dregs that stick to the sides of wine-vessels, hard and dry like a crust'; Cot. — Low Lat. tartarum (whence the mod. E. spelling tartar). — Arab. durd, 'dregs, sediment, the tartar of wine, the mother of oil'; Rich. Dict. p. 662; where it is marked as a Pers. word, though, according to Devic, of Arab. origin. Rich. also gives Pers. durdi, Arab. durdiy, 'sediment, dregs'; p. 663. Also Arab. dard, a shedding of the teeth, dard, a toothless woman; which Devic explains with reference to the tartar on teeth. Der. tartar-ic, tartar-ous.

TARTAR (2), a native of Tartary. (Tatar). Chiefly used in the phr. 'to catch a Tartar,' to be caught in one's own trap. 'The phrase is prob. owing to some particular story'; Todd's Johnson, with the following quotation. 'In this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners:—so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves.' Life of the Duke of Tyrconnel, 1689. 'Tartar, a native of Tartary, . . . the people of which are of a savage disposition: whence the proverbial expression to catch a Tartar, i.e. to meet with one's match, to be disappointed, balked, or cowed.' Phillips, ed. 1706. Shak. has 'the Tartar's bow', Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 101. Sir J. Mandeville professed to have travelled in Tartarye; see prol. to his Travels. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present, where he explains that the true spelling is Tatar, but the spelling Tartar was adopted from a false etymology, because their multitudes were supposed to have proceeded out of Tartarus or hell. — Pers. Tâtâr, 'a Tartar, or Scythian'; Rich. Dict. p. 351; a word of Tartar origin.

TARTAR (3), Tartarus, hell. (L., — Gk.) 'To the gates of Tartar'; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 225. — Lat. Tartarus. — Gk. Tátrapos, Tartarus, the infernal regions; apparently conceived to be a place of extreme cold. Cf. Gk. raprapizein, to shiver with cold. Der. tartar-e-ous, 'the black tartareous cold'; Milton, P. L. vii. 238; tartar-e-an, id. ii. 69.

TASK, a set amount of work imposed upon any one, work. (F., — L.) Lit. a tax. M. E. task, taske, Cursor Mundi, 5872. — O. F. tasque (Burguy), also tasche, 'a task'; Cot. Mod. F. tâche. — Low Lat. tasca, a tax; the same word as Low Lat. tasa, a tax. (For a similar metathesis cf. E. ask with prov. E. ax.) — Lat. taxare, to rate, value; see Tax. Der. task, vb., task-er, sb.; 'to task the tasker'; L. L. L. ii. 20, task-master, Milton, Sonnet ii. 14. Doublet, tax.

TASSEL (1), a hanging ornament consisting of a bunch of silk or other material. (F., — L.) M. E. tassel, a fastening of a mantle, consisting of a cord ending in a tassel, Cursor Mundi, 4389. Cf. 'a Mantle of Estate, . . . with strings dependant, and tasselled'; Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 271; a wood-cut on p. 272 shews the tassel, ornamented with strings and dots, that divide it into squares like the ace on a die. — O. F. tassel, a fastening, clasp; mod. F. tasseau, only in the sense of bracket. We also find Low Lat. tassellus, used in the Prompt. Parv. as equivalent to E. tassel. The O. F. tassel also meant a piece of square stuff, used by ladies as an ornament; see Burguy and Roquefort. Cf. Ital. tassello, a collar of a cloak, a square. — Lat. taxillum, acc. of taxillus, a small die; dimin. of tâlus, a knuckle-bone, also a die orig. made of the knuckle-bone of an animal. We may conclude that the tassel was a sort of button made of a piece of squared bone, and afterwards of other materials.

β. The curious form taxillus shews that tâlus is a contraction for *taxilus, from ✓TAK, also extended to TAKS, to prepare, to fit; cf. Gk. rék-tav, a carpenter, Skt. taksh, to hew, prepare, make. Cf. Curtius, i. 271. Hence tâlus is a thing fitted, a joint, a squared die. Der. tassell-ed, M. E. tasselled, Chaucer, C. T. 3251. [†]

TASSEL (2), the male of the goshawk. In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 160. The same as Tercel, q. v.

TASTE, to handle, to try, to try or perceive by the touch of the tongue or palate, to eat a little of, to experience. (F., — L.) The sense of feel or handle is obsolete, but the M. E. tasten meant both to feel and to taste. 'I rede thee let thin hond upon it falle, And taste it wel, and ston thou shalt it finde'; Chaucer, C. T. 15970. 'Every thyng Himself schewith in tastynge'; King Alisaunder, 4042. — F. taster, to taste or take an assay of; also, to handle, feeble, touch; Cot. Mod. F. tâter; Ital. tastare, 'to taste, to assaie, to feeble, to grope, to try, to prove, to touch'; Florio. We find also Low Lat. taxia, a tent or probe for wounds; whence Ital. tasta, 'a tent that is put into a sore or wound, also a taste, a proove, a tryall, a feeling, a touch'; Florio. β. The Low Lat. taxia is short for *taxita, and points clearly, as Diez says, to a Low Lat. verb *taxitare, not found, but a mere iterative of Lat. taxare, to feel, to handle (Gellius). This taxare (= *tactare) is an intensive form of tangere (pp. tactus), to touch; see Tact, Tangent. Hence the orig. sense of taste was to keep on touching, to feel carefully. Der. taste, sb., M. E. taste, Gower, C. A. iii. 32, l. 21; tast-er, tast-able, taste-ful, taste-ful-ly; taste-ful-ness, taste-less, less-ly, less-ness; tast-y, tast-i-ly.

TATTER, a shred, loose hanging rag. (Scand.) 'Tear a passion to tatters'; Hamlet, iii. 2. 11; spelt totters in quarto edd. So also totters in Ford, Sun's Darling, i. 1, and Song; and see tattered in Nares. It is remarkable that the derived word tattered occurs earlier, spelt tatered, P. Plowman's Crede, 753, where it means 'jagged'; tatird, ragged, Pricke of Conscience, 1537. — Icel. tötrur, pl. tötrar, better spelt tötturr, pl. tötttrar; the pl. signifies tatters, rags; Norweg. totra, pl. totror, tottrur, also taltra, tultre, pl. taltrur, tultur, tatters, rags. + Low G. taltern, tatters, rags; to taltern riten, to tear to tatters; taltrig, tattered. β. It will be seen that an l has been lost; and this is why the Icel. word should be spelt with double t, for tötturr = tölturr, by assimilation. Hence tatter stands for *taller; the assimilation of l to t being due to Scand. influence. I suppose tatter to be closely allied to totter = to wag, vacillate, shake about; and that tatter meant orig. a shaking rag, a fluttering strip. At any rate, totter is in the like case as regards letter-change, since it stands for tolter. See Totter. Der. tatter-ed, as above.

TATTLE, to talk idly, prattle. (E.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 11. 'Every tattling fable'; Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 724. M. E. toelen, variant of tateren, to tattle, Prompt. Parv.; pp. 498, 487. We may consider it E.; it is closely allied to tittle, to tell tales, talk idly, which is equivalent to M. E. titeren, whence titerere (also titelere), a tatter, teller of tales, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. The verbs tatt-le, titt-le, and M. E. tat-eren, tit-eren, are all frequentatives, from a base TAT, expressive of the sound of talking or repeating the syllables ta ta ta (Wedgwood). Allied words are Du. tateren, to stammer, O. Du. tateren, 'to speake with a shrill noise, or to sound tarantantara with a trumpet'; Hexham; Low G. tateln, to gabble as a goose, to tattle; titetateln, to tittle-tattle, täteler, a tattler; taat-goos, a gabbling goose, chatterer; täterletät, an interjection, the noise of a child's trumpet; and even Ital. tattamella, chat, prattle, tattamelare, to prattle, which clearly shew the imitative origin of the word. Allied to Titter, q. v. Der. tattle, sb.; tittle-tattle, sb. and vb., see Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248; tiddle-laddle (Fluellen's pronunciation), Hen. V, iv. 1. 71. And see twadd-le (formerly twattle).

TATTOO (1), the beat of drum recalling soldiers to their quarters. (Du. or Low G.) 'Tattoo, Taptoo (also Taptow)', the beat of drum at night for all soldiers to repair to their tents in a field, or to their quarters; also called The Retreat; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To beat the taptow, de Aftogt slaan'; Sewel, Eng.-Du. Dict., 1754. 'The taptow is used in garrisons and quarters by the beat of the drum'; Silas Taylor, On Gavelkind, ed. 1663, p. 74. The word, though omitted by Sewel, must be Du. or Low G. — Du. taptos, tattoo (Tauchnitz Du. Dict.) — Du. tap, a tap; and toe, put to, shut, closed. The sense is 'the tap is closed'; cf. Du. Is de deur toe = is the door closed? doe het boek toe = shut the book; haal't venster toe = shut the window (Sewel). The tattoo was thus the signal for closing the taps of the public-houses.

β. This looks, at first, more like a bad jest than a sound etymology; but it is confirmed by the remarkable words for tattoo in other languages, viz. G. zapfenstreich, the tattoo (lit. tap-stroke), where zapfen is a tap of a cask; and Low G. tappenslag, the tattoo (lit. a tap-shutting). Cf. Low G. tappen to slaan = to close a tap, an expression used proverbially in the phrase Wi wilt den Tappen to slaan = we will shut the tap, put the tap to, i.e. we will talk no more of this matter. This last expression clearly shews that 'a tap-to' was a conclusion, a time for shutting-up. ¶ I do not think that Span. tapatan, the sound of a drum, has anything to do with the present matter. It is remarkable that the word should appear so early in English, and should be omitted in Sewel's Du. Dictionary. [†]

TATTOO (2), to mark the skin with figures, by pricking in colouring matter. (Tahitian.) 'They have a custom . . . which they call tattooing. They prick the skin so as just not to fetch blood,' &c.; Cook, First Voyage, b. i. c. 17; id. ib. b. iii. c. 9 (R.) Cook is speaking of the inhabitants of Tahiti.—Tahitian tatau, signifying tattoo-marks on the human skin; derived from ta, a mark, design; see Littre, who refers to Berchon, Recherches sur le Tatouage.

TAUNT, to scoff, mock, tease. (F.,—L.) 'I taunte one, I check him, je farde;' Palsgrave. 'Smacco, . . . a check or tant in word or deede;' Florio. The old sense had less of mockery in it, and sometimes meant merely to tease. 'For a proper wit had she, . . . sometime taunting without displeasure and not without disport;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 57 b. 'Which liberal taunte that most gentill emperour toke in so good part;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 5. § 19. A variant of M. E. tenten, to tempt, try; the pp. intented occurs in Ancrén Riwe, p. 228, l. 7.—O. F. tanter (Burguy), occasional form of tenter, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay, attempt; also to suggest, provoke, or move unto evil;' Cot.—Lat. tentare, to try, prove, test, attack, assail, agitate, disquiet, &c. As used by Cicero, the sense of tentare comes very near to that of taunt; cf. 'ut exsul potius tentare, quam consul uexare rem publicam posses;' C. Cat. i. 10. 27. See TEMPT. β. We may note that taunt has taken up something of the sense of F. tancer (formerly also tencer), 'to chide, rebuke, check, taunt, reprove;' Cot. But this F. tancer answers to a Low Lat. *tentare (formed from tentum, pp. of teneré), which is a mere by-form of tentare, going back to precisely the same original; so that confusion between the senses of tenter and tancer was easy enough. Of course we cannot derive taunt from tancer itself. Der. taunt, sb.; taunt-er, taunt-ing-ly. Doublet, tempt. [†]

TAURUS, the bull; the 2nd zodiacal sign. (L.) In Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 8, l. 2.—Lat. taurus, a bull. + Gk. ταῦρος, a bull. + A. S. steor, a young ox, a steer; see STEER (1). Der. taur-ine, from Lat. taurinus, adj., belonging to bulls.

TAUT, a variant of TIGHT, q. v.

TAUTOLOGY, needless repetition, in the same words. (L.,—Gk.) 'With ungratefull tautologies;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.)—Lat. tautologia (White).—Gk. ταυτολογία, a saying over again of the same thing.—Gk. ταυτολόγος, repeating what has been said.—Gk. ταῦτό, contracted from τό αὐτό, or τό αὐτόν, the same; and -λογία, speaking, allied to λέγειν, to speak, for which see LEGEND. The Gk. τό is allied to E. the; and αὐτός, he, same (= sa-u-rós), is compounded of the pronom. bases SA and TA; see SHE and THE. Der. tautolog-ic, tautolog-ic-al, -ly; tautolog-ise.

TAVERN, an inn, house for accommodating travellers and selling liquors. (F.,—L.) M. E. taverne (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 195, l. 6.—F. taverne, 'a tavern;' Cot.—Lat. taberna, a hut, orig. a hut made of boards, a shed, booth, tavern. β. To be divided as ta-ber-na, where the suffixes answer to -ua-ra-na; from ✓TA, TAN, to stretch, spread out. See TENT, and cf. TABLE, from the same root. So called because at first made of planks, i. e. of wood that spreads out.

TAW, TEW, to prepare skins, so as to dress them into leather, to curry, to toil. (E.) Spelt tawe and tewe; Levins. M. E. tewen, to prepare leather, Prompt. Parv.; tawen, Ormulum, 15908.—A. S. tawian, to prepare, dress, get ready, also, to scourge. 'See deoful eow tawode,'=the devil scourged you; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 486, l. 4 from bottom. 'Tó yrmðe getawode'=reduced to poverty; S. Veronica, p. 34, l. 18. Cf. getawe, implements, Grein, i. 462. Here aw=Goth. aw. + Du. taunen, to curry leather. + O. H. G. zawjan, zoujan, to make, prepare. + Goth. taujan, to do, cause, bring out. β. From the ✓DÚ, to move about; see TOOL. Der. taw-er, M. E. tawier, tawer, Wyclif, Deeds, ix. 43, early version, where the later version has curiour, i. e. currier; cf. bow-er, law-er. And see tea-m, tee-m.

TAWDRY, showy, but without taste, gaudy. (E.) 'A tawdry lace;' Spenser, Shep. Kal., April, 135; 'a tawdry lace,' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 253; 'tawdry-lace,' Beaum. and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1 (Amarillis). Thus it was first used in the phr. tawdry lace=a rustic necklace; explained in Skinner (following Dr. Hickes) as being a necklace bought at St. Audry's fair, held in the Isle of Ely (and elsewhere) on St. Audry's day, Oct. 17. Wedgwood doubts the ancient celebrity of this fair (which I do not), and accepts in preference the alternative account in Nares, that St. Audry 'died of a swelling in the throat, which she considered as a particular judgment, for having been in her youth much addicted to wearing fine necklaces;' see Nich. Harpsfield, Hist. Eccl. Anglicana, Sec. Sept. p. 86; Brady, Clavis Calendaria, Oct. 17. β. In any case, we are quite sure that Tawdry is a corruption of St. Audry; and we are equally sure (as any one living near Ely must be) that Audry is a corruption of Etheldrida, the famous saint who founded Ely Cathedral.

γ. Again, Etheldrida is the Latinised form of the A. S. name Ætheldryð; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, lib. iv. c. 19, which see.

The name is spelt Ætheldryht in the earliest MS. of the A. S. Chron. an. 673; and Ætheldrip in the Laud MS. It means 'noble troop.'—A. S. æðel, noble; and dryht, properly a troop, a body-guard (the Icel. drótt, a body-guard, is also used as a female name); cf. dryhtwer, a man, dryhtscipe, dominion, dryhtsele, royal hall, palace.

TAWNY, a yellowish brown. (F.,—C.) Merely another spelling of tanny, i. e. resembling that which is tanned by the sun, sun-burnt. By heraldic writers it is spelt tenny or tenné. 'Tawny . . . in blazon, is known by the name of tenné;' Guillim, Display of Heraldry, sect. i. cap. 3. M. E. tanny. 'Tanny colowre, or tawny;' Prompt. Parv.—F. tanné, 'tawny;' Cot. It is the pp. of F. tanner, taner, to tan.—F. tan, tan; see TAN. Der. tawny-ness. Doublet, tenné or tenny. TAX, a rate imposed on property, anything imposed, a task. (F.,—L.) M. E. tax, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 151, l. 4 (temp. Edw. II.).—F. taxe, 'a taxation;' Cot.—F. taxer, 'to tax, rate, assess;' Cot.—Lat. taxare, to handle; also to rate, value, appraise; whence Low Lat. tasa, a rating, a taxation. Put for *tactare; from tactum, supine of tangere, to touch; see TANGENT, TACT. Der. tax, verb, F. taxer; tax-able, tax-abl-y; tax-at-ion, from F. taxation, 'a taxation,' from Lat. acc. taxationem. Doublet, task.

TAXIDERMY, the art of preparing and stuffing the skins of animals. (Gk.) Modern; coined from Gk. τάξις, crude form of τάξις, order, arrangement; and δέρμα, a skin. β. Táxis (= tax-ys) is from τάσσειν (= tax-yein), to arrange, from ✓TAK, to hew, to fit; see TECHNICAL. Gk. δέρμα, a skin, is that which is torn or flayed off; formed with suffix -μα from δέρ-ειν, to flay, cognate with E. tear; see TEAR (1). Der. taxiderm-ist.

TEA, an infusion made from the dried leaves of the tea-tree, a shrub found in China and Japan. (Chinese.) Formerly pronounced tay [tai], just as sea was called say; it rimes with obey, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 8, and with away, id. i. 6a. 'I did send for a cup of tee (a China drink) of which I never had drunk before;' Pepys, Diary, Sept. 28, 1660. Oddly spelt cha in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a reference to Hist. of China, fol. 19; also chau, Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687 (R.) Prof. Douglas writes: 'The E. word tea is derived from the Amoy pronunciation of the name of the plant, which is té. In the other parts of the empire it is called ch'a, ts'a, &c.; see Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 5.' Cf. té, tea; Chinese Dict. of the Amoy Vernacular, by Rev. C. Douglas, 1873, p. 481. This accounts for the Port. cha, tea (whence E. cha), and Ital. cia, tea. Cf. F. thé, G. thee, pronounced as tea was in Pope's time. So also Malay téh, tea; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 97. [†]

TEACH, to impart knowledge, shew how to do. (E.) M. E. techen, weak verb, pt. t. taughté (properly dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 99; pp. taught.—A. S. tæcan, tæcean, to shew, teach, pt. t. tæhte, pp. tæht, getæht; Grein, ii. 522. Closely allied to A. S. tācan, tācean, a token. From ✓DIK, to shew; cf. G. zeigen, to shew; see further under TOKEN. Der. teach-able, teach-able-ness, teach-er.

TEAK, an E. Indian and African tree, with very hard wood. (Malayálam.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—Malayálam tékka, the teak tree; Tamil tékku; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 516. The best teak is from the mountains of the Malabar Ghauts; also found on the Coromandel coast; Eng. Cycl.

TEAL, a web-footed water-fowl. (E.) Teale; Levins. M. E. tele, Prompt. Parv.; Squire of Low Degree, l. 320, in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. p. 158; used to translate O. F. cercele in Walter de Bibbesworth, pr. in Wright's Voc. i. 151, l. 12; i. 165, l. 15. This takes us back to the close of the 13th cent., and the word is prob. E.; certainly Low German, in any case. + Du. teling, a generation, production, also, teal; derived from telen, to breed, produce. It thus appears that teal meant, originally, no more than 'a brood' or 'a flock'; it is quite accidental that it has come to be used as a specific name; we still use teal as a plural form. The Du. telg, a plant, off-set, issue, with its pl. telgen, off-spring, is clearly a related word. Cf. Low G. teling, a progeny, telen, to breed, telge, a branch. We find also A. S. telga, a branch, telgian, to bud, germinate, Grein, ii. 524; telgor, a small branch, prov. E. tiller, a sapling (Halliwell). Closely connected with the verb to till; see TILL (1).

TEAM, a family; a set; a number of animals harnessed in a row. (E.) M. E. tem, teem, team; 'a teme [of] foure gret oxen,' P. Plowman, B. xix. 257; tem=a family, Rob. of Glouc. p. 261, l. 4.—A. S. teim, a family, Gen. v. 31; offspring, Grein, ii. 526. + Du. toom, the rein of a bridle; the same word; from the notion of reducing to order. + Icel. taunnr, a rein. + Low G. toom, a progeny, team; also, a rein. + Dan. tømme, Swed. töm, a rein. + G. zaum, a bridle, M. H. G. zoum; allied to M. H. G. zoujan, O. H. G. zawjan, to make, cause, prepare, which = E. taw. β. All from Teut. type TAU-MA, a preparing, setting in order; hence, a family, row, set; or otherwise, a line, rein, bridle; formed with the common substantival suffix -ma (as in E. doo-m, bloo-m, sea-m) from the Teut. base TAU, seen in E. taw, to curry leather, and in Goth. taujan, to cause, make, bring about; see Taw. Fick, iii. 115. Der. teem, verb, q. v. Also team-ster (Webster, not in Johnson), with suffix -ster; for which see Spinster.

TEAR (1), to rend, lacerate. (E.) M. E. teren, strong verb, pt. t. tar, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 472, pp. toren, id. 782. — A. S. teran, pt. t. tar, pp. toren, Grein, ii. 525. + Goth. ga-tairan, to break, destroy, pt. t. ga-tar. + Lithuan. diriti, to flay. + Gk. dépeiv, to flay. + Russ. drate, to tear; cf. dira, a rent, a hole. + Zend dar, to cut. + Skt. dri, to burst, burst open, tear asunder. β. All from ✓ DAR, to burst, split open; Curtius, i. 290; Fick, iii. 118. The G. zehren, Low G. teren, Icel. tara, to consume, are weak verbs, from the same root; so also E. tire and tarry, as well as obsolete E. tarre, to provoke, tease. Der. tear, sb. (Goth. gataura), Chevy Chase, l. 134, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 75. Also tar-t (1), tire (1), q. v., tarr-y, q. v.; and (from same root) epi-derm-is, taxi-der-my. The E. dar-n, from W. darn, a piece, fragment, is clearly also from the same root.

TEAR (2), a drop of the fluid from the eyes. (E.) M. E. tere, Chaucer, C. T. 8960. — A. S. teár, tér, Grein, ii. 526. + Icel. tár. + Dan. taar, taare. + Swed. tår. + Goth. tagr. + O. H. G. zahar, M. H. G. zahr, contracted form zár; whence G. zähre, made out of the M. H. G. pl. form zahere. β. All from a Teut. type TAGRA (= TAH-RA), a tear; Fick, iii. 115. Further allied to O. Lat. dacrima, usually lacrima, lacrima (whence F. larme), a tear; Gk. δάκρυ, δάκρυον, δάκρυμα, a tear; W. dagr, a tear; from an Aryan type DAK-RA, DAK-RU, a tear. γ. All from ✓ DAK, to bite; a notion still kept up in the common phr. bitter tears, i. e. biting tears; cf. Gk. δάκναι, Skt. dag, to bite. In a similar way the Skt. agr, a tear, is from the ✓ AK, to be sharp, Curtius, i. 163; Fick, i. 611. Der. tear-ful, 3 Hen. VI, v. 4. 8; tear-ful-ly, tear-ful-ness; tear-less. And see train-oil.

TEASE, to comb or card wool, scratch or raise the nap of cloth; to vex, plague. (E.) M. E. taisen, of which the pp. taysed is in Gwain and the Grene Knight, 1169. But the more common form is tosen or toosen. 'They toose and pulle'; Gower, C. A. i. 17, l. 8. 'Tosyn, or tose wul' [tease wool]; Prompt. Parv. We also find to-tosen, to tease or pull to pieces, Owl and Nightingale, l. 70. — A. S. tásan, to pluck, pull, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 170, l. 13. The M. E. tosen would answer to a by-form *tásan, not recorded. + O. Du. teesen, to pluck; wolle teesen, 'to pluck wooll'; Hexham. + Dan. tæse, tæsse, to tease wool. + Bavarian zaissen, to tease wool, Schmeller; he also cites M. H. G. zeissen, to tease, a strong verb, with pt. t. zies, pp. gezeissen. β. The form of the base appears to be TIS; perhaps allied to G. zausen, to touse, pull, drag, of which the apparent base is TUS. Der. teas-el, q. v.

TEASEL, a plant with large heads covered with crooked awns which are used for teasing cloth. (E.) M. E. tesel, Wright's Voc. i. 141, col. 1; also tasel, P. Plowman, B. xv. 446. — A. S. tásl, tásel, a teasel, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 282, note 26. Formed with suffix -el (Aryan -ra) from tás-an, to tease; the sense is 'an instrument to tease with.' See Tease.

TEAT, the nipple of the female breast. (E.) Also called tít. M. E. tete, Chaucer, C. T. 3704; also tette, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2621; also títte, Ancrén Riwe, p. 330, l. 5. — A. S. tit, Wright's Voc. i. 44, col. 1; pl. tittas, id. 65, l. 7; 283, l. 29. + O. Du. titte, a teat; Hexham. + G. zitze. Cf. also F. tette (tete in Cotgrave), Span. teta, Ital. tetta, words of Teut. origin; Icel. táta; W. did, didi, a teat. These words have much the appearance of being reduplicated from a base TI (Aryan DI). β. Besides these, there is a second set of forms represented by W. teth, G. tütte, Gk. τίθη, τίθος; of these the Gk. τίθη, τίθος, have been explained from ✓ DHA, to suck; cf. Skt. dhe, to suck, Goth. daddjan, to suckle. But it would seem impossible to derive teat from the same root; see Tit.

TEAZLE, the same as Teasel, q. v.

TECHNICAL, artificial, pertaining to the arts. (Gk.; with L. suffix.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from Gk. τεχνικός, belonging to the arts. — Gk. τέχνη, art; allied to τέκτων, a carpenter. — ✓ TAK, to prepare, get ready; cf. Russ. tkate, to weave, Skt. taksh, to prepare, form, cut wood, takshan, a carpenter; see Text. Curtius, i. 271. Der. technical-ly, technical-i-ty; techno-logy, with suffix = Gk. -λογία, from λέγειν, to speak. Also (from the same source) archi-lect, pyro-technic, text, text-ure.

TECHY, the same as Tetchy, q. v.

TED, to spread new-mown grass. (Scand.) 'I teede hey, I tourne it afore it is made in cockes'; Palsgrave. 'To tedde and make hay'; Fitzherbert, Book of Husbandry, § 25. — Icel. teðja, to spread manure; from tað, manure. Cf. Icel. taða, hay grown in a well-manured field, a home-field; iðdu-verk, making hay in the infield. Also Norw. teðja, to spread manure; from tað, manure; Aasen. So also Swed. dial. täda, vb., from tað. + Bavarian zetten, to strew, to let fall in a scattered way, Schmeller, p. 1159; cf. G. verzetteln, to scatter, spill, disperse. Cf. also M. H. G. zetten, to scatter, derived from O. H. G. zátá, zotá (mod. G. zotte, a rag), cited by Fick, iii. 113.

β. All these words can be derived from a sb. of which the Teut. type is TADA, that which is spread, a rag, manure; Fick, as above. From a Teut. base TA = Aryan ✓ DA, to divide, Fick, i. 608; whence also Skt. dá, to cut, Gk. δαίνομαι, I divide, distribute, portion out.

¶ If this be right, the suggested etymology from W. tedu, to stretch, distend, is entirely out of the question. Besides, 'to distend' and 'to scatter' are not quite the same thing.

TEDIOUS, tiresome, from length or slowness, irksome. (L.) Spelt tedyouse in Palsgrave. Coined immediately from Lat. tadious, irksome. — Lat. tadium, irksomeness. — Lat. tadet, it irks one. Root uncertain. Der. tedious-ly, -ness. We also use tedium, the sb.

TEEM (1), to bring forth, bear, or be fruitful; be pregnant, full, or prolific. (E.) 'Hyndre [her] of teeming'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 644 g. M. E. temen, to produce, Ancrén Riwe, p. 220, l. 16. Obviously from M. E. teme, a team, a progeny; see Team. The A. S. verb is tyman, to teem, Gen. xxx. 9; formed (by the usual vowel-change from ea to y) from A. S. teám, a team, a progeny.

TEEM (2), to think fit. (E.) Rare and obsolete; but Shak. has the comp. beteem, to be explained presently. 'I coulde teeme it [think fit] to rend thee in pieces'; Gifford's Dialogue of Witches, A. D. 1603. 'Alas, man, I coulde teeme it to go'; id. See both quotations in full, in Halliwell, s. v. Teem. The word is hardly to be traced in E., but we find the related A. S. suffix -tème, -tyme, with the notion of fitting or suitable, as in luf-tème, pleasant, acceptable (lit. love-befitting), in Bosworth; spelt lustyme (explained as 'grateful' by Thorpe), Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 126, l. 26. Cf. wider-tyme, troublesome (lit. unbefitting); Bosworth. This suffix is from the same source as the common E. adj. tame, domesticated, lit. rendered fit or suitable. β. Related words are easily found, viz. in Goth. gatemiba, fitly, from the strong verb gatiman (pt. t. gatam), to suit, agree with; Luke, v. 36. + Du. tamen, 'to be comely, convenient, or seemly'; Hexham; tamelich, or tamigh, 'comely, convenient'; id.; whence het betaemt, 'it is convenient, requisite, meete, or fitting'; id.; mod. Du. betamen, to beseeem. + G. ziemen, to be fit; ziemlich, passable, lit. suitable; O. H. G. zeman, to fit, closely related to zeman, zaman, to tame. + Low G. tamen, tämen, or temen, to fit, also to allow, as in He tänet sik een good Glas Wien = he allows himself a good glass of wine; betamen, to befit; closely allied to tömen, to tame. Cf. Skt. dam, which signifies not only to tame, but also to be tame. All from ✓ DAM, to tame, subdue; see Tame.

2. We can now explain beteem in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 131; Hamlet, i. 2. 141. It means to make or consider as fitting, hence to permit, allow; a slightly forced use of the word. In Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, A. D. 1587, we have 'could he not beteeme' = he did not think fit, would not deign; the Lat. text has dignatur, Metam. x. 157. Spenser uses it still more loosely: 'So woulde I . . . Beteeme to you this sword' = permit, grant, allow you the use of this sword; F. Q. i. 8. 119. ¶ On the connection between teem and tame, see Fick, iii. 117; Ettmüller's A. S. Dict. 525; Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 16, 17; &c.

TEEM (3), to empty, pour out. (Scand.) See Halliwell. — Icel. tæma, to empty, from tómur, empty; Dan. tømme, to empty, from tom, empty; Swed. tömme, from tom; see Toom.

TEEN, vexation, grief. (E.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 64; &c. M. E. tene, Chaucer, C. T. 3108. — A. S. teóna, accusation, injury, vexation, Grein, ii. 528. — A. S. teón, contracted from tíhan, to accuse; see Grein, ii. 532, s. v. tíhan. [To be distinguished from teón (= teóhan), to draw.] + Goth. gateihan, to tell, announce, make known to, point out (as distinct from gatiuhan, to lead). + G. zeihen, to accuse (as distinct from ziehen, to draw). + Lat. dicare, to make known. — ✓ DIK, to shew. See Token, Toe.

¶ The successive senses of teen are making known, public accusation, reproach, injury, vexation. We have indication and inditement from the same root. See Ettmüller, A. S. Dict., pp. 534, 537; Leo's Glossar, p. 303. The word teen also occurs as Old Saxon tioño, injury; Icel. íðn, loss.

TEETOTALLER, a total abstainer. (F., = L.; with E. prefix and suffix.) A teetotaller is one who professes total abstinence from all spirituous liquors; the orig. name was total abstainer. The adj. tee-total is an emphasized form of total, made on the principle of reduplication, just as we have Lat. te-tigi as the perfect of tangere. The word 'originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting about 1833, asserted that "nothing but te-is-total will do." The word was immediately adopted. He died 27 Oct., 1846. These facts are taken from the Staunch Teetotaller, edited by Joseph Livesey, of Preston (an originator of the movement in August, 1832), Jan. 1867; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Teetotum. ¶ Teetotal may have been suggested by teetotum.

TEETOTUM, TOTUM, a spinning toy. (L.) Not in Todd's

Johnson. I had a teetotum (about A.D. 1840) with four sides only, marked P (Put down), N (Nothing), H (Half), T (Take all). These were very common, and the letters decided whether one was to put into the pool or to take the stakes. I suppose that these letters took the place of others with Latin explanations, such as P (Pone), N (Nil), D (Dimidium), T (Totum). The toy was named, accordingly, from the most interesting mark upon it; and was called either a totum or a T-totum. Ash's Dict., ed. 1775, has: 'Totum, from the Latin, a kind of die that turns round, so called because the appearance of one lucky side [that marked T] entitles the player that turned it to the whole stake.' 'Totum, a whirl-bone, a kind of die that is turned about;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Teetotums are now made with the thickest part polygonal, not square, which entirely destroys the original notion of them; and they are marked with numbers instead of letters. — Lat. totum, the whole (stake); neut. of totus; see Total. [†]

TEGUMENT, a covering. (L.) Rare; commoner in deriv. in-tegment. In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 5. — Lat. tegumentum (also tegmentum, tegmentum), a covering. — Lat. tegere (for stegere *), to cover. + Gk. στέγειν, to cover. — ✓ STAG, to cover; whence also Skt. śhag, to cover, Lithuan. stęgti, to thatch. And see Thatch. Der. in-tegment; also (from tectus, pp. of tegere), de-lect, pro-lect; and see tile, toga.

TEIL-TREE, a linden tree. (F., — L.; and E.) 'A teil-tree;' Isaiah, vi. 13 (A. V.) — O. F. teil, the bark of a lime-tree (Roquefort); cf. mod. F. tille, bast. [The added word tree is E.] — Lat. tilia, a lime-tree; also, the inner bark of a lime-tree. Root unknown.

TELEGRAPH, an apparatus for giving signals at a distance, or conveying information rapidly. (Gk.) Modern; in Richardson's Dict. M. Chappe's telegraph was first used in France in 1793; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar off; and γράφειν, to write. The Gk. τῆλε, τῆλοῦ, afar, are from an adj. form τῆλος *, not in use; prob. from ✓ TA, to stretch, extend. Gk. γράφειν is cognate with Grave (†). Der. telegraph-ic, telegraph-y, telegraph-ist. Also tele-gram, a short coined expression for 'telegraphic message,' from γράμμα, a letter of the alphabet, a written character.

TELESCOPE, an optical instrument for viewing objects at a distance. (Gk.) Galileo's telescopes were first made in 1609. Milton alludes to the telescope, P. R. iv. 42. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar; and σκοπεῖν, to behold; see Telegaph and Scope. Der. tele-scop-ic.

TELL, to count, narrate, discern, inform. (E.) M. E. tellen, pt. t. told, pp. told; often in the sense 'to count,' as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 92. 'Shall tellen tales tway;' Chaucer, C. T. 794. — A. S. tellan, to count, narrate; pt. t. tealde, pp. teald; Grein, ii. 524. A weak verb, formed from the sb. talu, a tale, number; so that tellan = italian *. See Tale. + Du. tellen, from tal, sb. + Icel. telja, from tala, sb. + Dan. tælle, from tal. + Swed. tälja, from tal. + G. zählen, from zahl. Der. tell-er; tell-tale, Merch. Ven. v. 123.

TELLURIC, belonging to the earth. (L.) Rare, and scientific. Coined with suffix -c (Lat. -eus), from Lat. telluri-, crude form of tellus, earth. From ✓ TAL, to sustain; cf. Gk. τηλία, a flat board, a stand. Der. telluri-um, a rare metal, discovered in 1782 (Haydn).

TEMERITY, rashness. (F., — L.) Spelt temeritie in Minshew, ed. 1623. — F. temerité, 'temerity;' Cot. — Lat. temeritatem, acc. of temeritas, rashness. — Lat. temeri- for temero-, crude form of temerus *, rash, only used in the adv. temere, rashly. The orig. sense of temere is 'in the dark,' hence blindly, rashly; cf. Skt. tamas, dimness, darkness, gloom, allied to E. Dim, q. v.

TEMPER, to moderate, modify, control, qualify, bring to a proper degree of hardness. (F., — L.) M. E. temprien, tempren, Rob. of Glouc., p. 72, l. 7; Gower, C. A. i. 266, l. 14. [Somner gives an A. S. temprian, but it is doubtful; if a true word, it is borrowed from Latin.] — F. temperer, 'to temper;' Cot. — Lat. temperare, to apportion, moderate, regulate, qualify; allied to temperi or tempori, adv., seasonably, and to tempus, fit season, time. See Temporal. Der. temper, sb., Oth. v. 2. 253, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 20 (see Trench, Study of Words, and cf. Lat. temperies, a tempering, right admixture); temper-ance, M. E. temperance, Wyclif, Col. iii. 12, from F. temperance = Lat. temperantia; temper-ate, Wyclif, 1 Tim. iii. 3, from Lat. temperatus, pp. of temperare; temper-ate-ly, temper-ate-ness; temper-at-ure, from F. temperature, 'a temper, temperature,' Cot., from Lat. temperatura, due to temperare; temper-a-ment, in Trench, Select Glossary, from Lat. temperamentum. Also dis-temper, q. v., at-temper. Doublet, tamper.

TEMPEST, bad weather, violent storm, great commotion. (F., — L.) M. E. tempest, Rob. of Glouc. p. 50, l. 7, p. 243, l. 9. — O. F. tempeste, 'a tempest, storm, bluster;' Cot. Mod. F. tempête. — Lat. tempesta *, not found (though tempestus, adj., and tempestare, verb, both appear), put for Lat. tempestas, season, fit time, weather, good weather; also bad weather, storm; allied to tempus, season, time; see Temporal. Der. tempest, verb, Milton, P. L. vii. 412, from F. tempester, 'to storm;' Cot. Also tempest-u-ous, 1 Hen. VI, v. 5. 5, from F. tempestueux, 'tempestuous,' Cot., from Lat. tempestuosus; tempestuos-ly, -ness.

TEMPLE (1), a fane, edifice in honour of a deity or for religious worship. (L.) M. E. temple, Chaucer, C. T. 10167, 10169. A. S. templ, templ (common), John, ii. 20. — Lat. templum, a temple. Formed (with excrement p after m) from an older temulm *; cf. speculum (Vaniček). + Gk. τέμενος, a sacred enclosure, piece of ground cut off and set apart for religious purposes. — ✓ TAM, to cut; whence Gk. τέμν-ειν (fut. τεμῶ), to cut, Curtius, i. 273. Der. templ-ar, one of a religious order for the protection of the temple and Holy Sepulchre, founded in 1118, suppressed in 1312 (Haydn), M. E. templere, P. Plowman, B. xv. 509, from Low Lat. templarius (Ducange). Also con-templ-ate, q. v.

TEMPLE (2), the flat portion of either side of the head above the cheek-bone. (F., — L.) Gen. used in the plural. M. E. templys, pl., Wright's Voc. i. 179, l. 4. — O. F. temples, 'the temples;' Cot. Mod. F. tempe, sing. Formed, with the common change from r to l, from Lat. tempora, pl., the temples. The sing. tempus sometimes occurs, with the sense temple, head, or face. It is supposed to be the same word as tempus, season, time; see Temporal. Der. tempor-al, adj., from F. temporal, 'of or in the temples,' Cot., from Lat. temporalis, (1) temporal, (2) belonging to the temples. [†]

TEMPORAL (1), pertaining to this world only, worldly, secular. (F., — L.) M. E. temporal, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21. — O. F. temporal, usually temporel, 'temporal;' Cot. — Lat. temporalis, temporal. — Lat. tempor-, crude form of tempus, season, time, opportunity; also, a temple of the head.

β. Etymology difficult, but prob. from ✓ TAN, to stretch, spread; whence the senses of 'space of time' and 'flat space on the forehead.' Hardly from ✓ TAM, to cut. Der. temporal-ly; temporal-i-ty, spelt temporalitie, Sir T. More, Works, p. 232 e, from Low Lat. temporalitas, revenues of the church (Ducange). Also tempor-ar-y, Meas. for Meas. v. 145 (where it seems to mean respecting things not spiritual), from Lat. temporarius, lasting for a time; tempor-ar-i-ly, tempor-ar-i-ness. Also tempor-ise, Much Ado, i. i. 276, from F. temporiser, 'to temporise it, to observe the time,' Cot.; tempor-is-er, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 302. Also con-tempor-an-e-ous, con-tempor-ar-y, ex-tempore. And see temper, tempest, tense (1).

TEMPORAL (2), for which see Temple (2).

TEMPT, to put to trial, test, entice to evil. (F., — L.) M. E. tempten, Ancren Riwe, p. 178. — O. F. tempter, later tenter, 'to tempt, prove, try, sound, provoke unto evil;' Cot. — Lat. temptare, occasional spelling of tentare, to handle, touch, feel, try the strength of, assail, tempt. Frequentative of tenere, to hold (pp. tentus); see Tentative, Tenable. Der. tempt-er, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3; temptress, Ford, The Broken Heart, v. 1, from F. temteresse, 'a tempteress, a woman that tempts,' Cot.; tempt-ing, tempt-ing-ly; tempt-at-ion, M. E. temptacioun, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 41, from O. F. temptation, usually tentation, 'a temptation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. tentationem. Also at-tempt. Doublets, teni (2), vb., taunt.

TEN, twice five. (E.) M. E. ten, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 1. — A. S. tēn, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxviii. § 1; lib. iv. met. 3. Usually tyn, Matt. xxv. 1. + Du. tien. + Icel. tíu, tenth; tígr, a decade. + Dan. ti. + Swed. tio. + Goth. taihun. + G. zehn, O. H. G. zehān. + Lat. decem (whence F. dix, Ital. dieci, Span. diez). + Gk. δέκα. + Lithuan. desimtis. + Russ. desiate. + W. deg; Irish and Gael. deich. + Pers. dah (Palmer's Dict. col. 278). + Skt. daśan.

β. All from Aryan DAKAN (Teutonic TEHAN), ten. Origin unknown. Der. ten-fold, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 135, l. 19 (see Fold); ten-th, M. E. tenþe, Will. of Palerne, 4715, also teonþe, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 219, l. 17, also tende, Ormulum, 2715; due to a confusion of A. S. teōða, tenth, with Icel. tíundi, tenth; the true E. word is tithe, q. v. Hence tenth-ly. From the same base we have decim-al, decim-ate, duo-decim-al, deca-de, deca-gon, deca-hedron, deca-logue, deca-syllabic, decem-vir, decennial, do-deca-gon, do-deca-hedron, dime; perhaps dism-al. ¶ The suffix -teen, M. E. -tenū (disyllabic) = A. S. -tēne, more commonly -tyne, as in eahta-tyne, eighteen, Judg. iii. 14; formed by adding the pl. suffix -e to tēn or tyn, ten. Hence thir-teen (A. S. þrēotýne); four-teen (A. S. feowwer-tyne); fif-teen (A. S. fif-tyne); six-teen (A. S. six-tyne); seven-teen (A. S. seofon-tyne); eigh-teen, miswritten for eight-teen (A. S. eahta-tyne); nine-teen (A. S. nigon-tyne). ¶ The suffix -ty, M. E. -ty = A. S. -ig, as in twen-ty (A. S. twēn-tig), &c. This suffix appears also in Icel. sex-tígr, sex-tígr, sex-tögr, sixty, and in Goth. saihs-tígtus, G. sech-zig, sixty, &c.; all from a Teut. base

TEGU, ten, a modified form of TEHAN, ten; Fick, iii. 124.

TENABLE, that can be held, kept, or defended. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 248. — F. tenable, 'holdable;' Cot. Coined from F. tenir, to hold. — Lat. tenere, to hold, keep, retain, reach, orig. to stretch or extend, a sense retained in per-tinere, to extend through to.

—✓TAN, to stretch, extend; see Thin. Curtius, i. 268; Fick, i. 591. Der. (from Lat. tenere) abs-tain, abs-tin-ence, ap-per-tain, ap-pur-tain-ance, con-tain, con-tent, con-tin-ent, con-tin-ue, coun-ten-ance, de-tain, de-tent-ion, dis-con-tin-ue, dis-con-tent, dis-coun-ten-ance, enter-tain, im-per-tin-ent, in-con-tin-ent, lieu-ten-ant, main-tain, main-ten-ance, mal-con-tent, ob-tain, per-tain, per-tin-ac-i-ous, per-tin-ent, pur-ten-ance, re-tain, re-tent-ion, re-tin-ue, sus-tain, sus-ten-ance, sus-tent-at-ion; and see ten-ac-i-ous, ten-ac-i-ty, ten-ant, tend (with its derivatives), tend-er, tend-on, ten-dril, ten-e-mint, ten-et, ten-on, ten-or, ten-u-ity, ex-ten-u-ate, ten-ure, tempt, taunt, tent-acle, tent-at-ive. And see tone.

TENACIOUS, holding fast, stubborn. (L.) 'So tenacious of his bite;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. ii. let. 2, July 3, 1635. Coined as if from Lat. *tenaciusus, from tenaci-, crude form of tenax, holding fast. —Lat. tenere, to hold. See Tenable. Der. tenacious-ly, -ness.

TENACITY, the quality of sticking fast to. (F.,—L.) Spelt tenacitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. —F. tenacité, 'tenacity;' Cot. —Lat. tenacitatem, acc. of tenacitas. —Lat. tenaci, crude form of tenax; see Tenacious.

TENANT, one who holds land under another. (F.,—L.) M. E. tenant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 19, l. 10. —F. tenant, holding; pres. part. of tenir, to hold; see Tenable. Der. tenanc-y, Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 2, l. 25 from end; tenant-able, tenant-less, tenant-ry (a coined word). Also lieu-tenant, q. v. And see tenement.

TENCH, a fish of the carp kind. (F.,—L.) M. E. tenche, Prompt. Parv. —F. tenche, 'a tench;' Cot. Mod. F. tanche. —Lat. tinca, a tench. Probably 'the nibbler;' cf. tinca, a moth; from ✓TAM, to cut; cf. Gk. τέμνειν, to cut, ρέγειν, to nibble.

TEND (1), to aim at, or move towards, to incline, bend, to contribute to a purpose. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 170. —F. tendre, 'to tend, bend;' Cot. —Lat. tendere, to stretch, extend, direct, tender. Allied to tenere, to hold; see Tenable. From ✓TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. tend-enc-y, formed by adding -y to obsolete sb. tendence, signifying 'inclination,' for which see Richardson; and the sb. tendence was coined from Lat. tendent, stem of the pres. part. of tendere. Also tense (2); tend-er (2). Also (from Lat. tendere, pp. tensus and tentus), at-tend, tend (2), at-tent-ion, co-ex-tend, con-tend, dis-tend, ex-tend, ex-tens-ion, ex-tent, in-tend, in-tense, in-tent, ob-tend, os-tens-ible, os-tent-at-ion, por-tend, pre-tend, pro-tend, sub-tend, super-in-tend; and see tense (2), tens-ile, tend-on, tent (1), tent-er, toise. Doublet, tender (2).

TEND (2), to attend, take care of. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 83, Much Ado, i. 3. 17. Coined by dropping the initial a of O. F. attendre, to wait, attend. It is, in fact, short for Attend, q. v. Der. tend-ing, sb. (for attending), Mach. i. 5. 36; tend-ance (for attendance), Timon, i. 1. 57. And see tender (3).

TENDER (1), soft, delicate, fragile, weak, feeble, compassionate. (F.,—L.) M. E. tendre, Ancrén Riwle, p. 112, l. 11. —F. tendre, 'tender;' Cot. Formed (with excrescent d after n) from Lat. tenerum, acc. of tener, tender; orig. thin, fine, allied to tenuis, thin. —✓TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. tender-ly, -ness; tender-heart-ed, Rich. II, iii. 3. 160; tender-heft-ed, K. Lear, ii. 4. 176 (Folio edd.), where heft = haft, a handle; so that tender-hefted = tender-handled, tender-hilted, gentle to the touch, impressible; see Haft. Also tender, vb., to regard fondly, cherish, Rich. II, i. 1. 32; a word which seems to be more or less confused with tender (2), q. v. Hence tender, sb., regard, care, K. Lear, i. 4. 230. And see tendr-il.

TENDER (2), to offer, proffer for acceptance, shew. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 5. —F. tendre, 'to tend, bend, . . . spread, or display . . . also, to tender or offer unto;' Cot. —Lat. tendere, to stretch, &c. See Tend (1), of which tender is a later form, retaining the r of the F. infinitive; cf. attainder = F. attaindre. Der. tender, sb., an offer, proposal. Doublet, tend (1).

TENDER (3), a small vessel that attends a larger one with stores; a carriage carrying coals, attached to a locomotive engine. (F.,—L.) 'A fireship and three tenders;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685 (R.) Merely short for attender = attendant or subsidiary vessel; see Tend (2).

TENDON, a hard strong cord by which a muscle is attached to a bone. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave. —F. tendon, 'a tendon, or tail of a muscle;' Cot. Cf. Span. tendon, Port. tendão, Ital. tendine, a tendon. From an imaginary Low Lat. type *tendo, with gen. case both tendonis and tendinis; formed from Lat. tendere, to stretch, from its contractile force. See Tend (1). Der. tendin-ous (R.), from F. tendineux, 'of a tendon;' Cot.

TENDRIL, the slender clasper of a plant, whereby it clings to a support. (F.,—L.) Spelt tendrell in Minshew, ed. 1627. In Milton, P. L. iv. 307. Shortened from F. tendrillons, s. pl. 'tendrills, little gristles;' Cot. Or from an O. F. *tendrille or *tendrelle, not recorded. Cot. also gives F. tendron, 'a tender fellow, a cartilage, or gristle; also a tendrell, or the tender branch or sprig of a plant.' All these forms are from F. tendre, tender; see Tender (1). So also Ital. tenerume, a tendril, from tenero, tender. ¶ Not from tenere, to hold, nor from tendere, to stretch; yet allied to both.

TENEBOUS, TENEBRIOUS, gloomy, dark. (F.,—L.) Tenebrous is in Cotgrave, and in Hawes, History of Grand Amour (1555), ch. 3 (Todd). 'Tenebrious light' is in Young, Night Thoughts, Night 9, l. 966. The latter is a false form. —F. tenebreux, 'tenebrous;' Cot. —Lat. tenebrosus, gloomy. —Lat. tenebræ, s. pl., darkness. Put for *tenebræ; allied to Skt. tamas, darkness, and E. dim. —✓TAM, to choke; see Dim.

TENEMENT, a holding, a dwelling inhabited by a tenant. (F.,—L.) M. E. tenement, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 34, last line. —F. tenement, 'a tenement, inheritance,' &c.; Cot. —Low Lat. tenementum, a holding, fief; Ducange. —Lat. tenere, to hold; see Tenable and Tenant. Der. tenement-al, adj.

TENET, a principle which a person holds or maintains. (L.) 'The tenet must be this;' Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. viii (R.) —Lat. tenet, he holds; 3 p. s. pres. tense of tenere, to hold; see Tenable. Cf. audit, habitat, exit, and other similar formations.

TENNIS, a game in which a ball is driven against a wall (or over a cord) by rackets, and kept continually in motion. (Origin unknown.) First mentioned in Gower's Balade to King Henry IV, st. 63; printed in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1532, fol. 377, col. 2, ed. 1561, fol. 332, col. 1, where it is spelt tennes; but this is not the oldest spelling. The usual old spelling is teneis or tenyse. 'Teneys, pley, Teniludus, manipilatus, tenisia. Teneys-pleyer, Teniludius;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt tenyse, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 27, § 6. 'Tenyse-ball, pelote; Tennyss-play, jeu de la paume;' Palsgrave. Turberville has a poem 'to his friend P., Of Courting, Trauailing, and Tenys.' It was no doubt at first played with the hands; hence the F. name jeu de la paume, and the Lat. name manipilatus, as above. For full information as to the game, see The Book of Tennis, by Julian Marshall.

β. The O. Du. kaetse, 'a chase,' Hexham, is not a Du. word, but simply borrowed (like E. catch) from the Picard cachier, a variant of F. chasser, and is, accordingly, at once the equivalent of E. catch and of F. chasse or E. chase; see Catch, Chase. Hence was formed O. Du. kaets-ball, 'a tennis-ball, or a hand-ball,' Hexham, and kaets-spel, 'tennis-court play;' words which rather represent chase-ball and chase-play than catch-ball and catch-play. Hence, when we find James I (in Basilikon Doron, Lond. 1603, b. iii. p. 120) speaking of 'playing at the caiche or tennisse,' we must either suppose these to be different games, or must explain caiche as meaning chase.

γ. The line in Gower, as printed in 1561, runs thus: 'At the tennes to winne or lese [lose] a chase;' on which we must observe two things; (1) the use of the later spelling with two n's in place of the earlier one with but one n (according to the usual rule in English, of which there are literally thousands of examples); and (2) the fact that teneis or tenyse was accented on the latter syllable. This puts out of consideration the extraordinary supposition that tennis = tens, the plural of ten. Of course tens was an intelligible word to Englishmen, and could no more have been turned into tenise than fives could have been turned into fivise.

δ. Putting all together, we have the orig. form as teneis or tenise or tenyse, accented on the latter syllable, and expressed in Low Latin by tenisia and teniludium. ε. I suspect a derivation from O. F. tenies, plural of tenie, 'a fillet, head-band, or hair-lace; also a kind of brow or jutting on a pillar; an old word;' Cot. This O. F. tenie = Lat. tenia (Gk. ραυία), a band, ribbon, fillet, the fillet which separates the Doric frieze from the architrave, a streak in paper (White). We might imagine tenia to be used either for the band or cord over which the balls are played, or for the streak on the wall as in rackets; and we could thus explain teniludium as teniludium or 'cord-play,' the use of e for æ being very common in the 15th century. Tenisia is nothing but E. tenise with a Latin suffix. But it seems best to leave the word as 'unknown.'

¶ Of other etymologies, the most usual is to suppose that teneis represents F. tenez, i. e. take this, imagined as a cry ejaculated by the player in serving; where tenez is the imperative plural (2nd person) of tenir = Lat. tenere. Der. tennis-court.

TENON, the end of a piece of wood inserted into the socket or mortice of another, to hold the two together. (F.,—L.) In Levins. M. E. tenoun, tenon; Prompt. Parv. —F. tenon, 'a tenon; the end of a rafter put into a mortise; tenons, pl. the vice-nails wherewith the barrel of a piece is fastened unto the stock; also the (leather) handles of a target;' Cot. All these senses involve the notion of holding fast. Formed, with suffix -on (Lat. acc. -onem), from ten-ir, to hold. —Lat. tenere; see Tenable.

TENOR, the general course of a thought or saying, purport; the highest kind of adult male voice. (F.,—L.) M. E. tenour. 'Tenour, Tenor;' Prompt. Parv. 'Many . . . ordenauncis were made, whereof the tenoure is sette out in the ende of this boke;' Fabyan's Chron.

an. 1257. ed. Ellis, p. 343. 'Tenour, a parte in pricke-songe, tenour;' Palsgrave. = F. teneur, 'the tenor part in musick; the tenor, content, stuffe, or substance of a matter;' Cot. = Lat. tenorem, acc. of tenor, a holding on, uninterrupted course, tenor, sense or tenor of a law, tone, accent. = Lat. tenere, to hold; see Tenable. ¶ The old (and proper etymological) spelling is tenour, like honour, colour, &c. The tenor in music is due to the notion of holding or continuing the dominant note (Scheler).

TENSE (1), the form of a verb used to indicate the time and state of the action. (F., = L.) In Levins. Spelt tence by Palsgrave, On the Verb. In Chaucer, C. T. 16343 (Group G, 875), the expression 'that futur temps' ought to be explained rather as 'that future tense' than 'that future time;' see my note on the line. = F. temps, time, season; O. F. tens (Burguy). = Lat. tempus, time; also a tense of a verb; see Temporal.

TENSE (2), tightly strained, rigid. (L.) A medical word, in rather late use (R.) = Lat. tensus, stretched, pp. of tendere; see Tend (1). Der. tense-ly, -ness; tens-ion, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. tensionem, acc. of tensio, a stretching; tensor, in Phillips, used as a short form of extensor; tens-ile, in Blount, ed. 1674, a coined word; tens-i-ty, a coined word. Also in-tense, toise.

TENT (1), a pavilion, a portable shelter of canvas stretched out with ropes. (F., = L.) M. E. tente, Rob. of Glouc., p. 203, l. 8. = F. tente, 'a tent or pavillion;' Cot. = Low Lat. tenta, a tent; Ducange. Properly fem. of tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Obviously suggested by Lat. tentorium, a tent, a derivative from the same verb. Der. tent-ed, Oth. i. 3. 85.

TENT (2), a roll of lint used to dilate a wound. (F., = L.) See Nares. Properly a probe; the verb to tent is used for to probe, Hamlet, ii. 2. 626. M. E. tente. 'Tente of a wounde or a soore, Tenta;' Prompt. Parv. = F. tente, 'a tent for a wound;' Cot. Due to the Lat. verb tentare, to handle, touch, feel, test; cf. F. tenter, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay;' Cot. See Tempt. Cf. Span. tienta, a probe, tiento, a touch. Der. tent, verb, as above.

TENT (3), a kind of wine. (Span., = L.) 'Tent, or Tent-wine, is a kind of Alicante, . . . and is a general name for all wines in Spain except white; from the Span. vino tinto, i. e. a deep red wine;' Blount, ed. 1674. = Span. vino tinto, red wine; tinto, deep-coloured, said of wine. = Lat. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to dye; see Tinge.

TENT (4), care, heed. (F., = L.) 'Took tent;' Burns, Death and Doctor Hornbook, st. 3. Short for attent or attention; see Attend. Der. tent, verb.

TENTACLE, a feeler of an insect. (L.) Modern. Englished from late Lat. *tentaculum, which is also a coined word, formed from tentare, to feel; see Tempt. Cf. Lat. spiraculum, from spirare. Der. tentacul-ar.

TENTATIVE, experimental. (L.) 'Falsehood, though it be but tentative;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. xx. cont. 3. § 21. = Lat. tentativus, trying, tentative. = Lat. tentatus, pp. of tentare, to try; see Tempt.

TENTER, a frame for stretching cloth by means of hooks. (F., = L.) Properly tenture; but a verb tent was coined, and from it a sb. tenter, which took the place of tenture. The verb occurs in P. Plowman, B. xv. 446; or rather the pp. yntented, suggested by Lat. tentus. M. E. tenture. 'Tenture, Tentowre, for clothe, Tensorium, extensorium, tentura;' Prompt. Parv. 'Tentar for clothe, tend, tende; Tenterhoke, houet;' Palsgrave. = F. tenture, 'a stretching, spreading, extending;' Cot. = Lat. tentura, a stretching. = Lat. tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. tenter-hook, a hook orig. used for stretching cloth.

TENUITY, slenderness, thinness, rarity. (F., = L.) Spelt tenuitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. tenuité, 'tenuity, thinness;' Cot. = Lat. tenuitatem, acc. of tenuitas, thinness. = Lat. tenuis, thin. = ✓ TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. (from Lat. tenuis) ex-tenu-ate.

TENURE, a holding of a tenement. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 108. = F. tenure, 'a tenure, a hold or estate in land;' Cot. = Low Lat. tenura (in common use); Ducange. = Lat. tenere, to hold; see Tenable.

TEPID, moderately warm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 417. = Lat. tepidus, warm. = Lat. tepere, to be warm. = ✓ TAP, to be warm, to glow; whence Skt. tap, to be warm, to warm, to shine, tapas, fire; Russ. topite, to heat. Der. tepid-i-ty, from F. tepidité, 'luke-warmnesse;' Cot., as if from Lat. acc. *tepiditatem; tepid-ness.

TERAPHIM, idols, images, or household gods, consulted as oracles. (Heb.) See Judges, xvii. 5, xviii. 14; Hosea, iii. 4 (A. V.) = Heb. teráphim, s. pl., images connected with magical rites. Root unknown.

TERCE, the same as Tierce, q. v.

TERCEL, the male of any kind of hawk. (F., = L.) Corruptly spelt tassel, Romeo, ii. 2. 160; rightly tercel, Troilus, iii. 2. 56. See Tassel in Nares. M. E. tercel; 'the tercel egle,' Chaucer, Assembly of Fowls, 393. Also tercelet, a dimin. form; Chaucer, C. T. 10818. = O. F. tiercelet [tiercel is not found], 'the tassell, or male of any kind of hawk, so termed because he is, commonly, a third part lesse then the female;' Cot. Cf. Ital. terzolo (now spelt terzuolo), 'a tassell-gentle of a hawke;' Florio. Derived (with dimin. suffixes -el-et) from O. F. tiers, terce, third; just as Ital. terzolo is from Ital. terzo, third. = Lat. tertius, third; see Tierce and Threes. ¶ Burguy gives a different reason, viz. that, in popular opinion, every third bird hatched was a male; he refers to Raynourd's Provençal Dict., v. 412. Either way, the etymology is the same. [†]

TEREBINTH, the turpentine-tree. (L., = Gk.) In Spenser, Shep. Kal., July, 86. = Lat. terebinthus. = Gk. τερέβινθος, the turpentine-tree. Der. terpentine.

TERGIVERSATION, a subterfuge, fickleness of conduct. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. tergiversation, 'tergiversation, a flinching, withdrawing;' Cot. Lit. a turning of one's back. = Lat. tergiversationem, acc. of tergiversatio, a subterfuge. = Lat. tergiversatus, pp. of tergiuersari, to turn one's back, decline, refuse, shuffle, shift. = Lat. tergi = tergo, crude form of tergum, the back; and uersari, to turn oneself about, pass. of uersare, to turn about, frequentative of uertere (pp. uersus), to turn; see Verse.

TERM, a limited period, a word or expression. (F., = L.) M. E. terme, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 316, l. 21. = F. terme, 'a term, time, or day; also, a term, word, speech;' Cot. = Lat. terminum, acc. of terminus, a boundary-line, bound, limit (whence also Ital. termine, termino, Span. termino). Cf. O. Lat. terminen, with the same sense; Gk. τέρμα, a limit. = ✓ TAR, to pass over, cross, fulfil; cf. Skt. trī, to pass over, cross, fulfil. Der. term, vb., Temp. v. 15; and see termination. Also (from Lat. terminus) termin-al, adj., from Lat. terminalis; con-termin-ous, de-termin-ate, ex-termin-ate, pre-de-termin-ate. And (from the same root) en-ter; thrum (1).

TERMAGANT, a boisterous, noisy woman. (F., = Ital., = L.) M. E. Termagant, Termagaunt, Chaucer, C. T. 13741 (Group B, 2000). Termagant was one of the idols whom (in the mediæval romances) the Saracens are supposed to worship; see King of Tars, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, ii. 174-182; Lybeaus Disconus, in the same, ii. 55. See Nares, who explains that the personage of Termagant was introduced into the old moralities, and represented as of a violent character. In Ram Alley, we have the expression: 'that swears, God bless us, Like a very termagant;' Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, x. 322; and see Hamlet, iii. 2. 15. So also: 'this hot termagant Scot;' 1 Hen. IV. v. 4. 114. It has now subsided into the signification of a scolding woman. The name is a corruption of O. F. Tervagant, Tervagan, or Tarvagan; spelt Tervagan in the Chanson de Roland, cxxxiii (Littre), where it likewise signifies a Saracen idol. = Ital. Trivigante, the same, Ariosto, xii. 59 (see Nares, s. v. Trivigant); more correctly, Trivigante. It has been suggested that Trivigante or Tervagante is the moon, wandering under the three names of Selene (or Luna) in heaven, Artemis (or Diana) in earth, and Persephone (Proserpine) in the lower world. Cf. dea trivía as an epithet of Diana. = Lat. ter, thrice, or tri-, thrice; and vagant-, stem of pres. part. of vagare, to wander. See Ternary and Triform, and Vagabond. ¶ See also my note to the line in Chaucer, and Tyrwhitt's note; Ritson, Met. Rom. iii. 260; Quarterly Review, xxi. 515; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction; Trench, Select Glossary; &c.

TERMINATION, end, limit, result. (F., = L.) In Much Ado, ii. 1. 256, where it is used with the sense of term, i. e. word or expression. = F. termination, 'a determining, limiting;' Cot. = Lat. terminationem, acc. of terminatio, a bounding, fixing, determining. = Lat. terminatus, pp. of terminare, to limit. = Lat. terminus, a bound, limit; see Term. Der. termination-al. Also (from Lat. terminare) termin-ate, termin-able, termin-at-ive, terminat-ive-ly. We also use Lat. terminus, sb., as an E. word.

TERN, an aquatic fowl. (Scand.) Not in the old dictionaries. I find it in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792; and it was, doubtless, in much earlier use. = Dan. terne, terne, a tern; Swed. tärna; Icel. berna, a tern, occurring in the local name berney (tern-island), near Reykjavik in Iceland. Widegren's Swed. Dict. (ed. 1788) has tärna, 'tern.' β. It is remarkable that Dan. terne, Swed. tärna, Icel. berna, also mean a hand-maid, maid-servant; cf. G. dirne. The Icel. Dict. says there is no connection between the words, but gives no reason. ¶ I suppose that the scientific Lat. name Sterna is a mere coinage, and of no authority as shewing the orig. form of the word. There was, however, a small bird called in E. a stern. 'The field is Azure, a Cheuron betweene three Sternes,' the said birds being figured in the accompanying wood-cut; Guillim, Display of Heraldry, ed. 1664, p. 216. Evidently from A. S. stearn; 'Beacita, stearn,' in a list of birds, Wright's Voc. i. 281; 'Beacita, vel sturnus, stearn,' id. i. 29. See Starling.

TERNARY, proceeding by, or consisting of threes. (L.) = A senary, and a ternary; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 652 (R.). — Lat. ternarius, consisting of threes. — Lat. terni, pl., by threes. Allied to ter, thrice, and to tres, three; the latter being cognate with E. three. See THREE. Der. (from Lat. terni), tern-ate, arranged in threes, a coined word.

TERRACE, a raised level bank of earth, elevated flat space. (F., — Ital., — L.) Frequently spelt tarras, as in Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 21; here ar is put for er, as in parson for person, Clark for clerk; &c. — F. terrace, terrasse, 'a plat, platform, hillock of earth, a terrace, or high and open gallery'; Cot. — Ital. terracia, terrazza, 'a terrace'; Florio. Formed with suffix -accia, usually with an augmentative force, from Ital. terra, earth. — Lat. terra, earth.

β. Lat. terra stands for an older form *tersa, and signifies dry ground or land, as opposed to sea. Allied to Gk. τράπος (Attic τράπος), a stand or frame for drying things upon, any broad flat surface; τέρεσθαι, to become dry, dry up. Also to Irish tír, land, tírmén, main land, tírm, dry; W. tír, land; Gael. tír, land (whence ceann-tíre, headland, land's end, Cantire). Cf. also Lat. torrere, to parch. — √ TARS, to be dry; whence Skt. trish, to thirst, Goth. thaurusus, dry, G. dürr, dry. See THIRST and TORRID. Fick, i. 600. Der. terra-cotta, baked earth, from Ital. terra, earth, and cotta, baked = Lat. cocula, fem. of pp. of coquere, to cook, bake; see COOK. Also terr-aqueous, consisting of land and water; see AQUEOUS. And see terr-éen, terr-ene, terr-estri-al, terr-i-er, terr-i-or-y. Also fumi-tory, in-ter, medi-terr-an-e-an, tur-meric.

TERREEN, TUREEN, a large dish or vessel, esp. for soup. (F., — L.) Both spellings are poor; it should rather be terrine; tureen is the commonest, and the worst, spelling. So called because orig. made of earthenware. Spelt tureen, Goldsmith, The Haunch of Venison; terrine in Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. terrine, 'an earthen pan'; Cot. Formed, as if from a Lat. adj. *terrinius, earthen, from terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRENE, earthy. (L.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 13. 153. — Lat. terrenus, earthy. — Lat. terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRESTRIAL, earthy. (L.) Spelt terestryal, Skelton, Of the Death of Edw. IV, l. 15. Coined by adding -al (Lat. -alis) to Lat. terrestri-, crude form of terrestris, earthy. β. Terrestris is thought to stand for *terr-ens-tris, formed with suffixes -ens- (as in prat-ens-is, belonging to a meadow) and -tris (for Aryan -lara) from terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRIBLE, awful, dreadful. (F., — L.) Spelt terryble in Palsgrave. — F. terrible, 'terrible'; Cot. — Lat. terribilis, causing terror. — Lat. terrere, to terrify; with suffix -bilis. Allied to Lat. terror, terror; see TERROR. Der. terribly, terrible-ness.

TERRIER, a kind of dog; also a register of landed property. (F., — L.) In both senses, the word has the same etymology. 1. M. E. terriere, terryare, hownde, Terrarius; Prompt. Parv. The dog was so called because it pursues rabbits, &c., into their burrows. Terrier is short for terrier-dog, i. e. burrow-dog. — F. terrier, 'the hole, berry, or earth of a conny or fox, also, a little hillock'; Cot. — Low Lat. terrarium, a little hillock; hence, a mound thrown up in making a burrow, a burrow. Formed with neut. suffix -arium from terr-a, land, earth; see TERRACE. 2. A legal term; spelt terrar in Blount's Nomolexicon. — F. papier terrier, 'the court-roll or catalogue of all the names of a lord's tenants,' &c.; Cot. — Low Lat. terrarius, as in terrarius liber, a book in which landed property is described. Formed with suffix -arius from Lat. terra, as above.

TERRIFIC, terrible, inspiring dread. (L.) Spelt terrifick, Milton, P. L. vii. 497. — Lat. terrificus, causing terror. — Lat. terri-, appearing in terri-tus, pp. of terrere, to frighten; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make; see TERROR and FACT. Der. terrific-ly. Also terrify, formed as if from a F. *terrifier (given in Littré as a new coinage), from Lat. terrificare, to terrify.

TERRITORY, domain, extent of land round a city. (F., — L.) In As You Like It, iii. 1. 8. — O. F. *territorie, later territoire, 'a territory'; Cot. — Lat. territorium, a domain, the land round a town. Formed from Lat. terra, land; as if from a sb. with crude form territori-, which may be explained as possessor of land. See TERRACE. Der. territori-al, adj.

TERROR, dread, great fear. (F., — L.) Formerly written terroure, All's Well, ii. 3. 4 (first folio); but also terror, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 10; ii. 1. 4 (id.). Certainly from F., not directly from Latin. — F. terreur, 'terror'; Cot. — Lat. terrorem, acc. of terror, dread. — Allied to terrere, to frighten, to scare; orig. to tremble. β. Terrere stands for tersere (like terra for tersa); cognate with Skt. tras, to tremble, be afraid, whence trása, terror. — √ TARS, to be dry, to tremble, be afraid; whence also Lithuan. triszėti, to tremble, Russ. triasi, triasate, to shake, shiver. Fick, i. 600. Der. terror-ism. And (from same root) terri-ble, terri-fic, de-ter.

TERSE, concise, compact, neat. (L.) 'So terse and elegant were his concepts and expressions'; Fuller, Worthies, Devonshire (R.)

Used also in the sense of smooth: 'many stones also, . . . although terse and smooth'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 4. § 3. — Lat. tersus, wiped off, clean, neat, pure, nice, terse. Tersus is pp. of tergere, also tergere, to wipe, rub off, wipe dry, polish a stone (whence Sir T. Browne's use of terse). Root uncertain. Der. terse-ly, -ness.

TERTIAN, occurring every third day. (F., — L.) Chiefly in the phr. tertian fever or tertian ague. 'A fever tertiane'; Chaucer, C. T. 14965. — F. tertiane, 'a tertian ague'; Cot. — Lat. tertiana, a tertian fever; fem. of tertianus, tertian, belonging to the third. — Lat. tertius, third. — Lat. tres, three, cognate with E. THREE, q. v. And see TIERCE.

TERTIARY, of the third formation. (L.) Modern. — Lat. tertarius, properly containing a third part; but accepted to mean belonging to the third. — Lat. terti-us, third; with suffix -arius; see TERTIAN.

TESSELATE, to form into squares or lay with checker-work. (L.) Chiefly used in the pp. tesselated, which is given in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. 'Tesseled worke'; Knolles, Hist. of the Turks, 1603 (Nares). — Lat. tesselatus, furnished with small square stones, checkered. — Lat. tessella, a small squared piece of stone, a little cube, dimin. of tessera, a squared piece, squared block, most commonly in the sense of a die for playing with. β. Root uncertain; frequently referred to Gk. τέσσαρες, four, from its square shape; but such a borrowing is very unlikely, and a tessera was cubical, having six sides. It has been suggested that tessera = *tensera, a thing shaken; cf. Vedic Skt. taṁs, to shake. The word is Latin, not Greek.

TEST, a pot in which metals are tried, a critical examination, trial, proof. (F., — L.) The test was a vessel used in alchemy, and also in testing gold. 'Test, is a broad instrument made of maribone ashes, hooped about with iron, on which refiners do fine, refine, and part silver and gold from other metals, or as we use to say, put them to the test or trial'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. M. E. test or teste, Chaucer, C. T. 16286; Group G, 818. — O. F. test, mod. F. têt, a test, in chemistry and metallurgy (Hamilton). Cf. O. F. teste, sometimes used in the sense of skull, from its likeness to a potsherd; mod. F. tête. It is probable that O. F. test and teste were sometimes confused; they merely differ in gender; otherwise, they are the same word. Test answers to a Low Lat. *testum, not found; whilst teste answers to a Low Lat. testa, used to denote a certain vessel in treatises on alchemy; a vessel called a testa is figured in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 326. In Italian we find the same words, viz. testo, 'the test of silver or gold, a kind of melting-pot that goldsmiths vse,' Florio; also testa, 'a head, pate, . . . a test, an earthen pot or galle-cup, burnt tile or brick, a piece of a broken bone, a shard of a pot or tile.' β. All the above words are due to Lat. testa, a brick, a piece of baked earthenware, pitcher, also a potsherd, piece of bone, shell of a fish, skull. Testa is doubtless an abbreviation of *tersta, i. e. dried or baked, with reference to clay or earthenware; allied to terra (= tersa), dry ground. — √ TARS, to be dry; see TERRACE and TORRID; also THIRST. Der. test, verb; cf. 'tested gold,' Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 149. Also test-ac-e-ous, test-y, q. v.

TESTACEOUS, having a hard shell. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. testaceus, consisting of tiles, having a shell, testaceous. — Lat. testa, a piece of dried clay, tile, brick. See TEST.

TESTAMENT, a solemn declaration in writing, a will, part of the bible. (F., — L.) M. E. testament, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 20, l. 9; Ancren Riwe, p. 388. — F. testament, 'a testament or will'; Cot. — Lat. testamentum, a thing declared, last will. — Lat. testa-ri, to be a witness, depose to, testify; with suffix -mentum. — Lat. testis, a witness. Root uncertain. Der. testament-ary; in-test-ate, q. v.; test-at-or, Heb. ix. 16, from Lat. testator, one who makes a will; testat-ix, Lat. testatrix, fem. form of testator. And see testify. (From Lat. testis) at-test, con-test, de-test, pro-test.

TESTER, a sixpence; a flat canopy over a bed or pulpit. (F., — L.) 1. The sense 'sixpence' is obsolete, except as corrupted to tizzy; see Shak. 2 Henry IV, iii. 2. 206. The tester was so called from the head upon it; it is a short form of testern, as in Latimer's Sermons, 1584, fol. 94 (Todd). Again, testern is, apparently, a corruption of teston (sometimes testoon), which was 'a brass coin covered with silver, first struck in the reign of Hen. VIII. The name was given to shillings and sixpences, and Latimer got into trouble by referring to the newly coined shilling or teston; see Latimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 85, where it is spelt testyon. In 1560 the teston of 6d. was reduced to 4½d. The name teston was given to the new coins of Louis XII. of France because they bore the head of that prince; but Ruding observes that the name must have been applied to the E. coin by mere caprice, as all money of this country bore the head of the sovereign'; H. B. Wheatley, note to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 2. 104, where teston occurs. — F. teston, 'a & ἔδρον, from ἔδρα, a base, which from ἔδ-, cognate with E. sit. See Tetragon; and see Four and Sit. Der. tetrahedron, adj.

TETRARCH, a governor of a fourth part of a province. (L., — Gk.) M. E. tetrark (ill spelt tetrak), Wyclif, Luke, ix. 7. — Lat. tetrarcha, Luke, ix. 7. — Gk. τετράρχης, a tetrarch. — Gk. τετρ-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and ἀρχ-ew, to be first. Cf. Skt. ark, to be worthy. See Tetragon; also Four and Arch-. Der. tetrarch-ale; tetrarch-y, Gk. τετραρχία.

TETRASYLLABLE, a word of four syllables. (F., — L., — Gk.) A coined word; from F. tetrasyllabe, 'of four syllables'; Cot. — Late Lat. tetrasyllabus (not in Ducange). — Gk. τετρασύλλαβος, of four syllables. — Gk. τέτρα-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and συλλαβή, a syllable. See Tetragon; also Four and Syllable. Der. tetrasyllabic.

TETTER, a cutaneous disease. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 71; and in Baret (1580). M. E. teter, Trevisa, ii. 61. 'Hec serpedo, a tetere;' Wright's Voc. i. 267. — A. S. teter. 'Inpetigo [= impetigo], teter;' Wright's Voc. i. 20, l. 2; 'Briensis, teter;' id. i. 288, l. 5. Cf. G. zittermal, a tetter, ring-worm, serpigo. E. Müller also cites O. H. G. citaroek with the same sense, which Stratmann gives as zitaroek. β. Diez, in discussing F. dartre, explained as 'a tetter or ringworm' in Cotgrave, derives dartre from a Celtic source, as seen in Bret. darvoeden or daroueden, W. tarwden, taroden, a tetter, which he compares with Skt. dardru, with the same sense; and he supposes tetter to be a cognate word with these. γ. Tetter seems certainly connected with Icel. titra, to shiver, twinkle, G. zittern, to tremble; with the notion of rapid motion, hence, itching.

TEUTONIC, pertaining to the Teutons or ancient Germans. (L., — Gothic.) Spelt Teutonick in Blount, ed. 1674. — Lat. Teutonicus, adj., formed from Teutoni or Teutones, the Teutons, a people of Germany. The word Teutones means no more than 'men of the nation;' being formed with Lat. suffix -ones (pl.) from Goth. thiuda, a people, nation, or from a dialectal variant of this word. See further under Dutch.

TEXT, the original words of an author; a passage of scripture. (F., — L.) M. E. texte, Chaucer, C. T. 17185. — F. texte, 'a text, the original words or subject of a book'; Cot. — Lat. textum, that which is woven, a fabric, also the style of an author; hence, a text. Orig. neut. of textus, pp. of texere, to weave. + Skt. taksh, to cut wood, prepare, form. β. Both from a base TAKS, extension of ✓ TAK, to prepare. 'See Curtius, i. 271, who gives the three main meanings of the root as 'generate,' 'hit,' and 'prepare,' and adds: 'The root is one of the oldest applied to any kind of occupation, without any clearly defined distinction, so that we must not be astonished if we meet the weaver [Lat. tex-tor] in company with the carpenter [Skt. taksh-an, Gk. τέκτων] and the marksman' [Gk. τόξον, a bow]. Der. text-book; text-hand, a large hand in writing, suitable for the text of a book as distinct from the notes; text-u-al, M. E. textuel, Chaucer, C. T. 17184, from F. textuel, 'of, or in, a text,' Cot., coined as if from a Low Lat. *textualis, adj.; textu-al-ly, textu-al-ist. And see text-ile, text-ure below. From the same root are tech-nic-al, q. v.; con-text, pre-text. Also sub-tle, penta-teuch, toil (2).

TEXTILE, woven, that can be woven. (L.) 'The warp and the woof of textiles;' Bacon, Nat. Historie, § 846. — Lat. textilis, woven, textile. — Lat. textus, woven, pp. of texere; see Text. See also texture, tissue.

TEXTURE, anything woven, a web, disposition of the parts. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. texture, 'a texture, contexture, web'; Cot. — Lat. textura, a web. — Lat. textus, pp. of texere, to weave; see Text. And see textile above.

TH.

TH. This is a distinct letter from t, and ought to have a distinct symbol. Formerly, we find A. S. þ and ð used (indiscriminately) to denote both the sounds now represented by th; in Middle-English, þ soon went out of use (it occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris), whilst þ and th were both used by the scribes. The letter þ was assimilated in shape to y, till at last both were written alike; hence y, y (really the, that) are not unfrequently pronounced by modern Englishmen like ye and yat; it is needless to remark that y man was never pronounced as ye man in the middle ages.

For greater distinctness, the symbol ð will be used for A. S. words (and th for M. E. words) corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voiced' th, as in thou; and the symbol þ for A. S. and M. E. words corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voiceless' th, as in thin. It is useful to note these three facts following. 1. When th is initial, it is always voiceless, except in two sets of words, (a) words TETHER, a rope or chain for tying up a beast. (C.) Formerly written tetter. 'Live within thy tetter,' i. e. within your income's bounds; Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 10, st. 9 (sidenote). 'Tethered cattle'; id. sect. 16, st. 33 (E. D. S. p. 42). M. E. tedir; 'Hoc ligatorium, a tedyre;' Wright's Voc. i. 234, col. 2. Not found earlier than the 15th century. Of Celtic origin. — Gael. teadhair, a tether; taod, a halter, a hair rope, a chain, cable; taodan, a little halter, cord; Irish tead, ted, teud, a cord, rope, teidin, a small rope, cord; W. tid, a chain, tidmwy, a tether, tie. Wedgwood also cites Manx tead, teid, a rope. Cf. also W. tant, a stretch, spasm, also a chord, string, W. tanu, tedu, to stretch; Skt. tantu, a thread, from tan, to stretch. Rhys gives Irish teud, O. Irish tét, as equivalent forms to W. tant; Lectures, p. 56. β. The root is perhaps ✓ TA, to stretch; and the orig. sense may have been 'stretched cord.' γ. We also find Icel. tjóðr, a tether, Low G. tider, tier, a tether, Norw. tjoder (Aasen), Swed. tjuder, Dan. tóir, N. Friesic tjüdder (Outsen); but all these are probably of Celtic origin. Der. tether, verb.

TETRAGON, a figure with four angles. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Tetragonal, that is, four-square, as a tetragon or quadrangle;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. tetragone, adj., 'of four corners'; Cot. — Lat. tetragonus. — Gk. τετράγωνος, four-angled, rectangular, square. — Gk. τέτρα-, put for τετρα-, prefix allied to τέτταρες, Attic form of τέσσαρες, four, which is cognate with E. Four, q. v.; and γωνία, an angle, corner, from Gk. γωνν, a knee, cognate with E. Knee. Cf. Lat. prefix quadri-, similarly related to quatuor, four. Der. tetragonal, adj., as above.

TETRAHEDRON, a pyramid, a solid figure contained by four equilateral triangles. (Gk.) Spelt tetraedron and tetrahedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. τέτρα-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and etymologically connected with that; and (b) words etymologically connected with thou. 2. When th is in the middle of a word or is final, it is almost always 'voiced' when the letter e follows, and not otherwise; cf. breathe with breath. A remarkable exception occurs in smooth. 3. No word beginning with th (except thurable, the base of which is Greek) is of Latin origin; most of them are E., but some (easily known) are Greek; thummin is Hebrew.

THAN, a conjunction placed, after the comparative of an adjective or adverb, between things compared. (E.) Frequently written then in old books; extremely common in Shakespeare (1st folio). M. E. thanne, thonne, thenne; also than, thou, then. = A. S. ðonne, than; 'betera ðonne ðæt reaf' = better than the garment; Matt. vi. 25. Closely allied to (perhaps once identical with) A. S. ðone, acc. masc. of the demonst. pronoun; see That. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 252. + Du. dan, than, then. + Goth. than, then, when; allied to thana, acc. masc. of demonst. pron. with neut. thata. + G. dann, then; denn, for, then, than; allied to den, acc. masc. of der. + Lat. tum, then (= Skt. tam, acc. masc. of tad, that). ¶ The same word as then; but differentiated by usage.

THANE, a dignitary among the English. (E.) In Macb. i. 2. 45. M. E. þein, Havelok, 2466. = A. S. þegen, þegn, often þén (by contraction), a thane; Grein, ii. 578. The lit. sense is 'mature' or 'grown up'; and the etymology is from þigen, pp. of þihan, to grow up, be strong, avail, a verb which is commoner in the by-form þeón, with pp. þegen. Leo gives 'geþogen, maturus', from a gloss. See further under Thee (2). + Icel. þegn, a thane (the verb cognate to þihan does not appear). + G. degen, a warrior; orig. one who is mature; from gedigen, pp. of M. H. G. dihen, O. H. G. dihan (mod. G. gedeihen), to grow up, become mature. ¶ Not connected with G. dienen, to serve, which is from quite a different base, and connected with Goth. thius, a servant; Fick, iii. 135, 136. ¶ Fick considers thane (A. S. þegen, G. degen) as immediately identical with Gk. τέκνον, a child, often applied to grown up people. This is even a simpler solution, and does not disturb the relationship with the verb to thee, which is allied to Gk. έρεκον. See Fick, iii. 129; Curtius, i. 271; also Fick, i. 588. From ✓ TAK, to generate.

THANK, an expression of good will; commonly used in the pl. thanks. (E.) Chaucer uses it in the sing. number. 'And haue a þank'; C. T. 614. So also Gower: 'Although I may no þank deserue'; C. A. l. 66, last line. = A. S. þanc, often also þone, thought, grace or favour, content, thanks. The primary sense of 'thought' shews that it is closely allied to Think, q.v. The verb þancian, to thank (Mark, viii. 6), is a derivative from the sb. + Du. dank, sb.; whence danken, vb. + Icel. þökk (= þönk), gen. þakkar; whence þakka, vb. + Dan. tak, sb.; whence takke, vb.; cf. tanke, a thought, idea. + Swed. tack, sb.; whence tacka, vb. + Goth. thagks (for thanks), thank, Luke, xvii. 9; where the s is the usual suffix of the nom. sing.; cf. thagkjan, to think. + G. dank, sb., whence danken, verb. Der. thank, verb, as above; thank-ful, A. S. þancful, spelt ðoneful and glossed 'gratiosus'; Wright's Voc. i. 61, col. 2; thank-ful-ly, thank-ful-ness; thank-less, Cor. iv. 5. 76, thank-less-ly, thank-less-ness, thank-offer-ing, thank-worthy, 1 Pet. ii. 19. Also thanks-giving, i.e. a giving of thanks, L. L. L. ii. 193; thanks-giver.

THAT, demonstr. and rel. pronoun and conjunction. (E.) M. E. that. = A. S. ðæt, orig. neut. of demonstrative pronoun, frequently used as neut. of the def. article, which is merely a peculiar use of the demonst. pronoun. [The masc. se, and fem. seo, are from a different base; see She.] Very rarely we meet with a corresponding masc. form ðe, as in 'ðe hearpere' = the harper, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6, lib. iii. met. 12, where the Cotton MS. has 'se hearpere.' Also with a corresponding fem. form ðeo, as in 'ðá ðeo sáwul hæbban sceal' = which the soul is to have; Adrianus and Ritheus, in Ettmüller's A. S. Selections, p. 40, l. 43. This gives us masc. ðe, fem. ðeo, neut. ðæt, all from the same pronominal base THA = Aryan TA, meaning 'he' or 'that'; Fick, iii. 127, i. 586. The suffix -t in that is merely the mark of the neut. gender, as in what from who, it (formerly hi-t) from he; it answers to Lat. -d as seen in is-tud, qui-d, i-d, illu-d.

β. This Aryan TA appears in Skt. tat, it, that, and in numerous cases, such as tam, him (acc. masc.), tám, her (acc. fem.), te, they, &c. Also in Gk. tó, neut. of def. art., and in the gen. roû, rîs, dat. τῷ, τῇ, acc. τόν, τήν, τό, &c. Also in the latter part of Lat. is-te, is-ta, is-tud. So also Lithuan. tas, masc., ta, fem., that; Russ. toe, masc., ta, fem., to, neut., that; Du. de, masc. and fem., dat, conj., that; Icel. þat, neut., the; Dan. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., the; Swed. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., this; G. der, masc., die, fem., das, neut., the; dass, conj., that; Goth. thata, neut. of def. article.

For the purposes of E. etymology it is necessary to give the A. S. def. art. in full. It is as follows, if we put se and seo (the usual forms) in place of ðe, ðeo. SING. nom. se, seo, ðæt; GEN. ðæs, ðære, ðes; DAT. ðam, ðære, ðam; ACC. ðone, ðá, ðæt; INSTRUMENTAL, ðý (for all genders). PLUR. NOM. AND ACC. ðá; GEN. ðara; DAT. ðám.

¶ The proper plural of that is they; these and those are doublets, both being the pl. of this; see This. Der. (from dat. sing.) there (2); (from acc. sing.) than, then; (from instrumental sing.) the (2); (from nom. pl.) they; (from gen. pl.) their; (from dat. pl.) them; see each of these words. And see (1), thence, there (1), this, thus, those. From same base, tant-amount.

THATCH, a covering for a roof. (E.) A weakened form of thak, due to the use of the dat. thakke and pl. thakkes. Cf. prov. E. thack, a thatch, thacker, a thatcher. M. E. þak, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þæc, thatch; Grein, ii. 564; whence þeccan (for *þæc-ian), to thatch, cover, Grein, ii. 577. + Du. dak, sb., whence dekken, verb (whence E. deck is borrowed). + Icel. þak, sb., þekja, v. + Dan. tag, sb., tække, v. + Swed. tak, sb., täke, v. + G. dach, s., decken, v. β. All from Teut. base THAKA, a thatch; Fick, iii. 127; from Teut. base THAK, to cover. This base has lost an initial S, and stands for STHAK = Aryan ✓ STAG, to cover; as is well shewn by Gk. τέγος, variant of στέγος, a roof. From the same root we have Skt. sthaḡ, to cover, Gk. στέγειν, to cover, Lat. tegere (for *stegere), to cover, Lithuan. stęgti, to cover, Irish teagh, a house, Gael. teach, tigh, a house, Gael. a stigh, within (i. e. under cover), W. ty, a house, toi, to thatch; &c. Der. thatch, vb., as above; thatch-er; spelt thacker, Pilkington's Works, p. 381 (Parker Soc.). Also (from Lat. tegere) teg-u-ment, tile. Also (from Du. decken) deck; and see tight.

THAW, to melt, as ice, to grow warm after frost. (E.) M. E. þawen, in comp. of-þawed, pp. thawed away, Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 53. Spelt þowyn, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þawian, or þawan; 'se wind to-wyrpð and þawað' = the [south] wind disperses and thaws; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 17, last line. A weak verb, from a lost sb. + Du. dooijen, to thaw, from dooi, thaw. + Icel. þeyja, to thaw; from þá, a thaw, thawed ground; cf. þeyr, a thaw. + Dan. tøe, to thaw; tø, a thaw. + Swed. töa, to thaw; tö, a thaw. Cf. M. H. G. douwen, G. verduen, to concoct, digest. β. Fick gives the Teut. base as THAWYA, to melt, from a base THU (Aryan TU), to swell, to become strong; see Tumid. Cf. Skt. taya, water, tu, to become strong, to swell, thv, to become fat; perhaps the orig. sense was to become strong, overpower, said of the sun and south wind; Fick, i. 602. γ. But Curtius, i. 269, connects thaw with Gk. τήναι, to melt, Lat. tubes, moisture, Russ. taiate, to thaw; from ✓ TAK, to run, flow. Der. thaw, sb. ¶ In no way connected with dew.

THE (1), def. article. (E.) M. E. the. A. S. ðe, very rarely used as the nom. masc. of the def. article; we find, however, ðe hearpere = the harper; see quotation under That. The real use of A. S. ðe was as an indeclinable relative pronoun, in extremely common use for all genders and cases; see several hundred examples in Grein, ii. 573-577. β. Just as A. S. se answers to Goth. sa, so A. S. ðe answers to an earlier form ða, which is the exact equivalent of Aryan TA, a pronom. base signifying 'that man' or 'he'; see further under That.

THE (2), in what degree, in that degree. (E.) When we say 'the more, the merrier' we mean 'in what degree they are more numerous, in that degree are they merrier.' This is not the usual def. article, but the instrumental case of it. M. E. the; as in 'neuer the bet' = none the better, Chaucer, C. T. 7533. = A. S. ðý, ðá, as in ðý bet = the better; see numerous examples in Grein, ii. 568. This is the instrumental case of the def. article, and means 'on that account' or 'on what account,' or 'in that degree' or 'in what degree.' Common in the phrase for ðý, on that account; cf. for huý, on what account. See That; and see Why. + Goth. the, instrumental case of def. article. + Icel. þá, þi, dat. (or inst.) case of þat. Cf. Skt. tena, instr. case of tad, sometimes used with the sense of 'therefore'; Benfey, p. 349, s. v. tad, sect. iv.

THEATRE, a place for dramatic representations. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. theatre, Chaucer, C. T. 1887; spelt teatre, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xix. 31. = F. theatre, 'a theatre'; Cot. = Lat. theatrum. = Gk. θεατρον, a place for seeing shows, &c.; formed with suffix -τρον (Aryan -tar), from θεά-ομαι, I see. Cf. θεα, a view, sight, spectacle. β. Allied to Skt. dhyai, to contemplate, meditate on; dhyána, religious meditation; dhyátri, one who meditates; according to Fick, i. 635. But see Curtius, i. 314, where the word is allied to Russ. divo, a wonder, &c.; cf. Gk. θαύμα, a wonder. Der. theatr-ic-al, adj., theatr-ic-al-ly; theatr-ic-al-s, s. pl.; amphi-theatre. And see theo-dolite, theory.

THEE (1), acc. of Thou, pers. pron., which see.

THEE (2), to prosper, flourish, thrive. (E.) Obsolete; M. E. þeon, usually þe or þee, Chaucer, C. T. 7788; 'Theem, or thrifyyn, Vigee'; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þeón, þiön, to be strong, thrive; a strong verb, pt. t. þeah, pp. þogen, Grein, ii. 588; closely allied to þihan, to increase, thrive, be strong, pt. t. þáh, pp. þigen, Grein, ii. 591. + Goth. theihan, to thrive, increase, advance. + Du. gedijen, to thrive, prosper, succeed. + G. gedeihen, O. H. G. dihan, to increase, thrive. β. From Teut. base THIH, to thrive (Fick, iii. 134), answering to Aryan TIK, appearing in Lithuan. tikti, to be worth, to suffice; ni tikti (= G. nicht gedeihen), to be unprofitable; tikyti, to aim; taikyti, to fit; tekti (pres. t. tenkū), to fall to the lot of. — ✓ TAK, to generate, fit, &c.; see Curtius, i. 271; Fick, i. 588. Cf. Gk. tokos, birth, also interest, increase, product.

THEFT, the act of thieving, stealing. (E.) M. E. þefte, Chaucer, C. T. 4393 (or 4395). Theft is put for theft, as being easier to pronounce. — A. S. þiefðe, þeofðe, þyðe (with f sounded as v, and ð voiced), theft; Laws of Ine, §§ 7 and 46; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 106, 130. Formed with suffix -ðe (Aryan -ta) from A. S. þeof, þief, or þef, a thief, or from þeofian, to steal; see Thief. + O. Fries. thiufthe, theft; from thiaf, a thief. + Icel. þyð, sometimes þyft; from þyðr, a thief.

THEIR, belonging to them. (Scand.) The word their belongs to the Northern dialect rather than the Southern, and is rather a Scand. than an A. S. form. Chaucer uses hire or here in this sense (= A. S. hira, of them); C. T. 32. M. E. thair, Pricke of Conscience, 52, 1862, &c.; thar, Barbour, Bruce, i. 22, 23; þeþre, Ormulum, 127. The word was orig. not a possess. pron., but a gen. plural; moreover, it was not orig. the gen. pl. of he (he), but of the def. article. — Icel. þeirra, O. Icel. þeira, of them; used as gen. pl. of hann, hon, þat (he, she, it), by confusion; it was really the gen. pl. of the def. article, as shewn by the A. S. forms. (The use of that for it is a Scand. peculiarity, very common in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambs.) + A. S. ðara, also ðara, gen. pl. of def. art.; see Grein, ii. 565. + G. der, gen. pl. of def. art. + Goth. thize, fem. thizo, gen. pl. of sa, so, thata. See further under They and That. Der. their-s, Temp. i. 1. 58; spelt þeþress, Ormulum, 2506; cf. Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs; formed by analogy with our-s, your-s.

THEISM, belief in the existence of a God. (Gk.) 'All religion and theism;' Pref. to Cudworth, Intellectual System (R.) Coined, with suffix -ism (Gk. -ισμος), from Gk. θεός, a god, on which difficult word see Curtius, ii. 122. β. It can hardly be related to Lat. deus, despite the (apparent) resemblance in sound and the identity of sense. It is rather connected with θεοσάβηαι, to pray; cf. θεό-φαρος, spoken by a god, decreed; and even related (perhaps) to Gk. τίθημι, I place, set. Der. the-ist (from Gk. θεός); the-ist-ic, the-ist-ic-al; a-the-ist, q. v.; apo-the-os-is, q. v. And see theo-cracy, theo-gony, theo-log-y, the-urg-y.

THEM, objective case of They, q. v. Der. them-selves.

THEME, a subject for discussion. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. teme, P. Plowman, B. iii. 95, v. 61, vi. 23. At a later period spelt teme, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 434. — O. F. teme, F. theme, 'a theam,' Cot. — Lat. thema. — Gk. θέμα, that which is laid down, the subject of an argument. — Gk. base θε-, to place; τίθημι, I place. — ✓ DHA, to place, put; whence Skt. dhā, to put; &c. See Thesis.

THEN, at that time, afterward, therefore. (E.) Frequently spelt than in old books, as in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 200 (First folio); it rhymes with begin, Lucrece, 1440. Orig. the same word as than, but afterwards differentiated. M. E. thenne, P. Plowman, A. i. 56; thane, B. i. 58. — A. S. ðænne; also ðanne, ðonne, then, than; Grein, ii. 562, 563. See Than.

THENCE, from that place or time. (E.) M. E. thennēs (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4930; whence (by contraction) thens, written thence in order to represent that the final s was voiceless, and not sounded as z. Older forms thenne, thane, Owl and Nightingale, 132, 508, 1726; also thanene, Rob. of Glouc., p. 377, l. 16. Here thane is a shorter form of thanene (or thanen) by the loss of n. — A. S. ðanan, ðanon, thence; also ðananne, ðanonne, thence, Grein, ii. 560, 561. It thus appears that the fullest form was ðananne, which became successively thanene, thane, thenne, and (by addition of s) thennes, thens, thence. S was added because -es was a favourite M. E. adverbial suffix, orig. due to the genitive suffix of sbs. Again, ða-nan, ða-nan-ne, is from the Teut. base THA = Aryan TA, he, that; see That. March (A. S. Grammar, § 252) explains -nan, -nanne, as an oblique case of the (repeated) adj. suffix -na, with the orig. sense of 'belonging to;' cf. Lat. super-no, belonging (super) above, whence the ablative adverb super-ne, from above. He remarks that belonging to and coming from are near akin, but the lost case-ending inclines the sense to from. 'The Goth. in-mana, within, ut-ana, without, hind-ana, behind, do not have the plain sense from. Pott suggests comparison with a preposition (Lettish no, from). Here belong east-an, from the east; ast-an, aft; feorr-an, from far; &c.' Compare also Hence, Whence. + G. dannen, O. H. G. dannán, thence; from G. base da = Aryan ta. Der. thence-forth, thence-forward, not in early use.

THEOCRACY, the government of a state immediately by God; the state so governed. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Gk. θεοκρατία, the rule of God; Josephus, Against Apion, ii. 16 (Trench. Study of Words). Formed (by analogy with demo-cracy, aristocracy, &c.), from Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and -κρατία, &

-κρατία (as in δημο-κρατία, δημο-κράτεια), i. e. government, power, from κράτος, strong, allied to E. hard. See Theism and Hard; and see Democracy. Der. theocrat-ic, theocrat-ic-al.

THEODOLITE, an instrument used in surveying for observing angles and distances. (Gk.) In Blount, ed. 1674. Certainly of Gk. origin; and a clumsy compound. The origin is not recorded and can only be guessed at. Perhaps from Gk. θεώ-μας = θεόμας, I see; ὁδός, a way; and λεπτός, smooth, even, plain. It would thus mean 'an instrument for seeing a smooth way, or a direct course.' It is no particular objection to say that this is an ill-contrived formation, for it was probably composed by some one ignorant of Greek, just as at the present day we have 'sine-manubrium hair-brushes,' although sine governs an ablative case. β. Another suggestion is to derive it from θεώ-μας, I see, and δολιχός, long, which is rather worse. The former part of the word we may be tolerably sure of. See Theatre. [*]

THEOGONY, the part of mythology which taught of the origin of the gods. (L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The theogony in Hesiod;' Selden, Illustrations to Drayton's Polyolbion, song 11 (R.) Englished from Lat. theogonia. — Gk. θεογονία, the origin of the gods; the title of a poem by Hesiod. — Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and -γονία, origin, from Gk. base γεν-, to beget, from Aryan ✓ GAN, to beget. Cf. Gk. γένος, race, ἐγενόμην, I became. See Theism and Genus or Kin. Der. theogon-ist, a writer on theogony.

THEOLOGY, the science which treats of the relations between God and man. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. theologie, Chaucer, Persones Tale, 3rd pt. of Penitence (Group I, 1043). — F. theologie, 'theology;' Cot. — Lat. theologia. — Gk. θεολογία, a speaking about God. — Gk. θεολόγος, adj., speaking about God. — Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and λέγειν, to speak. See Theism and Logic. Der. theologi-c, theologi-c-al, theologi-c-al-ly; theolog-ise, -ist; theologi-an.

THERBO, a kind of lute. (F., — Ital.) F. thorbe, teorbe (Littre). — Ital. tiiorba (Florio). Remoter origin unknown.

THEOREM, a proposition to be proved. (L., — Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. theoremata. — Gk. θεώρημα, a spectacle; hence, a subject for contemplation, principle, theorem. Formed with suffix -μα (-μαρ-) from θεωρεῖν, to look at, behold, view. — Gk. θεωρός, a spectator. — Gk. θεώ-μας, θεάο-μας, I see; with suffix -πος (Aryan -ra). See Theatre. And see Theory.

THEORY, an exposition, speculation. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt theorie in Minshew. [The M. E. word was theorie, as in Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 59; Gower, C. A. iii. 86, l. 17. This is F. theorique, sb. fem. — Lat. theorica, adj. fem., the sb. ars, art, being understood. See Nares.] — F. theorie, 'theory;' Cot. — Lat. theoria. — Gk. θεωρία, a beholding, contemplation, speculation. — Gk. θεωρός, a spectator; see Theorem. Der. theor-ise, theor-ist; also theor-et-ic, Gk. θεωρητικός, adj.; theor-et-ic-al, -ly.

THERAPEUTIC, pertaining to the healing art. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt therapeutick, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 26. — F. therapeutique, 'curing, healing;' Cot. — Lat. therapeutica, fem. sing. of adj. therapeuticus, healing; the sb. ars, art, being understood. — Gk. θεραπευτικός, inclined to take care of, tending. — Gk. θεραπευτής, one who waits on a great man, one who attends to anything. — Gk. θεραπεύειν, to wait on, attend, serve. — Gk. θεραπ-, stem of θεράψω, a rare sb., for which the more usual form θεράττω, a servant, is used. The stem θερ-αν- means, literally, one who supports or assists; from base θερ- = Aryan DHAR, to support; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, support; and see Firm. Der. therapeutic-s, s. pl.

THERE (1), in that place. (E.) M. E. ther, Chaucer, C. T. 43; written thar in Barbour's Bruce. — A. S. ðær, ðer, Grein, ii. 564; perhaps better written ðær, ðer, with long vowel. The base is Teut. THA = Aryan TA, he, that; see That. March, A. S. Gram. § 252, explains the suffix -r as the locative case of the comparative suffix -ra; cf. Skt. upá-ri, Gk. ὑπερ, Lat. super, Goth. ufa-r, A. S. ofer, E. over. + Du. daar. + Icel. þar. + Dan. and Swed. der. + Goth. thar. + G. da, M. H. G. dár, O. H. G. dár, dára. Cf. Here and Where.

THERE (2), only as a prefix. (E.) In therefore, there-by, &c. It will suffice to explain therefore. This is M. E. therforē, with final -e, as in Ormulum, 2431, where we find: 'tharforē seýððe þho piss word.' Compounded of A. S. ðære, dat. fem. of def. art., and the prep. forē (disyllabic), before, for the sake of, because of; hence ðære-forē = forē ðære = because of the thing or reason, where some fem. sb. is understood. We might supply sacē, dat. case of sacu, strife, process at law, cause; so that therefore = forē ðære sacē = for that cause. For the prep. forē (allied to, yet distinct from for), see Grein, ii. 320.

β. It thus appears that the final e in therefore is not wrong, but therefore and therefor are equivalent. For the fem. dat. ðære, see further under That. We may also note that there- in composition is not quite the same as the adv. there. γ. Similar compounds are there-about or (with added adverbial suffix -s) there-about-s, there-after, there-at, there-by, there-from, there-in, there-of, there-on, there-through, there-to, there-unto, there-upon, there-with. As to these, the A. S. prepositions æfter (after), æt (at), be (by), fram (from), in (in), of (of), on (on), tó (to), wið (with), are all found with the dat. case; the forms there-about, there-through, are not early, and prob. due to analogy. The construction with ðær (e) before its preposition occurs even in A. S. 'When a thing is referred to, ðær is generally substituted for hit with a prep., the prep. being joined on to the ðær; e.g. on hit becomes ðæron; Curfon hie ðæt of beorhtum stáne, gesetton hie ðæron sigora Wealdend = they cut it [the tomb] out of the bright rock, they placed in it the Lord of victories; Sweet, A. S. Grammar, 2nd ed. p. xci. We can easily see how ðære-on, ðære-in become ðæron, ðærin; and this may account for the loss of the final e of there in M. E. therefore.

THERMOMETER, an instrument for measuring the variations of temperature. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. First invented about 1597 (Haydn). Coined from Gk. θερμός, crude form of θερμός, hot, warm; and μέτρον, a measure, a measurer, for which see Metre. β. The Gk. θερμός is supposed by Curtius (ii. 99) to be cognate with E. warm; but there are difficulties as to this; see Warm. Rather, θερμός is almost certainly related to Skt. gharma, heat, and therefore to E. glow. The root is GHAR, to shine, glow; see Glow. Der. thermometr-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly; and see iso-therm-al.

THESAURUS, a treasury of knowledge, esp. a dictionary. (L., -Gk.) A doublet of Treasure, q. v.

THESE, pl. of This, q. v. Doublet, those.

THESIS, a statement laid down to be argued about, an essay on a theme. (L., -Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. -Lat. thesis. -Gk. thesis, a proposition, statement, thing laid down. Put for *θε-τις, allied to θε-τός, placed, verbal adj. from the base θε- = GDHA, to put, place. See Theme. Der. anti-thesis, apo-thesis, epi-thesis, hypo-thesis, meta-thesis, para-thesis, paren-thesis, pros-thesis, pro-thesis, syn-thesis. From same root are apo-the-cary, ana-the-ma, epi-the-t, the-me, the-sau-rus, treasure.

THEURGY, supernatural agency. (L., -Gk.) Rare. A name applied to a kind of magic said to be performed by the operation of gods and demons. Rich. gives an example from Hallywell's Melampromvea (1682), p. 51. Englished from Lat. theurgia, Latinised form of Gk. θεουργία, divine work, magic. -Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and εργον, work, cognate with E. work. The diphthong ou is due to coalescence of o and e. See Theism and Work. Der. theurgi-c, theurgi-cal.

THEWS, pl. sb., sinews, strength, habits, manners. (E.) 'Thews and limbs;' Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 81; cf. Hamlet. i. 3. 12. M. E. þewes, i. e. habits, manners, Chaucer, C. T. 9416. 'Alle gode þewes,' all good virtues; Ancren Riwe, p. 240, l. 16. The sing. þeawe (dat. case) occurs in Layamon, l. 6361, with the sense of sinew or strength; on which Sir F. Madden remarks: 'This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities. Cf. Scotch ihoules, feeble.' In other passages it occurs in the pl. þeawes, þewes, ll. 2147, 6899, 7161, with the usual sense of mental qualities. Of course, as in all metaphorical expressions, the sense of 'bodily strength' is the orig. one, and that of 'mental excellence' is secondary. -A. S. þeow, habit, custom, behaviour; the pl. þeawas signifies manners; Grein, ii. 584. The word does not happen to occur with the orig. sense of strength, but the derived verb þýwan exhibits it. 'Exeo, minando boves ad campum' is glossed by 'ic gá út, þývende oxon to felda' = I go out, driving oxen to the fields, i. e. exercising my strength to compel them; Ælfric's Colloquy (Arator). + O. Sax. thau, custom, habit. + O. H. G. dau, dou (cited by E. Müller).

β. The base is thau-, evidently from Teut. base THU, to be strong, to swell, as noted by Fick, iii. 135. -√TU, to be strong, to swell; cf. Skt. tu, to be strong, to increase, tuv, to become fat, tuv- (prefix), greatly, much; Lithuan. tukti, to grow fat, Russ. tuchnite, to fatten.

γ. It will thus be seen that the sense of bulk, strength, comes straight from the root, and is the true one; it survives in Scotch thowless, thewless, thieveless, for which Jamieson gives a wrong etymology, from A. S. þeow, a servant, a word which, however, is from the same root. The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are due to a misapprehension of the facts.

¶ Quite distinct from thigh, but the root is the same.

THEY, used as pl. of he, she, it. (Scand.) The word they is chiefly found in the Northern dialect; Barbour uses nom. thai, gen. thair, dat. and acc. thaim or tham, where Chaucer uses nom. they, C. T. 18, gen. here, hire, hir, id. 588, dat. and acc. hem, id. 18. The Ormulum has þey, þeyre, their, of them, þeym, dat. and acc., them. Of these forms, hem survives only in the mod. prov. E. 'em, as in 'I saw 'em go;' whilst the gen. here is (perhaps) entirely lost.

Again, here and hem (A. S. hira or heora, heom or him) are the true forms, properly used as the pl. of he, from the same base; whilst they, their, them are really cases of the pl. of the def. article. β. The use is Scand., not E.; the A. S. usage confines these forms to the def. article, but Icelandic usage allows them to be used for the personal pronoun. -Icel. þeir, nom.; þeirra, gen.; þeim, dat.; used to mean they, their, them, as the pl. of hann, hon, he, she. The extension of the use of dat. them to its use as an accusative is precisely parallel to that of him, properly a dat. form only. The Icel. acc. is þá, but Danish and Swedish confuse dat. and acc. together. Cf. Dan. and Swed. de, they; dem (dat. and acc.), them. Also Dan. deres, their, theirs; Swed. deras, their, theirs. + A. S. þá, nom.; þára, þára, gen.; þám, þám, dat.; Grein, ii. 568. [The A. S. acc. was þá, like the nom.; cf. prov. E. 'I saw they horses,' i. e. those horses.] These forms þá, þára, þám, are cases of the plural of the def. art.; from Teut. THA = Aryan TA, pronom. base of the 3rd person. See That.

¶ This explains they, their, them; their was orig. only the gen. pl., just like our, your. Their-s occurs as þeyress, in the Ormulum, 2506, and may be compared with Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs.

THICK, dense, compact, closely set. (E.) M. E. þikke, Chaucer, C. T. 1058. -A. S. þicke, thick, Grein, ii. 590. + O. Sax. thikki. + Du. dik. + Icel. þykkir; O. Icel. þjökkir, þjökkir. + Dan. tyk. + Swed. tjok, tjock. + G. dick, O. H. G. dicchi.

β. The Teut. base is THIKYA, Fick, iii. 133. Perhaps further allied to Gael. and Irish tigh, thick, fat, dense, W. teu, thick, plump. Frequently referred to E. thee, to prosper, see Thee (2); but this is very doubtful and unsatisfactory. γ. Fick also suggests (i. 87) a connection between thick and Lithuan. tankus, thick; and compares both with Skt. tañch, to contract. Der. thick-ly, thick-ness, A. S. þicnes, Mark, iv. 5; thick-ish; thick-en, Macb. iii. 2. 50, properly intransitive, like Goth. verbs in -nan, formed by analogy with other verbs in -en, or borrowed from Icel. þykkna, to become thick (cf. A. S. þiccian, to make thick, Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 220); thick-et, L. L. L. iv. 2. 60, A. S. þiccet, of which the pl. þiccet occurs in Ps. xxviii. (xxix.) 8 to translate Lat. condensa; thick-head-ed; thick-skin, sb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 13.

THIEF, one who steals. (E.) Pl. thieves. M. E. þeef, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 55; pl. þeues, id. Mark, xv. 27. -A. S. þeóf, pl. þeófas, Grein, ii. 588. + Du. dief. + Icel. þjófr. + Dan. tyv. + Swed. tjuv. + G. dieb, O. H. G. diup. + Goth. thiubs. β. All from Teut. base THEUBA (or THIUBA), a thief; Fick, iii. 133. Root unknown; perhaps related to Lithuan. tupėti, to squat or crouch down. Der. thieft, q. v.; thieve, A. S. ge-þeofian, Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 133; thiev-ish, Romeo, iv. 1. 79; thiev-er-y, Timon, iv. 3. 438, a coined word (with F. suffix -erie).

THIGH, the thick upper part of the leg. (E.) M. E. þih, Layamon, 26071; þeis, Trevisa, iv. 185; but the guttural is usually dropped, and the common form is þi or þy, Prompt. Parv., or þe, Havelok, 1950. -A. S. þeoh, or þeo, Grein, ii. 588. + Du. dij. + Icel. þjó, thigh, rump. + M. H. G. diech, die, O. H. G. deoh, theo. β. The Teut. type is THEUHA, thigh, Fick, iii. 135. The orig. sense is 'the fat, thick, plump part'; cf. Icel. þjó, the rump. Closely allied to Lithuan. taukas, fat of animals, tūkti, to become fat, tūkinti, to fatten; Russ. tuke, fat of animals, tuchnite, to fatten. From a base TUK, extension of √TU, to increase, be strong, swell; see Tumid; and see Thew.

THILL, the shaft of a cart. (E.) 'Thill, the beam or draught-tree of a cart or waggon, upon which the yoke hangs; Thiller or Thill-horse, the horse that is put under the thill;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Hence fill-horse, put for thill-horse, Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 100; fill for thill, Troil. iii. 2. 48. M. E. þille. 'Thylle, of a carte, Temo; Thylle-horse, Veredus;' Prompt. Parv. -A. S. þille, glossed by tabulamen, Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 2, where the sense seems to be 'board' or 'trencher'; þille meant a thin slip of wood, whether used for a thill or for a wooden platter; cf. Wright's Voc. i. 168, 202, 234. We also find: 'Tabulatorium, wāh-þyling,' id. i. 38, l. 15; also: 'Area, breda þiling, vel flōr on tō þersenne,' i. e. a thilling of boards, or floor to thrash on, id. 37. + Icel. þilja, a plank, planking, esp. in a ship, a bench for rowers, deck. + M. H. G. dille, O. H. G. dillā, thili, G. diele, a board, plank.

β. These Fick combines under the Teut. type THELYA, a plank; there is another closely allied type THELA, under which may be ranged A. S. þel, a plank (occurring in þell-fæsten, that which is compacted of planks, a ship, Grein, ii. 579, and in other compounds, noted by Grein, s. v. þel), Icel. þili, a wainscot, plank, O. H. G. dil, dilo, a plank. Root unknown; Fick suggests comparison with Skt. itala, a surface. ¶ Many dictionaries render the Icel. and G. words by deal, with reference to a deal-board; and the connection of deal with thill is now certain. No doubt the Du. deel, meaning a plank, board, is the same as E. deal, in the same sense, as shewn in the Addenda, under Deal (2). We must not in any way connect Du. deel, a plank, with Du. deel, a division, share, as I erroneously proposed to do in the first edition, & the words are of different genders. Der. thill-horse, as above.

THIMBLE, a metal cover for the finger, used in sewing. (E.) Though now worn on the finger, similar protections were once worn on the thumb, and the name was given accordingly. M. E. pimbil. 'Thymbyl, Theca,' Prompt. Parv. Formed (with excrement b, as in thumb itself) from A. S. þymel, a thumb-stall; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 150, l. 6. Formed with suffix -l, indicative of the agent, or in this case of the protector, from A. S. þuma, a thumb; see Thumb. Thimble = thumb-er; formed by vowel-change.

THIN, extended, slender, lean, fine. (E.) M. E. pinne, Chaucer, C. T. 9556; pinne, Ancrén Riwe, p. 144, l. 13. — A. S. þynne, Grein, ii. 613. + Du. dun. + Icel. þunnr. + Dan. tynd (for tynn *). + Swed. tunn. + G. dünn; O. H. G. dunni. + W. teneu; Gael. and Irish tana. + Russ. tonkii. + Lat. tenuis. + Gk. *raváo*s, slim. + Skt. tanu. β . All from Aryan TANU, thin, slender, orig. outstretched, as in Gk. *raváo*s; in the Teut. words, the vowel a has changed to o by the influence of following u, and then to u or y; see Fick, i. 592, iii. 130. From \surd TAN, to stretch; cf. Skt. tan, to stretch, Goth. uf-thanjan, A. S. ápenian, to stretch out, Lat. ten-d-ere. Der. thin-ly, thin-ness; thinn-ish; thin, verb. From same root are ten-uity, at-tenuate, es-ten-uate; tena-ble, q. v.; tend (1), q. v.

THINE, THY, poss. pron. belonging to thee. (E.) M. E. thin, with long i, and without final e; gen. thines, dat. thine, nom. and acc. pl. thine; by loss of n, we also have M. E. thi = mod. E. thy. The n was commonly retained before a vowel; 'Thine was thin oth, and min also certain'; Chaucer, C. T. 1141; 'To me, that am thy cosin and thy brother,' id. 1133. — A. S. ðín, poss. pron., declined like an adjective; derived from ðin, gen. case of ðu, thou; see Thou. + Icel. þinn, þín, þitt, poss. pron.; from þin, gen. of þú. + Dan. and Swed. din, poss. pron. + G. dein; from deiner, gen. of du. + Goth. theins; from theina, gen. of thu.

THING, an inanimate object. (E.) M. E. þing, Chaucer, C. T. 13865. — A. S. þing, a thing; also, a cause, sake, office, reason, council; also written þincg, þinc, Grein, ii. 592. + Du. ding. + Icel. þing, a thing; also, an assembly, meeting, council. + Dan. and Swed. ting, a thing; also, an assize. + G. ding, O. H. G. dinc. β . From Teut. type TINGA, Fick, iii. 134; prob. allied to Lithuan. tėkti (pres. t. tenkù), to fall to one's share, to suffice; tikti (pres. t. tinkù), to suit, fit; tinkas, it happens, tikras, fit, right, proper. If so, it is from \surd TAK, to fit, prepare; on which root see Curtius, i. 271. The sense would thus appear to be 'that which is fit,' 'that which happens,' an event; or 'that which is prepared,' a thing made, object. γ . From the same root is A. S. þeón, to thrive, as shewn under Thoe (2); which is certainly related to the curious verb þingan, to grow, only found in pt. t. subj. þunge (Grein, ii. 593) and pp. geþungen (id. i. 471). α . Only very remotely related to think. Der. any-thing, M. E. any þing; no-thing, M. E. no thing; also hus-tings, q. v.

THINK, to exercise the mind, judge, consider, suppose, purpose, opine. (E.) M. E. þenken, to think, suppose, also þenchen, as in Chaucer, C. T. 3254. Orig. distinct from the impers. verb þinken, explained under Methinks; but confusion between the two was easy and common. Thus, in P. Plowman, A. vi. 90, we have I þenke, written I þinke in the parallel passage, B. v. 609. The pt. t. of both verbs often appears as þoughte, pp. þought. Strictly, the pt. t. of think should have become thought, and of me-thinks should have become me-thught, but the spellings ogh and ugh are confused in modern E. under the form ough. — A. S. þencan, þencean, to think, pt. t. þokhte; Grein, ii. 579. A weak verb, allied to þanc, sb., (1) a thought, (a) a thank; see Thank. + Icel. þekkja, old pt. t. þátti, to perceive, know. + Dan. tænke. + Swed. tänka. + G. denken, pt. t. dachte. + Goth. ihagkjan (= thankjan); pt. t. thakhta. β . All from a Teut. base THANK or THAK, to think, suppose; Fick, iii. 128. This is allied to the curious O. Lat. tongēre, to think, to know, a Prænestine word preserved by Festus (see White); also to Lithuan. tikėti, to believe. The last word may be connected with the Lithuan. words mentioned in the last article. The root is TAG, weakened from \surd TAK, to fit; see Fick, i. 588, Curtius, i. 271. γ . The word thing is from the same root, but in a much closer connection; see Thing. Der. thought, sb., q. v. Allied to thank, and (very remotely) to thing.

THIRD, the ordinal of the number three. (E.) Put for thrid. M. E. þridde, Chaucer, C. T. 12770; spelt þirde, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 49. — A. S. þridda, third; Grein, ii. 499. — A. S. þrēo, þri, three; see Three. + Du. derde. + Icel. þriði. + Dan. trede; Swed. trede. + G. dritte. + Goth. thridja. + W. tryde, trydedd; Gael. and Irish trian. + Russ. tretii. + Lithuan. trėczias. + Lat. tertius. + Gk. τρίτος. + Skt. tritija. β . All from a form TERTA, TEXTIA, or TARTIA, as variants of TRITA; Fick, i. 605. Der. third-ly; and see riding.

THIRL, to pierce. (E.) See Thrill.

THIRST, dryness, eager desire for drink, eager desire. (E.) M. E. þurst, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 366; various readings þruste, þrist, þrest. — A. S. þurst, Grein, ii. 611; also þyrst, þirst, id. 613; whence þyrstan, verb, id. 614. + Du. dorst; whence dorsten, verb. + Icel. þorsti; whence þyrsta, vb. + Dan. tørst; whence tørste, vb. + Swed. törst; whence törsta, vb. + G. durst; whence dürsten. + Goth. þaurstei, sb. β . All from Teut. base THORSTA, thirst, Fick, iii. 133; where -ta is a noun-suffix; the orig. sense is dryness. From Teut. base THARS, to be dry, appearing in the Goth. strong vb. thairsan (in comp. gathairsan), pt. t. thars, pp. thaursans. — \surd TARS, to be dry, to thirst; cf. Skt. tarsha, thirst, trish, to thirst, Irish tart, thirst, drought, Gk. répo-eóba, to become dry, répo-alveiv, to dry up, wipe up, Lat. torrere (for torsere *), to parch, terra (for tersa *), dry ground. Der. thirst, vb., as above; thirst-y, A. S. þurstig, Grein, ii. 611; thirst-i-ly, thirst-i-ness. And (from the same root) terr-ace, torr-id, test, toast, tur-een.

THIRTEEN, three and ten. (E.) M. E. þrettene, P. Plowman, B. v. 214. — A. S. þrēotēne, þrēotyne, Grein, ii. 599. — A. S. þrēo, three; and tēn, tyn, ten; with pl. suffix -e. See Three and Ten. + Du. dertien. + Icel. þrettán. + Dan. tretten. + Swed. tretton. + G. dreizehn. All similar compounds. Der. thirteen-ih, A. S. þrēdēða (Grein), Icel. þrettándi, where the n, dropped in A. S., has been restored.

THIRTY, three times ten. (E.) M. E. þritti, Wyclif, Luke, iii. 23; þretty, þirty, Prompt. Parv., p. 492. — A. S. þritig, þrittig, Grein, ii. 601; the change of long i to short i caused the doubling of the t. — A. S. þri, variant of þrēo, three; and -tig, suffix denoting 'ten'; see further under Three and Ten. + Du. dertig. + Icel. þrjátíu. + Dan. trediv. + Swed. trettio. + G. dreizeig. All similar compounds. Der. thirti-eth, A. S. þritigðða.

THIS, demonstr. pron. denoting a thing near at hand. (E.) 1. SINGULAR FORM. M. E. this, Chaucer, C. T. 1574; older form thes, Ancrén Riwe, p. 170, l. 12. — A. S. ðes, masc.; ðeos, fem.; ðis, neuter; see Grein, ii. 581. + Du. deze. + Icel. þessi, masc. and fem.; þetta, neuter. + G. dieser; M. H. G. diser; O. H. G. deser. The O. Sax. form is supposed to have been thes, but it does not appear in the nom. masculine. β . This is most likely an emphatic form, due to joining the two pronominal bases THA and SÁ. For the discussion of these, see That and She. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 133. 2. PLURAL FORMS. The mod. E. pl. form is these; those being only used as the plural of that. This distinction is unoriginal; both these and those are varying forms of the plural of this, as will at once appear by observing the numerous examples supplied by Stratmann. β . The M. E. word for 'those' was tho or thoo, due to A. S. ðá, nom. pl. of the def. article; in accordance with this idiom, we still have the common prov. E. 'they horses' = those horses; it will be easily seen that the restriction of the form those (with o) to its modern use was due to the influence of this older word tho. For examples of tho = those, see Wyclif, Matt. iii. 1, xiii. 17. γ . It remains to give examples of the M. E. pl. forms of this. Layamon has þas, þæs, þes, þeos, ll. 476, 1038, 2219, 3816; alle þos = all these, Avenbite of Inwyrt, p. 10, l. 17; þos word = these words, Owl and Nightingale, 139; þese wordes = these words, P. Plowman, B. prol. 184; þuse wordes = these words, id. C. i. 198. — A. S. ðás, ðás, these, pl. of ðes, this, Grein, ii. 581. Of these forms, ðás became those, while ðés became these.

THISTLE, a prickly plant. (E.) M. E. þistil, spelt thystylle in Prompt. Parv.; where we also find sowthystille = sow-thistle. — A. S. þistel; 'Carduus, þistel,' Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2. + Du. distel. + Icel. þistill. + Dan. tidsel. + Swed. tistel. + G. distel; O. H. G. distil, distula. β . The Teut. type is THISTILA, Fick, iii. 134. The loss of n before s being not uncommon, there can be little doubt that Fick is right in regarding THISTILA as standing for THINS-TILA, i. e. 'the tearer'; from the base THINS, to pull, appearing in Goth. at-thinsan, to pull towards one, M. H. G. dinsen, O. H. G. thinsan, to pull forcibly, to tear. Cf. Lithuan. įesti (put for tensti), to stretch, pull, tasyti (for tansyti), to pull forcibly, tear, from a base TANS which is clearly an extension from the common \surd TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. thistl-y.

THITHER, to that place. (E.) M. E. thider (cf. M. E. fader, moder for mod. E. father, mother); Chaucer, C. T. 1265. — A. S. ðider, ðyder, thither; Grein, ii. 590. + Icel. þáðra, there. + Goth. thatro, thence. β . The Teut. type is HATHRA, Fick, iii. 127; cf. Skt. tatra, there, thither. Formed from Teut. THA = Aryan TA, demonstr. pronom. base, for which see That; with a suffix (Aryan -tra) supposed to be the instrumental case of a comparative in -ia-ra; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 252. Compare Hither and Whither. Der. thither-ward, A. S. þiderweard, Grein, ii. 591.

THOLE (1), THOWL, a pin or peg in the side of a boat to keep the oars in place. (E.) Commonly called a thole-pin, though the addition of pin is needless. M. E. thol, tol. 'Tholle, carte-pynne, or tol-pyn, Cavilla; Prompt. Parv. 'Tholle, a cartpyne;' Palsgrave. — A.S. þol; 'Scalmus, thol,' Wright's Voc. ii. 120. (8th cent.) + Du. dol, 'a thowl;' Sewel. + Icel. þollr, a fir-tree, a young fir, also a tree in general, as ask-þollr, ash-tree, álm-þollr, elm-tree; also a wooden peg, the thole of a row-boat. Cf. Icel. þoll (gen. þallar), a young fir-tree. + Dan. tol, a stopple, stopper, thole, pin. + Swed. tall, a pine-tree; Swed. dial. idall, the same (Rietz). And cf. Norweg. tall, toll, a fir-tree, esp. a young fir-tree; toll, a thole (Aasen).

β. Just as E. tree came to be a general term for a piece of wood, as in axle-tree, swingle-tree, boot-tree, and the like, it is easy to see that thole had once the sense of 'stem' or 'tree,' and, being esp. applied to young trees, came to mean the thole of a boat, as being made of a slip from a young tree or stem. ¶ Sometimes connected with thill; there is no clear link between the words, esp. as to form. Der. thole-pin. [†]

THOLE (2), to endure, suffer. (E.) In Levins. Obsolete in books, but a good word; it still occurs in prov. E. 'He that has a good crop may thole some thistles;' North-Country Proverb, in Brockett. M. E. þolien, þolen, Chaucer, C. T. 7128. — A.S. þolian, to suffer, endure, tolerate; Grein, ii. 594. + Icel. þola, the same. + Dan. taale. + Swed. tåla. + M. H. G. dolen, doln; O. H. G. dolēn, tholon; whence M. H. G. duld, G. geduld, patience. + Goth. thulan. β. All from a base THOL, from earlier THAL, answering to TOL from Aryan ✓ TAL, to bear; tol- appears in Lat. tollere, tolerare; see further under Tolerate.

THONG, a strip or strap of leather. (E.) Spelt twangue in Levins. Put for thwong; the w is now lost. M. E. þwong, Wyclif, John, i. 27; we also find þong, Rob. of Glouc. p. 116, l. 5. — A.S. þwang; in seod-þwang = shoe-thong, John, i. 27. The change from a to o before n is common, as song = A.S. sang, strong = A.S. strang. + Icel. þvengr, a thong, latchet; esp. of a shoe. β. The lit. sense is 'a twist,' or 'that which is forcibly twisted,' and it is properly applied to a twisted string rather than, as now, to a strip. The verb from which it is derived will be found under Twinge, q. v.

THORAX, the chest of the body. (L. — Gk.) A medical term. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount gives the adj. thorachique. — Lat. thorax (gen. thoracis), the breast, chest, a breast-plate. — Gk. θώραξ (gen. θώρακος), a breast-plate; also, the part of the body covered by the breast-plate. β. The orig. sense is 'protector' or 'defender;' the Gk. θωρακ- answers to Skt. dhāraka, a trunk or box for keeping clothes, lit. a protector or preserver, from dhrī, to bear, maintain, support, keep, &c. — ✓ DHAR, to bear, hold; see Firm. Der. thoraci-c, from the crude form thoraci.

THORN, a spine, sharp woody spine on the stem of a plant, a spiny plant. (E.) M. E. þorn, Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 29. — A.S. þorn, Matt. xxvii. 29. + Du. doorn. + Icel. þorn. + Dan. tjørn. + Swed. törne. + G. dorn. + Goth. thaurnus. And cf. Russ. tërne, the black-thorn, térnie, thorns; Polish tarn, a thorn. β. The Teut. type is THORNA, Fick, iii. 131; from the base THAR = Aryan ✓ TAR, to bore, pierce, so that the sense is 'piercer;' the suffix -na being used to form the sb. from the root. See further under Trite. Der. thorny, cf. A.S. þornigt, thorny, Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 2; thorn-less. Also thorn-back, the name of a fish which has spines on its back, M. E. þornebake, Havelok, 759.

THOROUGH, going through and through, complete, entire. (E.) It is merely a later form of the prep. through, which was spelt þoru as early as in Havelok, 631, and þuruk in the Ancræn Riwele, p. 92, l. 17. Shak. has thorough as a prep., Merry Wives, iv. 5. 52, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 3 (where the folios and 2nd quarto have through); also as an adv., 'it pierced me thorough,' Pericles, iv. 3. 35; and even as an adj., L. L. L. ii. 235. The use of it as an adj. probably arose from the use of thoroughly or thoroughly as an adv. in place of the adverbial use of through or thorough. Cf. 'the feast was thoroughly ended;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 18. We find thorough as a sb., in the sense of 'passage,' J. Bradford's Works, i. 303 (Parker Society). The old sense of through is still preserved in thorough-fare, i. e. through-fare. See Thorough. Der. thorough-ly, thorough-ness; thorough-bred, thorough-going, thorough-paced. Also thorough-bass, which prob. means through-bass, the bass being marked throughout by figures placed before the notes; and thorough-fare, i. e. through-fare, Cymb. i. 2. 11, Milton, P. L. x. 393.

THORP, THORPE, a village. (E.) Best spelt thorp. In Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xii. st. 32. M. E. þorp, Chaucer, C. T. 8075. — A.S. þorp, as a place-name, A.S. Chron. an. 963. It means a village. + Du. dorp, a village. + Icel. þorp. + Dan. torp, a hamlet; Swed. torp, a little farm, cottage. + G. dorf. + Goth. þaurp, a field, Nehem. v. 16. β. The Teut. type is THORPA, Fick, iii. 138. Allied to Lithuan. troba, a building, house. Perhaps also to Irish treabh, 'a farmed village [meaning, I suppose, a village round a farm], a tribe, family, clan;' Gael. treabhair, s. pl. (used collectively), houses; W. tref, a homestead, hamlet, town. Here the Irish and Gael. forms can be explained from the Irish treabhair, I plough, till, cultivate, Gael. treabh, to plough, till the ground; and perhaps we may conclude that thorp orig. meant the cluster of houses around a farm.

γ. Thorp has often been compared with the Lat. turba, a crowd; but the connection seems to me by no means sure, neither does it lead to anything satisfactory.

THOSE, now used as the pl. of that, but etymologically one of the forms of the pl. of this. (E.) See This.

THOU, the second pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. thou. — A.S. þú. + Icel. þú. + Goth. þu. + Dan., Swed., and G. du; (lost in Dutch.) + Irish and Gael. tu; W. ti. + Russ. ty. + Lat. tu. + Gk. σύ, τὺ. + Pers. tú; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 152. + Skt. tvam (nom. case). All from an Aryan base TU, thou. Fick, i. 602. Der. thine, q. v., often shortened to thy.

THOUGH, on that condition, even if, notwithstanding. (E.) It would be better to spell it thogh, in closer accordance with the pronunciation; but it seems to have become a fashion in E. always to write ough for ogh, and not to suffer ogh to appear; one of the curious results of our spelling by the eye only. M. E. thogh, Chaucer, C. T. 727 (or 729); the Ellesmere MS. has thogh, the Camb. MS. has thou, and the Petworth MS. has þoo; the rest, though, thoughe. Older spellings, given by Stratmann, are þah, þaih, þeah, þah, þez, þaz, þauh, þau, þei, þeiz, þeigh. — A.S. ðeah, ðéh, Grein, ii. 582; the later M. E. thogh answers to ðeah, with change of á to o, as in bán = bone. + Du. doch, yet, but. + Icel. þó. + Dan. dag. + Swed. doch. + G. doch, O. H. G. doh. + Goth. thauh. β. All from the Teut. type THAUH, which is explained, from Gothic, as being composed of THA and UH. Here, THA is a demonst. pron. = Aryan TA; see further under That. Also UH is Goth. uh, sometimes used as a conj., but, and; but also a demonstrative suffix, used like the Lat. -ce, as in sah, put for sa-uh, this here; and sometimes added, with a definite force, as in hwaz-uh, each, every, from hwaz, who, any one. Perhaps we may explain though, in accordance with this, as signifying 'with reference to that in particular.' Der. al-though, q. v.

THOUGHT, the act or result of thinking, an idea, opinion, notion. (E.) Better spelt thoght; there is no meaning in the introduction of u into this word; see remarks upon Though above. M. E. þoght, þouzt; the pl. þouztis is in Wyclif, 1 Cor. iii. 20. — A.S. þoht, also geþoht, as in Luke, ii. 35; also þeah, geþeah, Grein, ii. 582. Lit. 'a thing thought of, or thought upon;' from A.S. geþoht or þoht, pp. of þencan, to think; Grein, ii. 579. See Think. + Icel. þótti, þóttir, thought; from the verb þekkja, to know, pt. t. þátti, the pp. not being used. + G. dachte, gedacht; from gedacht, pp. of denken, to think. Der. thought-ful, M. E. þohtful, Ormulum, 3423; thought-ful-ly, thought-ful-ness; thought-less, less-ly, less-ness.

THOUSAND, ten hundred. (E.) M. E. þousand, Chaucer, C. T. 1956. — A.S. þúsand, Grein, ii. 611. + Du. duizend. + Icel. þúsund; also þúshund, þúshundrað. + Dan. tusind. + Swed. tusen (for tusund). + G. tausend. + Goth. thusundi. We also find Lithuan. tūkstantis, a thousand; Russ. tuisiacha, a thousand. β. The word is doubtless much corrupted, as all numbers are; still the Icel. form tells us that the latter element is the Icel. and A.S. hund, a hundred, cognate with Lat. centum, and answering to Aryan KANTA, clipped form of DAKANTA, lit. tenth decade; see this explained under Hundred. We might refer Icel. þús- to Teut. base THU = Aryan TU, to swell, whence Skt. tuvi- (for tui-), much, very; which would give the sense 'many hundred;' but this does not account for the s; neither are the Lithuanian and Slavonic forms at all easy to account for. Der. thousand-th, a late word, formed by analogy with four-th, &c.; thousand-fold, M. E. þusendfald, St. Katherine, 2323.

THOWL, the same as Thole (1), q. v.

THRALL, a slave. (Scand.) M. E. þral, Chaucer, C. T. 12123. O. Northumb. ðræl, Mark, x. 44; not an A.S. word, but borrowed from Norse. — Icel. þrall, a thrall, serf, slave; Dan. træl; Swed. träl. Prob. cognate with O. H. G. drigil, drēgil, trigil, trikil, a slave; cited by Fick and E. Müller. Formed from the Teut. base THRAG, to run, represented by Goth. thragjan, A.S. þrægian, to run; so that Icel. þrall and O. H. G. drigil may both be referred to a Teut. type THRAGILA, a runner, hence one who runs on errands, a servant. This will explain the long æ in Icel. and Danish. See Fick, iii. 138; and cf. A.S. þrag, þrah, a running, course, cognate with Gk. τροχός, a course, just as Goth. thragjan answers to Gk. τρέχειν.

β. We should not overlook the curious Gk. τροχίλος (from τρέχειν), used to denote a small bird supposed to be attendant on crocodiles. The form of the root is TARGH, TRAGH, to run. ¶ Just because the A.S. version of Exod. xxi. 26 has 'þirle his éare mid ánum éle' = drill his ear with an awl, it has been suggested (see Richardson's Dict. and Trench, Study of Words) that the word thrall is derived from A.S. þyrlian, to drill. It is sufficient to remark that þyrlian is an A.S. word not used (in that sense) in Icelandic, whilst þrall is a Norse word not used (except when borrowed) in A.S.; to which may be added that an Icel. æ could not come out of an A. S. y. The statement is a pure invention, and (fortunately) is disproved by phonetic laws. It may, in any case, be utterly dismissed. Der. thral-dom, M. E. þrældom, Layamon, 29156; from Icel. þrældóm, thraldom; the Icel. suffix -dóm being the same as the A. S. suffix -dóm.

THRASH, THRESH, to beat out grain from the straw. (E.) The spelling with e is the older. M. E. þreschen, þreschen, Chaucer, C. T. 538. Put for þerschen, by metathesis of r. — A. S. þerscan, þirscan, Grein, ii. 581. A strong verb, pt. t. þærse, pp. þorscen; though it would be difficult to give authority for these forms. The pp. þroschen occurs in the Ormulum, l. 1530; and þrosschen in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 186, l. 18. + O. Du. derschen (Hexham); Du. dorschen. + Icel. þreskja. + Dan. tærse. + Swed. tröska. + G. dreschen. + Goth. þriskan, pt. t. þrisk, pp. þriskans. β. All from Teut. base THRASK, to beat, Fick, iii. 140. Allied to Lithuan. tarszkėti, to rattle, clap; traskėti, to rattle, make a cracking noise; Russ. treskate, to burst, crack, crackle, tresk, a crash; cf. Russ. tresnute, to burst, crack, strike, hit, beat, thrash, treschate, to crackle, rattle. Evidently from a base TARSK, to crack, burst, crackle; then to strike, thrash. Fick cites O. Slavonic troška, a stroke of lightning; so that tarak was prob. particularly used at first of the rattling of thunder, and then of the noise of the flail. Der. thrash-er or thresh-er, M. E. þreschare, Prompt. Parv.; thrash-ing or thresh-ing; thrashing-floor or thresh-ing-floor, Ruth, iii. 2. Also thresh-old, q. v.

THRASONICAL, vain-glorious. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; As You Like It, v. 2. 34. A coined word, as if with suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from a Lat. adj. Thrasonicus *; but the adj. really in use was Thrasonianus, whence F. Thrasorien, 'boasting, Thraso-like'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -cus (or -anus), from Thrasoni-, crude form of Thraso, the name of a bragging soldier in Terence's Eunuchus. Evidently coined from Gk. θρασύς, bold, spirited. — ✓DHARS, to be bold; cf. Skt. dharska, arrogance, dhars, to be bold; see Dare (1).

THRAVE, a number of sheaves of wheat. (Scand.) See Nares. Generally 12 or 24 sheaves. The pl. threaves = clusters or handfuls of rushes, is in Chapman, Gent. Usher, ii. 1 (Bassiolio). M. E. þraue, þreue, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 55. [The A. S. þræf or þræf is unauthorised.] — Icel. þræfi, a thrave, number of sheaves; Dan. trave, a score of sheaves; Swed. trafve, a pile of wood. Cf. Swed. dial. trave, a thrave. Orig. a handful. — Icel. þrifa, to grasp (pt. t. þreif); þrifa, to seize.

THREAD, a thin twisted line or cord, filament. (E.) M. E. þread, þread, Chaucer, C. T. 14393. The e was once long; the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. have the spelling threed (Group B, 3665). — A. S. þræd, a thread; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxix. § 1 (b. iii. pr. 5). Lit. 'that which is twisted.' — A. S. þræwan, to twist, also to throw; see Throw. + Du. draad, thread; from draaijen, to twist, turn. + Icel. þræðr. + Dan. træad. + Swed. tråd. + G. draht, drath, wire, thread; from O. H. G. drajan, G. drehen, to twist. Der. thread, verb, Rich. II, v. 5. 17; thread-y, i. e. thread-like. Also thread-bare, so bare that the component threads of the garment can be traced, M. E. þreadbare (þreadbare in the Hengwrt MS.), Chaucer, C. T. 260 or 262. Doublet, thrid.

THREAT, a menace. (E.) M. E. þret; the dat. þrete occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 58; hence the verb þreten, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 754; also the verb þretenen, Wyclif, Mark, i. 25. [The latter is mod. E. threaten.] — A. S. þræat, (1) a crowd, crush, or throng of people, which is the usual meaning, Grein, ii. 598; also (2) a great pressure, calamity, trouble, and hence, a threat, rebuke, Grein, ii. 598, l. 1. The orig. sense was a push as of a crowd, hence pressure put upon any one. — A. S. þræat, pt. t. of the strong verb þræotan, appearing only in the impersonal comp. áþræotan, to afflict, vex, lit. to press extremely, urge. + Icel. þrjóta, pt. t. þraut, pp. þrotinn, to fail, lack, come short; used impersonally. (The orig. sense was perhaps to urge, trouble, whence the sb. þraut, a hard task, struggle.) + Goth. þrūntan, only in the comp. usthrūntan, to use despitely, trouble, vex greatly. + O. H. G. drīozan, in the comp. ardrīozan, M. H. G. erdrietzen, impers. verb, to tire, vex; also appearing in G. verdrissen (pt. t. verdriss), to vex, trouble. β. All from the Teut. base THRUT, to press upon, urge, vex, trouble; this answers to Lat. trudere, to push, shove, crowd, urge, press upon (cf. trudis, a pole to push with); also to Russ. trudite, to make a man work, to trouble, disturb, vex. γ. This Aryan base TRUD is an extension from the base TRU, to vex, as seen in Gk. trúv-eu, to harass, afflict, vex, and in Gk. trúv-ua, a wound, trúv-uy, a hole (a thing made by boring), trúv-ous, distress. δ. Lastly, TRU is a derivative from ✓TAR, to rub, bore; see Trite. We see clearly the successive senses of rub or bore, harass, urge, crowd, put pressure upon any one, threaten. Cf. our phrase 'to bore any one.' The derivation is verified by the A. S. þrei, a throe, an affliction, vexation, threat, þrædn, to afflict (Grein, ii. 596, 597), G. drohen, a threat, from the shorter base THRU = Aryan TRU; Fick, iii. 140. See Throe. Der. threat, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 347, M. E. þreten (as above), A. S. þrædan (weak verb), Grein, ii. 598; also threat-en, M. E. þretenen (as above); threat-en-ing, threat-en-ing-ly. From the same base, ab-truse, de-trude, ex-trude, in-trude, ob-trude, pro-trude.

THREE, two and one. (E.) M. E. þre, Wyclif, Matt. xviii. 20. — A. S. þræd, Matt. xviii. 20; other forms þrío, þrī, þrý, Grein, ii. 599. + Du. drie. + Icel. þrír (fem. þrjár, neut. þríu). + Dan. tre. + Swed. tre. + Goth. threis. + G. drei. + Irish, Gael, and W. tri. + Russ. tri. + Lat. tres, neut. tria. + Gk. τρεῖς, neut. τρία. + Lithuan. trys (stem tri-). + Skt. tri. β. All from Aryan TRI, three (masc. TRAYAS, neut. TRIA); Fick, i. 604. Origin unknown; some have suggested the sense 'that which goes beyond,' as coming after two. Cf. Skt. trī, to pass over, cross, go beyond, fulfil, complete. Perhaps it was regarded as a 'perfect' number, in favour of which much might be said. Der. three-fold, A. S. þrifeald, þrífæald, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiii. § 4 (b. iii. met. 9); three-score, Muck Ado, i. 1. 201; also thri-ce, q. v.; and see thir-d, thir-teen, thir-ty. From the same source are tri-ad, tri-angle, tri-nity, tri-pos, &c. See Tri. Also tierce, terc-el, ter-tian, ter-ti-ar-y.

THRENODY, a lament, song of lamentation. (Gk.) Shak. even ventures upon threnes, Phoenix, l. 49. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has both threne and threnody. Englished from Gk. θρηνηδία, a lamenting. — Gk. θρήνη-ος, a wailing, lamenting, sound of wailing, funeral dirge (cf. θρήνη-μαι, I cry aloud); and θήνη, an ode, from θείδω, to sing. See Drone and Ode.

THRESH, the same as Thrash, q. v.

THRESHOLD, a piece of wood or stone under the door or at the entrance of a house. (E.) The word is to be divided thresh-old, where old stands for wold. The loss of w is not unknown before o; Shak. has old = wold, K. Lear, iii. 4. 125. M. E. þreshwold, þreswold, Chaucer, C. T. 3482; þreshewold, P. Plowman, B. v. 357; þerswold, Wright's Voc. i. 170, l. 16. — A. S. þerscöld, Deut. vi. 9 (where the w is already dropped); fuller form þerscwald, as in 'Limen, þerscwald', Wright's Voc. i. 290, l. 16. Lit. 'the piece of wood which is beaten' by the feet of those who enter the house, the thrash-wood. — A. S. þerscan, to thresh, thrash; and wald, weald, a wood, hence a piece of wood. See Thrash and Weald or Wold. So also Icel. þresh-jöldr, a threshold; from þreskj-a, to thrash, beat, and völdr, wood.

THRICE, three times. (E.) The final -e is put for s; it is a mere device for shewing that the final sound is hard, i. e. sounded as s and not as z. So also the pl. of mous(e) is written mice; &c. Thrice stands for thris, contracted form of M. E. þries or þryes, a word which was formerly dissyllabic: 'And þries with their speres clatering,' Chaucer, C. T. 2956. β. Again, þrie-s was formed (with adverbial suffix -s, orig. the suffix of the gen. case) from an older form þriē, also dissyllabic; the words on-ce, twi-ce originating in the same manner. The form þrie is in Layamon, 17432, earlier text; and þries in the same, 26066, later text. — A. S. þrīwa, thrice, Exod. xxxiii. 14; Grein, ii. 601. — A. S. þrī, three. See Throe.

THRID, a thread. (E.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 278. The same as Thread, q. v. Der. thrid, verb, Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 404.

THRIFT, frugality. (Scand.) M. E. þrift, Chaucer, C. T. 16893. — Icel. þrjft, thrift, where the t is added to the stem; we also find þrjft, thriving condition, prosperity. — Icel. þrjft-inn, pp. of þrjfta, only used in the reflex. þrjfsk, to thrive; see Thrive. ¶ No doubt þrjft-t is for þrjft-ð; cf. thef-t for thef-th; the suffix = Aryan -ta, used to form a sb. from a verb.

THRILL, THIRL, to pierce. (E.) Spenser uses thrill in the unmetaphorical sense, to pierce with an arrow; F. Q. iii. 5. 20, iv. 7. 31; hence the metaphorical use, as in F. Q. iv. 1. 49. Thirl is an older spelling of the same word. 'Thyrlyn, thyrlylyn, or peercyn. Penetro, terebro, perforo;' Prompt. Parv. M. E. þirlen, Chaucer, C. T. 2712; þurlen, Ancræn Riwle, p. 392, l. 24. — A. S. þyrlian, to pierce through, spelt þirlan, Exod. xxi. 6, Levit. xxv. 10. Again, þyrlian is a shorter form for þyrelian; we find the sb. þyreli-ung, a piercing, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxi, ed. Sweet, p. 152, last line, and the verb þurk-þyrelian, to pierce through (through-thirl), two lines further on. The verb þyrelian is a causal verb, from the sb. þyrel, a hole (caused by boring), Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 11 (b. iii. pr. 11). β. Lastly, þyrel is also found as an adj., with the sense of bored or pierced. 'Gif monnes þeoh bið þyrel' (various reading þyrl) = if a man's thigh be pierced; Laws of Ælfred, § 62, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 96. This is exactly equivalent to the cognate M. H. G. durchel, O. H. G. durchil, pierced, an adj. derived from durch, prep., through; similarly, A. S. þyrel stands for þyrehel *, derived (by the usual vowel-change from u to y) from A. S. þurh, through. The suffix -el (or -il) = Aryan -ra, as in mick-le, liit-le, &c.; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 228, Schleicher, Compend. § 220

γ. We thus see that A. S. pyri = through-el; whence the verb was formed. See Through. The ultimate root is ✓TAR, to pierce; cf. Irish tar, through.

¶ Fick, i. 595, derives A. S. pir-l, a hole, directly from ✓TAR; but the true form is certainly pyrel, and he passes over one step in the descent from the root to through, and from through to pyrel, without any explanation. From following this lead, I have made the same mistake in explaining Drill, q. v. The Du. drillen is from dril (O. Du. drille), a hole; and O. Du. drille must have been a derivative from the old form of Du. door, through; cf. O. Saxon thurh, through. Der. thrill, sb., a late word; thrill-ing, pres. part. as adj. Also nos-tril, q. v. Doublet, drill (from Dutch).

THRIVE, to prosper, flourish, be successful. (Scand.) M. E. priven (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 3677; Havelok, 280; Ormulum, 10868. A strong verb; pt. t. þraf, Ormulum, 3182, þrof, Rob. of Glouc. p. 11, l. 5; pp. priven. — Icel. þrifa, to clutch, grasp, grip, seize; hence þrifask (with suffixed -sk = sik, self), lit. to seize for oneself, to thrive. [It is suggested in the Icel. Dict. that þrifask is not connected with þrifa, but the transition from 'seizing to oneself' to 'thiving' is easy, and, as both are strong verbs, conjugated alike, it is hardly possible to separate them. Cf. Norw. triva, to seize, trivast, to thrive.] The pt. t. is þreif, and the pp. þrifinn; hence the sb. þrif, prosperity, and E. thrift. + Dan. trives, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trivelse, prosperity. + Swed. trivas, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trefnad, prosperity. Der. thriv-ing-ly; thrift-t, q. v.; thrift-y, M. E. þrifty, Chaucer, C. T. 12905; thrift-i-ly, thrift-i-ness; thrift-less, thrift-less-ly, -ness. Also thraive, q. v.

THROAT, the fore-part of the neck with the gullet and wind-pipe, the gullet. (E.) M. E. þrote, Ancrén Riwe, p. 216, l. 4. — A. S. þrote, throat, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxii, § 3 (bk. iii. pr. 1); also þrotu, þrota; 'Guttur, þrotu', Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2; 'Guttur, þrota', id. 70, last line. + O. H. G. drozza, M. H. G. drozze, the throat; whence G. drossel, throat, throttle. β. Referred in Etymüller to A. S. þreotan (pp. þroten), to press; a verb treated of s. v. Threat. But it is more likely that an initial s has been lost, and that A. S. þrote stands for stroto. This s is preserved in Du. strot, the throat, O. Du. stroot, strot, 'the throat or the gullet', Hexham, stroote, 'the wesen [weasand] or the wind-pipe', id. So also O. Fries. strotbolla = A. S. þrotbolla, the gullet or windpipe; and cf. Ital. strozza, the gullet, a word of Teut. origin. We must therefore refer it to a base STRUT.

γ. Again, the Swed. strupe, Dan. strube, the throat, are clearly related; and are allied to Icel. strjúpt, the spurting or bleeding trunk, when the head is cut off, Norweg. strupe, the throat, a small opening, stroppe, strobe, water flowing out of lumps of ice or snow. These lead us to a base STRUP.

δ. We actually possess derivatives of both bases in the equivalent dimin. forms throtille and thropple (see Thropple); and it is easy to see that both sets of words are from the common base STRU, to flow, stream, whence E. Stream, q. v. — ✓SRU, to flow. The orig. sense was clearly that of 'pipe' or of an opening whence water flows; easily transferred to the sense of that wherewith things flow. Der. throtille, the wind-pipe, dimin. of throat; throtille, verb, to press on the windpipe, M. E. þrotlen, Destruction of Troy, 12752. Also thropple, q. v.

THROB, to beat forcibly, as the heart. (E.) M. E. þrobben, rare. 'With þrobbant herte' = with throbbing heart; P. Plowman, A. xii. 48. The word must be either E. or Scand., as it begins with þ; but it appears neither in A. S. nor in the Scand. languages. We must call it E.

β. Allied to Russ. trepete, palpitation, throbbing, trembling, fear; trepate, to throb, palpitate with joy; and prob. to trepate, to beat hemp, also to knock softly. Also to Lat. trepidus; see Trepidation. Der. throbb, sb., Spenser, Shep. Kal. May, 208.

THROE, pang, pain, agony. (E.) It might be spelt throw, but is probably spelt throe to distinguish it from the verb to throw. M. E. þrowe. 'Throwe, Erumpna'; Prompt. Parv. And see þrowes, pl., pangs, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 181, l. 2. — A. S. þrēd (short for þreow), a rebuke, affliction, threat, evil, pain: 'þoliað wē nu þrēd on helle' = now we suffer a throe in hell, Caedmon, ed. Grein, l. 389; see Grein, ii. 596. — A. S. þreow, pt. t. of strong verb þreowan (pp. þrowen), to afflict severely; a verb of which the traces are slight. Lye has: 'þreowan, agonizare, Cot. 140, 194,' but his reference is not clear; we also find the pp. þrowen in an obscure passage; see Grein, i. 46. The clearest traces of þreowan are in the derivatives of the pp. þrowen; these are numerous and common, such as þrowere, a martyr, þrowian, to suffer, esp. to suffer great pain, þrowing, martyrdom, &c.; see Grein, ii. 601, 602. + Icel. þrjá, a throe, hard struggle; þrjá, to pant after; þreyja, to endure. + O. H. G. thraowa, drowa, dróa, M. H. G. drouwe, droue, dró, a threat; whence G. drohen, to threaten. β. All from Teut. base THRU = Aryan TRU, to bore, hence, to vex; cf. Russ. trytite, to nip, pinch, gall. From ✓TAR, to bore; see Trite, and see Threat.

THRONE, a royal seat, chair of state. (F., = L., = Gk.) Now conformed to the Gk. spelling. M. E. trone, Wyclif, Matt. v. 34. —

O. F. trone (13th cent.), spelt throne in Cot.; mod. F. trône. — Lat. thronum, acc. of thronus, Matt. v. 34. — Gk. θρόνος, a seat, chair; lit. a support. — ✓DHAR, to hold, support; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, hold, support, whence dharana, preserving, supporting, a support, dharant, the earth.

THRONG, a great crowd of people. (E.) M. E. þrong, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 135; þrang, Pricke of Conscience, 4704. — A. S. ge-þrang, a throng, Grein, i. 473; where the common prefix ge- makes no difference. — A. S. þrang, pt. t. of the strong vb. þringan, to crowd, to press (pp. þrungen), Mark, v. 24. + Du. drang, a crowd; from dringen, to crowd. + Icel. þröng, a throng. + G. drang, a throng; from drang, pt. t. of dringen (pp. drungen), to crowd, press. Cf. Dan. trang, Swed. trång, adj., pressed close, tight, prov. E. throng, adj., busy. (And cf. Goth. threihan (pp. thraihans), to throng, press round, from the ✓TARK.)

β. All from Teut. base THRANG (for THRANH); Fick, iii. 139. Allied to Lithuan. trenkti, to jolt, to push, trankmas, a tumult. Thus the Aryan base is TRANK, nasalised form of ✓TARK, to twist, press, squeeze; see Throw, and see Torture. Der. throng, verb, M. E. þrongen, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3755.

THROPPLE, THRAPPLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt thrapple by Johnson, who gives it as a Lowland Sc. word; better thropple, see Halliwell and Jamieson. Halliwell gives also thropple, to throttle; a derived sense. A dimin. form of *thrope, a variant of *strop, the throat, as appearing in Norweg. and Swed. strupe, Dan. strube, the throat. Thropple is, in fact, a mere variant of throottle. See further under Throat. ¶ This seems to me the simplest explanation; it is usually said to be a corruption of A. S. þrotbolla, the gullet, which requires very violent treatment to reduce it to the required form, besides having a different sense. The A. S. þrotbolla survived for a long time; Palsgrave gives: 'Throtogole or throtebole, neu de la gorge, gosier.' It means throat-bole rather than throat-ball, as Halliwell renders it; see Bole.

THROSTLE, the song-thrush. (E.) M. E. þrostel, Chaucer, C. T. 13703. 'Mavis' is glossed by 'a throstel-kok' in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Voc. i. 164, l. 1. — A. S. þrostle; 'Merula, þrostle', Wr. Voc. i. 62, col. 2; spelt þrostle (by loss of t), id. i. 29, col. 2. + M. H. G. trostel; of which a varying form is troscel or droscel (G. drossel); the latter answers to O. H. G. throscla, dimin. of throscia (for throscia), a thrush. β. Throstle is a variant of *throschel, a dimin. of thrush; we actually find the form thrushill as well as thrustyle in the Prompt. Parv. See Thrush (1).

THROTTLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) See Throat.

THROUGH, from beginning to end, from one side to the other, from end to end. (E.) For the form through, see Thorough. M. E. þurh, þuruh, Ancrén Riwe, p. 92, ll. 11, 17. Other forms are þurs, þursu, þurch, þurgh, þoru, þoruk, þoru, &c.; see Stratmann. Also þruh, Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 102, by metathesis of r; and hence mod. E. through. — A. S. þurh, prep. and adv., through, Grein, ii. 607, 610; O. Northumb. þerh, Matt. xxvii. 18 (Lindisfarne MS.) + Du. door. + G. durch, O. H. G. durh, duruh. + Goth. thairh, through. β. The Goth. thairko, a hole, is doubtless connected with thairh; and the A. S. þyrel, a hole, is a derivative from þurh, through; as shewn under Thrill. The fundamental notion is that of boring or piercing; and we may refer through to the ✓TAR, to bore. γ. This is made more probable by comparing through with Irish tar, beyond, over, through, tri, through, tair, beyond; Lat. trans, across; Skt. trias, through, over, from tri, to pass over, a verb which is allied to Lat. terere; see Trite. Der. through-ly, thoroughly (see Thorough); through-out, M. E. þuruhut, Ancrén Riwe, p. 212, l. 23, with which cf. G. durchaus, a similar compound.

THROW, to cast, to hurl. (E.) One sense of the word was to twist or wind silk or thread; hence throwster, a silk-winder; 'Throwstar, devideresse de soye'; Palsgrave. The orig. sense was to turn, twist, whirl; hence a turner's lathe is still called a throw (Halliwell). M. E. þrowen, pt. t. þrew, P. Plowman, B. xx. 163; pp. þrowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24 (earlier version), now contracted to throwen. — A. S. þrāwan, to twist, whirl, hurl; pt. t. þrēow, pp. þrāwen; a verb which, strangely enough, is rare. 'Contorquere, id. samod þrāwe', i. e. I twist together, occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 155, l. 16. The pt. t. þrēow = turned itself, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 510, l. 8. Leo quotes, from various glossaries: 'ge-þrāwan, torquere: d-þrāwan, crispere; ed-þrāwan, to twist double; þrāwing-spīn, a throwing (or winding) spindle.' The orig. sense is still preserved in the derived word thread = that which is twisted. β. It is difficult to make out the exact form of the base; perhaps we may take it to be THRIW, standing for THRIHW, from THARH, corresponding to Lat. torquere, to twist. At any rate, the Lat. torquere is certainly a cognate word, with precisely the same senses, viz. to twist, to wind, to whirl, to fling; see further under Torture. γ. Other allied words, from the same ✓TARK, to turn, twist violently (Fick, i. 597), are Goth. threikan, to throng round, press upon, G. drehen, O. H. G. drājan, to turn, whirl, Du. draaijen, to turn, twist, whirl; also Skt. tarhu, a spindle, tarhuta, spinning. The A.S. þringan, whence E. throng, is a nasalised form from the same root; see Throng. Der. throw, sb., thrower; and see threa-d, throng.

THRUM (1), the tufted end of a weaver's thread; coarse yarn. (Scand.) See Thrum in Nares. In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 201. M. E. þrum. 'Thrumm, of a clothe, Filamen;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc licium, a throm;' Wright's Voc. i. 235. = Icel. þróm (gen. þrómur), the edge, verge, brim of a thing (hence the rough edge of a web); Norweg. tröm, tram, trumm, edge, brim (Aasen); Swed. dial. tromm, tröm, a stump, the end of a log (Rietz). + O. Du. drom, or drom-garen [thrum-yarn], 'thred on the shuttle of a weaver;' Hexham. + G. trum, end, thrum, stump of a tree. β. All from Teut. type THRAMA, an end, thrum; Fick, iii. 131. Here THRAMA = THAR-MA, the suffix -ma being substantival. Allied to Gk. ῥέπ-μα, end, Lat. ter-minus, end, limit; see Term. Der. thrumm-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 80.

THRUM (2), to strum, play noisy music. (Scand.) 'This single thrumming of a fiddle;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, i. 1 (Jaques). = Icel. þruma, to rattle, to thunder; cf. þrymr, an alarm, a noise; Dan. tromme, a drum; Swed. trumma, to beat, to drum. See Trumpet and Drum.

THRUSH (1), a small singing-bird. (E.) M. E. þrusch. 'Boþe þe þrusche and þe þrustele' = both the thrush and the thristle, Will. of Palerne, 820. = A. S. þrysce, spelt þryscce in Wright's Voc. i. 63, l. 2; þrise, id. 281, l. 21. + O. H. G. droseca, a thrush; whence G. drossel. β. These answer to a Teut. type THRASKA, but the more usual type is THRASTA; Fick, iii. 140. The latter appears in Icel. þröstr (gen. þrastar), a thrush; Norweg. trast, trost (Aasen); Swed. trast; and in the dimin. A. S. þrost-le, M. H. G. trost-el, a thrush; cf. Russ. drozd, a thrush (perhaps a borrowed word). γ. The forms in the latter set correspond to Lat. turdus, turda, a thrush, Lithuan. strazdas, strazda, a thrush; and the last of these shews that an initial s has been lost. The orig. form appears to have been STAR-DA. Cf. Vedic tarda, a kind of bird (cited by Fick); perhaps Skt. tārśka, a kind of bird, may also be related. The orig. sense was prob. 'chirper' or 'twitterer'; cf. Gk. σπίς, σπίς, to twitter, Lat. stris, a screech-owl, stur-nus, a starling, and E. star-ling. Der. throst-le, q.v.

THRUSH (2), a disease marked by small ulcerations in the mouth. (Scand.) 'Thrush, a disease in the mouth, esp. of young children;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The form of the word shews that the word is English or Scandinavian; it appears to be the latter. It occurs again in the Dan. tröske, the thrush on the tongue, Swed. trösk, Swed. dial. trösk (Rietz). These words are clearly allied to Dan. tör, Swed. torr, dry, Icel. þurr, dry, A. S. þyrr, dry (a rare word), and to Dan. törke, Swed. törka, Icel. þurka, drought; also to M. E. thrust, thirst. The Swed. torsk = torr-isk; similarly thrush (= thur-sk) is formed from Icel. þurr, dry, by adding the E. suffix -sk = ish. See Thirst.

THRUST, to push forcibly. (Scand.) M. E. þrusten, but more commonly þristen, as in Havelok, 2019, and sometimes þresten, as in Chaucer, C. T. 2614 (or 2612). The form þresten may have been due to A. S. þreastan, to oppress, afflict, cf. geþreastan in Grein, i. 473; this is related to Thread and Throw, which see. But thrust is properly of Scand. origin. = Icel. þrýsta, to thrust, compress, press, force, compel. β. The base THRUST is doubtless from an earlier form THRUT, answering to Aryan TRUD, as seen in Lat. trudere, to thrust, push, which has precisely the same sense. The base THRUT is treated of under Threaten, q.v. Perhaps we may refer hither Swed. trut, the snout of an animal, as being that which is thrust into the ground. γ. TRUD is an extension from TRU, to vex; from Aryan ✓TAR, to rub, bore; see Threaten and Trite. Der. thrust, sb., Oth. v. 1. 24.

THUD, a dull sound resulting from a blow. (E.) In Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 8. Also used by G. Douglas and others (Jamieson); and see Notes and Queries, 4S. i. 34, 115, 163, 231, 275. It seems to be connected with A. S. þóden, a whirlwind, violent wind, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xviii.; ed. Sweet, p. 128, l. 17. 'Turbo, þóden;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 37, l. 10. It belongs to the same family as Thump, q.v.; and see Type.

THUG, an assassin. (Hindustani.) Modern. = Hind. thag, thag (with cerebral th), a cheat, knave, impostor, a robber who strangles travellers; Maráthi thak, thag, the same; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms; p. 517.

THUMB, the short, thick finger of the hand. (E.) M. E. þombe, Chaucer, C. T. 565 (or 563); formed with excrement b (after m) from the earlier puma, Ancrén Riwle, p. 18, l. 14. = A. S. puma or púma, the thumb; 'Pollex, puma;' Wright's Voc. i. 283, col. 1. + Du. duim. + Swed. tumme. + O. H. G. dúmo, G. daumen. Cf. Icel. þumall, the thumb of a glove.

β. All from the Teut. type THU-MAN, a thumb, lit. 'the thick finger;' Fick, iii. 135. From Teut. base THU = ✓TU, to swell, grow large; see Tumid. Cf. Tuber. Der. thumb-kin, a dimin. of thumb, but used as equivalent to thumb-screw, an instrument of torture for compressing the thumb (Webster); thumb-ring, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 365; also thimb-le, q.v.

THUMMIM, perfection. (Heb.) We have urim and thummim, Exod. xxviii. 30, Ezra, ii. 63, &c. The literal sense of these difficult words is, probably, 'fires (or lights) and perfections,' but the Heb. pl. need not be exactly kept to in English; 'light and perfection' would probably be the best E. equivalent; Smith, Dict. of the Bible. = Heb. thummim, pl. of tóm, perfection, truth. = Heb. root táman, to be perfect. See Urim.

THUMP, to beat heavily. (E.) In Rich. III, v. 3. 334; and in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 10. I know of no earlier example. By the confusion between th and d sometimes seen in Low G. languages (cf. E. father with A. S. fæder), we meet with the word also in the form dump; as in Icel. dumþa, to thump, Swed. dial. dumpa, to thump, dumpa, to make a noise.

β. As E. th = Gk. τ (initially) and a final p is not unfrequently unchanged in comparing Gk. with E., I see no reason why we may not connect E. thump with Gk. τύμμανον, a drum, and τύμνεν, to strike. See Tympanum and Type; and see Dump. Der. thump, sb., thump-er.

THUNDER, the loud noise accompanying lightning. (E.) For thuner; the d after n is excrement. M. E. þoner, Iwain and Gawain, l. 370, in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 16; more commonly þonder or punder, Chaucer, C. T. 494, 6314. = A. S. þunor, thunder, Grein, ii. 606. Allied to A. S. þunian, (1) to become thin, be stretched out, (2) to rattle, thunder; Grein, ii. 606. Cf. A. S. ge-þun, a loud noise, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. donder. + Icel. þórr (for þonr), Thor, the god of thunder; with which cf. Dan. torden, Swed. tordön, thunder. + G. donner, O. H. G. thonar, thunder.

β. All from Teut. base THAN, to thunder (Fick, iii. 130) = Aryan TAN. Consequently, we have further allied words in Lat. tonare, to thunder, tonitru, thunder, Skt. tan, to sound. γ. Instead of identifying this base TAN, to sound, with the common ✓TAN, to stretch (see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 101), it seems better to separate them; esp. as we may consider TAN as a by-form of ✓STAN, to thunder, make a noise, appearing in Skt. stan, to sound, sigh, thunder, stanita, thunder, stanana, sound, groaning, Gk. στένειν, to groan, Lithuan. stenėti, to groan, Russ. stenate, stonate, to groan, moan; Fick, i. 249; see Stun. This accounts for the fact that we actually also find A. S. tonian, to thunder. 'Tono, ie tonige;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 138, l. 3. Der. thunder, verb, A. S. þunian, Grein; thunder-bolt, Temp. ii. 2. 38 (see Bolt); thunder-stone, J. Cæs. i. 3. 49; thunder-stroke, Temp. ii. 1. 204; thunder-struck, Milton, P. L. vi. 858; thunder-ous, id. P. L. x. 702; thunder-er, id. P. L. vi. 491. Also Thurs-day, q.v.

THURIBLE, a censer for burning frankincense. (L. = Gk.) 'A pot of manna, or thurible;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2 (R.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the Lat. form thuribulum. Englished from Lat. thuribulum, also spelt turibulum, a vessel for holding frankincense. = Lat. thuri-, turi-, crude form of thus or tus, frankincense; with suffix -bulum, as in findi-bulum (from fundere). This Lat. sb. is not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. θύος, incense. = Gk. θύειν, to offer part of a meal to the gods, by burning it, to sacrifice. Cf. Skt. dhūma, smoke; Lat. fumus, smoke, which is the native Lat. word from the same root as Gk. θύος. = ✓DHU, to shake, blow, fan a flame. See Fume. Der. (from Lat. thuri-), thuri-fer, one who carries incense; where the suffix -fer = bearing, from ferre, to bear. From the same root are thyme and fume.

THURSDAY, the fifth day of the week. (E.; confused with Scand.) The day of the god of thunder, the Scand. Thor. Thur is a corruption of thuner (= thunder), due to confusion with Thor, which had the same sense. M. E. þurs-dei, Ancrén Riwle, p. 40, l. 7; þorsday, þorseday, þursday, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140, and footnotes; spelt þunres-dai, Layamon, 13929. = A. S. þunres dag, rubric to Matt. xv. 21; where þunres is the gen. of þunor, thunder, and dag = day; see Thunder and Day. + Icel. þórs-dagr, Thursday; from þórs, gen. case of þórr, Thor, thunder; dagr, a day. So also are compounded Du. Donderdag, Swed. and Dan. Torsdag, G. Donnerstag. [†]

THUS, in this manner. (E.) M. E. thus, Chaucer, C. T. 1880. = A. S. ðus, thus, so, Grein, ii. 611. Certainly allied to the word this, but it is hardly possible to determine what case and gender it represents. It most resembles A. S. ðys, instrumental case (masc. and neut.) of ðes; so also the O. Sax. thus, thus, may be compared with O. Sax. thius, neut. of instrumental case of thesa, this. See This, That. + O. Fries. and O. Sax. thus, thus. + Du. du.

THWACK, WHACK, to beat severely. (E.) In Levins, and in Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 189. 'If it be a thwack' [blow]; Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 2 (Lapet). Most likely a slightly varied form of M. E. þakken, to stroke, used in a jocular sense; compare our double use of stroke. 'When Nicholas had doon thus euery del, And thakked her about the lendes wel;' Chaucer, C. T. 3304.—A. S. þaccian, to stroke, said of stroking a horse; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 41, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. + Icel. þjökka, to thwack, thump. β. For the change from thwack to thack, see Whittle.

THWART, transversely, transverse. (Scand.) Properly an adv., as used by Spenser: 'Yet whether thwart or flatly it did lyte' [light, alight]; F. Q. vi. 6. 30. He also has it as a prep.: 'thwart her horse' = across her horse, F. Q. iii. 7. 43. The M. E. use shews clearly that the word was used adverbially, esp. in certain phrases, and then as an adj.; the verbal use was the latest of all. M. E. þwert, þwart. 'Andeloug, nouht ouer-þwert' = endlong, not across; Havelok, 2822. 'Ouertþwart and endeloug' = across and endlong, Chaucer, C. T. 1993; þwertouer, Ancrén Riwe, p. 82, l. 12; þwert ouer þe ilond, Trevisa, v. 225; 'His herte ðo wurd þwert' = his heart then became perverse, Genesis and Exodus, 3099. The word is of Scand. origin, as it is only thus that the final -t can be explained. The A. S. for 'perverse' is þweorh, Grein, ii. 612, cognate with which is Icel. þverr, masc., the neut. being þvert. The sense of þverr is across, transverse, whence um þvert = across, athwart; taka þvert, to take athwart, to deny flatly; storm mikinn ok veðr þvert = a great storm and adverse winds. + Dan. tvær, adj., transverse; tvært, adv., across; Swed. tvär, adj., cross, unfriendly, tvärt, adv., rudely. + Du. dwars, adj. and adv., cross, crossly. + A. S. þweorh, perverse, transverse, as above. + M. H. G. dwerch, twerch, G. zwerch, adv., across, awry, askance, obliquely. + Goth. thwairhs, cross, angry. β. All from Teut. type THWERHA, transverse, also cross, angry, Fick, iii. 142. The base THWARH sufficiently resembles that of Lat. torquere, to twist; and this relationship is well established by the occurrence of M. H. G. dwer(e)n, O. H. G. tweran, to twist, turn round, twirl, allied to Gk. τροπή, a hole, and Lat. terere, to bore. The ultimate root is ✓TAR, to bore, rub; see Torture and Trité. γ. The sense of perverse, cross, or angry is easily deducible from that of transverse, which again is from that of twisting; from the entangled and irritating condition of threads twisted into confusion; all from the notion of twirling or turning round and round. Der. thwart, verb, M. E. þwerten, Genesis and Exodus, 1324; also a-thwart, q. v.

THWITE, to cut. (E.) See Whittle.
THY, shorter form of Thine, q. v. (E.) Der. thy-self, A. S. þin self, where both þin and self are declined, the gen. being þines selves; see Grein, ii. 427, s. v. self.

THYME, a fragrant plant. (F., —L., —Gk.) The th is pronounced as t, because the word was borrowed from F. at an early period. M. E. tyme, Prompt. Parv., p. 494. —F. thym, 'the herb time'; Cot. = Lat. thymum, acc. of thymus, thyme. —Gk. θύμος, θύμων, thyme; from its sweet smell; cf. Gk. θύος, incense, and Lat. fumus, smoke. See Thurible. Der. thym-y, Gay, Fable 22, l. 11.

TI—TY.

TIARA, a round wreathed ornament for the head. (L., —Gk., —Pers.?) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, vii. 337; and see Index to Parker Soc. publications. [The form tiar in Milton, P. L. iii. 625, is from F. tiare, given in Cotgrave.] —Lat. tiara, Virg. Æn. vii. 247. —Gk. τίαρα, τίάρας, the Persian head-dress, esp. on great occasions; see Herodotus, i. 132, vii. 61, viii. 120; Xenophon, Anab. ii. 5. 23. And see Smith's Dict. of Antiquities. β. Clearly not a Gk. word, and presumably of Persian origin. I suggest a possible connection with Pers. tájvar, wearing a crown, crowned. The proper word is simply Pers. táj, 'a crown, a diadem, a crest'; see Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 351, where the tiara is described; and see p. 352.

TIBIA, the large bone of the leg. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. A medical term. —Lat. tibia, the shin-bone. Der. tibi-al.

TIC, a convulsive motion of certain muscles, esp. of the face, a twitching. (F., —Teut.) Borrowed from F. tic, a twitching; and chiefly used of the tic douloureux, painful twitching, the name of a nervous disease; where douloureux = Lat. dolorosus, painful, from dolor, pain. The F. tic was formerly esp. used with respect to a twitching of the muscles of horses (see Litré), and is the same word as F. ticq, or tiquet, 'a disease which, on a sudden stopping a horses breath, makes him to stop and stand still'; Cot. Cf. prés du tiquet de la mort, 'near his last gasp'; id. The F. tic also means a vicious habit; cf. Ital. ticchio, a ridiculous habit, whim, caprice. β. Of Teutonic origin; guided by the etymology of caprice, Diez suggests a prob. origin from O. H. G. ziki, a kid, dimin. of O. H. G. zige, G. ziege, a goat, cognate with A. S. ticcen, a goat, Gen. xxxviii. 19. γ. Scheler thinks the word may be allied to G. zucken, to twitch, shrug; with which cf. G. zug, a draught, ziehen, to draw, and E. tug. It comes still nearer to Low G. tukken, to twitch. And see Tick (4).

TICK (1), a small insect infesting dogs, &c. (E.) 'A tick in a sheep;' Troil. iii. 3. 315. M. E. tyke (dat. case), in Polit. Songs, p. 238, l. 4, in a poem of the time of Edw. II. Spelt teke, Wright's Voc. i. 255, col. 1. Prob. an E. word, as it is certainly Teutonic; the F. tique being merely borrowed. + O. Du. teke, 'a tike, or a doggs-lowse'; Hexham; Low G. teke, täke. + G. zücke, zecke, a tick (whence Ital. zecca). β. From the Teut. base TAK, to seize, touch, appearing in Icel. taka, to seize, Goth. tekan, to touch; this base, as has been explained (s. v. Take), has lost initial s, and stands for STAK, to stick, pierce; from ✓STAG, to seize. The meaning of the word is either 'seizer,' i. e. biter, or 'piercer,' with the same sense; and it is closely allied to Tickle, q. v.

TICK (2), the cover into which feathers are put, to serve for a bed. (L., —Gk.) 'Quilts, ticks, and mattresses;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 1. § 2. 'And of fetherbeddes rypped the tekys & helde theym in the wynde, that the fethers myght be blowyn away;' Fabyan's Chron., an. 1305–6, fol. lxxx; ed. Ellis, p. 414. Spelt ticke in Palsgrave. The spelling teke used by Fabyan is Englished from Lat. theca, a case, which became Low Lat. techa, a linen case, a tick (Ducange); also teca, as in Prompt. Parv., s. v. teye; 'The teke of a bed, Teca culcitaria,' Levins; the Lat. th being sounded as t. From the same Lat. theca was derived the F. taie, spelt taye in Cotgrave, and explained as 'any filme or thin skin,' whence une taye d'oreiller, 'a pillowbeer,' i. e. a pillow-case. —Gk. θήκη, a case to put anything into; derived from the base θη- as seen in θη-ν-μυ, I place, put. —✓DHA, to put; see Theme. ¶ The Du. tijk, a tick, is likewise from Lat. theca. Der. tick-ing.

TICK (3), to make a slight recurring noise, to beat as a watch. (E.) Todd cites from Ray, Remains, p. 324, 'the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch.' The word is prob. imitative, to express the clicking sound, cf. click; yet it may have been suggested by Tick (4), q. v. Cf. G. ticktak, pit-a-pat.

TICK (4), to touch lightly. (E.) There is a game called tig, in which children endeavour to touch each other; see Halliwell. This was formerly called tick. 'At hood-wink, barley-break, at tick, or prison-base;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 30. M. E. tek, a light touch. 'Tek, or lytlyle towche, Tactulus;' Prompt. Parv. Not found earlier, except in the frequentative form tikelen; see Tickle. + Du. tik, a touch, pat, tick; tikken, to pat, to tick. + Low G. tikk, a light touch with the tip of the finger; metaphorically, a moment of time. 'Ik quam up den Tikk daar, I came there just in the nick of time;' Bremen Wörterbuch. β. A weakened form of the Teut. base TAK, to touch, just as tip (in tip and run) is a weakened form of tap, made by the substitution of a lighter vowel. See Take. Der. tick-le, q. v.

TICK (5), credit; see Ticket.

TICKET, a bill stuck up, a marked card, a token. (F., —G.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. —O. F. etiquet, 'a little note, breviate, bill or ticket; especially such a one as is stuck up on the gate of a court, &c., signifying the seisure, &c. of an inheritance by order of justice;' Cot. This is the masc. form of etiquette (formerly estiquete, Litré), a ticket. —G. sticken, to stick, put, set, fix; cognate with E. Stick, q. v. And see Etiquette. Der. tick-et, vb. Also tick, credit, by contraction for ticket; 'taking things to be put into a bill, was taking them on ticket, since corrupted into tick,' Nares; he gives examples, shewing that tick occurs as early as 1668, and that the phrases upon ticket and on ticket were in use.

TICKLE, to touch slightly so as to cause to laugh. (E.) M. E. tikelen, tiklen, Chaucer, C. T. 6053. Not found earlier, but the frequentative from the base tik-, to touch lightly, weakened from the Teut. base TAK, to touch; see Tick (4), and Take, Tangent. We also find M. E. tikel, adj., unstable, ticklish, easily moved by a touch, Chaucer, C. T. 3428; from the same source. Der. tickl-er; tickl-ish, Troil. iv. 5. 61, formed by adding -ish to M. E. tikel above; tickl-ish-ly, -ness.

TIDE, season, time, hour; flux or reflux of the sea. (E.) M. E. tide, Chaucer, C. T. 4930; the usual sense is 'season' or hour; hence the time between flux and reflux of the sea, and, finally, the flux or reflux itself. —A. S. tīd, time, hour, Mark, xiii. 33. + Du. tijd. + Icel. tīð. + Dan. and Swed. tīd. + G. zeit; O. H. G. zīt. β. All from Teut. type TĪ-DI, time, division of time, portion of time; from the Teut. base TĪ, TAI, to divide, apportion, answering to Aryan DA-I, as appearing in Skt. day, to allot, Gk. δαί-ωμα, δαί-νυμι, I allot, assign. —✓DA, to divide, distribute; as in Skt. dā, to cut, pp dāta, cut off, Gk. δά-σασθαι, to divide. From the same root is E. Time, q. v. Der. tide, vb., to happen, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 205, M. E. tiden, Chaucer, C. T. 4757, A. S. ge-tīdan, to happen, John, v. 14; hence be-tide, q. v. Also morning-tide, morrow-tide, even-tide, harvest-tide, &c.; tide-mill, tide-table; tide-waiter, an officer who waits for the arrival of vessels with the tide, to secure payment of duties; tide-way; tid-al, adj., tide-less; and see tid-ings, tid-y.

TIDINGS, things that happen; usually, information respecting things that happen. (Scand.) Not an E. word, but adapted from Norse. M. E. tidinde, Layamon, 2052, altered in the later text to tidinge; spelt tiþende (for tiþende), Ormulum, dedication, l. 158. — Icel. tiðindi, neut. pl., tidings, news; also spelt tiðenda. The word must have originated from a pres. part. tiðandi * of a verb tiða *, to happen, with the same sense as A.S. tidan; and this verb is from Icel. tið, sb., tide, time, cognate with A.S. tid; see Tide. The final s is an E. addition, to shew that the word is a pl. form; the M. E. tidung or tidung (without s) is not uncommon; see Chaucer, C. T. 5146, 5147. Cf. Dan. tidende, tidings, news; Du. tijding; G. zeitung.

TIDY, seasonable, hence, appropriate, neat. (E.) M. E. tidy. 'Tidy men'; P. Plowman, B. ix. 104; 'he tidy child'; Will. of Palerne, 160. Formed with suffix -y (= A.S. -ig) from M. E. tid (A.S. tid), time; see Tide. + Du. tijdig, timely; from tijd. + Dan. and Swed. tidig, timely; from tid. + G. zeitig. Der. tidiness.

TIE, a fastening, band; to fasten, bind. (E.) 1. M. E. tizen, verb, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 464; tyen, P. Plowman, B. i. 96; teizen, teyen, id. A. 94. The M. E. forms tizen, tyen answer to A.S. týgan, to tie, fasten, spelt týgan, Matt. xxi. 2. The forms teizen, teyen answer to a form tégan * or tégian *, not found. 2. The verb is an unoriginal form, due to the sb. teye. 'And teien heom to-gadere mid guldene teyen' = and tie them together with golden ties; Layamon, 20997, 20998. The corresponding A.S. word is teág, a rope (Grein, ii. 526), or rather teák (stem teág); we find: 'Sceda, teah,' in Wright's Voc. i. 289, col. 1, where sceda means 'a scroll'; but it is prob. the same word, from the sense of enclosing or containing; cf. Laws of Cnut, § 77, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 419, where the dat. tége, teage occurs, explained to mean scrinium, a chest. Again, we read: 'habbað langne tige to geleáfan trimminge' = they have a long-lasting tie for the establishment of the faith; Ælfric, Of the New Test., ed. De L'Isle, p. 27, last line; here tige = tige = týge. Cf. Icel. taug, a tie, string; tygill, a string. β. The common base of teák and týge is tug-, as seen in tugon, pt. pl. of teóhan, to tow, pull, draw, drag; so that a tie means that which tugs or draws things tightly together. For the strong verb teóhan or teón (pt. t. teák, pl. tugon, pp. togen), see Grein, ii. 527. It exactly corresponds to Goth. tiuhan (pt. t. tauhan, pp. tauhanan), to tow, tug, pull, and to G. ziehen. See further under Tow (1). γ. Thus tie, vb., is from tie, sb.; and the latter is from Teut. base TUH = Aryan DUK, as in Lat. ducere, to draw. ¶ No connection with Gk. δέσσειν, I bind; for which see Diadem.

TIER, a rank, row. (F. = Teut.) The spelling tier is not a good one; it should rather be tire. 'Tire (or teer of ordnance, as the seamen pronounce it), a set of great guns on both sides of a ship, lying in a rank,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt tire, with the same sense of 'row of guns,' in Milton, P. L. vi. 605. Also 'tire of ordnance,' Florio, s. v. tiro. = F. tire, 'a draught, pull, . . . stretch, retch [reach]; also, a tire; a stroke, hit, . . . a reach, gate, course, or length and continuance of course'; Cot. [Cf. Port. and Span. tira, a long strip of cloth; Span. de una tirada, in one stretch; tiro, a set of mules; Ital. tiro, 'a shoot, . . . a shot, a tire, a reach, a distance . . . a shoote out of a bow or of a caluier, a stones caste, a caste at dice, a tire of ordnance' [ordnance]; Florio.] = F. tirer, 'to draw, drag, . . . stretch, retch, dart, wrest, yerke, winse, fling'; Cot. The orig. sense seems to have been to tear away, snatch violently. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. tairan, A.S. teran, to tear; see Tear (1). See Diez. ¶ The spelling tier seems to have been a mere adaptation to preserve the sound of F. i, and to prevent confusion with the tire of a wheel. I cannot see that we have clear evidence for connecting it with O. F. tiere, a row, rank, notwithstanding the similarity of sense; see Tire (2). Still less is there evidence to connect it with the alleged A.S. tiér, a very doubtful word, occurring but once (Grein, ii. 535). Todd gives a quotation for 'a tier of ordnance.' Der. tir-ade, re-tirs. Doublet, tire (5). [†]

TIERCE, TERCE, one of the canonical hours, a cask holding a third of a pipe; a sequence of three cards of a colour; a thrust in fencing. (F. = L.) In all its senses, it meant orig. 'third'; as the third hour, third of a pipe, third card, third sort of thrust. M. E. tierce; 'At howre of tyerse,' Myroure of Our Lady, ed. Blunt, p. 13, l. 21; spelt tierce, Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 41. = F. tiers, masc., tierce, fem., 'third'; tiers, m., 'a tierce, third, third part'; Cot. = Lat. tertius, masc., tertia, fem., third; the ordinal corresponding to tres, three, which is cognate with E. Three, q. v.

TIGER, a fierce animal. (F. = L. = Gk. = Pers.) M. E. tigre, Chaucer, C. T. 1657. = F. tigre, 'a tiger'; Cot. = Lat. tigrem, acc. of tigris. = Gk. τίγρις. β. Said to be of Pers. origin; according to Littré, named from its 'swiftness,' the tiger being compared to an arrow. = Zend. (O. Pers.) tighri, an arrow; from tighra, sharp, pointed; words cited by Fick, i. 333. Hence mod. Pers. tír, 'an arrow, also the river Tigris, so named from its rapidity,' Rich. Dict.

p. 473. Allied to Skt. tigma, sharp, tigmaga, flying swiftly, from tij, to be sharp. All these words have lost initial s; tij being allied to Gk. στρίψω (= strí-yew), to prick. = ✓ STAG, to stick, prick; see Stigma and Stick (1). Der. tigr-ess, tiger-ish.

TIGHT, close, compact, not leaky. (Scand.) It should rather be thight; the change from th to t is common in Scandinavian, since neither Danish nor Swedish admits of initial th, which is only preserved in Icelandic. The th still exists in prov. E. thite, 'tight, close, compact, East'; Halliwell. M. E. tijt; whence tijlti, closely, Will. of Palerne, 66; also þijt, spelt thykt in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Thykt, hool, not brokyn, Integer, solidus'; also: 'Thyhtyn, or make thyht, Integer, consoldo.' Hence prov. E. theat, firm, close, staunch, spoken of barrels when they do not run (Halliwell). So also: 'as some tight vessel that holds against wind and water'; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, Ruth; bk. xi. cont. 3. § 11. It is spelt tith four times in Beaumont and Fletcher; see Nares. [The nautical word taut is the same word, borrowed by sailors from the Dan. tæt.] — Icel. þéttir, tight, esp. not leaking, water-tight, whence þétta, to make tight; Swed. tät, close, tight, solid, thick, hard, compact, whence täta, to make tight, tättna, to become tight (E. tighten used intransitively); Dan. tæt, tight, close, dense, compact, taut, water-tight, used as a naut. term in tæt til Vinden, close to the wind; tätte, to tighten. β. The substitution of M. E. t for Icel. é is curious; the E. has preserved the old guttural, which in the Icelandic is no longer apparent. Fick, iii. 128, well compares þéttir with the cognate G. dicht, tight, compact, Du. dig, tight, compact (where the guttural is also preserved), and infers the Teut. type THEH-TA, i. e. thatched, hence rain-proof, water-tight, exactly answering to Lat. tectus, covered, and to Gk. στενός as seen in δ-στενος, without a roof, houseless, also not taut, used metaphorically of a loquacious person. = Teut. base THAK (Aryan ✓ STAG), to thatch; see Thatch.

¶ Thus tight is, practically, merely a variant of thatched. Der. tight-ly, tight-ness; also tight-en, properly intransitive like Swed. tättna, but used, by analogy, in the sense 'to make tight.' Doublet, taut.

TIKE, a dog; contemptuously, a low fellow. (Scand.) M. E. tihe, tyke; P. Plowman, B. xix. 37; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3642. = Icel. tík, Swed. tik, a bitch.

TILE, a piece of baked clay for covering roofs, &c. (L.) M. E. tile, Chaucer, C. T. 7687. A contracted form of tigel, the long i being due to loss of g. Spelt tigel, Genesis and Exodus, 2552; tezele, Aenbite of Inwyrt, p. 167, l. 13. = A.S. tigele; pl. tygelan, Gen. xi. 3; hence tigel-uyrhta, a tile-wright, a potter, Matt. xxvii. 7. = Lat. tegula, a tile, lit. 'that which covers'; formed with suffix -la (Aryan -ra), from tegere, to cover. = ✓ STAG, to cover; see Tegument. Der. tile, verb, til-er, til-ing; also til-er-y, imitated from F. tuilerie, which is from F. tuile, Lat. tegula, a tile.

TILL (1), to cultivate. (E.) M. E. tilien, Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 9. = A.S. tilian, teolian, to labour, endeavour, strive after, to till land, Grein, ii. 533. The orig. sense is to strive after or aim at excellence. = A.S. til, good, excellent, profitable, Grein, ii. 532; cf. til, sb., goodness. Closely allied to till, preposition; see Till (2). + Du. telen, to breed, raise, till, cultivate. + G. zielen, to aim at; from ziel, O. H. G. zîl, an aim, mark. Der. til-er, til-age; also til-th, Temp. ii. i. 152, from A.S. til-ð, cultivation, crop, A.S. Chron. an. 1098. Also teal, q. v.

TILL (2), to the time of, to the time when. (Scand.) A Norse word; orig. used as a preposition, then as a conjunction. M. E. til, prep., to, occurring (rarely) even in Chaucer, where it seems to be put for to because it is accented and comes before a vowel. 'Hoom til Athénès whan the play is doon'; C. T. 2964 (or 2966). As a rule, it is a distinguishing mark of works in the Northumbrian dialect, such as Barbour's Bruce, where til occurs for to throughout. Somner cites 'cweð til him hæland' = the Saviour said to them, without a reference; but he really found 'cweð til him ðe hæland'; Matt. xxvi. 31, in the O. Northumb. (not the A.S.) version. = Icel. til, till, to, prep. governing the genitive; Dan. til; Swed. till; in very common use; it even answers to E. too in phrases such as til ungr, too young; til gamall, too old.

β. Quite distinct from to, and orig. a case (perhaps acc. sing.) of tili or tili, sb., in the sense of 'aim' or 'bent,' whence the notion of 'towards' was easily developed. The Icel. til frequently expresses 'purpose,' as in til hvár = for what purpose. The sb. is rare in Icel., though it occurs in ú-tili, a mischance; but O. H. G. zîl, G. ziel, aim, purpose, is a common word; so also is the closely allied A.S. adj. til, suitable, fit (cognate with Goth. ga-tîls, fit, convenient), as well as the A.S. adv. tela, teala, excellently, Grein, ii. 524. γ. All from Teut. base TAL = ✓ DAR, to see, consider (hence, to aim at); whence also E. Tale, q. v. Fick, iii. 119. And see Till (1). Der. un-til, q. v.

TILL (3), a money-box or drawer in a tradesman's counter. (E.) The proper sense is 'drawer,' something that can be 'pulled' in and out. Dryden uses tiller in this sense, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 384, where till-er is just parallel to draw-er. Cotgrave explains F. layette by 'a till or drawer'; also, 'a box with tills or drawers.' Palsgrave has: 'Tyll of an almyer, Lyette' [sic]; an almery being a kind of cupboard or cabinet. Thus the word is by no means modern; and, just as drawer is from the verb to draw, so till is from M. E. tillen, to draw, pull, allure, now obsolete, but once not uncommon. 'To the scale him for to till' = to draw (or allure) him to school, Cursor Mundi, 12175. 'The world . . . tyl him drawes And tills' = the world draws and allures to itself, Fricke of Conscience, 1183; and see Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1763, and esp. Rob. of Glouc. p. 115, last line, where it occurs in a literal, not a metaphorical sense. Spelt also tullen; the pt. t. tulde = drew, is in Ancræn Riwle, p. 320, l. 13. Origin obscure; perhaps the same as A. S. tyllan, appearing only once in the comp. for-tyllan, with the apparent sense of draw aside, lead astray, Grein, i. 332. + Du. tillen, 'to heave or lift up'; Hexham. + Low G. tillen, to lift, move from its place; whence tillbare Göder, moveable goods. + Swed. dial. tille; whence tille på sig, to take upon oneself, lay hold of (Rietz). Root uncertain. See Tiller.

TILLER, the handle or lever for turning a rudder. (E.) Cf. prov. E. tiller, the stalk of a cross-bow, the handle of any implement (Halliwell). Phillips has it in the usual sense. 'Tiller, in a boat, is the same as helme in a ship'; Coles, ed. 1684. The word means 'pull-er' or handle; from M. E. tillen, to pull, draw; see further under Till (3). Cf. Low G. tillbaar, moveable.

TILT (1), the canvas covering of a cart or waggon. (E.) M. E. teld, a covering, tent, Layamon, 31384; a later form was telt. 'Telte or tente'; Prompt. Parv.; hence our till. - A. S. teld; whence geteld, a tent, Gen. xviii. 1; the prefix ge- making no difference. + O. Du. telde, a tent; Hexham. + Icel. tjald. + Dan. telt; Swed. tält. + G. zelt. β. It thus appears that the form tilt (with final t for d) may have been due to Danish influence. The Teut. type is TEL-DA, Fick, iii. 120. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'hide' of an animal, from Teut. TAL = Aryan DAL, to tear, strip = ✓DAR, to tear. Cf. Gk. δῆπος, a skin, Skt. dara, a cave, a shell. See Tear (1).

TILT (2), to ride in a tourney, thrust with a lance; to cause to heel over. (E.) In 1 Hen. IV. ii. 3. 95. But the verb was orig. intransitive, meaning 'to totter, toss about unsteadily'; whence the active use of 'cause to totter, upset,' was evolved. The intrans. sense occurs at least as late as Milton, and is still in use when we say 'that table will tilt over.' 'The floating vessel . . . Rode tilting o'er the waves'; Milton, P. L. xi. 747. M. E. tilten, to totter, fall; 'pis ilk toun schal tylte to grounde'; Allit. Poems, C. 361. β. The lit. sense is 'to be unsteady,' formed from A. S. tealt, adj., unsteady, tottering, unstable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, § xv. 74. Hence the verb *tyltan, to totter, would be regularly formed, with the usual vowel-change from ea to y. + Icel. tölta, to amble as a horse; cf. Milton's use of tilting above. + Swed. tulta, to waddle. + G. zelt, an ambling pace; zelter, a palfrey. γ. All from Teut. base TALT, to totter; root unknown. Der. tilt, sb., tilt-ing; tilt-hammer, a hammer which, being tilted up, falls by its own weight. Also tott-er, q. v.

TILT, sb. (E.) See Till (1).

TIMBER, wood for building. (E.) The b is excrement, as usual after m, but occurs very early. M. E. timber, Chaucer, C. T. 3666. - A. S. timber, stuff or material to build with; Grein, ii. 534. + Du. timmer, 'timber or structure'; Hexham. + Icel. timbr. + Dan. tømmer. + Swed. timmer. + G. zimmer, a room; also timber. Cf. also Goth. timrjan, to build, timrja, a builder. β. All from Teut. type TEMRA (i.e. TAM-IRA), timber, Fick, iii. 117; formed with agential suffix -ra from Teut. base TAM = ✓DAM, to build, as seen in Gk. δῆμ-ειν, to build; see Dome. Der. (from same root) dome, dom-icile, dom-estic, major-domo.

TIMBREL, a kind of tambourine. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 7. Dimin., with suffix -l (= -el), from M. E. timbre, used in the same sense as in Gower, C. A. iii. 63, l. 14. - F. timbre, 'the bell of a little clock'; Cot.; O. F. tymbre, a timbrel, as shown by a quotation in Diez. - Lat. tympānum, a drum. - Gk. τύμπανον, a kettle-drum; see Tympanum. Cf. 'Hoc tympanum, a tymbyre'; Wright's Voc. i. 240.

TIME, season, period, duration of life, &c. (E.) M. E. time, Chaucer, C. T. 35. 44. - A. S. tīma, time, Grein, ii. 534. + Icel. tími. + Dan. time. + Swed. timme, an hour. β. The Teut. type is TĪ-MA, Fick, iii. 114, closely allied to TĪ-DI, tide, time, from which it only differs in the suffix. See Tide. Der. time, verb, cf. M. E. timen, to happen, A. S. getimian; time-ly, adj., Macb. iii. 3. 7; time-ly, adv., Macb. ii. 3. 51; time-li-ness; time-honoured, -keeper, -piece, -server, -table, -uorn.

TIMID, afraid, fearful. (F., -L.) 'The timid friend'; Pope, Prol. to Satires, 343. [The sb. timidity is earlier, occurring in Cotgrave.] - F. timide, 'timorous'; Cot. - Lat. timidus, full of fear. - Lat. timor, fear; timere, to fear; see Timorous. Der. timid-ly, -ness; timid-ty, from F. timidité, 'timidity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. timiditatem.

TIMOROUS, full of fear. (L.) The Court of Love begins: 'With timorous herte'; but this is quite a late poem. Fabyan has tymerousnesse, Chron. cap. 175; Sir T. Elyot has tymerositie, The Governour, b. i. c. xxi. § 6. [There is no F. timoreux.] Coined, as if from Lat. adj. *timorosus, fearful, a word not used. - Lat. timor, fear. β. Prob. allied to Skt. tamas, darkness; whence tamo-bhūta, dark, involved in darkness, foolish, tamo-maya, involved in darkness, (blind) wrath. The Skt. tamas was one of the three qualities incident to creation, viz. darkness, whence proceed folly, ignorance, stupidity, &c. (Benfey, p. 355); or the Lat. timor may be directly referred to the root of tamas, viz. Skt. tam, to become breathless, to be distressed, to become staring, immovable (all signs of fear). - ✓TAM, to choke; Vedic tam, to choke. Der. timorous-ly, timorous-ness; (from same root) tim-id, in-tim-id-ate; ten-e-br-ous.

TIN, a silvery-white metal. (E.) M. E. tin, Chaucer, C. T. 16296. - A. S. tin; 'stagnum, tin'; Ælfric's Gram. (ed. Zupitza), p. 15, l. 11; whence 'stagneus, tinen' as an adj., ibid. + Du. tin. + Icel. tín. + Dan. tin. + Swed. tenn. + G. zinn. β. All from Teut. type TINA, tin; Fick, iii. 121. Possibly connected with Teut. TAINA, a rod, for which see Mistletoe; cf. G. zain, an ingot, a bar of metal. γ. Quite distinct from Lat. stagnum, stannum, tin, whence W. ystaen, Corn. stean, Bret. stéan, Irish stan, F. étain, are all borrowed; see Rhys, Lectures on Welsh, Appendix C. Der. tin-foil, spelt tynföyle in Levins, i. e. tin-leaf; see Foil (2).

TINCTURE, a shade of colour, a solution. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 4. 160. Englished from Lat. tinctura, a dyeing. - Lat. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. Der. tincture, verb. Shak. also has tinct, sb., a dye, Hamlet, iii. 4. 91, from pp. tinctus.

TIND, to light or kindle. (E.) Also spelt tine. Now obsolete, except in prov. E. Spelt tinde in Minshen, ed. 1627. M. E. tenden, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 33. - A. S. tendan, to kindle; chiefly in comp. on-tendan, Exod. xxii. 6. + Dan. tænde. + Swed. tända. + Goth. tandjan. β. These are verbs of the weak kind, from the base of a lost strong verb making *tand in the pt. t., and *tundans (to adopt the Goth. spelling) in the pp. γ. From the pp. of the same strong verb was formed E. tinder, q. v.

TINDER, anything used for kindling fires from a spark. (E.) M. E. tinder, Layamon, 29267; more often tunder, tondre, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245. - A. S. tyndre, Wright's Voc. i. 284 (De Igne). - A. S. *tunden, pp. of a lost strong verb *tindan, to kindle, whence the weak verb tendan, to kindle; see Tind. + Icel. tundur, tinder; cf. tendra, to light a fire, tandri, fire. + Dan. tønder. + Swed. tunder. + G. zunder; cf. anzünden, to kindle.

TINE, the tooth or spike of a fork or harrow. (E.) Formerly tind; cf. wood-bine for wood-bind. M. E. tind, spelt tynde, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 78; 'tyndis of harowis,' Allit. Romance of Alexander, 3908, 3925. - A. S. tind, pl. tindas, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 150, l. 25. + Icel. tindr, a spike, tooth of a rake or harrow. + Swed. tinne, the tooth of a rake. β. The same word as Dan. tinde, G. zinne, a pinnacle, battlement. All from Teut. base TENDA, a tine, Fick, iii. 114. Allied to Tooth, q. v. Cf. Skt. danta, a tooth; hastin-danta, a peg to hang clothes on. Der. tin-ed. TINGE, to colour, dye. (L.) 'Tinged with saffron'; Holinshed, Desc. of Scotland, c. 7. The pp. form tinct is in Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 107. - Lat. tingere (pp. tinctus), to dye, stain. + Gk. τρέψω, to wet, moisten, dye, stain. Supposed to be allied to Vedic Skt. tug, to sprinkle. See Towel. Der. tinge, sb., tinct-ure, q. v.; also taint, tent (3), tint, stain, mezzo-tinto.

TINGLE, to thrill, feel a thrilling sensation. (E.) Spelt tingil in Levins. M. E. tinglen. In Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1, we have: 'a cymbal tynkynge,' where other readings are tynclynge and tinglinge. Tingle is merely a weakened form of tinkle, being the frequentative of ting, a weakened form of tink. 'Cupide the king tinging a siluer bel'; Test. of Cresseide, st. 21. 'To ting, tinnire; to tingil, tinnire'; Levins. Cf. ting-tang, the saint's-bell (Halliwell); 'Sonner, to sound, . . . to ting, as a bell,' Cot. To make one's ears tinkle or tingle is to make them seem to ring; hence, to tingle, to vibrate to feel a sense of vibration as when a bell is rung. Hence 'bothe his ceris shulen tyncelen'; Wyclif, 1 Sam. iii. 11. See Tinkle, Tinker.

TINKER, a mender of kettles and pans. (E.) M. E. tinkere, P. Plowman, A. v. 160; B. v. 317. So called because he makes a tinkling sound; from M. E. tinken, to ring or tinkle. 'A cymbal tynkynge'; Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. Of imitative origin; cf. O. Du. tinge-tangen, to tingle (Hexham); also O. Du. tintelen, 'to ring, tingle, or make a noise like brasse' (id.), where mod. Du. has tintelen only in the sense to tingle or sparkle. + Lat. tinnire, to tinkle, ring, tintinnum, a tinkling; cf. F. tinter, 'to ting, ring, tinkle,' Cot., whence les oreilles me tintent, 'mine ears tingle or glow,' id.; F. tintin, tinton,

'the ting of a bell,' id. Perhaps allied to Tone, q. v. ¶ Grimm's law does not necessarily apply to words so directly imitative as this.

TINKLE, to jingle. (E.) M. E. tinklen, whence 'a cymbal tynclynge,' in some MSS. of Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. See further under Tinker and Tingle.

TINSEL, gaudy ornament, showy lustre. (F., -L.) 'Tinsill clothe,' Baret, ed. 1580; cf. Much Ado, iii. 4. 22. 'Under a duke, no man to wear cloth of gold tinsel;' Literary Remains of K. Edw. VI, an. 1551-2; cited in Trench, Select Glossary, q. v. 'Tinsell (dictum a Gall. estincelle, i. scintilla, a sparke). It signifies with vs, a stuffe or cloth made partly of silke, and partly of gold or siluer, so called because it glistereth or sparkleth like starres;' Minshew, ed. 1627. [Minshew's etymology is correct; the F. estincelle or étincelle lost its initial sound just as did the F. estiquet or étiquet, which became ticket in English.]—F. estincelle, étincelle, 'a sparke or sparkle of fire, a twinkle, a flash;' Cot.—Lat. scintilla, a spark; which seems to have been mispronounced as stincilla; cf. F. brebis from Lat. ueruicem. Scintilla is dimin. from a form *scinta, a spark, not used. Allied to Gk. σινθίπ (= σινθίπ), a spark. And perhaps allied to A. S. scinan, to shine; see Shine. Der. tinsel, adj., i. e. tinsel-like; tinsel-slippered, Milton, Comus, 677. And see stencil.

TINT, a slight tinge of colour. (L.) Put for tinct, which was the older form of the word; Hamlet, iii. 4. 91. 'The first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinct the wool first receives;' Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Præcipiendi Modi. 'A rosy-tinted feature is heav'n's gold;' Drayton, K. John to Matilda, l. 57. Cf. tinct=dyed; Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 107.—Lat. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. Der. tint, verb.

TINY, very small. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. v. 398, 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29, v. 3. 60, K. Lear, iii. 2. 74, where it is always preceded by little; the old editions have time or tyne. He speaks of 'a little tiny boy' (twice), 'my little tiny thief,' and 'pretty little tiny kick-shaws.' The word is certainly E.; and is clearly an adj. formed with suffix -y from a sb., like ston-y, spin-y, and the like. As there is no sb. tine except the tine of a harrow, my explanation is that it must be formed from the sb. teen. The word is often called teeny; Halliwell gives 'teeny, (1) tiny, very small, North; and (2) fretful, peevish, fractions, Lanc.' In the latter sense, the adj. is clearly from the old sb. teen, anger, peevishness; and I suppose the word to remain the same in all its senses. 'A little teeny boy' would, in this view, mean at first 'a little fractious boy,' and might afterwards be used in the sense of 'little' only, and even as a term of endearment. β. We have a very similar change of sense, though in the opposite direction, in the case of pet, a dear child, spoilt child, whence pettish, peevish. γ. If this be right, the sb. teen is to be identified with M. E. tene, used in the stronger sense of vexation or grief, as has been already explained; see Teen. ¶ Other suggestions are hardly worth mention; teeny can hardly be from Dan. tynd, thin, since thin is a well-known E. word; nor from F. tigne, a moth. Nor can I believe it to be of purely imitative origin. [†]

TIP (1), the extreme top, the end. (E.?) 'The tippe of a staffe;' Levins. M. E. typ, Prompt. Parv. 'Uort þe nede tippe'=until the extremity of need, i. e. until [there be] extreme need, Ancræn Riwle, p. 338, l. 19. Prob. E., though not found in A. S. + Du. tip, tip, end, point. + Low G. tipp, tip, point; up den Tipp van der Tied, in the very nick of time; Brem. Wört. + Dan. tip, tip. + Swed. tip, end, point, extremity. + G. zipfel, a dimin. form. A weakened form of Top, q. v. We also find Icel. typpi, a tip, typpa, to tip, formed from toppr, top, by vowel-change. Der. tip, verb, to place on the tip of, chiefly in the pp. tipped, as in Chaucer, C. T. 14099. Hence the sb. tipped-staf, i. e. spiked or piked staff, Chaucer, C. T. 7319; and hence (just as piked-staff became pike-staff) tip-staff, a term afterwards applied to 'certain officers that wait on the judge bearing a rod tipt with silver,' Phillips; also to other officers who took men into custody. Also tip-toe; cf. on tiptoon=on tip-toes, Chaucer, C. T. 15313.

TIP (2), to tilt, cause to slant or lean over. (Scand.) Gen. in the phr. to tip up=to tilt up, or tip over=to overturn. It is a weakened form of tap, as in tip (i. e. tap) and run, a game. Thus tip up is to tilt up by giving a slight tap, or by the exercise of a slight force; cf. tip for tap (blow for blow), Bullinger's Works, i. 283, now tit for tat. From the sense of slight movement we can explain the phrase to tip the wink=to make a slight movement of the eye-lid, sufficient to warn a person; it occurs in Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 202. Johnson gives: 'tip, to strike lightly, to tap;' with an illustration from Swift: 'he tips me by the elbow.' Palsgrave has: 'I type ouer, I ouerthrowe or ouerwhelme, je renuerse.' 'Tip, a fall;' Bradford's Works, ii. 104 (Parker Soc.). As the word tap is of F. origin (borrowed from Teutonic) it is most probable that tip was borrowed directly from Scandinavian, though now only appearing in Swedish.

—Swed. tippa, 'to tap, to tip, to strike gently, to touch lightly; see Johnson's E. Dict.; Widegren. Allied to Tap, q. v. Der. tip, sb., a slight tap, wink, hint; tipp-le, q. v.

TIPPET, a cape, a cape of a cloak. (L., -Gk.) Also tepet, as in Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 301, l. 92. M. E. tipet, tepet, Chaucer, C. T. 233.—A. S. tæppet. 'Sipla, an healf hruh tæppet,' i. e. a half-rough (?) tippet; Wright's Voc. i. 40, col. 2 (Vestium nomina). We also find A. S. tæppe, a fillet or band; 'Tenia, tæppan, vel dol-smeltas,' Wright's Voc. i. 16, col. 2; where tæppan is the nom. plural. Not E. words, but borrowed.—Lat. tapeta, cloth, hangings.—Gk. ταπητ, stem of τάπητ, a carpet, woollen rug. See Tap, Tabard, Tapestry.

TIPPLE, to drink in small quantities, and habitually. (Scand.) Shak. has tippling, Antony, i. 4. 19. 'To tipple, potitare;' Levins, ed. 1570. The frequentative of tip, verb, to cause to slant, incline; thus it means to be continually inclining the drinking-glass, to be always tippling wine or beer down the throat. Cf. prov. E. tipple, to tumble, to turn over, as is done in tumbling (Halliwell). A Scand. word; still preserved in Norweg. tipla, to drink little and often, to tipple (Aasen). See Tip (2), Tipsy. Der. tippl-er, tippling. [†]

TIPSY, intoxicated. (Scand.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 48. The formation of the word is difficult to explain, but it is clearly related to Tipple and Tip (2), q. v. It means 'fond of tippling,' where tip is used in the sense of tipple. Cf. prov. E. tip, a draught of liquor, tippe, to empty liquor from one vessel into another (Halliwell); top off, to tipple (Nares). The s appears to be a verbal suffix, as in clean-se from clean; cf. Swed. dial. tippsä, to pat hands (in a children's game). Cf. trick-sy, and other words with suffix -sy, in F. Hall, Modern English, p. 272. β. Wedgwood cites Swiss tips, a fuddling with drink, tippseln, to fuddle oneself, betipst, tipsy. These words present a remarkable likeness, especially as the E. and Swiss words can only be cognate, and neither language can easily have borrowed from the other. Der. tipsi-ly, -ness.

TIRADE, a strain of censure or reproach. (F., -Ital., -Teut.) Modern.—F. tirade, 'a draught, pull, . . . a shooting;' Cot. Hamilton explains F. tirade by 'a passage, a tirade or long speech (in a play).' The lit. sense is a drawing out, a lengthening out.—Ital. tirata, a drawing, a pulling.—Ital. tirare, to pull, draw, pluck, snatch. Of Teut. origin, like F. tirer; see further under Tier.

TIRE (1), to exhaust, weary, fatigue, become exhausted. (E.) M. E. tiren, teorian, not a very common word. Stratmann refers us to the Towneley Mysteries, p. 126; and to p. 5 of a Fragment printed by Sir Thos. Phillips, where occur the words him teoreþ his mikt=his might is exhausted. It occurs also in the compound atieren, as: 'gief mihte þe ne atiered'=if might (or power) fail thee not, i. e. be not tired out; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 29, l. 25.—A. S. teorian, (1) to be tired, be weary, (2) to tire, fatigue; Grein, ii. 529. β. It is remarkable that the dictionaries frequently refer tire (in the sense to be weary) to A. S. tirigan, which is not quite the same thing; see Tire (4). That teorian is its real equivalent, may be seen by examining the uses of teorian, geteorian, and ateorian. One example may suffice. 'Teorode hwæþre . . . strong . . . wérig þæs weorces'=nevertheless the strong one tired, being weary of the work; Exeter Book, ed. Thorpe, p. 436, Riddle lv, l. 16. Confusion between teorian and tirigan is easy, because both are mere derivatives from the strong verb teran, to tear; indeed, Leo considers them as identical. The orig. sense was to tear, then to wear out, exhaust, or to become exhausted.—✓DAR, to tear; see Tear. ¶ Grein connects tire with Skt. das (a Vedic word), to be exhausted. Der. tir-ed, tir-ed-ness, tire-some, tire-some-ness.

TIRE (2), a head-dress; as a verb, to adorn or dress the head. (F., -Teut.) The examples shew that this is an abbreviation for attire. See esp. Prompt. Parv. p. 494: 'Tyre, or a-tyre of wemmene, Mundum muliebris.' Again, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, we have atir, but in l. 1725 we have tir; cf. 'in no gay tyr,' Alexander and Dinidimus, 883; 'tidi a-tir,' id. 599. β. We have also the verb to tire, 2 Kings, ix. 30; cf. 'Attouré, tired, dressed, attired, decked,' Cot. The M. E. verb was atiren, whence atired, pp., Will. of Palerne, 1228. However, the sb. appears earlier than the verb, being spelt atyr, with the sense 'apparel;' Layamon, 3275, later text. γ. It would suffice to refer the reader to the article on Attire, if it were not that some corrections are needed of the account there given; my chief fault is in the derivation of O. F. atirier. The M. E. verb atiren is from O. F. attirer, better atirier, to adjust, decorate, adorn, dispose; see Roquefort, and the quotation s. v. Attire.—O. F. a tire, in order; in the phr. tire a tire, in order, one after the other; see examples in Roquefort.—O. F. a (=Lat. ad), to; and tire, another form of tiere, tieire, a row, rank, order; see Burguy and Roquefort. Cf. Prov. tierra, teira, a row (Bartsch); which sometimes has the sense of adornment or attire (Diez). This sb. is from O. H. G.

ziart, M. H. G. ziere, G. zier, ornament; cf. G. zieren, to adorn.

8. The source of O. H. G. ziari can hardly be assigned; in form it answers best to A.S. tiér, said to mean 'row'; but as this is a very doubtful word, and Grein's identification of it with mod. E. tier is probably wrong, this cannot be depended on. Fick (iii. 121) proposes to connect it with A.S. tír, Icel. tírr, glory; but this also is doubtful. ¶ The correction of the etymology of O. F. atirier is due to Mr. H. Nicol; and see Diez, s.v. tiere. ☞ Quite distinct from tiara, and (probably) from tier.

TIRE (3), a hoop of iron that binds the felloes of wheels together. (F., = Teut.?) 'Tire, the ornament or dress of womens heads; also, the iron band of a cart-wheel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The mettall [a kind of iron] is brittle and short . . . such as will not serue one whit for stroke and nail to bind cart-wheels withall, which tire indeed would [should] be made of the other that is gentle and pliable;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 14. [Here stroke = strake, rim of a wheel; see Halliwell.]

β. The history of the word is obscure; it seems to me that the word may be identical with TIRE (2), the wheel-band being likened to a woman's tire. Tire meant to dress or arrange; 'I tyer an egge, le accoustre; I tyer with garments,' &c.; Palsgrave. ¶ I have no belief in Richardson's just-like suggestion, that a tire is a ti-er, because it ties the wheel together. The M. E. tezere or tyere nowhere occurs in this sense.

TIRE (4), to tear a prey, as is done by predatory birds. (E.) In Shak. Venus, 56; 1 Hen. VI. i. r. 269. M. E. tiren, to tear a prey, only used of vultures, &c.; see Chaucer, Troilus, i. 768; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 3055. — A.S. ti-rigan, to provoke, vex, irritate, Deut. xxxii. 21. 'Lacesso, ic tyrige;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zapitza, p. 165, l. 12. Merely a derivative from the strong verb tearan, to tear; and closely allied to TIRE (1), q.v. See Tire in Nares; he derives it from F. tirer, which only means to pull, not to tear, though it makes but little ultimate difference; see TIER.

TIRE (5), a train. (F., = Teut.) Only in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 35. Doubtless coined from F. tirer, to draw; see TIRADE. Practically the same word as TIER, q.v. Doublet, tier.

TIRO, TYRO, a novice. (L.) Always grossly misspelt tyro. 'Tyro, a new fresh-water soldier, a novice, apprentice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, it appears as tyrone, evidently from a F. form *tiron, answering to Lat. acc. tironem. — Lat. tiro, a recruit, novice, tiro. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Gk. τίρ-νν, tender, soft, delicate, which is usually connected with τίρ-νν, to rub; see TRITE. Der. tiro-cinium, a first campaign, school, apprenticeship; the title of a poem by Cowper.

TISIC, phthisis. (L., = Gk.) See PHTHISIS.

TISSUE, cloth interwoven with gold or silver. (F., = L.) M. E. tissue, a ribband, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 639. — F. tissu, 'a bawdrick, ribbon, fillet, or head-band of woven stuffe;' Cot. Also tissu, m., tissue, f., 'woven, plaited, interlaced;' id. Tissu was the old pp. of tistre (mod. F. tisser), to weave. — Lat. texere, to weave; see TEXT.

TIT, a small horse or child. (Scand.) 'The tits are little worth;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. ix. 14; where tit means 'a little girl.' 'A little tit,' a small horse; Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. ii (R.) — Icel. títr, a tit, bird (now obsolete); the dimin. títlíngur, a sparrow, is still in use; Norweg. títta, a little bird (Aasen). The orig. sense is merely something small; cf. prov. E. titty, small; tiddy-wren, a wren (Halliwell). Perhaps orig. a term of endearment; cf. TEAT. Der. tít-ling, a sparrow, from Icel. títlíngur, as above, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also tít-lark, q.v., tít-mouse, q.v.

TIT FOR TAT, blow for blow. (Scand.) A corruption of tip for tap, where tip is a slight tap; Bullinger's Works, i. 283 (Parker Society). See TIP (2).

TITAN, the sun-god. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Rom. ii. 3. 4; &c. — Lat. Titan, Títanus; whence Títani, descendants of Titan, giants. — Gk. Títán, the sun-god, brother of Helios. + Skt. títá, fire; in the dict. by Böhtlingk and Roth, iii. 327. — ✓ TITH, to burn. Der. títan-ic, i. e. gigantic.

TITHE, a tenth part, the tenth of the produce as offered to the clergy. (E.) M. E. tithe, Chaucer, C. T. 541. The proper sense is 'tenth'; hence tenth part. Another spelling is teithe, as in 'the teithe best' = the tenth commandment, Will. of Shoreham, p. 101, l. 1. — A.S. teoða, tenth, Grein, ii. 526. Hence teóthung, a tith-ing, a tithe; 'he sealde him þá teoðunge of eallum ðám þíngum' = he gave him the tithe of all the possessions, Gen. xiv. 20. The A.S. teoða stands for teonða, formed with suffix -ða from teón, ten; see TEN. The loss of n before ð occurs again in tooth, other, &c. We also have ten-th, in which n is retained; so that tenth and tithe are doublets. Cf. Icel. tíund, tenth, tithe; see DECIMAL. Der. tithe, verb, M. E. tithen, tethen, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 73, A.S. teoðian, Matt. xxiii. 23; tith-er, Chaucer, C. T. 6894; tith-ing, M. E. tethking, a district containing ten families, Rob. of Glouc. p. 267, l. 3.

TITILLATION, a tickling. (F., = L.) [The verb titillare is in much later use; cf. 'titillating dust,' Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 84.] ☞

The sb. is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 766. — F. titillation, a tickling; Cot. = Lat. titillationem, acc. of titillatio, a tickling. — Lat. titillatus pp. of titillare, to tickle.

TITLARK, a kind of lark. (Scand. and E.) Lit. 'small lark;' see TIT and LARK.

TITLE, an inscription set over or at the beginning of a book, a name of distinction. (F., = L.) M. E. title, Chaucer, C. T. 14329; Wyclif, John, xix. 19. — O. F. titre; mod. F. titre, by change from l to r. — Lat. titulum, acc. of titulus, a superscription on a tomb, altar, &c.; an honourable designation. Prob. connected with Gk. τί-μῆ, honour.

Der. title, verb; titl-ed, All's Well, iv. 2. 2; title-deed; title-page, Per. ii. 3. 4; titul-ar, from F. titulaire, 'titular, having a title,' Cot., as if from Lat. *titularis, from Lat. titulare, verb, to give a title to. Hence titular-ly, titular-y.

TITLING, a small bird. (Scand.) See TIT.

TITMOUSE, a kind of small bird. (Scand. and E.) Not connected with mouse; the true pl. should be titmouses, yet titmice is usual, owing to confusion with mouse. In Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 26, it is spelt titmouse. M. E. titmouse; spelt tytemose, Prompt. Parv.; titmase, Wright's Voc. i. 188, col. 2; titmouse, id. i. 165, l. 3. Compounded of tit, small, or a small bird, Icel. títr (see TIT); and A.S. máse, a name for several kinds of small birds.

β. The A.S. máse occurs in: 'Sigatula, fræc-máse; Parra, col-máse; Parrula, swic-máse, all names of birds; see Wright's Voc. i. 62, col. 2. The a is long, as shewn by the M. E. meose. + Du. mees, a titmouse. + G. meise, a titmouse; O. H. G. meisa.

γ. Perhaps the orig. sense of A.S. máse was also 'small;' cf. Lithuan. masgas, little, small; Nesselmann remarks that Lith. maz or mas, small, is a base occurring in a large number of words, amongst which we may note mazukas, small and pretty, mazukas strazdas, the name of a kind of thrush, Turdus iliacus. Perhaps from ✓ MA or ✓ MI, to diminish; see MINOR.

TITTER, to giggle, laugh restrainedly. (E.) Cf. twitter. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 276. The same as M. E. titeren, to chatter, prattle, tell idle tales, whence titerere, a teller of tales, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. A frequentative from a base TIT, expressive of repeating the sound ti ti ti, just as tattle expresses the repetition of ta ta ta. See further under TATTLE. Cf. TWITTER. Der. titter, sb.

TITTLE, a jot, small particle. (F., = L.) M. E. titel, titil, used by Wyclif to translate Lat. apex; Matt. v. 18; Luke, xvi. 17. [Really a doublet of title.] — O. F. title, a title; (F. titre, a title); also titlire, titre, 'a tittle, a small line drawn over an abridged word, to supply letters wanting; also a title,' &c.; Cot. — Lat. titulum, acc. of titulus, a title, used by Petronius in the sense of sign or token.

β. In late Lat. titulus must have meant a mark over a word in writing, as this sense appears again in Span. tilde, Port. til, a stroke over a letter such as the mark over Span. ñ; also in the Catalan titlla, Wallachian titile, a mark of an accent, cited by Diez, s.v. tilde. The latter forms are unmistakably Latin. See TITLE. ¶ Not allied to tit.

TITTLE-TATTLE, prattle. (E.) See Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248. A reduplicated form of tattle. Note the use of titerere, also spelt titerere, a prattler, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. See TATTLE and TWADDLE.

TO, in the direction of, as far as. (E.) M. E. to, Chaucer, C. T. 16; and, as sign of the gerund, 13, 17; it is now considered as the sign of the infin. mood, the gerundial use being lost. — A.S. tó, prep.; also as sign of the gerund as distinct from the infin. mood; Grein, ii. 536–542. + Du. toe. + G. zu; M. H. G. zuo, ze; O. H. G. za, ze, zi, zuo. + Goth. du (where the occurrence of d for t is exceptional). + Russ. do, to, up to. Supposed to be further related to Lat. -do as appearing in O. Lat. endo, indu (see in in White); also to Gk. -δε, towards, as in ὀρόν-δε, homewards; see Curtius, i. 289. Perhaps also to O. Irish do, to; O. Welsh di (mod. W. i), to; W. dy- as a prefix; see Rhys, Lectures on W. Philology. Doublet, too, q.v. And see TO (2), to-ward, to-day, to-night.

TO-, prefix, in twain, asunder, to pieces. (E.) Retained in the phr. all-to-brake = utterly broke asunder, Judges, ix. 53. With regard to the dispute as to whether it should be printed all-to-brake or all-to-brake, it is quite certain that only the former is etymologically correct, though it may be admitted that the phrase was already so ill understood in the Tudor period that such a mistaken use as all-to-brake was possible, though it is charitable to give our translators the benefit of the doubt. It is purely a question of chronology. At first the prefix to- was used without all; later, all was often added as well, not only before the prefix to-, but before the prefixes for- and bi- also; next, all was considered as in some way belonging to to, as if all-to were short for altogether (which it is not), and consequently all-to appeared as a sort of adverb, and was considered as such, apparently, by Surrey and Latimer. It would be difficult to find any clear example of this latest use before A.D. 1500. To prove the above statements, it would be easy to fill several pages with hundreds of examples. I select a few. 1. A.S. tó-, prefix; appearing in tó-beran, to bear apart, remove; tó-berstan, to burst asunder; tó-bláwan, to blow asunder, dissipate; tó-brecan, to break asunder; and in nearly fifty other verbs, for which see Grein, ii. 542-549. We may particularly note 'heora setlu he tó-bræc' = he brake in pieces their seats, Matt. xxi. 12.

2. M. E. to-, prefix; appearing in to-beatan, to beat in pieces, tobiten, to bite in pieces, tobreken, to break in pieces; and in nearly a hundred other verbs; for which see Strattmann's Dict., 3rd. ed., pp. 565-568. We may particularly note 'al his bondes he to-brak for ioye' = all his bonds he brake in twain for joy; Will. of Palerne, 3236. It should also be observed that most verbal prefixes (such as for-, be-) were usually written apart from the verb in old MSS.; ignorance of this fact has misled many. Good examples of the addition of al as an intensive, meaning 'wholly,' are the following. '[He] al to-tare his a-tir þat he to-tere mist;' Will. of Palerne, 3884; 'al for-waked' = entirely worn out with lying awake, id. 785; 'al bi-weped for wo' = all covered with tears for wo, id. 661; 'al is to-brosten thilke regioun,' Chaucer, C. T. 2759; 'he suld be soyne to-fruschit al' = he would soon be dashed in pieces, Barbour, Bruce, x. 597. The last instance is particularly instructive, as al follows the pp., instead of preceding. 3. All-to or al-to, when (perhaps) misunderstood. 'To-day redy ripe, to-morrow all-to-shaken;' Surrey, Sonnet 9, last line. 'We be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to-dirtied;' Latimer, Remains, p. 397 (Parker Soc.). 'Smiling speakers . . . love and all-to love him;' Latimer, Sermons, p. 289. The last instance is a clear one. Spenser has all to-torne, F. Q. v. 9. 10, and all to-worne in the same stanza; all to-rent, F. Q. iv. 7. 8. Milton has all-to-ruffled, Comus, 380; this is a very late example. B. Etymologically, the A. S. tó- is cognate with O. Fries. to-, te-; O. H. G. zar-, zer-, ze-, zi-; mod. G. zer-, as in zerbrechen, to break in pieces, pt. t. zerbrach (= to-brake). The Goth. form is dis- (by the same exceptional occurrence of d for t as is seen in Goth. du = E. to), as seen in dis-tairan, to tear asunder, burst, Mark, ii. 22, Luke, v. 37. The Lat. form is also dis- (by the regular sound-shifting), standing for an older form dvis, from duo, two; so also Gk. di-, only used in the sense of 'double.' Thus the prefix to- is connected with E. two, and had the orig. sense of 'into two parts,' or 'in twain;' hence, 'in pieces' or 'asunder.' See Dis-, Di-, and Two; and see note to All.

TO- (2), prefix, to. (E.) Besides the prefix to- (= in twain) discussed above, we also have the prep. to in composition in some verbs, &c. Of these compounds, we still use to-ward, q. v. Others are obsolete; the chief are the sbs. to-cume, advent, toflight, a refuge, tohope, hope, toname, a nick-name; and the verb tonehen, to approach, Wyclif, Judith, xiv. 14. See Strattmann. And see to-day.

TOAD, an amphibious reptile. (E.) M. E. tode; spelt toode, Prompt. Parv., p. 495; tade, Pricke of Conscience, 6900. = A. S. tādige; 'Buffo, tādige,' Wright's Vocab. i. 24. Also tādīe, id. i. 78. Root unknown. The Dan. tudse, Swed. tåssa, a toad, must be from a different root. Der. tad-pole, q. v.; also toad-stool, spelt todestool, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Dec. 69; toad-flax; toad-eater, formerly an assistant to a mountebank (see Wedgwood, and N. and Q. 3rd S. i. 128, 176, 236, 276, v. 142), now shortened to toady; toad-stone, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 13, § 3.

TOAST (1), bread scorched before the fire. (F., = L.) M. E. toost, whence the verb tosten, to toast; see Prompt. Parv. p. 497. = O. F. tostée, 'a toast of bread;' marked as a Picard word in Cotgrave. = Lat. tosta, fem. of tostus, pp. of torrere, to parch; see Torrid. Cf. Span. tostar, torrar, to toast, tostada, a toast, slice of toasted bread; Port. tostado, toasted, tostar, torrar, to toast. Der. toast, verb; toast-er, toast-ing-iron, K. John, iv. 3. 99.

TOAST (2), a person whose health is drunk. (F., = L.) It was formerly usual to put toasted bread in liquor; see Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 5. 33. The story of the origin of the present use of the word is given in the Tatler, no. 24, June 4, 1709. 'Many wits of the last age will assert that the word, in its present sense, was known among them in their youth, and had its rise from an accident at the town of Bath, in the reign of king Charles the Second. It happened that, on a public day, a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross Bath, and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half-fuddled, who offered to jump in, and swore, though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been called a toast.' Whether the story be true or not, it may be seen that a toast, i. e. a health, easily took its name from being the usual accompaniment to liquor, esp. in loving-cups, &c. Der. toast, vb.; toast-master, the announcer of toasts at a public dinner.

TOBACCO, a narcotic plant. (Span., = Hayti.) Formerly spelt tabacco, Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 4 (last speech). See remarks in Wheatley's Introduction to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour. Harrison fixes on 1573 as the date when the smoking of tobacco became general in England. Cotgrave mentions tobacco, s. v. Nicotiane. = Span. tabaco, tobacco. Mahn (in Webster) derives this from the [West] Indian tabaco, the tube or pipe in which the Indians or Caribbees smoked the plant, transferred by the Spaniards to the herb itself. Clavigero, in his Conquest of Mexico (E. transl. i. 430), says: 'tabaco is a word taken from the Haytine language,' i. e. the language spoken in the island of Hayti or St. Domingo. Der. tobacco-nist, a coined word, orig. used, not of the seller (as now), but of the smoker of tobacco; see examples in Trench, Select Glossary; tobacco-pipe.

TOCSIN, an alarm-bell, or the sound of it. (F., = Teut. and L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. He quotes: 'The priests went up into the steeple, and rang the bells backward, which they call tockaine, whereupon the people . . . flocked together;' Fulke, Answer to P. Frarine (1580), p. 52. = O. F. toquesing, 'an alluram bell, or the ringing thereof;' Cot. Mod. F. tocsin (see Littré). = F. toquer, 'to clap, knock, hit,' Cot.; and O. F. sing, 'a sign, mark, . . . also a bell or the sound of a bell, whence tocsing, an alluram bell;' id. Thus it means 'a striking of the signal-bell.' β. The F. toquer is another form of toucher, to touch; see Touch. The O. F. sing, mod. F. signe, is from Lat. signum, a mark, hence a signal, signal-bell; see Sign. Thus toc-sin = touch-sign. See Tucket.

TOD, a bush; a certain measure of wool; a fox. (Scand.) 'An yvie todde,' an ivy-bush; Spenser, Shep. Kal., March, 67. 'Wulle is bought by the sacke, by the tod, by the stone;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 191. Palsgrave has 'Todde of woll' = tod of wool; and 'tode of chese' = tod of cheese. See Nares. Tod, a fox, occurs in Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, hymn 4; and see Jamieson's Sc. Dict. The fox is supposed to be so named from his bushy tail. = Icel. toddi (nearly obsolete), a tod of wool; a bit, a piece. + G. zotte, zote, a tuft of hair hanging together, a rag, anything shaggy. Origin uncertain; cf. Fick, iii. 113.

TODAY, this day. (E.) Compounded of to, prep., and day. The etymology is obscured by the disuse of the prep. to in the old sense of 'for;' thus to day = for the day; to night = for the night; &c. Strattmann cites me ches him to kinge = people chose him for king, Rob. of Glouc. p. 302; yeuen to wiue = to give to wife, Chaucer, C. T. 1862. See particularly the article on A. S. tó in Grein, p. 540: he gives examples of tó dage, for the day, today; tó dage ðissum, for this day, today; tó midre nakte, to or at midnight; tó morgene = for the morn, to-morrow. Hence our to-day, to-morrow, to-night, and prov. E. to-year, i. e. for the present year, this year. ¶ To explain to as a corruption of the is a gross error.

TODDLE, to walk unsteadily, as a child. (E.) Given as a Northern word by Todd, in his additions to Johnson. The same as Lowl. Sc. tottle, to walk with short steps; Jamieson. Further, tottle is the same as totter, the frequentative suffixes -le and -er being equivalent; see Totter. + Swed. tulla, to toddle; the spelling with l is duly explained s. v. totter. And cf. G. zoteln, to toddle, though probably formed in another way.

TODDY, a mixture of spirits. (Hindustani.) 'The toddy-tree is not unlike the date or palm;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 29 (R.). = Hindustani tári, tádi, 'vulgarly toddy, the juice or sap of the palmyra-tree and of the cocoa-nut [which] when allowed to stand . . . becomes a fiery and highly intoxicating spirit;' H. H. Wilson, Glossary of Indian Terms, p. 510. = Hind. tár, 'a palm-tree, . . . most appropriate to the Palmyra, from the stem of which the juice is extracted which becomes toddy;' id. Cf. Pers. tár, 'a species of palm-tree from which an intoxicating liquor, toddy, is extracted;' Rich. Dict. p. 353. The r in the Hind. word has a peculiar sound, which has come to be represented by d in English.

TOE, one of the five small members at the end of the foot. (E.) M. E. too, pl. toon, Chaucer, C. T. 14868. = A. S. tá, pl. tán or taan, Laws of Æthelbirht, §§ 70, 71, 72, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 20. This is a contracted form, standing for táke. + Du. teen. + Icel. tá, pl. tár. + Dan. taa, pl. taar. + Swed. tå. + G. zehe; O. H. G. zéhá, a toe, also a finger. β. All from Teut. type TAIHA, Fick, iii. 121; orig. used of the finger; from Teut. base TIIH (Aryan DIK). = ✓ DAK, perhaps 'to take,' rather than 'to shew;' see note to Digit, which is a cognate word. ¶ Distinct from toe in mistletoe. Der. to-ed, having toes.

TOFT, a form of Tuft (2), q. v.

TOGA, the mantle of a Roman citizen. (L.) Whether toge = toga really occurs in Shakespeare is doubtful. Phillips gives it in his Dict. = Lat. toga, a kind of mantle, lit. a covering. = Lat. tegere, to cover; see Tegument.

TOGETHER, in the same place, at the same time. (E.) M. E. to-gedere, to-gedre, to-gidere, P. Flowman, B. prol. 46; togideres, id. xvi. 80. We even find the compound altogedere as early as in the Ancren Riwe, p. 320, l. 25. For the spelling with d, cf. M. E. fader, a father, moder, a mother. — A. S. tō-gædre, tō-gædre; together, Grein, ii. 544. — A. S. tō, to; and gador, together, Grein, i. 491; see further under GATHER. Der. al-together.

TOIL (1), labour, fatigue; as a verb, to labour. (F., — Teut.?) M. E. toil; the dat. toile, in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1802, means a tussle or struggle. 'And when these com on ther was so grete toile and rumour of noyse that wonder it was to heere, and therwith aroos so grete a duste;' Merlin, ed. Wheatley, p. 393, l. 1. Thus the old sense was rather turmoil or disturbance than labour; the sense of labour may have been imported by confusion with M. E. tulien, a form of tillen, to till (P. Plowman, B. vii. 2). β. As to the verb toilen, its meaning was also different from that of mod. E. toil. We find: 'reuliche toyled to and fro' = ruefully pulled or tugged to and fro, Debate between Body and Soul, l. 368, in Mätzner, Sprachproben, i. 100. Also: 'tore and toyled' = torn and pulled about or spoilt, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 372. It may have its present meaning in P. Plowman's Crede, 742, where it is joined with tylen, to till. We may also note Lowland Sc. tuill, toil (Jamieson); and perhaps Sc. tuilzie, tuilzie, a quarrel, broil, struggle, is closely related, as well as tuize, to harass, occurring in Barbour's Bruce, iv. 152, where the Edinb. MS. has the pp. toilzit. γ. The origin seems to be found in O. F. touiller, 'filthily to mix or mingle, confound or shuffle together; to intangle, trouble, or pester by scurvy meddling, also to bedirt, begrime, besmear, smeech, beray;' Cot. The origin of this F. word is very obscure; if we may take the senses of the M. E. word as a guide, perhaps we may derive it from an unrecorded frequentative form of O. H. G. zuechen (G. zuehen), to twitch, pull quickly, or from closely related forms such as zuechōn, to pull, tear, snatch away, zōgōn, to tear, pull, pluck; all of these are derivatives from O. H. G. ziahhan, zihan (G. ziehen), to pull. These words are related to E. Tow (1), q. v. δ. If this be right, the orig. sense of toil was to keep on pulling about, to harass; which is precisely the sense found. [Burguy connects O. F. touiller with toaille, a towel; but it does not seem likely that it would then mean 'to soil'; it would rather mean to wipe clean. As to this F. toaille, see Towel.] ¶ The usual etymology of toil is from O. Du. tuylen, 'to till, or to manure lands,' Hexham; cf. tuyl, sb., 'tilling or manuring of lands,' id.; but it seems impossible to explain the senses of M. E. toilen from this source only. Der. toil-some, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 29; toil-some-ness. [†]

TOIL (2), a net or snare. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 362. The pl. toyles is in Spenser, Astrophel, 97. — F. toile, 'cloth, linen cloth, also, a stalking-horse of cloth; toile de araigne, a cob-web; pl. toiles, toils, or a hay to inclose or intangle wild beasts in;' Cot. — Lat. tēla, a web, thing woven; put for *tex-la. — Lat. texere, to weave; see Text. Der. toil-et (below).

TOILET, TOILETTE, a small cloth on a dressing-table; hence, a dressing-table, or the operation of dressing. (F., — L.) 'Toilet, a kind of table-cloth, . . . made of fine linnen, &c. spread upon a table . . . where persons of quality dress themselves; a dressing-cloth;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt toylet in Cotgrave. — F. toilette, 'a toylet, the stuff which drapers lap about their cloths, also a bag to put nightgowns in;' Cot. Dimin. of toile, cloth; see Toil (2).

TOFT, a clearing. (Scand.) See Toom.

TOISE, a French measure of length. (F., — L.) It contains 6 feet, and a little over 4½ inches. — F. toise, 'a fadome, a measure containing six feet in length;' Cot. Cf. Ital. tesa, a stretching. — Lat. tensa, fem. of pp. of tendere, to stretch. See Tense (2).

TOKAY, a white wine. (Hungary.) Mentioned in Townson's Travels in Hungary; see quotation in Todd's Johnson. So named from Tokay, a town in Hungary, at some distance E.N.E. from Pesth.

TOKEN, a mark, sign, memorial, coin. (E.) M. E. token, Chaucer, C. T. 13289. The o answers to A. S. ā, as usual. — A. S. tācen, tācen, a very common word; Grein, ii. 520. — A. S. tādō (for tāh), pt. t. of tīhan, usually teōn, to accuse, criminate, the orig. sense being to indicate, point out (hence point out as guilty); Grein, ii. 532. + Du. teeken, a sign, mark, token, miracle. + Icel. tákna, teikna. + Dan. tegn. + Swed. tecken. + G. zeichen. + Goth. taikns. β. All from Teut. base TIH (Aryan DIK); from ✓ DIK, to shew, whence also Lat. in-dic-are, to point out, A. S. tīhan, Goth. gateihan, to shew, G. zeigen, to shew, zeihen, to accuse. See Teach and Diction. Der. be-token. From the same root are ad-dict, in-dic-ate, in-dex, &c.; see under diction.

TOLERATE, to bear, endure, put up with. (L.) 'To tollerate those things;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 14. § 4. — Lat. toleratus, pp. of tolerare, to endure; allied to tollere, to lift, bear. — ✓ TAR, TAL, to lift, bear; cf. Skt. tal, to lift, Gk. τῆλαι, to suffer, A. S. þolian, to endure, L. latus, pp. (for *latus). See Thole (2). Der. tolera-ble, from F. tolerable, 'tolerable,' Cot., from Lat. toler- abilis, that can be endured; toler-abil-y, toler-able-ness; toler-at-ion, from F. tolleration, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Litttré), from Lat. acc. tollerationem, endurance; toler-ance, from F. tolerance, 'tolleration, sufferance,' Cot., from Lat. tolerantia, sufferance; toler-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of tolerare. From the same root are a-tlas, tal-ent, ex-tol; e-late, col-late, di-late, ob-late, pre-late, pro-late, re-late, trans-late, legis-late, ab-lat-ive, super-lat-ive.

TOLL (1), a tax for the privilege to use a road or sell goods in a market. (E.) M. E. tol, tribute, Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 7. — A. S. toll, Matt. xvii. 25. + Du. tol. + Icel. tollr. + Dan. told (for toll). + Swed. tull. + G. zoll. β. All from Teut. type TOLA (or perhaps tol-la = TOL-NA), a toll; Fick, iii. 120. Probably allied to tale, in the old sense of number, numeration; from the telling or counting of the tribute; see Tale. Cf. A. S. italian, to reckon, esteem.

γ. If the word be Teutonic, as it seems to be, this is a satisfactory solution; much more so than that which supposes toll to be a violent corruption of Low Lat. teloneum, Lat. telonium, from Gk. τελώνιον, a toll-house. The A. S. has tolsetl, i. e. toll-settle, as the equivalent of Low Lat. teloneum, in a gloss; Wright's Voc. i. 60, col. 2, shewing that toll and teloneum are not quite the same thing. ¶ The Gk. τελώνιον is from τέλος, a tax, toll, allied to Lat. tollere, to take, and Gk. τάλαντον (see Talent); a distinct word from τέλος, with the sense of end (see Term). Der. toll, verb, M. E. tollen, Chaucer, C. T. 564; toll-er, M. E. tollere, P. Plowman, B. prol. 220; tol-booth, M. E. tolbothe, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 9; toll-bar, -gate, -house.

TOLL (2), to pull a large bell; to sound as a bell. (E.) We now say 'a bell tolls,' i. e. sounds, but the old usage was 'to toll a bell,' i. e. to pull it, set it ringing, as in Minshew, Skinner, and Phillips. The latter explains to toll a bell by 'to ring a bell after a particular manner.' It is remarkable that the sense of 'sound' occurs as early as in Shakespeare, who has, 'the clocks do toll;' Hen. V, chorus to act iv. l. 15. Yet we may be satisfied that the present word, which has given some trouble to etymologists, is rightly explained by Nares, Todd, and Wedgwood, who take toll to be the M. E. tollen, to pull, entice, draw, and Wedgwood adds: 'To toll the bells is when they ring slowly to invite the people into church.' The double sense of toll is remarkably shewn by two quotations given by Richardson from Dryden, Duke of Guise, Act iv: 'Some crowd the spires, but most the hallow'd bells And softly toll for souls departing knells;' and again: 'When hollow murmurs of the evening-bells Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them [invite them] to their cells.' Minshew has: 'To toll a bell,' and 'to toll, draw on or entice.' See examples in Nares and Todd. β. M. E. tollen. 'Tollyn, or mevyyn, or steryn to doon, Incito, provocho, excito;' Prompt. Parv. 'Tollare, or styrare to do goode or badde, Excitator, instigator;' id. '[He] tollyd [drew] hys oune wyf away;' Fives Sages, ed. Wright, 3052. 'This tolleth him toward thee'—this draws him towards you; Ancren Riwe, p. 290, l. 5. There is a long note on this curious word, with numerous examples, in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; the oldest sense seems to be to coax or fondle, entice, draw towards one. γ. All is clear so far; but the origin of M. E. tollen is obscure; Mr. Cockayne supposes it to answer to Icel. þukla, to grope for, feel, touch, handle. We may rather suppose it to be nearly related to A. S. fortyllan, to allure, Grein, i. 332; cf. M. E. tullen, to entice, lure, Chaucer, C. T. 4132. See Till (3).

TOLU, a kind of resin. (S. America.) Also called Tolu balsam or balsam of Tolu. Said to be named from Tolu, a place on the N.W. coast of New Granada, in S. America.

TOM, a pet name for Thomas. (L., — Gk., — Heb.) Spelt Thomme, P. Plowman, B. v. 28. — Lat. Thomas. — Gk. Θωμάς, Matt. x. 3. From the Heb. thoma, a twin; Smith's Dict. of the Bible. This is why Thomas was also called Didymus; from Gk. δίδυμος, a twin. Der. tom-boy, tom-cat, tom-tit.

TOMAHAWK, a light war-hatchet of the N. American Indians. (W. Indian.) Modern. From the Algonkin tomehagen, Mohegan tumnahegan, Delaware tamoihecan, a war-hatchet (Webster). TOMATO, a kind of fruit, a love-apple. (Span., — Mexican?) Modern. From Span. (and Port.) tomate, a tomato; we probably used final o for e because o is so common an ending in Spanish. Borrowed from some American language; according to Litttré, from Mexican tomatl. It is a native of South America.

TOMB, a grave, vault for the dead. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. toumbe, tombe, Chaucer, C. T. 10832; tumbe, Layamon, 6080, later text. — O. F. tumbe; F. tombe, 'a tombe;' Cot. — Lat. tumba, a tomb (White). — Gk. *τύμβη, put for the common form τύμβος, a tomb, sepulchre; properly a burial-mound. Prob. allied to Lat. tumulus (Curtius, ii. 139); see Tumulus. Der. tomb-less, Hen. V, i. 2. 229; tomb-stone; en-tomb.

TOMBOY, a rude girl. (L., — Gk., — Heb.; and O. Low G.) In Shak. Cymb. i. 6. 122. From Tom and Boy. ¶ So also tom-cat, tom-tit, tom-fool.

TOME, a volume of a book. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. -F. tome, 'a tome, or volume;' Cot. - Lat. tomum, acc. of tomus, a volume. - Gk. τόμος, a section; hence, a volume. From the stem of Gk. τέμνειν, to cut. - ✓TAM or TAN, to cut (Fick, i. 594); whence Lat. tondere, to shear; see Tonsure. Der. (from same root) ana-tom-y, a-tom, en-tom-o-logy, epi-tom-e, litho-tom-y, phlebo-tom-y, zoo-tom-y.

TOMORROW, on the morrow, on the morn succeeding this one. (E.) M.E. to morwe, P. Plowman, B. ii. 43. From to, prep., with the sense of 'for' or 'on'; and morwe, morrow. So also A.S. to merigen, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 246, l. 12. See Today and Morrow.

TOMTIT, a small bird. (L., -Gk., -Heb.; and Scand.) In the Tatler, no. 112; Dec. 27, 1709. From Tom and Tit, q. v.

TON, TUN, a large barrel; 4 hogsheds; 20 hundredweight. (L.) We use ton for a weight; and tun for a cask; but the word is all one. Properly a large barrel, hence, the contents of a large barrel; and hence, a heavy weight. M.E. tonne, Chaucer, C. T. 3892. - A.S. tinne, a barrel; 'Cupa, tinne,' Wright's Voc. i. 24, col. 2; the pl. tunnan is in the A.S. Chron. an. 852. We find also Du. ton, a tun; Icel. and Swed. tonna, Dan. tønne, a tun, cask; G. tonne, a cask, also a heavy weight; Low Lat. tunna, tonna, whence F. tonneau, 'a tun,' Cot. Also Irish and Gael. tunna, Irish tonna, W. tynell, a tun, barrel.

β. The common form is TUNNA or TONNA; and the word is not Teutonic, the G. form being tonne (not zonne); neither is it Celtic, being so widely spread; moreover, the orig. sense is 'cask.' All the forms appear to be from the Low Lat. tunna, a cask; we find it written tinne, and considered as a Latin word, in the Cassel Glossary of the 9th century; see Bartsch, Chrest. Franc. col. 2, l. 15. It is generally supposed to be related to Lat. tina, tinta, or tinum, a wine-vessel, cask; see Diez. Root unknown. Der. tonn-age, a coined word; tunn-sl, q. v. Doublet, tun, q. v.

TONE, the sound emitted by a stretched string, the character of a sound, quality of voice. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt toone in Levins. In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 112. -F. ton, 'a tune or sound;' Cot. - Lat. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. - Gk. τόνος, a thing stretched, a rope, sinew, tone, note; from the sound of a stretched string. - ✓TAN, to stretch; Skt. tan, to stretch, Gk. τένειν, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. tone, vb.; ton-ed; ton-ic, increasing the tone or giving vigour, a late word, from Gk. τονικός, relating to stretching. Also a-ton-ic, bary-tone, mono-tone, oxy-tone, semi-tone. Doublet, tune, q. v. [†]

TONGS, an instrument consisting of two jointed bars of metal, used for holding and lifting. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 44. But earlier, the singular form tonge or tange is usual. M.E. tange, tonge. 'Thu twengst parmid so doþ a tonge' = thou twingest therewith as doth a tong; Owl and Nightingale, 156. - A.S. tange; 'Forceps, tange,' Wright's Voc. i. 86, l. 20. Also spelt tang, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 67, l. 3. +Du. tang, a pair of tongs or pincers. +Icel. tóng (pl. tangir). +Dan. tang. +Swed. tång. +G. zange. β. All from Teut. type TANGA, with the sense 'a biter' or 'nipper;' cf. E. nippers, pincers (Fick, iii. 116). From the base TANG, nasalised form of TAH (Aryan DAK), to bite. - ✓DAK, to bite; cf. Gk. δάκνειν, to bite, Skt. dam̐, daç, to bite, saṃdashṭa, pressed together, tight, dam̐ça, a tooth, dam̐çaka, a crab (a pincher). In particular, cf. O. H. G. zanga, a pair of tongs, with O. H. G. zanger, biting, pinching. See Tang (1).

TONGUE, the fleshy organ in the mouth, used in tasting, swallowing, and speech. (E.) The spelling with final -ue looks like a parody upon F. langue; a far better spelling is tong, as in Spenser, F. Q., introd. to b. i. st. 2. M.E. tunge, tonge, Chaucer, C. T. 267 (or 265). - A.S. tunge, a tongue, Luke, i. 64. +Du. tong. +Icel. and Swed. tunga. +Dan. tunge. +G. zung. O. H. G. zunga. +Goth. tuggo (= tungo). β. All from Teut. type TONGA, Fick, iii. 123. Further related to O. Lat. lingua, Lat. lingua (whence F. langue), the tongue; Irish and Gael. teanga, the tongue, a language, put for an older form *denga, the initial letter being hardened; whence the European forms DANGHWA, DANGHÚ are inferred; Fick, i. 613. It is further supposed that Skt. jihvá, Vedic jukú, the tongue, are related, since jihvá might stand for dihvá or dahvá; and that the form of the root is DAGH, the meaning being uncertain. Der. tongue, vb., Cymb. v. 4. 148; tongue-ed; tongue-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 105; tongue-tied, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 104. From the same root are lingu-al, ling-o, lingu-age.

TONIC, strengthening. (Gk.) See Tone.

TONIGHT, this night. (E.) See Today.

TONSIL, one of two glands at the root of the tongue. (F., -L.) 'Tonsils or almonds in the mouth;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 7. § 1. - F. tonsille; tonsilles, pl., 'certain kernels at the root of the tongue;' Cot. - Lat. tonsilla, a sharp pointed pole stuck in the ground to fasten vessels to the shore; pl. tonsilla, the tonsils. The reason for the name is not obvious. Tonsilla is the dimin. of tonsa, an oar. Origin uncertain.

TONSURE, a clipping of the hair, esp. the corona of hair worn by Romish priests. (F., -L.) M.E. tonsure, Gower, C. A. iii. 291, l. 20. - F. tonsure, 'a sheering, clipping, the shaven crown of a priest;' Cot. - Lat. tonsura, a clipping. - Lat. tonsus, pp. of tondere (pp. tonsus), to shear, clip. Cf. Gk. τένειν, to gnaw. - ✓TAM or TAN, to cut; whence also Gk. τέμνειν, to cut; see Tome.

TONTINE, a certain financial scheme, the gain of which falls to the longest liver. (F., -Ital.) See Haydn's Dict. of Dates, and Littré. First started at Paris, about A.D. 1653. - F. tonnine, a tontine. Named from Laurence Tontii, a Neapolitan, who originated the scheme.

TOO, more than enough, likewise. (E.) The same word as to, prep. M.E. to; 'to badde' = too bad; Will. of Palerne, 5024. - A.S. tō, too; Grein, ii. 542, q. v. The same word as tō, prep., but differently used. See To.

TOOL, an instrument used by workmen. (E.) M.E. tol, tool; pl. toles, toolles, P. Plowman, A. xi. 133; B. x. 177. - A.S. tól, a tool; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 162, l. 12; spelt tool, Wright's Voc. i. 21, col. 2; tohl, id. ii. 49. +Icel. tól, neut. pl., tools. β. Doubtless a contracted form for TAU-I-LA, an implement for making things, Fick, iii. 115; from the verb which appears as Goth. taijan, to make, cause, and in E. taw, tew, to work hard, to dress leather; see Taw. The Teut. base is TU, answering to Aryan DU; from the ✓DU, to work. γ. 'This root is not recognised by Skt. grammarians, but it has to be admitted by comparative philologists. There is the verb duvasyati in the Veda, meaning to worship, a denominative verb derived from duvas. Dúvas meant, originally, any opus operatum, and presupposes a root du or dú, in the sense of actively or sedulously working. It exists in Zend as du, to do. With it we may connect Goth. taijan, the G. zauen (Grimm, Gram. i. 1041), Goth. tawi, work, &c. See my remarks on this root and its derivatives in the Veda in my Translation of the Rig-Veda, i. 63, 191; Max Müller, letter to The Academy, July, 1874.

TOOM, empty. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; 'toom dish' = empty dish; Burns, Hallowe'en, l. 12 from end. M.E. tom, toom. 'Toom, or voyde, Vacuus;' Prompt. Parv. Not an A.S. word, though the adv. tóme occurs once (Grein). - Icel. tómur, empty; Swed. and Dan. tom. Fick cites also O. H. G. zōmi, empty, free from, iii. 124. The Teut. type is TOMA, empty. Root unknown. Der. teem (3), q. v. Also toft, in the sense of clearing, from Icel. toft (pronounced toft), tupl, toft, tufi, a clearing or space marked out for a house or building, also spelt tomt, and probably from tómur, empty, though the o is now short; see further under Tuft (2).

TOOT (1), to peep about, spy. (E.) A form of Tout, q. v.

TOOT (2), to blow a horn. (O. Low G.) 'To tute in a horn, cornuciner;' Levins. Not an A.S. form, which would have given theet; but borrowed from a dialect which sounded th as t. - O. Du. tuyten, 'to sound or winde a cornet,' Hexham; cf. Du. toethoren, a bugle-horn. +Swed. tjuta, to howl; Dan. tude, to howl, blow a horn. +Icel. bjóta, strong verb, pt. t. paut, to whistle as wind, sigh, resound; also, to blow a horn. +A.S. peotan, to howl, make a noise; Grein, ii. 589. +M. H. G. diezen, O. H. G. diozan, to make a loud noise. +Goth. thut-hauru, a trumpet. β. All from Teut. base THUT, to make a noise, resound (due to the sound of a blow) = Aryan ✓TUD, to strike; Fick, iii. 137. See Thump and Type.

TOOTH, one of the small bones in the jaws, used in eating, a prong. (E.) M.E. toth, tooth; pl. teth, teeth, spelt teð, Ancren Riwele, p. 288, l. 3 from bottom. - A.S. tōð, pl. tēð and tōðas, Grein, ii. 543. Here the o is long, to compensate for loss of n before th following; tōð stands for tand; cf. O. Sax. tand. +Du. tand. +Icel. tönn, orig. tannr (= tand). +Dan. tand; Swed. tand. +G. zahn; M. H. G. zan, O. H. G. zand. +Goth. tunthuis. β. All from Teut. type TANTHU or TANTHI, Fick, iii. 113; cognate with Lat. dens (stem dent-), W. dant, Gk. δδόν (stem δδόν-), Lithuan. dantis, Skt. dania, a tooth. And cf. Pers. dandān, a tooth. γ. The Aryan base is either DANT or ADANT, pres. participial form from ✓DA, to divide, or from ✓AD, to eat; roots which are probably related. All turns upon the question whether, in Gk. δδόν, the initial o is unoriginal or original. See arguments in favour of the latter view in Curtius, i. 303. The orig. sense was either 'dividing,' i.e. cutting, or 'eating;' the forms being taken as present participles. Der. tooth, verb, spelt tothe, Fitzherbert, Husbandry, § 24, l. 7; tooth-ed; tooth-ache, Much Ado, iii. 2. 21; tooth-less, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-drawer, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-pick, All's Well, i. 1. 171; tooth-some, i.e. dainty, nice, not an early word.

TOP (1), the highest part of anything, the summit. (E.) M.E. top; top over tail = head over heels, Will. of Palerne, 2776. - A.S. top; 'Apex, summitas galeæ, helmes top,' Wright's Voc. i. 36, l. 1. +Du. top. +Icel. toppr, a tuft, lock of hair, crest, top. +Dan. top, a tuft, crest, top. + Swed. topp, a summit. + G. zopf, a tuft of hair, pig-tail, top of a tree; O. H. G. zoph. β. All from Teut. type TOPA, a peak, top; allied to E. top, a spike for a cask; Fick, iii. 117. Cf. G. zapfen, a peg, tap, also a fir-cone; Norweg. topp, a top, a bung (Aasen). Root unknown; we also find Gael. topach, having a tuft or crest (but no sb. top); W. top, a top, also a stopple, topio, to top, to crest, also to stop up, topyno, to form a top; and perhaps W. topi, to gore with the horns, may be related; see remarks on Toper. Der. top, verb, Macb. iv. 3. 57; top-dressing; top-gallant-mast, for which Shak. has top-gallant, Romeo, ii. 4. 202; top-full, K. John, iii. 4. 180; top-less, Troil. i. 3. 152; top-mast, Temp. i. 1. 37; top-sail, Temp. i. 1. 7; top-mast, really a double superl. form, see Aftermost; topp-le, to tumble, be top-heavy, and so fall headlong, Macb. iv. 1. 56. Also top-sy-turvy, q. v. Der. top (2), tip.

TOP (2), a child's toy. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 1. 27. M. E. top, a child's toy, King Alisaunder, 1727. As Dr. Schmidt observes, a top is an 'inverted conoid which children play with by setting it to turn on the point'; so called because sharpened to a top or point, and really the same word as the above. Cf. O. Du. top, a top, in both senses (Hexham); whence the G. topf is borrowed, the true G. form zopf being only used in the same sense as Top (1).

TOPAZ, a precious stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. topas, whence Chaucer's Sir Topas; spelt tupace, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 172. -F. topase, 'topase, a stone'; Cot. -Lat. topazus, topazon, topazion, a topaz. -Gk. τόρακος, τοράκιον, the yellow or oriental topaz. β. According to Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 8, named from an island in the Red Sea called Topazas; which is very doubtful. Perhaps from its brightness, from ✓TAP, to shine, warm; see Tepid. Cf. Skt. tapa, illuminating, tapas, heat, tapishanu, burning.

TOPER, a great drinker. (F. or Ital.) 'Tope, to drink briskly or lustily'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The jolly members of a toping club'; Butler, Epigram on a Club of Sots, l. 1. Certainly connected, as Wedgwood shews, with F. tôper, to cover a stake, a term used in playing at dice; whence tôpe! interj. (short for je tôpe, lit. I accept your offer), used in the sense of good! agreed! well done! It came to be used as a term in drinking, though this only appears in Italian. 'According to Florio [i.e. in ed. 1688] the same exclamation was used for the acceptance of a pledge in drinking. [He gives]: topa, a word among dicers, as much as to say, I hold it, done, throw! also by good fellows when they are drinking; I'll pledge you'; Wedgwood. β. Apparently from the same base as E. top, to strike; from the striking of hands in making a bargain. Diez derives Span. topar, to butt, strike against, meet, accept a bet, Ital. intoppare, to meet or strike against an obstacle, from the Teut. base appearing in E. top, as if to strike with the head. Perhaps both explanations come to much the same thing; and tap and top (as well as tup) are formed from an imitative word meaning to tap or to butt. See Top (1).

TOPIC, a subject of discourse or argument. (F., -L., -Gk.) Properly an adj.; Milton has 'a topic folio' = a common-place book; Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 40, l. 28, on which see the note. 'Topics (topica), books that speak of places of invention, or that part of logic which treats of the invention of arguments'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt topickes in Minshew, ed. 1627. -F. topiques, 'topicks, books or places of logical invention'; Cot. -Lat. topica, s. pl., the title of a work of Aristotle, of which a compendium is given by Cicero (White). -Gk. τοπικός, adj., local; also concerning τόπος or common-places. Aristotle wrote a treatise on the subject (τὰ τοπικά). -Gk. τόπος, a place. Root uncertain. Der. topical (Blount), topical-ly; and see topo-graphy.

TOPOGRAPHY, the art of describing places. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt topographie in Minshew, ed. 1627. -F. topographie, 'the description of a place'; Cot. -Lat. topographia. -Gk. τοπογραφία, a description of a place; Strabo. -Gk. τοπο, crude form of τόπος, a place; and γράφειν, to describe. See Topic and Grave. Der. topograph-er, formed with E. suffix -er from Gk. τοπογράφος, a topographer, describer of places; topograph-ic, topograph-ic-al, -ly.

TOPPLE, to fall over. (E.) See Top (1).

TOPSYTURVY, upside down. (E.) There is no doubt that sy stands for side, as the word is sometimes so written, and we have a similar use of side in the corresponding phrase upside-down. In Stanishurst's tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, we have top-turvy, p. 33, l. 13; topsy-turvy, p. 63, l. 25; and top-syd-turvy, p. 59, l. 23. Topside-turvey occurs twice (at least) in the play of Cornelia, printed in 1594, in Act i, and Act v; see Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vol. v. p. 186, l. 1, p. 250, l. 15. Much earlier, we find 'He tourneth all thynge topsy tervy'; Roy, Rede Me and Be Not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 51, l. 25 (printed in 1528). β. In Trench, Eng. Past and Present, we are told that topsy turvy is a corruption from topside the other way; to which the author adds: 'There is no doubt of the fact; see Stanishurst's Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chronicles.' After searching in three editions of Holinshed, I find, in the reprint of 1808, at p. 33, that Stanishurst has the equivalent expression topside the other waie; to which may be added that Richardson quotes topside tother way from Search's Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23. γ. But this hardly proves the point; it only proves that such was a current explanation of the phrase in the time of Stanishurst and later; but Stanishurst may easily have erred in interpreting a phrase which already occurs as early as 1528. For myself, I can hardly believe in a corruption so violent, so uncalled for, and so clumsy. I would rather suppose that it means what it says, viz. that the topside is to be turfy or placed upon the ground; for, though this may seem unlikely at first, it must be remembered that, in old authors, the plural of turf is turves, and the adjective might very well appear occasionally in the form turvy, just as we have leavy for leafy (Macb. v. 6. 1, first folio), and scurvy for scuffy. Cf. 'turvare, glebarius,' Prompt. Parv. (I prefer this to making turvy = turf-way.) For further remarks on this word, see the Addenda. [†]

TORCH, a light formed of twisted tow dipped in pitch, a large candle. (F., -L.) M. E. torche, Floriz and Blanchefur, l. 238. -F. torche, 'a link; also, the wreathed clout, wisp, or wad of straw, layed by wenches between their heads and the things which they carry on them'; Cot. Cf. Ital. torcia, a torch, torciare, to twist; Span. entorchar, to twist, antorcha, a torch. -Low Lat. tortia, tortica, a torch; also tortisius, occurring A.D. 1287; also tortius, &c. All various derivatives from Lat. tort-us, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. A torch is simply 'a twist.' Der. torch-light. And see truss.

TORMENT, anguish, great pain. (F., -L.) M. E. torment, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 148, l. 6, where it means 'a tempest'; also tourment, K. Alisaunder, 5869. -O. F. torment, 'torment'; Cot. Mod. F. tourment. -Lat. tormentum, an instrument for hurling stones, an instrument of torture, torture. Formed with suffix -men-tum from tor- (for torc-), base of torquere, to twist, hurl, throw; see Torture. Der. torment, verb, M. E. tormenten, Rob. of Glouc. p. 240, l. 14; torment-ing-ly; torment-or, M. E. tormentour, Chaucer, C. T. 15995; also torment-er. And see tormentil.

TORMENTIL, the name of a herb. (F., -L.) In Levins. -F. tormentille, 'tormentile'; Cot. Cf. Ital. tormentilla, 'tormentill', Florio. Said to be so called because it relieved tooth-ache, an idea which is at least as old as the 16th century; see Littré. -O. F. torment, great pain, an ache; see Torment.

TORNADO, a violent hurricane. (Span., -L.) 'Tornado (Span. tornado, i.e. return, or turning about) is a sudden, violent, and forcible storm . . . at sea, so termed by the mariners'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. It is a sailor's word, and coined after the Span. fashion; there is no such word (in the same sense) either in Spanish or Portuguese. -Span. tornada, a return; from tornar, to return. Perhaps confused with Span. torneado, turned round, from tornear, to turn round, whirl round. But both words are from Lat. tornare, to turn; see Turn.

TORPEDO, the cramp-fish; a kind of eel that produces numbness by communicating an electric shock. (L.) 'Like one whom a torpedo stupefies'; Drummond, sonnet 53. -Lat. torpedo, numbness; also, a torpedo, cramp-fish. -Lat. torpere, to be numb; see Torpid.

TORPID, sluggish, lit. numb. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. torpidus, benumbed, torpid. -Lat. torpere, to be numb, to be stiff. Perhaps the orig. sense was to grow fat and sluggish; cf. Lithuan. tarpti, to thrive, grow fast, Gk. τρέφειν, to feed, τρέφειν, to fill full, satisfy, content. -✓TARP, to satiate; Fick, i. 599. Der. torpid-ly, torpid-ness, torpid-i-ly; torp-or, Lat. torpor, numbness, inactivity; also torp-esc-ent, from the stem of pres. part. of torpescere, to grow torpid, inceptive form of torpere; torp-esc-ence. From the same root is sturdy.

TORRENT, a boiling, rushing stream. (F., -L.) In Shak. J. Cæs. i. 2. 107. -F. torrent, 'a torrent, land-flood.' -Lat. torrentem, acc. of torrens, hot, boiling, raging, impetuous; and as a sb. a torrent, raging stream. Orig. pres. part. of torrere, to parch, dry up; see Torrid. Der. torrent-yne, a trout; Babes Book, p. 173, note 4.

TORRID, parching, violently hot. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. -F. torride, 'torrid, scorched, parched'; Cot. -Lat. torridus, parched. -Lat. torrere, to parch, dry up. β. Torrere stands for *torsero, like terra for *tersa; from ✓TARS, to be dry; see Terrace and Thirst. Cf. Gk. τέρεσθαι, to become dry. Der. torr-ent; torre-fy, to make dry, from F. torrefier, 'to scorch,' Cot.; torre-fact-ion, from Lat. torrefactus, pp. of torrefacere, to make dry, dry up.

TORSION, a violent twisting, twisting force. (F., -L.) A late word. In Johnson. -F. torsion, 'a winding, wrying, wresting'; Cot.

— Lat. torsionem, acc. of torsio, a wringing. — Lat. torquere (pt. t. torsi), to twist; see Torture.

TORSO, the trunk of a statue. (Ital., — L., — Gk.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. — Ital. torso, a stump, stalk, core, trunk. — Lat. thyrsus, acc. of thyrsus, a stalk, stem of a plant; a thyrsus. — Gk. θήρσος, any light straight stem, stalk, rod, the thyrsus. Root unknown.

TORTOISE, a reptile. (F., — L.) M. E. tortue, Prompt. Parv.; tortoise, in Temp. i. 2. 316. We also find M. E. tortu, Knight de la Tour, ch. xi. l. 2. 1. The latter form is immediately from F. tortue, a tortoise (now tortue); with which cf. Span. tortuga, a tortoise; both from Low Lat. toruica, tartuca, a tortoise, for which Diez gives a reference. So also O. Ital. tartuga (Florio); now corrupted to tartaruga.

2. The E. tortoise answers to an O. F. form, not recorded, but cognate with Prov. tortosa, a tortoise (Diez). In all these instances, the animal is named from its crooked or twisted feet, which are very remarkable; cf. O. F. tortis (fem. tortisse), 'crooked'; Cot. Both Low Lat. toruica and Prov. tortosa are formed from Lat. tor-tus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture.

TORTUOUS, crooked. (F., — L.) M. E. tortuos, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. c. 28, l. 19. — F. tortueux, 'full of crookedness or crookings'; Cot. — Lat. tortuosus, twisting about, crooked. — Lat. tor-tus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. Der. tortuosus-ly, -ness.

TORTURE, a wringing pain, torment, anguish. (F., — L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 77, &c. — F. torture, 'torture'; Cot. — Lat. tortura, torture. — Lat. tortus, pp. of torquere, to twist, whirl. — ✓ TARK, to twist; see Throw, Throng. Der. (from Lat. torquere) torch, tor-ment, tor-sion, tor-toise, tor-tious; con-tort, de-tort, dis-tort, extort, re-tort; also tart (2). From the same root are throw, throw, throng; also trave, trav-aile, trav-el, trepan (1), trepidation, trope, trophy, trousers, trousseau, truss; perhaps trouba-dour, trouver.

TORY, a Conservative in English politics. (Irish.) 'Tory, an Irish robber, or bog-trotter; also a nickname given to the stanch Royalists, or High-flyers, in the times of King Charles II. and James II.' Phillips, ed. 1706. As to the use of the name, see Trench, Select Glossary, and Todd's Johnson. First used about 1680. Dryden even reduplicates the word into tory-rory. 'Before George, I grew tory-rory, as they say,' Kind Keeper, i. 1; 'Your tory-rory jades,' id. iv. 1. By this adj. he appears to mean 'wild.' 'Tories was a name properly belonging to the Irish bogtrotters, who during our Civil War robbed and plundered, professing to be in arms for the royal cause; and from them transferred, about 1680, to those who sought to maintain the extreme prerogatives of the Crown;' Trench, Select Glossary. Trench cites 'the increase of tories and other lawless persons' from the Irish State Papers, Jan. 24, 1656. In Irish the word means 'pursuer'; hence, I suppose, it was easily transferred to bogtrotters and plunderers. — Irish toiridhe, also tor, toiragheoir, toirighe, a pursuer; cf. torachd, pursuit, search, toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; toir-eacht, pursuit, search; toirighim, I fancy, I think, I pursue, follow closely. Cf. Gael. toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; torachd, a pursuit with hostile intention, strict search. ¶ Sometimes derived from Irish toir, corruption of tabhair, give thou; with the explanation that it meant 'give me your money'; this is very forced, and the explanation appears to be a mere invention, and unauthorised. Der. Tory-ism.

TOSE, to pull, or pluck; see Tease, Touse.

TOSS, to jerk, throw violently, agitate, move up and down violently. (W. ?) 'I tosse a balle;' Palsgrave. — W. tosio, to jerk, toss; tos, a quick jerk, a toss. β. This is certainly right, if tosio be a true Celtic word, and not borrowed from E. The Norweg. tossa means only to sprinkle, strew, spread out; and cannot be related if the word be Celtic. Der. toss, sb.; toss-pot, Tw. Nt. v. 412.

TOTAL, complete, undivided. (F., — L.) 'Thei toteth [look] on her summe total;' Ploverman's Tale, pt. i. st. 46. We still use sum total for total sum, putting the adj. after the sb., according to the F. idiom. — F. total, 'the total, or whole sum;' Cot. — Low Lat. totalis, extended from Lat. totus, entire. A reduplicated form from ✓ TU, to increase, be large; thus to-tus would mean 'great-great' or 'very great.' See Tumid. Der. total-i-ty, from F. totalité, 'a totality;' Cot. Also sur-tout.

TOTTER, to be unsteady, stagger. (E.) Put for tolter, by assimilation; it is the frequentative of tilt (M. E. tulten, tilten); and means to be always tilting over, to be ready to fall at any minute. 'Where home the cart-horse tolters with the wain;' Clare, Village Minstrel. Cf. prov. E. tolter, to struggle, flounder about (Halliwell). Trevisa, ii. 387, has: 'men toitred peron and meued hider and pider;' here the l is dropped. The form tolter occurs twice in the King's Quhair, by James I of Scotland; but not as a verb, as Jamieson wrongly says. 'On her tolter quhele' = on her [Fortune's] tottering wheel, st. 9; where tolter is an adj. 'So tolter quhilum did sche it to wrye' = so totteringly (unsteadily) did she (fortune) cause it (her wheel) to go aside, st. 164; where tolter is an adverb. The suffix -er is here adjectival, meaning 'ready to tilt.' Precisely the same loss of l occurs in tatter (also spelt totter), a rag; see Tatter. β. Again, tolter is a frequent. of tulten, to totter or tilt over; 'Feole temples per-inne tulten to be eorpe' = many temples therein tottered (fell) to the earth; Joseph of Arithmathie, ed. Skeat, 100. Tulten is another form of tilten; see Tilt (2). But it is important to remark that the word totter itself is exactly represented by A. S. tealtrian, to totter, vacillate, Grein, ii. 526; formed from the adj. tealt, tottery, unstable; id. This fully proves the etymology above given. Add, that we have the cognate O. Du. touteren, 'to tremble,' Hexham; put for tolteren, like Du. goud for gold. Hence Du. touter, a swing; like the Norfolk teeter-cum-tauter, a see-saw. Der. totter-er. Note also tot-t-y (i.e. tolty, tilty), unsteady, Chaucer, C.T. 4251. See toddle. [†]

TOUCAN, a large-beaked tropical bird. (F., — Brazilian.) Littré gives a quotation of the 16th century. 'Il a veu aux terres neuves un oiseau que les sauvages appellent en leur gergon [jargon] toucan,' &c.; Paré, Monstr. app. 2. The form toucan is F., as above. The word is Brazilian; according to Burton, Highlands of Brazil, i. 40, the bird is named from its cry. Buffon says the word means 'feather' (Littré).

TOUCH, to perceive by feeling, handle, move influence. (F., — Teut.) M. E. touchen, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1195. — F. toucher, to touch. Cf. Ital. toccare, Span., Port., and Prov. tocar, to touch; also F. toquer, 'to clap, knock, or hit against;' Cot. To touch a lyre is to strike the strings, or rather to twitch them; so also Ital. toccare il liuto, to twang the lute; Florio gives 'to strike, to smite, to hit,' as senses of toccare. — O. H. G. zucken, mod. G. zucken, to draw with a quick motion, to twitch; cf. O. Du. toeken, tucken, to touch (Hexham). This is a secondary verb, from O. H. G. ziehen, G. ziehen, cognate with Goth. tiuhan, to draw, and therefore cognate with Lat. ducere, to draw; see Tuck (1), Tow (1), and Duke. Der. touch, sb., As You Like It, iii. 4. 15; touching, i. e. relating to, orig. pres. part. of the verb touchen, Chaucer, C. T. 7872, spelt touchende (which is a pres. part. form) in Gower, C. A. p. 79, l. 31 of Chalmers' edition, but spelt touchinge in Pauli's edition, i. 307, l. 22; touch-ing, adj., touch-ing-ly, touch-stone, a stone for testing gold, Palsgrave; touch-hole, Beaum. and Fletcher, Custom of the Country, iii. 3. 8. Also toc-sin, q. v., tuck-st. [†]

TOUCH-WOOD, wood used (like tinder) for taking fire from a spark. (Low G. ?) We find 'Peace, Touchwood!' in Beaum. and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer, Act ii (Clerefont). Here wood is superfluous; touch is a corruption of M. E. tache, spelt also tach, tasche, tasse, tacche, and used in the sense of tinder for receiving sparks struck from a flint, P. Plowman, C. xx. 211; B. xvii. 245; in the latter passage it is equivalent to tow. β. Thus much is clear and certain; but the etymology of tache or tasse presents a difficulty. Perhaps it is from Low G. takk, which not only means a point, tooth, but also a twig; so also Du. tak, a bough, branch. In this case taches are twigs, dried sticks. The allied Swed. tagg means a point, tag; see Tag, Tack, Tache. Hence touch-wood = stick-wood, the sense being tautological, as is so commonly the case.

TOUCHY, apt to take offence. (F., — C.) 'You're touchy without all cause;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2 (Melantius). Doubtless often used as if derived from touch; but really a corruption of Tetchy, q. v.

TOUGH, firm, not easily broken, stiff, tenacious. (E.) M. E. tough, Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 531. — A. S. tōh, tough; Wright's Voc. ii. 112. + Du. taai, flexible, pliant, tough, viscous, clammy. + Low G. taa, tage, tau, tough. + G. zähe, zäh, tough, tenacious, viscous, M. H. G. zähe, O. H. G. zähe, zäch. β. An obscure word; perhaps related to Goth. tahjan, to rend (orig. to bite), as being that which stands biting. Cf. Skt. damś, dap, to bite; see Tongs. Der. tough-ly, tough-ness, tough-ish; also tough-en formed like height-en, &c.

TOUR, a going round, circuit, ramble. (F., — L.) 'Tour, a travel or journey about a country;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. tour, 'a turn, round, compass, . . a bout or walk;' Cot. Cf. Prov. tors, also, torns, a turn; Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. Tour is a verbal sb. from tourner, to turn; it is a short form of tourn (as the Prov. form shews), in the sense of 'a turn;' the final n being lost. See Turn. Der. tour-ist.

TOURNAMENT, TOURNEY, a mock fight. (F., — L.) So named from the swift turning of the horses in the combat. Cotgrave has F. tourney, 'a tourney;' Chaucer has tourneyinge, sb., C. T. 2559. M. E. turnement, Ancren Riwle, p. 390, l. 5 from bottom. — O. F. tornoielement, a tournament (Burguy). Formed with suffix -ment (Lat. -mentum) from O. F. tournoier, to joust. — O. F. tornoï, turnoi, a tourney, joust; properly, a turning about. — O. F. turner, to turn; see Turn.

TOURNIQUET, a bandage which is tightened by turning a stick round to check a flow of blood. (F., — L.) Properly the stick itself. 'Tourniquet, a turn-still (sic); also the gripe-stick us'd by surgeons in cutting off an arm;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tourniquet, 'the pin of a kind of fiddle, that which the fiddler turns with his hand as he plays;' Cot. He refers, apparently, to a sort of hurdy-gurdy, of which the F. name was vielle. Tourni-qu-et is formed, with dimin. suffixes, from tourner, to turn; see TURN.

TOUSE, to pull about, tear or rend. (E.) In Shak. Meas. v. 313; much the same word as toaze, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 760. Spenser has touse in the sense to worry, to tease; F. Q. ii. 11. 33. M. E. tosen, properly to tease wool, Prompt. Parv. 'And what sheep, that is full of wulle Upon his backe, they touse and pulle;' Gower, C. A. i. 17, l. 7. See TEASE. Cf. Low G. tuseln, G. zausen, to touse. Der. tous-er; spelt also Towzer, as a dog's name.

TOUT, to look about, solicit custom. (E.) 'A touter is one who looks out for custom;' Wedgwood. We often shorten the sb. to tout. But tout is properly a verb, the same as M. E. toten, to peep, look about, P. Plowman's Crede, 142, 168, 339, 425. 'Tothyllle, Specula;' Prompt. Parv.; whence Tothill, a look-out hill. Also toot, to look, search, pry; Index to Parker Soc. publications. — A. S. tótian, to project, stick out; hence, to peep out; 'þá heafdu tótodum út' = the heads projected out; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvi, ed. Sweet, p. 104, l. 5. Allied to Icel. tota, the peak of a zogen, túta, a peak, prominence; Dan. tude, a spout; Swed. tut, a point, muzzle; Du. tuit, a pipe, pike, felly of a wheel; O. Du. tuyt, tote, a teat, tuyt-pot, 'a pot or a canne with eares,' Hexham. The orig. sense was 'to project'; hence, to put out one's head, peep about, look all round; and finally, to tout for custom. Der. tout-er.

¶ Tout and touter are found in no dictionaries but those of very recent date; yet these words were in use before 1754. See S. Richardson, Correspondence, &c., vol. iii. p. 316; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 134. Nares has tooters, s. v. Toot. In no way connected with toot, verb, to blow a horn.

TOW (1), to tug or pull a vessel along. (E.) M. E. towen, tozen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 100; Layamon, 7536 (later text). The verb does not appear in A. S., but we find the sb. tow-line, a tow-line, tow-rope, Wright's Voc. i. 57, l. 5. + O. Fries. toga, to pull about. + Icel. toga, to draw, pull; tog, a cord, a tow-rope. + M. H. G. zogen, to tear, pluck, pull. β. Derived from A. S. tog-, stem of togen, pp. of the strong verb teóhan, teón, to pull, draw, which is cognate with G. ziehen, O. H. G. ziohan, Goth. tiukan, to draw. All from Teut. base TUH, to draw (Fick, iii. 122), answering to Aryan ✓DUK, as seen in Lat. ducere, to draw; Fick, i. 624. ¶ F. touer, to tow, is of Teut. origin. Der. tow-boat, -line, -rope; tow-age, Blount's Nomenclon, 1691. And see tie, tug.

TOW (2), the coarse part of flax or hemp. (E.) M. E. tow or towe, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245; Tyrwhitt prints tawe in Chaucer, C. T. 3772. — A. S. tow; it occurs in tow-like, tow-like, fit for spinning. 'Texturum opus, towlike weorc;' Wright's Voc. i. 26, col. 1; the next entries being 'Colus, distaf;' and 'Fusus, spint;' i. e. distaff and spindle. Again, we find: 'tow-hús of wulle' = a tow-house or spinning-house of wool, id. 59, l. 11; see the foot-note. Tow was, in fact, orig. the working or spinning itself, the operation of spinning; whence it came to be applied to the material wrought upon. Hence we find getawa, implements (Grein); and the word is brought into close connection with E. taw and tew. See further under Tool, Taw. The root is ✓DU, to work; and the words tow, verb, and taw, sb., are from different roots. [The facts that tow is used for ropes, and that ropes are used for towing, are wholly independent of each other in every way.] + O. Du. touwe, or werck, 'tows'; Hexham; touwe, 'the instrument of a weaver,' touwen, 'to tanne leather,' i. e. to taw; id. + Icel. tó, a tuft of wool for spinning; vinna tó, to dress wool. (Quite distinct from Icel. tog, goat's hair.) Cf. Low G. tou, touw, implements; Dan. tawe, fibre; also Goth. tawi, a work, a thing made, tawjan, to make. Similarly G. werg or werk, tow, is merely the same word as werk, a work.

TOWARD, TOWARDS, in the direction of. (E.) As in other cases, towards is a later form, due to adding the adverbial suffix -es (orig. the mark of a gen. case) to the shorter toward. In Layamon, 566, we have 'toward Brutun' = toward Brutus; in l. 515, we have 'him towardes com' = he came towards him. The A. S. tóward is used as an adj. with the sense of 'future,' as in: 'on tówardes worlde' = in the future world, in the life to come; Mark, x. 30. Hence was formed tówardes, towards, used as a prep. with a dat. case, and commonly occurring after its case, as 'ców tówardes' = towards you, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4). β. Compounded of tó, to (see TO); and ward in the sense of 'becoming' or 'tending to.' Ward only occurs as the latter element of several adjectives, such as afeward (lit. off-ward), absent; afterward, afterward; andeward, present; foreward, forward, in front; innanward, inward; níðeward, netherward; ufanward, upward, upward; útanward, outward; wíðeward, contrary; and in the adverbs híderward, hitherward, þíderward, thitherward; see Ettmüller's Dict., p. 107.

γ. Cognate with Icel. -verðr, similarly used in the adj. útanverðr, outward, and in other adjectives; also with M. H. G. -wert, whence G. vorwärts, forwards, and the like; also with Goth. -wairths, as in andwairths, present, 1 Cor. vii. 26; also allied to Lat. uersus, towards, which is often used after its case.

δ. And just as Lat. uersus is from uertere, to turn, so A. S. ward is from the cognate verb weorþan (pt. t. wearð), to become. See further under WORTH (2), verb.

ε. We may note that ward can be separated from to, as in to you-ward = toward you, 2 Cor. xiii. 12; see Ward in The Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Also that toward is properly an adj. in A. S., and commonly so used in later E., as opposed to froward; it is common in Shakespeare. Der. toward-ly, Timon, iii. 1. 37; towardness, toward-li-ness. And (with the suffix -ward) after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, frow-ward, home-ward, hither-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, to-ward (as above), thither-ward, up-ward, west-ward, whither-ward.

TOWEL, a cloth for wiping the skin after washing. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. towaille, Floriz and Blancheflur, 563; towail, Chaucer, C. T. 14663. — F. touaille, 'a towel;' Cot. O. F. toaille, toeille; Low Lat. toacula; Span. toalla; Ital. tovaglia. All of Teut. origin. — O. H. G. twahilla, dwahilla, M. H. G. dwehele, G. zuehle, a towel. — O. H. G. twahan, M. H. G. dwahan, to wash. + Icel. þvá (pp. þveginn), to wash; Dan. toe. + A. S. þwéan (contr. for þwahan), to wash. + Goth. thwahan, to wash. And cf. Du. dwaal, a towel, dweil, a clout; whence prov. E. dwile, a clout, coarse rag for rubbing.

β. All from Teut. base THWAH, to wash; Fick, iii. 142. Der. towell-ing, stuff for making towels.

TOWER, a lofty building, fort, or part of a fort. (F., — L.) Spelt tur in the A. S. Chron. an. 1097. — O. F. tur, later tour, 'a tower;' Cot. — Lat. turrem, acc. of turris, a tower. + Gk. ῥῥῖος, ῥῥῖππος, a tower, bastion. We also find Gael. torr, a hill or mountain of an abrupt or conical form, a lofty hill, eminence, mound, tower, castle; Irish tor, a castle; W. tur, a tower; cf. prov. E. (Devon.) tor, a conical hill, a word of Celtic origin; whence A. S. torr. 'Scopulum, torr;' Wright's Voc. i. 38, col. 1. If the Gael. torr be not borrowed from the Latin, it is interesting as seeming to take us back to a more primitive use of the word, viz. a hill suitable for defence. Der. tower, verb; tower-ed, tower-ing, tower-y.

TOWN, a large village. (E.) The old sense is simply 'enclosure;' it was often applied (like Lowland Sc. toon) to a single farm-house with its outbuildings, &c. M. E. town, Wyclif, Matt. xxii. 5. — A. S. tūn, Matt. xxii. 5; where the Lat. text has uillam. The orig. sense is 'fence;' whence the derived verb týnan, to enclose. + Du. tuin, a fence, hedge. + Icel. tún, an enclosure, a homestead, a dwelling-house. + G. zaun, O. H. G. zún, a hedge. β. All from Teut. type TUNA, a hedge, enclosure; Fick, iii. 122. Cognate words appear in Irish and Gael. dun, a fortress, W. din, a hill-fort (whence dinas, a town); this Celtic word is conspicuous in many old place-names, such as Augusto-dunum, Camalo-dunum, &c. Perhaps allied to Irish dur, firm, strong, and Lat. durus, hard, lasting; see DURE. Der. town-clerk, -crier, -hall, -house, -ship, -talk; also townsman (= town's man), towns-folk (= town's-folk). Also town-ish, Sir T. Wyatt, Sat. i. 4.

TOXICOLOGY, the science which investigates poisons. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. Coined from Gk. τοξικόν, poison for smearing arrows with; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, λέγειν, to say (see LOGIC). Τοξικόν is neut. of τοξικός, adj., belonging to arrows or archery; from τόξον, a bow, lit. a piece of shaped wood. — ✓TAKS, extended from ✓TAK, to cut, hew, shape; cf. Skt. taksh, to cut. See Technical. Der. toxicologi-c-al, toxicolog-ist.

TOY, a plaything; also, as a verb, to trifle, dally. (Du.) 'Any silk, any thread, any toys for your head;' Wint. Tale, iv. 2. 326. 'On my head no toy But was her pattern;' Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. This is only a special sense. It seems to correspond to Du. toel, attire, but this is a mod. Du. word, which may be taken from the E. toy itself. The true Du. word is tuig, as will appear. Palsgrave has: 'Toy, a tryfell;' also, 'I toy, or tryfell with one, I deale nat substancially with hym; I toys, I playe with one; He doth bot toys with you, Il ne fait que se jouer avecques vous.' Not in M. E. — Du. tuig, tools, utensils, implements, stuff, refuse, trash; which answers to Palsgrave's definition as 'a trifle.' The sense of plaything occurs in the comp. speeltuig, playthings, child's toys; lit. 'stuff to play with.' Sewel gives: 'Speeltuig, play-tools, toys;' also: 'Op de tuy houden, to amuse,' lit. to hold in trifling, toy with one; also: 'een tuig op zy, silver chains with a knife, cissars, pincushion, &c. as women wear,' which explains the Shakespearian usage. + Low G. tüg, used in all the senses of G. zeug. + Icel. tygi, gear. + Dan. tøi, stuff, things, gear, dumt tøi, stuff and nonsense, trash; whence legetøi, a plaything, a toy, from lege (= prov. E. laik), to play. + Swed. tyg, gear, stuff, trash. + G. zeug, stuff, matter, materials, lumber, trash; whence spielzeug, toys; M. H. G. ziuc, stuff, materials.

β. The orig. sense was probably 'spoil'; hence materials for one's own use, as well as stuff, gear, and trash. The various forms can all be deduced from Teut. base TUH (Aryan DUK, as in Lat. ducere), to draw, used in the special sense of stripping off clothes. Cf. G. die Haut über die Ohren ziehen, to flay, to skin, Icel. toga af, to draw shoes and stockings off a person. In any case, the form of the word shews the base clearly enough; see Tow (1), Tug. ¶ The M. E. toggen is certainly to tug, as far as the form is concerned; it may not be wrong to translate toggen by 'toy' in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; but this is rather a pun than an etymology, and must not be pressed; it leads back, however, to the same root. The pronunciation of oy in toy is an attempt at imitating the pronunciation of Du. tuig, just as hoy, a sloop, answers to the Flemish hui; see Hoy (1). Der. toy-ish.

TRACE (1), a track left by drawing anything along, a mark left, a footprint. (F., -L.) M. E. trace, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7771; Pricke of Conscience, 4349. - F. trace, 'a trace, footing, print of the foot; also, a path or track'; Cot. Cf. Ital. traccia, a trace, track; Span. traza, a first sketch, outline. A verbal sb., from F. tracer, verb, 'to trace, follow, pursue'; of which another form was trasser, 'to delineate, score, trace out'; Cot. Cf. Ital. tracciare, to trace, devise; Span. trazar, to plan, sketch. These verbs are all formed (as if from a Low Lat. *tractiare) from tract-us, pp. of trahere, to draw, orig. to drag with violence. Supposed to be related to Gk. θράσσειν (trach-yein), to trouble, θραγ-μός, a crackling or crashing. - ✓ TARGH, to tear or pull; Fick, i. 598. ¶ Not related to E. draw. Der. trace, verb, M. E. tracen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 54 (less common than the sb.), directly from F. tracer, to trace, as above; trac-er, trace-able, trac-ing; trac-er-y, a coined word, in rather late use. Also (from Lat. trahere) trace (2), tract (1), tract (2), tract-able, tract-ile, tract-ion, tract-ate, train, trait, treat, treat-ise, treat-y; also abs-tract, at-tract, con-tract, de-tract, dis-tract, ex-tract, pro-tract, re-tract, sub-tract; mal-treat, por-trait, por-tray or pour-tray, re-treat.

TRACE (2), one of the straps by which a vehicle is drawn. (F., -L.) 'Trace, horse harness, trays'; Palsgrave. M. E. traice: 'Trayce, horsys hameys, Tenda, traxus, restis, trahale'; Prompt. Parv. Evidently from the O. F. trays, cited by Palsgrave, which is probably a pl. form and equivalent to F. traits, pl. of trait. At any rate, Cotgrave gives as one sense of trait (which he spells traict) that of 'a teame-trace or trait, the cord or chain that runs between the horses, also the draught-tree of a caroch.' I suppose that trace = F. traits, and that traces is a double plural. See Trait.

TRACHEA, the wind-pipe. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1607. - Lat. trachēa; also trachia. The latter form is given in White. - Gk. τραχεία, lit. 'the rough,' from the rings of gristle of which it is composed; τραχία is merely the fem. of τραχύς, rough, rugged, harsh. Allied to τέ-ρηχ-α, perf. tense of θράσσειν, to disturb. See Trace (1). Der. trache-al.

TRACK, a path, course. (F., -Teut.) Confused with tract in old authors; also with trace both in old and modern authors. Minshew has: 'A trace, or track;' Cotgrave explains F. track by 'a track, tract, or trace.' In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 66, Rich. III, v. 3. 20, the folios have tract for track; and in Timon, i. 1. 50, the word tract is used in the sense of track. These words require peculiar care, because trace and tract are really connected, but track is not of Lat. origin at all, and therefore quite distinct from the other two words.

- F. trac, 'a track, tract, or trace, a beaten way or path, a trade or course.' The sense of 'beaten track' is the right one; we still use that very phrase. Of Teut. origin. - O. Du. treck, Du. trek, a draught; from trekken, to draw, pull, tow, travel, march, &c., O. Du. trecken, 'to draw, pull, or hale,' Hexham; also M. H. G. trecken, to draw, a secondary verb formed from the strong O. H. G. verb trechen, trehhan, to scrape, shove, draw. As the last is a strong verb, we see that track is quite independent of the Lat. trahere. Der. track, verb; track-less, Cowley, The Muse, l. 25.

TRACT (1), continued duration, a region. (L.) Often confused both with trace and track; it is related to the former only; see Trace. 'This in tracte of tyme made hym welthy'; Fabyan, Chron. c. 56. - Lat. tractus, a drawing out; the course of a river, a tract or region. - Lat. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace (1). And see Tractable.

TRACT (2), a short treatise. (L.) An abbreviation for tractate, which is now little used. 'Tractate, a treatise'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. tractatum, acc. of tractatus, a handling, also a treatise, tractate, or tract. See Tractable. Der. tract-ari-an, one who holds opinions such as were propounded in 'Tracts for the Times,' of which 90 numbers were published, A.D. 1833-1841; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

TRACTABLE, easily managed, docile. (L.) In Shak. Hen. IV, iii. 3. 194. - Lat. tractabilis, manageable, easily wrought. - Lat. tractare, to handle, frequent. of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See Trace (1). Der. tractabl-y, tractable-ness, tractabili-ty. Also (from Lat. pp. tractus) tract-ile, that may be drawn out; tract-ion, from F. traction, 'a draught or extraction,' Cot.; tract-ive, drawing or pulling; tract-or (see Webster). Also tract-ate, for which see Tract (2).

TRADE, way of life, occupation, commerce. (E.) 'Properly that path which we tread, and thus the ever recurring habit and manner of our life'; Trench, Select Glossary. It once meant, literally, a path; 'A common trade, to passe through Priams house'; Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 593. Not an old form; the M. E. words are tred and trod, both in the sense of footprint, Ancrer Riwle, p. 380, note g. All from A. S. tredan, to tread; see Tread. Der. trades-man, i.e. trade's-man, one who follows a trade; trades-woman; trades-union (= either trade's union or trades' union). Also trade, vb., trad-ed, K. John, iv. 3. 109; trad-er, 1 Hen. IV, i. 2. 141. Also trade-wind, a wind blowing in a constant direction, formed from the phr. to blow trade = to blow always in the same course; 'the wind blowing trade,' Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 849 (R.); the word trade-wind is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, last line but one. ¶ I see no reason for confusing trade with F. traite (Cotgrave), Span. trato, traffic; see Tret.

TRADITION, the handing down to posterity of unwritten practices or opinions. (L.) M. E. tradicioun, Wyclif, Col. ii. 8. Formed directly from Lat. traditio, a surrender, delivery, tradition (Col. ii. 8). [The F. form of the word gave us our word treason.] - Lat. tradit-us, pp. of tradere, to deliver; see Traitor. Der. tradition-al. Doublet, treason.

TRADUCE, to defame. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 175. In the Prologue to the Golden Boke, traduce occurs in the sense of translate, and traduction is translation. - Lat. traducere, to lead across, transfer, derive; also, to divulge, convict, prove guilty (whence our use to defame). - Lat. tra-, put for trans, across; and ducere, to lead; see Trans and Duke. Der. traduc-er.

TRAFFIC, to trade, exchange, barter. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 158; Macb. iii. 5. 4; we have also the sb. traffic, spelt trafficke in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 9. - F. traffiquer, 'to traffick, trade'; Cot. We find also F. traffique, sb. 'traffick'; id. Cf. Ital. trafficare, to traffic, manage (trafficare in Florio); Span. traficar, trafagar; Port. traficar, trafeguar, to traffic, to cheat. Also Ital. traffico (trafico in Florio), Span. trafico, trafago, traffic, careful management; Port. trafico, trafego, traffic.

β. Origin uncertain; but almost surely Latin. Diez compares Port. trasfegar, to decant, to pour out from one vessel to another, trasfego, a pouring out or decanting, and remarks that the O. Port. trasfegar also had the sense of traffic, and that the Catalan trafag, traffic, also meant a decanting. If the two are identical, the accent must have been upon the preposition, which is exceptional. He explains O. Port. trasfegar, to decant (corrupted to transegar in Spanish by change of f to h and subsequent loss) from Lat. tra- (trans), across, and a supposed Low Lat. *vicare, to exchange, from Lat. uicis, change; this verb actually appears in the Span. vegada, a time, a turn (= Low Lat. *vicata); and the change from Lat. u to F. f appears in F. fois, certainly derived from uicis. This seems the best solution; the sense 'to change across' suits both 'traffic' and 'decant'; see Trans and Vicar. γ. Scheler suggests Lat. tra- (= trans), and the common suffix -ficare, due to facere, to make. But traficare would rather produce a F. form trafier, and it is hardly an intelligible word. Der. traffic, sb.; traffic-er, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 12.

TRAGEDY, a species of drama of a lofty and mournful cast. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. tragédie; see Chaucer's definition of it, C. T. 13979. - F. tragedie, 'a tragedy'; Cot. - Lat. tragodia. - Gk. τραγῳδία, a tragedy. 'There is no question that tragedy is the song of the goat; but why the song of the goat, whether because a goat was the prize for the best performance of that song in which the germs of the future tragedy lay, or because the first actors were dressed, like satyrs, in goat-skins, is a question which has stirred abundant discussion, and will remain unsettled to the end'; Trench, Study of Words, lect. v. A third theory (yet more probable) is that a goat was sacrificed at the singing of the song; a goat, as being the spoiler of vines, was a fitting sacrifice at the feasts of Dionysus. In any case, the etymology is certain. - Gk. τραγῳδός, lit. a goat-singer, a tragic poet and singer. - Gk. τράγ-ος, a he-goat; and ὄδός, a singer, contracted from δοῖδός; see Ode. The Gk. τράγ-ος means 'a nibbler'; cf. τράγειν, to gnaw, nibble; see Trout. Der. tragedi-an, All's Well, iv. 3. 299, apparently a coined word, not borrowed from French. Also trag-ic, 2 Hen. IV, i. 1. 61, from F. tragique, 'tragically, tragick'; Cot., Lat. tragicus, Gk. τραγικός, goatish, tragic, from τράγ-ος, a goat. Hence tragic-al, -al-ly, -al-ness.

TRAIL, to draw along the ground, to hunt by tracking. (F., -L.) M. E. traillen. In Wyclif, Esther, xv. 7, later version, we find: 'but the tother of the seruauentessis sude the ladi, and bar vp the clothis fletinge down in-to the erthe;' where, for fletinge, some MSS. have trailinge, and the earlier version has flowende = flowing. Cf. 'Braunchis do trails'; Palladius, iii. 289, p. 71. 'Traylyn as clopys, Segmento;' Prompt. Parv. We have also M. E. trale, sb. 'Trayle, or trayne of a clothe;' Prompt. Parv. So also: 'Trayle, sledge [sledge], traha, to Trayle, trahere,' Levins, ed. 1570. John de Garlande, in the 13th cent., gives a list of 'instrumenta mulieribus convenientia'; one of these is trahale, of which he says: 'Trahale dicitur a traho, Gallice travail;' Wright's Voc. i. 134. Palsgrave has: 'I trayle, lyke as a gowne dothe behynde on the grounde;' also 'I trayle, as one trayleth an other behynde or at a horse-tayle.' = F. trailer, 'to wind a yarn; also, to traile a deer, or hunt him upon a cold sent;' Cot. — O. F. traail, in John de Garlande, as above; it clearly means a reel to wind yarn on, as it is mentioned with other implements for spinning. — Low Lat. trahale, a reel, as above; it no doubt also meant a sledge, as shewn by E. trayle in Levins. Cf. Lat. traha, a sledge; tragula, a sledge (White); Low Lat. traga, a harrow, trahare, to harrow. We may also note Low Lat. trahinare, answering to F. trahner, E. train. It is clear that trail and train are both derivatives from Lat. trahere, to draw or drag along; see Trace, Train. ¶ The mod. F. traille is a ferry-boat dragged across a river by help of a rope; it seems much better to connect this with E. trail than to suppose it to stand for tiraille, from the verb tirailier, 'to rend or tear in pieces,' as Cotgrave explains it. However this may be, the E. trail is certainly independent of tirailier and tirer. Cf. Du. treylene, 'to drawe, or dragge a boate with a cord,' Hexham; borrowed (like Du. treyn, a train) from French.

TRAILBASTON, a law-term. (F., — L.) See Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, and Spelman. There were justices of traylbastoun, appointed by Edw. I. 'The common people in those days called them tray-bastoun, quod sonat trahere baculum;' Blount. Roquefort divides the word as tray-le-bastoun. It would seem that the word was considered as a compound of O. F. tray (= Lat. trahere), give up, and bastoun, a wand of office, because many unjust officers were deprived of their offices. But this view is proved to be wrong by the passage from Langtoft's Chronicle printed in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 318; on which see Wright's note, p. 383. The Anglo-F. word was traylbastoun, traylebastoun or traylebastoun, meaning 'trail-stick' or 'stick-carrier;' id. pp. 231, 233, 319. See Trail and Baton; and see Addenda. [†]

TRAIN, the hinder part of a trailing dress, a retinue, series, line of gun-powder, line of carriages; as a verb, to trail, to allure, educate, discipline. (F., — L.) M. E. train, sb., spelt trayn, with the sense of plot, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 295, l. 22; trayne, id. p. 263, l. 23; 'treson and trayne,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4192; M. E. traynen, verb, to entice, id. 1683. — F. train, m., 'a great man's retinue, the train or hinder part of a beast; . . . work, dealing, trade, practise;' Cot. Also traine, f., 'a sled, a drag or drag without wheels, a drag-net,' id. Also trahiner, verb, 'to traile, drag, draw;' id. O. F. trahin, trāin, a train of men; trahiner, trahner, verb. Low Lat. trahinare, to drag; occurring A. D. 1268. Evidently extended from Lat. trahere, to draw; see Trace, Trail. Der. train-er; train-band, i. e. train'd band, a band of trained men, Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 1, and used by Dryden and Clarendon (Todd); train-bear-er. ¶ But not train-oil.

TRAIN-OIL, oil procured from the blubber or fat of whales by boiling. (Hybrid; Du.; and F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt trane-oyle, Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 477, last line; trayne oyle, Arnold's Chron. p. 236. In Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658, we find: 'Traen, trayne-oile made of the fat of whales.' Also: 'traen, a tear; liquor pressed out by the fire.' Cf. mod. Du. traan, a tear; traan, train-oil. We thus see that the lit. sense of train is 'tear,' then, a drop of liquor forced out by fire; and lastly, we have train-oil, or oil forced out by boiling. Cf. Dan. and Swed. tran, train-oil, blubber, G. thran, all borrowed from Dutch; cf. G. thrine, a tear, also a drop exuding from a vine when cut. So also Low G. traan, train-oil; trane, a tear; very well explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Similarly, we use E. tear in the sense of 'a drop' of some balsams and resins, &c. β. The Du. traan is closely allied to E. tear, and is the only form used in Dutch; the G. thrine is really a pl. form, due to M. H. G. trāhena, pl. of trahen, a tear, closely allied to M. H. G. zaher (put for taher), a tear; see Tear (2). ¶ It thus appears that train-oil is a tautological expression; accordingly, we find trane, train-oil, in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775.

TRAIT, a feature. (F., — L.) Given in Johnson, with the remark 'scarcely English.' = F. trait, 'a draught, line, streak, stroak,' Cot. He also gives the spelling traict. = F. trait, formerly also traict, pp. of traire, to draw. — Lat. trahere, to draw; see Trace.

TRAITOR, one who betrays, a deceiver. (F., — L.) M. E. traitour, spelt traitoure, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 61, l. 12; treitur, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 22. — O. F. traïtour, traïteur, a traitor. — Lat. traditorem, acc. of traditor, one who betrays. — Lat.

tradit-us, pp. of tradere, to hand over, deliver, betray. = Lat. tra-, for trans, across, over; and -dere, put for dare, to give; (hence tra-didi, pt. t., corresponds to dedi, I gave). See Trans- and Date. Der. traitor-ous, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 173; traitor-ous-ly; traitr-ess, All's Well, i. 1. 184. From the same source are tradit-ion, treason, be-tray.

TRAJECTORY, the curve which a body describes when projected. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Suggested by F. trajectoire, 'casting, thrusting, sending, transporting;' Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. *trajectorius, belonging to projection; formed from traiectus, pp. of traicere (trajicere), to throw, cast, or fling over or across. — Lat. tra-, for trans, across; and iacere, to cast. See Trans- and Jet. Der. trajecti, which is certainly the right reading for tranect in Merch. of Ven. iii. 4. 53; from F. traject, 'a ferry, a passage over,' Cot., which from Lat. traiectus, a passage over. Shakespeare would have written traiect, which was made into tranect, a word that belongs to no language whatever.

TRAM, a coal-waggon, a carriage for passengers running on iron rails. (Scand.) There have been frequent enquiries about this word; see Notes and Queries, 2 Ser. v. 128, xii. 229, 276, 358; 4 Ser. xii. 299, 420; 6 Ser. ii. 225, 356. A tram is an old Northern word for a coal-waggon, esp. such a one as ran upon rails. In N. and Q., 2 Ser. xii. 276, J. N. quoted an Act of Parliament for the year 1794, for the construction of 'an iron dram-road, tram-road, or railway' between Cardiff and Merthyr Tydvil; and in N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 356, A. Wallis stated that 'tramways were in use in Derbyshire before 1790; one of planks and log-sleepers was laid between Shipley coal-pit and the wharf near Newmansleys, a distance of 1½ miles, and was discontinued in the above year.' About A. D. 1800, a Mr. Benjamin Outram made certain improvements in connection with railways for common vehicles, which gave rise to the silly fiction (ever since industriously circulated) that tram-road is short for Outram road, in ignorance of the fact that the accent alone is sufficient to shew that Outram, if shortened to one syllable, must become Out rather than ram or tram. Besides which, Mr. Outram was not a coal-waggon; yet Brockett's Glossary (3rd ed. 1846) explains that a tram is the Northern word for 'a small carriage on four wheels, so distinguished from a sledge. It is used in coal-mines to bring the coals from the hewers to the crane.' The word is clearly the same as Lowland Scotch tram, '(1) the shaft of a cart or carriage of any kind, (2) a beam or bar,' Jamieson. Cf. prov. E. tram, a small milk bench (Halliwell); which was orig. a block of wood. It was prob. used first of the shaft of a small carriage, and then applied to the small carriage itself, esp. such a one as was pushed or drawn by men or boys in coal-pits. This notion is borne out by the cognate Low G. traam, a word particularly used of the handles of a wheel-barrow or the handles by which a kind of sledge was pushed; Bremen Wörterbuch, ed. 1771. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 498, J. H. Clark notes that 'the amending of the highway or tram from the Weste end of Bridgegait, in Barnard Castle' occurs in a will dated 1555; see Surtees Soc. Publications, vol. xxxviii. p. 37. Here a tram prob. means a log-road. The word is Scandinavian. — Swed. dial. tromm, a log, stock of a tree; also a summer-sledge (sommarsläde); also trömm, trumm (Rietz); O. Swed. trām, trum, a piece of a large tree, cut up into logs. The orig. sense is clearly a beam or bit of cut wood, hence a shaft of a sledge or cart, or even the sledge itself. Cf. Low G. traam, a balk, beam, esp. one of the handles of a wheel-barrow, as above; also O. Du. drom, a beam (obsolete); Hexham. Also O. H. G. dram, tram, a beam, once a common word; see Grimm's Dict. ii. 1331, 1332. The last form may account for the variation dram-road, in the Act of Parliament cited above; and it has been already observed that a dramroad or tramroad might also be explained as a log-road.

β. The comparison of Swed. tromm with Du. drom shews that the original Low G. initial letter must have been th; which is proved by the Icel. þram-valr, lit. 'a beam-hawk,' a poet. word for a ship. γ. The Swed. dial. trum (above) further resembles G. trumm, lump, stump, end, thrum, fragment, and suggests a connection with Thrum (1). If so, the orig. sense was 'end'; then fragment, bit, lump, log, &c. Der. tram-road, way.

TRAMMEL, a net, shackle, anything that confines or restrains. (F., — L.) M. E. tramayle, 'grete nette for fischynge;' Prompt. Parv. Spenser has *tramel*s, nets for the hair, F. Q. ii. 2. 15. — F. trmail, 'a trammel, or a net for partridges;' Cot. Cf. F. trameau (answering to an older form *tramel), 'a kind of drag-net for fish, a trammel net for fowle;' this comes still nearer to Spenser's tramel. Cf. Ital. tramaglio, a drag-net, trammel; Port. trasmalho, Span. trasmallo, a trammel or net; mod. F. trmail, trémal. — Low Lat. tramacula, tramacula, a trammel, occurring in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, xxvii. 20, col. 154; cf. coll. 158, 161. The word has numerous other forms, such as tremacle, tremale, trimacle, &c., in other texts of the Lex Salica. Kern remarks: 'tremacle, &c. is a diminutive, more or less Latinised. The Frankish word must have differed but slightly, if at all, from the Drenthian (N. Saxon) treemke (for tremike, tramike), a trammel. Both the English and Drenthian word point to a simplex trami or tramia; col. 501. This assumes the word to be Teutonic, yet brings us back to no intelligible Teut. base; nor does it account for the Ital. form, which requires the longer Low Lat. tramacula or tremacula. Diez takes it to be Latin, and explains tremacula from Lat. tri-, thrice, three times, and macula, a mesh or net, as if it meant treble-mesh or treble-net. He remarks that a similar explanation applies to Trellis, q. v. [This account is accepted, without question, by Scheler and Littré.] It is to be further noted that, according to Diez, the Piedmontese trimaj is explained by Zalli to mean a fish-net or bird-net made of three layers of net of different-sized meshes; and that Cherubini and Patriarchi make similar remarks concerning the Milanese tremagg and Venetian tramagio. These forms are surely something more than mere diminutives.

γ. As to Lat. tri-, see Three; as to Lat. macula, see Mail (1). The Span. trasmallo is an altered form, as if from trans maculam, across the net, which gives but little sense.

TRAMONTANE, foreign. (F., - Ital., - L.) The word is properly Italian, and only intelligible from an Italian point of view; it was applied to men who lived beyond the mountains, i. e. in France, Switzerland, Spain, &c. It came to us through the French, and was at first spelt tramountain. 'The Italians account all tramountain doctors but apothecaries in comparison of themselves;' Fuller, Worthies, Hertfordshire (R.) = F. tramountain, 'northerly;' Cot. = Ital. tramontano, pl. tramontani, 'those folks that dwell beyond the mountains;' Florio. = Lat. tramountanus, beyond the mountains. = Lat. trans, beyond; and mont-, base of mons, a mountain; see Trans- and Mountain.

TRAMP, to tread, stamp. (E.) M. E. trampen. 'Trampelyn, trampyn, Tero;' Prompt. Parv. 'He trampith with the feet;' Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13. Not in A. S., but prob. E., being found in G. and Low G. as well as in Scand. Cf. Low G. and G. trampen, trampeln, to stamp; Dan. trampe, Swed. trampa, to tread, trample on. From the Teut. base TRAMP, to tread, occurring in the Goth. strong verb anatrimpan. 'Managei anatrimpan' = the multitude pressed upon him, lit. trampled on him, Luke, v. 1. β. This is a nasalised form of the Teut. base TRAP, to tread, occurring in Du. trappen, to tread upon, to trample, Low G. trappen, to tread, Swed. trappa, a pair of stairs, G. treppe, a flight of steps; also in E. Trip, q. v. This base appears in the same form TRAP even in Gk. τράπειν, to tread grapes, Homer, Odys. vii. 125; and in Lithuan. trépti, trypiti, to stamp; see Fick, i. 604. These words may, I think, safely be considered as cognate with the G. forms, as the letter p presents numerous exceptions to Grimm's law, and often remains unchanged.

γ. We may also note a probable connection with the Teut. base TRAD, to tread; see Tread. Der. tramp, sb., a journey on foot; tramp-er, a vagrant (see Johnson); also tramp, a shortened familiar form of trampler, both forms being given in Grose's Dict. of the Vulgar Tongue, 1790. And see tramp-le.

TRAMPLE, to tread under foot. (E.) M. E. trampelen; Prompt. Parv. The frequentative of TRAMP, q. v. The sense is, accordingly, 'to keep on treading upon.' Cf. Low G. trampeln, G. trampeln, to trample, stamp; from Low G. and G. trampen, to tramp or stamp.

TRAM-ROAD, TRAM-WAY; see Tram.

TRANCE, catalepsy, ecstasy, loss of self-consciousness. (F., - L.) M. E. trance, Chaucer, C. T. 1572. = F. transe, 'extreme fear, dread, . . . a trance or swoon;' Cot. A verbal sb. from the O. F. transir, of which Cot. gives the pp. transi, 'fallen into a trance or swoon, astonished, amazed, half dead.' = Lat. transire, to go or pass over; whence Ital. transire, 'to go forth, passe over; . . . also to fall in a swoon, to dye or gaspe the last;' Florio. [This shews that transire came to have the sense of 'die' or 'swoon;' similarly the O. F. trespasser (our trespass) commonly means 'to die.'] = Lat. trans, across; and ire, to go; see Transit. β. This explanation is Scheler's; it seems more likely than that of Diez, that trance was formed directly from Lat. transitus; however, it comes at last to much the same thing. Der. en-trance (a). Also tranc-ed, K. Lear, v. 3. 218.

TRANQUIL, quiet, peaceful. (F., - L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 348. [The sb. tranquillity is in much earlier use; we find M. E. tranquillitee, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4. l. 1115.] = F. tranquille, 'calm;' Cot. = Lat. tranquillus, calm, quiet, still. = Lat. tran-, for trans, beyond, hence surpassingly; and the base qui- or ci- (hi), to rest, so that -quillus means 'resting' or lying down. This base is from ✓ KI, to lie, as in Gk. κείμαι, I lie down, Skt. gi, to lie down. See Trans- and Quiet or Cemetery. Der. tranquilly; tranquill-ity, from F. tranquillité, 'tranquillity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. tranquillitatem. Also tranquill-ise, Thomson, Castle of Indolence, c. ii. st. 19.

TRANS-, beyond, across, over. (L.) Lat. trans-, prefix; also as prep. trans, beyond. Trans is the pres. part. of a verb *trare, to cross, go beyond, only occurring in in-trare, ex-trare, pene-trare. = ✓ TAR, to cross; cf. Skt. tri, to pass over, cross, fulfil, causal táraya, to bring over. β. The comp. suffix -ter (in Latin) is prob. from the same root; cf. pra-ter, sub-ter, in-ter-ior, &c. In composition, trans- becomes tran- in tran-quil, tran-scend, tran-scribe, tran-sept, tran-spire, tran-substantiate; and tra- in tra-dition, tra-duce, tra-jectory, tra-montane (though the last is only an Ital., not a Latin spelling); also in tra-verse, tra-vesty.

TRANSACTION, the management of an affair. (F., - L.) In Cotgrave. = F. transaction, 'a transaction, accord, agreement;' Cot. = Lat. transactionem, acc. of transactio, a completion, an agreement. = Lat. transactus, pp. of transigere, to drive or thrust through, also to settle a matter, complete a business. = Lat. trans, across, through; and agere, to drive; see Trans- and Act. Der. transact-or, in Cot. to translate F. transacteur, but perhaps directly from Lat. transactor, a manager. Hence was evolved the verb transact, Milton, P. L. vi. 286.

TRANS-ALPINE, beyond the Alps. (F., - L.) 'Transalpine parts;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, i. 1. = F. transalpin, 'foreign;' Cot. = Lat. transalpinus, beyond the Alps. = Lat. trans, beyond; and Alp-, stem of Alpes, the Alps; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Alp. ¶ So also trans-atlantic, a coined word, 'used by Sir W. Jones in 1782; see Memoirs, &c., p. 217;' F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 275.

TRANSCEND, to surmount, surpass. (L.) In Gawain Douglas, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 18. = Lat. transcendere, to climb over, surpass. = Lat. trans, beyond; and scandere, to climb. See Trans- and Scan. Der. transcend-ent, used by Cot. to translate F. transcendant; transcend-ent-ly, transcendence, All's Well, ii. 3. 40, from Lat. sb. transcendentia; transcend-ent-al, given as a math. term in Phillips, ed. 1706; transcend-ent-al-ly, -ism, -ist.

TRANSCRIBE, to copy out. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cot., to translate F. transcrire. = Lat. transcribere (pp. transcriptus), to transfer in writing, copy from one book into another. = Lat. trans, across, over; and scribere, to write; see Trans- and Scribe. Der. transcrib-er; transcript, in Minshew, from Lat. transcriptus; transcript-ion.

TRANSEPT, the part of a church at right angles to the nave. (L.) Lit. 'a cross-enclosure.' Not an old word; and coined. Oddly spelt transept in Wood's Fasti Oxonienses, vol. ii. (R.); of which the first edition appeared in 1691-2. = Lat. trans, put for trans, across; and septum, an enclosure. Septum is from sepius, pp. of sepiro or sæpire, to enclose; which is from sæpes, a hedge. β. Sæpes is cognate with Gk. σηκός, a pen, fold, enclosure, which is allied to σάττειν (fut. σάξω), to pack, to fill full. See Trans- and Sumpter.

TRANSFER, to transport, convey to another place. (L.) In Shak. Sonnet 137. Cot. gives F. pp. transféré, 'transferred;' but the E. word was prob. directly from Lat. transferre, to transport, transfer. = Lat. trans, across; and ferre, to carry, cognate with E. bear. See Trans- and Bear (1). Der. transfer-able, also spelt transferrible (quite needless); transfer-ence, transfer-ee.

TRANSFIGURE, to change the appearance of. (F., - L.) M. E. transfiguren, Chaucer, C. T. 1107. = F. transfigurer, 'to transfigure;' Cot. = Lat. transfigurare, to change the figure of. = Lat. trans, across (hence implying change); and figura, figure, outward appearance. See Trans- and Figure. Der. transfigurati-on, from F. transfiguration, 'a transfiguration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transfigurationem.

TRANSFIX, to fix by piercing through. (L.) 'Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 21. = Lat. transfixus, pp. of transfigere, to thrust through. See Trans- and Fix.

TRANSFORM, to change the form of. (F., - L.) M. E. transformen, Wyclif, 2 Cor. iii. 18. = F. transformer, 'to transform;' Cot. = Lat. transformare, to change the form of. = Lat. trans, across (implying change); and forma, form. See Trans- and Form. Der. transformati-on, from F. transformation, 'a transformation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transformationem.

TRANSFUSE, to cause to pass from one person or part into another, to make to imbibe. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 389, vi. 704. = Lat. transfusus, pp. of transfundere, to pour out of one vessel into another, to decant, transfuse. = Lat. trans, across; and fundere, to pour; see Trans- and Fuse. Der. transfus-ion.

TRANSGRESSION, violation of a law, sin. (F., - L.) 'For the rage of my transgression;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii (How the Child was slain by a serpent). = F. transgression, 'a transgression, trespass;' Cot. = Lat. transgressionem, acc. of transgressio, a passing over, transposition, also a transgression of the law. = Lat. transgressus, pp. of transgredi, to step over, pass over. = Lat. trans, across; and gradi, to step, walk; see Trans- and Grade. Der. & transgress-or, formerly transgressour, Fabian, Chron. an. 1180, ed. Ellis, p. 299, from F. transgresseur, 'a transgressor,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transgressorem. Hence was made transgress, verb, used by Tyndall, Works, p. 224, col. 1, l. 3 from bottom. Observe tres-pass, a similar formation to trans-gress.

TRANSIENT, passing away, not lasting. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 554. Suggested by Lat. transiens, of which the true stem is transiunt-, not transient-. [Cf. ambient, from ambire, which is conjugated regularly.] Transiens is the pres. part. of transire, to go across, to pass away. — Lat. trans, across; and ire, to go, from ✓ I, to go. See Trans- and Itinerant. Der. transient-ly, -ness. Also (from pp. transitus) transit, in Phillips, ed. 1706, shortened from Lat. transitus, a passing over; transit-ion, Phillips, from Lat. acc. transitionem, a passing over, a transition; transit-ion-al; transit-ive, from Lat. transitivus, a term applied to a transitive or active verb; transit-ive-ly, -ness; transit-or-y, Minshew, ed. 1627, suggested by F. transitoire, 'transitory,' Cot., from Lat. transitorius, liable to pass away, passing away; transit-or-i-ly, -ness. And see france.

TRANSLATE, to transfer, move to another place, to render into another language. (F., — L.) M. E. translaten, to remove, Gower, C. A. i. 261, l. 26. — F. translater, 'to translate, . . . reduce, or remove,' Cot. — Low Lat. translatore, to translate, in use in the 12th century. — Lat. translatum, transferred; used as the pp. of transfere, but really from a different root. — Lat. trans, across; and latus, carried, borne, put for *illatus, from ✓ TAL, to lift, bear, whence Lat. tollere, to lift. See Trans- and Tolerate. Der. translat-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 15493, from F. translation, 'a translation,' Cot., from Lat. translatio, acc. of translatio, a transference, transferring.

TRANSLUCENT, clear, allowing light to pass through. (L.) In Milton, Comus, 861. — Lat. translucens, stem of pres. part. of translucere, to shine through. — Lat. trans, through; and lucere, to shine; see Trans- and Lucid. Der. translucent-ly, translucence.

TRANSMARINE, beyond the sea. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. transmarinus, beyond sea. — Lat. trans, beyond; and mare, sea; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Marine.

TRANSMIGRATION, the passing into another country or state of existence. (F., — L.) Spelt transmygracioun, Trevisa, i. 33, l. 20. — F. transmigration, 'a transmigration, a fitting or shifting of abroad,' Cot. — Lat. transmigrationem, acc. of transmigratio, a removing from one country to another. — Lat. transmigratus, pp. of transmigrare, to migrate across, from one place to another. See Trans- and Migrate. Der. (from Lat. pp. transmigratus) transmigrate, Antony, ii. 7, 51; transmigrat-or, transmigrat-or-y.

TRANSMIT, to cause or suffer to pass through, to deliver. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 576 (R.). — Lat. transmittere, to cause to go across, send over, dispatch, transmit. — Lat. trans, across; and mittere, to send; see Trans- and Mission. Der. transmitt-al, transmitt-er; transmiss-ion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 2, from Lat. acc. transmissionem; transmiss-ible, from F. transmissible, 'transmittable,' Cot.; transmiss-ibil-i-ty.

TRANSMUTE, to change to another form or substance. (L.) '[He] transmuted the sentence of deth vnto perpetuyte of pryson;' Fabian, Chron. c. 159. [The M. E. form was transmuē, or transmuēwen, Chaucer, C. T. 8261, from F. transmuier, 'to change or alter over,' Cot., from Lat. transmutare.] — Lat. transmutare, to change into another form. — Lat. trans, across (implying change); and mutare, to change; see Trans- and Mutable. Der. transmut-able; transmut-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 2841, from F. transmutation, 'a transmutation, alteration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transmutationem.

TRANSOM, a thwart-piece across a double window; the lintel over a door; in ships, a beam across the stern-post to strengthen the after-part. (L.) 'Transome, or lintell ouer a dore;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'The transome of a bed, trabula;' Levins. 'Meneau de fenestre, the transome, or cross-bar of a window;' Cot. 'Beames, prickeposts, groundells, summers or dormants, transoms, and such principals;' Harrison, Desc. of England, b. ii. c. 12, ed. Furnivall, p. 233. Halliwell notes the spelling transumpt, but this is a corrupt form; the real meaning of transumpt is a copy of a record; see Transumpt in Cot. Webster says it is sometimes spelt transummer, but I can nowhere find it, and such a spelling is obviously due to confusion with summer, a beam, as used in the above quotation from Harrison. β. The etymology of this word has caused much trouble; and both the usual explanations are merely absurd. These are (1) from Lat. transenna, a rope, noose in a cord, which cannot possibly have anything to do with it; and (2) from Lat. trans, across, and sumere (pp. sumptus), to take, which gives no intelligible sense in this connexion, but rightly accounts for the word transumpt in Cotgrave, which is another word altogether. γ. Wedgwood assumes transommer as the orig. form, which gives a real sense; since trans may mean

'across;' and Cot. gives 'Sommier, a piece of timber called a summer;' see Sumpter. There is a fatal objection to this explanation, in the fact (if it be so) that transom is the old word, and transommer a corruption due to confusion with summer. 8. I think the word is obviously a corruption of Lat. transtrum, used as an architectural and nautical term. It means precisely a transom, in all its senses. 'Transtra et tabulae nantium dicuntur et tigna, quae ex pariete in parietem porriguntur;' Festus (White). The corruption was inevitable, it being hardly possible for an English workman to pronounce transtrum in any other way. 'Transoms est vox Architectonica et transversas trabes notat, Vitruvius transtra;' Skinner, 1671. I believe that Skinner, for once, is right. 9. The Lat. transtrum is derived from Lat. trans, across; -trum is a mere suffix, denoting the agent (Aryan -tar), as in ara-trum, that which ploughs. Hence trans-trum = that which is across. [†]

TRANSPARENT, clear, allowing objects to be seen through. (F., — L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 31. — F. transparent, 'transparent, clear-shining,' Cot. — Lat. trans, through; and parent-, stem of pres. part. of parere, to appear; see Trans- and Appear. Der. transparent-ly, -ness; transparency.

TRANSPICUOUS, transparent, translucent. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 141. Coined, as if from Lat. *transpicuus, from Lat. transpicere, to see or look through; see Conspicuous. — Lat. trans, through; and specere, to look; see Trans- and Spy.

TRANSPIERCE, to pierce through. (F., — L.) Used by Drayton (R.). — F. transpercer, 'to pierce through,' Cot. See Trans- and Pierce.

TRANSPIRE, to pass through the pores of the skin, to become public, or ooze out. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 438. — Lat. trans-, for trans, through; and spirare, to breathe, respire. See Trans- and Spirit. Der. transpir-at-ion, from F. transpiration, 'a transpiration, evaporation,' Cot. This sb. prob. really suggested Milton's verb.

TRANSPLEANT, to plant in a new place. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transplanter, 'to transplant,' Cot. — Lat. transplantare. — Lat. trans, across, implying change; and plantare, to plant. See Trans- and Plant. Der. transplant-at-ion, from F. transplantation, 'a transplantation,' Cot.

TRANSPORT, to carry to another place, carry away by passion or pleasure, to banish. (F., — L.) In Spenser, Hymn 4, Of Heavenly Beauty, l. 18. — F. transporter, 'to transport, transfer,' Cot. — Lat. transportare, to carry across. — Lat. trans, across; and portare, to carry. See Trans- and Port (1). Der. transport, sb., Pope, Windsor Forest, 90; transport-able; transport-ance, Troil. iii. 2. 12; transport-at-ion.

TRANSPOSE, to change the position of, change the order of. (F., — L. and Gk.) M. E. transposen, Gower, C. A. ii. 90, l. 26. — F. transposer, 'to transpose, translate, remove,' Cot. See Trans- and Pose. Der. transpos-al.

TRANSPPOSITION, a change in the order of words, &c. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transposition, 'a transposition, removal out of one place into another,' Cot. See Trans- and Position. ¶ Not ultimately connected with transpose, which is from a different source.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the doctrine that the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into Christ's body and blood. (F., — L.) In Tyndall, Works, p. 447, col. 2; he also has transubstantiated, id. p. 445, col. 2. — F. transubstantiation; Cot. — Late Lat. transubstantiationem, acc. of transubstantiatio; see Hildebert, Bp. of Tours, Sermon 93. Hildebert died in 1134 (Trench, Study of Words). — Late Lat. transubstantiatus, pp. of transubstantiare, coined from trans, across (implying change), and substantia, substance. See Trans- and Substance.

TRANSVERSE, lying across or cross-wise. (L.) 'But all things tost and turned by transverse,' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56; where by transverse = in a confused manner, or reversedly. — Lat. transuersus, turned across; hence, athwart. Orig. pp. of transvertere, to turn across. See Trans- and Verso. And see Traverse. Der. transverse-ly.

TRAP (1), an instrument or device for ensnaring animals. (E.) M. E. trappe, Chaucer, C. T. 145. — A. S. treppe, a trap; Ælfric's Colloquy (Fowler). But the pronunciation has perhaps been affected by F. trappe, a trap, a word of Teut. origin. + O. Du. trappe, 'a trap to catch mice in;' Hexham. + O. H. G. trapo, a snare, trap (Graf); whence Low Lat. trappa, Ital. trappa, F. trappe, Span. trampa, a trap (Diez).

β. The etymology is obviously from Teut. base TRAP, to tread on, for which see Tramp. The trap is that on which an animal steps, or puts its foot, or trips, and is so caught. Cf. Du. trappen, to tread, trap, a stair, step, kick, G. treppe, a flight of steps, Swed. trappa, a stair. The nasalised form tramp appears in Span. trampa, a trap. Der. trap, verb, spelt trappe in Palsgrave; trap-door, a door falling and shutting with a catch; also en-trap, q. v. Also trap-ball or trap-bat, a game played with a ball, bat, and a trap which, when lightly tapped, throws the ball into the air. And see trap (3).

TRAP (2), to adorn, or ornament with gay dress or clothing. (F., = Teut.) The pp. trapped occurs in Chaucer: 'Upon a stede bay, trapped in stele,' C. T. 2159; and see l. 2892. This is formed from a sb. trappe, meaning the trappings or ornaments of a horse. 'Many trappe, many croper' = many a trapping, many a crupper; King Alisaunder, 3421. 'Upon a stede whyt so milke; His trappys wer off tuelly sylke;' Rich. Cœur de Lion, 1515; where tuelly means 'scarlet.' From an O. F. *trap, not recorded, but the same word as mod. F. drap, cloth. The spelling with t occurs in Span. and Port. trapo, a cloth, clout, rag, Low Lat. trapus, a cloth.

β. As Diez remarks, the variation in the initial letter tells us that the word is of Teut. origin, since the O. H. G. t would have a corresponding initial Low German d. This adds considerable weight to the suggestion already made under DRAB (2), viz. that the word is derived from the Teut. base DRAP, to strike, noted under DRUB. Cf. F. draper, 'to dress, or to full cloth; to beat, or thicken, as cloth, in the fulling; also . . . to mock, flout, deride, jeast at;' Cot. This is parallel to Swed. dråp, murder, dråp-ord, an abusive word, drabba, to hit = G. treffen. Der. trapp-ings, s. pl., ornaments for a horse, Shak. Venus, 286, hence, any ornaments, Hamlet, i. 2. 86. Also rattle-traps, q. v.

TRAP (3), a kind of igneous rock. (Scand.) Modern. So called because such rocks often appear in large tabular masses, rising above each other like steps (Webster). = Swed. trappa, a stair, or flight of stairs, trapp, trap (rock); Dan. trappe, a stair, trap, trap. + Du. trap, a stair, step. + G. trappe, a stair. β. All from Teut. base TRAP, to tread; see Trap (1) and Trap.

TRAPAN, the same as Trepan (2), q. v.

TRAPEZIUM, a plane four-sided figure with unequal sides. (L., = Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. trapezium. = Gk. τραπεζίον, a small table or counter; a trapezium, because four-sided, like such a table. Dimin. of τράπεζα, a table, esp. a dining-table; a shortened form for *τετρα-πέζα, i. e. a four-footed bench or table. Cf. ἀρτυρή-πεζα, i. e. silver-footed, as an epithet of Thetis. = Gk. τετρα-, prefix signifying 'four,' as in τετρα-γωνος, four-cornered, from τέτραπες, Attic for τέσσες, four; and πέζα, a foot, put for πῆδ-ya, an allied word to πῆδς (stem πῆδ-), a foot, which is cognate with E. foot. See Tetragon and Foot. Der. trapezo-id, lit. 'trapezium-like,' from τράπεζο-, put for τράπεζα, and -ιδ-ος, form; trapezo-id-al. Also trapeze, from F. trapeze, the name of a kind of swing for athletic exercise, so called from being sometimes made in the shape of a trapezium, as thus: Δ. The F. trapeze is from Lat. trapezium. [†]

TRAPPINGS, horse-ornaments; see Trap (2).

TRASH, refuse, worthless stuff. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 223; Oth. iii. 3. 157; hence used of a worthless person, Oth. ii. 1. 312, v. 1. 85. The orig. sense is clippings of trees, as stated by Wedgwood, or (yet more exactly) the bits of broken sticks found under trees in a wood, and collected for fire-wood. Wedgwood quotes from Evelyn as follows, with a reference to Notes and Queries, June 11, 1853: 'Faggots to be every stick of three foot in length—this to prevent the abuse of filling the middle part and ends with trash and short sticks.' Hence it came to mean refuse generally; Cotgrave explains menüailles by 'small ware, small trash, small offals.' Of Scand. origin. = Icel. tros, rubbish, leaves and twigs from a tree picked up and used for fuel, whence trotsna, to become worn out, to split up as a seam does; cf. trassi, a slovenly fellow, trassa, to be slovenly. Norweg. tros, fallen twigs, half-rotten branches easily broken, allied to trysia, to break into small pieces, to crackle. Swed. trasa, a rag, a tatter; Swed. dial. trase, a rag; trås, a heap of sticks, a worthless fellow (which is one sense of Cleveland trash), old useless bits of fencing.

β. Rietz points out the true origin; he adduces Swed. dial. sild i tras, to break in pieces, which is obviously the same phrase as Swed. sild i kras, to break in pieces; the substitution of tr for kr being a Scan. peculiarity, of which we have an undoubted example in Icel. trani, Swed. trana, Dan. trane, all corruptions of the word which we spell crane; see Crane. Hence the etym. is from Swed. krasa, Dan. krase, to crash, as a thing does when broken; see Crash. The Icel. form tros answers to Swed. krossa, to bruise, crush, crash, a collateral form of krasa; cf. Orkney truss, refuse, also prov. E. trous, the trimmings of a hedge (Halliwell). γ. We now see that trash means 'crashings,' i. e. bits cracked off, pieces that break off short with a snap or crash, dry twigs; hence also a bit of torn stuff, a rag, &c.

¶ This throws a light on trash, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 81; which may mean to trim or lop. Der. trash-y.

TRAVAIL, toil, labour in child-birth. (F., = L.) M. E. travail (with u for v), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 130, l. 32. = F. travail, 'travell, toile, labour, business, pains-taking;' Cot. Cf. Ital. travaglio, Span. trabajo, Port. trabalho, Prov. trabalhs (Bartsch), toil, labour; orig. an obstacle or impediment, which is still a sense of Span. trabajo. We must also note that O. Ital. travaglio meant a pen for cattle, or 'oxe-stall,' as Florio explains it; whilst F. travail meant a trave for horses; see below.

β. There can be little doubt that, as Diez says, the sb. was derived from a Low Lat. verb *travare, to make or build with beams, to pen, shackle, put an obstacle in one's way, and so to cause embarrassment and trouble. [Our word to embarrass is formed, in just the same way, from bar, a beam, clog, impediment.] Traces of this Low Lat. verb abound; we find Low Lat. travata (F. travée), 'a bay of building, the space between the main beams of a room,' Cot.; O. Span. travar, 'to knit, to join, to crosse or clinch one within another' (Minsheu), certainly spoken of joining beams, as he also gives trava de pared, 'the joints of a wall,' travas de bestia, 'shackles for a horse,' travazon, 'the joining of timber-work in walls;' Span. trabar, to join, to fetter, des-trabar, to unfetter; Port. travar, to twine or twist one with another, trava, a transom or beam going overthwart a house; Ital. travata, 'any compact made of beames or timber, a houell [hovel] of timber' (Florio), travaglio, 'an oxe-stall,' as above; F. en-traver, 'to shackle or fetter the legs,' Cot., entraves, 'shackles, fetters, pasterns for the legs of unruly horses,' id., travail, a trave. See Trave.

γ. All these are derivatives from Lat. trabem, acc. of trabs, trabes, a beam, hence anything built of timber, such as a ship or wooden roof; this is clearly shewn by O. F. traf, Port. trave, a beam, piece of timber, O. Ital. trave, 'any kind of beame, transome, rafter, or great peece of timber;' Florio. δ. Trabs is allied to Gk. τράβηξ, τράβηξ, a beam to turn anything with; cf. τρέπειν, to turn. = TARK, to turn; see Torture. ¶ The W. trafau, travail, appears to be borrowed from English. Der. travail, verb, M. E. travailien, King Alisaunder, 1612, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 34, l. 3, from F. travailler, 'to travell, toile, also to harry, weary, vex, infest;' Cot. Doublet, travel.

TRAVERE, a beam, a shackle. (F., = L.) 'Trave, a frame into which farriers put unruly horses;' Halliwell. 'Trave, Travise, a place enclosed with rails for shoeing an unruly horse;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. 'Trave, a trevis or little room made purposely to shoe unbroken horses in;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Trevis, to shoe a wyld horse in, trawyl a cheval;' Palsgrave. M. E. trave (with u for v); 'And she sprong as a colt doth in the trave;' Chaucer, C. T. 3282. = O. F. traf, a beam, given in the Supp. to Roquefort; later tréf, 'the beam of a house,' Cot. Whence also travail, 'the frame whereinto farriers put unruly horses,' Cot. = Lat. trabem, acc. of trabs or trabs, a beam; see Travail. Der. trav-el, trav-a'il; archi-trave.

TRAVEL, to journey, walk. (F., = L.) Merely the same word as travail; the two forms are used indiscriminately in old editions of Shakespeare (Schmidt). The word forcibly recalls the toil of travel in former days. See Travail. Der. travel, verb; travell-er, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308. Doublet, travail.

TRAVERSE, laid across; as sb., a cross, obstruction, a thing built across; as a verb, to cross, obstruct, deny an argument, also to pass over a country. (F., = L.) 'Trees . . . hewen downe, and laid travers, one ouer another;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 186 (R.). Gower has travers as a sb., meaning 'cross' or impediments, in the last line but 14 of his Conf. Amantis. = F. travers, m., traverse, f., 'crosse-wise, overthwart;' Cot. Hence the sb. traverse, 'a cross-way, also . . . a thwart, . . . let, bar, hindrance;' id.; also the verb traverser, 'to thwart or go overthwart, to crosse or passe over,' id. = Lat. transuersus, turned across, laid athwart; pp. of transuerti, to turn across; see Transverse. Der. traverse, verb, from F. traverser, as above; travers-er.

TRAVESTY, a parody. (F., = L.) 'Scarronides, or Virgile Travestie, being the first book of Virgils Æneis in English Burlesque; London, 1664;' by Charles Cotton. Probably travestie is here used in the lit. sense of 'disguised,' or as we should now say, travestied. It is properly a pp., being borrowed from F. travesti, pp. of se travestir, 'to disguise or shift his apparell, to play the counterfeit;' Cot. = F. tra- (= Lat. trans), prefix, lit. across, but implying change; and vestir, to clothe, apparel, from Lat. vestire, to clothe. The verb vestire is from the sb. vestis, clothing. See Trans- and Vest. Der. travesty, verb.

TRAWL, to fish with a drag-net. (F., = Teut.) 'Trawler-men, a sort of fishermen that us'd unlawful arts and engines, to destroy the fish upon the river Thames; among whom some were styl'd hebbmen, others tinckermen, Petermen, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = O. F. trawler, to go hither and thither (Roquefort); also spelt tröller, mod. F. tröler, to drag about; Hamilton. See Troll. ¶ Quite distinct from trail, as shewn by the vowel-sound.

TRAY, a shallow vessel, a salver. (E.) 'A treie, or such hollowe vessel . . . that laborers carrie mortar in to serue tilers or plasterers;' Baret, ed. 1580. M. E. treie; 'Bolles, trayes, and platers,' i. e. bowls, trays, and platters; Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 1490. = A. S. treg, a tray. This word is not in the Dictionaries, but I have little doubt that it is our modern tray, as shewn by the M. E. spelling. The entry 'alucolum, treg' occurs in a set of glosses about things relating to the table, in company with hand-lind, a napkin; see Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 2. Here alucolum is clearly a misprint for alucolum, i. e. a tray. Prob. related to A. S. trig, a trough, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 340, l. 5; and to A. S. trok, a trough. See Trough.

TREACHERY, faithlessness, trickery of a gross kind. (F., -Teut.) M. E. trecherie, spelt trecherye, P. Plowman, B. i. 196; older spelling tricheerie, id. A. i. 172, Ancren Riwe, p. 202, l. 18. - F. tricherie, 'whence, as it seems, our trechery, counsage, deceit, a cheating, a beguiling;' Cot. - F. tricher, 'to consen, cheat, beguile, deceive;' id. O. F. trichier, trecher; cf. Ital. treccare, to cheat; Prov. tricharia, treachery, trichaire, a traitor, trics or trigs, a trick (Bartsch).

β. Of Teut. origin, as pointed out by Diez; from M. H. G. trechen, to push, also to draw, pull (hence, to entice); cf. Du. trekken, to draw, pull, tow, and Du. trek, a draught, and also a trick. Treachery and trickery are variants of the same word, although treachery has obtained the stronger sense. See further under Trick, Track. Der. treacher-ous, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 41, spelt trecherous, Pricke of Conscience, 4232, coined by adding the suffix -ous to the old word trecher, a traitor, spelt trychor in Rob. of Glouc. p. 455, l. 4, trechour in Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 239, l. 6; treacher-ous-ly, -ness.

TREACLE, the syrup drained from sugar in making it. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. triacle, a sovereign remedy (very common), P. Plowman, C. ii. 147, B. i. 146; see my note on it, explaining the matter. It had some resemblance to the treacle which has inherited its name. - F. triacle, 'treacle,' Cot. The i is unoriginal; triacle is only another spelling of F. theriaque, 'treacle;' Cot. - Lat. theriaca, an antidote against the bite of serpents, or against poison; also spelt theriace. - Gk. θηριακός, belonging to wild or venomous beasts; hence θηριακά φάρμακα, antidotes against the bite of venomous animals; and (no doubt) θηριακή, sb. sing. fem., in the same sense, whence Lat. theriace. - Gk. θηρίον, a wild animal, poisonous animal; dimin. of θηρ, a wild beast, cognate with E. Deer, q. v.

TREAD, to set down the foot, tramp, walk. (E.) M. E. treden; pt. t. trad, Ormulum, 2561; pp. treden, treden, Chaucer, C. T. 12646. - A. S. tredan, pt. t. træd, pp. treden, Grein, ii. 550. + Du. treden. - G. treten, pt. t. trat, pp. getreten. We find also Icel. tröð, pt. t. tröð, pp. tröðinn; which accounts for our pp. trodden; Dan. træde; Swed. träda; Goth. trudan, to tread, pt. t. trath. β. All from Teut. base TRAD, to tread; Fick, iii. 125. Cf. Teut. TRAP, to tread; for which see Tramp. The comparison of these bases points back to an older base TRA, cognate with Aryan ✓ DRA, to run; cf. Gk. διδράσκω, δράνω, to run, Skt. dru, drá, to run, dram, to run, Gk. δραμ-εῖν; see Dromedary. Der. tread-le or tredd-le, the same as M. E. tredyl, a step, A. S. tredel; 'Bases, tredelas vel stapas, Wright's Voc. i. 21, col. 2. Also tread-mill; trade, q. v.

TREASON, a betrayal of the government, or an attempt to overthrow it. (F., -L.) M. E. trason, trason; spelt trayson, Havelok, 444; treisun, Ancren Riwe, p. 56, l. 17. - O. F. trason, mod. F. trahison, treason, betrayal; answering to Lat. acc. traditionem. - O. F. trair, mod. F. trahir, to betray. - Lat. tradere, to deliver, betray; see Traitor. Der. treason-able, treason-ably.

TREASURE, wealth stored up, a hoard. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. tresor, occurring very early, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137. - O. F. tresor, mod. F. trésor, treasure. Cf. Ital. tesoro, Span. tesoro, Port. tesouro, spelt without r after t. - Lat. thesaurum, acc. of thesaurus, a treasure. - Gk. θησαυρός, a treasure, a store, hoard; formed (it is not very clear with what suffixes) from the base θη-, to lay up, as seen in θήκη, I place, lay up. - ✓ DHA, to place. See Theme, Thesis. Der. treasure, verb, Shak. Sonnet 6; treasur-er, from F. tresorier, spelt thesorier in Cot., and explained by 'a treasurer;' treasur-y, M. E. tresorie, tresorje, Rob. of Glouc. p. 274, l. 1, contracted from O. F. tresorerie, spelt thesorerie in Cotgrave, so that treasury is short for treasurerie. Also treasure-trove, i. e. treasure found; see Trover. Doublet, thesaurus.

TREAT, to handle in a particular manner, to entertain, manage by applying remedies, discourse of. (F., -L.) In Wyclif, Mark, ix. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 12464. - F. traiter, to treat. - Lat. tractare, to handle; frequent. form of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw; see Trace. Der. treat-ment, from F. traitement; treat-ise, M. E. treit, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. l. 8, from O. F. treitis, treitis, traictis (see traictis in Roquefort), meaning (a thing) well handled or nicely made, attractive, admirable, an adj. which was even applied by Chaucer to the Prior's nose, C. T. 152, and answering to a Low Lat. form *tractitius. Also treat-y, M. E. trete, Chaucer, C. T. 1290, from F. traité (traicté in Cotgrave), 'a treaty,' properly the pp. of traiter, to treat, and therefore 'a thing treated of.'

TREBLE, threefold; the highest part in music. (F., -L.) Why the highest part in music is called treble is not clear; still the fact is so, and the word, in that sense, is the same word as when it means triple. Indeed, we find triple used by Fairfax in the musical sense of treble. 'The humane voices sung a triple hie;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xviii. st. 24. Palsgrave has: 'Treble of a song, le dessus; Treble-stryng of an instrument, chanterelle.' M. E. treble, threefold, Gower, C. A. iii. 159, l. 14. - O. F. treble, treible, triple (Burguy). - Lat. tripulum, acc. of tripulus, triple. See Triple. For the change from p to b, cf. E. double, due to Lat. duplus. Der. treble, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 221; trebl-y. Doublet, triple. [+]

TREDDLE, the same as Treadle; see Tread. TREE, a woody plant, of a large size. (E.) M. E. tree, tre; also used in the sense of timber. 'Not oneli vessels of gold and of siluer, but also of tree and of erthe;' Wyclif, 1 Tim. ii. 20. - A. S. tréð, tréow, a tree, also dead wood or timber; Grein, ii. 551. + Icel. tré. + Dan. træ. + Swed. trä, timber; trääd, a tree, a corruption of träet, lit. 'the wood,' with the post-positive article. + Goth. triu (gen. triuvis), a tree, piece of wood. β. All from Teut. type TREWA, a tree, Fick, iii. 118; further allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, W. deru, an oak, Irish darag, darog, an oak, Gk. δῆρος, an oak, δῆρυ, a spear-shaft, Skt. dru, wood, dāru, wood, a species of pine. γ. Benfey connects Skt. dru and dāru with the verb drī, to tear, burst, from ✓ DAR, to tear, whence E. tear; see Tear (1); so also Fick, i. 615, 616. The explanation is that it meant a piece of peeled wood; cf. Gk. δέπειν, to flay; but this is very far-fetched. Curtius points out that the orig. sense of Aryan DRU seems to have been 'tree' rather than a piece of wood; and adds, 'on account of this meaning, preserved in so many languages, I cannot accept the derivation [above] suggested by Kuhn and others.' Der. tre-én, adj., made of wood, or belonging to a tree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 26, Cursor Mundi, 12392; with suffix -en as in gold-en, wood-en. Also tree-nail, a peg, a pin or nail made of wood, a naut. term. And see rhododendron, dryad.

TREFOIL, a three-leaved plant such as the white and red clover. (F., -L.) Given by Cot. as the tr. of F. treffle. - O. F. trifol; in a Vocabulary pr. in Wright's Voc. i. 140, l. 14, we find F. trifol answering to Lat. trifolium and E. wite clovere [white clover]. - Lat. trifolium, a three-leaved plant, as above. - Lat. tri-, prefix allied to tres, three; and folium, a leaf; see Tri- and Foil. TRELLIS, a structure of lattice-work. (F., -L.) M. E. trellis. 'Trelys, of a wyndow or other lyke, Cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. - F. treillis, 'a trellis;' Cot. - F. treiller, 'to grate or lattice, to support or underset by, or hold in with, crossed bars or latticed frames;' Cot. - F. treille, 'an arbor or walk set on both sides with vines, &c. twining about a latticed frame;' id. - Lat. trichila, trichila, triclea, tricia, a bower, arbour, or summer-house. Origin doubtful. ☞ Quite distinct from F. treillis, O. F. trellis, a kind of calico (from Lat. trilicem, acc. of trilix, triple-twilled; which from tri-, three times, and licium, a thread). Der. trellis-ed. [+]

TREMBLE, to shiver, shake, quiver. (F., -L.) M. E. tremblen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 235. - F. trembler, 'to tremble;' Cot. The b is excrement, as is common after m. - Low Lat. tremulare, to hesitate, lit. to tremble. - Lat. tremulus, trembling. - Lat. trem-ere, to tremble, with adj. suffix -ul-us. + Lithuan. trim-ti, to tremble. + Gk. τρέμειν, to tremble. - ✓ TRAM, to tremble; Fick, i. 604. Der. trembl-er, trembl-ing-ly. From Lat. tremere are also trem-or, in Phillips, borrowed from Lat. tremor, a trembling; trem-end-ous, also in Phillips, from Lat. tremendus, that ought to be feared, fut. pass. part. of tremere; trem-end-ous-ly; trem-ul-ous, Englished from Lat. tremulus, as above; trem-ul-ous-ly, -ness.

TRENCH, a kind of ditch or furrow. (F., -L.?) M. E. trenche, Chaucer, C. T. 10706. Shortened from F. trenchée, 'a trench,' Cot., lit. a thing cut. - F. trencher (now spelt trancher), 'to cut, carve, slice, hack, hew;' Cot. Cf. Span. trinchea, a trench, trinchar, to carve, trinchar, to chop; Port. trinchar, to carve, trinchar, to crack asunder, break; Ital. trincea, a trench, trinciare, to cut, carve. β. There is no satisfactory solution of this word; see Littré, Scheler, and Diez. Prob. Latin; the solutions truncare, transcare, and internecare have been proposed. We may notice, in Florio, Ital. trincare, 'to trim or snug up,' trinci, 'gardings, fringes, lacings, iaggings, also cuts, iags, or snips in garments,' trine, 'cuts, iags, snips, pinck worke in garments.' Also Minshew has O. Span. trenchea, a trench, trenchar, to part the hair of the head. The word still awaits solution. Der. trench, verb, Macb. iii. 4. 27, from trencher, to cut; trench-ant, cutting, Timon, iv. 3. 115, from F. trenchant, pres. part. of trencher; trench-er, a wooden plate for cutting things on, M. E. trenchere, Wright's Voc. i. 178, l. 17, from F. trencheoir, 'a trencher,' Cot.

TREND, to turn or bend away, said of direction or course. (E.) See Nares. 'The shoare trended to the southwestward;' Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 276, § 7. 'By the trending of the land [you] come backe;' id. i. 383. M. E. trenden, to roll or turn about. 'Lat hym rollen and trenden,' &c.; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 11, l.

2835. The word is E., being formed from the same source as A. S. trendel, a circle, a ring, esp. a ring seen round the sun, A. S. Chron. an. 806. Allied words are Dan. trind, adj. round, trindt, adv. around, trindes, to grow round; Swed. trind, round, cylindrical; O. Friesic trind, trund, round; see Trundle. Cf. trendil, a hoop, mill-wheel, trendle, to trundle, in Levins, ed. 1570; trindals, rolls of wax, Cramer's Works, ii. 155, 503 (Parker Soc.).

TRENTAL, a set of thirty masses for the dead. (F., -L.) See the poem of St. Gregory's Trental, in Polit. Relig. and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, and my note on P. Plowman, C. x. 320. See Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 453; and see Nares. - O. F. trentel, trental, a trental, set of thirty masses; Roquefort. Cf. Low Lat. trentale, a trental. - F. trente, thirty. - Lat. triginta, thirty. - Lat. tri, thrice, allied to tres, three; and -ginta, i.e. -cinta, short for decinta = decanta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Three and Ten.

TREPAN (1), a small cylindrical saw used in removing a piece of a fractured skull. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt trepane in Cot. - F. trepan, 'a trepan, an instrument having a round and indented edge,' &c.; Cot. - Low Lat. trepanum (put for trypanum *). - Gk. τρύπανον, a carpenter's tool, a borer, augur; also a surgical instrument, a trepan (Galen). - Gk. τρῶναι, to bore. - Gk. τρύπα, τρύπη, a hole. - Gk. τρίπευ, to turn (hence to bore). - ✓ TARK, to twist, turn round; see Torture.

TREPAN (2), TRAPAN, to ensnare. (F., -Teut.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 617. Usually spelt trepan, as in Phillips, by a ridiculous confusion with the word above. Rightly spelt trapan in South's Sermons, vol. v. ser. 3 (R.), and in Anson's Voyages, b. i. c. 9 (R.). 'Forthwith alights the innocent trapan' d'; Cotton, Wonders of the Peak, 1681, p. 38 (Todd). Not an old word. - O. F. trappan, a snare or trap for animals (Roquefort); he also gives trapan, trapan, a kind of trap-door. These are prob. rather dialectal words than O. F. Trappan or trapan perhaps stands for trappant, pres. part. of trapper, a verb formed from F. trappe, a trap; in any case the word is obviously an extension from F. trappe, a trap. - O. H. G. trapo, a trap; cognate with E. Trap, q. v. ¶ The E. word is now only used as a verb, but it must have come in as a sb. in the first instance, as it is used by South: 'It is indeed a real trapan,' i.e. stratagem, Sermon. ii. 377; 'Nothing but gins, and snares, and traps for souls,' Sermon. iii. 166 (Todd). The last quotation puts the matter in a very clear light. Cotgrave has the verb attrapper, and the sbs. trape, trappele, attrapoire.

TREPIDATION, terror, trembling, fright. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 483, where it is used in an astronomical sense. 'A continual trepidation,' i.e. trembling motion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 137. - F. trepidation, 'trembling, terror'; Cot. - Lat. trepidationem, acc. of trepidatio, alarm, a trembling. - Lat. trepidatus, pp. of trepidare, to tremble. - Lat. trepidus, agitated, disturbed, alarmed. - O. Lat. *trepere, to turn round, only found in the 3 p. sing. trepit, explained by Festus, p. 367 (White), as meaning ueritit; to which Festus adds, 'unde trepidus et trepidatus, quia turbatione meus uertitur.' That is, trepidus means in a state of disturbance, as if the mind is being continually turned about or agitated. This O. Lat. *trepere is obviously cognate with Gk. τρίπευ, to turn, allied also to Lat. torquere. - ✓ TARK, to twist, turn about; see Torture. Der. (from Lat. repidus) in-trepid.

TRESPASS, a passing over a boundary, the act of entering another man's land unlawfully, a crime, sin, offence, injury. (F., -L.) M. E. trespas, Rob. of Glouc. p. 505, l. 18, where it means 'sin.' - O. F. trespas, a crime (Burguy); also 'a decease, departure out of this world, also a passage'; Cot. The lit. sense is 'a step beyond or across, so that it has direct reference to the mod. use of trespass in the sense of intrusion on another man's land. Cf. Span. trespasso, a conveyance across, also a trespass; Ital. trapasso, a passage, digression. - Lat. trans, across; and passus, a step; see Trans- and Pass. Der. trespass, verb, M. E. trespassen, Wyclif, Acts, i. 25, from F. trespasser, 'to passe over,' Cot., also to trespass (Burguy); trespasser, M. E. trespassour, P. Plowman, ii. 92; also trespass-offering.

TRESS, a curl or lock of hair, a ringlet. (F., -Gk.) M. E. tresse, Chaucer, C. T. 1051; the pp. tressed, adorned with tresses, is in King Alisaunder, l. 5409. - F. tresse, 'a tresse or lock of hair'; Cot. He also gives tresser, 'to plait, weave, or make into tresses.' Cf. Ital. treccia, a braid, knot, curl; pl. treccie, 'plaites, tresses, tramels, or roubles of womens haires'; Span. trenza, a braid of hair, plaited silk. β. The orig. sense is 'a plait'; and the etymology is (through Low Lat. tricia, variant of trica, a plait) from Gk. τρίχια, in three parts, threefold (Diez); from the usual method of plaiting the hair in three folds. - Gk. τρί-α, neut. of τρίς, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. γ. This is borne out by the Ital. trina, a lace, loop, allied to trino, threefold, from Lat. trinus, threefold; and perhaps Span. trenado, made of network, is also from the Lat. trinus. Der. tress-ed, as above. Also tress-ure, q. v.

♂ TRESSURE, a kind of border, in heraldry. (F., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, and in works on heraldry. - F. tressure, a heraldic F. word (not in the dict.) meaning 'border.' - F. tresser, 'to plait, weave'; Cot. - F. tresse, a tress or plait of hair; see Tress. ¶ I find 'Hoc tricorium, Anglice, tressure,' Wright's Voc. i. 196. Here tricorium is merely a Latinised form of the F. word, the F. tresser being Latinised as tricare.

TRESTLE, TRESSEL, a moveable support for a table, frame for supporting. (F., -L.) 'Trestyll for a table, tresteau,' Palsgrave. 'Hic tristellus, Anglice, trestle,' Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 2, l. 3. 'Hic tristellus, a trestyle'; id. 232, col. 2, l. 1. The pl. trestyls, i.e. trestles, occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 6, in a will dated 1463. - O. F. trestel, spelt tresteau, trestau in Cot., and explained 'a tresle for a table, &c., also a kind of rack, or stretching torture.' Mod. F. tréseau (see Littré). β. The etymology is disputed, and the word presents difficulties on all sides. Littré derives it from the Bret. treustel, treustell, a trestle, as to which Legonidec remarks that, though at first sight it looks as if borrowed from French, it may fairly be considered as a dimin. of Bret. treust, a beam, transom. Cf. W. trestyl, a trestle, which looks as if borrowed from E.; but we also find W. traust, a transom, rafter, trostan, trosten, a long slender pole. γ. At the same time, I suspect that Bret. treust, W. traust, are nothing but forms of Lat. transum; and that trestle (in all its forms) is nothing but Lat. transillum, the regular dimin. of transum; this is an etymology which Diez recognizes as possible. δ. Diez suggests that trestle (appearing in French, by the way, in the 13th century) is borrowed from Du. driestal, explained by Sewel as 'a three-footed stool or trestle,' but I doubt whether this is good Dutch; for Hexham does not notice it, and only explains stal as 'a settle, a seate, or a chaire,' and it is absurd to suppose that driestal means 'a three-settle.' It is by no means unlikely that driestal was suggested by the F. or E. word. Blount explains E. trestle as 'a three-footed stoole'; here again I suspect this to be a late sense, due to confusion with tripod and trivet; the true sense of trestle is a support for a table, and to be of any practical use, it should certainly have four legs, and is generally made with two diverging legs at each end. The chief object of a trestle is to go across under the table; and I feel inclined to hold fast by the derivation from Lat. transillum, a little cross-beam, Vitruvius, v. 12 (White). ε. We must by no means neglect Lowland Sc. traist, trast, a trestle, trast, a beam, North. E. tress, a trestle (Brockett), Lanc. trest, a strong large stool (Halliwell), and M. E. treste, a trestle, above. These are from O. F. traste, a cross-beam (Roquefort), the same word as O. Ital. trasto, 'a bench of a gallie, a transome or beame going cross a house,' which is obviously from Lat. transum. See Transom. Scheler takes the same view, proposing (as I should do) a Low Lat. *transillum, as a parallel form to transillum, in order to give the exact O. F. form. Cotgrave's explanation of the word as meaning a rack is much to the point; a rack requires two cross-beams (transilla) to work it, these beams being turned round with levers, thus pulling the victim by means of ropes wound round the beams.

TRET, an allowance to purchasers on consideration of waste. (F., -L.) 'Tret, an allowance made for the waste, . . . which is always 4 in every 104 pounds,' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. It appears much earlier. 'For the tret of the same peper,' i.e. pepper; Arnold's Chron. (1502), repr. 1811, p. 128. Mahn derives it from 'a Norman F. treit,' as to which he tells us nothing; it is prob. from some word closely related to F. traite, 'a draught, . . . also, a transportation, vent outward, shipping over, and an imposition upon commodities'; Cot. Perhaps it meant an allowance for loss in transport. This F. traite answers to Lat. tracta, fem. of tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace. In any case, it is almost certainly due to Lat. tractus; cf. Span. trato, trade; O. Ital. tratta, 'leau to transport merchandise, also a trade or trading'; Florio.

TREY, three, at cards or dice. (F., -L.) 'Two treys,' L. L. L. v. 2. 232. And in Chaucer, C. T. 12587. - O. F. trei, treis (mod. F. trois), three. - Lat. tres, three; see Three.

TRI, relating to three, threefold. (L. or Gk.; or F., -L. or Gk.) F. and L. tri, three times, prefix related to Lat. tri-a, neut. of tres, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. So also Gk. τρί-, allied to τρί-α, neut. of τρίς, three.

TRIAD, the union of three. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'This is the famous Platonic triad;' More, Song of the Soul (1647), preface (Todd). - F. triade, 'three'; Cot. - Lat. triad-, stem of trias, a triad. - Gk. τριάς, a triad. - Gk. τρί-, related to τρίς, three; see Tri.

TRIAL, a test; see Try.

TRIANGLE, a plane, three-sided figure. (F., -L.) 'Tryangle, triangle,' Palsgrave. - F. triangle, 'a triangle'; Cot. - Lat. triangulum, a triangle; neut. of triangulus, adj., having three angles. -

Lat. tri-, three; and angulus, an angle; see Tri- and Angle.
Der. triangl-ed; triangul-ar, used by Spenser (Todd), from F. triangulaire, 'triangular,' Cot., from Lat. triangularis; triangul-ate, a coined word; triangul-at-ion.

TRIBE, a race, family, kindred. (F., = L.) Gower, C. A. iii. 230, l. 12, has the pl. tribus. This is the pl. of F. tribu, 'a tribe,' Cot. = Lat. tribus, a tribe.

β. A tribus is supposed to have been, in the first instance, one of the three families of people in Rome, their names being the Ramnes, Tities, and Luceres. The etymology is thought to be from Lat. tri- (akin to tres, three), and -bus, family, from √BHU, to be; cf. Gk. φύλη, a tribe, family, from the same root. See Tri- and Be. Der. trib-une, q. v.; trib-ute, q. v.

TRIBRACH, a metrical foot consisting of three short syllables. (L., = Gk.) Written tribrachus or tribrachys in Phillips, ed. 1706; and tribrachus in Puttenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3. = Lat. tribrachys. = Gk. τρίβραχος, a tribrach. = Gk. τρι-, akin to τρεῖς, three; and βραχύς, short, cognate with Lat. brevis, short. See Tri- and Brief.

TRIBULATION, great affliction, distress. (F., = L.) M. E. tribulacioun, spelt tribulaciun, Ancrén Riwe, p. 402, l. 24. = F. tribulation, 'tribulation'; Cot. = Lat. tribulationem, acc. of tribulatio, tribulation, affliction; lit. a rubbing out of corn by a sledge. = Lat. tribulatus, pp. of tribulare, to rub out corn, to oppress, afflict. = Lat. tribulum, a sledge for rubbing out corn, consisting of a wooden platform studded underneath with sharp flints or iron teeth. = Lat. tri-, base of tri-um, tri-um, pt. t. and pp. of terere, to rub; with suffix -bulum denoting the agent (as in verti-bulum, that which turns about, a joint). See further under Trite.

TRIBUNE, a Roman magistrate elected by the plebeians. (F., = L.) M. E. tribun; pl. tribunes, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 21. = Lat. tribunus, a tribune, properly the chief of (or elected by) a tribe; also a chieftain, Mark, vi. 21. = Lat. tribun-, crude form of tribus, a tribe; with suffix -nus (Aryan -na). See Tribe. Der. tribune-ship. Also tribun-al, Antony, iii. 6, 3, from Lat. tribunal, a raised platform on which the seats of tribunes, or magistrates, were placed.

TRIBUTE, homage, contribution paid to secure protection. (F., = L.) M. E. tribut, Wyclif, Luke, xxiii. 2; Gower, C. A. ii. 74, l. 7. = F. tribut, 'tribute'; Cot. = Lat. tributum, tribute; lit. a thing contributed or paid; neut. of tributare, pp. of tribuere, to assign, impart, allot, bestow, pay; orig. to allot or assign to a tribe. = Lat. tribun-, crude form of tribus, a tribe; see Tribe. Der. tribut-ary, M. E. tributaire, Chaucer, C. T. 14594, from O. F. tributarius, later tributaire, 'tributary,' Cot., from Lat. tributarius, paying tribute. Also at-tribute, con-tribute, dis-tribute, re-tribute.

TRICE (1), a short space of time. (Span.) In the phrases in a trice, Twelfth Nt. iv. 2, 133; on a trice, Temp. v. 238; in this trice of time, K. Lear, i. 1, 219. 'And wasteth with a trice'; Turberville, To his Friend, &c., st. 5. Now only in the phr. in a trice, i. e. suddenly. 'Subitement, swiftly, quickly, speedily, in a trice, out of hand'; Cot. The whole phrase is borrowed from Spanish. = Span. tris, noise made by the breaking of glass; also, a trice, a short time, an instant; venir en un tris, to come in an instant; estar en un tris, to be on the verge of (Neuman). So also Port. triz, a word to express the sound of glass when it cracks; estar por hum triz, to be within a hair's breadth, to have a narrow escape; en hum triz, in a trice. The word tris is imitative. ¶ Not to be confused with M. E. treis, which is of quite another origin. Gower has: 'Al sodeinlich, as who saith treis,' C. A. i. 142, l. 7. This means, quite suddenly, like one who counts three; from O. F. treis, three; see Trey. There is no doubt about this, as Gower's treis rhymes with paleis, shewing that the diphthong really was ei; and of course Gower did not borrow from Spanish. Besides, 'as who seith' is different from 'in a'; there is, in fact, no connection whatever. But Wedgwood well compares the Lowland Scotch in a crack (Jamieson) with the Span. phrase.

TRICE (2), TRISE, to haul up or hoist. (Scand.) Trise (seaward), to hale up anything into the ship by hand with a dead rope, or one that does not run in a block or pulley; Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. trisen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443. 'They trisen vpe thaire saillez,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 832. A nautical term; of Scand. origin; and the sense noted by Phillips is unoriginal, as it must once have meant to haul by help of a pulley, not only without it. Cf. M. E. tryys, (and, with excrement tryyste, 'troclea,' Prompt. Parv. = Swed. trissa, a sheave, pulley, truckle, triss, a spritsail-brace; Dan. tridse, a pulley, whence tridse, verb, to haul by means of a pulley, to trice; Norweg. triss, trissel, a pulley, or sheave in a block; Swed. dial. trissa, a roller, also a shoemaker's implement, a little round wheel with teeth on it. β. As the Dan. form shews, the orig. form was trid-sa, and the orig. sense was a little wheel; so named from its turning round and round, and allied to Swed. trind, round; see Trend, Trundle. The final -sa is the same as in E. clean-se. Cf. also Low G. trisel, a whirling round, dizziness, giddiness, Bremen Wörterbuch; where also are cited O. G. tryssen, to wind, and Hamburg drysen, up drysen, to wind up, dryse-blok, the block of a pulley, like Dan. tridseblok.

TRICENTENARY, a space of 300 years. (L.) Modern. From Tri- and Centenary.

TRICK (1), a stratagem, clever contrivance, fraud, parcel of cards won at once. (Du.) Not an old word, though common in Shakespeare. 'A trick, facinus;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'It were but a schooler-trick,' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 512. It does not seem to be much older than about 1550; and it cannot well have been directly descended from M. E. trichen, to deceive, cozen, trick, occurring early in the 14th century, Polit. Songs, p. 69, l. 7. This M. E. trichen is from O. F. tricher, trecher, explained under Treachery; a verb which is due to Du. trek, as there shewn. Our word trick was certainly re-imported directly from Dutch, as was clearly the case with Trick (3), q. v. [Hence Shakespeare has trick in the sense of lineament, K. John, i. 85; this is precisely the Du. trek. 'De trekken van't gelaat, the lineaments of the face;' Sewel.] = Du. trek, a trick; 'een slimme trek, a cunning trick; Iemand eenen trek spelen, to play one a trick; de kap trekken, to play tricks, play the fool;' Sewel. [The change from e to i was easy, and may have been helped out by confusion with F. tricher, to trick, itself derived from Du. trek.] The Du. trek, a trick, is the same word as trek, a pull, draught, tug; from the verb trekken, to draw, pull.

β. We find also O. Fries. trekka or tregga, North Fries. trecks, tracke (Outzen), Low G. trekken, Dan. trække, M. H. G. trecken, to draw, drag, pull. The M. H. G. trecken is a causal form, from the strong verb found as M. H. G. trechen, O. H. G. trekhan, to push, shove, also to pull.

γ. Further, the fact that the Du. and H. G. forms both begin with t points to a loss of initial s; cf. Du. streek, a trick, a prank, G. streich, a stroke, also a trick; see Stroke. = Teut. base STRIK, to stroke; see Fick, iii. 349. Der. trick-er, trick-ster; trick-er-y (doublet of treachery, q. v.); trick-ish, trick-ish-ly, trick-ish-ness; also tricks-y, full of tricks (formed by adding -y to the pl. tricks), Temp. v. 226. And see trigger, trick (2), trick (3). [†]

TRICK (2), to dress out, adorn. (Du.) 'Which they trick up with new-tuned oaths;' Hen. V, iii. 6, 80. 'To trick, or trim, Conninere;' Levins, ed. 1570. Minshew also has the word, but it is not a little strange that Blount, Phillips, Coles, and Kersey ignore trick, in whatever sense. [It is remarkable that the word appears early as an adjective, synonymous with neat or trim. 'The same reason I finde true in two bowes that I haue, wherof the one is quicke of caste, tricke, and trimme both for pleasure and profyte;' Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 28. So also in Levins.] The verb is a derivative from the sb. trick, above, which obtained many meanings, for which see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. For example, a trick meant a knack, neat contrivance, custom, particular habit, peculiarity, a trait of character or feature, a prank, also a toy or trifle, as in 'a knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap,' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3, 67. Hence to trick, to use a neat contrivance, to exhibit a trait of character, to have a habit in dress. β. There is absolutely no other assignable origin; any connection with W. tree, an implement, harness, gear, as suggested in Webster, is merely futile and explains nothing. Besides which see Trick (3), below. Der. trick-ing, ornament, Merry Wives, iv. 4, 79.

TRICK (3), to delineate arms, to blazon; an heraldic term. (Du.) This is the true sense in Hamlet, ii. 2, 479. It is much clearer in the following. 'There they are trick'd, they and their pedigrees; they need no other heralds;' Ben Jonson, The Poetaster, i. 1 (Tuca). = Du. trekken, formerly trechen, 'to delineate, to make a draught or modell, to putray;' Hexham. Tricking is a kind of sketching. This is only a particular use of Du. trekken, to pull or draw; cf. our double use of draw. See Trick (1).

TRICKLE, to flow in drops or in a small stream. (E.) M. E. triklen. In Chaucer, C. T. 13603 (Group B, 1864), two MSS. have trikled, two have striked or stryked, and one has striked; Tyrwhitt prints trilled. 'With teris trikland on hir chekes;' Yvaine and Gawain, 1558; in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 66. 'The teeris trikelin downe;' Polit., Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 207, l. 47. In all these passages the word is preceded by the sb. teres, pronounced as a dissyllable, and such must often have been the case; this caused a corruption of strikelin by the loss of initial s; the phrases the teres strikelin and the teres trikelin being confused by the hearer. Trickle is clearly a corruption of strikelin, to flow frequently or to keep on flowing, the frequent. of M. E. striken, to flow. 'Ase strem that strikeþ stille' = as a stream that flows quietly; Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 44, l. 21. = A. S. strican, to move or sweep along, to hold one's course, Grein, ii. 489. This is the same word as A. S. strican, to strike; see Strike. Cf. mod. E. streak; to trickle or strickle is to flow in a course, leaving a streak behind; G. streichen, to move onward, rove, sweep on. The loss of s was facilitated by confusion with trill (Dan. trille), to roll. ¶ This simple solution, suggested by the various readings in Chaucer, explains a very difficult word. For the loss of s, see trick (1). [†]

TRICOLOR, the national flag of France, having three colours, red, white, and blue. (F.,—L.) The flag dates from 1789.—F. tricolore, short for drapeau tricolore, the three-coloured flag.—F. tricolor, the three-coloured amaranth (Hamilton).—Lat. tri- prefix, three; and colorem, acc. of color, colour. See Tri- and Colour. Der. tri-colour-ed.

TRIDENT, a three-pronged spear. (F.,—L.) In Temp. i. 2. 106.—F. trident, 'Neptune's three-forked mace;' Cot.—Lat. tridentem, acc. of tridens, an implement with three teeth, esp. the three-pronged spear of Neptune.—Lat. tri-, three; and dens, a tooth, prong. See Tri- and Tooth.

TRIENNIAL, happening every third year, lasting for three years. (L.) A coined word, made by adding -al (Lat. -alis) to triennium, a period of three years. It supplanted the older word triennal, of F. origin, which occurs early, in P. Plowman, B. vii. 179; this is from F. triennal, 'triennial,' Cot., formed by adding -al to Lat. adj. triennus, lasting for three years. β. Both triennium and triennus are from Lat. tri-, three; and annus, a year; see Tri- and Annual. Der. triennial-ly.

TRIFLE, anything of small value. (F.,—L.) The spelling with i is remarkable, as the usual M.E. spelling was truffe. Spelt truffe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 417, l. 4; truffe (one MS. has treffe), P. Plowman, B. xii. 140; also id. B. xviii. 147 (other MSS. have tryfule, truyffe); also id. C. xv. 83 (other MSS. treffe, trifle). Spelt trofle (also treffe), P. Plowman's Crede, 352. There is the same variation of spelling in the verb; the proper M. E. form is truffen, spelt truffy, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 214, l. 24, trofle, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2032, trifelyn, Prompt. Parv. The sb is the more orig. word; we find 'þeos ant oðre truffes þet he bitrufted monie men mide'—these and other delusions that he beguiles many men with, Ancræn Riwle, p. 106, l. 7. The old sense was a delusion or trick, a sense still partly apparent in the phr. 'to trifly with.'—O. F. truffe, truffie, mockery, railery (Burguy; who refers us to Rutebeuf, i. 93); dimin. of truffe, 'a gibe, mock, flout, jeast, gullery; also, a most dainty kind of round and russet root, which grows in forrests or dry and sandy grounds, &c.; Cot. He refers to a truffe. That truffe and trifle are the same word, or rather that both senses of F. truffe arose from one form, is admitted by Burguy, Diez, and Littré. It is supposed that a truffe became a name for a small or worthless object, or a subject for jesting. Similarly, in English, the phrases not worth a straw, not worth a bean, not worth a cress (now turned into curse) were proverbial; so also 'a feo for the phrase,' or 'a fig for it.' See further under Truffle. ¶ It is possible that the change from u to i may have been due to some influence of A. S. trifelian, to pound or bruise small, since this verb may be traced in prov. E. trifled corn, corn that has fallen down in single ears mixed with standing corn (Halliwell); this is not an E. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. tribulare, to bruise corn; see Tribulation. Der. trifle, verb, M. E. truffen, as above; trifler, trifling, trifling-ly.

TRIFOLIATE, three-leaved. (L.) Modern.—Lat. tri-, three; and foliatum, leaved, from folium, a leaf; see Trifolium.

TRIFORM, having a triple form. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 730.—Lat. triformis; often applied to the moon or Diana.—Lat. tri-, three; and form-a, form; see Tri- and Form.

TRIGGER, a catch which, when pulled, lets fall the hammer or cock of a gun. (Du.) A weakened form of tricker. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 528, Bell's edition, we find: 'The trigger of his pistol draw.' Here the editor, without any hint and free from any conscience in the matter, has put trigger in the place of tricker; see the quotation as it stands in Richardson and Todd's Johnson. Todd also gives 'Pulling aside the tricker' from Boyle, without any reference.—Du. trekker, a trigger; formerly trecker, 'a drawer, a haler, or a puller,' Hexham.—Du. trekken, to pull, draw; see Trick (1). Der. trig, vb., to skid a wheel (Phillips). [†]

TRIGLYPH, a three-grooved tablet. (L.,—Gk.) A term in Doric architecture. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. triglyphus; Vitruvius, iv. 2 (White).—Gk. τρίγλυφος, thrice-cloven; also, a triglyph, three-grooved tablet.—Gk. τρι-, three; and γλύφειν, to carve, hollow out, groove, which is allied to γλάφειν, to hew, and γράφειν, to grave; see Tri- and Grave, verb. Der. triglyph-ic.

TRIGONOMETRY, the measurement of triangles. (Gk.) Shak. has trigon, i.e. triangle, 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 288. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. τρίγωνον, crude form of τρίγωνος, a triangle; and -μετρον, measurement (as in geo-metry, &c.), from μέτρον, a measure. β. τρίγωνον is properly neut. of τρίγωνος, three-cornered; from τρι-, three, and γωνία, an angle, akin to γόνυ, a knee. See Tri-, Knee, and Metro. Der. trigonometri-cal, -ly.

TRIHEDRON, a figure having three equal bases or sides. (Gk.)

Formed like tetra-hedron; with tri-, three, in place of tetra-, four. See Tri- and Tetrahedron. Der. trihedron-al.

TRILATERAL, having three sides. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined with suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from Lat. trilaterus, three-sided.—Lat. tri-, three; and later-, stem of latus, a side; see Tri- and Lateral.

TRILINGUAL, consisting of three languages. (L.) Coined with suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from Lat. trilinguis, triple-tongued, speaking three languages.—Lat. tri-, three; and lingua, a tongue. See Tri- and Lingual.

TRILITERAL, consisting of three letters. (L.) A term applied to Hebrew roots. From Tri- and Literal.

TRILL (1), to shake, to quaver. (Ital.) 'The sober-suited songstress trills her lay;' Thomson, Summer, 746. 'His trills and quavers;' Tatler, no. 222, Sept. 9, 1710. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Trill, a quavering in musick,' and rightly notes that it is an Ital. word, like many other musical terms.—Ital. trillare, to trill, shake, quaver; trillo, sb., a trill, shake. A word of imitative origin, meaning 'to say tril.' Cf. Span. trinar, to trill. Hence are derived E. trill, Du. trillen, G. trillern, &c. Der. trill, sb.

TRILL (2), to turn round and round. (Scand.) Perhaps obsolete, but once common. 'As fortune trills the ball;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 67. 'To tril, circumertere;' Levinus. 'I trill a whirlygig rounde aboute, Je pirouette;' Palsgrave. M. E. trillen, Chaucer, C. T. 10630.—Swed. trilla, to roll, whence trilla, a roller; Dan. trille, to roll, trundle, whence trille, a disc, trillebør, a wheel-barrow. The same word as Icel. pyrla, to whirl, and E. thrill, thirl, or drill. The orig. initial letter was th, answering to Icel. þ, Swed. and Dan. t, G. d, Du. d or t; hence we also find G. drillen, to turn, bore, also to drill soldiers, and Du. drillen or trillen, 'to wheele, to whirle, or to reele about, to exercise a company of soldiers, to pierce or boare in turning about,' Hexham. See Thrill. Doublets, thrill, drill.

TRILL (3), to trickle, to roll. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78; K. Lear, iv. 3. 13. This is merely a particular use of Trill (2). ¶ I doubt whether trilled occurs in Chaucer in this sense; it appears in Tyrwhitt's edition, C. T. 13603, but the 6 MSS. have trikled, striked, stryked, striked, and the Harl. MS. has striken; see further under Trickle.

TRILLION, a million raised to the third power. (F.,—L.) A coined word, said in Todd's Johnson to have been invented by Locke. Composed of tri-, put for tri-, three; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. See Tri- and Million; and see Billion.

TRIM, to put in due order, to adjust, to deck, dress, arrange. (E.) 'I trymme, as a man doth his heare [hair];' Palsgrave. M. E. trumen, trimen, a rare word. 'Ich iseo godd seolf mid his eadi engles bitrumen þe abuten'—I see God Himself with His blessed angels be-trim [surround] thee about; St. Marharete, p. 23, l. 3. 'Helle hundes habbeð bitrument me'—hounds of hell have surrounded me; id. p. 6, l. 4 from bottom.—A. S. trymian, trymman, to make firm, strengthen (a common word), Grein, ii. 554; also, to set in order, array, prepare, Blickling Homilies, p. 91, l. 31; p. 201, l. 35. The orig. sense is preserved in our phrase 'to trim a boat,' i.e. to make it steady, hence to put it in perfect order. Formed, by the regular vowel-change from u to y, from A. S. trum, adj., firm, strong, Grein, ii. 553. + Low G. trim; only in the derivative betrimmed, betrimmd, decked, trimmed, adorned; trimmke, an affected or over-dressed person. Root uncertain. Der. trim, sb., Cor. i. 9. 62; trim, adj. (with the vowel i of the derived verb), Much Ado, iv. 1. 323; trim-ly, trim-ness; trimm-er, trimm-ing; also be-trim, verb, Temp. iv. 65.

TRIMETER, a division of a verse consisting of three measures. (L.,—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry.—Lat. trimetrus, Horace, Art of Poetry, ll. 252, 259.—Gk. τρίμετρος, consisting of three measures.—Gk. τρι-, three; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Tri- and Metro.

TRINE, a certain aspect of the planets. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 659. 'Trine, belonging to the number three; as, a trine aspect, which is when 2 planets are distant from each other [by] a third part of the circle, i.e. 120 degrees. It is noted thus Δ, and accounted by astrologers an aspect of amity and friendship;' Phillips.—Lat. trinus, more common in pl. trini, three by three.—Lat. tri-, three; with suffix -nus (Aryan -na). See Tri- and Three. Der. trin-al, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39. Also trin-i-ty, q. v.

TRINITY, the union of Three in One Godhead. (F.,—L.) M. E. trinite, Chaucer, C. T. 10904; Ancræn Riwle, p. 26, l. 10.—O. F. trinite, later trinité.—Lat. trinitatem, acc. of trinitas, a triad.—Lat. trinus, threefold; see Trine. Der. Trinity-Sunday; Trinitarian, Trinitarianism.

TRINKET (1), a small ornament. (F.,—L.?) No English dictionary gives a sufficient account of this word; nor has its history been traced. We find M. E. 'trenket, sowtarys knyfe,' i.e. a shoemaker's knife, Prompt. Parv. 'Trenket, an instrument for a cordwayner, batten a terner [soulies];' Palsgrave. Way, in his note to Prompt. Parv., says: 'In a Nominale by Nich. de Minshull, Harl. MS. 1002, under pertinentia allutarii, occur:—Auserium, a schavyng-knyfe; Galla, idem est, trynket; also, under pertinentia rustico, occur:—Sarcium, a wede-hoke; Sarpa, idem est, trynket.' This shows that a trynket was a general name for a sort of knife, whether for shoemaking or wedding. Palsgrave gives the spelling trynket as well as trenket. Now I think we may fairly assume that trinket was also used to denote a toy-knife, such as could be worn about the person, and that for three reasons. These are: (1) the sense of something worn about the person still clings to trinket at this day; (2) trinket, as used by old authors, means sometimes a tool or implement, perhaps a knife; and (3) toy-knives were very commonly given as presents to ladies, and were doubtless of an ornamental character, and worn on the person. As early as Chaucer's time, the friar had his tippet 'farsed [stuffed] ful of knius And pinnes, for to giuen faire wiuies.' A few examples of the use of the word may be added. 'The poorer sort of common souldiers have every man his leather bag or sachell well sowed together, wherein he packs up all his trinkets;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 62. Todd's Johnson cites from Tusser: 'What husbandie husbands, except they be foolcs, But handsom have storehouse for trinkets and tooles?' And from Arbuthnot; 'She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses.' More extracts would probably make this matter clearer. β. The etymology of trinket, formerly trenket, in the sense of 'knife,' is certainly from some O. F. form closely allied to O. F. trencher, since Cot. gives trencher de cordoüannier in the precise sense of 'a shoemaker cutting-knyfe;' cf. Span. trinchete, a shoemaker's paring-knife, tranchete, a broad curved knife, used for pruning, a shoemaker's heel-knife. Thus the word is to be connected with F. trancher, formerly trencher, to cut, and Span. trincar, to cut. Still, the occurrence of k for ck is remarkable, and points back to an O. F. form *trenquer, to cut, not recorded. See further under Trench.

γ. It is not improbable that the extension of the use of the word may have been due to some confusion with O. F. triqueniques, 'trash, trifles, niftes, paltry stuff, things of no value,' Cot. This would have sounded in English like tricknicks, and, if confused with the pl. of trinket, may account for the fact that we often find trinkets used in the plural number in later instances. δ. Perhaps I ought also to note O. Ital. trincare, 'to trim or smug up,' whence trincato, 'fine, neat, trim,' Florio. This seems allied to trinci, 'fringings, lacings, cuts, or snips in garments,' id.; and to trinciare, to cut, allied to Span. trincar, as above.

TRINKET (2), TRINQUET, the highest sail of a ship. (F., = Span., = Du. ?) Spelt trinkette in Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Trinquet, is properly the top or top-gallant on any mast, the highest sail of a ship;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. trinquet, 'the top or top-gallant;' &c. (as in Blount); Cot. Prob. borrowed from Span. trinquete, a trinket. [Cf. also Ital. trinchetta, trinchetto, a trinket.] Doubtless connected with Span. trincare, to keep close to the wind; cf. trincar los cabos, to fasten the rope-ends. — Span. trinea, a cord, rope for lashing or making fast. Minsheu mentions the phr. poner la vela a la trinea, 'to put a ship that the edges of the sails may be to the wind.'

β. The etymology of trinea is difficult; Diez suggests a connection with Span. trinea, a union of three things, a trinity. This word is not in Minsheu, and I can see no connection, except trinea be supposed to be a three-stranded rope. In that case, the word is of Lat. origin; see Trine. γ. But I offer the guess that the sea-term was borrowed from O. Du. stricken, 'to tie running knots;' Hexham. The loss of initial s was easy. This verb stricken is from O. Du. strick, mod. Du. strik, a knot, snare, allied to E. Stroke. The Du. strik might account for the sb. trinea, and the verb stricken for trincare.

TRINOMIAL, in mathematics, an expression consisting of three terms. (L.) Not a good form; it should rather have been trinomial. Coined, in imitation of binomial, from tri-, three; and nomi-, put for nomin-, crude form of nomen, a name. See Tri- and Nominal; and Binomial.

TRIO, in music, a piece for three performers. (Ital., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. — Ital. trio, a trio, three parts together. — Lat. tri-a, three, neut. of tres, three; see Tri- and Three.

TRIP, to move with short, light steps, to stumble, err; also, to cause to stumble. (E.) M. E. trippen; 'This hors anon gan for to trippe and daunce;' Chaucer, C. T. 10626. The word is prob. English, being a lighter form of the base TRAP, to tread, which appears in Tramp, q. v. + Du. trippen or trappen, 'to tread under foot;' trippelen, 'to trip or to daunce;' Hexham. Cf. Low G. trippeln, to trip. + Swed. trippa, to trip; Dan. trippe, to trip, trip, a short step. Cf. Icel. trippi, a young colt (from its tripping gait); also O. F. triper, 'to tread or stamp on,' Cot., a word of Teut. origin. Der. trip, sb., Tw. Nt. v. 170; tripp-ing-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 2.

TRIPARTITE, divided into three parts, having three corresponding parts, existing in three copies. (L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii. 1. 80. 'Indentures tripartite indented;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 57, in a will dated 1480. — Lat. tri-, three; and parti-us, pp. of partior, to part, divide, from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Tri- and Part.

TRIBE, the stomach of ruminating animals, prepared for food. (C. ?) M. E. tribe, Prompt. Parv.; King Alisaunder, l. 1578. Perhaps Celtic, in common with several homely words. — Irish triopas, s. pl., tripes, entrails; W. tripa, the intestines; Bret. stripen, tripe, more commonly used in the pl. stripennow, stripou, the intestines. We find also F. tribe, Span. and Port. tripa, Ital. trippa, tripe; words which may easily have been of Celtic origin. β. As the word is certainly not Teutonic, the Celtic origin is the more probable.

TRIPHTHONG, three letters sounded as one. (Gk.) Little used; coined in imitation of diphthong, with prefix tri- (Gk. tri-), three, instead of di- (Gk. di-), double. See Tri- and Diphthong. Der. triphthong-al.

TRIPLE, threefold, three times repeated. (F., = L.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 391. [Rich. refers us to Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, l. 4266, but the reading there is treble, a much older form.] — F. triple, 'triple, threefold;' Cot. — Lat. tripulus, triple. — Lat. tri-, three; and -plus, related to Lat. plenus, full, from the ✓PAR, to fill. See Tri- and Double. Der. triply; triply-et, formed in imitation of doublet. Doublet, treble.

TRIPPLICATE, threefold. (L.) In mathematics, a triplicate ratio is not the ratio of 3 to 1, but the ratio of two cubical numbers, just as the duplicate ratio is a ratio of squares. In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. triplicatus, pp. of triplicare, to treble. — Lat. tri-, three; and -plicare, to fold, weave, from ✓PLAK, to weave. See Tri- and Ply. Der. triplication, from Lat. acc. triplicationem. Also triplex, from Lat. triplex, threefold, Tw. Nt. v. 41; triplic-i-ty, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39.

TRIPOD, anything supported on three feet, as a stool. (L., = Gk.; or Gk.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. vii. l. 127; where it was taken directly from Gk. Also in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, 1102, where we find 'tripode or three-footed table' (R.) — Lat. tripod, stem of tripus. — Gk. τρίπους (stem τρίποδ-), three-footed; or, as sb., a tripod, a three-footed brass kettle, a three-legged table. — Gk. τρι-, three; and πόδ (stem ποδ-), a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Tri- and Foot. Der. tripos (from nom. tripus, Gk. τρίπους), an honour examination at Cambridge, so called at present because the successful candidates are arranged in three classes; but we must not forget that a tripos sometimes meant an oracle (see Johnson), and that there was formerly a certain scholar who went by the name of tripos, being otherwise called prevaricator at Cambridge or terra filius at Oxford; he was a master of arts chosen at a commencement to make an ingenious satirical speech reflecting on the misdemeanours of members of the university, a practice which no doubt gave rise to the so-called tripos-verses, i. e. facetious Latin verses printed on the back of the tripos-lists. See Phillips, ed. 1706. Doublet, trivet. [†]

TRIREME, a galley with three ranks of oars. (L.) 'Thucydides writeth that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first trireme with three rows of oars to a side;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 56. — Lat. triremis, a trireme. — Lat. triremis, having three banks of oars. — Lat. tri-, three; and remus, an oar. β. The Lat. triremis corresponds to Gk. τρίρης, a trireme; Thucydides, i. 13. γ. The Lat. rēmus = O. Lat. resmos, put for an older *eretmos = Gk. ῥέμῆς, a rudder, orig. a paddle. The Gk. ῥέμῆς, like -ηρ-ης in τρίρης, is derived from ✓AR, to row. See Row (1).

TRISE, the same as Trice (2); q. v.

TRISECT, to divide into three equal parts. (L.) Coined (in imitation of bi-sect) from Lat. tri-, three; and sect-um, supine of secare, to cut. See Tri- and Section; also Bisect. Der. trisection.

TRIST, the same as Tryst, q. v.

TRISYLLABLE, a word of three syllables. (F., = L., = Gk.) From Tri- and Syllable; see Dissyllable. Cotgrave gives F. trisyllable, adj., of three syllables. Der. trisyllab-ic, trisyllab-ical, -ly.

TRITE, worn out by use, hackneyed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. tritius, worn, pp. of terere, to rub, to wear. + Russ. terete, to rub. + Lithuan. triti, trinti, to rub. — ✓TAR, to rub; an European root which is prob. identical with Skt. root TAR, to cross over, &c.; Fick, i. 595. Der. trite-ly, -ness. Also trit-ur-ate, tritulation, q. v. And see try. From the same root, con-trile, de-tri-ment, dia-tri-be, tar-dy, trou-el.

TRITON, a marine demi-god. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 80. — Lat. Triton. — Gk. Τρίτων, a Triton. Prob. connected with Gk. τρίτος, third, and τρεῖς, three. Cf. Skt. trita, the name of a deity; perhaps connected with tritaya, tritva, a triad. The exact connection between τρίτων and τρίτος is hardly known.

TRITURATE, to rub or grind to powder. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, has triturable and trituration. Perhaps the sb. trituration was first introduced from the F. sb. trituration, 'a crumming, crumbling,' Cot. — Lat. triturator, pp. of triturare, to thrash, hence to grind. — Lat. tritura, a rubbing, chafing; orig. fem. of fut. part. of terere, to rub; see TRITE. Der. trituration, triturable.

TRIUMPH, joy for success, rejoicing for victory. (F., — L.) M. E. triumph, Chaucer, C. T. 14369. — O. F. triumphe, later trionphe, 'a triumph;' Cot. — Lat. triumphum, acc. of triumphus, a triumph, or public rejoicing for a victory. + Gk. θρίαμβος, a hymn to Bacchus, sung in festal processions to his honour; also used as a name for Bacchus. Root unknown. Der. triumph, verb, L. L. L. iv. 3. 35; triumph-er, Titus Andron. i. 170; triumph-ant, Rich. III. iii. 2. 84, from the stem of the pres. part. of Lat. triumphare, to triumph; triumph-ant-ly; also triumph-al, from Lat. triumphalis, belonging to a triumph. Doublet, trump (2).

TRIUMVIR, one of three men in the same office or government. (L.) Shak. has triumvirate, Antony, iii. 6. 28; and even triumvir, L. L. L. iv. 3. 53. — Lat. triumvir, one of three men associated in an office. A curious form, evolved from the pl. triumviri, three men, which again was evolved from the gen. pl. triumvirorum, so that trium is the gen. pl. of tres, three; whilst vir, a man, is a nom. sing. See THREE and VRILE. Der. triumvir-ate, from Lat. triumviratus, the office of a triumvir.

TRIUNE, the being Three in One. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Lat. tri, three; and unus, one, cognate with E. one. See Tri- and One.

TRIVET, TREVET, a three-legged support. (F., — L.) 'A triuette, tripes;' Levins. In the Bury Wells, ed. Tyms, p. 82, we find trevid under the date 1493, and the pl. treuettis at p. 100, under the date 1504. — F. tripied, also trepiéd, 'a trevet;' Cot. — Lat. tripedem, acc. of tripēs, having three feet. — Lat. tri, three; and pēs, a foot, cognate with E. foot. Doublet, tripod, which is a Greek form. [†]

TRIVIAL, common, slight, of small worth. (F., — L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 61. It also meant trite or well known; see Trench, Select Glossary. — F. trivial, 'trivial, common;' Cot. — Lat. trivialis, that which belongs to the cross-roads, that which may be picked up anywhere, ordinary, common-place. — Lat. trivium, a place where three roads meet. — Lat. tri, three; and via, a way; see Tri- and Voyage. Der. trivial-ly, -ness.

TROCHEE, a metrical foot of two syllables, a long one followed by a short one. (L., — Gk.) Spelt trocheus in Puttenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3; now shortened to trochee. — Lat. trocheus. — Gk. τροχαῖος, running; also a trochee, from its tripping measure. — Gk. τρόχος, a running. — Gk. τρέχειν, to run. The form of the root is TARGH. Der. trocha-ic, from Gk. τροχαῖκός. And see truck (2).

TROGLODYTE, a dweller in a cave. (F., — Gk.) 'These savages . . . flew away at last into their caves, for they were troglodytes;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. x; ed. Arber, p. 51. — F. trogodyte, used by Montesquieu, and doubtless somewhat older than his time. — Gk. τρογλοδύτης, one who creeps into holes, a cave-dweller; Herod. iv. 183. — Gk. τρογλο- put for τρώγλη, a hole, a cave; and δύνειν, to enter, creep into; with suffix -της, of the agent. β. τρώγλη is from Gk. τρώγειν, to gnaw, to bite, hence to gnaw a hole; the root of τρώγειν is TARG, to bite, extension of ✓TAR, to bore; see TRITE. The Gk. δύνειν is from ✓DU, to go, advance; cf. Skt. du, to go, move.

TROLL, to roll, to sing a catch, to fish for pike with a rod of which the line runs on a reel. (F., — Teut.) M. E. trollen, to roll; Prompt. Parv. To troll the bowl, to send it round, circulate it; see Troul in Nares. To troll a catch is, probably, to sing it irregularly (see below); to troll, in fishing, is prob. rather to draw the line hither and thither than to use a reel; see Trawl. — O. F. troller, which Cot. explains by 'hounds to trouble, range, or hunt out of order;' to which he subjoins the sb. trollerie, 'a trowling or disordered ranging, a hunting out of order;' this shews it was a term of the chase. Roquefort gives O. F. trouler, troller, to run hither and thither; cf. mod. F. trôler, to lead, drag about, also to stroll about, to ramble. — G. trollen, to roll, to troll; cognate with O. Du. drollen, 'to trouble,' Hexham; Low G. drulen, to roll, troll, Bremen Wörterbuch. β. Cf. also W. trol, a cylinder, roll, trollo, to roll, to trundle, trollyn, a roller. Also perhaps W. troelli, to whirl, troell, a whirl, wheel, reel, pulley, windlass, screw; trowal, turning, revolving, tro, a turn. The W. words may be Celtic, and not borrowed from E., if the Aryan form of the root be TAR. The Teut. words may be from the Teut. base THWAR, to turn, to whirl; the Teut. th becoming d in Dutch, as usual. Cf. Thrill, Trill (2). Der. troll-er; also troll-op, a stroller, slattern, loitering person, where the suffix is obscure; can it be for troll-about? Phillips gives troll about, 'to ramble up and down in a careless or sluttish dress;' also trollop, 'an idle, nasty slut.' And see trull.

TROMBONE, a deep-toned bass instrument of music. (Ital., — L.?) Not in Todd's Johnson. — Ital. trombone, a trombone, trumpet, sackbut; augmentative form of tromba, a trumpet; see Trump (1).

TRON, a weighing-machine. (F., — L.) See Riley, tr. of Liber Albus, pp. 124, 199, 548; hence tronage, pp. 199, 215. The tron was gen. used for weighing wool. The Tron Church in Edinburgh is so called from being situate near the site of the old weighing-machine. We read of 'Tronage and Poundage' in Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 100; where we also find: 'To tronage perteneith thoois thingis that shal be weyen by the trone of the kynge.' — O. F. trone, a weighing-machine; sufficiently authorised by being Latinised as Low Lat. trona (in Ducange). — Lat. trutina, a pair of scales. Cf. Gk. τρύτῳν, a tongue of a balance, a pair of scales. Der. tron-age; with F. suffix -age = Lat. -aticum. [†]

TROOP, a company, especially of soldiers, a crew. (F., — L.?) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 220. — F. troupe, 'a troop, crew;' Cot. O. F. trope, in use in the 13th cent., Littré; cf. Span. tropa, O. Ital. troppa, 'a troupe,' Florio, mod. Ital. truppa. — Low Lat. tropus, perhaps *truppus, a troop. β. Origin doubtful, but most likely due to Lat. turba, a crowd of men; whence (as Diez suggests) a Low Lat. form *turpa or *trupa might have been formed, with a subsequent change of gender to *truppus. See Trouble. Der. troop, verb, Romeo, i. 5. 50; hence troop-er, moss-troop-er.

TROPE, a figure of speech. (L., — Gk.) In Levins; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1340 (R.) = Lat. tropus, a figure of speech, a trope. — Gk. τρόπος, a turning, a turn, a turn or figure of speech. — Gk. τρέπειν, to turn. — ✓TARK, to turn; cf. Lat. torquere, to twist. See Torture and Throw. Der. trop-ic, q. v. Also trop-ic-al, i. e. figurative; tropo-log-ic-al, expressed in tropes, Tyndall, Works, p. 166, col. 1 (see Logic). Also helio-trope. And see trophy.

TROPHY, a memorial of the defeat of an enemy, something taken from an enemy. (F., — L., — Gk.) Formerly spelt trophée, as in Cotgrave, and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56. — F. trophée, 'a trophée, a sign or mark of victory;' Cot. — Lat. tropæum, a sign of victory. — Gk. τρόπαιον, τροπαῖον, a trophy, a monument of an enemy's defeat, consisting of shields, &c., displayed on a frame. Neut. of τροπαῖος, adj., belonging to a defeat. — Gk. τροπή, a return, a putting to flight of an enemy by causing them to turn. — Gk. τρέπειν, to turn; see Trope. Der. troph-ic.

TROPIC, one of the two small circles on the celestial sphere, where the sun appears to turn, after reaching its greatest declination north or south; also one of two corresponding circles on the terrestrial sphere. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. tropik, Chaucer, On the Astro-labe, pt. i. c. 17, l. 8. — F. tropique, 'a tropick;' Cot. — Lat. tropicum, acc. of tropicus, tropical. — Gk. τροπικός, belonging to a turn; δ τροπικός κύκλος, the tropic circle. — Gk. τρόπος, a turn; see Trope. Der. tropic, adj.; tropic-al, tropic-al-ly.

TROT, to move or walk fast, run as a horse when not going at full pace. (F., — L.) M. E. trotten, Chaucer, C. T. 9412; P. Plowman, B. ii. 164. — F. trotter, 'to trot;' Cot. O. F. trotier, 13th cent.; Littré. We also find O. F. trotier, a trotter, messenger, Low Lat. trotarius; and this answers so nearly to Lat. tolutarius, going at a trot, that it is usual to suppose that O. F. trotier = Low Lat. *tolutare, to trot, by the common change of l into r, and loss of o. β. Tolutarius is derived from tolutim, adv., at a trot, used of horses. The lit. sense is 'by a lifting up of the feet.' — Lat. tollere, to lift. — ✓TAL, to lift; see Tolerate. γ. This etymology is accepted by Diez, Scheler, and Littré; and it is most likely that words like W. trotio, O. Du. tratten (Hexham), &c., are merely borrowed from E. or F. The H. G. treten, to tread, is cognate with E. tread, from Teut. base TRAD, and is quite a different word. Der. trot, sb., trot-er.

TROTH, truth, fidelity. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 36. Merely a variant of Truth, q. v. Der. troth-ed, Much Ado, iii. 1. 38; troth-plight, a plighting of troth, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 278; troth-plight = troth-plighted, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 151. Also de-troth, q. v. Doublet, truth.

TROUBADOUR, a Provençal poet. (Prov., — L., — Gk.) See Warton. Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. iii. And see Littré, Roquefort, and Raynouard. Troubadour does not seem to be the right Prov. word, but a F. modification of it. The Prov. word is trobador (Littré), or (very commonly) trobair; see Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. The form trobair furnishes the clue to this difficult word; it answers to a Low Lat. *troparius, regularly formed from Lat. tropus, which was used by Venantius Fortunatus (about A. D. 600) with the sense of 'a kind of singing, a song,' White; and see Ducange. This is only a peculiar use of Lat. tropus, which usually means a trope; see Trope. β. Diez connects the word with Lat. turbare, but the sense of 'disturb' is far removed. We should rather suppose a Low Lat. *tropare, which would have the exact sense 'to make or write, or sing a song' which is so conspicuous in O. F. trover (F. trouver), Prov. trobar, Port. and Span. trovar, Ital. trovare; for, though the mod. F. trouver means 'to find' in a general sense, this is merely generalised from the particular sense of 'to find out' or 'devise' poetry; cf. Port. trova, a rime, trovar, to make rimes, trouvador, a rimer; Span. trova, verse, trovar, to versify, also to find; trouvador, a versifier, finder; trovista, a poet; Ital. trovare, 'to finde, to devise, to invent, to imagine, get, obtain, procure, seek out,' Florio. γ. Corresponding to a supposed Low Lat. *tropare we should have a sb. *tropator, of which the acc. case *tropatorem would at once give Ital. trovatore, Span. and Port. trovador, Port. trobador; or we might form a sb. *troparius, answering to Prov. trobair, F. trouvère. It may be added that, even in Gk., τρόπος was used with reference to music, to signify a particular mode, such as τρόπος Ἀλδίου, the Lydian mode, &c.

δ. As regards the letter-changes, a Lat. p rightly gives Ital. v and Prov. b, as in Ital. arrivare = Prov. arribar = Lat. adripere (see Arrive), whereas we should expect a Lat. b (as in turbare) to become v in Provençal, as in Ital. provare = Prov. provar (or proar) = Lat. probare.

ε. The above derivation of troubadour, if correct, gives us also the derivation of the difficult F. trouver, to find; and, as a consequence, accounts for E. trover and con-trive.

TROUBLE, to agitate, disturb, confuse, vex. (F., - L.) M. E. troublen, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 19; trublen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 268, l. 20. - O. F. trubler, troubler, later troubler, 'to trouble, disturb;' Cot. Formed as if from a Low Lat. *turbulare, a verb made from Lat. turbula, a disorderly group, a little crowd of people (White), dimin. of turba, a crowd. [From the Lat. turba we have also the verb turbare, to disturb, with much the same sense as F. troubler.] β. The Lat. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people, is cognate with Gk. τύπη, also written σύπη, disorder, throng, bustle; whence τυπάειν, to disturb. Allied to Skt. tvar, tur, to hasten, be swift. Der. trouble, sb., spelt torble, turble in Prompt. Parv., from O. F. trouble, truble, later trouble, 'trouble,' Cot.; trouble-some, Mer. Wives, i. 1. 325; trouble-ous, 2 Hen. VI, i. 2. 22. Also turb-id, turb-ul-ent, q. v. Also (from Lat. turbare) dis-turb, per-turb. Perhaps troop.

TROUGH, a long hollow vessel for water. (E.) M. E. troghe, trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3627. - A. S. troh or trog (gen. trogas), a trough or hollow vessel; used by Ælfred in the sense of a little boat, tr. of Orosius, b. ii. c. 5. § 7, last line. 'Littoraria, troh-scip,' i. e. a little boat, Wright's Voc. i. 48, l. 2; 'Canthero, trog,' id. ii. 14. + Du. trog. + Icel. trog. + Dan. trug. + Swed. tråg. + Gk. or trunk. M. H. G. truo. We find also G. truhe, O. H. G. truhá, a chest or trunk. Root uncertain. Perhaps allied to tray.

TROUNCE, to beat, castigate. (F., - L.) 'But the Lord trounsed Sisara and all his charettes,' Bible, 1551, Judges, iv. 15. - O. F. tronche, 'a great piece of timber,' Cot., allied to F. tronc, a trunk; cf. also F. tronson, mod. F. tronçon, 'a trunk or little trunk, a thick slice,' id. The meaning plainly is, to beat with a large stick or cudgel. See Truncheon and Trunk. Cf. also F. troncir, 'to cut or break off in two,' Cot.; Span. tronzar, to shatter.

TROUSERS, TROUSERS, a garment worn by males on the lower limbs. (F., - L.) The form trousers does not seem to be old; Richardson quotes 'by laced stockings and trousers' from Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 18; Wiseman wrote in 1676. In older books the word appears without the latter r, in the forms troozes, trouses, &c., and even trooze; cf. Lowland Sc. treus. We find, however, the curious and corrupt form strossers in Shak. Hen. V, iii. 7. 57, where most mod. editions have trousers, though the same form occurs also in Dekker and Middleton; see Dyce's Glossary to Shakespeare.

β. The word was particularly used of the nether garments of the Irish; Nares cites, from Ware's Antiquities of Ireland, 'their little coats, and strait breeches called trouses.' 'Their breeches, like the Irish trooze, have hose and stockings sewed together,' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 297 (Todd); or p. 313, ed. 1665. Herbert also has the spelling troozes, p. 325, ed. 1665. 'The poor trooz'd Irish there,' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 22. Cf. also: 'And leaving me to stalk here in my trouses,' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1 (Pennyboy junior). 'Four wild Irish in trouses;' Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 2; stage direction. - F. trousses, s. pl., trunk-hose, breeches (Hamilton; see also Littré). Trousses is the pl. of trousse, a bundle, formerly also a case, such as 'a quiver for arrows,' Cot. Hence trousses became a jocular term, used esp. of the breeches of a page (Littré), and was so applied by the English to the Irish garments. - F. troussier, 'to truss, pack, tuck, bind or girt in, pluck or twitch up;' Cot. These senses help to explain the sb. See further under Truss.

¶ Wedgwood suggests that the word is Celtic; we do indeed find Gael. triubhas, Irish trudhais, trius, truisan, trousers, but these seem to be nothing but the E. trouses, which was a difficult word for Gael or Irishman to spell. So also we find Gael. trus, Irish trusaim, I truss up, clearly borrowed from E. truss; and it is remarkable that Spenser, in his View of the State of Ireland, after describing various Irish garments, adds: 'all these that I have rehearsed unto be not Irish garments, but English; for the quilted leather Jacke is old English, &c.;' Globe edition, p. 639, col. 1. I conclude that the word is French, and merely imported into Ireland and Scotland. The word has no Celtic root. Der. trousseau, q. v.

TROUSSEAU, a package; esp. the lighter articles of a bride's outfit. (F., - L.) Modern; yet it is not a little remarkable that trousseau, i. e. packages, occurs in the Ancrén Riwle, p. 168, l. 1. - F. trousseau, 'a little trusse or bundle;' Cot. = O. F. troussel, dimin. of F. trousse, a truss, bundle; see Truss.

TROUT, a fresh-water fish. (L., - Gk.) M. E. troute, spelt trout in the Prompt. Parv. - A. S. truht: 'Tructa, truht,' Wright's Voc. i. 55. - Lat. trutta (whence also F. truite); also tructus. - Gk. τρώτης, a gnawer, lover of dainties; also a sea-fish with sharp teeth. - Gk. τρώειν, to gnaw; with suffix -της of the agent. As the sense is 'gnawer' or 'nibbler,' it was easily applied to fish of various kinds. - ✓ TARG, to gnaw, extension of ✓ TAR, to bore, for which see Trite. From the same root are Gk. τράγος, a goat, and E. trag-e-dy, trag-lo-dyle.

β. Fick (i. 597) cites Skt. troti, a kind of fish, from trut, to tear asunder, which he explains as from a base TRUK, to burst, extension of TRU, a variant of ✓ TAR, as above. It comes to the same sense, and brings us back to the same root; he appears to think that Lat. tructus was not borrowed from Gk.

TROVER, the gaining possession of goods, by finding or otherwise. (F., - L., - Gk.) 'Trover is the name of an action, which a man hath against one who, having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them upon demand;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3, l. 650. An old law-term, in early use, as shewn by the spelling. - O. F. trover, later trouver, to find. It appears to answer to a Low Lat. *tropare, orig. used in the sense to find out poetry, to invent, devise, which was a sense of O. F. trover, and prob. the orig. one. See further under Troubadour. Der. Hence treasure-trove, treasure found, where trove is now barbarously pronounced as a monosyllable, though it stands for O. F. trove (troué), pp. of trover, to find; see Blackstone, Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

TROW, to believe, think, suppose to be true. (E.) In Luke, xvii. 9 (A. V.) M. E. trouwen, Chaucer, C. T. 693. - A. S. trédwian, trýdian, occurring as ge-trédwian, ge-trédwian, ge-trýdian in Grein, i. 465, 466; the prefixed ge- making no difference; the sense is 'to have trust in.' Also trédwian, Grein, ii. 552. A weak verb, from A. S. trédwa, trédwa, trust, Mark, xi. 52. - A. S. tréowe, true; see True. + Du. trouwen, only in the sense 'to marry;' from trouw, sb., trust, trouw, adj., true. + Icel. trúa, to trow; from trúir, true. + Dan. tro, to believe; from tro, sb., truth, tro, adj., true. + Swed. tro, to trow, believe. + G. trauen, to trust, marry; from treue, fidelity, treu, true.

TROWEL, a tool used in spreading mortar and in gardening. (F., - L.) M. E. truel; 'a truel of [a] masoun;' Wyclif, Amos, vii. 7, earlier version; the later version has trulle. 'Hec trolia, a trowylle;' Wright's Voc. i. 235, col. 1. Spelt trouell in Palsgrave. - F. truelle, a trowel, spelt truelle in the 13th cent. (Littré). - Low Lat. truella, a trowel, in use A. D. 1163 (Ducange); variant of Lat. trulla, a small ladle, scoop, fire-pan, trowel. Both are dimin. forms of Lat. trua, a stirring-spoon, skimmer, ladle.

β. Allied to Gk. τροπήν, a stirring-spoon, ladle; cf. τροπέας, a borer, τροπος, a borer. - ✓ TAR, to turn round and round, also to bore; see Trite.

TROUSERS, the same as Trousers, q. v.

TROY-WEIGHT, the weight used by goldsmiths. (F.; and E.) Spelt troie-weight in Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'The received opinion is that it took its name from a weight used at the fair of Troyes; this is likely enough; we have the pound of Cologne, of Toulouse, and perhaps also of Troyes. That there was a very old English pound of 12 oz. is a well-determined fact, and also that this pound existed long before the name Troy was given to it, [is] another. . . The troy-pound was mentioned as a known weight in 2 Hen. V. cap. 4 (1414), and 2 Hen. VI. cap. 13 (1423); &c.; Eng. Cyclopaedia. And see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. This explanation is verified by the expression 'a Paris pece of syluer weyng bee the weight off troye viij. vuncis;' Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 108; at p. 191, it appears simply as 'troy weyght.' Troyes is a town in France, to the S.E. of Paris. Colgrave, s. v. livre, mentions the pounds of Spain, Florence, Lyons, and Milan; and explains la livre des apothecaries as belonging to 'Troy weight.' [†]

TRUANT, an idler, a boy who absents himself from school without leave. (F., - C.) M. E. truant, Gower, C. A. i. 13, l. 6. The derived sb. trouandise occurs as early as in the Ancrén Riwle, p. 330, l. 2. - F. truand, 'a common beggar, vagabond, a rogue, a lazze rascall;' Cot. He also gives the adj. truand, 'beggarly, rascally, roguish.' We find also Span. truhan, Port. truhão, a buffoon, jester, of Celtic origin. — W. tru, truam, wretched, truam, a wretch; cf. truedd, wretchedness, trueni, pity, trugar, compassionate, truenus, piteous. Corn. tru, interj. alas! woe! troc, wretched. Breton truez, truez, pity, trueza, to pity; truant, a vagabond, beggar, of which Legonidec says that, though this particular form is borrowed from French, it is none the less of Celtic origin, and that, in the dialect of Vannes, a beggar is called truok. Irish trogtha, miserable, unhappy; troighe, grief; tru, lean, piteous; truadh, a poor, miserable creature; truagh, pity, also poor, lean, meagre; &c. Gael. truaghan, a poor, distressed creature; truaghanta, lamentable; from truagh, wretched; cf. truas, pity, trocair, mercy.

β. Thus the F. truand is formed, with excrescent d, from the sb. which appears as W. truam, Gael. truaghan, a wretched creature; which sb. was orig. an adj. extended from the shorter form seen in W. tru, Irish trogtha, Gael. truagh, wretched.

TRUCE, a temporary cessation of hostilities, temporary agreement. (E.) The etymology is much obscured by the curious modern spelling; it is really a plural form, and might be spelt treus, i. e. pledges, pl. of trew, a pledge of truth, derived from the adj. true. This comes out clearly in tracing the M. E. forms. M. E. triwes, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 18; treowes, K. Alisaunder, 2808; trewes, Rich. Coeur de Lion, 3207. 'Truwys, truys, or truce of pees;' Prompt. Parv. All these are pl. forms; the sing. trewe, a truce, pledge of reconciliation, occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 332, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 879. — A. S. treowa, usually written trūwa, used in the sense of compact in Gen. xvii. 19; it also means faith, Mark, xi. 22. — A. S. treowe, true; see True. [†]

TRUCK (1), to barter, exchange. (F., — Span., — Gk. ?) 'All goods, wares, and merchandises so trucked, bought, or otherwise dispended;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 228. Just above, on the same page, we have: 'by way of merchandise, trucke, or any other respect.' M. E. trukken, Prompt. Parv.; and even in Ancien Riwle, p. 408, l. 15. — F. troquer, 'to truck, chop, swab, scorce, barter;' Cot. — Span. (and Port.) trocar, to barter. β. Origin unknown. Diez gives two conjectures: (1) from a supposed Low Lat. *tropicare, to change, due to Lat. tropica, neut. pl., changes, a word of Gk. origin (see Trope); (2) from a supposed Low Lat. *travicare, to traffic, which might have been shortened to *traucare (see Traffic). Langensiepen supposes a transposition of a verb *torquare, due to torquere, to twist, hence to turn; which is not satisfactory. Scheler notes that the F. word was borrowed from Spanish. Florio, ed. 1598, gives Ital. truicare, 'to truck, barter,' also 'to skud away;' which suggests Gk. τροχος, a course; see Truck (2). Der. truck, sb., as above, from F. trog, 'a truck, or trucking;' Cot.; cf. Span. truco, trueque, barter, Port. troco, the change of a piece of gold or silver, troca, barter. Also truck-age.

TRUCK (2), a small wheel, a low-wheeled vehicle for heavy articles. (L., — Gk.) 'In gunnery, trucks are entire round pieces of wood like wheels fixed on the axle-trees of the carriages, to move the ordnance at sea;' Phillips, ed. 1706. He also gives: 'trochus, a wheel, a top for children to play with.' Truck is an English adaptation of Lat. trochus, now disused in its Lat. form. — Gk. τροχος, a runner, a wheel, disc. — Gk. τρέχειν, to run; see Trochee. Der. truck-le, a little wheel, answering to Lat. trochlea; Phillips gives: 'trochlea, a truckle or pulley, . . . which is one of the six mechanical powers or principles;' shewing that the Lat. form trochlea was once in use. Cotgrave explains F. jabot by 'a truckle or pully;' and the word occurs rather early, as shewn under Truckle, verb. Hence truckle-bed, a bed that runs on small wheels and can be pushed under another bed, Romeo, ii. 1. 39; see Nares. And see truckle below.

TRUCKLE, to submit servilely to another. (L., — Gk.) 'Truckle, to submit, to yield or buckle to;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Not an old word; Todd's Johnson has: 'Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a nation that truckles under us?' Cleaveland (pt. iii. c. 1. l. 613). Also: 'For which so many a legal cuckold Has been run down in courts and truckled;' Butler's Hudibras (no reference). To truckle under is a phrase having reference to the old truckle-bed, which could be pushed under another larger one; and the force of the phrase is in the fact that a pupil or scholar slept under his tutor on a truckle-bed. See Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 6, where he intentionally reverses the order of things, saying that a complaisant tutor would submit 'to lie upon the truckle-bed, Whilst his young maister lieth o'er his head.' Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 419, has a note upon this passage in which he proves that such was the usual practice both at Oxford and Cambridge, citing: 'When I was in Cambridge, and slept in a trundle-bed under my tutor,' Return from Parnassus (1606), Act ii. sc. 6 (Amoretto). He quotes from the statutes of Magdalen College, Oxford, 1459, the statute: 'Sint duo lecti principales, et duo lecti rotales, trookyll-beddis vulgariter nuncupati;' cap. xlv. He adds: 'And in the statutes of Trinity College, Oxford, given [in] 1556, troccle-bed, the old spelling, ascertains the etymology from trocclea, a wheel.' In fact, this shews how the words truckle and truck (2) came to be taken immediately from the Latin; they originated at the universities. ¶ No connection with A. S. truican, to fail, which does not in any way explain the word or its use.

TRUCULENT, fierce, barbarous, cruel. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. truculent, 'truculent, cruel;' Cot. — Lat. truculentum, acc. of truculentus, cruel; extended from trux (gen. truc-is), fierce, wild. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'threatening;' cf. G. drohen, M. H. G. drouwen, O. H. G. drauwen, to threaten, A. S. þrægan, þrægean, to threaten. Der. truculent-ly, truculence.

TRUDGE, to travel on foot slowly, march heavily. (Scand. ?) In Shak. it means to run heavily, trot along or away; Merry Wives, i. 3. 91; iii. 3. 13; Romeo, i. 2. 34; i. 3. 34. 'May from the prison trudge;' Turberville, That Lovers must not despair, st. 6. 'And let them trudge hence apace;' Bale, Apologie, fol. 6 (R.) [There is no doubt that the word is associated in the mod. E. mind with the verb to tread, but there is no possible connection; the vowel is different and the spelling with d delusive, since dge answers to an older gge, as in E. drudge from M. E. druggen.] I believe the word to be Scand., and to mean 'to walk in snow-shoes,' hence to trudge along with a heavy step. — Swed. dial. truga, a snow-shoe, also spelt trioga, trudja, trögr (Rietz); Norw. truga, trua, tryge, irjug, a snow-shoe (Aasen), whence the verb trygja, trjuga, to provide with snow-shoes; Icel. þruga, a snow-shoe, a large flat frame worn by men to prevent them from sinking in the snow. This is only given as a probability. ¶ The Swed. trög, Icel. tregr, slow, going with difficulty, does not correspond in the vowel-sound. Florio has Ital. truicare, 'to trudge, to skud, or pack away; see Truck (1).

TRUE, firm, established, certain, honest, faithful. (E.) M. E. trewe (properly dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. i. 88. — A. S. treowe, true, also spelt trywe, Grein, ii. 552. Cf. A. S. treow, trfu, truth, preservation of a compact. + Du. trouw, true, faithful; trouw, fidelity. + Icel. tryggr, trír, true. + Dan. tro, true; tro, truth. + Swed. trogen, true; tro, fidelity. + G. treu, O. H. G. triuwi, true; treue, O. H. G. triuwa, fidelity. + Goth. triggus, true; triggwa, a covenant; cf. trauan, to trow, trust, be persuaded. β. The Teut. type is TREWA, true, Fick, iii. 124; from a base TRAU, to believe. Fick cites O. Prussian druwis, druiwi, belief, druwit, to believe. Root unknown. Der. tru-ly, tru-ism (a coined word); also tru-th, M. E. treuthe, trouthe, Chaucer, C. T. 10877, from A. S. treowuð, Exod. xix. 5, cognate with Icel. tryggð; hence truth-ful, -ly, -ness. Also troth (doublet of truth), trou, tru-st.

TRUFFLE, a round underground edible fungus. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. truffe, another spelling of truffe, 'a most dainty kind of round and russet root;' Cot. Cf. Span. trufa, a truffle; also a cheat (see Trifle). We also find F. tartoufle in the same sense; Ital. tartufo, a truffle; tartufi bianchi, white esculent roots, i. e. potatoes. β. The F. truffe, Span. trufa, is supposed to be derived from Lat. tuber, a tuber, esculent root, a truffle (Juv. v. 116); the neut. pl. tubera would give a nom. fem. tufre (whence trufe by shifting of r) as in other instances; e. g. the Lat. fem. sing. antiphona = Gk. neut. pl. ἀντίφωνα. γ. That this is the right explanation (for which see Diez and Scheler) is rendered almost certain by the Ital. form tartufo (also tartufola), where tar- stands for Lat. terra (of the earth), and tartufola = terra tuber. Florio gives Ital. tartuffo, tartufola, 'a kinde of meate, fruit, or roote of the nature of potatoes called truffles?'; also, a kind of artichock. δ. From the Ital. tartufola is derived (by dissimilation of the double t) the curious G. kartoffel, a potato. See further under Tuber. Doublet, trifle, q. v.

TRULL, a drab, worthless woman. (G.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 6. 95; and in Levins. 'The Governour [of Brill, in Holland] was all bedewed with drinke, His truls and he were all layde downe to sleepe;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A.D. 1572; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 391. We should expect to find it a Du. word, but it is German, imported, perhaps, by way of Holland, though not in Hexham or Sewel's dictionaries. — G. trolle, trulle, a trull. It answers to O. Du. drol, 'a pleasant or a merrie man, or a gester,' Hexham, and to Dan. troll, Swed. and Icel. troll, a merry elf; see Droll. The orig. sense was merely a merry or droll companion.

TRUMP (1), a trumpet, kind of wind instrument. (F., — L. ?) M. E. trumpe, trompe, Chaucer, C. T. 676 (or 674); Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 30, l. 13. — F. trompe, 'a trump, or trumpet;' Cot. Cf. Span., Port., and Prov. trompa, Ital. tromba. β. The Span. and Port. trompa, as well as Ital. tromba, also mean an elephant's trunk, and Ital. tromba even means a pump; the F. trompe had once all three senses; see Cotgrave. All the senses are included in that of 'tube,' which renders the explanation by Diez probable, viz. that these words are derived, by the insertion of r and m, from Lat. tuba, a tube, a trumpet. The insertion of m before b is common; that of r after t is also found, according to Diez. See Tube. γ. But truba may have been a true (vulgar) Latin form, since Russ. truba means both 'tube' and 'trumpet,' and Lith. truba means a horn. Cf. Gk. trūpa, a hole; from ✓TARK, to turn round; see Trope. Der. trump-et, M. E. trompet, Gower, C. A. iii. 217, l. 28, from F. trompette, 'a trumpet,' Cot., dimin. of F. trompe; trump-et-er, from F. trompeteur, 'a trumpeter,' Cot. Also trumpet-fish; trumpet-tongued, Mach. i. 7. 19. And see trumpetry.

TRUMP (2), one of the suit of cards that takes any other suit. (F., -L.) Well-known to be a corruption of triumph; see Latimer's Sermons (Parker Society), i. 1, 8, 13, and Foxe's remarks on them, id. vol. ii. p. xi. Triumph in Shak. Antony, iv. 14. 20, prob. means a trump-card; see Nares. - F. trionphe, 'the card-game called ruffe, or trump; also the ruffe or trump at it;' Cot. See Triumph. Der. trump, verb; trump-card.

TRUMPERY, falsehood, idle talk, trash. (F., -L.) In Temp. iv. 186; and in Levins. The proper sense is deceit, or something deceptive, hence imposture, &c. - F. tromperie, 'a craft, wile, fraud;' Cot. - F. tromper, 'to couzen, deceive,' id. β. Littré says that the orig. sense was to play on the trumpet or trumpet; thence arose the phrase se tromper de quelqu'un, to play with any one, to amuse oneself at his expense; hence the sense to beguile, cheat. This seems to be the right and simple solution; and Littré also quotes, s. v. trompette (1), the phrase me joues tu de la trompette? are you playing the trumpet with me, i. e. are you playing with me, which confirms it. See further under Trump (1).

TRUMPET, the dimin. of Trump (1), q. v.
TRUNCATE, to cut off short. (L.) Phillips has 'truncated pyramid or cone.' - Lat. truncatus, pp. of truncare, to cut off, reduce to a trunk. - Lat. truncus, a trunk, stock; see Trunk. Der. truncat-ion, from F. troncation, 'a truncation, trunking, mutilation, cutting off,' Cot., from Lat. acc. truncationem.

TRUNCHEON, a cudgel, short staff. (F., -L.) M. E. tronchoun, Chaucer, C. T. 2617 (or 2615), where it means the shaft of a broken spear; so also tronchon, King Alisaunder, 3745. - F. tronson, 'a truncheon, or little trunk, a thick slice, luncheon, or piece cut off;' Cot. Also spelt tronchon in O. F., whence our spelling; mod. F. tronçon. Dimin. of F. tronc, 'trunk, stock, stemme;' Cot.; see Trunk. Der. truncheon-er, Hen. VIII. v. 4. 54.

TRUNDLE, a wheel, anything round; to roll. (E.) Now chiefly used only as a verb, to roll round; the sb. occurs in trundle-bed, a bed running on wheels, trundle-tail, a round tail of a dog, and was formerly spelt trindell, trindell, trendel. 'Trendyll, sb., tounouner;' Palsgrave. 'I tryndell, as a boule or a stone dothe, Je roule;' id. M. E. trendil, sb., trendelen, verb. 'Trendyl, troclea;' 'Trendelyn a rownd thyng, Trocleo, volvo,' Prompt. Parv.; from A. S. trendel, a circle; see further under Trend.

β. The change of vowel is curious; we find O. Friesic trund, round, as well as trind, round; the form trundle answers to A. S. tryndel, a circle (Bosworth), whose only reference for it is to the gloss: 'Circumtectum, tryndyled reaf' in Wright's Gloss., i. 40, col. 1, where Wright prints twyndyled. However, I also find 'Ancile, win-tryndel, lytel scyld;' Wright's Voc. i. 35. Here win = battle, and win-tryndel is a little round shield; this establishes A. S. tryndel, rightly corresponding to E. trundle. γ. We find also Swed. and Dan. trind, round; and it is supposed that there may have been a lost A. S. strong verb *trindan, to roll (pt. t. *trand, pp. *trunden), whence the causal verb *trendan, to cause to roll, make to bend (cf. E. trend), would be regularly formed. This seems highly probable, as it would account for trend, trendle (from *trendan); for trindle (from *trindan); and for trundle (from pp. *trunden), as well as for O. Friesic trund. δ. If this be so, the Tent. base is TRAND, to turn, roll; quite independent of E. turn. Der. trundle-bed, see quotation s. v. truckle; trundle bedstead occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 220, l. 11, in a will dated 1649; trundle-tail, a cur, Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 3. 16, according to Richardson, but Darley's ed. has trindle-tail; see, however, K. Lear, iii. 6. 73.

TRUNK, the stem of a tree, proboscis of an elephant, shaft of a column, chest for clothes. (F., -L.) 'A chestre, or trunk of clem syluer;' Fabyan, Chron. cap. 131, fol. lxvii, ed. Ellis, p. 113. - F. tronc, 'the truncke, stock, stemme, or body of a tree; also a trunk, or headlesse body; also the poor man's box in churches' [whence E. trunk = box]; Cot. - Lat. truncum, acc. of truncus, a trunk, stem, trunk of the body, piece cut off. Spelt truncus in Lucretius, i. 354. - Lat. truncus, adj., maimed, mutilated. β. Prob. from torquere, to twist, wrench, wrest (hence twist off, wrench off); cf. torculum, a press, which is certainly from torquere. See Torture. The elephant's trunk owes its name to an error (see Addenda); it occurs in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 7. Der. trunk-ed, having a trunk; trunk-line (of a railway); trunk-hose, trunk-breeches (see Nares), short wide breeches, reaching a little above or sometimes below the knee, and striped, meaning (I suppose) trunked hose, i. e. cut short (cf. trunked = truncated, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 4). Also trunc-ate, q. v., trunch-eon, q. v., trunn-ion, q. v., trounce, q. v. [†]

TRUNNION, one of the stumps or round projections on each side of a cannon, on which it rests in the carriage. (F., -L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. trognon, 'the stock, stump, or trunk of a branchless tree;' Cot. Dimin. of tron, 'a piece of anything, a trunk, stem,' &c.; Cot. This is a shortened form of tronc, due perhaps (as Diez suggests) to misdividing the derived word tronçon as tron-pon; in any case tron and tronc meant the same thing, as Cotgrave tells us. Cf. Ital. troncone, from tronco. See Trunk.

TRUSS, to pack, bind up, fasten as in a package or in bundles. (F., -L.) M. E. trussen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; Ancrén Riwe, p. 322, l. 6. [The sb. trusse, a package, is in the Prompt. Parv., p. 504.] - O. F. trusser, trusser (also torser), later trousser, 'to trusse, pack, bind or girt in;' Cot. The oldest spelling torser answers to a Low Lat. form *torciare (not found), to twist together, formed from tortus, pp. of torquere, to twist. Cf. Low Lat. tortia, a torch, orig. a piece of twisted rope; and see Torch and Torture. Cf. Ital. torciare, to twist, wrap, tie fast; torcia, a torch. Der. truss, sb., M. E. trusse, as above. Also trous-ers, q. v., trouss-eau, q. v.

TRUST, confidence, belief, credit, ground of confidence. (Scand.) M. E. trust, Ancrén Riwe, p. 202, l. 7. Not E., but Scand. - Icel. traust, trust, protection, firmness, confidence; Dan. and Swed. tröst, comfort, consolation. - G. trost, consolation, help, protection. - Goth. trausti, a covenant; Eph. ii. 12. β. The Teut. type is TRAUSTA, Fick, iii. 125; formed with suffix -sta from the Teut. base TRAU, to believe; see True, Trow. Der. trust, verb, M. E. trusten, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 213, l. 7; trust-er; trust-ee, one who is trusted, a coined word, with the suffix -ee = F. é (Lat. -atus), trust-ful, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 434, trust-ful-ly, trust-ful-ness; trust-less, Shak. Lucrece, 2; trust-y, M. E. trusti, Ancrén Riwe, p. 334, l. 21; trust-i-ly, trust-i-ness; trust-worthy (not in Todd's Johnson), trust-worthi-ly, trust-worthi-ness. Also mis-trust, q. v., tryst, q. v.

TRUTH, sb.; see True. Doublet, troth.
TRY, to test, sift, select, examine judiciously, examine experimentally; also, to endeavour. (F., -L.) The old sense is usually to sift, select, pick out. M. E. trien, tryen, P. Plowman, B. i. 205. 'Tryin, tryyn, Eligo, preliigo, discerno;' Prompt. Parv. - F. trier, 'to pick, chuse, cull out from among others;' Cot. Cf. Prov. triar, to choose, tria, choice (Bartsch). - Low Lat. tritare, to triturate; cf. Ital. tritare, 'to bruze, to weare, . . . also to grinde or thresh corne,' Florio. - Lat. tritrus, pp. of terere, to rub, to thresh corn; see Trite. β. Diez explains it thus: Lat. terere granum is to thresh corn; the Prov. triar lo gra de la palha is to separate the corn from the stalk; to which he adds other arguments. It would appear that the meaning passed over from the threshing of corn to the separation of the grain from the straw, and thence to the notion of selecting, culling, purifying. To try gold is to purify it; cf. 'tried gold,' Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 53; 'the fire seven times tried this;' id. ii. 9. 63. Der. try, sb., Timon, v. i. 11. Also try-ing; try-sail, a small sail tried when the wind is very high. Also tri-al, a coined word, spelt triall in Frith's Works, p. 81, col. 1.

TRYST, TRIST, an appointment to meet, an appointed meeting. (Scand.) See Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary. Properly a pledge. M. E. trist, tryst, a variant of trust. 'Lady, in you is all my tryste;' Erl of Tolous, 550, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii. Cf. Icel. treysta, to confirm, rely on; from traust, trust, protection. See Trust. [†]

TUB, a kind of vessel, a small cask. (O. Low G.) M. E. tubbe, Chaucer, C. T. 3621. Not improbably a term introduced by Flemish brewers. - O. Du. tobbe, 'a tubbe;' Hexham; mod. Du. tobbe; Low G. tubbe, a tub, esp. a tub in which orange-trees are planted. Root unknown.

¶ The G. zuber, cognate with Low G. töver, means a two handled-vessel, and is the same as O. H. G. zubar, zubar; this is derived from zwei, later zwei, two, and the suffix -bar (as in fruchtbar, fruit-bearing) from O. H. G. beran, peran, to bear. Thus G. zu-ber = Low G. tö-ver (=two-bearing), i. e. a vessel borne or carried by two handles. But this throws no light on tub, since tubbe and töver are a long way apart. Der. tubby, tub-like.

TUBE, a pipe, long hollow cylinder. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 590. - F. tube, 'a conduit-pipe;' Cot. - Lat. tubum, acc. of tubus, a pipe, tube; akin to tuba, a trumpet. Root uncertain. Der. tub-ing, a length of tube; tubul-ar, from Lat. tubul-us, dimin. of tubus; tubul-at-ed, from Lat. tubulatus, formed like a pipe. And see trump (1).

TUBER, a knob on a root, a rounded root. (L.) 'Tuber, a truffle, a knot in a tree,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1617. - Lat. tuber, a bump, swelling, tumour, knob on plants, a truffle. To be divided as tu-b-er (cf. Lat. plu-u-ia, rain, with plu-it, it rains); allied to tu-m-ere, to swell; so that tuber is lit. 'a swelling.' See Tumid. Der. tuber-cle, from F. tubercle, 'the small rising or swelling of a pimple,'

Cot., from Lat. tuber-cu-lum, double dimin. of tuber; whence tuber-cul-ar, tubercul-ous = F. tuberculeux, 'swelling,' Cot. Also tuber-ous (Phillips), from F. tubereux, 'swelling, bunchy,' Cot., from Lat. tuberosus, full of swellings; also tuber-ose (Phillips), directly from Lat. tuberosus. Also truffle, q. v.; trifle, q. v.; pro-tuber-ant.

TUCK (1), to draw close together, fold or gather in a dress. (O. Low G.) M.E. tukken, 'Tukken vp, or stykkyn vp, truckyn vp or stakkyn vp, Suffarino,' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has tukked, i.e. with the frock drawn up under the girdle, C. T. 623; also y-tukked, 7319. Not an E. word, but borrowed from abroad. — Low G. tukken, tokken, to pull up, draw up, tuck up; also to entice; allied to Low G. tuken, to ruck up, lie in folds, as a badly made garment. The same word as O. Du. tocken, 'to entice,' Hexham. + G. zucken, to draw or twitch up, to shrug.

β. This is a secondary verb, formed (like tug) from the pp. of the strong verb appearing as Goth. tiuhan, A. S. teon, G. ziehen, to draw. It is a mere variant of Tug, q. v.; and a doublet of Tug and Touch. The verb means 'to draw up with a tug or twitch,' to hitch up. Der. tuck, sb., a fold; tuck-er, a piece of cloth tucked in over the bosom. Doublets, tug, touch, q. v. M. E. trukken, in Prompt. Parv. as above, is a Scand. word; Swed. trycka, Dan. trykke, to press, squeeze; cf. G. drücken.

TUCK (2), a rapier. (F., — Ital., — G.) 'Dismount thy tuck;' Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 244. A fencing term, and, like other such terms, an Ital. word, but borrowed through French. Just as E. ticket is from F. estiquet or etiquet, so tuck is a corruption of F. estoc (perhaps sometimes étoc). — F. estoc, 'the stock of a tree; . . . also a rapier, or tuck; also a thrust;' Cot. — Ital. stocko, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword;' Florio. — G. stock, a stump, stock, stick, staff; cognate with E. Stock, q. v.

TUCKET, a flourish on a trumpet. (Ital., — Teut.) In Hen. V. iv. 2. 35. — Ital. toccata, a prelude to a piece of music; Florio only gives toccata, 'a touch, a touching;' but he notes tocco di campana, (lit. a touch of the bell), 'a knock, a stroke, a knell or peale, or toulle upon the bells.' Toccata is properly the fem. of the pp. of toccare, to touch; of Teut. origin. See Touch. And compare Tocsin.

TUESDAY, the third day of the week. (E.) M. E. Tewesday; spelt Tewisday in Wyclif's Select Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 75, l. 14. — A. S. Tiwes dæg, Mark. xiv. 1, rubric. Lit. the day of Tiw, of which Tiwes is the gen. case. + Icel. Týs dæg, the day of Týr; where Týs is the gen. of Týr, the god of war. + Dan. Tirsdag. + Swed. Tisdag. + G. Dienstag, M. H. G. Zistag, O. H. G. Zies tac, the day of Ziu, god of war. β. The A. S. Tiw, Icel. Týr, O. H. G. Ziu, answers to the Lat. Mars as far as the sense goes; but the name itself answers to Lat. Ju- in Ju-piter, Gk. Zeús, Skt. Dyaus, and means 'the shining one.' — ✓ DIW, to shine; see Jovial.

TUFT (1), a small cluster or knot, crest. (F., — Teut.) 'With a knoppe, othir-wyse callyd a tuft;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 36, in a will dated 1463. 'A tuft (or toft) of heres' = a tuft of hairs; Chaucer, C. T. 557 (or 555). The proper form should rather be tuff, as in prov. E. tuff, a lock of hair (Halliwell), Lowland Sc. tuff, a tuft of feathers (Jamieson). The final t was due to confusion with Tuft (2), q. v.; or it may have been excrement; I do not find a supposed F. dimin. form tuiffet. — F. touffe; 'touffe de cheveux', a tuft or lock of curled hair; Cot. [He also gives touffe de bois, 'a houl, a tuft of trees growing near a house;' which was easily confused with tuft (2) below.] Of Teut. origin; cf. G. zopf, a weft of hair, tuft, pigtail; O. Du. top, 'a tuft of haire, a top,' Hexham; Icel. toppr, a top, tuft or lock of hair, a horse's crest. See Top. In this sense, tuft is really a derivative of top. ¶ Note W. tuiff, a tuft, prob. borrowed from Middle English, and shewing the correct E. form.

TUFT (2), TOFT, a plantation, a green knoll. (Scand.) Halliwell gives M. E. tuft, a plantation; it is difficult to be quite sure whether this belongs to the present word or the word above. M. E. toft, a knoll. 'A toure on a toft' = a tower on a knoll; P. Plowman, B. prol. 14. — Icel. toft (pronounced toft), also tuft, toft, tuft, tomt, a green tuft or knoll, a toft, a space marked out for a building. So also dial. Swed. toft, Swed. tomt, a toft, piece of ground; Norweg. tuft, also tomt, a clearing, piece of ground for a house or near a house. (The accent over o in the Swed. dial. toft denotes that the o has the open sound). The Icel. and Swed. tomt point to the orig. sense as being simply 'a clearing,' a space on which to build a house, which would often be a green knoll. From Icel. tómt, Swed. tómt, neut. of Icel. tómr, Swed. tom, empty, void (Möbius); see Toom.

TUG, to pull, drag along. (O. Low G.) M. E. toggen, Prompt. Parv.; Ancren Riwle, p. 424, last line but one, where it means to sport or dally. It is a mere doublet of tuck (1) and of touch. — O. Du. tocken, tucken, 'to touch, to play, to sport, to allure, entise,' Hexham. The sense of 'allure' is due to an older sense 'to draw,' which is still the chief characteristic sense of the verb. It is a secondary verb, formed from the pp. of the strong verb which appears as A. S. teón, G. ziehen, Goth. tiuhan, to draw, whence a great number of derivatives have arisen. One of these derivatives, to tow, comes very near to tug in sense. See Tow (1), Tuck (1), Touch. Cf. the sbs. following, viz. O. Du. toge, 'a draught of beere,' Hexham; G. zug, a pull, tug, draught, Icel. tog, a tow-rope; also Icel. töggla, to tug. Der. tug, sb. Doublets, tuck (1), touch.

TUITION, care and instruction of the young. (F., — L.) 'Tuicion and gouernance;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 6, § 4. — F. tuition, 'tuition, protection;' Cot. — Lat. tuitionem, acc. of tuio, protection. — Lat. tuitor, pp. of tuere, to watch, protect. The base is TU, to see, watch, observe; occurring in Latin only. Der. in-tuition; and see tu-tel-age, tu-tor.

TULIP, the name of a flower. (F., — Ital., — Turk., — Pers., — Hindustáni). In Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary (Shepherd). — F. tulippe, also tulipan, 'the delicate flower called a tulipa, or tulipie, or Dalmatian Cap;' Cot. So called from its likeness to a turban. — Ital. tulipa, tulipano, a tulip. — Turk. tulbend, vulgar pronunciation of dulbend, a turban; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 433. — Pers. duiband, a turban; a word of Hindustáni origin. See Turban. Doublet, turban.

TUMBLE, to fall over, fall suddenly, roll over. (E.) M. E. tumblen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 6, in one MS. of the later version; tombien, King Alisaunder, 2465. Frequentative form (with the usual -el) of tumben or tomben; in Trevisa, iv. 365, we have pe wenche pat tombede (various reading tombled); Strattmann. — A. S. tumbian, to tumble, turn heels over head, Matt. xiv. 6; in some old pictures of this scene, Herodias' daughter is represented as standing on her head. + Du. tuimelen, to tumble; O. Du. tumelen (Hexham), also tommelen, tummelen, id. + G. taumeln, tummeln, to reel, to stagger; O. H. G. túmon, to turn round and round, whence túmari, a tumbler, acrobat. + Dan. tumle, Swed. tumla, to tumble, toss about. The F. tomber is of Teut. origin.

β. It will be observed that, contrary to Grimm's law, the word begins with t both in German and English; this points to loss of initial s, and identifies the word with Stumble, q. v. Der. tumble, sb.; tumbler, an acrobat, L. L. L. iii. 190, which took the place of A. S. tumbere; 'Saltator, tumbere,' Wright's Voc. i. 39, col. 2; cf. 'Saltator, a tumbler,' in a Nominele of the 15th century, id. 218, col. 1; also tumbler, a kind of drinking-glass, orig. without a foot, so that it could not be set down except upon its side when empty. Also tumb-r-el (see Nares), spelt tumrell-cart in Palsgrave, (for which he gives tumbreau as the F. equivalent), from O. F. tumbrel, tumberel, later tumbereau, 'a tumbrell,' Cot., also spelt tomberel, tombereau (Cot.), lit. a tumble-cart, or two-wheeled cart which could be tumbled over or upturned to deposit the manure with which it was usually laden; derived from F. tomber, to fall, a word of Teut. origin, as above.

TUMEFY, to cause to swell, also to swell. (F., — L.) Spelt tumify in Phillips, who also has the sb. tumefaction. — F. tumefier, 'to make to swelle, or puffe up;' Cot. — Low Lat. *tumeficare, put for Lat. tumefacere, to tumefy, make to swell. — Lat. tume, for tumere, to swell; and facere, to make; see Tumid and Fact. Der. tumefaction, as if from Lat. *tumefactio (not used), from tumefactus, pp. of tumefacere.

TUMID, inflated, bombastic. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 288. — Lat. tumidus, swelling. — Lat. tumere, to swell. — ✓ TU, to swell, increase; whence also Gk. τύλλω, τύλλος, a swelling. Cf. Skt. tu, to be powerful, to increase. Der. tumid-ly, -ness. Also (from tumere) tu-mour, a swelling, Milton, Samson, 185, from F. tumeur, 'a tumor, swelling,' Cot., from Lat. acc. tumorem. And see tum-ult, tum-ul-us. From the same root are tu-ber, pro-tuber-ant, truffle, trifle, to-lal, thumb.

TUMULT, excitement, uproar, agitation. (F., — L.) In K. John, iv. 2. 247; tumulte in Levins. — F. tumulte, 'a tumult, uprore;' Cot. — Lat. tumulium, acc. of tumultus, a restless swelling or surging up, a tumult. — Lat. tum-ere, to swell; cf. tumulus, of which tumulatus seems to be an extended form. See Tumulus, Tumid. Der. tumult, verb, Milton, tr. of Ps. ii. 1; tumult-u-ar-y, from F. tumultuaire, 'tumultuary,' Cot., from Lat. tumultuarius, hurried. Also tumult-u-ous, Rich. II. iv. 140, from F. tumultueux, 'tumultuous,' Cot., from Lat. tumultuosus, full of tumult, which from tumultu-, crude form of tumulus, with suffix -osus; tumultuous-ly, -ness.

TUMULUS, a mound of earth over a grave. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. tumulus, a mound; lit. a swelling. — Lat. tum-ere, to swell; see Tumid. And see tomb.

TUN, a large cask; see Ton.

TUNE, tone, sound, melody, a melodious air. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'With many a tune and many a note;' Gower, C. A. iii. 303, l. 8. — F. ton, 'a tune, or sound;' Cot. — Lat. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. — Gk. τόνος, a tone; see Tone. ¶ The old word tune was afterwards modified to tone, which is a later form. Der. tune, verb, Two Gent. iv. 2. 25; tune-able, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 184; tu-er, Romeo, ii. 4. 30; tune-ful, Spenser, Tears of the Muses, 27; tune-ful-ly; tune-less, Spenser, Sonnet 44. [†]

TUNGSTEN, a very heavy metal. (Swedish.) Also called wolfram, and scheelium (from the discoverer). 'From tungstate of lead, Scheele in 1781 obtained tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Luyart in 1786 obtained the metal;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'The name indicates heavy stone, in consequence of the high specific gravity of its Swedish ore;' Engl. Cycl. The word is Swedish.—Swed. tungsten, compounded of tung, heavy; and sten, a stone. Ferrall and Repp's Dan. Dict. gives the very word tungsteen, tungsten, from similar Danish elements, viz. tung, heavy, and steen. β. Swed. sten, Dan. steen, are cognate with E. Stone. Swed. and Dan. tung are the same as Icel. pung, heavy; whence pungi, a load, punga, to load. Perhaps from √ TU, to swell, be strong; cf. Lithuan. tunku, I become fat, infin. tūkti; see Tumid and Thumb.

TUNIC, an under-garment, loose frock. (L.) Introduced directly from the Latin, before the Norman conquest. A.S. tunica, tunice. 'Tunica, tunica;' also 'Tonica, tunee;' Wright's Voc. i. 39, col. 2; 284, col. 2.—Lat. tunica, an under-garment of the Romans, worn by both sexes: whence also F. tunique (Cot.). Root unknown. Der. tunic-le, P. Plowman, B. xv. 163, from O.F. tunicle (Roquefort) = Lat. tunicula, dimin. of tunica. Also tunic-at-ed, a botanical term, from Lat. tunicatus, provided with a coating; from tunica in the sense of coating, membrane, or husk.

TUNNEL, a hollow vessel for conveying liquors into bottles, a funnel, a passage cut through a hill. (F.,—L.) Formerly, when a chimney meant a fireplace, a tunnel often meant a chimney, or flue. 'Tonnell to fyll wyne with, antonnoyr;' Palsgrave. 'Tonnell of a chimney, tuyau;' id. Hence the sense of flue, shaft, railway-tunnel.—O.F. tonnel (Burguy), later tonneau, 'a tun, or (generally) any great vessel, or piece of cask for wine, &c., as a tun, hoghead, &c., also a tunnel for partridges;' Cot. The tunnel for partridges was a long tunnel or covered passage made of light wire, strengthened with hoops, into which partridges were decoyed, and from which they could not afterwards escape. Cf. prov. E. tunnel, a funnel, an arched drain. The word evidently once meant a sort of cask, then a hooped pipe or funnel, then a flue, shaft, &c. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 20, we find (in 1463) 'my newe hous with the iij. tunnys of chemeneyis;' Mr. Tymms remarks (p. 241): 'The passage of the chimney was called a tunnel till the beginning of the present century, and the chimney-shaft is still called a tun.' β. F. tonneau is the dimin. of F. tonne, 'a tun;' Cot. Ultimately of Lat. origin; see Ton. Der. tunnel, verb; modern.

TUNNY, the name of a fish. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'A tuny fish, thunnus;' Levins. Palsgrave gives 'Tonny, fysh,' without any F. equivalent. The final -y is an E. addition.—F. thon, 'a tunny fish,' Cot.—Lat. thunnus, acc. of thunnus, a tunny; also spelt thynnus.—Gk. θύννος, a tunny; also spelt θύνος. Lit. 'the darter,' the fish that darts about (cf. E. dart).—Gk. θύνειν, allied to θύνω, to rush along.—√ DHU, to shake, blow, rush; see Dust.

TURBAN, a head-covering worn in the East. (F.,—Ital.,—Turkish, —Pers.,—Hindustani.) Spelt turbant, Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xvii. st. 10 (R.); turribant, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 28; turband, Cymb. iii. 3. 6. 'Nash, in his Lenten Stuffe (1598) has turbanto;' F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 112. [Todd remarks that it is spelt tulibant in Puttenham, Art of Poesie (1589), and tulipant repeatedly in Sir T. Herbert's Travels. As a fact, Puttenham has tolibant, Art of Poesie, b. iii. c. 24; ed. Arber, p. 291. These forms with l are really more correct, as will be seen, and answer to the occasional F. form tolopan, given in Cotgrave as equivalent to turbant.]—F. turbant (given by Cotgrave, s.v. tolopan), but usually turban, 'a turbant, a Turkish hat;' Cot.—Ital. turbante, 'a turbant,' &c.; Florio.—Turkish tulband, vulgar pronunciation of Turkish dulband, a turban; a word borrowed from Persian; Zenker's Dict., p. 433, col. 3.—Pers. dulband, a turban; Rich. Dict. p. 681. Vüllers, in his Etym. Pers. Dict. i. 893, col. 2, says that dulband seems to be of Hindustani origin.—Hind. dulband, a turban; Shakespeare, Hind. Dict. p. 1059. See tulip.

TURBID, disordered, muddy. (L.) 'Lees do make the liquor turbide;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 306.—Lat. turbidus, disturbed.—Lat. turbare, to disturb.—Lat. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people; see Trouble. Der. turbid-ly, -ness.

TURBOT, a flat, round fish. (F.,—L.) M. E. turbot, Prompt. Parv.; Havelok, 754; spelt turbote, Wright's Voc. i. 183.—F. turbot, 'the turbot-fish;' Cot. According to Diez, formed with suffix -ot from Lat. turb-o, a whipping-top, a spindle, a reel; from its rhomboidal shape. This is verified by two facts: (1) the Lat. rhombus, a circle, a turbot, is merely borrowed from Gk. ῥόμβος, a top, wheel, spindle, having, in fact, just the same senses as Lat. turbo; and (2) the Low Lat. turbo was used to mean a turbot; thus we have: 'Turbot, turtur, turbo,' Prompt. Parv. We also find Irish turbít, a turbot, a rhomboid, Gael. turbaid, W. torbut; but it does not appear to be a Celtic word. Nor is it Dutch.

TURBULENT, disorderly, restless as a crowd, producing commotion. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 4.—F. turbulent, 'turbulent, blustering;' Cot.—Lat. turbulentus, full of commotion or disturbance.—Lat. turb-are, to disturb.—Lat. turba, a crowd of people; see Trouble. Der. turbulent-ly; turbulence, Troil. v. 3. 11, from F. turbulence (which Cotgrave omits, but see Littré), which from Lat. turbulentia; also turbulency, from Lat. turbulentia.

TUREEN, the same as Terreen, q. v.

TURF, the surface of land matted with roots of grass, &c., sward, sod, peat. (E.) M. E. turf, sometimes torf; pl. turfes (= turves), Havelok, 939; Chaucer, C. T. 10109.—A.S. turf (dat. tyrf), turf, A.S. Chron. an. 189 (Laud MS.). So also: 'Gleba, turf,' Wright's Voc. i. 37, col. 1; pl. tyrf, id. ii. 40, col. 1. + Du. turf, peat. + Icel. torf, a turf, sod, peat. + Dan. törf. + Swed. torf. + O. H. G. zurba, turf (cited by Fick and Stratmann); the mod. G. torf being borrowed from Low German). β. All from Teut. base TORBA, turf, Fick, iii. 119. Prob. cognate with Skt. darbha, a kind of grass, Benfey, p. 388; so called from its being twined or matted together, from Skt. dribh, to string, to bind.—√ DARBH, to wind, twine, knit together, Fick, i. 107; cf. Lithuan. dribti, to hang on to anything, cleave to it, drobė, very fine linen. Der. turf-y, Temp. iv. 62.

TURGID, swollen, pompous, bombastic. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. turgidus, swollen, extended.—Lat. turgere, to swell out. Root uncertain. Der. turgid-ly, -ness, turgid-ity. Also turg-escence, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 7, part 5, formed as if from Lat. *turgescencia, swelling up, from turgescere, inceptive form of turgere.

TURKEY, the name of a bird. (F.,—Tatar.) 'Turky-cocke, or cocke of India, aus ita dicta, quod ex Africa, et, ut nonnulli volunt alii, ex India vel Arabia ad nos illata sit; Belg. Indische haen, Teut. Indianisch hun, Calcuttisch hun, i.e. Gallina Indica seu Calcuttensis, Ital. gallo, o gallina d'India, Hispan. pavon de las Indias, Gall. pouille d'Inde, &c.; Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'A turkie, or Ginnie henne, Belg. Indisch hinne, Teut. Indianisch henn, Ital. gallina d'India, Hispan. gallina Morisca, &c.; id. Turkey in Shak. means (1) the bird, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 29; (2) adj. Turkish, Tam. Shrew, ii. 355; hence he also says turkey-cock, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Meliagrides, Birdes that we call hennes of Ginnie or Turkey hennes;' Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1665. Turkeys were 'unknown in Europe until introduced from the New World;' see Trench, Study of Words. The date of their introduction seems to be about 1530. As they were strange birds, they were hastily called Turkey-cocks and Turkey-hens, by which it was merely meant that they were foreign; it must be remembered that Turkey was at that time a vague term, and often meant Tartary. 'Turkie, Tartaria;' Levins. Similarly, the French called the bird poule d'Inde, whence mod. F. dinde, a turkey; Cotgrave gives: 'Dindar, Indar, a turkey-cock.' Minsheu, in his Span. Dict., gives 'gallina Morisca, a hen of Guynie, gallina de India, a Turkie hen;' whilst in his Eng. Dict. (as quoted above) he calls gallina Morisca, the turkey-hen; shewing that he was not in the least particular. The German Calcuttische hahn, a turkey-cock, means 'a cock of Calcutta,' from Calcut, Calcutta; a name extremely wide of the mark. β. The E. Turkey, though here used as an adj. (since turkey is short for turkey-cock or turkey-hen) was also used as a sb., to denote the name of the country.—F. Turquie, 'Turkie,' Cot.—F. Turc, m., Turque, f., 'Turkish,' id.—Tatar türk, orig. meaning 'brave.' [The Turkish word for Turk is 'osmanlı.'] Cf. Pers. Turk, 'a Turk, comprehending likewise those numerous nations of Tartars... who claim descent from Turk, the son of Japhet.... Also, a Scythian, barbarian, robber, plunderer, villain, vagabond;' Richardson's Dict., p. 392. Hence Pers. Turki, 'Turkish, Turk-like;' id. p. 393. ¶ So also maize was called Turkey wheat, F. bled de Turquie; Wedgwood.

Der. turq-uisse, q. v. [†]

TURMERIC, the root of an E. Indian plant, used as a yellow dye, and in curry-powder. (F.,—L.) Spelt turmeric in Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). A gross corruption of the F. name.—F. terre-mérite, turmeric; not given in Littré under terre, but under Curcuma he says that the root is called in commerce 'safran des Indes, et curcuma, dite terre-mérite, quand elle est réduite en poudre.'—Lat. terra merita; turmeric 'is likewise called by the French terra merita;' Curcuma, hæc Gallis terra merita male dicitur,' see Royle, Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine, p. 87; Eng. Cycl. Division Arts and Sciences. I suppose it means 'excellent earth.'—Lat. terra, earth; and merita, fem. of meritus, pp. of mereri, to deserve. But terra merita is prob. a barbarous corruption; perhaps of Arab karkam, kurkum, saffron or curcuma; Rich. Dict. p. 1181.

TURMOIL, excessive labour, tumult, bustle; as a verb, to harass. (F.?—L.?) 'The turmoyle of his mind being refrained;' Udall, on St. John, c. 11 (R.). The pp. turmoild occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 9. 39; and in Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 10. 18. The origin is somewhat doubtful; the form is prob. corrupt, the latter part of the word being assimilated to E. moil, q. v., and the former part to turn. β. It has been suggested that it may have something to do with O.F. tremouille, 'the hopper of a mill,' id., also called tremie, and prob. so called from being in continual movement, from Lat. tremere, to tremble, shake. This is rendered more probable by observing that Cotgrave also gives the same word with the spelling tremeul, which is sufficiently near to the E. form. It is also spelt tremois (Burguy), tremuye (Roquefort); and Roquefort also gives the verb tremuer, to disquiet, and the sb. tremuet, agitation, also from Lat. tremere. Cf. Prov. E. tremmie, to tremble. See Tremble.

TURN, to cause to revolve, transfer, convert, whirl round, change. (F., -L.) M.E. tournen, tornen, turnen; Ormulum, 169. = F. tourner, O.F. torner, turner, to turn. = Lat. tornare, to turn in a lathe, to turn. = Lat. tornus, a lathe, turner's wheel. β. The Lat. tornus is cognate with (rather than borrowed from) Gk. τόρνος, a carpenter's tool to draw circles with, compasses, whence τορνεύειν, to turn, work with a lathe. Allied to Gk. τορός, adj. piercing, τρίπειν, to pierce, Lat. terere, to rub. = ✓TAR, to rub, hence to bore a hole; see Trite. Der. turn, sb., turn-er; turn-er-y, from F. tournerie, 'a turning, turner's work; turn-ing, turn-ing-point; turn-coat, Much Ado, i. 1. 125; turn-key, one who turns a prison-key, a warder; turn-pike, q. v.; turn-spit, one who turns a spit; turn-stile, a stile that turns, Butler's Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. 1. 23; turn-table, a table that turns. Also (from tornare) tour, tour-na-ment, tour-ni-quet. [†]

TURNIP, TURNEP, a plant with a round root, used for food. (F., -L.; and L.) The pl. turneps is in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 13; spelt turnepes in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. 1. The latter part of the word is nep or nepe. We find 'wild nepe, Cucurbita, brionia' in Prompt. Parv. p. 528. 'Hoc bacar, nepe;' Wright's Voc. i. 191, col. 2. 'As a nepe white' = as white as a turnip; Destruction of Troy, 3076. This is from A.S. nēp, a turnip, borrowed from Lat. nāpus, a kind of turnip. 'Napus, nēp; Rapa, nēp;' Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2. Hence the etymological spelling should rather be turnep than turnip, and we know that the latter part of the word is pure Latin. Cf. Irish and Gael. neip, a turnip, W. meipen (prob. for neipen). 2. The former part of the word is less obvious; but it is most likely F. tour in the sense of 'wheel,' to signify its round shape, as if it had been 'turned.' Cotgrave gives, among the senses of tour, these: 'also a spinning-wheel, a turn, or turner's wheel.' Or it might be the E. turn, used in a like sense; Cotgrave also gives: 'Tournoir, a turn, turning-wheel, or turners wheel, called a lathe or lare.' It makes but little difference, since F. tour is the verbal sb. of tourner, to turn; see Tour, Turn. Cf. Ital. torno, 'a turne, a turners or spinners wheele,' Florio; W. turn, a turn, also round.

TURNPIKE, a gate set across a road to stop those liable to toll. (Hybrid; F., -L.; and C.) The name was given to the toll-gate, because it took the place of the old-fashioned turnstile, which was made with four horizontal pikes or arms revolving on the top of a post. The word occurs in this sense as early as in Cotgrave, who translates F. tour by 'a turn, . . . also, a turn-pike or turning-stile.' So also: 'I move upon my axle like a turnpike;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 1 (Picklock); see Nares. The word turn-pike was also used in the sense of chevaux de Frise, as in Phillips, ed. 1706. From Turn and Pike. Der. turn-pike-gate, turn-pike-road. [†]

TURPENTINE, the resinous juice of the terebinth tree, &c. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Levins, ed. 1570. = F. turbentine, 'turpentine'; Cot. = Lat. terebinthinus, made from the terebinth-tree. = Gk. τερεβινθίνος, made from the tree called τερεβινθος; see Terebinth. [†]

TURPITUDE, baseness, depravity. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 112. = F. turpitude, 'turpitude'; Cot. = Lat. turpitude, baseness. = Lat. turpi, crude form of turpis, base; with suffix -tudo. β. The Lat. turpis is 'shameful,' that from which one turns away on account of shame, or one who turns away because he is ashamed; cf. Skt. trap, to be embarrassed, be ashamed, causal trāpaya; to make ashamed; when used with the prep. apa, Skt. trap means to turn away on account of shame. The Skt. trap is cognate with Gk. τρέπειν, to turn; see Trope. = ✓TARK, to turn.

TURQUOISE, TURQUOIS, TURKOISE, TURKIS, a precious stone. (F., -Ital., -Tatar.) In Cotgrave; also Palsgrave has: 'Tourques, a precious stone, tourquois.' Turcas, a turquoise, Bale's Works, p. 607 (Parker Soc.). = F. turquoise, 'a turquoise, or Turkish stone'; Cot. [Turquoise is the fem. of Turquois, 'Turkish,' id.] = Ital. Turchesa, 'a blue precious stone called a Turkish'; Florio. The sense is Turkish; the F. turquoise, Ital. turchesa, answer to a Low Lat. turchesia, fem. of turchesius; and turchesius is found with the sense of turquoise in A.D. 1347 (Ducange). It is an adj. form, from Low Lat. Turcus, a Turk, which is from Tatar türk, a Turk; see Turkey.

TURRET, a small tower. (F., -L.) M.E. touret, Chaucer, C. T. 1909 (or 1911); toret, Prompt. Parv. = F. tourette, 'a turret or small tower'; Cot. Dimin. of F. tour (O. F. tor, tur), a tower; see Tower. Der. turret-ed.

TURTLE (1), a turtle-dove, kind of pigeon. (L.) M.E. turtle, Chaucer, C. T. 10013. A.S. turtile. 'Turtur, turtile;' Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2. = Lat. turtur, a turtle; with the common change from r to l. Hence also G. turtel-taube, a turtle-dove; Ital. tortora, tortola, a turtle. β. The Lat. tur-tur is of imitative origin; due to a repetition of tur, imitative of the coo of a pigeon. Cf. Du. kirren, to coo.

TURTLE (2), the sea-tortoise. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. This word is absolutely the same as the word above. It occurs, according to Richardson, in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687. The English sailors having a difficulty with the Portuguese tartaruga, a tortoise or turtle, and the Span. toruga, tortoise, turtle, overcame that difficulty by substituting the E. turtle, with a grand disregard of the difference between the two creatures. The Span. and Port. names did not readily suggest the E. tortoise; whereas tartaruga could easily become *tortaluga, and then tortal for short. [†*]

TUSH, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Much Ado, iii. 1. 130; &c. Holinshed (or Stanhurst) gives the form twish. 'There is a . . . disdainfull interjection used in Irish called boagh, which is as much in English as twish;' Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 8. (R.) Twish is expressive of disgust; cf. pick; also tut.

TUSK, a long pointed tooth. (E.) Shak. uses the pl. form tushes, Venus, 617, 624. M.E. tusk, tusch, tosch; spelt tosche, Prompt. Parv.; we even find the pl. tuxes in K. Alisaunder, 6547. = A.S. tuse, almost always spelt tux, esp. in the pl. tuxas, just as A.S. fisc is often spelt fix; here x = cs, by metathesis of sc. Spelt tux, translated 'grinder' by Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 95, § 49. 'Canini, vel colomelli, mannes tuxas;' Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 1. + O. Fries. tusk, tosch. β. Perhaps A.S. tuse stands for *twise (like tush for twish, see Tush), with the notion of double tooth, or very strong tooth, from A.S. twis, double, with adj. suffix -c (Aryan -ka). 'Twegen ge-twisan' = two twins, occurs in Gen. xxxviii. 27; and twis is connected with twá, two, just as Lat. bis (put for duis) is with Lat. duo. γ. This is rendered highly probable by the occurrence of M. H. G. zuise, O. H. G. zuiski, double (whence mod. G. zwischen, between, is derived). This is from the old form of G. zwei, two; and exactly answers to an *A.S. twice. See Two. Der. tusk-ed, tusk-y. [†]

TUSSELE, to scuffle. (E.) The same as touse, to disorder, frequent. of Touse, q. v. [†]

TUT, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 117; &c. 'And that he said . . . Tut, tut, tut;' State Trials, Hen. VIII, an. 1536; Q. Anne Boleyn. (R.) Cf. F. trut, 'an interjection importing indignation, tush, tut, fy man'; Cot. 'Ptrot, skornefulle word, or trut;' Prompt. Parv., p. 415. And cf. Tush.

TUTELAGE, guardianship. (L.; with F. suffix.) 'The tutelage whereof,' &c.; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 3. Coined with F. suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from Lat. tutela, protection; see Tutelar.

TUTELAR, protecting, having in charge. (L.) 'Tutelar god of the place'; Ben Jonson, Love's Triumph through Callipolis, Introduction. = Lat. tutelaris, tutel. = Lat. tutela, protection; allied to tutor, a protector; see Tutor. Der. tutelary, from F. tutelaire, 'tutelary, guarding'; Cot.

TUTOR, an instructor, teacher, guardian. (F., -L.) Put for tutour, the older form. M.E. tutour, P. Plowman, B. i. 56. = F. tuteur, 'a tutor'; Cot. = Lat. tutorem, acc. of tutor, a guardian. = Lat. tut-us (short for tuitus), pp. of tueri, to look after, guard; see Tuition. Der. tutor, verb, L. L. L. iv. 2. 77; tutor-ship, tutor-age, tutor-i-al.

TWADDLE, to tattle, talk unmeaningly. (E.) Formerly twattle. 'No gloasing fable I twattle;' Stanhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii; ed. Arber, p. 46. 'Vaynelye toe twattle,' id. Æn. iv; p. 101. A collateral form of Tattle, q. v. So also twittle-twattle, sb., used by L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson) as equivalent to tittle-tattle. Cf. 'such fables twitted, such untrue reports twatted;' Stanhurst, Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 48. Der. twaddle, sb., twaddler.

TWAIN, two; see under Two.

TWANG, to sound with a sharp noise. (E.) 'Sharply twanged off;' Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 108. 'To Twangue, resonare;' Levins. 'To twang, as the string of an instrument;' Minshew. A collateral form of tang, used with the same sense; see Tang (2), Tingle. It represents the ringing sound of a tense string. Der. twang, sb.

TWEAK, to twitch, pull sharply, pinch. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 601. A better form is twick; cf. prov. E. twick, a sudden jerk (Halliwell). M.E. twikken, Prompt. Parv. p. 505. This should correspond to an *A.S. twiccan, but both this form and that of twician (given by Somner) are unauthorised; still, it is certainly an E. word, and not borrowed, as is shown by the derivative twinkle, A.S. twincian. See Twinkle. Besides which, we find A.S. angel-twicca = a hook-twitcher, the name of a worm used as bait for fishing; Wright's Voc. i. 24, col. 2; i. 78, col. 1. Twick is a weakened form of it; see Twitch. + Low G. twikken, to tweak, nip. + G. zwick, to pinch, nip; whence zwick, a pinch, zwick bei der Nase, tweak by the nose; also G. zwacken, to pinch, to twitch. Cf. Twinge. Der. tweak, sb.

TWEEZERS, nippers, small pincers for pulling out hairs. (F., = Teut.; with E. suffix.) The history of this word is most remarkable; it exhibits an unusual development. A tweezer or tweezer is, properly, an instrument contained in a tweezer, or small case for instruments. And as the tweezer contained tweezers, it was also called a tweezer-case; hence it is that we find tweezer and tweezer-case used as synonymous terms. 'Tweezers, nippers or pincers, to pull hair up by the roots;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Then his tweezer-cases are incomparable; you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day;' Tatler, no. 142; March 7, 1709-10. This shews that a tweezer-case was a case containing a great number of small instruments, of which what are now specifically called tweezers was but one. See another quotation under Trinket (1).

B. Next, we observe that the proper name for such a case was a tweezer, or a pair of tweezers; probably a pair of tweezers means that the case was made double, folding up like a book, as some instrument cases are made still. 'Drawing a little penknife out of a pair of tweezers I then chanced to have about me;' Boyle, Works, ii. 419 (R.). 'I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French bever [hat] and tweezers you writ for;' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 17; May 1, 1620. 'A Surgeon's tweezer, or box of instruments, pennard de chirurgien;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave.

C. Lastly, the word tweezer is certainly a corruption of O. F. estuy (mod. F. étui). 'Estuy, a sheath, case, or box to put things in, and more particularly, a case of little instruments, or sizzers, bodkin, penknife, &c., now commonly termed an ettwee;' Cot. And again: 'Pennard de Chirurgien, a chirurgian's case or ettuy; the box wherein he carries his instruments;' id. Here we see that the F. estuy was pronounced et-wee; then the initial e (for es) was dropped, just as in the case of Ticket and Tuck (2); then twee became tweez or tweeze, probably because the case was double; then it was called a pair of tweezers, and a particular implement in it was called a tweezer or tweezers, prob. from some confusion with the obsolete twitch, tweezers; see additions to Nares, by Halliwell and Wright. The most remarkable point is the double addition of the pl. form, so that twee-s-es is from twee; this can be explained by the common use of the plural for certain implements, such as shears, scissors, pliers, snuffers, tongs, scales, nippers, pincers, &c. So far, the history of the word is quite clear, and fully known. D. The etymology of O. F. estuy or estui is difficult; it is the same as Span. estuche, a scissors-case, also scissors (note this change of sense), Port. estojo, a case, a tweezer-case, Low Lat. estugium, a case, box, occurring A.D. 1231 (Ducange). We also find O. Ital. stuccio, stuccio, 'a little pocket-case with cisors, pen-knives, and such trifles in them,' Florio; whence (with prefix a- = Lat. ad) Ital. astuccio, a small box, case, sheath. The form stuccio does not seem to have been observed before; I think it makes the etymology proposed by Diez the more certain, viz. that all the above words are of Teut. origin, from M. H. G. stücke, O. H. G. stúcká, a cuff, a muff (prov. G. stauch, a short and narrow muff). Thus the orig. case for small instruments was a muff, or a cuff, or a part of the sleeve; which we can hardly doubt. ¶ Another proposed etymology of F. étui is from Lat. studium, with the supposed sense of 'place for objects of study;' see Scheler. This does not explain the Ital. form.

TWELVE, two and ten. (E.) M. E. twelf; whence also twelf-e, twel-ue (= twel-ve), a pl. form and dissyllabic. It was not uncommon to use numerals in the pl. form of adjectives; cf. E. five (= fi-vē), from A. S. fif. 'Twelve winter' = twelve years, P. Plowman, B. v. 196, where two MSS. have twelf. We have, in the Oremulm, the form twelf, 11069; but also twelfe (dissyllabic), 537. — A. S. twelf, also twelfe, Grein, ii. 556. + O. Fris. twelf, twilif, twelf, tolef. + Du. twalf. + Icel. tólf. + Dan. tolv. + Swed. tolv. + G. zwölf. O. H. G. zwelf. + Goth. twalif. β. All from the Teut. base TWALIF, Fick, iii. 126. Here TWA is two; see Two. The suffix -lif stands for *ligh, by the common substitution of f for the guttural; and *ligh or *likh is the Teut. equivalent (with sound-shifting from k to kh or gh) to the Lithuan. lika occurring in duy-lika, twelve. Again, the Lithuan. lika is due to the adj. lėkas, signifying 'what is over,' or 'remaining over'; see Nesselmann, p. 305. The phr. antras lėkas, lit. 'second one over,' is used as an ordinal, meaning 'twelfth.' Lėkas is from lik-ti, to leave, allied to Lat. linquere. See Eleven. Der. twelf-th, used instead of twelfth (M. E. twelfte, A. S. twelftha, Grein, ii. 556) by analogy with seven-th, eigh-th, nin-th, &c.; hence twelfth-day, twelfth-night (often called twelfday, twelfnight, as in Shakespeare's play of 'Twelfth Night'); twelve-month, M. E. twelfmonthe, P. Plowman, C. vii. 80. [†]

TWENTY, twice ten. (E.) M. E. twenty, Chaucer, C. T. 17118. — A. S. twentig, Grein, ii. 557. Prob. for twén-tig = twegen-tig; from

A. S. twegen, twain, and the suffix -tig, cognate with Goth. tigjus, from a Teut. base TEGU, ten, a modified form of TEHAN, ten. See Two and Ten. + Du. twintig. + Icel. ttuttugu. + Goth. twaitigjus, Luke, xiv. 21. + G. zwanzig, M. H. G. zweinzie, O. H. G. zweinzie. All similarly formed. β. So also Lat. ui-ginti, twenty; from ui- (put for *dui, twice, related to duo, two), and -ginti (put for *-centi, short for *decanti, tenth, from decem, ten); whence F. vingt, twenty, &c. Der. twenti-eth, A. S. twentigoða, twentogoða, Exod. xii. 18.

TWIBILL, TWYBILL, a two-edged bill or mattock. (E.) Still in use provincially; see Halliwell. In Becon's Works, ii. 449, Parker Society. M. E. twibil; spelt twybyl, Prompt. Parv. — A. S. twibille or twibill. 'Bipennis, twibille, vel stán-æx [stone-axe]; Falcastrum, bill;' Wright's Voc. i. 34, col. 2. — A. S. twi-, double; and bill, a bill. See Twice and Bill.

TWICE, two times. (E.) Put for M. E. twies or twyēs, formerly dissyllabic; the word has been reduced to a single syllable, and the final -e is a mere orthographical device for representing the fact that the final s was voiceless or 'hard,' and not sounded as z. 'He twies wan Jerusalem the citee;' Chaucer, C. T. 14153. — A. S. twīges, A. S. Chron. an. 1120 (Laud MS.). This is a genitive form, genitives being often used adverbially; the more common A. S. word is twāwa, Luke, xviii. 12, older form twiwa, twice, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 2. § 7. Both twi-ges and twi-wa are from the base twi-, double, only used as a prefix, answering to Icel. tví-, Lat. bi- (for dui), Gk. di-, Skt. dvi, and allied to twá, two; see Two. Cf. prov. E. twi-bill, a mattock (above), twi-fallow, to till ground a second time; and see Twilight.

TWIG (1), a thin branch, small shoot of a tree. (E.) M. E. twig, spelt twyg in Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 22, l. 5; pl. twiggas, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Superbia (1st sentence). — A. S. twig, pl. twygu, John, xv. 5. + Du. twijg. + G. zweig. β. From the A. S. base twi-, double, because orig. applied to the fork of a branch, or the place where a small shoot branches off from a larger one. A similar explanation applies to M. E. twist, often used in the sense of twig or spray, as in Chaucer, C. T. 10223. Cf. G. zwiesel, a forked branch; and see Twilight, Twice, Twist, Two.

TWIG (2), to comprehend. (C.) Modern slang. — Irish tuigim, I understand, discern; Gael. tuig, to understand.

TWILIGHT, the faint light after sunset or before sunrise. (E.) M. E. twilight, spelt twyelyght in Prompt. Parv. The A. S. twi-, prefix, means 'double,' like Icel. tví-, Du. twée, G. zwie-; but it is here used rather in the sense of 'doubtful' or 'half.' The ideas of double and half are liable to confusion; cf. A. S. twéon, doubt, from the hovering between two opinions; see Doubt and Between. β. Precisely the same confusion appears in German; we there find zwiefach, double, zwielicht, twilight, zwiesel, a branch dividing into two ends, zwietracht, discord, all with the prefix zwie- = A. S. twi-. The prefix is related to Two; cf. Twice, Twig. The word light = A. S. leht; see Light. By way of further illustration, I find O. Du. twelicht, twylicht, 'twilight,' Hexham; cf. Du. twée, two, twéedubbél, twice double, &c. ¶ Bosworth gives an A. S. twéinleht, twilight, but it is unauthorised. It would only give a mod. E. form twenleight, and does not account for twilight.

TWILL, an appearance of diagonal lines in textile fabrics produced by causing the weft-threads to pass over one and under two warp-threads, instead of over one and under one. (Low G.) Added by Todd to Johnson; Lowland Sc. twiel, twiel, twael (Jamieson). The word is Low German, and has reference to the peculiar method of doubling the warp-threads, or taking two of them together; it was prob. introduced by Platt-deutsch workmen into the weaving-trade, which connected us so much with the Low Countries. — Low G. twillen, to make double, also to fork into two branches as a tree; twill, twille, twiel, sb., a forked branch, any forked thing; a tree that forked into three shoots was oddly called een dre-twille, i. e. a three-twill; Bremen Wörterbuch. Allied words appear in Du. twelend, Swed. and Dan. tvilling, a twin, Swed. dial. twilla, to produce twins (said of sheep); G. zwilling, a twin. Note particularly G. zwillich, ticking, zwillichweber, a ticking-weaver, as connecting it with the weaving-trade. Obviously formed, like twig, twine, twist, from the Teut. base TWI, double, appearing in A. S. twi-, Du. twée, G. zwie-, all allied to Two, q. v. We find: 'Trilicis, þrylen hrægel, i. e. a garment woven with three threads, corresponding to an E. form thrill;' Wright's Voc. i. 40. And see Twilight, Twice. Der. twill, verb. ¶ Twilled in Temp. iv. 64, is yet unexplained. Ray tells us that North E. twill means a spoon, and he asserts that it is a corruption of quill. I doubt it; for Swed. dial. twill is to turn round like a spindle, to become entangled, as thread (Rietz); Norweg. twilla is to stir milk round and round, also to twist into knots, as a thread; twilla, sb., is a twist or knot in a thread. Twist, twill, twine appear to be closely related words.

TWIN, one of two born at a birth. (E.) M. E. twain, adj., double.

'Jusep gaf ilc here twinne scrud' = Joseph gave each of them double raiment, 'changes of raiment,' cf. Gen. xlv. 22. 'piss twinne seolþe' = this double blessing, Ormulum, 8769. — A. S. getwinne, twins, in a gloss (Bosworth); also in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 13, l. 14. + Icel. tvinnr, tvennr, two and two, twin, in pairs; cf. tvinna, to twine, twist two together. We also find Dan. tvilling, Swed. tvilling, a twin, perhaps put for *twining, by assimilation; cf. M. E. twining. Allied to Icel. tvær, two; see TWO. + Lithuan. dvini, twins, sing. duonis; from dvi, two. The n seems to give a distributive force, as in Goth. twaihna, two apiece, Luke, ix. 3; Lat. bini, two apiece, two at a time. Hence twain, by two at a time, orig. an adj., as above. Der. twain, verb, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 67.

TWINE, to double or twist together; as sb., a twisted thread. (E.) M. E. twinen, to twine; pp. twyned, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 204. In Layamon, 14220, the later text has 'a twined þred', where the earlier text has 'a twines þred' = a thread of twine. The supposed A. S. twinan is unauthorised, but the verb was early coined from the sb. twine, a twisted thread, curiously used to translate Lat. byssus in Luke, xvi. 19. It is a mere derivative of A. S. twi-, prefix, double, discussed under Twice, Twilight, &c.; and see Twin. The orig. sense was merely 'double'; hence a doubled thread. + Du. twijn, twine, twist; whence twijnen, to twine. + Icel. tvinni, twine; whence tvinna, to twine; cf. tvinnr, twin. + Dan. tvinde (for tvinne), to twine. + Swed. tvinnträ, twine-thread; tvinna, to twine.

TWINGE, to affect with a sudden, sharp pain, to nip. (E.) M. E. twingen, orig. a strong verb, to pain, afflict. 'Whil þat twinges me the foe' = while the foe afflicts me; E. Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. xli. 10. 'I am twinged,' where another MS. has 'I am meked and twungen smert,' id. Ps. xxxvii. 9. Not found in A. S.; the A. S. form would have been *þwungan; we have, however, the derived word Thong. For change of thw to tw-, cf. twirl below, q. v. It is preserved in O. Friesic. — O. Fries. thwinga, also twinga, dwinga, to constrain, pt. t. tuwang, tuwong, pp. tuwogen. + O. Sax. thwangan, in the pp. bithwungan, oppressed. + Dan. twinge, to force, compel, constrain; Swed. twinga, to force, bridle, restrain, compel. The Icel. form is þwiga, to oppress. + Du. dwingen, to constrain; pt. t. dwong, pp. gedwongen. + G. zwingen, pt. t. zwang, pp. gezwungen.

β. All from the Teut. base THWANG, to constrain, compel; whence also the secondary verbs appearing in G. zwängen, to press tightly, constrain, and M. E. twengen, to press tightly, tweak, or twinge; the latter occurs in the Life of St. Dunstan, l. 81: 'he tuengde and schok hir bi þe nose' = he twinged and shook her by the nose, Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. And, in fact, the mod. E. twinge answers rather to this secondary or causal form than to the strong verb; just as in the case of swinge, due to the strong verb swing. See Fick, iii. 142. γ. This Teut. base THWANG answers to Aryan TANK, from the ✓ TAK, to draw tightly together, contract; Fick, i. 87. Cf. Skt. tañch, to contract; Lithuan. tankus, thick, twenkti, to dam up. From the same root we have E. tweak, twitch, twinkle. Der. twinge, sb. Also thong, q. v.

TWINKLE, to shine with a quivering light. (E.) M. E. twinklen, Chaucer, C. T. 269 (or 267). — A. S. twincelian, to twinkle, shine faintly, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 3; b. iii. pr. 12. Twinkle is a frequentative from a form twink, appearing in M. E. twinken, to blink, wink; Prompt. Parv., p. 505. And again, twink is a nasalised form of A. S. twiecan, to twitch; see Tweak, Twitch. The sense is to keep on twitching or quivering, hence to twinkle. Der. twinkle, sb.; twinkl-er. Also twinkl-ing, sb., a twitch or wink with the eye, M. E. twinkeling; 'And in the twinkeling of a loke' [look, glance], Gower, C. A. i. 144; this is from M. E. twinkelen in the sense to wink, as: 'he twincleþ with the eyen' = he winks with the eyes, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13 (earlier version); see twink, sb., a twinkling, in Shak. Temp. iv. 43.

TWIRL, to whirl, turn round rapidly. (E.) Twirl stands for thwirl, as twinge (q. v.) for thwinge. 'Leave twirling of your hat;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Act ii. sc. 3 (Altea). Twirl is a frequentative form, from A. S. þwær-an, to agitate, turn; it means 'to keep on turning,' and is used of rather violent motion. The A. S. þwær-an only occurs in the unauthorised compound þwær-an, to shake or agitate (Somner), and in the pp. geþwær-an (put for geþworen), with uncertain sense; Grein, i. 474. We have, however, the derived sb. þwiril, supposed to mean the handle of a churn, which was rapidly turned round. We find: 'Lac, meole [milk]; Lac coagolatum, molcen [curdled milk]; Verberaturum, þwiril; Caseum, cyse [cheese]. &c.; Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 1. Slight as these traces are, they are made quite certain by the cognate words; it may be necessary to observe that, in A. S. þwir-il, the final -il denotes the implement, and is an agential suffix, quite distinct from the frequentative -il in twirl. + Du. dwarlen, to whirl; whence dwarlwind, a whirlwind (the Du. d = A. S. þ). That the l is frequentative, appears at once from the Low G. dweerwind, a whirlwind, as well as from M. H. G. dwer(e)n, O. H. G.

dweran, tweran, strong verb, to turn round swiftly, to whirl, cognate with Lat. terere, to rub, bore. — ✓ TAR, to rub, bore; see Thwart and Trite. Hence the Teut. base THWAR, to whirl; Fick, iii. 142. [†]

TWIST, to twine together, wreath, turn forcibly. (E.) M. E. twisten, Chaucer, C. T. 10880; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 213, l. 4. Not found in A. S., but regularly formed from a sb. twist, a rope, occurring in the comp. mæst-twist, a stay, a rope used to stay a mast. 'Parastates, mæst-twist,' Wright's Voc. i. 56, col. 2; one sense of Gk. μαστωρίης is a stay. Again, twi-st is formed, with suffix -st, from A. S. twi-, double, discussed under Twilight, Twice, &c. The suffix -st is not uncommon, as in blast from blow, la-st (a burden) from lade. We should also notice M. E. twist, a twig, i. e. forked branch, branch dividing into two; see under Twig. + Du. twisten, to quarrel; from twist, a quarrel. This is the same form, but used in quite a different sense, from the notion of two persons contending; cf. Du. twespalt, discord, twedragt, discord, twestrijd, a duel. + Dan. twiste, to strive, from twist, strife; the Dan. twist also means a twist. + Swed. twista, to strive; from twist, strife. + G. zwist, a twist, also discord; whence zwistig, discordant. And cf. Icel. twistr, the two or 'deuce' in card-playing, where the orig. sense is remarkably preserved. Der. twist, sb. (really an older word, as appears above); twist-er. Also obsol. twiss-el, a double fruit (Nares), put for twist-le, dimin. of twist, a twig.

TWIT, to remind of a fault, reproach. (E.) Put for twite; the i was certainly once long, which accounts for the extraordinary form twight (miswritten for twite, like delight for delite) in Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 12, where it rhymes with light and plight. Palsgrave has the queer spelling twihyte, prob. a misprint for twyle, as it occurs immediately before twyme and under the heading 'T before W: I twihyte one, I caste hym in the tethe or in the nose, Je luy reproche; this term is also northern.' The orig. length of the vowel leaves no doubt that twite is due to M. E. atwiten, to twit, reproach, by loss of initial a; this verb is used in much the same way as the mod. E. word, and was once common; Stratmann gives more than 12 examples. Spelt attwyte, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 198, l. 16; whence atwynges, twittings, reproaches, id. p. 194, l. 6. 'Pat atwyteð hym' = that twitted him, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 16. — A. S. atwitan, to twit, reproach; see Sweet, A. S. Reader, and Grein. [We also find A. S. ed-witan with the same sense, but the prefix differs.] — A. S. at, at, prep. often used as a prefix; and witan, to blame, the more orig. sense being to behold, observe, hence to observe what is wrong, take notice of what is amiss; Grein, ii. 724. For the prefix, see At. The A. S. witan is cognate with Goth. waitjan, occurring in idwaitjan, to reproach (= A. S. edwitan), and in fairwaitjan, to observe intently. A. S. wtan, Goth. waitjan, are derivatives from A. S. and Goth. witan, to know. — ✓ WID, to see; see Wit and Vision.

TWITCH, to pluck, snatch, move suddenly. (E.) M. E. twiechen, a weakened form of twikken, to tweak. 'Twikkyn, twychyn, or sumwhat drawyn, Tractulo;' Prompt. Parv. We find also the comp. verb to-twicken, to pull to pieces, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 53, l. 4; with the pt. t. to-twizte, spelt to-twizt, Will. of Palerne, 2097. Similarly the simple verb twiechen makes the pt. t. twizte, and pp. twist. This explains twight = twitched, pulled, Chaucer, C. T. 7145. Twisch is but a weaker form of Tweak, q. v. Der. twitch, sb.; twitch-er.

TWITTER, to chirp as a bird, to feel a slight trembling of the nerves. (E.) M. E. twiteren; whence 'þilke brid . . . twitriþ' = that bird twitters, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 2, l. 1875. Twitter is a frequentative from a base twit, and means 'to keep on saying twit;' and twit is a lighter or weakened form of tuat, appearing in the old word tuatt-le, now tuaddle; see Twaddle. Again, tuaddle is related to tattle; and as twitter : twattle :: titter : tattle. All these words are of imitative origin. + G. zwitschern, to twitter. And cf. Du. kwetteren, to twitter, warble, chatter; Dan. quidde, Swed. quitra, to chirp, twitter. Der. twitter, sb. The sense of trembling may follow from that of tremulous sound; but a twitter of the nerves is prob. due rather to the influence of twitch, and stands for *twicker. See Twinkle.

TWO, TWAIN, one and one. (E.) The difference between two and twain is one of gender only, as appears from the A. S. forms. Twain is masc., whilst two is fem. and neuter; but this distinction was early disregarded. M. E. twieien, twieze, twiein, twieie, twiei, twey, &c.; also twa, two, in which the w was pronounced; the pronunciation of two as too being of rather late date. 'Us twieine' = us twain, us two, Chaucer, C. T. 1135. 'Sustren two' = sisters two, id. 1021. Our poets seem to use twain and two indifferently. — A. S. twegen, masc. nom. and acc.; twā, fem. nom. and acc.; twā, tu, neut. nom. and acc.; twegra, gen. (all genders); twām, dat. (all genders). The neut. tu already shews an occasional loss of w; and even in A. S. twā was used instead of twegen when nouns of different genders were conjoined; see Grein, ii. 556. + Du. twee. + Icel. tvær, acc. tvá, two. +

Dan. to; also tuende. + Swed. tud, tu. + Goth. twai, masc., twos, fem., twā, neut.; gen. twaddje, dat. twaim; acc. twans, twos, twā. + G. zwei; also zween, only in the masc. gender; also zwo, fem. (rare); O. H. G. zwēnē, zwa, zwo, zwei. + Irish da; Gael. da, do; W. dau, dwy. + Russ. dva. + Lithuan. dvi; also du. + Lat. duo (whence F. deux, Ital. due, Span. dos, Port. dous, E. deuce). + Gk. duo. + Skt. dva, dva.

β. All from the Aryan base DUA or DWA, two. Root uncertain; see Fick, i. 111. γ. In composition, we find, as a prefix, A. S. twi- (E. tui- in tui-ce, tui-light), Icel. tví-, Du. twē-, Dan. and Swed. tve-, G. zwei-, Lat. bi- (for dui-), Gk. di- (for dui-), Skt. dvi-, dvi-.

Der. two-edged; two-fold, a modern substitution for M. E. twifold, Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cviii. 29, A. S. twiſeald, spelt twiſeald in Gen. xliii. 15, so that two-fold should rather be twy-fold. Also a-two, M. E. a two, Chaucer, C. T. 3571 (or 3569), A. S. on tw, Grein, ii. 556, so that the prefix a- = on; see A- (2). Also twain (as above), two-ive, twen-ty, twi-bill, tui-ce, tui-light, twill, twig, twin, twine, twist; bi-, prefix; bis-, prefix, in bis-sextile; di-, prefix, dia-, prefix, dis-, prefix. Also deuce (1).

TYMPANUM, the hollow part of the ear, &c. (L., - Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [He also gives: 'Tympan, the drum of the ear, a frame belonging to a printing-press covered with parchment, . . . pannel of a door,' &c.; this is from F. tympan, 'a tympan, or timbrell, also a taber; . . . also, a printer's timpene,' &c.; Cot.] - Lat. tympanum, a drum; area of a pediment (in architecture); panel of a door. - Gk. τύμπαρον, a drum, roller, area of a pediment, panel of a door. Formed with excrement μ from the rarer τύμπαρον, a drum. - Gk. τυμ-, base of τύπτειν, to strike, beat, beat a drum; see Type. And see Timbrel. Der. tympan-y, a flatulent distension of the belly, Dryden, Mac-Flecknoe, 194, from Gk. τυμπαρίας, a kind of dropsy in which the belly is stretched tight like a drum; the F. form tympanie is given in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave.

TYPE, a mark or figure, emblem, model, a raised letter in printing. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Shak. Rich. III. iv. 4. 244; and in Spenser, F. Q. Intro. to b. i. st. 4. - F. type, a type; in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. - Lat. typum, acc. of typus, a figure, image, type. - Gk. τύπος, a blow, the mark of a blow, stamp, impress, mark, mould, outline, sketch, figure, type, character of a disease. - Gk. τυμ-, base of τύπτειν, to strike, beat. Allied to Skt. tup, tump, to hurt. β. We also find Skt. tud, Lat. tundere (pt. t. tu-tud-i), to strike. These are from parallel bases TU-P, TU-D, to strike; and it is prob. that the orig. forms of these bases were STUP and STUD respectively; cf. Gk. στυφελίζειν, to strike, smite, Goth. stautan, to strike; Fick, i. 826.

Der. typ-ic, from Gk. τυπικός, typical, figurative; typ-ic-al, typ-ic-al-ly; typi-fy, a coined word, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, § 1; type-founder, type-metal; also typo-graphy, orig. in the sense of 'figurative description,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 8. § 15, where the suffix is from Gk. γράφειν, to write; typo-graph-ic, typo-graph-ic-al, -ly; typo-graph-er. And see tympanum, thump, toot (2).

TYPHOON, a violent whirlwind or hurricane in the Chinese seas. (Chinese.) The word typhoon, as at present used, is really Chinese, as will appear hereafter. [But it has been confused with typhon, a word of different origin, but with almost identically the same sense, affording an instance of accidental similarity, like that between Gk. ὅλος and E. whole. Typhoon is quite modern; and when Thomson (Summer, 984) speaks of 'the circling typhon,' he means the Gk. word, as we learn in a note. We find also typhon in Phillips, ed. 1706, and in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 42. It first occurs (I believe) in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ii. c. 48, to represent typhon in Pliny; clearly shewing that it is merely Englished from the Latin form of the Gk. τυφών (better τυφός), a whirlwind. The word, in this form, is properly typhon, as in Thomson.] β. To pass on to typhoon, I find that, in an article on Wind in the Eng. Cyclopædia, Arts, vol. iii. col. 938, the writer first gives the wrong etymology, and then proceeds to give the right one. After first stating the astounding notion that 'it has been supposed that the Chinese designation for a cyclone, typhoon, was . . . originally derived from the Greek' (1), he adds: 'but Mr. Piddington has shewn, after the celebrated sinologist, Dr. Morrison, that it is indubitably a Chinese word. The latter [Dr. Morrison] relates that there are in China temples dedicated to the Tyfoon, the god [or goddess] of which they call Kew woo, the typhoon-mother, in allusion to its producing a gale from every point of the compass, and this mother-gale, with her numerous offspring, or a union of gales from the four quarters of heaven, make conjointly a taefung or typhoon.' [Piddington's work is entitled 'The Sailor's Horn-book for the Law of Storms,' London, 1st ed. 1848, 2nd ed. 1851; it was in the first edit. of this work that the word cyclone was proposed, 'from the Gk. κύκλος, a circle;' see Cycle.] γ. When once the word is known to be Chinese, the etymology is simple. The word merely means 'great wind.' - Chinese ta, great; and fūng (in Canton fung), the wind, a gust, a gale.

δ. Hence ta fang [or ta fung] a gale, a high wind; a typhoon, a word derived from the Cantonese sound of this phrase; Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 155, col. 1, and p. 839, col. 2. ¶ It would be much better to write tyfoon (with f); and to reserve the spelling typhon for the Greek word, which is now obsolete.

TYPHUS, a kind of continued fever. (L., - Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Todd says it is 'one of the modern names given to low fever.' - Lat. typhus; merely a Latinised form from the Gk. - Gk. τύφος, smoke, cloud, mist, stupor, esp. stupor arising from fever; so that 'typhus fever' = stupor-fever. - Gk. τύφειν, to raise a smoke, to smoke. Cognate with Skt. dhūp, to fumigate; whence dhūpa, smoke. From the base DHUP, to smoke, extended from ✓ DHU, to blow, fan a flame, shake; see Fume, Dust. Der. typhous, adj.; typho-id, resembling typhus, from Gk. τύφο-, crude form of τύφος, and ειδ-, resemblance, from εἶδομαι, I seem; see Idol.

TYRANT, a despotic ruler, oppressive master. (F., - L., - Gk.) The word was not originally used in a bad sense; see Trench, Study of Words. The spelling with y is modern, and due to our knowledge of Gk.; the word was really derived from French, and might as well have i. M. E. tirant, but spelt tyrant in Rob. of Glouc. p. 374, l. 13; tiraunt in Chaucer, prol. to Legend of Good Women, l. 374. - O. F. tiran, often spelt tyrant, with excrement t after n; also spelt tyran, tyrant; see Littré. Cotgrave gives: 'Tyran, a tirant.' - Lat. tyrannum, acc. of tyrannus. - Gk. τύραννος, a lord, master, an absolute sovereign; later, a tyrant, usurper. Prob. orig. an adj. signifying kingly, lordly; as in the tragedians. Root uncertain. Der. tyrann-y, M. E. tyrannis or tiranny, Chaucer, C. T. 943 (or 941), from F. tyrannie, 'tyranny,' Cot., Lat. tyrannia, Gk. τυραννία, sovereign sway; also tyrann-ic, F. tyrannique, Lat. tyrannicus, Gk. τυραννικός; tyrann-ic-al, Cor. iii. 3. 2; tyrann-ic-al-ly; tyrann-ous, Meas. iv. 2. 87, a coined word; tyrann-ous-ly; tyrann-ise, K. John, v. 7. 47, from F. tyrannizer, 'to tyrannize, to play the tyrant,' Cot., as if from Lat. tyrannizare = Gk. τυραννίζω, to take the part of a tyrant (hence to act as one).

TYRO, a gross misspelling of Tiro, q. v.

U.

UBIQUITY, omnipresence. (F., - L.) In Bacon's Works, iii. 450, 524 (Parker Soc.); and in Cotgrave. - F. ubiquité, 'an ubiquity,' Cot. It answers to Lat. ubiquitatem, acc. of ubiquitas, a coined word, not in White's Dict.; coined to signify 'a being everywhere,' i.e. omnipresence. - Lat. ubique, wherever, also, everywhere. - Lat. ubi, where; with suffix -que, answering to Gk. τε, and allied to Lat. quis, Gk. τίς, and E. who. β. Ubi is short for *cubi, appearing in ali-cubi, anywhere, ne-cubi, nowhere; and *cubi certainly stands for *quo-bi, where -bi is a suffix as in i-bi, there, due to an old case-ending. It is remarkable that both u-bi (= quo-bi) and the suffix -que are from the same Aryan base KA. See Who. Der. ubiquit-ous, -ous-ly.

UDDER, the breast of a female mammal. (E.) M. E. uðdir (= uðdir); 'Iddyr, or uðdyr of a beeste;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. uðer, in a Gloss. to Prov. vii. (Bosworth): cf. Lat. uberibus in Prov. vii. 18 (Vulgate). + O. Du. uder, wyder (Hexham); Du. uier. + Icel. júgr (an abnormal form; put for *júgr); Swed. jufver, jur; Dan. yver; cf. North E. yure, a Scand. form. + G. euter, O. H. G. üter (cited by Fick). β. All from Teut. type ŪDRA, an udder, Fick, iii. 33. Further cognate with Gael. and Irish uth, Lat. uber (put for *uðer), Gk. οὔθηρ (gen. οὔθηρος), Skt. úðhan, úðhan, an udder. The Aryan type is ŪDHAR. Root unknown. Der. (from Lat. uber) ex-uber-ant.

UGLY, frightful, hateful. (Scand.) M. E. ugly, Chaucer, C. T. 8549; spelt uglike, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2805. We also find ugsom, frightful, Destruction of Troy, 877. - Icel. uggligr, fearful, dreadful, to be feared. - Icel. ugg-r, fear; with suffix -igr = A. S. -lic = E. -like, -ly. Cf. Icel. ugga, to fear. We find also ýggligr, terrible, ýgr, fierce; and ósk, to dread, fear, a reflexive form standing for an older form óga-sk, where -sk = sik, self; also ógn, terror, ógná, to threaten. These words are allied to Goth. ogan, to fear, ogjan, to terrify. β. All from a Teut. verb ŪGAN, to fear, Fick, iii. 12; which is a secondary verb from the Teut. base AG, to fear, appearing in Goth. agis, terror, Icel. agi, E. awe. From ✓ AGH, to choke. See Awe. ¶ The E. awe is rather Scand. than E.; it answers to Icel. agi, not to A. S. oga, which is, however, a related word. This correction of the account given under Awe should be observed. Der. ugli-ness, spelt uglynes, Pricke of Conscience, 917, where it is used to translate Lat. horror. [The account of Awe is right in the second edition.]

UHLAN, ULAN, a lancer. (G., - Polish, - Turkish.) Modern.

G. uhlan, a lancer. — Pol. ulan, an uhlan; which, according to Scheler and Littré, is from Polish ula, a lance (?). β. But, according to Mahn (in Webster) an uhlan is one of a kind of light cavalry of Tataric origin, first introduced into European armies in Poland; the word is not (he thinks) of Polish origin, the Polish ulan, a lancer, being only borrowed from Turkish oğlan, a youth, lad. ¶ This seems right; I find no Polish ula, but only ul, a bee-hive; and the Polish for 'lance' is włocznia. [†]

UKASE, an edict of the Czar. (F., — Russ.) Modern. — F. ukase. — Russ. ukaz, an ordinance, edict; cf. ukazuivat, ukazate, to indicate, shew, order, prescribe. — Russ. u-, prefix; kazate, to shew.

ULCER, a dangerous sore. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 124. — F. ulcere (Cot.), mod. F. ulcère, 'an ulcer, a raw scab.' — Lat. ulcer, stem of ulcus, a sore; cf. Span. and Ital. ulcera, an ulcer. + Gk. ἔλκος, a wound, sore, abscess. β. The orig. sense is prob. 'a laceration'; the Gk. ἐλε-, Lat. ulo-, can only come from a common base WALK, meaning 'to tear,' whence Lith. vilkas, a wolf, Skt. vrika, E. wolf. — √ WARK, to tear; cf. Skt. vrapka, to tear, cut, wound, Lat. lacerare, to lacerate, Gk. λαβίς, a rent. See Wolf and Lacerate. Der. ulcerat-ion, from F. ulceration, 'an ulceration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. ulcerationem; ulcer-ate, from Lat. ulceratus, pp. of ulcerare, to make sore; ulcer-ous, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147, from Lat. adj. ulcerosus, full of sores.

ULLAGE, the unfilled part of a cask. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Ullage of a Cask, is what a cask wants of being full;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — O.F. ullage, a filling up, the act of filling up that which is not quite full (Roquefort). — O.F. euillier, to fill a cask up to the bung; id. The same word as Lyonnais ouillier, olier, to oil, also to fill to the brim. When a flask is nearly full, the people of the S. of France add a little oil to prevent evaporation; so that 'to oil' is also 'to fill up'; see Wedgwood. — O.F. oile, oil. — Lat. oleum. — Gk. ἐλαιον. See Oil. [†]

ULTERIOR, further, more remote. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. — Lat. ulterior, further; comp. of ulter, beyond, on that side, an old adj. only occurring in the abl. ultra (= ultra parte) and ultra, which are used as adverbs with the sense of beyond; ultra is also used as a preposition. β. Ul-ter is also a comparative form (ul-ter-ior being a double comparative, like ex-ter-ior from ex); cf. O. Lat. uls, ouls, beyond, which are allied to O. Lat. ollus, that, olle (= ille), he. Hence ul-ter = more than that way, more in that direction. γ. Prob. allied to inter- and interior; cf. Skt. antara, interior. It is supposed that inter-, interior, intimate are allied to ulter-, ulterior, ultimate, from a common pronom. base ANA, that, he, this; cf. Skt. ana, this. Der. ultra-, prefix, q. v.; ultra-ate, q. v. Also outrage, uttermance (a).

ULTIMATE, furthest, last. (L.) 'The ultimate end of his presence;' Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 1. (R.) — Lat. ultimatus, pp. of ultimare, to come to an end, to be at the last. — Lat. ultimus, last. Ul-ti-mus is a superl. form (like op-ti-mus, in-ti-mus), formed with Aryan suffix -ta-ma from the base ul- appearing in ul-ter, ul-ter-ior; see Uterior. Der. ultimate-ly; also ultimat-um, from Lat. ultimatum, neut. of ultimatus. Der. pen-ultimate, ante-pen-ultimate.

ULTRA, beyond. (L.) Lat. ultra, prefix. — Lat. ultra, beyond, adv. and prep., orig. abl. fem. of O. Lat. ulter, adj.; see Uterior. ¶ The F. form is outré, Ital. oltra, Span. ultra.

ULTRAMARINE, beyond sea; as sb., sky-blue. (Span., — L.) 'Ultramarine, that comes or is brought from beyond sea; also, the finest sort of blew colour used in painting;' Phillips, ed. 1706. And used by Dryden, On Painting, § 354 (R.), who talks of 'ultramarine or azure.' The word is Spanish, the prefix ultra- becoming oltra in Ital. and outré in F.; besides which, only Spanish has the peculiar sense of 'sky-blue.' — Span. ultramario, beyond sea, foreign; also as sb. 'ultramarine, the finest blue colour, produced by calcination from lapis lazuli;' Neuman. — Lat. ultra, beyond; mar-e, sea; and suffix -inus. See Ultra- and Marine. ¶ So called because lapis lazuli was a foreign production; see Azure; and see Umbel.

ULTRAMONTANE, beyond the Alps. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'Ultramontanes, a name given by the Italians to all people living on the hither side of the Alps, who, with respect to their country, are beyond those mountains;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'He is an ultramontane;' Bacon, Observations on a Libel (R.) — F. ultramontain, applied by the French to the Italians themselves, as being beyond the Alps from the French side, and in use as early as the 14th cent. (Littré). This is also the E. view of the word, which is used with reference to the Italians, esp. to those who hold extreme views as to the Pope's supremacy. — Ital. oltramontano, beyond the mountains; Low Lat. ultramontanus, coined in imitation of classical Lat. tramon-tanus. — Lat. ultra, beyond; and mont-, stem of mons, a mountain; with suffix -anus. See Ultra- and Mountain. And see Tramontane. Der. ultramontan-ist, -ism.

ULTRAMUNDANE, beyond the limits of our solar system, beyond the world. (L.) 'Imaginary ultramundane spaces;' Boyle's Works, vol. v. p. 140 (R.) And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. ultramundanus, beyond the world. — Lat. ultra, beyond; and mundanus, worldly. See Ultra- and Mundane.

UMBEL, a form of flower in which a number of stalks, each bearing a flower, radiate from a centre. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it in the form umbella; it has since been shortened to umbel. So called from its likeness in form to an umbrella. — Lat. umbella, a parasol; Juvenal, ix. 50. Dimin. of umbra, a shade. See Umbrella. Der. umbelli-fer-ous, bearing umbels (Phillips), coined with suffix -fer-ous, as in cruci-fer-ous, from Lat. suffix -fer, bearing, and E. -ous (F. -eux, Lat. -osus). Doublet, umbrella.

UMBER, a species of brown ochre. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 114. — F. ombre, used shortly for terre d'ombre, 'beyond-sea azur, an earth found in silver mines, and used by painters for shadowings;' Cot. [As 'beyond-sea azur' is certainly ultramarine, it must be a different preparation from the same material, viz. lapis lazuli; see Ultramarine.] — Ital. ombra, used shortly for terra d'ombra, umber (see Meadows, in the Ital.-Eng. part). Wedgwood cites from a late edition of Florio: 'terra d'ombra, a kind of earth found in silver-mines used by painters for shadowings.' Lit. 'earth of shadow,' i. e. earth used for shadowing; cf. Ital. ombreggiare, to shadow. The Ital. ombra is from Lat. umbra, shadow; see Umbra. ¶ See Wedgwood (p. 746), who notes that 'the fable of the pigment taking its name from Umbria [which is only a guess by Malone] is completely disproved by the Span. name sombra (shade); sombra di Venecia, Venetian umber; sombra de hueso, bone-umber.' Some paintings of the Venetian school in the Fitzwilliam Museum are remarkable for their umbered or sombre appearance. Cf. also F. ombré, 'umbered or shadowed,' Cot.; and see Sombre.

UMBILICAL, pertaining to the navel. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. umbilical, 'umbilicall, belonging to the navell;' Cot. — F. umbilic, 'the navell or middle of;' id. — Lat. umbilicum, acc. of umbilicus, the navel, middle, centre. Allied to Gk. ὀμφαλός, the navel; umbilicus being really an adjectival form, from a sb. umbilus * = ὀμφαλός. Cf. Lat. umbo, a boss. β. 'While we are brought, for Greek and Latin, to a root AMBH [nasalised form of ABH], the corresponding words in the other languages come from a root NABH, which should probably be regarded as the older form;' Curtius, i. 367. Cf. Skt. nābhi, the navel; and see Navel, Nave (1). Thus Lat. umbilicus stands for nūmbilicus, and ὀμφαλός for νομφαλός, by the common loss of initial n.

UMBRAGE, a shade or screen of trees, suspicion of injury, offence. (F., — L.) The proper sense is 'shadow,' as in Hamlet, v. 2. 125; thence it came to mean a shadow of suspicion cast upon a person, suspicion of injury, &c. 'It is also evident that St. Peter did not carry himself so as to give the least overture or umbrage to make any one suspect he had any such preëminence;' Bp. Taylor, A Dissuasive from Popery, p. i. § 8 (R.) — F. umbrage (also umbrage), 'an umbrage, shade, shadow; also jealousy, suspicion, an inciting of; whence donner umbrage à, to discontent, make jealous of;' Cot. — F. ombre, a shadow; with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum); cf. Lat. umbraticus, belonging to shade. — Lat. umbra, a shadow. Root unknown. Der. umbrage-ous, shadowy, from F. ombrageus, 'shady, . . . umbragious,' Cot.; umbrageous-ly, -ness. And see umb-el, umbr-ella, sombre.

UMBRELLA, a screen carried in the hand to protect from sunshine or rain. (Ital., — L.) Now used to protect from rain, in contradistinction to a parasol; but formerly used to protect from sunshine, and rather an old word. Cotgrave translates F. ombraire by 'an umbrello, or shadow,' and F. ombrelle by 'an umbrello.' 'Now you have got a shadow, an umbrella, To keep the scorching world's opinion From your fair credit;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1. 2. — Ital. umbrella (see below); better spelt ombrella, 'a fan, a canopy, . . . also a kind of round fan or shadowing that they use to ride with in summer in Italy, a little shade;' Florio. Dimin. of Ital. ombra, a shade. — Lat. umbra, a shade; see Umbra. ¶ The true classical Lat. form is umbella; umbrella is an Ital. diminutive, regularly formed from ombra; the spelling with u is found even in Italian. Florio has umbella, umbrella, 'a little shadow, a little round thing that women bare in their hands to shadow them; also, a broad brim hat to keepe off heate and rayne; also, a kind of round thing like a round skreen that gentlemen vse in Italie in time of sommer.' This account of the word, in the edition of Florio of 1598, clearly implies that the word umbrella was not, in that year, much used in English; for he does not employ the word. Doublet, umbel.

UMPIRE, a third person called in to decide a dispute between two others. (F., — L.) This curious word has lost initial n, and stands for numpire, once a common form. See remarks under the letter N. Spelt unpire in L. L. L. i. 1. 170. M. E. nompere or noumpere. 'N(o)umpere, or oumpere, Arbitrator;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt noumpere, noumpere, noumpier, P. Plowman, B. v. 337; nompere, id. C. vii. 388; noumpere, id. A. v. 181. In Wyclif, Prologue to Romans, ed. Forshall and Madden, p. 302, l. 24, we have noumpere, where six MSS. read umpere. It also occurs, spelt nompere, in the Testament of Love, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 287. Tyrwhitt shews (in his Glossary to Chaucer) that the Lat. impar was sometimes used in the sense of arbitrator, and rightly suggests a connection with mod. F. nonpair, odd. β. The M. E. nompere exactly represents the O. F. form nomper, as it would have been spelt in the 14th century. Later, it occurs in Cotgrave as nonpair, 'peerless, also odd'; and an earlier spelling nonper is given by Roquefort, with the sense of peerless. It is simply a compound of F. non, not, and O. F. per, a peer, an equal; from Lat. non, not, and par, equal; see Non- and Peer (1). γ. The O. F. nonper became nomper as a matter of course, since n before p regularly becomes m, as in hamper = hanaper; see Hamper (2). It may also be noted that it is not the only M. E. word in which the same F. prefix occurs, since we also have M. E. nonpower, i. e. lack of power, in P. Plowman, C. xx. 292, spelt nonpower, noumpower, and even unpower. The last form suggests that the loss of initial n was due to some confusion between the F. non and E. un, with much the same negative sense. Hence a numpire or an umpire was a non-peer or an un-peer, orig. the former. δ. The sense is curious; but the use of Lat. impar, lit. odd, in the sense of arbitrator or umpire sufficiently explains it; the umpire is the odd man, the third man, called in to settle a dispute between two others. It may also be noted that pair and peer are doublets, as already shewn.

UN- (1), negative prefix. (E.) Prefixed to substantives, adjectives, and adverbs; distinct from the verbal prefix un- below. M. E. un-.—A. S. un-; very common as a neg. prefix. + Du. on-. + Icel. ú- or ó- (for un-), the long ú being due to loss of n). + Dan. u-. + Swed. o-. + Goth. un-. + G. un-. + W. an- (cf. Gael. neo-). + Lat. in-. + Gk. dv-, d-; orig. dva-; see Curtius, i. 381. + Zend. ana- (Curtius); cf. Pers. na-. + Skt. an-. β. All from Aryan AN-, negative prefix, of which the oldest form was prob. ANA (Curtius); see Fick, i. 484. γ. If ANA is really the true orig. form, it is possible that Skt. na, not, is the same word; cf. Lat. ne, not, Gk. μη-, neg. prefix, Goth. ni, not, Russ. ne-, neg. prefix, Gael. neo-, neg. prefix, Lithuan. ne, no.

B. It is unnecessary to give all the words in which this prefix occurs; it is used before words of various origin, both English and French. The following may be noted in particular. 1. It occurs in words purely English, and appears in many of these in Anglo-Saxon; Grein gives A. S. words, for example, answering to un-clean, un-even, un-fair, un-whole, un-smooth, un-soft, un-still, un-wise. Some compounds are now disused, or nearly so; such as un-bold, un-blike, un-little, un-right, un-sad, un-slow (all in Grein). In the case of past participles, the prefix is ambiguous; thus un-bound may either mean 'not bound,' like A. S. unbunden; or it may mean 'opened,' being taken as the pp. of unbind, verb. 2. Un- is frequently prefixed to words of F. origin; examples such as un-feyned (unfeigned) and un-stable occur in Chaucer; we even find un-famous in House of Fame, iii. 56, where we should now say not famous. Palsgrave has un-able, un-certain, un-cortoyse (uncourteous), un-gentyll, un-gracious, un-honest, un-maryed, un-parfytte (imperfect), un-profytable, un-raysonable (unreasonable). 3. In some cases, such as un-couth, the simple word (without the prefix) is obsolete; such cases are discussed below.

UN- (2), verbal prefix, expressing the reversal of an action. (E.) In the verb to un-lock, we have an example of this; it expresses the reversal of the action expressed by lock; i. e. it means to open again that which was closed by locking. This is quite distinct from the mere negative prefix, with which many, no doubt, confound it. M. E. un-, A. S. un-; only used as a prefix in verbs. + Du. ont-; as in ont-laden, to unload, from laden, to load. + G. ent-, as in ent-laden, to unload; O. H. G. ant-, as in ant-lúkan, to unlock. + Goth. and-, as in and-bindan, to unbind. β. It is precisely the same prefix as that which appears as an- in E. an-swer, and as and- in A. S. and-svarian; and it is cognate with Gk. dv-, used only in the not very different sense of 'in opposition to'; thus, whilst E. un-say is to reverse what is said, to deny it, the Gk. dv-ti-léγειν is to with-say or gain-say, to deny what is said by others. See Answer and Anti-. B. It is unnecessary to give all the words with this prefix; I may note that Grein gives the A. S. verb corresponding to E. un-do, viz. undón; also un-týnan, to unfasten, open, now obsolete; Bosworth gives unbindan, to unbind, unfealdan, to unfold, unlúcan, to unlock, and a few others, but verbs with this prefix are not very numerous in A. S. β. However, it was so freely employed before verbs of French origin, that we have now many such words in use; Palsgrave has un-arm, un-bend, un-bind, un-boukell (unbuckle), un-bridle, un-clasp, &c., with others that are obsolete, such as un-custume, to disuse a custom. γ. The most common and remarkable of the mod. E. verbs with this prefix are: un-bar, -bend, -bind, -bolt, -bosom, -brace, -buckle, -burden, -button, -case, -chain, -clasp, -close, -clothe, -coil, -couple, -cover, -curl, -deceive, -do, -dress, -earth, -fasten, -fetter, -fix, -fold, -furl, -gird, -hand, -harness, -hinge, -hook, -horse, -house, -kennel, -kmit, -knot, -lace, -lade, -learn, -limber, -load, -lock, -loose, -make, -man, -mask, -moor, -muffle, -muzzle, -nerve, -pack, -people, -ravel, -rig, -robe, -roll, -roof, -root, -saddle, -say, -screw, -seal, -seat, -settle, -sex, -shackle, -ship, -stop, -string, -thread, -tie, -tune, -twine, -twist, -warp, -weave, -wind, -wrap, -yoke. See further under the simple words. ¶ Note the ambiguity in the case of past participles; for which see under Un- (1).

UN- (3), prefix. (O. Low G.) See Unto, Until.

UNANIMOUS, of one mind. (L.) 'The universall and unanimous belief;' Camden, Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588 (R.) Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.), from Lat. unanimus, of one mind.—Lat. un-us, one; and animus, mind; see Unit and Animosity. Der. unanimously; also unanimity, spelt unanimite in The Libell of Englishe Policye (A.D. 1436), l. 1068, (quoted in Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 206), from F. unanimité, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littré), from Lat. acc. unanimitem, due to the adj. unanimis, by-form of unanimus.

UNANELED, without having received extreme unction. (E.; partly L.,—Gk.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 77. Lit. 'not on-oiled.'—A. S. un-, not; on, upon, on; and elan, to oil, an unauthorised verb regularly formed from ele, sb., oil. The A. S. ele is prob. not a Teut. word, but borrowed from Lat. oleum, oil, Gk. ἐλαιον. See Un- (1), On, and Oil; and see note to Anneal. [†]

UNCIAL, pertaining to a certain style of writing. (L.) 'Uncial, belonging to an ounce or inch;' Blount, ed. 1674. Applied to a particular form of letters in MSS. from the 4th to the 10th centuries. The letters are of large size, and the name was prob. applied at first to large initial letters, as the word signifies 'of the size of an inch.' Phillips gives uncial only in its other sense, viz. 'belonging to an ounce.' Cotgrave gives F. uncial, 'weighing as much as an ounce'; but he also gives lettres unciales, 'huge letters, great letters.'—Lat. uncialis, belonging to an inch, or to an ounce.—Lat. uncia, an inch, an ounce. See Inch and Ounce (1).

UNCLE, the brother of one's father or mother. (F.,—L.) M. E. uncle, uncle; Rob. of Glouc. p. 58, l. 5.—F. oncle, 'an uncle'; Cot.—Lat. avunculus, acc. of avunculus, a mother's brother; avunculus was contracted to avunculum, whence F. oncle. The lit. sense is 'little grandfather'; it is a double dimin. (with suffixes -cu-lu-) from avus, a grandfather. Orig. an expression of affectionate relationship, allied to Lat. avere, to be fortunate, used as a word of greeting; cf. Skt. av, to be pleased. See Ave. ¶ The G. onkel is also from Latin. The E. nuncle, K. Lear, i. 4. 117, is due to the phr. my nuncle, corrupted from mine uncle. [†] UNCOMEATABLE, unapproachable. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the Tatler, no. 12. A strange compound, with prefix un- (1) and suffix -able, from Come and At.

UNCOUTH, unfamiliar, odd, awkward, strange. (E.) The lit. sense is simply 'unknown'; hence strange, &c. M. E. uncouth, strange, Chaucer, C. T. 10598. A common word; see Stratmann.—A. S. uncūð, unknown, strange (common); Grein, ii. 616.—A. S. un-, not; and cūð, known, pp. of cunnan, to know, but used as an adj.; Grein, i. 172. See further under Can (1); and see Un- (1). ¶ The Lowland Sc. unco is the same word; and, again, the prov. E. unked or unkid (spelt unkard in Halliwell), strange, unusual, odd, also lonely, solitary, is the same word, but confused in form with M. E. unkid, not made known, where kid (= A. S. cýðed) is the pp. of the causal verb cýðan, to make known, a derivative from cūð by vowel-change from ú to ý; Grein, i. 181.

UNCTION, an anointing, a salve; also, warmth of address, sanctifying grace. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 145, iv. 7. 142. 'His inward unction wyl worke with our diligence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 763 (R.) M. E. unction; spelt unccion, Trevisa, i. 113.—F. unction, 'unction, an anointing'; Cot.—Lat. unctionem, acc. of unctio, an anointing.—Lat. unctus, pp. of ungere, to anoint; see Unguent. Der. unctuous, Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 24 (R.), also spelt unctious, Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 195 (first folio), and even uncteous, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 12, p. 510, from F. onctueux, 'oily, fatty,' Cot., from Low Lat. unctuosus (Ducange); due to Lat. unctu-, stem of unctus (gen. unctūs), an anointing. Hence unctu-osity, from F. onctuosité, 'unctuosité'; Cot.

UNDER, beneath, below. (E.) M. E. under, under, Chaucer, C. T. 1697.—A. S. under; Grein, ii. 617. + Du. onder. + Icel. undir. + Swed. and Dan. under. + Goth. undar. + G. unter; O. H. G. untar. β. Further allied to Lat. inter (Oscan anter), within;

Skt. antara, interior; see Inter-. Curtius, i. 384. ¶ But Fick (iii. 38) connects it with Lat. inferus. See Under- below. Der. under-n, q. v.

UNDER-, prefix, beneath. (E.) The same word as the above. Very common; the chief words with this prefix are under-bred, -current, -done, -gird (Acts, xxvii. 17), under-go (A. S. undergân, Bosworth), under-graduate, i. e. a student who is under a graduate, one who has not taken his degree, under-ground, -growth, under-hand, adv., secretly, Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 34, also as adj., As You Like It, i. i. 146, under-lay (A. S. underleggan, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 190, l. 5), under-lie (A. S. underlicgan, Bosworth), under-line. Also under-ling, Gower, C. A. iii. 80, l. 10, Layamon, 19116, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also under-mine, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 20, early version; under-m-ost, with double superl. suffix, as explained under Aftermost; under-neath, M. E. undirneþ, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 5, l. 2074, compounded like Beneath, q. v. Also under-plot, sb., -prop, vb., -rate, -sell; -set, Ancrén Riwe, p. 254, l. 5; under-sign; under-stand, q. v.; under-state; under-take, q. v.; under-tone, -value, -wood (Ben Jonson), -write, -writer.

UNDERN, a certain period of the day. (E.) The time denoted by undern differed at different periods. In Chaucer, C. T. 15228, it denotes some hour of the fore-noon, perhaps about 11 o'clock. 'At undern and at midday,' O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 33; with reference to the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard. 'Abuten undern deies' = about the undern-tide of the day, Ancrén Riwe, p. 24; where perhaps an earlier hour is meant, about 9 a.m. = A. S. undern; whence under-tid, undern-tide, Matt. xx. 3; here it means the third hour, i. e. 9 a.m. + Icel. undorn, mid-afternoon; also mid-forenoon. + M. H. G. undern, O. H. G. untarn, a time of the day. + Goth. undaurni; only in the compound undaurni-mats, a morning-meal, Luke, xiv. 12.

β. The true sense is merely 'intervening period,' which accounts for its vagueness; the G. unter preserves the sense of amidst or between, though it is the same word as E. under; cf. also Lat. inter, between. The Teut. type is UNDURNI, Fick, iii. 34; extended from UNDAR, under; see Under. ¶ The word is by no means obsolete, but appears in various forms in prov. E., such as aandorn, aunder, ordnorns, doundrins, doundinner, all in Ray, aunder, in Halliwell, &c. (Here Nares is wrong.)

UNDERSTAND, to comprehend. (E.) M. E. understanden, understanden, a strong verb; the pp. appears as understanden, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1681. The weak pp. understanded occurs in the Prayer-book. = A. S. understandan, lit. to stand under or among, hence to comprehend (cf. Lat. intel-ligere); Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, c. xxxix. § 8. = A. S. under, under; and standan, to stand; see Under and Stand. Der. understand-ing, spelt onderstandinge, Avenbite of Inwyt, p. 24, l. 8.

UNDERTAKE, to take upon oneself, attempt. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) M. E. undertaken, strong verb; pt. t. undertok, see Havelok, 377. It first appears in the Ormulum, l. 10314. The latter part of the word is of Scand. origin; see Under and Take. β. The word is a sort of translation of (and was suggested by) the A. S. underniman, to understand, receive, Matt. xix. 12, and A. S. underfôn, to receive, Matt. x. 41, John, xviii. 3. Neither of these words has precisely the same sense, but both niman and fôn have the exact sense of E. take (Icel. taka). The real A. S. word, with the same prefix and the exact sense, is undergitan (lit. to underget), John, viii. 27, xii. 16. Der. undertak-ing, Haml. ii. 1. 104; undertak-er, orig. one who takes a business in hand, Oth. iv. i. 224, Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 349.

UNDULATE, to wave, move in waves. (L.) In Thomson, Summer, 982. Phillips, ed. 1706, has undulate only as a pp. Blount, ed. 1674, gives undulated and undulation. = Lat. undulatus, undulated, wavy. = Lat. *undula, a little wave; not used, but a regular dimin. of unda, a wave, properly 'water.' + A. S. ýð. + Icel. unnr. β. Unda is a nasalised form allied to Gk. ὕδωρ, water, and to E. water. It is cognate with Skt. uda, water, Russ. voda, water; cf. Skt. und, to wet, Lithuan. vandũ, water. = WAD, to wet; see Water. Der. undulat-ion (Phillips); undulat-ory. Also (from unda) ab-ound, ab-und-ant, in-und-ate, red-ound, red-und-ant, super-ab-ound.

UNEATH, scarcely, with difficulty. (E.) Obsolete; in Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 38; misused, with the sense 'almost,' id. i. 11. 4. M. E. uneþe, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 134. = A. S. unedðe, with difficulty, Gen. xxvii. 30; adv. from adj. unedðe, difficult, Grein, ii. 620. = A. S. un-, not; and eaððe, or eaððe, easy, commonly used in the adv. form eaððe, easily, Grein, i. 254; we also find eððe, ýððe, easy, id. i. 230, ii. 767. + O. Sax. oði, easy. + O. H. G. oði, desert, empty, also easy; G. oðe, deserted, desolate. + Icel. auðr, empty. + Goth. auþis, desert, waste. β. All from Teut. type AUTHA, desert, waste; hence easy to occupy, free, easy; Fick, iii. 5. Cf. Lat. otium, leisure; Skt. av, to be pleased. Prob. from WAD, to be satisfied with.

UNGAINLY, awkward. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) M. E. un-

geinliche, used as an adv., awkwardly, horribly, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 9, l. 14. Formed by adding -liche (-ly) to the adj. ungein, inconvenient, spelt ungayne in Le Bone Florence, l. 1421, in Ritson, Met. Romances, iii. 60. = A. S. un-, not, see Un- (1); and Icel. gegn, ready, serviceable, convenient, allied to gegna, to meet, to suit, gegn, against, and E. again; see Again. Cf. Icel. ógegn (ungain), ungainly, ungente. Der. ungainli-ness.

UNGUENT, ointment. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. unguentum, ointment. = Lat. unguent-, stem of pres. part. of ungere, ungere, to anoint. + Skt. añj, to anoint, smear. = AG, ANG, to anoint; Fick, i. 479. Der. (from ungere, pp. unctus) unct-ion, q. v.; also oint-ment, an-oint.

UNICORN, a fabulous animal with one horn. (F., = L.) M. E. unicorne, Ancrén Riwe, p. 120, l. 9. = F. unicorne, 'an unicorn'; Cot. = Lat. unicornem, acc. of unicornis, adj., one-horned. = Lat. uni- = uno-, crude form of unus, one; and corn-u, a horn, cognate with E. horn. See Unity and Horn.

UNIFORM, consistent, having throughout the same form or character. (F., = L.) Spelt uniforme in Minshew, ed. 1627; uniform in Cotgrave. = F. uniforme, 'uniform,' Cot. = Lat. uniformem, acc. of uniformis, having one form. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and form-a, a form; see Unity and Form. Der. uniform, sb., a like dress for persons who belong to the same body; uniform-ly; uniform-i-ty, from F. uniformité, 'uniformity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uniformitatem.

UNILITERAL, consisting of one letter. (L.) The only such words in E. are a, l, and o. Coined from Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and liter-a, a letter; with suffix -al; cf. bi-literal, tri-literal.

UNION (1), concord, harmony, confederation in one. (F., = L.) Spelt unyon, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 233 (R.). = F. union, 'an union,' Cot. = Lat. unionem, acc. of unio, oneness. = Lat. un-us, one, cognate with E. One, q. v. And see Unity.

UNION (2), a large pearl. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 283. Really the same word as the above; the Lat. unio means (1) oneness, (2) a single pearl of a large size. Onion is also the same word. See above; and see Onion. Doublet, onion. [†] UNIQUE, single, without a like. (F., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = F. unique, 'single,' Cot. = Lat. unicum, acc. of unicus, single. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; with suffix -cus (Aryan -ka). See Unity.

UNISON, concord, harmony. (F., = L.) 'In concordēs, discordēs, notes and clifles in tunes of unisonne;' Gascoigne, Grene Knight's Farewell to Fansie, st. 7; Works, i. 413. = F. unisson, 'an unison,' Cot. [The spelling with ss is remarkable, as it is not etymological.] = Lat. unisonum, acc. of unisonus, having the same sound as something else. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and sonus, a sound. See Unity and Sound (3). Der. unison-ous; uni-son-ant (from sonant-, stem of pres. part. of sonare, to sound); unison-ance.

UNIT, a single thing, person, or number. (F., = L.) Not derived from Lat. unitum, which would mean 'united,' but a purely E. formation, made by dropping the final letter of unit-y. 'Unit, Unite, or Unity, in arithmetic, the first significant figure or number 1; in Notation, if a number consist of 4 or 5 places, that which is outermost towards the right hand is called the Place of Unites;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The number 1 is still called unity. See Unity.

UNITE, to make one, join. (L.) 'I vnite, I bringe diverse thynges together in one;' Palsgrave. = Lat. uniri-us, pp. of unire, to unite. = Lat. un-us, one; see Unity.

UNITY, oneness, union in one, concord. (F., = L.) M. E. vnitee, vnite, vnite, Gower, C. A. iii. 181; P. Plowman, C. vi. 10. = F. unité, 'an unity,' Cot. = Lat. unitatem, acc. of unitas, oneness. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; with suffix -itas. The Lat. unus is cognate with E. One, q. v. Der. unit-ari-an, a coined word, added by Todd to Johnson; hence unit-ari-an-ism. Doublet, unit, q. v. We also have (from Lat. un-us) un-ite, un-ion, uni-que, uni-son, uni-vers-al, uni-corn, uni-form, uni-literal, uni-vocal; also un-an-ymous, dis-un-ite, dis-un-ion, re-un-ite, re-un-ion, tri-une. Also null, q. v.; an-nul, q. v.

UNIVERSAL, comprehending the whole, extending to the whole. (F., = L.) M. E. uniuersal; spelt uniuersall, Gower, C. A. iii. 91, l. 25. = F. universel (sometimes universal in the 14th century), 'universall,' Cot. = Lat. universalis, belonging to the whole. = Lat. universum, the whole; neut. of uniuersus, turned into one, combined into a whole. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and uersus, pp. of vertere, to turn; see Unity and Verse. Der. uniuersal-ly, uniuersal-i-ty, uniuersal-ism. Also (from F. uniuers = Lat. uniuersum) universe, Henry V., iv. chor. 3; also uniuers-i-ty, orig. a community, corporation, M. E. uniuersite, used in the sense of 'world' in Wyclif, James, iii. 6, from F. uniuersité, 'university, also an university,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uniuersitatem.

UNIVOCAL, having one voice, having but one meaning. (L.) Now little used; it is the antithesis of equi-vocal, i.e. having a variable meaning. In Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) Cf. F. univoque, 'of one only sense'; Cot. — Lat. univoc-us, univocal; with suffix -alis. — Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and voc-, stem of vox, voice, sound. See Unity and Voice.

UNKEMPT, not combed. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 29; and Shep. Kal. November, 50; in both places in the metaphorical sense of rough or rude. A contr. form of unkemmed. From un-, not; and M. E. kembed, kempt, combed, Chaucer, C. T. 2145 (or 2143). Kemmed is the pp. of kemben, to comb, P. Plowman, B. x. 18. — A. S. cemban, to comb; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 108, l. 6; formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from A. S. camb, a comb; see Comb.

UNLESS, if not, except. (E.) Formerly written onlesse, onlesse, with o; Horne Tooke remarks: 'I believe that William Tyndal . . . was one of the first who wrote this word with a u;' and he cites: 'The scripture was given, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unless then we entend to be idle disputers;' Tyndal, Prol. to the 5 books of Moses. Horne Tooke gives 16 quotations with the spellings onles and onlesse; the earliest appears to be: 'It was not possible for them to make whole Cristes cote without seme, onlesse certeyn grete men were brought out of the way;' Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, an. 1413. We may also note: 'Charitie is not perfect onles that it be burninge,' T. Lupset, Treatise of Charitie, p. 8. [But Horne Tooke's own explanation of the phrase is utterly wrong.] Palsgrave, in his list of conjunctions, gives onlesse and onlesse that. β. The full phrase was, as above, on lesse that, but that was soon dropped and seldom retained. Here on is the ordinary preposition; and lesse is mod. E. less; see On and Less. The sense is 'in less than,' or 'on a less supposition.' Thus, if charity be (fully) burning, it is perfect; in a less case, it is imperfect. The use of on in the sense of in is extremely common in M. E., as in on live = in life (see Alive), on sleep = in sleep (see Asleep); and see numerous examples in Stratmann. On less or in less is similar to at least, at most.

¶ Mätzner, and Mahn (in Webster) wrongly explain un- in unless as a negative prefix; this is contrary to all the evidence, and makes nonsense of the phrase. Morris (Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 332) rightly gives on lesse as the orig. form, but does not explain it. Chambers, Etym. Dict., correctly gives: 'unless, lit. on less, at or for less.' [†]

UNRULY, disregarding restraint. (Hybrid; E. and F., — L.; with E. suffix.) In James, iii. 8, where Wyclif has unpesible; here the E. version translates the Gk. ἀκατάχρητος, i.e. that cannot be ruled. Thus unruly is for unruli-ly; it does not seem to be a very old word, though going back nearly to A. D. 1500. 'Ye . . . unruli-ly haue ruled,' Sir J. Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) From Un- and Rule; with suffix -ly. ¶ It is remarkable that the M. E. unro, unrest, might have produced a somewhat similar adj., viz. unroly, unrouly, restless. But Stratmann gives no example of the word, and the vowel-sound does not quite accord; so that any idea of such a connection may be rejected. This M. E. unro is from A. S. un-, not, and rōw, rest (Grein, ii. 384), cognate with Icel. ró, G. ruhe, rest, from the same root as Rest; Pick, iii. 246. We must also note that unruled occurs as equivalent to unruly, as in 'theyse unrulyd company,' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1380-1. Der. unruli-ly, -ness. [†]

UNTIL, till. to. (O. Low G. and Scand.) M. E. until, P. Plowman, B. prol. 227; Pricke of Conscience, 555; spelt ontil, Havelok, 761. A substituted form of unto, by the use of til for to; the two latter words being equivalent in sense. M. E. til (E. till) is of Scand. origin, as distinguished from to (= A. S. tō). See Till, and see further under Unto.

UNTO, even, to, to. (O. Low G.) Not found in A. S. M. E. unto, Chaucer, C. T. 490 (or 488); earlier in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 1, l. 7. It stands for und-to; where to is the usual E. prep. (A. S. tō), and und is the O. Fries. und (also ont), unto, O. Sax. und, unto (whence un-, shortened for und-te, unto, where te = A. S. tō, as well as untō, untuo, unto, shortened for und-tō, und-tuo). 'Fōrun folk untō = folk went unto him; Heliand, 2814. So also Goth. und, unto, until, as far as, up to; 'und Bethlahaim' = unto Bethlehem, Luke. ii. 15; whence un- (= und te), until. It is remarkable that the word is common in A. S. in a different form, viz. ōð; this form is due to loss of n, so that A. S. ōð: Goth. und :: A. S. tōð: Goth. tunthūs (tooth). β. The origin of Goth. und is obscure; perhaps it is only another form of Goth. and-, prefix, cognate with Gk. anti, in which case un- in unto is allied to the verbal prefix un-; see Un- (2). And see Until.

UP, towards a higher place, aloft. (E.) M. E. up, up; common. — A. S. up, upp, up, adv.; Grein, ii. 630. + Du. op. + Icel. upp. + Dan. op. + Swed. up. + Goth. iup. + G. auf; O. H. G. uf. β. All from the Teut. type up, up; closely allied to Teut. UF, as seen in Goth. uf, under, uf-ar, over (comparative form), and in E. over; further allied to Lat. sub, under, Gk. ὑπὸ, under, Skt. upa, near, on, under.

See the full account under Over. Der. upp-er, M. E. upper, King Alisaunder, 5691; Chaucer uses over in the same sense, as in ouer lippe = upper lip, C. T. 133. Hence upper-most (not an old form), as in 'euen vpon the uppermost pinnacle of the temple,' Udall, On St. Luke, c. 4; this is not a correct form, but made on the model of Aftermost, q. v. Also up-most, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 24, which appears to be simply a contraction for uppermost, though really a better form. And see Up- below, and Upon; also Open.

UP-, prefix. (E.) The same word as the above. The chief words in which it occurs are: up-bear, up-bind, up-braid, q. v.; up-heave, Shak. Venus, 482; up-hill; up-hoard, Hamlet, i. 1. 136; up-hold, upholsterer, q. v.; up-land, up-land-ish = M. E. uplondysche in Prompt. Parv.; up-lift, Temp. iii. 3. 68; up-right, A. S. upriht, uppriht, Grein, ii. 632; up-ris-ing, L. L. L. iv. 1. 2, with which cf. M. E. uprissinge, resurrection, Rob. of Glouc. p. 379, l. 17; up-roar, q. v.; up-root, Dryden, St. Cecilia's Day, 49; up-set = set up, Gower, C. A. i. 53, l. 15, also to overset, id. iii. 283, l. 18; up-shot, Hamlet, v. 2. 395; up-side; up-side-down, q. v.; up-start, q. v.; up-ward, A. S. upward, Grein, ii. 632; up-ward-s, A. S. upwardes, adv., ibid.

UPAS, the poison-tree of Java. (Malay.) Not in Todd's Johnson; the deadly effects of the tree have been grossly exaggerated. — Malay upas, 'a milky juice extracted from certain vegetables, operating, when mixed with the blood, as a most deadly poison, concerning the effects of which many exaggerated stories have been related; see Hist. of Sumatra, ed. 3, p. 110. Pūhn upas, the poison-tree, arbor toxicaria Macassarensis; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 24. The Malay pūhn means 'tree'; id. p. 239.

UPBRAID, to reproach. (E.) M. E. upbreiden, to upbraid; we also find upbreid, sb., a reproach. 'The deuyls ranne to me with grete scornes and upbraydis;' and again, 'wykyl angesles of the deuylle upbreidyn me;' Monk of Evesham, c. 27; ed. Arber, p. 67. Upbreiding, sb., a reproach, occurs in Layamon, 19117; also upbreid, upbraid, sb., id. 26036. — A. S. upp, up, and bregdan, bredan, to braid, weave, also to lay hold of, pull, draw, used (like Icel. bregða) in a variety of senses; so that up-braid is simply compounded of Up and Braid, q. v. The orig. sense of upbraid was prob. to lay hands on, lay hold of, hence to attack, lay to one's charge. Cf. 'Bregðð sóna feond be ðám feaxe' = he shall soon seize the fiend by the hair, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Grein, 99; and see bregdan in Grein, i. 138. Cf. Dan. bekreide, to upbraid, which only differs in the prefix (Dan. be = E. be). Der. upbraid-ing, sb., as above. The alleged A. S. upgebredan (Somner) is unauthorized.

UPHOLSTERER, one who supplies beds and furniture. (E.) Formerly called an upholder. An equivalent form was upholdster, used by Caxton (see Prompt. Parv., p. 512, note 2), with suffix -ster for -er; see -ster. Hence, by a needless addition of -er (as in poulter-er), was made upholdster-er, whence the corrupt form upholsterer, by loss of d after l. 'Upholdster or upholsterer, a tradesman that deals in all sorts of chamber-furniture;' Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. upholder, a broker, a tradesman, P. Plowman, B. v. 325; C. xiii. 218. At the latter reference we read: 'Vpholderes on the hul shullen haue hit to selle' = upholders on the hill [Cornhill] shall have it to sell. It is clear from this and from my note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 377, that the upholder was a broker or auctioneer; so that the name may have arisen from his holding up wares for inspection while trying to sell them. The derivation is from Up and Hold. Cf. 'Vpholderes, þat sellythe smal thyngys;' Prompt. Parv. Der. upholster-y, a coined word, from the form upholster.

UPON, on, on the top of. (E.) M. E. upon, upon, prep., Chaucer, C. T. 1111. — A. S. uppon, upon, Gen. xxii. 2; also uppan, Matt. xxi. 44. — A. S. upp, up, above, adv.; and on, on, on. See Up and On. + Icel. up á, upp á, upon; where up = A. S. up, and á (for an) = A. S. on. + Swed. på, upon, clearly a shortened form of upp á, where á = E. on; Dan. paa, upon.

UPROAR, a tumult, clamour, disturbance. (Du.) In Acts, xvii. 5, xix. 40, xx. 1, xxi. 31, 38; in Shak. Lucrece, 427, we have: 'his eye . . . Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins;' where there is no notion of noise, but only of excitement or disturbance. 'To haue all the worlde in an uprore, and vnquieted with warres;' Udall, on St. Mark, preface (R.) Spelt upore in Levins. It is a corrupt form, due to confusion with E. roar, with which it has no real connection; it is not an E. word at all, but borrowed from Dutch. — Du. oproer, 'uprore, tumult, commotion, mutiny, or sedition; oproer maken, to make an uprore; oproerigh, seditious, or tumultuous;' Hexham. — Du. op, up; and roeren, to stir, move, touch; so that uproer = a stirring up, commotion, excitement. [Formerly also spelt rueren (Hexham); the Du. oe is pronounced as E. oo; Du. boer = E. boor.] + Swed. uppror, revolt, sedition; allied to upp, up, and röra, to stir. + Dan. oprör, revolt; opröra, to stir up; from op, up; and röra, to stir. + G. aufwühr, tumult, aufwühren, to stir up; from G. auf, up, and rühren, to stir. β. The verb appears as Du. roeren, Swed. röra, Dan. röre, Icel. hræra, G. rühren, A. S. hræran, to stir; and is the same word as rear- or rere- in E. rearmouse, veremouse, a bat; see Rermouse. γ. The A. S. hræran, to stir, agitate, is from hrór, motion, allied to hrór, adj., active (by the usual change from ó to é); the Swed. uppror preserves the orig. unmodified o. Der. uproar-i-ous, an ill-coined word; uproar-i-ous-ly, -ness.

UPSIDE-DOWN, topsyturvy. (E.) 'Turn'd upside-down to me;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, v. 1 (Gregory). From up, side, and down. But it is remarkable that this expression took the place of M. E. up so down, once a common phrase, as in Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 12, Luke, xv. 8; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5. l. 1274, b. v. pr. 3. l. 4501; this is composed of up, so, and down, where so has (as often) the force of as, or as it were, i. e. up as it were down.

UPSTART, one who has suddenly started up from low life to wealth or honour. (E.) In Shak. i Hen. VI, v. 7. 87. A sb. coined from the verb upstart, to start up; the pt. t. upstart is in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 16. From Up and Start; see note to Start, § γ. [†]

UPWARD, UPWARDS; see Up and -ward, suffix.

URBANE, pertaining to a city, refined, courteous. (L.) Spelt urbane in Lewis, ed. 1570. — Lat. urbanus, belonging to a city. — Lat. urb-s, a city. Root doubtful. Der. urban, belonging to a city (which is only another spelling of the same word); sub-urban, q. v. And see below.

URBANITY, courteousness. (F., — L.) Spelt urbanité in Lewis, ed. 1570. — F. urbanité, 'urbanity, civility;' Cot. — Lat. urbanitatem, acc. of urbanitas, city-manners, refinement. — Lat. urbani-, from urbane, urbane; with suffix -itas; see Urbane.

URCHIN, a hedgehog; a goblin, imp, a small child. (F., — L.) In Shak. it means (1) a hedgehog, Temp. i. 2. 326, Titus, ii. 3. 101; (2) a goblin, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 49. Spelt urhone in Palsgrave. M. E. urchon, urhone, Prompt. Parv., see the note; also spelt irchon, Early E. Psalter, Ps. ciii. v. 18 (l. 42); see Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat (Glossary). — O. F. irepon, a hedgehog; also spelt herigon, erigon (Burguy); mod. F. hérisson. Formed, with dimin. suffix -on (as if from a Lat. acc. *erici-onem), from Lat. ericius, a hedge-hog.

β. Eriicius is a lengthened form from ēr (gen. ēris), a hedge-hog; put for hēr, and cognate with Gk. χῆρ, a hedge-hog. The Gk. χῆρ is allied to χέστος, Attic χέστος, hard, dry, stiff; and Lat. ēr is allied to horre, to be bristly, hirsutus, bristly. — γ GHARS, to be rough; whence also Skt. hṛish, to bristle; see Horror. Hence urchin = the little bristly animal. [†]

URE, practice, use. (F., — L.) Obsolete, except in the derivative in-ure; and cf. man-ure. The real sense is work, practice; and, as it often has the sense of use, Richardson and others confuse it with use or usage; but it has no connection with those words. It was once a common word; see examples in Nares. 'To put in ure, in usum trahere;' Lewis, 193. 17. 'I ure one, I accustom hym to a thyng;' Palsgrave. M. E. ure; 'Moche like thyng I haue had in ure;' Remedie of Loue, st. 23, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323. [Distinct from M. E. ure = good luck.] — O. F. eure, oeuvre, ouure, work, action, operation. — Lat. opera, work. See further under Inure, Manure, and Operate. Doublet, opera.

URGE, to press earnestly, drive, provoke. (L.) Lewis, ed. 1570, has both urge and urgent. — Lat. urgere, to urge, drive. β. Allied to Gk. ἐπρεῖν, to repress, constrain, Lithuan. wargas, need, Skt. vrij, to exclude, Goth. wrikan, to persecute. — γ WARG, to compel; see Wreak. Fick, i. 773, 774. Der. urgent, from Lat. urgent-, stem of pres. part. of urgere; urgent-ly, urgency.

URIM, lit. lights. (Heb.) Only in the phr. urim and thummim; see Thummim. The lit. sense is 'lights,' though the word may be used in the sing. sense 'light.' — Heb. úrím, lights, pl. of úr, light. — Heb. root úr, to shine.

URINE, the water separated by the kidneys from the blood. (F., — L.) In Macb. ii. 3. 32; and in Chaucer, C. T. 5703. — F. urine, 'urine;' Cot. — Lat. urina, urine; where -ina is a suffix. + Gk. opow, urine. + Skt. vári, water; vár, water. + Zend. vára, rain (Fick, i. 772). + Icel. úr, drizzling rain; ver, the sea. + A. S. wer, the sea. β. From the Aryan WARA, water; Fick, as above. Der. urin-al, M. E. urinal, Chaucer, C. T. 12239, Layamon, 17725, from F. urinal (Cot.); urin-ary, from F. urinaire (Cot.).

URN, a vase for ashes of the dead. (F., — L.) M. E. vrne, urne, Chaucer, Troil. v. 311. — F. vrne, urne, 'a narrow-necked pot, or pitcher of earth;' Cot. — Lat. urna, an urn. β. As the urn was used for containing the ashes of the dead, a probable derivation is from ur-ere, to burn; from γ US, to burn; see Combustion. Others connect urna with Skt. vári, water, as if the orig. sense were water-pot; see Urine.

US, the objective case of we. (E.) M. E. us, ous, us; used both as acc. and dat. — A. S. ús, dat.; ús, ásic, ussic, acc. pl., us (Grein). + Du. ons. + Icel. oss, dat. and acc. pl. + Swed. oss. + Dan. os. + G. uns.

+ Goth. uns, unsis, dat. and acc. pl. β. All from a Teut. type UNS or UNSIS, us; Fick, iii. 33. See Our.

USE, sb., employment, custom. (F., — L.) M. E. use, use; properly us, as in Ancien Riwe, p. 16, l. 7; the word being monosyllabic. — O. F. (and F.) us, use, usage (Burguy); spelt uz in Cotgrave. — Lat. usum, acc. of usus, use. — Lat. usus, pp. of uti, to use. Cf. Skt. úta, pp. of av, to please, orig. to be pleased or satisfied. Prob. from γ AW, to be satisfied with; see Audience. Der. use, vb., M. E. usen, usen, Layamon, 24293, from F. user, to use, from Low Lat. usare, to use, put for *usari, frequentative form of uti, to use. Also us-able, from the verb to use; us-age, M. E. usage, King Alisaunder, l. 1286, from F. usage, 'usage,' Cot. Also use-ful, use-ful-ly, use-ful-ness; use-less, use-less-ly, use-less-ness; all from the sb. use. Also us-u-al, Hamlet, ii. 1. 22, from Lat. usualis (White), from usu-, crude form of usus; us-u-al-ly. And see usurp, usury, utensil, utility. Also ab-use, dis-use, mis-use, ill-use, per-use.

USHER, a door-keeper, one who introduced strangers. (F., — L.) M. E. uschere; 'Vschere, Hostiarus' [i. e. ostiarius]; Prompt. Parv. 'That doré can noon ussher shette' [shut]; Gower, C. A. i. 231. — O. F. ussier, ussier (Burguy); also huissier, 'an usher, or door-keeper of a court, or of a chamber in court;' Cot. — Lat. ostiarium, acc. of ostiarus, belonging to a door, or (as sb.) a door-keeper. — Lat. ostium, a door, an entrance; extended from os, a mouth; see Oral. Der. usher, verb, L. L. L. v. 2. 328; usher-ship. [†]

USQUEBAUGH, whiskey. (Irish.) In Ben Jonson, The Irish Masque; Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, ii. 3 (Savil); Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 3. — Irish uisge beatha, usquebaugh, whiskey, lit. 'water of life'; cf. Lat. agua uita, F. eau-de-vie. — Irish uisge, water, whiskey (see Whiskey); and beatha, life, allied to Gk. bios, Lat. uita, life, and E. quick (see Quick). Curtius, ii. 78.

USURP, to seize to one's own use, take possession of forcibly. (F., — L.) Spelt usurpe in Palsgrave. — F. usurper, 'to usurpe,' Cot. — Lat. usurpare, to employ, acquire; and, in a bad sense, to assume, usurp.

β. Supposed by some to be a corruption from usurpare, to seize to one's own use; see Use and Rapacious. But this is not quite satisfactory. γ. Or from usum ru(m)pere, 'to break a user, hence assert a right to; so Key, in Phil. Soc. Transactions, 1855, p. 96;' Roby. Der. usurper; usurp-at-ion, from F. usurpation, 'a usurpation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. usurpationem.

USURY, large interest for the use of money. (F., — L.) 'Userer, usurer; Usury, usure;' Palsgrave. M. E. usure, of which usury was another form. 'Ocur, or usure of gowle, Usura;' Prompt. Parv., p. 362; usurye, id. p. 513. Spelt usurie, P. Plowman, B. v. 240; userie, id. C. vii. 239. Here usurie seems to be a by-form of usure. — F. usure, 'the occupation of a thing, usury;' Cot. — Lat. usura, use, enjoyment; also, interest, usury. — Lat. usur-us, fut. part. of uti, to use; see Use. Der. usur-er, M. E. usurere, Prompt. Parv., F. usurier, from Lat. usurarius.

UTAS, the octave of a feast. (F., — L.) Also utis, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 22; where it means 'the time between a festival and the eighth day after it, merriment;' Schmidt. 'Utas of a feast, octaves;' Palsgrave. Utas is from a Norman-French word corresponding to O. F. oitauves (Burguy), oitieues (Roquefort), the pl. of oitauve, octave, or eighth (day). Utas occurs in the statute concerning General Days in the Bench, 51 Hen. III, i. e. A. D. 1266-7 (Minsheu). 'El dyemanche des oitieuves de la Resurrection' = on the Sunday of the octaves of the resurrection; Miracles de S. Louis, c. 39 (Roquefort). The F. oitauve = Lat. octava (dies), eighth day; cf. O. F. oit, oyt, uit (mod. F. huit), from Lat. octo, eight. Thus utas is, as it were, a pl. of octave; see Octave. [†]

UTENSIL, an instrument or vessel in common use. (F., — L.) 'All myn hostilmentis, utensiles,' &c.; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 94; in a will dated 1504. — F. utensile, 'an utensile;' Cot. — Lat. utensilis, adj., fit for use; whence utensilia, neut. pl., utensils. β. Lat. utensilis is for *utent-tilis, formed with suffix -tilis (as in fer-tilis, fic-tilis) from utent-, stem of pres. part. of uti, to use; see Use. [†]

UTERINE, born of the same mother by a different father. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. uterin, 'of the womb, born of one mother or damme;' Cot. — Lat. uterinus, born of the same mother. — Lat. uterus, the womb. Root uncertain.

UTILISE, to put to good use. (F., — L.) Not in Todd's Johnson; quite modern. — F. utiliser, to utilise; a modern word (Littré). Coined, with suffix -iser (= Lat. -izare = Gk. -izein), from utile, useful. — Lat. utilis, useful; see Utility.

UTILITY, usefulness. (F., — L.) M. E. utilite, Chaucer, from the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 26. l. 15. — F. utilité, 'utility;' Cot. — Lat. utilitatem, acc. of utilitas, usefulness. — Lat. utili-, crude form of utilis, useful; with suffix -tas. — Lat. uti, to use; see Use. Der. utilit-ar-i-an, a modern coined word.

UTMOST, outmost, most distant, extreme. (E.) M. E. utemest, orig. trisyllabic; spelt utemeste in Layamon, 11023; outemeste in Rich. Coer de Lion, 2931; utemeste, Trevisa, vi. 359. — A. S. ŷtemest also ŷtmet, Grein, ii. 777. This word = ŷte-m-est, formed with double superl. suffix -m-est from ūt, out, by means of the usual vowel-change from ū to ȳ; and is therefore a double of outmost; see Out. On this double suffix, see Aftermost; utemest became utmost by confusion with most. We also find uti-ar-most; see Utter (1).

UTOPIAN, imaginary, chimerical. (Gk.) An adj. due to Sir T. More's description of Utopia, an imaginary island situate nowhere, as the name implies. Coined (by Sir T. More, A.D. 1516) from Gk. oû, not; and tópos, a place; see Topic.

UTTER (1), utter, further out. (E.) M. E. utter, utter; whence was formed a superlative utter-est, used in the def. form uttestre by Chaucer, C. T. 8663. — A. S. ūtōr, ūtōr, utter, utter; Grein, ii. 635. Comp. of ūt, adv., out; see Out. Thus utter is a doublet of outer. Der. utter-ly; utter-most (see Utmost). And see utter (2).

UTTER (2), to put forth, send out, circulate. (E.) M. E. utren, Chaucer, C. T. 16302, in Tyrwhitt's edition, but every one of the MSS. in the Six-text edition has outen, Group G, l. 834; so also the Harl. MS. Hence there is really no authority for supposing that Chaucer used the word. The verb outen, which he really uses, is to put out, to 'out with,' as we say. β. The verb outre, to utter, speak, occurs frequently in the Romance of Partenay, ll. 1024, 1437, 1563, 2816, 3156, &c. It is a regular frequentative form of M. E. outen, as above; and means 'to keep on putting out.' The M. E. outen = A. S. ūtian, to put out, eject, Laws of the Northumb. Priests, § 22, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 294. — A. S. ūt, out; see Out.

Der. utter-able; utter-ance, Hamlet, iii. 2. 378.

UTTERANCE (1), from Utter; as above.

UTTERANCE (2), extremity. (F., — L.) Only in the phrases to the utterance, Macb. iii. i. 72; at utterance, Cymb. iii. i. 73. — F. outrance, spelt oultrance, 'extremity'; Cot. 'Combate à outrance, to fight it out, or to the uttermost'; id. — F. oultre (oultre in Cotgrave), beyond; with suffix -ance. — Lat. ultra, beyond; see Outrage.

UVULA, the fleshy conical body suspended from the soft palate. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. uvule. — Late Lat. uvula, dimin. of uva, a cluster, grape, also the uvula. Supposed to be from the same root as Humour.

UXORIOUS, excessively fond of a wife. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, iv. i (Otter). — Lat. uxorius, belonging to a wife; also, fond of a wife. — Lat. uxori, crude form of uxor, a wife. Allied to Skt. vagā, a wife, fem. of vaga, willing, subdued; from vag, to will. — √WAK, to will; cf. Skt. vag, to will, Gk. ἐκύν, willing. Der. uxorious-ly, -ness.

V.

V. In Middle-English, v is commonly written u in the MSS., though many editors needlessly falsify the spellings of the originals to suit a supposed popular taste. Conversely, u sometimes appears as v, most often at the beginnings of words, especially in the words vs, vse, vp, vn-to, vnder, and vn- used as a prefix. The use of v for u, and conversely, is also found in early printed books, and occurs occasionally down to rather a late date. Cotgrave ranges all F. words beginning with v and u under the common symbol V. We may also note that a very large proportion of the words which begin with V are of French or Latin origin; only vane, vat, vinewed, vixen, are English.

VACATION, leisure, cessation from labour. (F., — L.) In Palsgrave, spelt vacacion; and prob. in use much earlier. — F. vacation, 'a vacation, vacancy, leisure'; Cot. — Lat. vacationem, acc. of vacatio, leisure. — Lat. vacatus, pp. of vacare, to be empty, to be free from, to be unoccupied. Der. vacant, in early use, in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 110, l. 15, from F. vacant, 'vacant,' Cot., from the stem of the pres. part. of Lat. vacare; hence vacancy, Hamlet, iii. 4. 117; vacate, vb., a late word, from vacatus, pp. of vacare. And see vacuum.

VACCINATE, to inoculate with the cow-pox. (L.) 'Of modern formation, from the inoculation of human beings with the variola vaccina, or cow-pox. . . Dr. Jenner's Inquiry was first published in 1798;' Richardson. Coined, as if from the pp. of *vaccinare, to inoculate, from Lat. vaccinus, belonging to cows. — Lat. vacca, a cow. It prob. means 'the lowing animal;' cf. Skt. vīg, to cry, to howl, to low. — √WAK, to cry, speak; see Voice. Der. vaccinat-ion; also vaccine, from Lat. vaccinus.

VACILLATION, wavering, unsteadfastness. (F., — L.) 'No remainders of doubt, no vacillation;' Bp. Hall, The Peace-maker, § 15 (R.). And in Blount. — F. vacillation, 'a reeling, staggering, wagging;' Cot. — Lat. vacillationem, acc. of vacillatio, a reeling, wavering. — Lat. vacillatus, pp. of vacillare, to sway to and fro, waver, vacillate. Formed as if from an adj. *vacillus, from a base vac-. — √WAK, to swerve, sway to one side; cf. Skt. vank, to go tortuously, to be crooked, vakra, bent; and see Wag. Der. vacillate, from Lat. pp. vacillatus; a late word.

VACUUM, an empty space. (L.) It was supposed that nature abhorred a vacuum; see Cranmer's Works, i. 250, 330 (Parker Society). — Lat. vacuum, an empty space; neut. of vacuus, empty. — Lat. vacare, to be empty; see Vacation. Der. vacu-i-ty, in Cotgrave, from F. vacuité, 'vacuity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. vacuitatem.

VADE, to wither. (F., — L.) In Shak. Pass. Pilgrim, 131, 170, 174, 176; Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 40; a weakened form of Fade, q. v.

VAGABOND, adj., wandering; as sb., a wandering, idle fellow. (F., — L.) Spelt vacabonde in Palsgrave; he gives the F. form as uacabond; so also 'Vacabonds, vagabonds,' Cot. Rich. cites vagabunde from the Bible (1534), Gen. iv. 12; spelt uacabund in the edit. of 1551. — F. vagabond, 'a vagabond,' Cot. We also find F. uacabond, as above. — Lat. uagabundus, adj., strolling about. Formed, with suffix -abundus (a gerundive form), from uagari, to wander. — Lat. uagus, wandering; see Vague.

VAGARY, a wild freak, a whim. (L.) In The Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 3. 73; also figaries, pl., Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, iii. 3. Also vagare, sing., a trisyllabic word, in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. ii, ed. Arber, p. 44, l. 10. Perhaps orig. a verb; see below. Apparently borrowed directly from Lat. uagari, to wander; and, in any case, due to this verb. Cf. F. vaguer, 'to wander, vagary, gad, range, roam,' Cot.; also Ital. vagare, 'to wander, to vagarie, or range,' Florio. We have instances of F. infinitives used as sbs. in attainder, remainder, leisure, pleasure. See Vagrant, Vague.

VAGRANT, wandering, unsettled. (L.) 'A vagrant and wilde kinde of life;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 490; quoted by Richardson, who alters vagrant to vagrant; but vagrant is, I think, quite right. I suppose vagrant to be formed, with the F. pres. part. suffix -ant (by analogy with other words in -ant), from the verb vagary, as used by Cotgrave (see above), borrowed from Lat. uagari, to wander. This accounts for the r; whereas, if derived from F. vagant, it would have become vagant; cf. M. E. vagaunt, Wyclif, Gen. iv. 14. See Vagary and Vague. Der. vagrant, sb., vagrancy.

VAGUE, unsettled, uncertain. (F., — L.) It seems to have been first in use as a verb, parallel in use to vagary, q. v. 'Doth vague and wander;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 231 (R.); 'To vague and range abroad;' id. p. 630 (R.). As an adj. it is later. 'Vague and insignificant forms of speech;' Locke, Human Understanding, To the Reader (R.). — F. vaguer, 'to wander; vague, wandering;' Cot. — Lat. uagari, to wander; from uagus, adj., wandering. β. Connected by Fick, iii. 761, with A. S. wancol, unsteady, Skt. wang, to go, to limp; from √WAG, a by-form of √WAK, to swerve, for which see Vacillate. Der. vague-ly, -ness; and see vag-abond, vag-ar-y, vag-r-ant. From the same Lat. uagari we have extra-vagant.

VAIL (1), the same as Veil, q. v.

VAIL (2), to lower. (F., — L.) In Merch. Ven. i. 1. 28, &c.; and not uncommon. A headless form of avail or avale, in the same sense. 'I avale, as the water dothe whan it goeth downewardes or ebbeh, faule;' Palsgrave. — F. avaler (in Cot. avaller), 'to let, put, lay, cast, fell down,' Cot. See further under Avalanche. Der. vail, sb., Troil. v. 8. 7.

VAIL (3), a gift to a servant. (F., — L.) 'Vails, profits that arise to servants, besides their salary or wages;' Phillips, ed. 1706. A headless form of avail, sb., in the sense of profit, help. 'Avayle, sb., prouffit;' Palsgrave. 'Vaille my prejer'es' = let my prayers avail, Wyclif, Jer. xxxvii. 19, earlier version. See Avail.

VAIN, empty, fruitless, unreal, worthless; also, conceited. (F., — L.) M. E. vain, vein, veyn, Chaucer, C. T. 15965. — F. vain, 'vain'; Cot. — Lat. uanum, acc. of uanus, empty, vain. Root unknown; perhaps allied to vacuus, empty; if so, uā-nus is for uac-nus. See Vacation. Der. vain-ly, -ness; also the phr. in vain, a translation of F. en vain (Cot.). Also vain-glory, M. E. veingloire, Gower, C. A. i. 132, l. 9; vain-glori-ous, -ly, -ness. Also van-i-ty, q. v.; vaunt, q. v.; van-ish, q. v.

VAIR, a kind of fur. (F., — L.) A common term in heraldry; whence the adj. vairy or verry, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, and spelt varry in Blount. M. E. vaîr, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 121; Rob. Manning, ed. Furnivall [not published], l. 615; Stratmann. — F. vair, 'a rich fur of ermines,' &c.; Cot. — L. varius, variegated. See Miner-ver and Various. Der. vair-y, adj., from F. vaîré, 'very, diversified with argent and azure;' Cot. Also mine-ver.

VALANCE, a fringe of drapery, now applied to a part of the bed-hangings. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 356; he also has valanced = fringed, Hamlet, ii. 2. 442. 'Rich cloth of tissue, and vallance of black silk; ' Strype, Eccles. Mem. Funeral Solemnities of Henry VIII. Cf. 'A litel kerchief of Valence;' Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 272. Prob. named from Valence in France, not far to the S. of Lyons, where silk is made even to this day; Lyons silks are well known. Sir Aymer de Valence, whose widow founded Pembroke College, Cambridge, may have taken his name from the same place. Valence = Lat. Valentia, a name given to more towns than one, and clearly a derivative of ualere (pres. part. ualenti-), to be strong; whence also the names Valens and Valentinian; see Valiant. ¶ See Todd; Johnson derives Valence from Valencia in Spain; but, though this is a sea-port, we have yet to learn that it is, or was, famous for silk. Mahn (in Webster) derives valence (without evidence) from a supposed Norm. F. valaunt, answering to F. avalant, pres. part. of avaler, to let fall; for which see Avalanche.

VALE, a valley. (F., -L.) M. E. val, as a various reading for valley (valley), in Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 95. = F. val, 'a vale;' Cot. = Lat. uallem, acc. of uallis, a vale. Perhaps allied to Gk. ελος, wet, low ground; and named from its being surrounded by hills, and easily covered with water. = ✓ WAR, to cover; cf. Skt. vri, to cover, surround, vriti, an enclosure, also val, to cover, val, an enclosure. Der. vall-ey, q. v.; also a-val-anche, vail (2).

VALEDICTION, a farewell. (L.) 'He always took this solemn valediction of the fellows;' Fuller, Worthies; Shropshire (R.) Englished from a supposed Lat. *ualedictio, coined from ualedictus, pp. of ualedicere, to say farewell. = Lat. uale, farewell; and dicere, to say. β. Lat. uale, lit. 'be strong, be of good health,' is the 2 pers. sing. imp. of ualere, to be strong. See Valiant and Diction. Der. ualedict-ory.

VALENTINE, a sweetheart; also a love-letter sent on Feb. 14. (F., -L.) See Hamlet, iv. 5. 48, 51. Named from St. Valentine's day, when birds were supposed to pair; see Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 309, 322, 682; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 32. = F. Valentin. = Lat. Valentinus. = Lat. ualenti-, crude form of pres. part. of ualere, to be strong; see Valiant.

VALERIAN, the name of a flower. (F., -L.) 'Valerian, an herbe;' Palsgrave. = F. valeriane, 'garden valerian;' Cot. = Late Lat. ualeriana, valerian. β. Orig. unknown; ualeriana is the fem. of Valerianus, which must mean either 'belonging to Valerius' or 'belonging to Valeria,' a province of Pannonia. Both names are doubtless due to Lat. ualere, to be strong, whence many names were derived; see Valance, Valentine, and Valiant.

VALETT, a man-servant. (F., -C.) In Blount. 'The king made him his valett;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. Valet-de-chambre occurs in Vanbrugh, The Provoked Wife, Act v (R.) = F. valet, 'a groom, yeoman,' &c., Cot.; valet de chambre, 'a chamberlain,' id. The same word as Varlet, q. v.

VALETUDINARY, sickly, in weak health. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Brown, Vulg. Errors, B. iv. c. 13, § 26. = F. valetudinaire, 'sickly;' Cot. = Lat. ualetudinarius, sickly. = Lat. ualetudin-, stem of ualetudo, health, whether good or bad, but esp. bad health, feebleness; with suffix -arius. = Lat. uale-re, to be in good health; with suffix -tudo. See Valiant. Der. ualetudinari-an, adj. and sb.; as sb. in Spectator, no. 25; ualetudinari-an-ism.

VALHALLA, the hall of the slain. (Scand.) In Scand. mythology, the place of immortality for the souls of heroes slain in battle. The spelling Valhalla is hardly correct; it is probably due to Bp. Percy, who translated M. Mallet's work on Northern Antiquities; see chap. v of the translation. = Icel. valhöll (gen. valhallar), lit. the hall of the slain. = Icel. valr, the slain, slaughter; and höll or hall, a hall, cognate with E. Hall. β. The Icel. valr is cognate with A. S. wæl, slaughter, the slain, also a single corpse. The lit. sense is 'a choice'; hence the set or number of the chosen ones, selected from the field of battle by the deities called in Icelandic Valkyriur and in A. S. Wælcyrigan, lit. 'choosers of the slain' or 'choosers of the selection,' i. e. of the select ones. Thus Icel. valr (A. S. wæl) is closely allied to Icel. val (G. wahl), a choice, and to Skt. vara, adj. better, best, excellent, precious, vara, sb. a selecting, from vri, to select, choose; see Weal.

VALIANT, brave. (F., -L.) M. E. valiant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 4; p. 177, l. 3. = F. valliant, 'valiant;' Cot. Also spelt valant in O. F., and the pres. part. of the verb valoir, 'to profit, serve, be good for;' id. = Lat. ualere, to be strong, to be worth. Allied to Lithuan. uala, strength; and cf. Skt. bala, strength. Prob. from ✓ WAR, to protect; Fick, i. 777. Der. valiant-ly, -ness; and see vale-diction, Val-ent-ine, vale-tu-din-ary, val-id, val-our, val-ue; also a-vail, counter-vail, pre-vail, con-val-esce; equi-val-ent, pre-val-ent, in-val-id.

VALID, having force, well-founded, conclusive. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. = F. valide, 'valid, strong, weighty;' Cot. = Lat. ualidus, strong. = Lat. ualere, to be strong; see Valiant. Der. valid-ly; valid-ty, Hamlet, iii. 2. 199, from F. validité, 'validity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. ualiditatem.

VALISE, a travelling-bag, small portmanteau. (F.) 'Seal'd up In the vallies of my trust, lock'd close for ever;' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1 (Metaphor). = F. valise, 'a male, cloak-bag, budget, wallet;' Cot. The same word as Span. balija, Ital. valigia (Florio), with the same sense. Corrupted in G. into jelleisen (Diez). β. Etym. unknown. Diez imagines a Low Lat. form *uidul-itia, made from Lat. uidulus, a leathern travelling-trunk; which at any rate gives the right sense. Devic (Supp. to Littre) suggests Pers. walichah, 'a large sack,' or Arab. walikhai, 'a corn-sack;' Rich, Dict. p. 1657.

VALLEY, a vale, dale. (F., -L.) M. E. vale, Assumption of St. Mary, ed. Lumby, l. 590; ualsie, Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 95. = O. F. valles (F. vallée), a valley; Burguy, 'This is parallel to Ital. vallata, a valley, and appears to mean, literally, 'formed like a vale,' or 'vale-like.' Formed, with suffix -ee (= Lat. -ata), from F. val, a vale; see Vale.

VALOUR, courage, bravery. (F., -L.) Spelt valoure, King Alisaunder, 2530. = O. F. valor, valur, valeur, 'value, worth, worthiness;' Cot. = Lat. ualorem, acc. of ualor, worth; hence, worthiness, courage. = Lat. ualere, to be strong, to be worth; see Valiant. Der. valor-ous, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 236, from F. valeureux, 'valorous, valiant;' Cot.; valor-ous-ly.

VALUE, worth. (F., -L.) 'All is to him of o [one] value,' Gower, C. A. iii. 346, l. 9. = F. valuë, fem., 'value;' Cot. Fem. of valu, pp. of valoir, to be worth. = Lat. ualere, to be worth. Der. value, verb, in Palsgrave; valu-able; value-less, K. John, iii. 1. 101; valu-at-ion, a coined word.

VALVE, one of the leaves of a folding-door, a lid which opens only one way, one of the pieces of a (bivalve) shell. (F., -L.) 'Valves, folding-doors or windows;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. valve, 'a foulding, or two-leaved door, or window;' Cot. = Lat. ualua, sing. of ualuæ, the leaves of a folding-door. Allied to Lat. uoluer, to roll, turn round about; from the revolving of the leaves on their hinges. See Voluble. Der. valu-ed.

VAMP, the fore-part or upper leather of a boot or shoe. (F., -L.) M. E. uaupe. 'Hosen wiðuten *uaupe*z' = hose without vamps; Ancren Riwe, p. 420, l. 3. 'Vampe, or uaupe of an hoose, Pedana;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc antepedale, Anglice vampe [for vampe]; Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1. 'Hec pedana, Anglice vampay,' id. 201, col. 2. = F. avant-pied, 'the part of the foot that's next to the toes, and consisteth of five bones;' Cot. (Hence E. vampe, vamp; by loss of initial a, change of nt to mp, and suppression of the unaccented termination.) = F. avant, before; and pied, the foot. For F. avant, see Advance or Van (1). The F. pied = Lat. pedem, acc. of pes, a foot; see Foot. ¶ This etymology is verified by the fact, that the word also appears as vaupte. 'Vaupte of a hose, uaupte;' Palsgrave (where the final d is dropped, as well as the initial a, in the F. form). So also M. E. vampay, above, and later vampay (Phillips).

Der. vamp, verb, to mend with a new vamp, 'Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2 (Petilius); hence vamp up = to patch up.

VAMPIRE, a ghost which sucks the blood of men, a blood-sucker. (F., -G., -Servian.) In Todd's Johnson. 'Of these beings many imaginary stories are told in Hungary; Ricaut, in his State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), gives a curious account of this superstitious persuasion, p. 278;' Todd. Todd also cites: 'These are the vampires of the publick, and riflers of the kingdom;' Forman, Obs. on the Revolution in 1688 (1741), p. 11. = F. vampire. = G. vampyr (Flügel). = Servian vampir, vampira (Mahn; in Webster). Der. vampire-bat; so named by Linnæus. [†]

VAN (1), the front of an army. (F., -L.) In Shak. Antony, iv. 6. 9. An abbreviated form of van-guard, vant-guard, or avant-garde, also spelt van-ward, vauht-ward. 'And when our vauhtgard was passed the tounne;' Holinshed, Chron. Edw. III, an. 1346. 'And her vauhtward was to-broke;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 362, l. 13; the pl. vauhtwardes occurs, id. p. 437, l. 7. Spelt vauht-ward, vauw-ward, auvauht-ward, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 95. = O. F. avant-ward, later avant-garde, 'the vanguard of an army;' Cot. Here avant = Lat. ab ante, from in front; see Advance. And see Guard, Ward.

VAN (2), a fan for winnowing, &c. (F., -L.) 'His sail-broad vans,' i. e. wings; Milton, P. L. ii. 927. = F. van, a vane, or winnowing sieve;' Cot. = Lat. uannum, acc. of uannus, a fan; see Fan. Der. van, v., to winnow, spelt vanne in Levins, from F. vanner, 'to vane;' Cot. Doublet, fan.

VAN (3), a caravan or large covered wagon for goods. (F., -Span., -Pers.) A modern abbreviation for caravan, just as we now use bus for omnibus, and wig for periwig. See Caravan. 'The little man will now walk three times round the cairawan;' Dickens, Going into Society. 'Carry me into the wan;' ibid.

VANDAL, a barbarian. (L., -G.) See Vandalick and Vandalism in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. Uandalus, a Vandal, one of the tribe of the Uandali, whose name means, literally, the wanderers. — G. wandeln, to wander; a frequentative verb cognate with E. Wander, q.v. Der. Vandal, adj.; Vandalic, Vandalism.

VANE, a weather-cock. (E.) Also spelt fane (cf. vat, vetch); it formerly meant a small flag, pennon, or streamer; hence applied to the weather-cock, from its likeness to a small pennon. 'Fane of a stepylle;' Prompt. Parv. p. 148; and see Way's note. 'Chaungynge as a vane,' (other MSS. fane); Chaucer, C. T., Group E, 996; in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. — A. S. fana, a small flag; Grein, i. 263. + Du. vaan. + Icel. fáni. + Dan. fane. + Swed. and Goth. fana. + G. fahne, M. H. G. fano. β. All from Teut. type FANA; Fick, iii. 173. Cognate with Lat. pannus, a cloth, piece of cloth; which is allied to Lat. pānus, the thread wound upon a bobbin in a shuttle, and Gk. πῆνος, the woof; see Pane. Perhaps even allied to E. spin; cf. Lithuan. pinti, to weave. Der. gon-fan-on or gon-fal-on, q.v. Doublet, pane.

VANGUARD; see under Van (1).

VANILLA, the name of a plant. (Span., -L.) In Todd's Johnson; Johnson says: 'the fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate.' Misspelt for vainilla, by confusion with vanille, which is merely borrowed from Spanish, like the E. word. — Span. vainilla, a small pod, husk, or capsule; which is the true sense of the word. Dimin. of vaina, a scabbard, case, pod, sheath. — Lat. uagina, a scabbard, sheath, husk, pod. Root doubtful.

VANISH, to disappear. (F., -L.) M. E. vanissen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4. l. 2027. The pt. t. appears as vanishide, vanysched, vansched, vanschede, in P. Plowman, C. xv. 217. Certainly derived from O. French, but the F. word is not recorded. The form of the word (as compared with pun-ish, pol-ish, furn-ish, &c.) clearly shews that the O. F. verb was *vanir, with pres. part. *vaniss-ant; we find the corresponding verb in Ital. vanire, pres. vanisco. — Lat. vānēscere, to vanish; lit. to become empty. — Lat. uanus, empty; see Vain. Der. e-van-esc-ent. [†]

VANITY, empty pride, conceit, worthlessness. (F., -L.) M. E. uanite (= uanitee), Holi Meidenhad, p. 27. l. 25. — F. vanité, 'vanity'; Cot. — Lat. vanitatem, acc. of vanitas, emptiness, worthlessness. — Lat. uanus, vain; see Vain.

VANQUISH, to conquer, defeat. (F., -L.) M. E. venkisen, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 106; venkisen, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xiv. 47, earlier version; venquishen, Chaucer, C. T. 4711 (Group B. 291). — O. F. veinguir (whence the stem veinquis-), occurring in the 14th century as a collateral form of O. F. veindre (mod. F. vaincre); cf. F. vainquiss, still used as the pt. t. of vaincre, and the form que je vainquiss. — Lat. vincere, to conquer; pt. t. vici, pp. victus (stem vic-). — √ WIK, to fight, strive; whence also Goth. weihan, weigan (pp. wig-ans), O. H. G. and A. S. wigan, to strive, fight, contend; Fick, iii. 783. Der. vanquish-er; and see victor. [†]

VANTAGE, advantage. (F., -L.) Common in Shak.; in K. John, ii. 550, &c.; spelt vantage in Palsgrave; who also gives: 'I vauntage one, I profyte him, je vantaige; What dothe it vauntage you, quest ce qu'il vous vantage, or advantage?' — F. avantage, 'an advantage; vantage; to advantage'; Cot. See Advantage. Thus vantage is a headless form of F. avantage; and it is clear from Palsgrave (as above) that the loss of initial a occurred in F. as well as in E. [†]

VAPID, spiritless, flat, insipid. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Prob. directly from Lat. apidus, vapid, spoiled, flat, rather than from F. vapide, 'that sends up an ill fume,' marked by Cotgrave as a scarce or old word. — Lat. uappa, wine that has emitted its vapour, vapid or palled wine; closely allied to Lat. uap-or, vapour. β. The Lat. uap-or stands for *cuapor (= cuapor), as is rendered almost certain by comparison with Gk. καπνός, smoke, καπνέω, to breathe forth; Lithuan. kwápas, breath, fragrance, evaporation, kwépti, to breathe, smell, kwépalas, perfume; Russ. kopote, fine soot, kopíte, to smoke-dry; Curtius, i. 174. — √ KWAP, to reek, breathe out; Fick, i. 542. Der. vapid-ly, ness. And see vapour, fade.

VAPOUR, water in the atmosphere, steam, fume, fine mist, gas. (F., -L.) M. E. vapour, Chaucer, C. T. 10707. — F. vapeur, 'a vapor, fume'; Cot. — Lat. vaporem, acc. of vapor, vapour; see Vapid. Der. vapour, verb; vapor-ous, Macb. iii. 5. 24; vapour-y; vapor-ise, a coined word; vapor-is-at-ion.

VARICOSE, permanently dilated, as a vein. (L.) A late word. [Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Varix, a crooked vein.'] — Lat. varicosus, varicose. — Lat. varic-, stem of varix, a dilated vein; named from its crooked appearance. — Lat. uar-us, bent, stretched outwards, straddling; cf. varicus, straddling. Prob. allied to G. quer, Low G. quer, transverse; see Queer. Der. (from Lat. varicus), pre-varic-ate; di-varic-ate.

VARIEGATE, to diversify. (L.) 'Variegated tulips;' Pope, 6

Moral Essays, ii. 41. — Lat. variegatus, pp. of variegare, to make of various colours. — Lat. uarie, adv., with divers colours; and -g-, due to agere, to drive, cause, make; agere being used to form verbs expressive of an object (see Agent). — Lat. varius, adj., various; see Various. Der. variegat-ion, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

VARIETY, difference, diversification, change, diversity. (F., -L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. 2. 241. — F. variété, 'variety'; Cot. — Lat. uarietatem, acc. of uarietas, variety. — Lat. uarie, adv., variously; with suffix -tas. — Lat. varius, various; see Various.

VARIOUS, different, several. (L.) 'A man so various;' Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 545. Englished from Lat. varius, variegated, diverse, manifold. Root uncertain. Der. various-ly; variegate, varie-ty; also, vary, q.v.

VARLET, a groom, footman, low fellow, scoundrel. (F., -C.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 40. 'Not sparryng maisters nor varlettis;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 16 (R.). — O. F. varlet, 'a groom; also, a yokner, stripling, youth'; Cot. He notes that 'in old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen, untill they come to be 18 years of age, were teamed so.' β. An older spelling was vaslet (Burguy), which became varlet, vallet, valet. We also find the spelling vadlet in the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 40, where d stands for an older s, as in medlar, medley; which again proves that vaslet was the orig. form. γ. Vaslet is for *vassalet, the regular diminutive of O. F. vassal, a vassal; so that a varlet was orig. a young vassal, a youth, stripling; hence, a servant, &c.; and finally a valet, and a varlet as a term of reproach. See Vassal. Doublet, valet.

VARNISH, a kind of size or glaze, a liquid employed to give a glossy surface. (F., -L.) M. E. vernisch. 'Vernysche, Vernicium;' Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, A. v. 70, the Vernon MS. wrongly reads vernisch for vergeous (verjuice); still, this shews that the word was already known before A.D. 1400. — F. vernis, 'varnish, made of linseed oyle and the gumme of the juniper-tree'; Cot. Hence the verb vernissier, 'to sleeke or glaze over with varnish'; Cot. Cf. Span. bernis, barniz, varnish, lacquer; barnizar, to varnish, lacquer; Ital. vernice, varnish; verniciare, verniciare, to varnish. β. The simplest form appears in O. F. vernir, pp. verni, whence the adj. vernis, as in 'l'escu d'or vernis,' the polished shield of gold, cited by Diez. This O. F. vernir corresponds to a Low Lat. form *vitrinire, to glaze, from Low Lat. vitrinus, glassy, occurring A. D. 1376 (Ducange); to which Diez adds that Low Lat. vitrinus accounts for the Prov. veirin, glassy. Cf. F. verre — Lat. uitrum. Scheler remarks that in O. F. poetry the epithets verni and verniss are often applied to a shield, the former being the pp. of vernir, whilst the latter is equivalent to a Low Lat. adj. *vernicius. β. Hence F. verniss is allied to verni, pp. of vernir — Low Lat. *vitrinire; from Low Lat. uitrinus, formed from Lat. uitrum, glass. See Vitreous. Der. varnish, verb; Palsgrave has: 'I vernysse a spur, or any yron with vernysse, je vernis;' which exemplifies the O. F. verb vernir. The above etymology, proposed by Menage, is approved by Diez and Scheler. Wedgwood says: 'It seems to me more probable that it is from Gk. βερνίκιον, βερνίκιον, amber, applied by Agapias to sandarach, a gum rosin similar in appearance to amber, of which varnish was made; Gk. βερνικιάζειν, to varnish; Ducange, Greek Glossary. Cf. mod. Gk. βερνίκι, varnish.' The connection may be real; but I suggest that the derivation runs the other way; the Gk. βερνίκιον looks very like the Ital. vernice, varnish (also sandarach), written in Gk. letters. It is clearly not a Greek word.

VARY, to alter, change. (F., -L.) M. E. varien, Prompt. Parv.; pres. part. variande, Pricke of Conscience, 1447. — F. varier, 'to vary'; Cot. — Lat. uariare, to diversify, vary. — Lat. varius, various; see Various. Der. vari-able, spelt variable in Palsgrave, from F. variable, 'variable,' Cot., from Lat. variabilis; variable-ness, vari-abil-ity; vari-at-ion, M. E. variatioun, Chaucer, C. T. 2590 (or 2588), from F. variation, 'a variation,' from Lat. acc. variationem; vari-ance, Chaucer, C. T. 8583, as if from Lat. *variantia. And see vair, mine-ver.

VASCULAR, consisting of vessels, as arteries, veins, &c. (L.) In Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -ar — Lat. aris. — Lat. vasculum, a small vessel; formed with the double dimin. suffix -cu-lu-, from uas, a vessel; see Vaso. Der. vascular-i-ty.

VASE, a vessel, particularly an ornamented one. (F., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 122. — F. vase, 'a vessel'; Cot. — Lat. uasum, a vase, vessel; a collateral form of uas (gen. uas-is), a vessel; the pl. uasa is common, though the sing. uasum is hardly used. β. Lat. uasum is cognate with Skt. vāsana, a receptacle, box, basket, water-jar; also, an envelope, cover, cloth; the orig. sense being 'case' or protecting cover. Curtius, i. 471. — √ WAS, to protect by a cover; cf. Skt. vas, to wear clothes. See Vest and Wear. Der. vas-cu-lar; vessel.

VASSAL, a dependent. (F., -C.) In Spenser, Daphnida, 181. Certainly in early use; the M. E. vassal, however, is extremely rare, though the derivative vasselage (vassalage) is in Chaucer, C. T. 3056, where it means 'good service' or prowess in arms; it has the same sense in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 86, l. 21, and in Gower (as cited in Richardson). [The word vassayl, cited by Richardson from Rob. of Glouc., means vassail.] — F. vassal, 'a vassal, subject, tenant'; Cot. (Cotgrave well explains the word.) The orig. sense is 'servant'; and the word is of Celtic origin, Latinised (in Low Latin) as vassallus, in which form it is extremely common. We also find the shorter form vassus or vassus, a servant; which occurs in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, coll. 55, 56. — Bret. gwaz, a servant, vassal; W. and Corn. gwaz, a youth, servant. Cf. Bret. gwaz, a man, a male. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'a growing youth' (just as E. maid is connected with Goth. magus, a growing lad, and the Teut. base MAG, to have power). Cf. Irish gwas, growing, growth, increase, and E. wax, to grow; see Wax (1). (On W. gw = Irish f = E. w, see Rhys.) Der. vassal-age; also varlet, valet.

VAST, great, of great extent. (F., — L.) We possess this word in two forms, viz. vast and waste, both being from French; the latter being much the older. They are generally used with different senses, but in the Owl and Nightingale, l. 17, we have: 'in ore waste pikke hegge' = in a vast thick hedge, in a great thick hedge. We may, however, consider vast as belonging to the 16th century; it does not seem to be much older than the latter part of that century. 'That mightie and waste sea'; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 822 (R.) — F. vaste, 'vast'; Cot. — Lat. uastum, acc. of uastus, vast, of large extent. See further under Waste. Der. vast, sb., Temp. i. 2, 327, Wint. Tale, i. 1, 33; vast-ly, vast-ness; also vast-y, adj., Merch. Ven. ii. 7, 41. Also de-vast-ate.

VAT, a large vessel for liquors. (E.) M. E. fat. 'Fate, vesselle'; Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has fatte; and the A. V. of the Bible has fats (Joel, ii. 24) and wine-fat (Mark, xii. 1). The difference between the words fat and vat is one of dialect; vat is Southern English, prob. Kentish. The use of v for f is common in Devonshire, Somersetshire, and in old Kentish; the connection of the word with Kent is obvious, viz. through the brewing trade; cf. vane, velch. — A. S. fat (pl. fatū), a vessel, cask; Mark, iv. 27. + Du. vat. + Icel. fat. + Dan. fad. + Swed. fat. + G. fass. M. H. G. vaz. β. All from the Teut. type FATA, a vat, barrel; Fick, iii. 171. From the Teut. base FAT, to catch, take, seize, comprehend, contain; cf. Du. vatten, to catch, take, contain, G. fassen, to seize, also to contain; so that the sense is 'that which contains'. Cognate with Lithuan. pūdas, a pot. — √PAD, to go; also to seize; see Fetch, and Fit (1). Der. wine-fat or wine-vat.

VAUDEVILLE, VAUDEVIL, a lively satirical song; a kind of drama. (F.) Spelt vaudevil in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. vaudeville, 'a country ballade, or song; so termed of Vaudevire, a Norman town, wherein Olivier Bassel [or Basselin], the first inventor of them, lived'; Cot. Olivier de Basselin was a Norman poet of the 15th century, and his songs were called after his native valley, the Vau (or Val, i. e. valley) de Vire; see Vale. Vire is a town in Normandy, to the S. of Bayeux.

VAULT (1), an arched roof, a chamber with an arched roof, esp. one underground, a cellar. (F., — L.) The spelling with l is comparatively modern; it has been inserted, precisely as in fault, from pedantic and ignorant notions concerning 'etymological' spelling. The M. E. form is voute, also voute; in King Alisaunder, 7210, it is spelt voute. 'Vout under the ground, voute'; Palsgrave. 'Voute, lacunar; Voutyd, arculus; Voutyn, or make a voute, arcuo'; Prompt. Parv. — F. voute (also voulte, with inserted l as in English), 'a vault, or arch, also, a vaulted or embowed roof'; Cot. O. F. volte, voute, vaute, a vault, cavern; Burguy (mod. F. voûte); where volte is a fem. form, from O. F. volt, vaulted, lit. bent or bowed. Volte is the same word as Ital. volta, 'a time, a turn or course; a circuit, or a compass; also, a vault, cellar, an arche, bow'; Florio. β. The O. F. volt answers to Lat. volūtus, and the O. F. volte, Ital. volta, to Lat. volūtā; these are abbreviated forms of volutus (fem. voluta), pp. of voluere, to roll, turn round; whence the later sense of bend round, bow, or arch. Similarly we have volute, in the sense of a spiral scroll. γ. Thus a vault means an arch, an arched roof; hence, a chamber with an arched roof, and finally a cellar, because it often has an arched roof, for the sake of strength. See Volatile. Der. vault, verb, to overarch, M. E. vouten, as above; vault-ed, Cymb. i. 6, 33; vault-y, concave, Romeo, iii. 5, 22; vault-age, a vaulted room, Hen. V. ii. 4, 124.

Vault (2), to bound, leap. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'Vaulting ambition'; Macb. i. 7, 27. — F. volter, 'to vault'; Cot. — F. volte, 'a round or turn; and thence, the bounding turn which cunning riders teach their horses; also a tumbler's gamboli'; id. — Ital. volta, 'the turn that cunning riders teach their horses'; Florio. The same word as Ital. volta, a vault; both from the orig. sense of 'turn'; see further under Vault (1). Der. vault, sb.; vault-er, vault-ing-horse.

VAUNT, to boast. (F., — L.) 'I vaunte, I boste, or crake, le me vante'; Palsgrave. It is remarkable that the M. E. form was avaunten or avaunten, with a prefixed (unoriginal) a, not found (I think) in French, and perhaps due to confusion with F. avant, before, and avancer, to advance. This M. E. avaunten occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 5985, and at least twice in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1, l. 26, b. 1, pr. 4, l. 426; and hence the sb. avaunt, avaunt, avant, in Chaucer, C. T. 227, which Dr. Stratmann enters under vant, apparently under the impression that it is a misprint (six times repeated) in the Six-text edition. However, the prefix is to be neglected. Cf. vauntour, a vaunter, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 724. — F. vanter; 'se vanter, to vaunt, brag, boast, glory, crack'; Cot. — Low Lat. vanitare, to speak vanity, flatter (Ducange); so that se vanter = to speak vainly of oneself. Diez remarks that vanitare, to boast, occurs in S. Augustine, Opp. i. 437, 761. This verb is a frequentative, formed from Lat. vanus, vain. See Vain; and cf. Lat. vanitas, vanity. Der. vaunt, sb., M. E. avaunte; vaunt-er, formerly avaunter, Court of Love, 1219.

VAWARD, another spelling of vanward or vanguard. (F., — L. and G.) In Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 209; and in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt (R.) See Van (1).

VEAL, the flesh of a calf. (F., — L.) M. E. veel, Chaucer, C. T. 9294. — O. F. veil, later, veau, 'a calfe, or veale'; Cot. — L. vitellum, acc. of vitellus, a little calf, allied to vitulus, a calf. + Gk. ἰταλός, the same (little used). Allied to Skt. vatsa, a calf, vatsatara, a steer, vatsala, a cow anxious for her calf, vatsala, affectionate. β. All from a base WAT-AS, WET-AS, a year; cf. Skt. vatsa, which also means 'a year', Gk. ἔτος, a year. Hence the sense of Skt. vatsa was really (1) a year, (2) a yearling calf; and the same sense of 'yearling' was the orig. one of Lat. vitulus.

γ. From the same sense of 'year', differently applied, we have Lat. vetus, old in years, aged, vetulus, a little old man. See Veteran. Der. vell-um, q. v.

VEDA, knowledge; one of the ancient sacred books written in Skt. (Skt.) Skt. veda, 'knowledge; the generic name for the sacred writings of the Hindus, esp. the 4 collections called rig-veda, yajur-veda, sāma-veda, and atharva-veda'; Benfey, p. 900. Formed (by regular vowel-change from i to e) from vid, to know, cognate with E. Wit, q. v.

VEDETTE, VIDETTE, a cavalry sentinel. (F., — Ital., — L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. vedette, 'a sentry; any high place from which one may see afar off'; Cot. — Ital. vedetta, a horse-sentry; also a sentry-box; formerly a watch-tower (Florio). An Ital. corruption of veletta, a sentry-box, formerly a watch-tower (Florio); due to confusion with vedere, to see (pp. veduto), from which vedetta cannot possibly be derived. Veletta is a dimin. of veglia, a watch, watching, vigil; just as Span. veleta, a weather-cock (lit. a watcher), is a dimin. of Span. vela, a watching, vigil (Diez). — Lat. vigilia; see Vigil.

VEER, to turn round, change direction, swerve. (F., — L.) 'Vere the main shete'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 12, 1; 'and vereth his main sheat', id. v. 12, 18. [The spelling with e or ee is hard to explain; but it proves a confusion between the sound of ee in Elizabeth's time and that of F. i. Sir P. Sidney writes vire; see Nares.] — F. vire, 'to veer, turn round, wheele or whirle about'; Cot.

β. The F. vire is the same word as Span. virar, birar, to wind, twist, tack, or veer, Port. virar, to turn, change, Prov. virar, to turn, to change (Bartsch). Allied words are Port. viravolta, a circular motion, Ital. virolare, 'to scrue', i. e. twist round (Florio); &c. The orig. sense is to turn round, and it appears as Low Lat. virare, which is rather an old word (Diez); it appears also in F. en-vir-on, round about, in a circle (whence E. environs), in F. vir-ole (whence E. ferrule), and in F. vir-ol-et, 'a boy's windmill', Cot.

γ. The key to this difficult word lies in the sense of 'ring' or 'circle' as appearing in environ and ferrule; the Low Lat. virola, a ring to bind anything, answers to Lat. virola, a bracelet, dimin. of viria, an armlet, large ring, gen. used in the pl. form viria. — WI, to twist, wind round; see Ferrule, Withy. ¶ The Du. vieren, to veer, is merely borrowed (like our own word) from F. vire. The old derivation of vire from Lat. gyrare cannot possibly be sustained. Der. (from Lat. vir-ia), en-vir-on, ferr-ule.

VEGETABLE, a plant for the table. (F., — L.) Properly an adj., as used by Milton, P. L. iv. 220. [Instead of vegetables, Shak. has vegetives, Pericles, iii. 2, 36; and Ben Jonson has vegetals, Alchemist, i. 1, 40.] — F. vegetable, 'vegetable, fit or able to live'; Cot. — Lat. vegetabilis, animating; hence, full of life. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from Lat. vegetare, to enliven, quicken. — Lat. vegetus, lively. — Lat. uegere, to excite, quicken, arouse; allied to uig-ile, wakeful, and uig-ere, to flourish. — √WAG, to be strong and lively (Fick, i. 762); whence Skt. ugra, very strong, Gk. ὕψης, sound, Goth. wakan, to wake. See Vigil, Vigorous, and Wake. Der. (from uegetare) veget-ate; veget-at-ion, from F. vegetation, 'a giving of life,' Cot.; veget-at-ive (Palsgrave), from F. vegetatif, 'vegetative, lively,' Cot.; veget-al (as above), from F. vegetal, 'vegetal,' Cot.; veget-ar-i-an, a modern coined word, to denote a vegetable-arian, or one who lives on vegetables; veget-ar-i-an-ism.

VEHEMENT, passionate, very eager. (F., -L.) In Palsgrave. -F. vehement, 'vehement'; Cot. -Lat. vehementem, acc. of vehemens, passionate, eager, vehement. Lit. 'carried out of one's mind,' viz. by passion; cf. E. de-ment-ed; obviously compounded of ueho- and mens, the mind (for which see MENTAL). β. Ueho- has been explained as meaning 'out of the way,' hence out of, beyond, equivalent to some case of Skt. vaha, a way, which is derived from vah, to carry. In any case, it is allied to Lat. uehere, to carry, cognate with Skt. vah; see VEHICLE. Der. vehement-ly; vehemence (Levins), from F. vehemence, 'vehemence,' from Lat. vehementia.

VEHICLE, a carriage, conveyance. (L.) 'Alms are but the vehicles of prayer;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 1400. Englished from Lat. vehiculum, a carriage. -Lat. ueh-ere, to carry; with double dimin. suffix -cu-lum. = ✓ WAGH, to carry; whence also Skt. vah, to carry, Gk. ὄχος, a chariot. Fick, i. 764. Der. vehicul-ar, from Lat. vehicularis, adj. And see vag-ab-ond, vague, vehe-ment, veil, convex, in-veigh, vex, vein, via-duct, voy-age, way.

VEIL, a curtain, covering, cover for the face, disguise. (F., -L.) M. E. veile, Ancren Riwle, p. 420. = O. F. veile (Burguy), later voile, 'a vaille;' Cot. -Lat. uēlum, a sail; also, a cloth, covering. The orig. sense was sail or 'propeller' of a ship; Curtius, i. 237. -Lat. ueh-ere, to carry, bear along; see VEHICLE. Der. veil, verb.

VEIN, a tube conveying blood to the heart, a small rib on a leaf. (F., -L.) M. E. veine, Gower, C. A. iii. 92, l. 29; Chaucer has veine-blood, C. T. 2749. = F. veine, 'a vein'; Cot. = Lat. uēna, a vein. Derived (like uē-lum, see VEIL) from Lat. ueh-ere, to carry; a vein being the 'conveyer' of blood. = ✓ WAGH, to carry; see VEHICLE. Der. vein-ed.

VELLUM, prepared skin of calves, &c., for writing on. (F., -L.) M. E. velim; spelt velyme in Prompt. Parv., and velym in Palsgrave. = F. velin, 'vellam;' Cot. Mod. F. velin. (For the change of final n to m, compare venom.) -Low Lat. vitulinum, or pellis vitulina, vellum, prepared calf-skin. = Lat. vitulinus, adj., belonging to a calf. = Lat. vitulus, a calf; see VEAL.

VELOCIPEDE, a light carriage for one person, propelled by the feet. (L.) Modern; coined from Lat. veloci-, crude form of velox, swift; and ped-, stem of pes, the foot, cognate with E. FOOT. Thus the sense is 'swift-foot,' or 'swift-footed.' See VELOCITY.

VELOCITY, great speed. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. = F. velocité, 'velocity;' Cot. -Lat. acc. velocitatem, acc. of velocitas, swiftness, speed. = Lat. veloci-, crude form of velox, swift; with suffix -itas. The lit. sense of velox is 'flying;' allied to uol-are, to fly; see VOLATILE.

VELVET, a cloth made from silk, with a close, shaggy pile; also made from cotton. (Ital., -L.) 'Velvet, or veluet, Velvetus;' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has the pl. velouētēs (four syllables), C. T. 10958; whilst Spenser has vellet, Shp. Kal., May, 185. β. Again, the form vellure occurs in Holinshed, Descr. of England, b. iii. c. 1 (R.); which is borrowed from F. velours, 'velvet,' Cot. γ. But veluet, veluet, velouet, vellet are various corruptions of O. Ital. veluto, 'veluet,' Florio; mod. Ital. velluto. The word is interesting as being almost the only Ital. word (in E.) of so early a date; it may have been imported directly from Italy. The Ital. velluto answers to a Low Lat. form *villutus, shaggy, allied to Lat. villosus, shaggy; whilst F. velours (O. F. velous, the r being unoriginal) answers to Lat. villosus directly. = Lat. villos, shaggy hair, a tuft of hair; so that velvet means 'woolly' or shaggy stuff, from its nap. Allied to uellus, a fleece; orig. 'a covering' or 'protection.' = ✓ WAR, to cover, protect; cf. Skt. úrna, wool, lit. a covering, from vri, to cover; and see WOOL. Der. velvet-y, velvet-ing.

VENAL, that can be bought, mercenary. (F., -L.) In Pope, Epistle to Jervas, l. 2. = F. venal, 'vendible, saleable;' Cot. = Lat. uenalis, saleable, for sale. = Lat. uēn-us, or uēn-um, sale. Put for *ues-nus, whence the long e; allied to Gk. ἄνός, price, and Skt. vasna, price, wages, wealth, vasu, wealth. The orig. sense seems to be 'means of existence;' from ✓ WAS, to dwell, exist; Fick, i. 780, and Benfey. Der. venal-i-ty, from F. venalité, 'venality,' Cot.; from Lat. acc. uenalitatē.

VEND, to sell. (F., -L.) 'Twenty thousand pounds worth of this coarse commodity is yearly . . . vended in the vicinage;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. = F. vendre, 'to sell;' Cot. = Lat. uendere, to sell; contracted from uendundare, to sell, which again stands for uenum dare, to offer for sale, a phrase which occurs in Claudian, &c. = Lat. uenum, sale; and dare, to give, offer; see VENAL and DATE (1). Der. vend-er or vend-or; vend-ible, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 112, from F. vend-ible, 'vendible,' Cot., from Lat. uendibilis, saleable; we also find vend-able, a spelling due to F. vendable (Cot.), formed from the F. verb vendre; vend-ibl-y, vend-ible-ness VENEER, to overlay or face with a thin slice of wood. (G., = F., = O. H. G.) This curious word, after being borrowed by French from old German, was again borrowed back from French, as if it had been foreign to the G. language. It is not old in E., and the sense has changed. It was orig. used with reference to marquetry-work. 'Veneering, a kind of inlaid work;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Johnson (quoting from Bailey) describes to veneer as signifying 'to make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine wood of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.' The E. verb (older than the sb.) is borrowed from G. furniren, to inlay, to veneer, lit. 'to furnish' or provide small pieces of wood; from the careful arrangement of the pieces. = F. fournir, 'to furnish, supply, minister, find, provide of [i. e. with], accommodate with;' Cot. A word of O. H. G. origin; see FURNISH. Der. veneer, sb., veneering. Doublet, furnish.

VENERABLE, worthy of reverence. (F., -L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 167. = F. venerable, 'venerable;' Cot. = Lat. uenerabilis, to be revered. = Lat. uenerari, to reverence, worship, adore. Allied to Lat. uenus, love, and Skt. van, to serve, to honour. = ✓ WAN, to love, to win; Fick, i. 768; Benfey, p. 812. See VENEREAL, and WIN. Der. venerabl-y, venerable-ness; also (from pp. ueneratus) venerate, Geo. Herbert, The Church Porch, st. 44; veneration, from F. veneration, 'veneration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uenerationem.

VENEREAL, pertaining to sexual intercourse. (L.) Spelt veneriall in Levins. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. Uenerius (also Uenerius), belonging to Venus. [The F. word is uenerien (Cotgrave), whence uenerian in Chaucer, C. T. 6191.] = Lat. Ueneri-, crude form of Uenus, Venus, love. Allied to Skt. van, to love. = ✓ WAN, to love, win; see VENERABLE and WIN. Der. venery, sb., spelt uenerie in Levins, from Lat. Uenerius.

VENERY, hunting, the sport of the chase. (F., -L.) M. E. venerie, Chaucer, C. T. 166. = F. venerie, 'a hunt, or hunting;' Cot. = O. F. venier, 'to hunt;' id. = Lat. uenari, to hunt; see VENISON.

VENESECTION, blood-letting. (L.; and F., -L.) According to Richardson, it is spelt venasection in Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 3. = Lat. uenæ, gen. case of uena, a vein; and SECTION. See VEIN.

VENEW, VENUE, VENEY, a thrust received at playing with weapons; a turn or bout at fencing. (F., -L.) In Merry Wives, i. 1. 296; L. L. L. v. 1. 62. = F. venue, 'a coming, arrivall, also a venny in fencing, a turn, trick;' Cot. The sense is 'an arrival,' hence a thrust that attains the person aimed at, one that reaches home. Venus is the fem. of venus, pp. of venir, to come. = Lat. uenire, to come, cognate with E. COME, q. v. Doublet, venue.

VENGEANCE, retribution, vindictive punishment. (F., -L.) M. E. vengeance, vengeance; but spelt vengeance, King Alisaunder, 4194. = F. vengeance, 'vengeance;' Cot. = F. venger, 'to avenge,' id.; with suffix -ance (= Lat. -antia). Cf. Span. vengar, Ital. vingiare. = Lat. uendicare, uindicare, to lay claim to, also to avenge; cf. F. manger = Lat. manducare. See VINDICATE. Der. a-venge, re-venge (from F. venger); also venge-ful, i. e. avenge-ful, Tit. Andron. v. 2. 51; venge-ful-y.

VENIAL, excusable, that may be pardoned. (F., -L.) M. E. uenial (= venial), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 16, l. 9; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 92. = O. F. uenial. = Lat. uenialis, pardonable. = Lat. uenia, grace, favour, kindness; also, pardon. Allied to Skt. van, to love. = ✓ WAN, to love, win; see VENERABLE and WIN. Der. venial-ly, venial-ness or venial-i-ty. I do not find O. F. venial; but Roquefort gives the adv. ueniamēnt, and it must have existed. [†]

VENISON, the flesh of animals taken in hunting, esp. flesh of deer. (F., -L.) M. E. veneison; spelt ueneyson, Havelok, 1726, veneson, Rob. of Glouc. p. 243, l. 15. = O. F. veneison (Burguy), later venaison, 'venison, the flesh of (edible) beasts of chase, as the deer, wild boar,' &c., Cot. = Lat. uenationem, acc. of uenatio, the chase; also, that which is hunted, game. = Lat. uenatus, pp. of uenari, to hunt. Root uncertain. Der. (from Lat. uenari) venery, q. v.

VENOM, poison. (F., -L.) M. E. venim; spelt venyme, King Alisaunder, 2860; venym, Rob. of Glouc. p. 43, l. 14. = O. F. venim, 'venome,' Cot. We also find O. F. velin; mod. F. venin. = Lat. uenenum, poison. [For change of n to m, cf. vellum.] Origin doubtful; perhaps *uo-nec-num, from uo-, prefix, and nec-are, to kill. Der. venim-ous, M. E. venimous, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 203, l. 17, from F. venimeux, 'venomous,' Cot., from Lat. uenenosus, poisonous; venom-ous-ly, -ness.

VENOUS, contained in a vein. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from Lat. uenosus, belonging to a vein. = Lat. uena, a vein; see VEIN.

VENT (1), an opening for air or smoke, an air-hole, flue. (F., -L.) 'A vent, meatus, porus; To vent, aperire, euacuare;' Levins Halliwell gives Somerset vent-hole, a button-hole in a wristband. It is most likely that the word has been connected in popular etymology with F. vent, the wind, as if it were a hole to let wind or air in; but the senses of 'aperture' and 'wind' are widely different. The older spelling was fent or fente, used in the sense of slit in a garment, whence the notion of button-hole. The Prompt. Parv. gives: 'Fente of a clothe, fibulatorium,' on which Way notes that 'the fent or vent, in the 13th cent., appears at the collar of the robe, . . . being a short slit closed by a brooch, which served for greater convenience in putting on a dress so fashioned as to fit closely round the throat;' see the whole note. 'The collar and the vente;' Assemblée of Ladies, st. 76. 'Fent of a gowne, fente;' Palsgrave. The sense was easily extended to slits and apertures of all kinds, esp. as the F. original was unrestricted. — F. fente, 'a cleft, rift, chinke, slit, cranny;' Cot. A participial sb. from the verb fendre, to cleave. — Lat. findere, to cleave; see Fissure. Der. vent, verb, to emit from an orifice, as in 'can he vent [emit] Trinculos?' Temp. ii. 2. 111; but it is tolerably certain that the use of this verb was influenced by F. vent, wind; see Vent (3). And see Vent (2).

VENT (2), sale, utterance of commodities, and hence, generally, utterance, outlet, publication. (F., — L.) 'The merchant-adventurers likewise . . . did hold out bravely; taking off the commodities . . . though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent;' Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 6. 'Vent of utterance of the same,' viz. of 'spices, drugges, and other commodities;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 347. 'Find the meanes to haue a vent to make sales;' id. i. 356. — F. vente, 'a sale, or selling, an alienation, or passing away for money,' &c.; Cot. Vente is a participial sb. from the F. vendre, 'to sell,' Cot. — Lat. uendere, to sell; see Vend. Der. vent, to utter, as in: 'when he found ill money had been put into his hands, he would never suffer it to be vented again,' Burnet, Life of Hale (R.); but it is tolerably certain that the use of vent as a verb has been largely influenced by confusion with Vent (1) and Vent (3), and it is extremely difficult to determine its complete history without very numerous examples of its use.

VENT (3), to snuff up air, breathe, or puff out, to expose to air. (F., — L.) 'See howe he [a bullock] venteth into the wynd;' Spenser, Sheph. Kal. Feb. 75. Explained by 'snuffeth in the wind' in the Glosse, but it more likely means to puff out or exhale. In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 42, we are told that Britomart 'vented up her umbriere, And so did let her goodly visage to appear.' Here the poet was probably thinking of F. vent, the wind, and of the part of the helmet called the ventail or aventail, which was the lower half of the moveable front of a helmet as distinct from the upper half or visor, with which it is often confused; see my note on aventail in Chaucer, C. T. Group E, 1204. If we had a large collection of quotations illustrative of the use of vent as a verb, I suspect it would appear that the connection with the F. vent, wind, was due solely to a misunderstanding and misuse of the word, and that it is etymologically due to Vent (1) or Vent (2), or to confusion of both; and, in particular, to inability to account for Vent (1), shewn above to be used in place of M. E. fente. That writers used the word with reference to air is certain; we have: 'there's none [air] so wholesome as that you vent;' Cymb. i. 2. 5; also: 'which have poisoned the very air of our church wherein they were vented;' Bp. Hall, Ser. Eccl. iii. 4 (R); and hence the sbs. ventage, venting-hole (see below). — F. venter, 'the wind to blow or puffed,' Cot. — F. vent, the wind. — Lat. uentum, acc. of uentus, wind; cognate with E. Wind, q.v. Der. vent-age, the air-hole of a flute (app. a coined word), Hamlet, iii. 2. 373; vent-ing-hole, an outlet for vapour, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxi. c. 3. And see ventail, vent-il-ate.

VENTAIL, the lower half of the moveable part of the front of a helmet. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 24, iv. 6. 19. M. E. aventail, Chaucer, C. T. 9080; which is the same word with the F. prefix a- (= Lat. ad-). — F. ventaille, 'the breathing-part of a helmet.' — F. venter, 'to blow or puffed,' Cot.; with suffix -aile = Lat. -a-culum. — F. vent, wind. — Lat. uentum, acc. of uentus, wind; see Vent (3), Ventilate, and Wind.

VENTILATE, to fan with wind, to open to air, expose to air or to the public view. (L.) Spelt ventilate in Palsgrave. Ventilate is used as a pp. by Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 25, § 4. — Lat. ventilatus, pp. of ventilare, to blow, winnow, ventilate. From an adj. uentilis p. (not used), from uentus, wind, cognate with E. Wind. Der. ventilat-or, from Lat. ventilator, a winnower; ventilat-ion, 'a ventilation, breathing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. ventilationem.

VENTRAL, belonging to the belly. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. — Lat. ventralis, belonging to the belly. — Lat. uentri-, stem of uenter, the belly; perhaps allied to Gk. γαστήρ; see Gastric. Der. ventri-cle, q.v.; ventri-loquist, q.v.

VENTRICLE, the stomach; a part of the heart. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. ventricule, 'the ventricle, the place wherein the meat sent from the stomach is digested, some call so the stomach itselfe;' Cot. — Lat. ventriculum, acc. of ventriculus, the stomach, also a ventricle of the heart. A double dimin. (with suffix -culu-) from uentri-, crude form of uenter, the belly; see Ventral. Der. ventricul-ar.

VENTRILOQUIST, one who speaks so that the voice seems to come from a distance or from some one else. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; but Phillips has ventriloquus, 'a person that speaks inwardly;' this is the true Lat. word, whence ventriloquist has since been formed, by adding the suffix -ist (Lat. -ista, Gk. -ιστης). — Lat. uentriloquus, a ventriloquist, lit. one who speaks from (or in) the belly. — Lat. uentri-, crude form of uenter, the belly; and loqu-i, to speak; see Ventral and Loquacious. Der. ventriloqu-ism.

VENTURE, chance, luck, hazard. (F., — L.) Common in Shak. both as sb. and vb.; as sb., Merch. Ven. i. 3. 92; as a verb, id. iii. 2. 10. It is a headless form of M. E. aventure or aventure, which also took the form Adventure, q.v. Der. ventur-ous, Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 39, short for M. E. auenturous, later adventurous; ventur-ous-ly, -ness. Also venture-some, in Strype, Eccles. Mem. Henry VIII, an. 1546, where the suffix -some is English.

VENUE, the same as Venew, q.v. (F., — L.) As a law-term, it is the place where the jury are summoned to come; from F. venue, 'a coming, arrival, approach, a passage, access,' Cotgrave; which is merely another sense of venew, as above. β. Blackstone has: 'a change of the venue, or visne (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done);' Comment. b. iii. c. 20. His interpretation of visne as being = Lat. vicinia is probably right; but that has nothing to do with the etymology of venue, which is, of course, a different word. Der. a-venue.

VENUS, the goddess of love. (L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1538. — Lat. Venus; see Veneral.

VERACIOUS, truthful. (L.) A late word; Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the sb. veracity. Coined from Lat. ueraci-, crude form of uerax, truthful; with suffix -ous. — Lat. uer-us, true. β. The orig. sense is 'credible;' see Very. Der. verac-i-ty, Englished from Lat. ueracitas, truthfulness.

VERANDA, VERANDAH, a kind of covered balcony. (Port., — Pers.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson; it should be spelt varanda. — Port. varanda, a balcony. Marsden, in his Malay Dict., 1812, p. 39, has: 'barándah (Portuguese), a varanda, balcony, or open gallery to a house;' but the Malay word, like the Portuguese, is borrowed from Persian (not, as Marsden supposed, from Portuguese, for it has the right initial letter). — Pers. bar-ámadah, 'a porch, a terrace, a balcony;' Rich. Dict. p. 255. So called from its projecting or 'coming forward.' — Pers. bar-ámadan, 'to ascend, arise, come forth, appear, emerge, grow out;' ibid. — Pers. bar, up, id. p. 253; and ámadan, to come, arrive; id. p. 166. ¶ I here suppose that the Skt. varanda, a portico, is adapted from the Persian. Otherwise, the E. verandah is from this Skt. word, which can be explained as being from vri, to cover. [†]

VERB, the word; in grammar, the chief word of a sentence. (F., — L.) Palsgrave gives a 'Table of Verbes.' — F. verbe, 'a verbe;' Cot. — Lat. uerbum, a word, a verb. β. Here the Lat. b represents an Aryan dh (= Teut. d); and uerbum is cognate with E. Word, q.v. — ✓ WAR, to speak; cf. Gk. εἰπ-ειν (= fēp-eyiv), to speak; Fick, i. 772. Der. verb-al (Palsgrave), from F. verbal, 'verbal,' Cot., from Lat. uerbalis, belonging to a word; verb-al-ly; verb-al-ise, to turn into a verb, a coined word; verb-al-ism; verb-i-age, wordiness, not in Johnson's Dict., but used by him on April 9, 1778 (Boswell), from F. verbiage, a late F. word, coined (according to Littré) from O. F. verboier, to talk; verb-ose, wordy (Phillips), from Lat. uerbosus; verb-ose-ly, verb-ose-ness, verb-os-i-ty.

VERBENA, vervain. (L.) See Vervain.

VERDANT, green, flourishing. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 13. — F. verdant, used as a pres. part. of verdir, 'to flourish, to wax green;' Cot. — F. verd, green. — Lat. uiridem, acc. of uiridis, green. Root uncertain. Der. verdant-ly, verdanc-y; also verd-ure, Temp. i. 2. 87, from F. verdure, 'verdure,' Cot.; also verd-ur-ous (Nares). And see farthingale, verdigris, verjuice.

VERDICT, the decision of a jury, decision. (F., — L.) Lit. 'a true saying.' The true word is verdit, pedantically altered to the mongrel form verdict, to bring the latter half of it nearer to the Lat. spelling. M. E. verdit, Chaucer, C. T. 787 (or 789). — O. F. verdit, a verdict; see verdict in Littré, the mod. F. form being borrowed again from English. — Lat. uer dictum, truly said, which passed into Low Lat. veredictum, with the sense of true saying or verdict, occurring A.D. 1287 (Ducange). Formed similarly to beno-diction, male-diction. — Lat. uer, truly, adv., from uerus, true; and dictum, a saying, orig. neut. of pp. of dicere, to say; see Very and Diction. [†]

VERDIGRIS, the rust of bronze, copper, or brass. (F., — L.?) Spelt verdigrass in Arnold's Chronicle (1502), repr. 1811, p. 74; verdegresse, Chaucer, C. T. 16258. — F. verd de gris, 'verdigrasse, Spanish green,' Cot. Spelt verie grez in the 13th cent. (Littré). Littré supposes it to be possibly a corruption of vert aigret, green produced by aigre, i.e. acid (see Eager, Vinegar); cf. 'Syrop aigret, syrop of vinegar,' Cot. This is very forced; verte grez is lit. 'green grit,' a substitution (as I think) for O. F. verderis, 'verdigrise,' Cotgrave. — Low Lat. uiride eris, verdigris, the usual term in alchemy; see my note to Ch. Chan. Yeom. Tale, 790. Lit. 'green of brass.' — Lat. uiride, neut. of uiridis, green; eris, gen. of as, brass. See Verdant and Ore.

VERGE (1), a wand of office, extent of jurisdiction, edge, brink. (F., — L.) In the sense of edge or brink it is quite a different word from verge, to incline (see below), though some late writers may have confused the words, as indeed is done in Johnson's Dict. The sense of 'edge' follows at once from the use of verge as a law-term, to mean a limit or circuit, hence a circle, Rich. II. ii. 1. 102; cf. i. 1. 93. In the sense of 'wand,' it is best known by the derivative verger, a wand-bearer. M. E. verge. 'Verge, in a wrytys [wright's] werke, Virgata,' Prompt. Parv. Here it must mean a yard (in length). [Verge in the Rom. of the Rose, 3224, is clearly an error for vergere, a garden; see ll. 3618, 3831; this is F. vergier (Cot.), from Lat. uiridarium, a garden.] — F. verge, 'a rod, wand, stick; also, a sergeant's verge or mace; also, a yard; . . . a plaine hoopo, or gimmel, ring; also, a rood of land;' Cot. — Lat. uirga, a twig, rod, wand. Of doubtful origin; perhaps allied to vergere, for which see VERGE (2). Der. verg-er, a wand-bearer, 'that bereth a rodde in the churche' (Palsgrave), from F. verger, 'one that beares a verge before a magistrate, a verger,' Cot., from Low Lat. uirgarius, an apparitor, occurring A. D. 1370 (Ducange).

VERGE (2), to tend towards, tend, slope, border on. (L.) 'Verging more and more westward;' Fuller, Worthies, Somersetshire (R.) — Lat. uergere, to bend, turn, incline, verge towards, incline. Allied to uulgus, bent, wry, Skt. vrijana, crooked, vrij, to exclude (of which the orig. sense seems to be to bend, Benfey). — $\sqrt{\text{WARG}}$, to bend, turn, force; Fick, i. 772. ¶ The phrase 'to be on the verge of' is prob. closely connected with this verb by many writers; but verge, as a sb., is properly a different word; see VERGE (1). Der. con-verge, di-verge.

VERIFY, to shew to be true, confirm by evidence. (F., — L.) 'I verifie, je verifie;' Palsgrave. — F. verifier, 'to verify;' Cot. — Lat. uerificare, to make true. — Lat. ueri-, for uero-, crude form of uerus, true; and -ficare, for facere, to make; see Very and Fact. Der. verifi-er, verifi-able, verific-at-ion, from F. verification, 'a verification, verifying,' Cot.

VERILY, adv.; see Very.

VERISIMILITUDE, likelihood. (F., — L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 845 (R.) — F. verisimilitude, 'likelihood;' Cot. — Lat. uerisimilitudo, likelihood. — Lat. ueri similis, likely, like the truth. — Lat. ueri, gen. of uerum, the truth, orig. neut. of uerus, true; and similis, like; see Very and Similar.

VERITY, truth, a true assertion. (F., — L.) Spelt verytie in Levins. — F. verité, 'a verity;' Cot. — Lat. ueritatem, acc. of ueritas, truth. — Lat. uerus, true; see Very. Der. verit-able, spelt veritable in Palsgrave, from F. veritable, 'true,' Cot., a coined word.

VERJUICE, a kind of vinegar. (F., — L.) M. E. vergeous, verious, P. Plowman, A. v. 70 (footnote). — F. verjus, 'verjuice, esp. that which is made of sowre, and unripe grapes;' Cot. Lit. 'green juice.' — F. vert (spelt verd in Cotgrave), green; and jus, juice; see Verdant and Juice.

VERMICELLI, dough of wheat flour formed into thin worm-like rolls. (Ital., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Ital. vermicelli, lit. 'little worms;' from the shape. It is the pl. of vermicello, a little worm, which is the dimin. of verme, a worm. — Lat. uermem, acc. of uermis, a worm, cognate with E. Worm.

VERMICULAR, pertaining to a worm. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vermiculares, certain muscles, &c.; Vermicularis, worm-grass, lesser house-leek; Vermiculated, inlaid, wrought with checker-work; Vermiculation, worm-eating;' &c. All are derivatives from Lat. uermiculus, a little worm, double dimin. of uermis, a worm; see Worm. Der. So also vermi-form, worm-shaped; from uermi-, crude form of uermis, and form; also vermi-fuge, a remedy that expels a worm, from Lat. -fugus, putting to flight, from fugare, to put to flight; see Fugitive. And see vermilion, vermine, vermicelli.

VERMILION, a scarlet colouring substance obtained from cochineal, &c. (F., — L.) 'Vermylyone, minium;' Prompt. Parv.; spelt vermyloun, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 1 (later version). — F. vermillon, 'vermillion; . . . also, a little worm;' Cot. — F. vermeil, 'vermillion;' id. — Lat. uermiculus, a little worm; double dimin. of uermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm. ¶ For the reason of the name, see Crimson and Cochineal; but vermillion is now generally made of red lead, or various mineral substances, and must have been so made at an early date; it was perhaps named merely from its resemblance to crimson.

VERMIN, any small obnoxious insect or animal. (F., — L.) M. E. vermine, Chaucer, C. T. 8971. — F. vermine, 'vermine; also little beasts indendred of corruption and filth, as lice, fleas, ticks, mice, rats;' Cot. As if from a Lat. adj. *uermis, formed from uermi-, crude form of uermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm.

VERNACULAR, native. (L.) 'In the vernacular dialect;' Fuller, Worthies, General (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount has vernaculous. Formed with suffix -ar (Lat. -aris) from Lat. uernaculus, belonging to home-born slaves, domestic, native, indigenous; double dimin. of Lat. uerna, a home-born slave. β. Uerna is for *ues-na, dwelling in one's house, from $\sqrt{\text{WAS}}$, to dwell, live, be; see Was. Der. vernacular-ly.

VERNAL, belonging to spring. (L.) Spelt vernall in Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. uernalis, vernal; extended from Lat. uernus, belonging to spring. — Lat. uer, the spring. + Gk. ēap, the spring. + Irish earrach, the spring. + Russ. vesna, the spring. + Lithuan. wdsarā, summer. + Icel. vár, vor; Dan. vaar; Swed. vår. β. All from an Aryan type WASRA, spring, the time of increasing brightness. — $\sqrt{\text{WAS}}$, to brighten, dawn; cf. Skt. vasanta, spring, ush, to burn, Lat. aurora, dawn, &c.; Fick, i. 780.

VERNIER, a short scale made to slide along a graduated instrument for measuring intervals between its divisions. (F.) So named from its inventor. 'Peter Vernier, of Franche Comté; inventor of scale, born 1580, died Sept. 14, 1637;' Hole, Brief Biographical Dictionary.

VERSATILE, turning easily from one thing to another. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. versatil, 'quickly turning;' Cot. — Lat. uersatilis, that turns round, moveable, versatile. — Lat. uersatus, pp. of uersare, to turn often, frequentative of uertere, to turn (pp. uersus); see Verse. Des. versatil-ity.

VERSE, a line of poetry, poetry, a stanza, short portion of the Bible or of a hymn. (L.) In very early use, and borrowed from Latin directly, not through the F. vers. 'Veerce, verse, Versus;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt fers in the Ormulum, 11943. — A. S. fers, a verse, a line of poetry; 'hú man tódæð þá fers on ráðinge' = how one divides the verse in reading; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 291, l. 2. — Lat. uersus (late Lat. versus), a turning, a line, row; so named from the turning to begin a new line. [Vaniček separates uersus, a furrow, which he connects with uerrere, to sweep.] — Lat. uersus, pp. of uertere, to turn. — $\sqrt{\text{WART}}$, to turn; whence also E. worth, verb, to become; see Worth (1). Der. vers-ed, Milton, P. R. iv. 327, only in the phr. versed in = conversant with, and used (instead of versate) as a translation of Lat. uersatus, pp. of uersari, to keep turning oneself about, passive form of the frequentative of uertere; and see vers-ify, vers-ion, &c. Also (from uertere), ad-vert, ad-verse, ad-vert-ise, anim-ad-vert, anni-vers-ary, a-vert, a-verse, contro-vert, con-vert, con-verse, di-vert, di-vers, di-verse, di-vers-ify, di-vorce, e-vert, in-ad-vert-ent, intro-vert, in-vert, in-verse, mal-vers-at-ion, ob-verse, per-vert, per-verse, re-vert, re-verse, sub-vert, sub-vers-ion, tergi-vers-at-ion, trans-verse, tra-verse, uni-verse, vers-at-ile, vert-ebra, vert-ex, vert-ig-o, vort-ex.

VERSIFY, to make verses. (F., — L.) M. E. versifien, P. Plowman, B. xv. 367. — F. versifier, 'to versifie,' Cot. — Lat. uersificare, to versify. — Lat. uersi-, for uersu-, crude form of uersus, a verse; and -ficare, for facere, to make; see Verse and Fact. Der. versific-at-ion, in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 977 (R.), from F. versification (omitted by Cotgrave), from Lat. acc. uersificationem; versifi-er, Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 49.

VERSION, a translation, statement. (F., — L.) Formerly used in the sense of turning or change; Bacon's Essays, Ess. 58 (Of Vicissitude). — F. version, a version, translation (not given in Cotgrave). — Low Lat. uersionem, acc. of uersio, regularly formed from uers-us, pp. of uertere.

VERST, a Russian measure of length. (Russ.) In Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 388, l. 30. — Russ. versta, a verst, 3500 Eng. feet, a verst-post; also equality; cf. verstate, to compare, to range.

VERT, green, in heraldry. (F., — L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. From F. vert, green; formerly verd, Cot. — Lat. uiridem, acc. of uiridis, green; see Verdant.

VERTEBRA, one of the small bones of the spine. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. vertebra, a joint, a vertebra. — Lat. uert-ere, to turn; see Verse. Der. vertebr-al, a coined word: vertebr-ate, vertebr-at-ed, from Lat. vertebratus, jointed.

VERTEX, the top, summit. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; the adj. vertical is in Cotgrave. — Lat. vertex, the top, properly the turning-point, esp. the pole of the sky (which is the turning-point of the stars), but afterwards applied to the zenith. — Lat. uertere, to turn; see Verse. Der. vertic-al, from F. vertical, 'vertically,' Cot., from Lat. uertic-alis, vertical, from uertic-, stem of vertex. Hence vertical-ly. Doublet, vortex.

VERTIGO, giddiness. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. uertigo (gen. uertigin-is), a turning or whirling round, giddiness. — Lat. uert-ere, to turn; see Verse.

VERVAIN, a plant of the genus verbena. (F.,—L.) M.E. ver-veine, Gower, C.A. ii. 262, l. 19. = F. verveine, 'verveine'; Cot.—Lat. verbena, used in pl. verbena, sacred boughs, usually of olive, laurel, or myrtle. Allied to uerber, a rod, properly a twig, shoot. The radical sense is perhaps 'a shoot,' a growing twig or branch; from ✓WARDH, to grow.

VERY, true, real, actual. (F.,—L.) M.E. verrai, verrei; 'verrey charite' = true charity. P. Plowman, B. xvii. 289; 'verrei man' = true man, id. C. xxii. 153. It first occurs (I think) as verray in An Old. Eng. Miscellany, p. 27, l. 26, in the O. Kentish Sermons (about A.D. 1240). = O.F. verai, later vrai (in Cotgrave vray), true. Cf. Prov. verai, true. It answers to a Low Lat. type *veracius, not found; similarly, Scheler notes the Prov. ybrai, drunken, due to a Low Latin *ebriacus, derivative of ebrius; and compares F. Cambrai, Douai from Lat. Cameracum, Duacum. This *veracius is a by-form of Lat. uerax (stem uerac-), truthful, extended from uerus, true (represented in O.F. by ver, voir, voir, true). β. The orig. sense of uerus is 'credible.' = ✓WAR, to believe, prob. identical with ✓WAR, to choose. Cf. Zend var, to believe (Fick, i. 211). Russ. vera, faith, belief, veritie, to believe, G. wahr, true; also Lat. uelle, to will, choose, G. wahl, choice. Der. very, adv., as in 'very wel,' i.e. truly well, Sir T. More, Works, p. 108 (R.); verily, adv., M.E. verraily, verailly, Chaucer, C. T. 13590. Also (from Lat. uerus) verif-y, veri-similar, veri-ty, ver-acious; ver-dict; a-ver.

VESICLE, a small tumour, bladder-like cell. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vesicula, a vesicle, or little bladder.' Englished from Lat. vesicula, a little bladder; dimin. of uesica, a bladder. Allied to Skt. vasti, the bladder. Der. vesicul-ar, adj.; also vesic-at-ion, the raising of blisters on the skin.

VESPER, the evening star; the evening; pl. vesters, even-song. (L.) In the ecclesiastical sense, the word does not seem to be old, as the E. name for the service was even-song or even-song. Vesper occurs in Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 7 (R.); and see the Index to Parker Soc. Publications. But we already find vesper, in the sense of evening-star, in Gower, C.A. ii. 109, l. 13. = Lat. vesper, the evening-star, the evening; cf. uespera, even-tide. Hence O.F. vespre (F. vêpre), 'the evening'; Cot., and vespres, 'even-song,' id. + Gk. ἑσπερος, adj. and sb., evening, ἑσπερος δόρυ, the evening-star; ἑσπέρα, even-tide. + Lithuan. wakaras, evening. + Russ. vecher, evening. β. All from an Aryan form was-karas (Curtius, i. 471); allied to Skt. vasati, night; perhaps from ✓WAS, to dwell; see West.

VESSEL, a utensil for holding liquids, &c., a ship. (F.,—L.) M.E. vessel, Chaucer, C. T. 5682. = O.F. vaisseil, veissel, vessel, a vessel, a ship (Burguy); later vaisseau, 'a vessel, of what kind soever'; Cot. = Lat. uasculum, a small vase or urn; dimin. of uas, a vase, whence also the dimin. vasculum; see Vascular, Vase.

VEST, a garment, waistcoat. (L.) In Milton, P.L. xi. 241. = Lat. uestis, a garment; lit. a cloth or covering. Formed (with Aryan suffix -ta) from ✓WAS, to cover over, clothe, protect; cf. Skt. vas, to put on (clothes), Gk. ἐν-ρῦμ (= ἐν-ρῦμ), I clothe, ἐσ-θῆς, clothing, Goth. gawassjan, to clothe, vasti, clothes; Curtius, i. 470. Der. vest, vb., formerly used in such phrases as to vest one with supreme power, and (less properly) to vest supreme power in one; see Phillips, ed. 1706; hence vest-ed, fully possessed. And see vest-ment, vest-ry, vest-ure. Also di-vest, in-vest, tra-vest-y.

VESTAL, chaste, pure. (F.,—L.) As adj. in Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 38; as sb., a Vestal virgin, priestess of Vesta, Antony, iii. 12. 31. = F. vestal, a Vestal virgin; see Cotgrave. = Lat. Uestalis, belonging to a Vestal, also (for Uestalis uirgo), a priestess of Vesta. = Lat. Uesta, a Roman goddess; goddess of fire and of purity (from the purifying effects of fire). + Gk. Ἑστία, daughter of Cronos and Rhea, goddess of the domestic hearth. = ✓WAS, to shine, burn; cf. Skt. vāsara, day, ush, to shine; see East. Curtius, i. 496.

VESTIBULE, a porch. (L.) In Swinburne, Travels in Spain, p. 216. Phillips has only the Lat. form vestibulum. Englished from Lat. uestibulum, a fore-court, entrance-court, entrance. Lit. 'that which is separated from the abode.' = Lat. us, separated from, apart from; and stabulum, an abode (which becomes -stibulum in composition, as in naustibulum, lit. a place for a ship, but applied to denote a vessel shaped like a ship). β. The Lat. us is prob. connected with duo, two; as the Skt. vi-, apart, certainly is with Skt. dvi, two. For stabulum, see Stable.

VESTIGE, a foot-print, a trace. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. vestige, 'a step, foot-step, track, trace'; Cot. = Lat. uestigium, a foot-step, track.

β. The most likely explanation of this difficult word is perhaps 'a separate stepping,' with reference to the double track left from the pair of feet, each mark being regularly separated from the other. This would derive it from us, apart; and *-stigium, a going, marching, walk, from a base stig- allied to Gk. στειχέω, to go, march, from the ✓STIGH, to climb, stride. See Vestibule and Stile (1).

VESTMENT, a garment, long robe. (F.,—L.) M.E. vestment; pl. vestimenz, Ancren Riwle, p. 418. This form occurs as late as in Spenser, F.Q. iii. 12. 29; whilst the Prompt. Parv. has both vestment and vestymente. = O.F. *vestment, vestement, 'a vestment,' Cot. (Mod. F. vêtement). = Lat. uestimentum, a garment. = Lat. uesti-re, to clothe. = Lat. uesti-, crude form of uestis; see Vest.

VESTRY, a place for keeping vestments. (F.,—L.) M.E. vestry, Prompt. Parv. Slightly altered from O.F. vestiaire, 'the vestry in a church'; Cot. = Lat. uestiarius, a wardrobe; orig. neut. of uestiarius, adj., belonging to a vest. = Lat. uesti-, crude form of uestis; see Vest.

VESTURE, dress, a robe. (F.,—L.) In P. Plowman, B. i. 23. = O.F. vesture, 'a clothing, arraying'; Cot. = Low Lat. uestitura, clothing. = Lat. uestit-us, pp. of uestire, to clothe. = Lat. uesti-, crude form of uestis; see Vest. Cf. E. in-vestiture.

VETCH, a genus of plants. (F.,—L.) The same as fitch; pl. fitches, Isaiah xxviii. 25, Ezek. iv. 9 (A.V.). In the earlier of Wyclif's versions of Isaiah xxviii. 25, the word is written fiche, and in the later fetichis. Baret (Alvearie) gives: 'Fitches, Vicia . . Plin. Bisnor; A. vinciendo, vt Varroni placet'; Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. For the variation of the initial letter, cf. fane and vane, fat and vat, E. verse with A.S. fers; the variation is dialectal, and in the present case the right form is that with initial v. The correct M.E. spelling would be veche; we actually find 'Hec uicia, Anglice feche' in Wright's Gloss, i. 201, col. 2, in a vocabulary strongly marked by Northern forms; feche being the Northern form corresponding to the Southern veche. = O.F. veche, vesse, later vesce; of these forms, the older ones are given by Palsgrave, who has: 'Fetche, a lytell pease, uesse, ueche, lentille'; whilst Cotgrave has: 'Vesce, the pulse called fitch or vitch.' = Lat. uicia, a vetch. β. As the vetch has tendrils, Varro's derivation is to be accepted; viz. from the base WIK, to bind, as appearing in vincire, to bind, uinca, a plant (orig. a climbing one); and still more clearly in ✓WI, to wind, whence Lat. ui-is, a vine, ui-men, a pliant twig. See Withy.

VETERAN, experienced, long exercised in military life. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. ueteranus, old, veteran, experienced; as sb., a veteran. = Lat. ueter-, stem of uetus, old, aged; lit. 'advanced in years.' β. From the base WAT-AS, WET-AS, a year; cf. Gk. ἔτος (= ἔτ-ος), a year, Skt. vaitsa, a year; also Lithuan. vētuszas, old, Russ. vetkhie, old, vetshate, to grow old. Fick, i. 765. See Veal. Der. veteran, sb. From the same base are veter-in-ary, in-veter-ate, veal, wether.

VETERINARY, pertaining to the art of treating diseases of domestic animals. (L.) 'Veterinarian, he that lets horses or mules to hire, a hackney-man, also a horse-leech or farrier'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Sir T. Browne has veterinarian as a sb., Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 2, § 1. = Lat. ueterinarius, of or belonging to beasts of burden; as sb., a cattle-doctor. = Lat. ueterinus, belonging to beasts of burden; pl. ueterina (sc. bestiae), beasts of burden. β. The Lat. ueterina probably meant, originally, an animal at least a year old, one that had passed its first year, from the same base (WETAS, a year) as occurs in uetus (gen. ueter-is), old; see Veteran and Veal. And see Wether. Der. veterinari-an, as above.

VETO, a prohibition. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. ueto, I forbid; hence the saying of 'I forbid,' i.e. a prohibition. β. The orig. sense of ueta is 'to leave in the old state,' hence to vote against change; allied to uetus, old; cf. E. inveterate. Der. veto, verb.

VEX, to harass, torment, irritate. (F.,—L.) M.E. vexen, Prompt. Parv. = F. vexer, 'to vex'; Cot. = Lat. uexare, to vex, lit. to keep on carrying or moving a thing about; an intensive form of uehere, to carry (pt. t. uexi). See Vehicle. Der. vex-at-ion, from F. vexation, 'vexation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uexationem; vex-at-i-ous, vex-at-i-ously, -ness.

VIADUCT, a road or railway carried across a valley or river. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from Lat. uia ducta, a way conducted across; from Lat. uia, a way, and ducta, fem. of ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead, conduct; see Duct, Duke.

β. Lat. uia was formerly written uea, and is most likely put for *ueha, answering to Skt. vaha, a road, a way, from vah, to carry = Lat. uehere. It is also cognate with E. Way; Fick, iii. 282. = ✓WAGH, to carry; see Vehicle. It is remarkable that Fick should also give (i. 782) an unsatisfactory etymology connecting uia with Skt. vi, to go. Der. uiaticum, a doublet of voyage, q.v.; also con-vey, con-voy, de-vi-ate, de-vi-ous, en-voy, im-per-vi-ous, in-voice, ob-vi-ate, ob-vi-ous, per-vi-ous, pre-vi-ous, tri-vi-al.

VIAL, PHIAL, a small glass vessel or bottle. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Phial is a pedantic spelling; the spelling vial is historically more correct, as we took the word from French; a still better spelling would be viol. 'Vyole, a glasse, fiolle, virole'; Palsgrave. M.E. viols; pl. violis, Wyclif, Rev. v. 8, where the A.V. has viols. = O.F. viola, fiola, fiolle (for which forms see Palsgrave above), later phiole,

'a violl, a small glass bottle;' Cot. Mod. F. fiote.—Lat. phiala, a saucer, a shallow drinking-vessel (the form of which must have been altered).—Gk. φιάλη, a shallow cup or bowl. Root unknown.

VIAND, food, provision. (F.,—L.) Usually in pl. viands. (F.,—L.) 'Deintie viande;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 6 (R.).—F. viande, 'meat, food, substance;' Cot. The same as Ital. vivanda, victuals, food, eatables.—Lat. uiuenda, neut. pl., things to live on, provisions; considered as a fem. sing., by a change common in Low Latin.—Lat. uiuendus, fut. pass. of uiuere, to live; see VICTUALS.

VIBRATE, to swing, move backwards and forwards. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has vibration; the verb is perhaps a little later.—Lat. vibratus, pp. of vibrare, to shake, swing, brandish.—✓WIP, to shake, agitate; cf. Skt. vīp, to throw, Icel. veifa, to vibrate, wave. See Waive. Der. vibrat-ion, vibrat-ory.

VICAR, lit. a deputy; the incumbent of a benefice. (F.,—L.) M. E. vicar, a deputy, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 379; also vicary, a vicar, id. C. T. 17333.—F. vicare, 'a vicar, or vice-gerent, also the tenant or incumbent who, in the right of a corporation or church, is to pay duties, or do services, unto the lord of the land;' Cot.—Lat. vicarium, acc. of vicarius, a substitute, deputy; orig. an adj., substituted, deputed, said of one who supplies the turn or place of another.—Lat. vic-, stem of vicis (gen.), a turn, change, succession.—✓WIK, to yield, give way; hence to succeed in another's turn; cf. Gk. ἐκ-είν, to yield, G. weich-sel, a turn. Fick, i. 784. Der. vicar-age, spelt eycrage in Palsgrave (prob. a misprint for veycrage); vicar-i-al; vicar-i-ate, sb., from F. vicariat, 'a vicarship,' Cot. Also vicar-i-ous, Englished from Lat. vicarius, substituted, delegated, vicarious (as above); vicar-i-ous-ly. And see vice-gerent, vic-iss-i-tude.

VICE (1), a blemish, fault, depravity. (F.,—L.) M. E. vice, vyce, Rob. of Glouc., p. 195, l. 7.—F. vice, 'a vice, fault;' Cot.—Lat. vitium, a vice, fault. Root uncertain. Der. vici-ous, from F. vicioux, 'vicious,' Cot., from Lat. vitiosus, faulty; vici-ous-ly; vici-ous-ness, spelt vyiciousnesse in Palsgrave; viti-ate, spelt viciate in Cot. (to translate F. vicier), from Lat. vitiat, pp. of vitare, to injure; viti-at-ion.

VICE (2), an instrument, tightened by a screw, for holding anything firmly. (F.,—L.) M. E. vice, vyce, in Wyclif, 3 Kings, vi. 8, where it means 'a winding-stair,' (see the A. V.), the orig. sense being 'a screw.' A vice is so called because tightened by a screw.—F. vis, 'the vice, or spindle of a presse, also a winding-stair;' Cot. O. F. viz; Burguy.—Lat. vis, a vine, bryony, the lit. sense being 'that which winds or twines;' hence the O. F. viz (= vits), where the suffixed s represents the termination -is of the Lat. nom.—✓WI, to wind, bind, or twine about; cf. E. with, withy, Lat. ui-men, a plant twig, &c. Cf. Ital. vite, 'the vine, also a vice or a scrue,' Florio.

VICE-GERENT, having delegated authority, acting in place of another. (F.,—L.) In Shak. L. L. i. 1. 222.—F. vicegerent, 'a vice-gerent, or deputy;' Cot.—Lat. vice, in place of; and gerent-, stem of pres. part. of gerere, to carry on, perform, conduct, act, rule. Here vice is the abl. from the gen. vicis, a turn, change, stead (the nom. not being used); see Vicar. For gerere, see Gesture. ¶ With the same prefix vice- (F. vice, Lat. vice, in place of) we have vice-admiral, vice-chancellor; also vice-roy, Temp. iii. 2. 116, where roy=F. roi, Lat. regem, acc. of rex, a king; vice-regal; and see vis-count.

VICINAGE, neighbourhood. (F.,—L.) Vicinage is a pedantic spelling of voisinage, due to an attempt to reduce the F. word to a Lat. spelling; both forms are given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bp. Taylor has the spelling voisinage more than once, in Episcopacy Asserted, § 21 (R.), and Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4 (R.).—F. voisinage, 'neighbourhood;' Cot.—F. voisin, 'neighbouring,' id.—Lat. uicinium, acc. of uicinus, neighbouring, near, lit. belonging to the same street.—Lat. ui-us, a village, street (whence the A. S. wic, E. wick, a town, is borrowed).+Gk. oikos, a house, dwelling-place.+Russ. vese, a village.+Skt. vepa, a house, entrance.—✓WIK, to come to, enter, enter into; Skt. vīp, to enter. Der. vicin-i-ty, from F. vicinité, 'vicinity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uicinitatem, neighbourhood. Der. (from Gk. oikos), par-ish, par-och-i-al.

VICISSITUDE, change. (L.) In Bacon, Essay On Vicissitude of Things.—Lat. uicissitudo, change. Allied to uicissi-m, by turns; where the suffix -sim may be compared with pas-sim, rees-sim, &c.—Lat. uicis (gen.), a change; see Vicar.

VICTIM, a living being offered as a sacrifice, one who is persecuted. (F.,—L.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xii. l. 319.—F. victime (not in Cotgrave).—Lat. victimata, a victim. Root uncertain and disputed. Der. victim-ise, a coined word.

VICTOR, a conqueror. (L.) In K. John, ii. 324.—Lat. victor, a conqueror; see below.

VICTORY, success in a contest. (F.,—L.) M. E. victoria. In King Alisaunder, 7663.—O. F. victorie (Burguy), later victoire, 'victory,' Cot.—Lat. victoria, conquest.—Lat. victor, a conqueror.—Lat. uiet-us, pp. of vincere, to conquer (pt. t. uiet-i).—✓WIK, to fight; whence also Goth. weigan, weihan (pp. wigans), to strive, contend; g.

A. S. wig, war. Fick, i. 783. Der. victori-ous (Palsgrave), from F. victorieux, Lat. uictoriosus, full of victory; victori-ous-ly. Also (from vincere) victor, as above; vanquish, vinc-ible; con-vince, con-vict, e-vince, e-vict, in-vinc-ible, pro-vince.

VICTUALS, provisions, meat. (F.,—L.) The sing. victual is little used now, but occurs in Exod. xii. 39 (A. V.), and in Much Ado, i. 1. 50. The word is grossly misspelt, by a blind pedantry which ignores the F. origin; yet the true orthography is fairly represented by the pronunciation as vittle, still commonly used by the best speakers. M. E. vitaille, Chaucer, C. T. 248.—O. F. vitaille (Burguy), later victuaille (with inserted c, due to pedantry); Cot. gives 'victuailles, victuals,' but Palsgrave has 'Vytaile, uitaille, uiures; Vytaylles, mete and drinke, toute maniere de uitailles.'—Lat. uictualia, neut. pl., provisions, victuals.—Lat. uictualis, belonging to nourishment.—Lat. uictu-, crude form of uictus, food, nourishment; with suffix -alis.—Lat. uict-us, pp. of uiuere, to live; allied to uiuus, living.—✓GIW, to live; cf. Skt. jīu, to live, Gk. βί-ος, life, Russ. jite, to live; and see Quick. Fick, i. 571. Der. victual, verb, As You Like It, v. 4. 198; victuall-er, spelt vystaler in Palsgrave. Also (from the same root) vi-and, vi-tal, viv-ac-i-ous, viv-id, viv-i-fy, vivi-par-ous, vivi-section; con-viv-i-al, re-vive, sur-vive; also bio-graphy, bio-logy; quick; viper, wyvern.

VIDELICET, namely. (L.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 330. In old MSS. and books, the abbreviation for Lat. -et (final) closely resembled a z. Hence the abbreviation viz.=viet., short for videlicet.—Lat. videlicet, put for videre licet (like scilicet=scire licet), it is easy to see, it is manifest, hence plainly, to wit, namely.—Lat. videre, to see; and licet, it is allowable, hence, it is easy. See Vision and License.

VIDETTE, another spelling of Vedette, q. v.

VIE, to contend, strive for superiority. (F.,—L.) M. E. vien, a contracted form of M. E. envien, due to the loss of the initial syllable, as in story for history, fence for defence, &c. In Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 173, we have: 'To vye who might slepe best,' ed. Thynne (1532), and so also in the Tanner MS. 346; but MS. Fairfax 16 has: 'To envye who myght slepe best,' where To envye=Tenvye in pronunciation, just as Chaucer has tabiden=to abiden, &c. β. This M. E. envien is quite a different word from envien, to envy; it is really a doublet of invite, and is a term formerly used in gambling.—O. F. 'envier (au ieu), to vie;' Cot.—Lat. inuicare, to invite; see Invite. γ. This is proved by the Span. and Ital. forms; cf. Span. envidar, 'among gamesters, to invite or to open the game by staking a certain sum,' Neuman; Ital. inuicare (al giuoco), 'to vie or to reuie at any game, to drop vie; in-uito, a vie at play, a vie at any game; also, an inviting, proffer, or bidding;' Florio. See plentiful examples of vie, to wager, and vie, sb., a wager, in Nares; and remember that the true sense of with is against, as in with-stand, fight with, &c., so that to vie with=to stake against, wager against, which fully explains the word. Much more might be added; Scheler's excellent explanation of F. à l'envi is strictly to the point; so also Wedgwood's remarks on E. vie. In particular, the latter shews that the O. F. envier also meant 'to invite,' and he adds: 'From the verb was formed the adv. expression à l'envi, E. a-vis, as if for a wager: "They that write of these toads strive a-vis who shall write most wonders of them," Holland, tr. of Pliny; [b. xxxii. c. 5.] Doublet, invite.

VIEW, a sight, reach of the sight, a scene, mental survey. (F.,—L.) Very common in Shak.; see Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 144, iii. 2. 377, &c. Levins has the verb to veue.—F. veü, 'the sense, act, or instrument of seeing, the eyes, a glance, a view, look, sight,' &c.; Cot. Properly the fem. of veu, 'viewed, seen,' pp. of veoir (mod. F. voir), 'to view, see;' id.—Lat. uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. view, verb; view-er; re-view; view-less, invisible, Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 124.

VIGIL, the eve before a feast or fast-day. (F.,—L.) Lit. 'a watching;' so named because orig. kept by watching through the night. M. E. uigile, Ancr. Riwe, p. 412, l. 23; Chaucer, C. T. 379.—F. vigile, 'a vigile, the eve of a holy or solemn day;' Cot.—Lat. uigilia, a watch, watching.—Lat. uigil, awake, lively, vigilant, watchful.—Lat. uigens, to be lively or vigorous, flourish, thrive.—✓WAG, to be strong, to wake; see Vegetable. Der. vigil-ant, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 64, from F. vigilant, 'vigilant,' Cot., from Lat. uigilant-, stem of pres. part. of uigilare, to watch; vigil-ance, Temp. iii. 1. 16, from F. vigilance, 'vigilancy,' Cot., from Lat. uigilantia. From the same root are veg-etable, vig-our, in-vig-or-ate, ved-ette (for vel-ette), re-veill, sur-veill-ance; also wake, watch, wait; eke, wax, &c.

VIGNETTE, a small engraving with ornamented borders. (F.,—L.) So called because orig. applied to ornamented borders in which vine-leaves and tendrils were freely introduced. In the edition of Cotgrave's Dict. published in 1660, the English Index (by Sherwood) has a title-page with such a border, in which two pillars are represented on each side, wreathed with vines bearing leaves, tendrils, and bunches of grapes.—F. vignette, 'a little vine; vignettes, vignets, branches, or branchlike borders or flourishes, in painting or engraving; Cot. Dimin. of F. vigne, a vine; see Vine.

VIGOUR, vital strength, force, energy. (F., -L.) M. E. vigour; spelt vigor, King Alisaunder, l. 1431. - O. F. vigour, vigor, later vigueur, 'vigor'; Cot. - Lat. uigore, acc. of uigor, liveliness, activity, force. - Lat. uigere, to be lively or vigorous; see Vigilant. Der. vigor-ous, spelt vygourous in Palsgrave, from F. vigoureux, 'vigorous'; Cot.; vigor-ous-ly, vigor-ous-ness.

VIKING, a Northern pirate. (Scand.) The form vicing occurs in A. S., but the word is borrowed from Scandinavian. - Icel. vikings, a freebooter, rover, pirate, used in the Icel. Sagas esp. of the bands of Scand. warriors who, during the 9th and 10th centuries, harried the British Isles and Normandy. The lit. sense is 'a creek-dweller,' one of the men who haunted the bays, creeks, and fjords. - Icel. vik, a creek, inlet, bay; with suffix -ingr (A. S. -ing) in the sense of 'son of' or belonging to. So also Swed. vik, Dan. vig, a creek, cove. The orig. sense of vik is 'a bend' or 'recess.' - Icel. vikja (strong verb, pt. t. veyk, veik), to turn, veer, trend, recede; Swed. vika, to give way, recede; Dan. vige. See Weak.

VILE, abject, base, worthless, wicked. (F., -L.) M. E. vil, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 16. - F. vil (fem. vile), 'vile, abject, base, low, mean, . . . good cheape, of small price'; Cot. - Lat. vilem, acc. of vilis, of small price, cheap, worthless, base, vile. Root uncertain. Der. vile-ly, vile-ness; vil-i-ty, a coined word, to account vile, defame, properly to make vile, as in Milton, P. L. xi. 516; vil-i-fi-er, vil-i-fi-at-ion.

VILLA, a country residence or seat, a house. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, b. iii. l. 283. - Lat. villa, a farm-house; lit. 'a small village.' Dimin. of vicius, a village; whence vic-ula = vic-la = villa. See Vicinage. Der. vill-age, Chaucer, C. T. 12621, from F. village, 'a village'; Cot., from Lat. adj. villaticus, belonging to a villa; villag-er, Jul. Caesar, i. 2. 172; villag-er-y, a collection of villages, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. l. 35. And see vill-ain.

VILLAIN, a clownish or depraved person, a scoundrel. (F., -L.) M. E. vilein, vileyn, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 18, l. 7. 'For vilanie maketh vileine'; Rom. of the Rose, 2181. - O. F. vilein, 'servile, base, vile'; Cot. He also gives vilaïn, 'a villaine, slave, bondman, servile tenant.' - Low Lat. villanus, a farm-servant, serf; the degradation by which it passed into a term of reproach is well stated by Cotgrave, who further explains villanus as meaning 'a farmer, yeoman, churl, carle, boore, clown, knave, rascall, filthie fellow.' - Lat. villa, a farm; see Villa. Der. villain-ous, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 308; villain-ous-ly; also villain-y, M. E. villanie, Chaucer, C. T. 70, Ancren Riwle, p. 216, from O. F. vilenie (or vilanie), 'villainy'; Cot.

VINCIBLE, that can be conquered. (L.) Rare. In Bp. Taylor, Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3 (R.). - Lat. vincibilis, easily overcome. - Lat. vincere, to conquer; see Victor. Der. vincibil-i-ty; in-vincible.

VINCULUM, a link. (L.) Modern; chiefly used as a math. term. - Lat. vinculum, a bond, fetter, link. - Lat. vincire, to bind, fetter. A nasalised form from the base WIK, to bind, extension of WI, to bind, twine; see Vine, Withy.

VINDICATE, to lay claim to, defend, maintain by force. (L.) In Milton, P. R. ii. 47. - Lat. vindicatus, pp. of vindicare, to lay legal claim to, arrogate, avenge. - Lat. vindic-, stem of vindex, a claimant, maintainer. Orig. 'one who expresses a desire' or states a claim. - Lat. vin-, i. e. a desire or wish, allied to men-ia, favour, permission, from WAN, to wish (see Venerate); and the base DIK, to shew, appearing in dic-are, to appoint, dicere, to say, and in the suffix -dex as seen in in-dex (see Indicate). Der. vindicat-or, vindicable, vindic-at-ion; vindic-at-ive, i. e. vindictive, Troil. iv. 5. 107; vindic-at-or-y; and see vindic-tive, vengeance.

VINDICTIVE, revengeful. (F., -L.) Vindictive is merely a shortened form of vindicative, obviously due to confusion with the related Lat. vindicta, revenge. Bp. Taylor, in his Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3, speaks of 'vindicative justice,' but in the same work, b. ii. c. 2, of 'vindicative justice'; if Richardson's quotations be correct. Shak. has vindicative = vindicative, Troil. iv. 5. 107. - F. vindicatif, 'vindicative, revenging'; Cot. Formed with suffix -if (= Lat. -ivus) from vindicat-us, pp. of vindicare, (1) to claim, (2) to avenge; see Vindicate. Der. vindic-tive-ly, -ness.

VINE, the plant from which wine is made. (F., -L.) M. E. vine, vyne; Wyclif, John, xv. 1. - F. vine, 'a vine'; Cot. - Lat. vinea, a vineyard, which in late Lat. seems to have taken the sense of 'vine,' for which the true Lat. word is vitis. Vinea is properly the fem. of adj. vineus, of or belonging to wine. - Lat. vinum, wine. + Gk. olvos, wine; allied to olvy, the vine, olvas, the vine, grape, vine. Cf. Lat. vitis, the vine. - WI, to twine; as seen in Lat. viere, to twist together, vi-men, a plant twig, vi-tis, the vine, &c., Fick, i. 782. And see Curtius, i. 487, who notes that the Gk. words were used 'by no means exclusively of the drink, but just as much of the vine. Pott very appropriately compares the Lithuan. ap-vy-nys, a hop-tendril. . . .

The fact is therefore that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various pliant twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice. The Northern names (Goth. wein, &c.) are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed. See the whole passage. To which we may add that the Lat. vinum also means 'grapes,' and the E. vine-yard = A. S. win-geard = wine-yard, which identified wine with the wine itself. Der. vine-dress-er; vin-er-y, occurring in 'the vyner-y of Ramer,' in Fabyan's Chronicle, John of France, an. 8 (ed. Ellis, p. 511), a word coined on the model of buit-er-y, pant-ry, brew-er-y; vine-yard, A. S. win-geard, Matt. xx. 1; vin-ous, a late word, from Lat. vinosus, belonging to wine. Also vin-egar, vin-i-age, vin-i-ner, which see below. From the same root are withe or withy, wine, ferrule, periwinkle (1), veer, vinculum.

VINEGAR, an acid liquor made from fermented liquors. (F., -L.) M. E. vinegre, vynegre, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 36. Lit. 'sour wine.' - F. vinaigre, 'vinegar'; Cot. - F. vin, wine; and aigre, sharp, sour; see Vine or Wine, and Eager.

VINEWED, mouldy. (E.) In mod. edd. of Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 15, we generally find vinewed'st, where the folios have whinid'st. Minshew, ed. 1627, has finewed, as equivalent to 'mustie'; and also the sb. vinewedness; and see vinewed, finewed, fenowed in Nares. Cf. prov. E. vinewed (West), Halliwell. The form finewed answers to the pp. of A. S. finegan, fynegan, to become mouldy or musty, occurring in the Canons of Ælfric, § 36; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 360, l. 7. It is a verb formed from an adj. finig or fyng, mouldy, occurring in the same passage. We also find the pl. finie (for finige) in Josh. ix. 5, where it is used of mouldy loaves. Ettmüller refers it to the form fyng, as if allied to Icel. fini, rottenness, which does not account for the n. The right form seems to be fénig or finig (as in Leo), answering to M. E. fenny, used in the sense of dirty, vile, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1113; so also fenny, i. e. musty, dirty, in Sandys' Travels, ed. 1632, p. 160, l. 4. This is nothing but the adj. from A. S. fenn, mire, John, ix. 6, which is the same as mod. E. Fen, q. v. Cf. A. S. fénlic, muddy, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 242, l. 30. ¶ The form vinewed can only be made from the pp. of the verb, not from the adj., as Nares wrongly imagined.

VINTAGE, the gathering or produce of grapes, time of grape-gathering. (F., -L.) 'Tyll they had inned [gathered in] all their come and vintage;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 22 (R.). Vintage is a corruption of M. E. vindage, Wyclif, Levit. xxv. 5, or vendage, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 367, which was also pronounced as ventage, as shewn by the various readings in P. Plowman, C. cxi. 414. And again, M. E. vendage is for vendange, the unfamiliar ending -ange being turned into the common suffix -age; it is clear that the word was confused with vint-ner, vint-ry; see Vintner. - F. vendange (also vendenge in Cotgrave), 'a vintage'; Cot. - Lat. vindemia, a vintage. - Lat. vin-um, (1) wine, (2) grapes; and dem-ere, to take away; so that vin-demia = a taking away of grapes, grape-gathering. β. For Lat. vinum, see Vine, Wine. The Lat. dēmere is for de-imere, to take away; from de, prep., off, away, and emere, to take; see De and Redeem.

VINTNER, a wine-dealer, tavern-keeper. (F., -L.) 'Vyntnere, Vinarius;' Prompt. Parv. Thus vintner is short for vintener; and again, vintener is an altered form of vineter or viniter, which is the older form. It occurs, spelt viniter, in Rob. of Glouc., p. 542, in a passage where we also find viniterie, now shortened to vintry, and occurring as the name of a house in London (Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thoms, p. 90). - F. vinetier, 'a vintner, taverner, wine-seller'; Cot. - Low Lat. vinetarius, a wine-seller (occurring A.D. 1226). Really derived from Lat. vinetum, a vineyard, but used with the sense of Lat. vinarius, a wineseller. - Lat. vinum, wine; see Vine or Wine.

VIOL, a kind of fiddle, a musical instrument. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 162. - F. viole (also violle), 'a (musical) viol, or violin'; Cot. Cf. Ital., Span., and Port. viola, Prov. viola, viola (Diez). Diez takes the Prov. viola (a trisyllabic word) to be the oldest form, derived from Low Lat. vitula, vidula, a viol, which was first transposed into the form *viutla, *viudla, cf. Prov. vezza from Lat. uidua, teune from Lat. tenuis, and then became *viulla, viula, viola. 'Vidulatores dicuntur a vidula, Gallice viole;' John de Garlande, in Wright's Voc. i. 137, l. 4 from bottom. Diez also remarks that it was sometimes called vitula iocosa, the merry viol; and he derives it from Lat. utulari, to celebrate a festival, keep holiday. β. The Lat. utulari prob. meant orig. to sacrifice a calf; it is plainly formed from Lat. utulus, a calf; see Veal. γ. The A. S. fidul, O. H. G. fidula, E. fiddle appear to be borrowed from Low Lat. utula; see Fiddle, which is thus seen to be a doublet. Der. viol-in, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, l. 103, from Ital. violino, dimin. of viola, a viol; viol-in-ist, a player on the violin; viol-on-cell-o, a bass violin, from Ital. violoncello, dimin. of violone, a bass-viol, augmentative form of violo. Also bass-viol, Comedy of Errors, iv. 3. 23. Doublet, fiddle.

VIOLATE, to injure, abuse, profane, ravish. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 21. — Lat. violatus, pp. of violare, to violate. Orig. 'to treat with force'; formed as if from an adj. *violus, due to ui-, crude form of uis, force.

β. Perhaps allied to Gk. βία, force. If so, both Lat. uis and Gk. βία are due to a base GW1, from √GI, to overpower, win; cf. Skt. ji, to overpower, win; Fick, i. 570. γ. But Curtius (i. 486) connects Lat. uis with Gk. ἰς, strength; in which case the form of the root is √WI, to bind, wind. Der. violat-or, from Lat. violator; viola-ble, from Lat. violabilis; violat-ion, from F. violation, 'a violation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uiolationem. Also viol-ent, q.v.; (from the same root) per-vi-cac-i-ous.

VIOLENT, vehement, outrageous, very forcible. (F., — L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 12801. — F. violent, 'violent,' Cot. — Lat. violentus, violent, full of might. Formed with suffix -entus from an adjectival form *violus, due to ui-, crude form of uis, strength. Der. violent-ly; violence, Chaucer, C. T. 16376, from F. violence, 'violence,' Cot., from Lat. sb. violencia.

VIOLET, a flower; a light purple colour. (F., — L.) M. E. violet, vyolet, Prompt. Parv.; Trevisa, i. 261. — F. violet, m., also violette, fem., 'a violet; also, violet-colour;' Cot. Dimin. of F. viola, 'a gilliflower,' Cot.; it must also have meant a violet. — Lat. viola, a violet. Formed with dimin. suffix -la from a base ui-, cognate with Gk. ἴω, base of ἴω (put for ἴω), a violet. Der. violet, adj., violet-coloured.

VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO; see under Viol.

VIPER, a poisonous snake. (F., — L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — F. vipere, 'the serpent called a viper;' Cot. — Lat. viperā, a viper. Lit. the serpent 'that produces living young;' Buffon says that the viper differs from most other serpents in being much slower, as also in excluding its young completely formed, and bringing them forth alive. Thus viperā is short for vivipara, fem. of viviparus, producing live young; see Viviparous. Der. viper-ous, Cor. iii. 1. 287; viper-ine, Blount, from Lat. viperinus, adj. Doublet, wyvern.

VIRAGO, a bold, impudent, manlike woman. (L.) In Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. i, ed. Arber, p. 34, l. 2. 'This [woman] schal be clepid virago,' Wyclif, Gen. ii. 23. — Lat. uirago, a manlike maiden, female warrior; extended from uira, a woman, fem. of uir, a man. See Virile.

VIRGIN, a maiden. (F., — L.) In early use; the pl. virgines occurs in St. Katharine, l. 2342. — O. F. virgine (Burguy). — Lat. uirginem, acc. of uirgo, a virgin. Root uncertain (not allied to uir, a man, or uirere, to flourish, as the base is uirg-, not uir-). Der. virgin-i-ty, M. E. uirginites, Chaucer, C. T. 5657, from F. virginité, 'virginity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. virginitatem. Also virgin-al, spelt virginal in Levins, ed. 1570; an old musical instrument, so called because played upon by virgins (Blount, Nares), from F. virginal, 'belonging to a virgin,' Cot., from Lat. adj. uirginalis. Also Virgo (Lat. uirgo), the Virgin, a zodiacal sign.

VRIDITY, greenness. (L.) Little used; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who gives an example from Evelyn. Englished from Lat. uiriditas, greenness. — Lat. uiridis, green. See Verdant.

VRILE, male, masculine, manly. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. viril, 'virile, manly;' Cot. — Lat. uirilis, manly. — Lat. uir, a man, a hero. + Gk. ἥρως (for ἥρως), a hero. + Skt. vrā, sb., a hero; adj., strong, heroic. + Zend vira, a hero (Fick, i. 786). + Lithuan. wyras, a man. + Irish féar, a man. + Goth. waír, a man. + A. S. wer. + O. H. G. wer. β. All from the Aryan type WIRA, a man, hero. Root unknown. Der. viril-i-ty (Blount), from F. virilité, 'virility,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uirilitatem, manhood. Also vir-ago, q.v., vir-tue, q.v.; decem-vir, trium-vir. And see hero.

VIRTUE, excellence, worth, efficacy. (F., — L.) M. E. vertu, Ancren Riwle, p. 340, l. 9. — F. vertu, 'virtue, goodness;' Cot. — Lat. uirutem, acc. of uirtus, manly excellence. — Lat. uir, a man; see Virile.

¶ The spelling has been changed from vertu to virtus to bring it nearer to Latin. Der. virtu-ous, M. E. vertuous, Chaucer, C. T. 251, from F. vertueux, 'vertuous,' Cot., from Low Lat. uirtuosus, full of virtue (Ducange); virtu-ous-ly; virtu-al, having effect, in Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, § 3 (R.), from F. virtuel (Littre), as if from a Lat. form *virtualis; virtu-al-ly. Also virtu, a love of the fine arts, a late word, borrowed from Ital. virtù (also vertù), shortened form of virtute, virtue, excellence, used in the particular sense of learning or excellence in a love of the fine arts, from Lat. acc. virtutem; whence virtu-oso, Evelyn's Diary, Feb. 27, 1644, from Ital. virtuoso, lit. virtuous, learned, esp. a person skilled in the fine arts.

VRULENT, very active in injuring, spiteful, bitter in animosity. (F., — L.) Lit. poisonous. 'The seed of dragon is hot and biting, and besides of a virulent and stinking smell;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 16. — F. virulent, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century (Littre). — Lat. uirulentus, poisonous, virulent. — Lat. uiru-, for uiro-, crude form of uirus, slime, poison; with suffix -lentus. + Gk. ἰός (for ἰάος), poison. + Skt. viska, poison. β. From the Aryan type WISA, poison; Fick, i. 786. Der. virulent-ly; virulence, from F. virulence, 'stench, rankness, poison,' Cot., from Lat. uirulentia. The sb. virus, borrowed immediately from Latin, is now also in use.

VRISAGE, the face, mien, look. (F., — L.) M. E. visage, King Alisaunder, 5652. — F. visage, 'the visage, face, look;' Cot. Formed with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from F. vis, 'the visage, face,' Cot. — Lat. uisum, acc. of uisus, the vision, sight; whence the sense was transferred to that of 'look' or mien, and finally to that of 'face;' perhaps (as Scheler suggests) under the influence of G. gesicht, the face, lit. the sight. — Lat. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. visag-ed, as in tripe-visaged, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 9.

VRISAD, the same as Visor, q.v.

VRISERA, the entrails. (L.) A medical term. — Lat. uisera, neut. pl., the entrails; from nom. sing. uiscus. The orig. sense is that which is sticky or clammy; it is allied to uisum, mistletoe, birdlime; see Viscid. Der. viscer-al (Blount), e-viscer-ate.

VRISCID, sticky, clammy. (F., — L.) 'Viscid, or Viscous, clammy, fast as glue;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. viscide, 'clammy,' Cot. — Lat. uiscidus, clammy, like birdlime. — Lat. uisum, the mistletoe, also birdlime. + Gk. ἰός, ἰγία, mistletoe, the mistletoe-berry, from which birdlime was made. Root unknown. Der. viscid-i-ty, from F. viscidité, 'visciditie,' Cot. So also visc-ous, from Lat. uiscosus, clammy; visc-os-i-ty, from F. viscosité, 'viscositie,' Cot.

VRISCOUNT, a title; an officer who formerly supplied the place of a count or earl. (F., — L.) The s (in the E. word) was not pronounced; so that the usual E. spelling was formerly vicounte (pronounced with i as in F., whence the mod. E. vicount, pronounced with i as in modern E.); spelt vicounte in Fabyan, Chron. c. 245. — F. viconte, 'a vicount, was at the first the deputy or lieutenant of an earle,' &c.; Cot. In the 12th century the word was spelt visconte (Littre), a traditional spelling which we still retain, though the s was early lost in F., and was probably never sounded in E. The prefix was also written vicc, as in F. vicc-admiral, 'a viceadmiral,' vicc-counte, 'a vicount,' Cot.; Roquefort notes the O. F. vis-admiral, a vice-admiral. See Vicegerent and Count. Der. viscount-ess, from O. F. vis-, prefix, vicc-, and Countess. [†] VRISIBLE, that can be seen. (F., — L.) Spelt visyble in Palsgrave. F. visible, 'visible;' Cot. — Lat. uisibilis, that may be seen. — Lat. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see. See Vision.

VRISIER, the same as Vizier, q.v.

VRISION, sight, a sight, dream. (F., — L.) M. E. visioun, visiun, Cursor Mundi, 4454. — F. vision, 'a vision, sight;' Cot. — Lat. uisiōnem, acc. of uisio, sight. — Lat. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see. + Gk. ἰδ-εῖν (for ἰδέναι), to see, infin. of ἰδω, I saw, a 2nd aorist form; whence perf. t. ἰδὼν (I have seen), I know (= E. wot). + Skt. vid, to know. + Goth. witan, to know; A. S. witan. β. All from √WID, to see, know; see Wit, verb. Der. vision-ary, adj., Dryden, Tyrannick Love, Act i. sc. 1 (R.), a coined word; also vision-ary, sb., one who sees visions, or forms impracticable schemes. Also (from Lat. uisus) vis-age, q.v., vis-ible, q.v., vis-or, q.v., vis-it, q.v., vis-la, q.v., vis-u-al, q.v.; also ad-visa, ad-visa, pre-vis-ion, pro-vis-ion, pro-vis-o, pro-visor, re-visa, super-visa. Also (from Lat. uidere), en-vy, e-vid-ence, in-vid-i-ous, juris-prud-ence, pro-uide, pro-vid-ent, pru-ident, pur-vey, re-view, sur-vey, vide-licet, view, vitreous, vitri-fy, vitriol.

VRISIT, to go to see or inspect, call upon. (F., — L.) M. E. visiten, Ancren Riwle, p. 154, l. 8. — F. visiter, 'to visit, or go to see;' Cot. — Lat. uisitare, to go to see, visit; frequentative of uidere, to behold, survey, intensive form of uidere (pp. uisus), to see; see Vision. Der. visit, sb.; visit-at-ion, from F. visitation, 'a visitation, visiting,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uisitationem; visit-ant, Milton, P. L. xi. 225, from Lat. uisitant, stem of pres. part. of uisitare; visit-or, Timon, i. 1. 42 (put for visitour), from F. visiteur, 'a visitor, searcher, overseer,' Cot., the true Lat. word being uisitator; visit-or-i-al.

VRISOR, VRIZOR, VRISARD, VRIZARD, a mask, part of a helmet. (F., — L.) In the forms visard, vizard, the final d is excrement and unoriginal. It is variously spelt in Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 30, L. L. L. v. 2. 242, Macb. iii. 2. 34, &c. M. E. visere; 'Vysere, larva,' Prompt. Parv. — F. visiere, 'the visor, or sight of a helmet;' Cot. Formed from F. vis, the face; and so called from its protecting the face. In the same way, the vizard was named from its covering the face; cf. faux visage, 'a maske, or vizard,' Cot.; lit. a false face. — Lat. uisum, acc. of uisus, the sight; see further under Vision. Der. visor-ed; spelt vizard-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 6. 40.

VRISTA, a view or prospect, seen as through an avenue of trees. (Ital., — L.) In Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 93. — Ital. vista, 'the sense of sight, seeing, a looke, a prospect, a view;' Florio. — Ital. vista, fem. of visto, seen, one of the forms of the pp. of vedere, to see; the other form being veduto. — Lat. uidere, to see; see Vision.

VISUAL, used in sight or for seeing. (F., -L.) 'Visual, belonging to, or carried by the sight; extending as far as the eye can carry it; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. visual, 'visually,' Cot. - Lat. visualis, belonging to the sight. - Lat. uisus, crude form of uisus, the sight; with suffix -alis. - Lat. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see; see VISION.

VITAL, containing life, essential. (F., -L.) M. E. vital, Chaucer, C. T. 2804. - F. vital, 'vital'; Cot. - Lat. vitalis, belonging to life. - Lat. vita, life. Apparently short for *viuita; allied to uiuere, to live; cf. bios, life. - ✓ GIW, to live; see VICTUAL. Der. vital-ly; vital-ity, in Blount, Englished from Lat. vitalitas, vital force; vitalise, to give life to, a coined word. Also vital-s, parts essential to life, coined in imitation of Lat. utilia, parts essential to life, neut. pl. of utilis.

VITIATE, see under Vice.

VITREOUS, pertaining to glass, glasslike. (L.) In Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. § 11, where he speaks of 'the vitreous humor' of the eye (R.) Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.) from Lat. vitreus (also vitrius), glassy. - Lat. vitre- (or vitri-), for vitro-, crude form of vitrum, glass.

β. The i of vitrum is short in Horace (Odes, iii. 13. 1), but was orig. long, as in Propertius, v. 8. 37; and ui-trum stands for *uid-trum, i.e. an instrument or material for seeing with. - Lat. uidere, to see; see VISION. Der. (from Lat. vitrum), vitri-fy, from F. vitrier, 'to turn or make into glass,' formed as if from a Lat. verb *vitricare; hence also vitricif-ate, Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1631, p. 34; vitricif-ation, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, pt. 2; vitricif-able; also vitri-ol, q. v.

VITRIOL, the popular name of sulphuric acid. (F., -L.) M. E. vitriole, Chaucer, C. T. 16270. - F. vitriol, 'vitriol, copperose,' Cot. Cf. O. Ital. vitriolo, 'vitriol or copperase,' Florio. Said to be so called from its transparent glassy colour. - Low Lat. *vitriolus, answering to Lat. vitreolus, glassy, made of glass. - Lat. vitreus, glassy. - Lat. vitrum, glass; see Vitreous. ¶ It is not improbable that vitriol was supposed to be made from glass; from the popular belief that glass was poisonous; see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. Der. vitriol-ic.

VITUPERATION, blame, censure, abuse. (F., -L.) Spelt vituperacyon in The Boke of Tulle of Old Age, c. 8 (Caxton); cited in the Appendix to Richardson's Dict. Also in Cotgrave. - F. vituperation, 'a vituperation, or dispraising,' Cot. - Lat. vituperatus, pp. of vituperare, to censure, abuse. The orig. sense is 'to get ready a blemish,' i.e. to find fault. - Lat. uitu-, for uiti-, base of uitium, a vice, fault, blemish; and parare, to get ready, furnish, provide. See Vice and Parade. Der. vituperate, from Lat. pp. vituperatus, used by Cot. to translate F. vituperer; vituperat-ive, -ly.

VIVACITY, liveliness. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. vivacité, 'vivacity, liveliness,' Cot. - Lat. uiuacitatem, acc. of uiuacitas, natural vigour. - Lat. uiuaci-, crude form of uiuax, tenacious of life, vigorous. - Lat. uiuus, lively; see Vivid. Der. (from Lat. uiuaci-), uiuaci-ous, -ly, -ness.

VIVID, life-like, having the appearance of life, very clear to the imagination. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. uiuus, animated, true to life, lively. - Lat. uiuus, living; allied to uiuere, to live; see VICTUALS, and Quick. Der. vivid-ly, -ness.

VIVIFY, to quicken, endue with life. (F., -L.) Bacon has vivifie and vivification, Nat. Hist. § 696. - F. vivifier, 'to quicken,' Cot. - Lat. uiuificare, to vivify, make alive. - Lat. uiui-, for uiuo-, crude form of uiuus, living; and -ficare, for facere, to make; see Vivid and Fact. Der. vivific-ation.

VIVIPAROUS, producing young alive. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21, part 2. Englished from Lat. uiuiparus, producing living young. - Lat. uiui-, for uiuo-, crude form of uiuus, alive; and parere, to produce, bring forth. See Vivid or Victuals, and Parent. Der. viper, uyvern.

VIVISECTION, dissection of a living animal. (L.) Modern. From vivi-, as seen in Viviparous; and Section.

VIXEN, a she-fox, an ill-tempered woman. (E.) Vixen is the same as fixen, occurring as a proper name (spelt Fixsen) in the Clergy List, 1873. Spelt vixen, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 324. Not found in M. E., nor in A. S. The alleged A. S. fixen, given by Sommer, is not a correct form, and is unauthorised. It is the fem. form of fox; and by the ordinary laws of vowel-change, the fem. form is fyxen-en, made by changing the vowel from o to y, and adding the fem. suffix -en, precisely as in A. S. gyd-en, a goddess, from god, a god. The A. S. fyxen would become M. E. fixen, by the usual change from A. S. y to M. E. i, as in M. E. biggen (to buy) from A. S. bycgan, and in scores of other instances. [Verstegan's form foxin is a sheer invention, and only shews his ignorance.] The use of vox for fox is common, as in Ancræn Riwe, p. 128, l. 5; so also vane for fane, and vat for fat. + G. fuchs, fem. of fuchs, a fox; is similarly formed. The fem. suffix occurs again in G. königin, a queen, &c. Cf. Lat. reg-ina, Faust-ina, &c.

VIZ., an abbreviation for Videlicet, q. v.

VIZARD, a mask; see Vizor.

VIZIER, VISIER, an oriental minister or councillor of state. (Arab.) 'The Gran Visiar,' Howell, Foreign Travel, Appendix; ed. Arber, p. 85. - Arab. wazīr, 'a vazir, counsellor of state, minister, a vicegerent, or lieutenant of a king; also, a porter,' Rich. Dict. p. 1642. The sense of 'porter' is the orig. one; hence it meant, the bearer of the burden of state affairs. - Arab. root wazara, to bear a burden, support, sustain; id. p. 1641. Doublet, al-guazil, q. v.

VOCABLE, a term, word. (F., -L.) 'This worde angell is a vocable or worde signifying a ministre,' Udall, on Hebrews, c. 1 (R.) - F. vocable, 'a word, a term;' Cot. - Lat. vocabulum, an appellation, designation, name. - Lat. uoca-re, to call. - Lat. uoc-, stem of uox, voice; see VOICE. Der. vocabul-ar-y, from F. vocabulaire, 'a vocabulary, dictionary, world of words,' Cot., from Low Lat. vocabularium.

VOCAL, belonging to the voice, uttering sound. (F., -L.) 'They'll sing like Memnon's statue, and be vocal;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1 (Lickfinger). - F. vocal, 'vocal'; Cot. - Lat. vocalis, sonorous, vocal. - Lat. uoc-, stem of uox, the voice; see VOICE. Der. vocal-ise, from F. vocaliser; Cotgrave has vocalisé, 'vowelled, made a vowel;' vocal-is-at-ion, vocal-ist.

VOCATION, a calling, occupation. (F., -L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. - F. vocation, 'a vocation,' Cot. - Lat. uocationem, acc. of uocatio, a bidding, invitation. - Lat. uocatus, pp. of uocare, to call, bid. - Lat. uoc-, stem of uox, voice; see VOICE. Der. vocat-ive, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 53, lit. the calling case, from Lat. uocatiuus, the voc. case, from Lat. pp. uocatus.

VOCIFERATION, a loud calling, noisy outcry. (F., -L.) 'Of Vociferacyon;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 35 (misprinted 25 in ed. 1561). - F. vociferation, 'vociferation,' Cot. - Lat. uociferationem, acc. of uociferatio, a loud outcry. - Lat. uociferatus, pp. of uociferare, commonly uociferari, to lift up the voice; lit. 'to bear the voice afar.' - Lat. uoci-, crude form of uox, the voice; and fer-re, to bear, cognate with E. Bear. See VOICE. Der. vociferate, from L. pp. uociferatus; vocifer-ous, -ly.

VOGUE, mode, fashion, practice. (F., -Ital., -Tent.) We now say to be in vogue, i. e. in fashion. Formerly vogue meant sway, currency, prevalent use, power, or authority. 'The predominant constellations, which have the vogue;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. 6, ed. Arber, p. 34. 'Considering these sermons bore so great a vogue among the papists,' Strype, Eccl. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1553. - F. vogue, 'vogue, sway, swindge, authority, power; a clear passage, as of a ship in a broad sea;' Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'the swaying motion of a ship,' hence its sway, swing, drift, or course; or else the sway or stroke of an oar. It is the verbal sb. of F. voguer, 'to sail forth, set sail;' Cot. - Ital. voga, 'the stroke of an oar in the water when one roweth,' Florio; verbal sb. of vogare, 'to rowe in a gallie or any bote,' id. (So also Span. boga, the act of rowing; estar en boga, to be in vogue.) Of Teut. origin. - G. wogen, to fluctuate, be in motion; O. H. G. wagôn. - O. H. G. waga, a wave. See Wag.

¶ Thus the idea of vogue goes back to that of wagging, as exhibited in the swaying of the sea.

VOICE, sound from the mouth, utterance, language. (F., -L.) The spelling with ce (for s) is adopted to keep the hard sound of s. M. E. vois, voys, King Alisaunder, 3864. - O. F. vois (Burguy), later voiz, 'a voice, sound;' Cot. - Lat. uocem, acc. of uox, a voice. - ✓ WAK, to resound, speak; cf. Skt. vach, to speak, whence vachas, speech, cognate with Gk. ἔπος, a word. Der. voice, verb, Timon. iv. 3. 81; voice-less. From Lat. uox (stem uoc-) we also have voc-al, voc-able, voc-at-ion, voci-fer-at-ion, ad-voc-ate, a-voc-at-ion, ad-vow-son, a-vouch, con-voc-at-ion, con-voke, equi-voc-al, e-voke, in-voc-ate, in-voke, ir-re-voc-able, pro-voke, re-voke, uni-voc-al, vouch, vouch-safe, vow-el. And see ep-ic, ech-o. [†]

VOID, empty, unoccupied, unsubstantial. (F., -L.) M. E. voide, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5, l. 1316. - O. F. voide (Burguy), later uide, 'void, empty,' Cot. Mod. F. vide. - Lat. uiduum, acc. of uiduus, deprived, bereft; hence waste, empty. Allied to Skt. vidhavā, a widow, and E. widow; see Widow. Der. void, verb, M. E. voiden, to empty, King Alisaunder, 373, from O. F. vider, later uide, 'to void,' Cot. Also void-able, void-ance (cf. F. vuindange, 'a volnesse,' Cot.); void-ness; a-void.

VOLANT, flying, nimble. (F., -L.) Rare. 'In manner of a star volant in the air;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 525 (R.) - F. volant, pres. part. of voler, 'to fly,' Cot. - Lat. uolare, to fly. Formed from the adj. uolus, flying, occurring only in ueli-uolus, flying on sails. Allied to Skt. val, to hasten, move to and fro. Der. vol-at-ile, Ben Jonson, Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1 (R.), from F. volatil, 'flying,' Cot., from Lat. uolatil, flying, from uolatus, flight, which from uolatus, pp. of uolare. Hence volatile-ness, volatil-i-ty, volatil-ise, volatil-is-at-ion. Also volley, q. v.; velocity, q. v.

VOLCANO, a burning mountain. (Ital., -L.) 'A vulcano or volcano;' Skinner, ed. 1691. Borrowed from Italian, because the chief burning mountain known to sailors was that of Ætna. — Ital. volcano, 'a hill that continually burneth'; Florio. — Lat. Volcanum, Vulcanum, acc. of Volcanus or Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire, hence fire. β. The true form is Volcanus (with o), and the stem is volk- = uolk (not uulk). Allied to Skt. ulka (for valka *), a firebrand, fire falling from heaven, a meteor. γ. The base is WAL (rather than jua, as in Benfey), from ✓WAR, to be warm; with Aryan suffixes -ka and -na. See Fick, i. 772; and see Warm. Cf. G. wallen, to boil. Der. volcan-ic; and see volcan-ic.

VOLITION, the exercise of the will. (F., — L.) 'Consequent to the mere internal volition'; Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1. — F. volition (Littre), which must be rather an old word, though Littre gives no early example; we find cognate terms in Span. volicion, Ital. volizione, volition. All these answer to a Low Lat. volitionem, acc. of volitio *, volition; a word not recorded by Ducange, but prob. a term of the schools. It is a pure coinage, from Lat. vol-o, I wish; of which the infinitive is velle; see Voluntary.

VOLLEY, a flight of shot, the discharge of many fire-arms at once. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 363. — F. volée, 'a flight, or flying, also a whole flight of birds'; Cot. Cf. Ital. volata, a flight, volley. — Lat. volata, orig. fem. of volatus, pp. of volare, to fly; see Volant. See Nares.

VOLT, a bound; the same as Vault (2), q. v.

VOLTAIC, originated by Volta. (Ital.) Applied to Voltaic electricity, or galvanism; the Voltaic pile or battery, first set up about 1800, was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como, an experimental philosopher, born 1745, died March 6, 1826; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates, and Hole, Brief Biograph. Dict.

VOLUBLE, flowing smoothly, fluent in speech. (F., — L.) In Shak. Comedy of Errors, ii. 1. 92. — F. voluble, 'voluble, easily rolled, turned, or tumbled; hence, fickle, . . . glib'; Cot. — Lat. volubilem, acc. of volubilis, easily turned about; formed with suffix -bilis from volū-, as seen in volūtus, pp. of voluere, to roll, turn about. + Goth. walujan, to roll. + Gk. ἐλκεῖν, to roll. β. 'The final letter present in Gk. ἐλκ-, Lat. volu-, Goth. walw-, is, as Buttmann saw, a shortened reduplication'; Curtius, i. 448. That is, the base WALW is short for WAL-WAL, to keep on turning, and so to roll round and round. γ. The shorter base WAL occurs in Lithuan. walti, to roll, Russ. valite, to roll, Skt. val, to move to and fro; further, the older r (for f) occurs in Skt. vara, a circle (cited by Curtius), which may be compared with Skt. valaya, a circle. — ✓WAL = ✓WAR, to turn round; Fick, i. 776. Der. volubly, volubil-ity; also (from Lat. voluere), vault (2), vol-ume, vol-ute, circum-volve, con-volv-ul-us, con-vol-ut-ion, de-volve, e-volve, e-vol-ut-ion, in-volve, in-vol-ut-ion, in-vol-ute, re-volt, re-vol-ut-ion, re-volve. From the same root are valve, gall-op, goal, wale, pot-wall-op-er, helix, halo.

VOLUME, a roll, a book, tome. (F., — L.) M.E. volume, Chaucer, C. T. 6263. — F. volume, 'a volume, tome, book'; Cot. — Lat. volumen, a roll, scroll; hence, a book written on a parchment roll. — Lat. volu-, as seen in volu-tus, pp. of voluere, to roll. See Voluble. Der. volume-d; volumin-ous, Milton, P. R. iv. 384, from Lat. voluminosus, full of rolls or folds, from volumin-, stem of volumen; volumin-ous-ly.

VOLUNTARY, willing, acting by choice. (F., — L.) Spelt voluntarie in Levins, ed. 1570. — F. volontaire, also spelt volontaire, 'voluntary, willing, free, of his own accord'; Cot. — Lat. voluntarius, voluntary. — Lat. voluntas, free will. Formed, with suffix -tas, from a present participial form voluns *, a variant of volens, willing, from uol-o, I will, infin. velle. + Gk. βόλομαι (= βόλ-ομαι), I will. + Skt. uri, to select, choose. — ✓WAR, to believe, choose, will (Fick, iii. 771); orig. the same as ✓WAR, to guard, take care (id. 770). See Will, Wary. Der. voluntari-ly, voluntari-ness; also volunteer, Drayton, Miseries of Qu. Margaret, st. 177, from F. volontaire (used as a sb.), 'a voluntary, one that serves without pay or compulsion'; Cot.; hence volunteer, verb. And see vol-up-tu-ous, vol-it-ion; benevolent, malevolent.

VOLUPTUOUS, sensual, given up to pleasure. (F., — L.) M.E. voluptuous, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1573. [Gower has voluptuosite, sb., C. A. iii. 280, l. 20.] — F. voluptueux, 'voluptuous'; Cot. — Lat. voluptuosus, full of pleasure. — Lat. voluptu-, akin to voluptas, pleasure. — Lat. volup, volupe, adv., agreeably. — Lat. vol-o, I wish; velle, to wish; see Voluntary. Der. voluptuous-ly, -ness (Palsgrave); volup-tu-ar-y, from Lat. voluptuarius, voluptarius, devoted to pleasure.

VOLUTE, a spiral scroll on a capital. (F., — L.) Spelt voluta in Phillips, which is the Lat. form. — F. volute, 'the rolling shell of a snail; also, the written circle that hangs over the chapter of a pillar'; Cot. — Lat. voluta, a volute (Vitruvius). Orig. fem. of volutus, pp. of voluere, to roll; see Voluble. Der. volut-ed.

VOMIT, matter rejected by, and thrown up from the stomach. (L.) M.E. vomite, vomyte, sb.; Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has vomyt, verb. — Lat. vomitus, a vomiting, vomit; whence vomitare, to vomit often. — Lat. vomitus, pp. of vomere, to vomit. + Gk. ἐμεῖν, to vomit. + Skt. vam, to vomit, spit out. + Lithuan. wenti. — ✓WAM, to spit out; Fick, i. 769. Der. vomit, vb.; vomit-or-y, causing to vomit. And see em-it-ic.

VORACITY, eagerness to devour. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. voracité, 'voracity'; Cot. — Lat. voracitatem, acc. of voracitas, hungeriness. — Lat. voraci-, crude form of vorax, greedy to devour. — Lat. vor-are, to devour. — Lat. vorus, adj., devouring; only in compounds, such as carni-vorous, flesh-devouring. β. The Lat. vorus stands for guorus *, from an older garus *, as shewn by the allied Skt. -gara, devouring, as seen in aja-gara, a boa constrictor, lit. 'goat-devouring,' from aja, a goat, and gri, to devour. Cf. also Gk. βόρος, gluttonous, βόρα, meat, βιβρώσκειν, to devour. — ✓GAR, to swallow down; Fick, i. 562. Der. voraci-ous, from Lat. voraci-, crude form of vorax, greedy to devour; voraci-ous-ly. From the same root are gargle, gorge, gullet, gules, gully, gurgle. Also gramini-vorous, carni-vorous, omni-vorous, &c., also de-vour.

VORTEX, a whirlpool, whirlwind. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. vortex (also vertex), a whirlpool, whirl, eddy. — Lat. vertere, to turn, whirl; see Verse. The pl. is vortices, as in Latin.

VOTE, an ardent wish, the expression of a decided wish or opinion, expressed decision. (L.) In Selden, Table-talk, Bishops in the Parliament, § 4. — Lat. uotum, a wish; orig. a vow. — Lat. uotum, neut. of uotus, pp. of uovere, to vow; see Vow. Der. vol-ive, from Lat. uotius, promised by a vow; voive-ly. Also vol-ar-y, a coined word, L. L. L. ii. 37; vol-ar-ess, Pericles, iv. prol. 4; vol-ress, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 123; vol-ar-ist, Timon, iv. 3. 27.

VOUCH, to warrant, attest, affirm strongly. (F., — L.) M.E. vouchen, Gower, C. A. ii. 24, l. 6. — O.F. voucher, 'to vouch, cite, pray in aid or call unto aid, in a suit'; Cot. Marked by Cotgrave as a Norman word. — Lat. uocare, to call, call upon, summon. — Lat. uoc-, stem of uox, the voice; see Voice. Der. vouch-er; vouch-safe, q. v.

VOUCHSAFE, to vouch or warrant safe, sanction or allow without danger, condescend to grant. (F., — L.) Merely due to the phr. vouch safe, i.e. vouch or warrant as safe, guarantee, grant. The two words were run together into one. M.E. vouchen safe, or saue. 'The kyng vouches it saus'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 260. 'Vouche sauf' hat his sone hire wedde'; Will. of Palerne, 1449; 'sauf wol I fouche,' id. 4152. See Vouch and Safe.

VOW, a solemn promise. (F., — L.) M.E. vow, von; pl. vowes, P. Plowman, B. prol. 69. [The M.E. avow is commoner; it is a compound word, with prefix a- (= Lat. ad), but is frequently misprinted a vow; Tyrwhitt rightly has 'min avow,' Chaucer, C. T. 2239; 'this avow,' id. 2416.] — O.F. vow, vo, veu (mod. F. vow), a vow. — Lat. uotum, a vow, lit. 'a thing vowed'; neut. of uotus, pp. of uovere, to promise, to vow. Root uncertain. Der. vow, verb, M.E. vowen, Prompt. Parv.; a-vow, q. v. Also (from Lat. uotum), vote.

VOWEL, a simple vocal sound; the letter representing it. (F., — L.) Spelt vowel in Levins, ed. 1570; and in Palsgrave, b. i. c. 2. — F. voyelle, 'a vowel'; Cot. — Lat. vocale, acc. of vocalis (sc. litera), a vowel. Fem. of vocalis, adj. sounding, vocal. — Lat. uoc-, stem of uox, a voice; see Voice.

VOYAGE, a journey, passage by water. (F., — L.) M.E. viage, Chaucer, C. T. 4679, 4720; veage, Rob. of Glouc. p. 200, l. 16. The later form voyage answers to the 16th cent. spelling of the F. word. — O.F. veiage (Burguy), later voyage, 'voyage'; Cot. — Lat. viaticum, provisions for a journey, money or other requisites for a journey; whence also Ital. viaggio, Span. viage, Prov. viatge; see Ducange. — Lat. viaticus, belonging to a journey. — Lat. uia, a way, journey, cognate with E. way; see Viaduct and Way. Der. voyage, verb, from F. voyager, 'to travel, goe a voyage,' Cot.; voyag-er. Also (from Lat. uia), via-duct, and related words given under Viaduct.

VULCANISE, to combine caoutchouc with sulphur, by heat. (L.; with F. suffix.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ise (F. -iser, from Gk. -ιζω) from Vulcan, god of fire, hence fire; see Volcano. Der. vulcan-ite, vulcanised caoutchouc.

VULGAR, used by the common people, native, common, mean, rude. (F., — L.) In Cor. i. 1. 219. — F. vulgaire, 'vulgar, common'; Cot. — Lat. vulgaris, vulgar. — Lat. vulgus, the common people; also spelt vulgus. The lit. sense is 'a throng, a crowd'; allied to Skt. varga, a troop, vraja, a flock, herd, multitude, from vrij, to exclude. — ✓WARG, to press; Fick, i. 773. Allied to Verge (2) and Urge. Der. vulgar, sb., L. L. L. i. 2. 51, from F. vulgaire, sb., Cot.; vulgar-ly, vulgar-ise, vulgar-ism, vulgar-i-ty. Also vulg-ate, the E. name for the Latin version of the Bible known as the Editio vulgata (see publications of the Parker Society, &c.); where vulgata is the fem. of vulgatus, pp. of vulgare, to make public, to publish.

VULNERABLE, liable to injury. (L.) In Mach. v. 8. 11. — Lat. vulnerabilis, wounding, likely to injure; but also (taken in the pass. sense) vulnerable (in late Latin). — Lat. vulnerare, to wound. —

Lat. vulner-, stem of vulnus, a wound. Allied to uillere (pt. t. uul-si), to pluck, pull, tear. + Skt. vrama, a wound, fracture. — ✓ WAR, to tear, break; Fick, i. 772; whence, by extension, Skt. vardh, to cut, also Gk. ῥήγνυμι, I break. Der. vulner-ar-y, from F. vulneraire, 'vulnerary, healing wounds,' Cot., from Lat. vulnerarius, suitable for wounds. And see vul-ture.

VULPINE, fox-like, cunning. (F., — L.) 'The slyness of a vulpine craft;' Feltham, pt. i. Res. 2 (R.) Blount, ed. 1674, has: 'Vulpinate, to play the fox.' — F. vulpin, 'fox-like.' Cot. — Lat. vulpinus, fox-like. — Lat. vulpi-, crude form of vulpes, a fox; with suffix -nus. Root unknown; we cannot fairly compare it with E. wolf, for that word is represented in Latin by lupus; nor is it certainly the same as Gk. ῥάπτης, a fox; see Curtius, i. 466. Perhaps allied to vulture, q.v.

VULTURE, a large bird of prey. (L.) In Macb. iv. 3. 74. M. E. vultur, Wyclif, Job, xxviii. 7, later version. — Lat. vultur, a vulture; lit. 'a plucker' or 'tearer.' — Lat. vul-, as seen in vul-si, pt. t. of uillere, to pluck; with suffix -tur (= Aryan -tar) denoting the agent. See Vulnerable. Der. vultur-ine, from Lat. vulturinus, vulture-like.

WA—WE.

WABBLE, WOBBLE, to reel, move unsteadily. (E.) 'Wabble, to vacillate, reel, waver;' Brockett. A weakened form of wapple, equivalent to prov. E. wapper, 'to move tremulously, Somersset;' Halliwell. Both wabble and wapper are frequentatives of wap in the sense 'to flutter, beat the wings' (Halliwell), whence also wappeng, quaking, used by Batman, 1581 (id.). There are several verbs which take the form wap, but the one now under consideration is properly whap, a by-form of M. E. quappen, to palpitate; see Quaver. Cf. quabbe, a bog, quagmire (Halliwell). So also Low G. wabbeln or quabbeln, to wobble. See Whap.

WACKE, a kind of soft rock. (G.) Modern; geological. — G. wacke, 'a sort of stone, consisting of quartz, sand, and mica;' Flügel. M. H. G. wacke, a large stone.

WAD, a small bundle of stuff, a little mass of tow, &c. (Scand.) Nares cites 'a wadde of hay,' a bundle of hay, from the poet Taylor's Works, 1630. 'Make it [lupines] into wads or bottles;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 9; cf. the phrase 'a bottle of hay.' — Swed. vadd, wadding; O. Swed. wad, clothing, cloth, stuff (Ihre); Icel. vadr, stuff, only in the comp. vadmál, a plain woollen stuff, wadmál; Dan. wat, wadding. + G. waite, wadding, wad, a large fishing-net; cf. watten, to dress cloth, to wad; also wat, cloth (Flügel). β. The stuff called wadmál was formerly well known in England; in Arnold's Chronicle (repr. 1811), p. 236, we find, among imports, notice of 'Rolls of wadmoll' and 'curse [coarse] wadmoll.' Halliwell gives: 'Wadmál, a very thick coarse kind of woollen cloth; coarse tow used by doctors for cattle is also so called.' It is highly probable that our wad is nothing but a shortened form of wadmál in the sense of coarse tow, or coarse stuff, instead of being borrowed from the O. Swed. wad. It brings us, however, ultimately, to the same result. The Icel. vadr properly means 'a fishing-line,' much as the G. waite means a fishing-net. The Icel. vadmál is certainly allied to Icel. vád, vód, vód, a piece of stuff, cloth as it leaves the loom, which is again allied to E. weed, a garment, as used in the phr. 'a widow's weeds.' γ. Thus, whilst it is obviously impossible to derive wad from A. S. wæd, a garment (which became E. weed), it is certain that we may refer both wad and E. weed to the same root, viz. the Teut. base WAD, to bind, wind together (Fick, iii. 284). This base accounts for the various senses, viz. wad, stuff wound together, Icel. vád, stuff bound or woven together, G. waite, a fishing-net (because twined together), and Icel. vadr, a fishing-line (because twined together). See further under Weed (2). δ. The Russ. vata, F. ouate, wadding, Span. huata, Ital. ovata, are all of Teut. origin, the last form being due to an attempt to give it a sense from Ital. ovo, an egg. It is quite unnecessary to suppose (as Diez, not very confidently, suggests) that the whole set of words allied to wad are derived from the Lat. ovum, an egg. His difficulty was due to the difficulty of connecting Ital. ovata with O. H. G. wát, a weed, or garment, from which it appears (at first sight) to differ widely in sense. But the solution is, to derive ovata from G. waite, not from wát itself. Der. wadd-ing; wad-mal, as above. And see wallet and watitle.

WADDLE, to walk with short steps and unwieldy gait. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 37. The frequentative of Wade, q.v. The A. S. wæddian, to beg (Luke, xvi. 3), is the same word; the orig. sense being to rove about, to go on the tramp. Der. waddl-er.

WADE, to walk slowly, esp. through water. (E.) M. E. waden, Chaucer, C. T. 9558. — A. S. wadan, pt. t. wód, to wade, trudge, go;

'wadan ofer wealdas,' to trudge over the wolds, Genesis, ed. Grein, 2886; see Grein, ii. 636. + Du. waden, to wade, ford. + Icel. váða, strong verb, pt. t. vóð, to wade, to rush through; whence vóð, sb., a ford. + Dan. vade. + Swed. vada. + O. H. G. watan, pt. t. wuot; the mod. G. waten is only a weak verb, derived from the sb. wat, a ford; Fick, iii. 285. β. All from the Teut. base WAD, to go, press through, make one's way; Fick (as above). As the Teut. verbs are strong, we are quite sure they are not merely borrowed from Lat. uadere, to go; neither is Icel. vóð, G. wat, a ford, merely borrowed from Lat. uadum. γ. At the same time, the Lat. uadere is clearly an allied word, where d prob. stands for an orig. dh. 'Since the Lat. d can . . . be the representative of a dh = Gk. θ, and since, moreover, uadum corresponds in sound to the Skt. gádham of precisely equivalent meaning, which in the St. Petersburg Dict. is derived from the root gádhi, to stand fast, get a firm footing, it will be better to regard it as one of the numerous dh expansions of the root ga, to go. This is also Corssen's opinion (Beiträge, 59);' Curtius, ii. 74. Cf. Skt. gádha, adj. shallow, prop. wherein one may get a footing; sb. the bottom; Benfey. δ. If this be right, the base is GADH (whence GWADH, WADH), an extension of ✓ GA, to go. See Come, from the base GAM (whence GWAM), extended from the same root. Der. wadd-le, q.v.; wad-er; and compare (from Lat. uadere) e-vade, in-vade, per-vade.

WAFER, a thin small cake, usually round, a thin leaf of paste. (F., — O. Low G.) M. E. wafre, pl. wafres, Chaucer, C. T. 3379; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 271. We find Low Lat. gafras, glossed by wafurs, in John de Garlande; Wright's Voc. i. 126, l. 14. — O. F. waufre, mod. F. gaufre, a wafer. The form waufre occurs in a quotation, dated 1433, given by Roquefort in his Supplement, s.v. Audier. The more usual O. F. form was gaufre, or goffre, in which g is substituted for the orig. w. In this quotation we have mention of un fer a wafres, an iron on which to bake wafers. β. The word is of Low G. origin; Hexham gives O. Du. waffel, 'a wafer;' waeffel-yeer, 'a wafer-yeon to bake wafers in,' of which fer a wafres is a translation; mod. Du. wafel, a wafer, wafel-ijzer, a wafer-iron. So also Low G. wafeln, pl. wafers; wafel-iseren, a wafer-iron. Webster's Dict. actually gives waffle and waffle-iron as E. words; they are obviously borrowed from Dutch immediately; no authority for them is offered. Cf. also G. waffel, a wafer, waffel-eisen, a wafer-iron, honey-comb-cockle or checkered Venus-shell (Flügel); Dan. vaffel, Swed. vaffla. γ. The wafer (often, I believe, flavoured with honey) was named from its resemblance to a piece of honey-comb or cake of wax in a bee-hive; from a Low G. form cognate with G. wabe, a honey-comb, cake of wax, a derivative from the Teut. base WAB, to weave, Fick, iii. 289; the comb constructed by the bees being, as it were, woven together. The f appears in Icel. vaf, a weft, Swed. väf, a web, A. S. wefan, to weave; see Weave. This accounts for the spelling with as (in Hexham) of the O. Du. word; the form waeffel is a dimin. (with the usual suffix -el, and with a modified vowel) from an older form *waffe or *wafe, cognate with G. wabe. Der. waffer, verb; waffer-er, a wafer-seller, Chaucer, C. T. 12413; M. E. wafre-estre, a female wafer-seller, P. Plowman, B. v. 641. [†]

WAFI, to bear along through air or water. (E.) 'Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all, till the ships at Middleborough were returned, . . . by the force wherof they might be the more strongly wafed over;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 175. Shak. has it in several senses; (1) to beckon, as by a wave of the hand, Merch. Ven. v. 11; Timon, i. 1. 70; (2) to turn quickly, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 372; (3) to carry or send over the sea, K. John, ii. 73, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 114, 116; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 3. 253; v. 7. 41. He also has wafage, passage by water, Com. Errors, iv. 1. 95; wafure (old edd. wafter), the waving of the hand, a gesture, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 246. We must also note, that Shak. has waf both for the pt. t. and pp.; see Merch. Ven. v. 11; K. John, ii. 73. [Rich. cites waf as a pt. t., occurring in Gamelyn, 785, but the best MSS. have fast; so that this is nothing to the point.] β. The word waf is not old, and does not occur in M. E.; it seems to be nothing but a variant of wave, used as a verb, formed by taking the pt. t. waved (corrupted to waf by rapid pronunciation), as the infinitive mood of a new verb. This is by no means an isolated case; by precisely the same process we have mod. E. hoist, due to hoised, pt. t. of Tudor Eng. hoise, and mod. E. graft, due to graffed, pt. t. of Tudor Eng. graff; while Spenser actually writes waift and wef instead of Waif, q.v. By way of proof, we should notice the exact equivalence of waved and waf in the following passages. 'Yet towards night a great sort [number of people] came doune to the water-side, and waved us on shore [beckoned us ashore] with a white flag;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34 (also on p. 33). 'And waf [beckoned] her love To come again to Carthage;' Merch. Ven. v. 11. And again, we must particularly note Lowland Sc. waff, to wave, shake, fluctuate, and as a sb., a hasty motion, the act of waving, a signal made by waving (Jamieson); this is merely the Northern form of wave. In Gawain Douglas's translation of Virgil (Aeneid, i. 319), we have, in the edition of 1839, 'With wynd waving hir hars lowsit of tres,' where another edition (cited by Wedgwood) has waving. So also, in Barbour's Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513, we have the forms vafand, vaffand, wawand, all meaning 'waving,' with reference to banners waving in the wind.

¶ We thus see that waft is due to waft or waived, pt. t. of waft or wave; cf. Icel. vafa, to swing, vibrate, and see further under Wave. ¶ This is the right explanation; the reference to Swed. vesta, which only means to fan, to winnow, is unnecessary, though this word is certainly allied, being a secondary formation from the base vaf, to wave, as seen in Icel. vafa (above), and in vafra, vafsa, to waver. Der. waft-age, waft-ure, as above; waft, sb., waft-er.

WAG, to move from side to side, shake to and fro. (Scand.) M.E. waggen, introduced (probably) as a Northern word in Chaucer, C.T. 4037; but also in P. Plowman, B. viii. 31, xvi. 41. Earlier, in Havelok, 89. — O. Swed. wagga, to wag, fluctuate; whence wagga, a cradle, wagga, to rock a cradle (Ihre); Swed. vagga, a cradle, or as verb, to rock a cradle. Cf. Icel. vagga, a cradle; Dan. vugge, a cradle, also, to rock a cradle. Closely allied to A.S. wagian, to move, vacillate, rock (Grein, ii. 637), which became M.E. aqwen, and could not have given the mod. form wag. In Wyclif, Luke, vii. 25, the later version has 'waggid with the wynd,' where the earlier version has wawid.

β. The A.S. wagian is a secondary weak verb, from the strong verb wegan (pt. t. wag, pp. wagen), to bear, move, carry (weigh), Grein, ii. 655; and similarly the O. Swed. wagga is from the Teut. base WAG (Aryan ✓ WAGH), to carry; see Weigh, Waggon. Der. wag, sb., a droll fellow, L. L. L. v. 2. 108, as to which Wedgwood plausibly suggests that it is an abbreviation for wag-halter, once a common term for a rogue or gallowas-bird, one who is likely to wag in a halter; see Nares; and cf. 'little young wags . . these are lackies;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 68. Hence wagg-ish, wagg-ish-ly, wagg-er-y (formed like knave-ry). Also wagg-le, q.v.; wag-tail, q.v.; wag-moire, a quagmire, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Sept. 130. And see wedge, wing.

WAGE, a gage, pledge, stake, pay for service; pl. Wages, pay for service. (F., — Teut.) M.E. wage, usually in the sense of pay, Rob. of Brunne, p. 319, l. 17; for which the pl. wages occurs only two lines above. 'Wage, or hyre, Stipendium, salarium;' Prompt. Parv. We now usually employ the word in the plural. — O. F. wage, also gage, a gage, pledge, guarantee (Burguy); hence it came to mean a stipulated payment. The change from initial w to g (and even, as here, to g), is not uncommon in O. F. A verbal sb. from O. F. wager, gager, gagier, to pledge. — Low Lat. wadiare, to pledge. — Low Lat. wadius, or uadium, a pledge. — Goth. wadi, a pledge; whence gawadion, to pledge. β. The Low Lat. uadium may be almost equally well derived from Lat. was (gen. uadis), a pledge; but the O. F. w answers rather to Teut. w than to Lat. u, which usually became v.

γ. However, it makes no ultimate difference, since the Lat. was (crude form wadi-) and Goth. wadi are cognate words; neither being borrowed from the other. The similarity of spelling is due to the fact that the Lat. d, in the middle of a word, often stands for dh, and the true crude form of was is wadhi-; see Curtius, i. 309. And see Wed. Der. wage, verb, M.E. wagen, to engage or go bail, P. Plowman, B. iv. 97, from O. F. wager, verb, as above. Also wag-er, q.v.; en-gage, q.v. Doublet, gage (1).

☞ To wage war was formerly to declare war, engage in it, not merely to carry it on, as now; cf. the phr. 'wager of battle;' see Wedgwood. [†]

WAGER, a pledge, bet, something staked upon a chance. (F., — Teut.) M.E. wager, Assembly of Ladies, st. 55, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 259; spelt wajour, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 219, l. 19, in a song dated 1308. — O. F. wageure, orig. form of O. F. gageure, 'a wager,' Cot. — Low Lat. wadiatura, sb. formed from the pp. of wadiare, to pledge, also to wager (as shewn by Wedgwood); see Wage. Der. wager, verb, Hamlet, iv. 7. 135; wager-er.

WAGGLE, to wag frequently. (Scand.) Shak. has wagging, Much Ado, ii. 1. 119. The frequentative of Wag, q.v. Another frequentative form (with -er instead of -el or -le) appears in M.E. wageren, to tremble, in Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 3, early version; the later version has tremble.

WAGON, WAGGON, a wain, a vehicle for goods. (Du.) The spelling with double g merely serves to shew that the vowel a is short. We find the spelling waggon in Romeo, i. 4. 59 (ed. 1623); wagon, Spenser, F.Q. i. 5. 28. The word is not very old, and not E., being borrowed from Dutch. (The E. form is wain.) The earliest quotation is probably the following: 'they trussed all their harnes in waganes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 62 (R.). — Du. wagen, 'a wagon, or a waine,' Hexham. + A.S. wagn, a wain; see Wain.

☞ The mod. F. wagon is borrowed from English. Doublet, wain.

Der. waggon-er, Romeo, i. 4. 64.

WAGTAIL, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In King Lear, ii. 2. 73; and in Palsgrave. Formerly called a wag-start (start meaning tail); M.E. wagstyrt, Wright's Voc. i. 253, col. 1. From Wag and Tail. Cf. Swed. vippstjert, a wagstart or wagtail; from vippa, to wag.

WAIF, anything found astray without an owner. (F., — Scand.) M.E. waif, weif; the pl. is wayues or weyues (with u=v), P. Plowman, B. prol. 94; C. i. 92. A Norman-French law-term. — O. F. waif, later gaif, pl. waives, gaives. Roquefort gives gaif, a thing lost and not claimed; choses gaives, things lost and not claimed; also wayue, a waif, which is not a true form, but evolved from a pl. form wayues, of which the sing. would be wayf or waif. Cotgrave has: 'Choses gayues, weifes, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost,' &c. Waif is an old Norman-French term, and of Norse origin. — Icel. veif, anything flapping about, applied, e.g. to the fin of a seal; veifan, a moving about uncertainly, whence veifanar-orð, 'a word of wafting,' a rumour; veifa, to vibrate, move about, whence veifi-skati, a spendthrift, lit. one who squanders coin. β. It is quite clear that the O. Icel. v was sounded as E. w, and the Icel. veifa is the source of E. waive; but it is not clear whether waif is due to the verb waive, or whether, conversely, waive was formed (at second-hand) from waif instead of from Icel. veifa directly. It makes little ultimate difference.

γ. It would appear, however, that the Icel. veifa had once a more extended use than is recorded in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dictionary; Egilsson assigns to it the senses of uttering or scattering words, and of publishing or making poems public. The orig. sense seems to have been merely to vibrate or toss about; thence it seems to have acquired a sense of free movement or loose tossing; cf. Norw. veiva, to swing about. A waif is a thing tossed loosely abroad, and then abandoned. See further under Waive. δ. We may also note that Spenser writes waif, F.Q. iv. 12. 31; weif, id. v. 3. 27, where the t is unoriginal (just as in waft), and due to the pp. waived. ¶ The E. wef (from weave) is a different word. So also is wave, though constantly confused with waive, when used as a verb.

WAIL, to lament. (Scand.) M.E. weilen, wailen, Chaucer, C.T. 1297; Wyclif, Matt. xxiv. 30. — Icel. vála (formerly wála), to wail; also spelt vála, mod. Icel. vola. Orig. 'to cry woe;' from væ, vei, woe! used as an interjection; cf. the curious M.E. waymenten, to lament, Prompt. Parv., formed from the same interjection with the F. suffix -ment, and apparently imitated from Lat. lamentare. + Ital. guajolare, guaire, to wail, cry woe; from guai, woe! a word of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. wai, woe! See Wo. Der. wail-ing.

WAIN, a wagon, vehicle for goods. (E.) M.E. wain; written wayn, Rob. of Glouc. p. 416, l. 9. — A.S. wagn, a wain; also used in the contracted form wæn, Grein, ii. 644. + Du. wagen (whence E. wagon was borrowed in the 15th or 16th century); O. Sax. wagan. + Icel. vagn. + Dan. vogn. + Swed. vagn. + G. wagen, O.H.G. wagan. β. The A.S. wagn soon passed into the form wæn by the loss of g, just as A.S. regn became rén, mod. E. rain; cf. hail, tail, in which g similarly disappears; so also E. day from A.S. dæg, &c. Hence it is quite impossible to consider wagon as a true E. word. γ. All the above forms are from Teut. WAG-NA, a wain, carriage; Fick, iii. 283; from Teut. base WAG, to carry = Aryan ✓ WAGH, to carry, whence E. vehicle. From the same root we have Lat. veh-iculum, Skt. vah-a, Gk. ὄχος, a car, Russ. voz', a load. See Vehicle. Doublet, wagon or waggon.

WAINSCOT, panelled boards on the walls of rooms. (Du.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 3. 88. Applied to any kind of panelled work. I find: 'a tabyll of waynskott with to [two] joynyd tres-tellis;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 115, in a will dated 1522; also 'a rownde tabyll of waynskott with lok and key,' id., p. 116; also 'a brode cheste of wayneskott,' id. p. 117. Still earlier, I find waynskot in what appears to be a list of imports; Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 236, l. 4. Hackluyt even retains something of the Du. spelling, where he speaks of 'boords [boards] called waghenscot;' Voyages, i. 173. — Du. wagen-schot, 'wainscot;' Hexham. Low G. wagenschot, the best kind of oak-wood, well-grained and without knots. Cf. Low G. bökenshot, the best kind of beech-wood, without knots (in which the former part of the word is Low G. böken, beechen, adj. formed from book, a beech. (We must here remark that E. wainscot, in the building trade, is applied to the best kind of oak-timber only, used for panelling because it would not 'cast' or warp; see Wainscot in Trench, Select Glossary.) β. [The rest of this article is wrong, being founded on a misconception; for the correct account, see Addenda.] The use of wainscot was not, originally, for walls, as may easily appear on investigation; and, phonetically, the A.S. wāh became woghe or wowe in M.E., in which the resemblance to wainscot does not extend beyond the letter w. Besides, the word is Dutch, in which language the old equivalent of A.S. wāh was O. Du. weegh (E. Müller). γ. A glance at Hexham's Du. Dict. will shew 24 compounds beginning with wagen-, in which wagen=E. wain; so also Low G. wage means 'a wain' or waggon. The Du. schot (like E. shot) has numerous senses, of which one is 'a closure of boards,' Hexham. It also meant 'a shott, a cast, or a throwe, the flowre of meale, revenue or rent, gaine or money, a shot or score to pay for any things,' id. Sewel also explains schot by 'a wainscot, partition, a stop put to anything, the pace (of a ship), a hogs-sty.' We may also remember that Du. wagen means a carriage or coach as well as a waggon. δ. The orig. sense would appear to be wood used for a board or partition in a coach or waggon, which seems to have been selected of the best quality; thence it came to mean boards for panel-work, and lastly, panelling for walls, esp. oak-panelling, once so much in vogue. ε. As to the etymology, there can be no doubt; the Du. wagen is cognate with E. wain; and the Du. schot is cognate with E. shot, used in many senses. Thus wain-scot is exactly composed of the Du. equivalents of E. wain and E. shot. See Wain and Shot. ¶ Sewel does indeed explain Du. weeg by 'wainscot,' but this is an equivalent meaning, not an etymology; he also explains weeg by 'houtte wand,' i.e. wooden wall, without meaning that weeg is the same word as wand. The O. Friesic word for 'wall' is wach (Richtofen). Der. wainscot, verb. [*]

WAIST, the middle part of the human body, or of a ship. (E.) Spelt wast in Palsgrave. M. E. wast, called waste of a manny's myddel or wast of the medyl in Prompt. Parv. The dat. waste is in Gower, C. A. ii. 373, l. 13. The right sense is 'growth,' hence the thick part or middle of the body, where the size of a man is developed; we find the spelling waste (dat. case) with the sense of 'strength,' in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 77, l. 3. It answers to an A.S. form *wast or *waxt, not found, though the nearly related wastm, growth, also fruit, produce, is a very common word; see Grein, ii. 650. Indeed, the A.S. wastm became wastme, westme in later English, and it is by no means improbable that the mod. E. waist is really the same word, with loss of the latter syllable, which may have been mistaken for a mere inflection. In Genesis and Exodus, 1910, Joseph is described as being 'bricest of waspene,' certainly miswritten (in the MS.) for 'bricest of wasteme,' i.e. fairest of form or shape, 'well-waisted.'—A.S. wæxan, to grow, to wax; whence A.S. *wast like E. blast from A.S. blāwan, to blow, and A.S. wæstma like blōstma (E. blossom) from blōwan, to flourish. See Wax (1). So also Goth. wahstus, growth, increase, stature, from wahsan, to grow; Icel. vöstr, stature, also shape, from vaxa, to grow; Dan. væst, Swed. våxt, growth, size. Der. waist-band; waist-coat, spelt wast-coate in Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5, l. 106 from the end.

WAIT, to watch, stay in expectation, abide, lie in ambush. (F., —O. H. G.) M. E. waiten, P. Plowman, B. v. 202; Havelok, 512. —O. F. waiter, waitier (Roquefort, with a quotation), also gaiter, gaitier (Burguy), later guetter, 'to watch, warde, mark, heed, note, dog, stalk after, lie in wait for;' Cot. A denominative verb. —O. F. waite, gaite (Burguy), a guard, sentinel, watchman or spy; later guet, 'watch, ward, heed, also the watch, or company appointed to watch;' Cot. —O. H. G. wahta, M. H. G. wachte, G. wacht, a guard, watch; whence was formed G. wächter, a watchman. (The Icel. wakta, to watch, is merely borrowed from G., not a true Scand. word.) β. The sb. waik-ta is lit. 'a watching,' or 'a being awake;' formed with suffix -ta, as in O. H. G. and Goth. ras-ta, rest. —O. H. G. wahhén, G. wachen, to be brisk, to be awake; cognate with A.S. wacian, weak verb, to watch, and closely allied to A.S. wacan, to wake; see Watch and Wake. Der. wait-er, M. E. waitere, a watchman, Wyclif, 4 Kings, ix. 17 (one MS. of later version). Also wait, sb., chiefly in the phr. 'to lie in wait,' Acts, xxiii. 21; the M. E. waite properly signifies a watchman or spy, as in Cursor Mundi, 11541, from O. F. waite, as above, and is really an older word than the verb, as above shewn; it only remains to us in the phrase 'the Christmas waits,' where a wait is 'one who is awake,' for the purpose of playing music at night; cf. Wayte, a spy; Wayte, waker, Vigil; Prompt. Parv. 'Assint etiam excubie vigiles [glossed by O. F. veytes veliables], cornibus suis strepitum et clangorem et sonitum facientes;' Wright's Voc. i. 106, l. 1. Also wait-ing, wait-ing-woman, K. Lear, iv. i. 65.

WAIVE, to relinquish, abandon a claim. (F., —Scand.) Chiefly in the phr. 'to waive a claim,' as in Cotgrave (see below). M. E. waiuen, weiuwen (with u=v), a difficult and rather vague word, chiefly in the sense 'to set aside' or 'shun,' also 'to remove' or 'push aside;' see P. Plowman, B. v. 611 (where the MS. may be read wayne); id. B. xx. 167; Chaucer, C. T. 4728, 9357, 10298, 17127, 17344, Troil. ii. 284; Gower, C. A. i. 276, l. 5. —O. F. *waiver, not recorded, though it must have been common in old statutes; later guesver, 'to waive, refuse, abandon, give over, surrender, resigne;' Cot. The O. F. waif, sb., is given by Roquefort in the form wayue, though he probably really met with it in the pl. form wayues; since he also records the form gaif, pl. gaives, where g stands for an older w. Ducange gives Low Lat. waviare, to waive, abandon, wayvium, a waif, or a beast without an owner, wayvus, adj., abandoned as a waif, which are merely Latinised forms of the F. words; and he remarks that these words are of common occurrence. β. It is not quite clear whether waif is from waive, or waive from waif, but they are closely allied, and of Norman, i.e. Norse origin. —Icel. veifa, to vibrate, swing about, move to and fro in a loose way; Norw. veiva, to swing about. Hence the sense 'to go loose;' much as in the mod. E. slang phrase to hang about, and in E. hover. + O. H. G. weibón, M. H. G. weiben, waiben, to fluctuate, swing about. γ. The Teut. type is WAIBYAN, to fluctuate, hover (Fick, iii. 305); from the Teut. WIB, to vibrate, answering to Aryan WIF, to vibrate, swing about; see Vibrate. And see Waif. Distinct from wave, despite some similarity in the sense; but the words have been confused.

WAKE (1), to cease from sleep, be brisk. (E.) M. E. waken, strong verb, pt. t. wook, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1393 (Six-text); where Tyrwhitt, l. 1395, prints awook; also wakien, weak verb, to keep awake, pp. waked, Havelok, 2999. Corresponding to these verbs, we should now say 'he wake,' and 'he was waked.' [They are both distinct from M. E. waknen, to waken; which see under Waken.] —A.S. wacan, to arise, come to life, be born, pt. t. wōc, pp. wacen; also wacian, to wake, watch, pt. t. wacode, wacode; Grein, ii. 635. + Goth. wakan, pt. t. wok, pp. wakans, to wake, watch; whence wakjan, weak verb, only in comp. uswakjan, to wake from sleep. + Du. waken (weak verb). + Icel. waka (weak). + Dan. vaage. + Swed. waka. + G. wachen. β. All from Teut. base WAK, to be brisk, be awake, answering to Aryan WAG, to be vigorous, whence Vigil, Vegetable, q.v. Fick, iii. 280; i. 762. Der. wake (weak verb), to rouse, answering to A.S. wacian, as above; wake, sb., a vigil, M. E. wake, Ancrén Riwle, p. 314, l. 2 from bottom, from A.S. wacu, occurring in the comp. niht-wacu, a night-wake, Grein, ii. 286, l. 5. Also wake-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iii. g. 7, substituted for A.S. wacol or wacul (the exact cognate of Lat. uigil), Wright's Voc. i. 46, l. 2; hence wake-ful-ly, wake-ful-ness. Also wak-en, q.v., watch, q.v.

WAKE (2), the track of a ship. (Scand.) 'In the wake of the ship (as 'tis called), or the smoothness which the ship's passing has made on the sea;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R.) 'Wake, (among seamen) is taken for that smooth water which a ship leaves astern when under sail, and is also called the ship's way;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'In Norfolk, when the broads [large tarns] are mostly frozen over, the spaces of open water are called wakes;' Wedgwood. Like many other E. Anglian words, wake is of Scand. origin. It was originally applied to an open space in half-frozen water, and esp. to the passage cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea; thence it was easily transferred to denote the smooth watery track left behind a ship that had made its way through ice, and at last by a complete forgetfulness of its true use) was applied to the smooth track left behind a vessel when there is no ice at all. And even, in prov. E., rows of green damp grass are called wakes (Halliwell). —Icel. vök (stem wak-, gen. sing. and nom. pl. wakar), a hole, opening in ice; draga þeir skipit milli vakanna=to drag their ship between [or along] wakes (Vigfusson); Swed. wak, an opening in ice; Norw. wok, the same, whence vekkja, to cut a hole in ice, 'especially to hew out a passage for ships in frozen water' (Aasen); Dan. vaage, the same. The mod. Du. wak (like E. wake) is merely borrowed from Scandinavian. The orig. sense is a 'moist' or wet place; and it is allied to Icel. vökr, moist, vökva, to moisten, to water, vökva, moisture, juice, whence Lowland Sc. wak, moist, watery; so also Du. wak, moist. —Teut. base WAK, to wet, answering to Aryan root WAG, to wet, whence Gk. ὕγ-ρός, Lat. ū-midus, wet; see further under Humid.

β. The F. ouaiche, formerly also ouage, now usually houaiche, the wake of a ship, is clearly borrowed from English, as Littré says, though he strangely mistakes the sense of the E. word when he derives it from the verb wake, to arouse from sleep! We cannot admit, with Diez and Scheler, that the E. word is borrowed from French (!), and that the F. word is from Span. aguage, a current of water, answering to Low Lat. aquagium, from Lat. aqua, water! The Span. word for wake is not aguage, but estela. γ. The connection between wake, a wet track through ice, and prov. E. wake, a row of damp grass, is now sufficiently clear. Cf. Homer's ὕγρὰ κέλευθα, Od. iii. 71. [†]

WAKEN, to awake. (E.) This verb is of considerable grammatical importance, and should be carefully studied, being one of a class not very common in mod. E., and peculiarly liable to be misunderstood. The point is, that it was orig. intransitive, whereas in Shak. it is transitive only, 3 Hen. VI. iv. 3. 19, Romeo, iii. i. 28, iv. 4. 24, Oth. ii. i. 188; &c. In mod. English, verbs in -en, by a singular change, are mostly transitive, such as strengthen, embolden, &c.; but this is just contrary to the usage, not only in M. E. and A. S., but in the Teut. languages generally. The subject is discussed in Grimm's Grammar, ed. 1837, iv. 23, where he shews that Goth.

auke-a, I eke, or increase, answers to Gk. abávoa, whereas aukna (= I eke-n) answers to Gk. abávoiai, in the middle voice; and there was even in Gothic a third form aukada = Gk. abávoiai in the passive voice. See note on Awaken, where a similar account is rendered. β. The M.E. form is waknen or wakenen, intransitive. 'So þat he bigan to wakne' = so that he began to waken (or be aroused from sleep); Havelok, 2164. = A.S. wæcan, to arise, be aroused, be born; Grein, ii. 642. Allied to A.S. wacan, to wake; see Wake. + Icel. wakna, to become awake; allied to waka, to wake. + Swed. wakna, allied to waka. + Dan. vaagne, allied to vaage. + Goth. gawaknan, allied to wakan; whence pres. part. pl. gawaknandans = becoming awake, Luke, ix. 32. Der. a-waken.

WALE, WEAL, the mark of a stroke of a rod or whip upon the flesh, a streak, a ridge, a plank along a ship's side. (E.) Sometimes spelt wehal, but a wehal is properly a blister; see Wheal (1). 'The wales, marks, scars, and cicatrices'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 459 (R.). 'The wales or marks of stripes and lashes'; id. p. 547 (R.). M.E. wale. 'Wale, or strype,' Prompt. Parv. 'Wyghtly on the wale [gunwale] they wye vp their ankers'; Morte Arthure, 740. = A.S. walu (pl. wala), a weal, mark of a blow, occurring 4 times in glosses (Leo). Leo accents it walu, which cannot be right, as it would then have become wole in mod. E., just as A.S. māl became mole; see Mole (1). We also find A.S. wyrt-wale, properly the spreading out or stump of a root, as when the root of a tree projects from the ground, hence used for 'root' simply; cf. 'þū plantudest wyrttruman hys' = thou plantest his roots, Ps. lxxix. 10, ed. Spelman, where the Trinity MS. has 'þū wyrtwalodes (sic) wirtwaloda', the last word being corruptly written for wyrtwala. The orig. sense was 'rod,' hence the rounded half-buried side-shoot of a root (as above), or the raised stripe or ridge caused by the blow of a rod or whip. Hence also the sense of ridge or plank along the edge of a ship, as in the comp. gun-wale, q.v. + O. Fries. walu, a rod, wand; only in the comp. walubera, walebera, a rod-bearer, a pilgrim; North Friesic waal, a staff (Outzen). + Icel. völur (gen. valar), a round stick, a staff. + Swed. dial. val, a round stick, cudgel, flail-handle (Rietz). + Goth. walus, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. β. All from the Teut. type WALU, a round stick, so named from its roundness; the sense of 'rounded ridge' still lingers in mod. E. wale; cf. Russ. val, a cylinder, valiate, to roll. = Teut. base WAL, to turn round, hence to make round; see Walk. Der. gun-wale. Doublet, goal, q.v.

WALK, to move along on foot without running. (E.) M.E. walken, formerly a strong verb, pt. t. welk, pp. walken. The pt. t. welk occurs in the Pricke of Conscience, ll. 4248, 4390; the pp. is spelt walke, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 953. = A.S. wealcan, pt. wēolc, pp. wealcen, to roll, to toss oneself about, rove about, Grein, ii. 669. Thus the orig. sense was 'to roll,' much as in the proverb 'a rolling [moving] stone gathers no moss.' Hence the M.E. walker, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 2 (earlier version), lit. a roller, a term applied to a fuller of cloth (from his stamping on or pressing it); A.S. wealcere = Lat. fullo, Wright's Voc. ii. 38, col. 1; still common as a proper name. + Du. walken, to work or make a hat. O. Du. walcken, 'to presse, to squeeze, or to straine'; walcher, 'a fuller'; Hexham. + Icel. valka, valka, to roll, to stamp, to roll oneself, to wallow; valk, a tossing about. + Swed. valka, to roll, to full, to work. + Dan. valke, to full, to mill. + G. walken, to full, O. H. G. walchan, to full, also to roll or turn oneself round, to move about; hence G. walker, a fuller. β. All from Teut. base WALK, to roll about, answering to Aryan WALG, WARG, to bend round, whence Lat. uulgus, bent, uergere, to bend, turn, incline, Skt. (Vedic) vrij, to bend, vrijana, crooked, curled; Fick, iii. 298. This WARG is an extension from WAR, to turn round, roll round, whence Skt. val, to move to and fro, Russ. valiate, to roll, as well as the extended base WALW, as seen in Lat. uoluer, to roll. See Voluble. Der. walk, sb., Tw. Nt. i. 3. 138; walk-ing-staff, Rich. II, iii. 3. 151; walk-ing-stick. Also walk-er, a fuller, P. Plowman, C. i. 222. And see wallow.

WALL, a stone fence, a fence of stone or brick, a rampart. (L.) M.E. wal, appearing as walle, Chaucer, C. T. 8923. = A.S. weal, weall, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone; Grein, ii. 671. Not by any means a Teut. word, but borrowed from the famous Lat. uallum, a rampart, whence also W. gwail, a rampart, as well as Du. wal, Swed. vall, G. wall, &c. β. The Lat. uallum is a collective sb., signifying a row or line of stakes. = Lat. uallus, a stake, palisade; lit. a protection. + Gk. ῥῶς, a nail, knob. = WAR, to protect; cf. Skt. vri, to screen, cover, surround, āvarana, a protection, a lock, val, to cover; Fick, i. 212. ¶ The true A.S. word for 'wall' was wāg, wæg, or wāh, Grein, ii. 643 (where the accent is wrongly omitted), whence M.E. wowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 61 (obsolete). Der. wall, verb, M.E. wallen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 51, l. 3; wall-flower, wall-fruit; also wall-newt, K. Lear, iii. 4. 135. No connection with wall-eyed.

WALLET, a bag for carrying necessities, a budget. (E.) M.E. wallet (with one l), Chaucer, C. T. 683; P. Plowman, C. xi. 269, where WALRUS, a kind of large seal. (Du., -Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. = Du. walrus, 'a kind of great fish with tusks'; Sewel, ed.

for 'bag-full' some MS. have wat-el-ful and others have walel-ful. In the latter passage we have the solution of the word; the M.E. walel being a corruption of wat-el. In precisely the same way, wallets, used by Shakespeare for bags of flesh upon the neck (Temp. iii. 3. 46), is the same word as wattles, 'teat-like excrescences that hang from the cheeks of swine,' Brockett. [For want of perceiving this fact, no one has ever been able to give the etymology of wallet; Mahn, in Webster, actually makes it the dimin. of mail (as seen in mail-bag, as if initial w and m were all one!)] That wattle should turn into wallet is not very surprising, for l is near akin to r, and a similar shifting of r is a common phenomenon in English, as in A.S. irnan = rinnan, to run, M.E. brid = a bird, M.E. burd = a bride, &c.; so also neeld, a needle, mould = model. At any rate, the very special use of wallets = wattles = fleshy bags, proves the matter beyond question, as well as the equivalent use of walel and wat-el in the MSS. of P. Plowman. β. The E. wattle commonly means 'hurdle,' but the orig. sense was merely 'something wound or woven together,' so that it might just as well mean a piece of cloth, and hence a bag. All doubt is removed by observing the use of the simple word wat (without the suffix -el or -le) in other languages; thus we have O. Du. waetsack, or waedsack [= wat-sack], 'a bugget [budget] or a mallet,' Hexham; where mallet is the identical diminutive form of mail (F. maille) which Mahn imagines could have been turned into wallet. So also G. wat, cloth (Flügel), whence waetsack, also waedsack, 'a wallet,' id. γ. But again, this G. wat, cloth, is allied to O. Swed. wad, cloth, whence E. wad, a piece of stuff, a bundle, was borrowed; so that wattle is equivalent to the dimin. of wad, and naturally took up the sense of 'bundle' in which wad was not uncommonly used. δ. This can be proved by yet another test; for of course the natural dimin. form of wad would be waddle; and accordingly, Halliwell gives: 'waddle, the wattle of a hog; also, to fold up, to entwine;' not to mention wadling, 'a wattled fence, West;' id. See further under Wattle, which is a pure E. word; and see Wad.

ε. It is perhaps worth while to add that we find, in Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1, the entry 'Hic pero, wolyng,' which Mr. Wright explains as 'a leathern sack.' This M.E. wolyng, having no obvious etymology, is prob. a contraction of wateling (the dimin. of wat-el), by loss of t. [†]

WALL-EYED, with glaring eyes, diseased eyes. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 49, Titus, v. 1. 44. Spenser has whally eyes, F. Q. i. 4. 24. 'Glauciolus, An horse with a waule eye;' Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1565. Nares writes it whally, and explains it from whaule or whall, the disease of the eyes called glaucoma; and cites: 'Glaucoma, a disease in the eye; some think it to be a whal eie;' A. Fleming's Nomenclator, p. 428. Cotgrave has: 'Oeil de chevre, a whall, or over-white eye; an eie full of white spots, or whose apple seems divided by a streak of white.' But the spelling with h is wrong. = Icel. vald-eygbr, a corrupted form of vagl-eygr, wall-eyed, said of a horse. = Icel. vagl, a beam, also a beam in the eye, a disease of the eye (as in vagl á auga, a wall in the eye); and eygr, eygbr, eyed, an adj. formed from auga, the eye, which is cognate with E. EYE. β. The Icel. vagl is the same as Swed. vagel, a roost, a perch, also a sty in the eye; vagel på ögat, 'a tumor on the eyelid, a sty on the eyelid,' Widegren. Cf. Norweg. vagl, a hen-roost, Aasen. The lit. sense is 'a perch,' or 'a small support;' closely allied to Icel. vagn, a wain. = WAGH, to carry, as in Skt. va, Lat. uagere; see Wain.

WALLOP, to boil; see Potwalloper and Gallop.

WALLOW, to roll oneself about, as in mire. (E.) M.E. walwen, Chaucer, C. T. 6684. = A.S. wealuian, to roll round, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. 6 (b. i. met. 7). + Goth. walujan, to roll, in comp. atwalujan, afwalujan, faurwalujan. + Lat. uoluer, to roll. β. All from a base WALW (short for reduplicated form WAL-WAL), extended from WAL, to roll, as in Russ. valiate, to roll. = WAR, to turn about; see Walk and Voluble.

WALNUT, lit. a foreign nut. (E.) M.E. walnute, spelt walnut, P. Plowman, B. xi. 251. We may call the word E., because its component parts are E., but it was not improbably borrowed from O. Du. I find no trace of it earlier than the 14th century; the alleged A.S. walnut was doubtless coined by Sommer (who is the only authority for it), as we see by his misspelling; it ought, of course, to be wealh-nut or wealhnut. = A.S. wealh, foreign; and hnut, a nut. The pl. Wealas means 'strangers,' i.e. the Welsh; but in mod. E. it has become Wales. + Du. walnoot, O. Du. walnute (Hexham). + Icel. valhnöt. + Dan. valnød. + Swed. valnöt. + G. walnnusz; also Wälsche nusz, i.e. foreign nut. β. For the latter element, see Nut. The former element is A.S. wealh, foreign, O. H. G. walah, a foreigner, such as a Frenchman or Italian, answering to a Teut. type WALHA, a stranger, a name given by Teutonic tribes to their Celtic and Roman neighbours; Fick, iii. 299.

WALRUS, a kind of large seal. (Du., -Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. = Du. walrus, 'a kind of great fish with tusks'; Sewel, ed.

1754. Not a Du. word, but borrowed from Scand. — Swed. vallross, a morse, walrus; Dan. hvalros. The name is very old, since the word ross (for horse) is no longer in use in Swedish and Danish, which languages now employ häst, hest in its stead; but we find the word, in an inverted form, in Icel. hross-hvalr, a walrus, lit. a horse-whale; the name being given (it is suggested) from the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh. β . At any rate, there is no doubt about the sense, whatever may have been the reason for it; the notion referred to by E. Müller, that the word was orig. Norwegian, and meant 'Russian whale,' is disproved at once by the Icelandic word; and to make it doubly sure, we have the A. S. hors-hwæl, a horse-whale, a walrus, in Ælfred's translation of Orosius; see Sweet, A. S. Reader. γ . The Swed. vall, Dan. hval, Icel. hvalr, are cognate with E. Whale. The Swed. ross, Dan. ros, Icel. hross or hors, are cognate with A. S. hors (the r in which has shifted); see Horse. δ . The name morse, q. v., is Russian.

WALTZ, the name of a dance. (G.) Introduced in 1813; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. A shortened form of G. walzer (with z sounded as ts, whence the E. spelling), 'a jig, a waltz'; Flügel. — G. walzen, 'to roll, revolve, dance round about, waltz'; id. + A. S. wæltan, to roll, twist; see further under Welter. Der. waltz, verb.

WAMPUM, small beads, used as money. (N. American Indian.) 'Wampum, small beads made of shells, used by the N. American Indians as money, and also wrought into belts, &c. as an ornament,' Webster. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Indian wampum, wompam, from the Massachusetts wómpí, Delaware wápi, white (Mahn).

WAN, colourless, languid, pale. (E.) M. E. wan, Chaucer, C. T. 2458. — A. S. wann, wonn, dark, black, Grein, ii. 638. It occurs as an epithet of a raven, and of night; so that the sense of the word appears to have suffered a remarkable change; the sense, however, was probably 'dead' or 'colourless,' which is applicable to black and pallid alike. There is no cognate word in other languages, and nothing to connect it clearly with A. S. wan, deficient. Hence Ettmüller derives it from A. S. wann (also wonn), the pt. t. of winnan, to strive, contend, toil (whence E. win); so that the orig. sense would have been 'worn out with toil, tired out,' from which we easily pass to the sense of 'worn out' or 'pallid with sleeplessness' in the mod. E. word. The sense of the A. S. word may be accounted for by supposing that it was orig. used (as it often is) as an epithet of night, so that wan night would mean over-tired night, just as the very word night itself signifies 'dead'; with reference to the common myth of the death of the sun. This etymology is accepted by Mahn and E. Müller; if right, the word is distinct from Wane, confusion with which has affected its sense. See further under Win. Der. wan-ly, wan-ness.

WAND, a long slender rod. (Scand.) M. E. wand, Pricke of Conscience, 5880; Ormulum, 16178. — Icel. vöndr (gen. vandar), a wand, a switch, whence vandahús, a wicker-house; O. Swed. wand (Ihre); Dan. vaand. + Goth. wandus, a rod, 2 Cor. xi. 25. β . The Teut. type is WANDU, Fick, iii. 285. It is named from its pliancy and use in wicker-work, the orig. sense being a lithe twig, that could be wound into wicker-work. — O. Scand. wand, vand, pt. t. of the verb to wind; this pt. t. is still written vandf in Danish, though in Icelandic it has become vatt. The verb is O. Swed. winda, Icel. vinda, Dan. vinde, cognate with E. Wind (2), q. v.

WANDER, to ramble, rove. (E.) M. E. wandrien, wandren, P. Plowman, B. vi. 304. — A. S. wandrian, to wander, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. i (cap. xxxvi. § 2). The frequentative form of wend, to go; hence it means 'to keep going about.' See Wend. + Du. wandelen, 'to walke,' Hexham. + G. wandeln, to wander, travel, walk. Der. wander-er. Also Vandal, q. v.

WANE, to decrease (as the moon), to fail. (E.) M. E. wanien, wanen, Chaucer, C. T. 2080. — A. S. wanian, wonien, to decrease, grow less; Grein, ii. 639. — A. S. wan, won, deficient, id. 638. + Icel. vana, to diminish, from vanr, lacking, wanting; also van-, in composition. + O. H. G. and M. H. G. wanon, wanén, to wane, from wan, deficient, appearing in mod. G. compounds as wahn-. So also Du. wan-, prefix, in wankoop, despair (lit. lacking hope); Dan. van- in varvid, insanity (want of wits); Swed. van- in vanvett, the same. + Goth. wans, lacking. β . All from Teut. WA-NA, adj. deficient, Fick, iii. 279. From \checkmark WA, to fail; only found in the derived adj., which appears not only as above, but also in the Gk. εὔνως, bereaved, Skt. úna, wanting, lessened, inferior. Der. want, wan-ton; and prob. wan-i-on, q. v.

WANION, in the phrase with a wanion. (E.) In Shak. Per. ii. 1. 17; the phr. with a wanion means 'with a curse on you,' or 'with bad luck to you,' or 'to him,' as the case may be. The word has been explained by Wedgwood, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1873-4, p. 328. I myself independently obtained the same conclusions, viz. (1) that it stands for waniand, and (2) that waniand was taken to be a sb., instead of a pres. part. Rich. quotes from Sir T. More: 'He would of lykelyhood bynde them to cartes and beat them, and make theym wed in the waniand,' Works, p. 306; which means, I suppose, he would flog them at the cart's tail (a common expression), and make them marry in the waning moon, i. e. at an unlucky time. Halliwell gives 'waniand, the wane of the moon,' without any authority; still, it is doubtless right. β . Waniand is the Northern form of the pres. part. of M. E. wanien, to wane, also used actively in the sense to lessen, deprive (see below). The confusion of the pres. part. with the sb. in -ing is so common in English that many people cannot parse a word ending in -ing. Thus in the waniand came to mean 'in the waning,' and with a wanion means with a diminution, detriment, ill luck. On 'the fatal influence of the waning moon,' . . . general in Scotland,' see Brand's Popular Antiquities, chapter on The Moon. The Icel. vana, to wane, is commonly transitive, with the senses 'to make to wane, disable, spoil, destroy,' which may have influenced the superstition in the North, though it is doubtless widely spread. Cf. 'wurð uppe chirches, oðer wanieð hire rihtes, oðer letteð' = war upon churches, or lessen their rights, or hinder them; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 6. See Wano. [\dagger]

WANT, lack, deficiency, indigence, need. (Scand.) M. E. want, first in the Ormulum, 14398, where it is spelt wannt, and has the adj. sense of 'deficient'; spelt wante, and used as a sb., Ancren Riwe, p. 284, l. 2. — Icel. want, neuter of vanr, adj., lacking, deficient. This neuter form was used with a gen. case following; as, var þeim veltugis want = there was lacking to them of nothing, i. e. they wanted nothing. [The Icel. sb. for want is vansi.] β . Thus the final t was orig. merely the termination of the neut. gender (as in E. i-t, tha-t, thwar-t, tof-t); but the word want was in common use, and even the verb vanta, to want, to lack, was formed from it, which is the origin of E. want as a verb. γ . The Icel. vanr, adj., is explained under Wane, q. v. Der. want, verb, M. E. wanten, spelt wonten in Ancren Riwe, p. 344, l. 14; from Icel. vanta, verb, as above. Also want-ing, pres. part., sometimes used as adj.

WANTON, playful, sportive, unrestrained. (E.) The true sense is unrestrained, uneducated, not taken in hand by a master; hence, licentious. M. E. wantoun, contracted form of wantowen; spelt wantoun, Chaucer, C. T. 208; spelt wantowen, wantowne, wanton, P. Plowman, C. iv. 143, where it is applied to women. Compounded of wan-, prefix, and towen, pp.

β . The prefix wan- signifies 'lacking, wanting,' and is explained under Wane. In composition it has sometimes the force of un- (to which it is not related), but also gives an ill sense, almost like Gk. δυσ-. γ . The pp. towen stands for A. S. togen, pp. of teón, to draw, to educate, bring up, Grein, ii. 527. The change from A. S. g to M. E. w (between 2 vowels) is seen again in A. S. mugan = M. E. mouwen, to be able, and is quite regular. The A. S. togen is cognate with G. gezogen, so that E. wanton, ill-bred, corresponds very nearly to G. ungezogen, 'ill-bred, unmannerly, rude, uncivil,' Flügel. For an account of A. S. teón, see Tug. Mr. Wedgwood well cites wel i-towene, well educated, modest, Ancren Riwe, p. 204, l. 17; wntowune, licentious, id. p. 342, l. 26. Examples abound. Der. wanton-ly; wanton-ness, M. E. wantounesse, Chaucer, C. T. 266. Also wanton, sb.

WAPENTAKE, an old name for a hundred or district. (Scand.) 'Franchises, hundredis, wapentakes;' Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 181. 'Candred . . . is a contray pat conteyneþ an hundred townes, and is also in Engliche i-called wepentake;' Trevisa, ii. 87; spelt wapentake, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 145, l. 16. The word occurs in the A. S. Laws, but was merely borrowed from Norse; the A. S. técan does not mean 'to touch,' but 'to teach,' and is altogether removed from the word under discussion. It is remarkable that various explanations of this word have been given, seeing that all the while the Laws of Edward the Confessor fully explain the orig. sense. — A. S. wápengetðce, dat. case, a district, wapentake, Secular Laws of Edgar, § vi, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 272; we also find wápenðake (so accented in the MS.), dat. case, id. p. 292. The nom. is wápengetðc or wápenðc, Latinised as wapentac or wapentagium, Laws of Edw. Conf. § xxx, in Thorpe, i. 455, where we also read: 'Quod alii vocant hundredum, supradicti comitatus vocant wapentagium, et hoc non sine causa; cum enim aliquis accipiebat prefecturam wapentagii, die constituto, conveniebant omnes majores contra eum in loco ubi soliti erant congregari, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant contra eum, et ipse erigebat lanceam suam in altum, et omnes de lanceis suis tangebant hastam ejus, et sic confirmabant se sibi. Et de armis, qui arma vocant wappa, et taccare, quod est confirmare. To which another MS. adds: 'Anglice vero arma vocantur wapen, et taccare confirmare, quasi armorum confirmacio, vel ut magis expresse, secundum linguam Anglicam, dictum wapentac, i. e. armorum tactus: wapen enim arma sonat, tac tactus est. Quamobrem potest cognosci quod hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confederate (sic) sunt.' We may then dismiss other explanations, and accept the above explicit one, that when a new chief of a wapentake was elected, he used to raise his weapon (a spear), and his men touched it with theirs in token of fealty. However the word (as above said) is Norse.—Icel. vápnatak, lit. a weapon-taking or weapon-touching; hence, a vote of consent so expressed, and lastly, a subdivision of a shire in the Danish part of England, answering to the hundred in other parts; the reason for this being as above given.

—Icel. vápn, gen. pl. of vápn, a weapon, cognate with E. weapon; and tak, a taking hold, a grasp, esp. a grasp in wrestling (here used of the contact of weapons), from taka, to take, seize, grasp, also to touch. See Weapon and Take. ¶ As the Icel. taka means to touch as well as to take, it will be seen that the explanation 'weapon-grasping' in the Icel. Dict. is insufficient; it means more than that, viz. the clashing of one spear against another. 'Si placuit [sententia], frameas concutiant; honoratissimum assensus genus est armis laudare,' Tacitus, Germania, chap. 11; &c. Cf. Lowland Sc. wapin-schaw (weapon-show), an exhibition of arms made at certain times in every district; Jamieson.

WAR, hostility, a contest between states by force of arms. (E.) M. E. werre (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 47. It occurs in the A. S. Chron. an. 1119, where it is spelt wyrre, but a little further on, an. 1140, it is spelt uerre (= werre). But it occurs much earlier; we find 'armorum oneribus, quod Angli war-scot dicunt' in the Laws of Cnut, De Foresta, § 9; Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 427. Thus the word is English; though the usual A. S. word is wig; we also find hild, winn, gud, &c. But the derivatives warrior and warlike (to make war on, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 48), respecting which see below, are of F. origin. Cf. O. F. werre, war (Burguy, Roquefort), whence mod. F. guerre; from O. H. G. werra, vexation, strife, confusion, broil; cf. mod. G. verwirrung, confusion, disturbance, broil, from the same root; O. H. G. wörren, to bring into confusion, entangle, embroil; cf. mod. G. verwirren. + O. Du. werre, 'warre, or hostility,' Hexham; from werren, also verwerren, 'to embroile, to entangle, to bring into confusion or disorder; id. β. The form of the base is WARS, later form WARR; and the word is closely allied to Worse, q. v.

Der. war, verb, late A. S. werrien, A. S. Chron. an. 1135, formed from the sb. werre. Also war-fare, properly 'a warlike expedition; 'he was nat in good poynt to ride a warfare, i. e. on a warlike expedition, Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron. vol. ii. c. 13 (R.); see Fare. Also war-like, K. John, v. 1. 71; warr-i-or, M. E. werreour, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 166, l. 4, from O. F. *werreier, not recorded, old spelling of O. F. guerreier (Burguy), a warrior, one who makes war, formed with suffix -ur from O. F. *werreier, guerreier, to make war, borrowed by E. and appearing as M. E. werreien or werreyen, Chaucer, C. T. 1546, 10324, and in Spenser as warray or warrey, F. Q. i. 5. 48, ii. 10. 21; so that warrior is really a familiar form of warreour; cf. guerreoyeur, 'a martialist, or warrior,' Cot., from guerreoyer, 'to warre,' id.

WARBLE, to sing as a bird, chirp, carol. (F.,—M. H. G.) M. E. werblen, spelt werbelen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2004; the sb. werble occurs in the same, 119.—O. F. werbler, to quaver with the voice, speak in a high tone (Burguy, Roquefort).—M. H. G. *werbelen, not given in Wackernagel, yet merely the old spelling of mod. G. wirbeln, to whirl, to run round, to warble, frequentative form of M. H. G. werben, O. H. G. werban, to be busy, to set in movement, urge on (whence mod. G. be-werben, to sue for, er-werben, to acquire), the orig. sense being to twirl oneself about, to twirl or whirl. See Whirl, which is, practically, a doublet. Der. warble, sb., M. E. werble, as above; warbl-er.

WARD, a guard, a watch, means of guarding, one who is under a guardian, &c. (E.) 1. M. E. ward, dat. warde, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 320; pl. wardes, guards, King Alisaunder, 1977.—A. S. weard, a guard, watchman, Grein, ii. 673. This is a masc. sb. (gen. weardes); we also find A. S. weard, fem. (gen. wearde), a guarding, watching, protection; id. Both senses are still retained. Both sbs. are formed from the Teut. base WAR, to defend; see Wary. Thus the orig. sense of the masc. sb. is 'a defender,' and of the fem. sb. is 'a defence.' + Icel. vörðr, gen. varðar, (1) a warder or watchman, (2) a watch. + G. wart, a warder. + Goth. wards, masc. sb., a keeper, only in the comp. dawarwards, a door-keeper. All these are extensions from the same root. 2. From this sb. was formed the verb to ward, A. S. weardian, to keep, to watch, Grein, ii. 674; cognate with which are Icel. varða, to warrant, and G. warten, M. H. G. warden, to watch, from the latter of which is derived (through the French) E. guard. Der. ward-er, Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 21; ward-room, ward-ship. Also ward-en, q. v., ward-robe, q. v. Also bear-ward, door-ward, hay-ward (= hedge-ward, from F. haie, a hedge); ste-ward, q. v.; wraith, q. v. Doublet, guard, sb. and verb.

-WARD, suffix. (E.) A common suffix, expressing the direction towards which one tends. A. S. -weard, as in tó-weard, toward; see Toward, where the suffix is fully explained. It occurs also as Icel. -verðr, Goth. -wairths, O. H. G. -uert, -wart; and cf. Lat. uersus, towards, from the same root. We also have -wards, A. S. -weardes, & where -es is a genitival suffix giving an adverbial force. Der. after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, fro-ward, hind-ward, hither-ward, home-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, thither-ward, to-ward, up-ward, west-ward. To most of these s can be added, except to froward. See also way-ward, wool-ward, verse, prose, suzerain.

WARDEN, (1) a guardian, keeper, (2) a kind of pear. (F.,—M. H. G.) Though the verb to ward is English, and so is its derivative warder, the sb. warden is F., as shewn by the suffix. 1. M. E. warden, Ancren Riwle, p. 272, l. 4.—O. F. *warden, not given in Burguy, but necessarily the old spelling of O. F. gardein, gardain, a warden, guardian; since warder is given as the old spelling of garder. Cf. Low Lat. gardiannus, a guardian; shewing that O. F. warden was formed from ward-er by help of the Lat. suffix -ianus. See Ward. 2. A warden was 'a large coarse pear used for baking,' Wright's Voc. i. 229, note 1, where we also find it spelt wardum, in a Nominale of the 15th century; it is spelt warden in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 48. It meant a keeping pear; Cotgrave has 'poire de garde, a warden, or winter pear, a pear which may be kept very long; also the adj. gardien, 'keeping, warding, guarding,' answering to Low Lat. gardiannus (for wardianus), used as an adjective. [†]

WARDROBE, a place to keep clothes in. (F.,—G.) M. E. wardrobe; 'Jupiter hath in his wardrobe bothe garments of ioye and of sorrow,' Test. of Love, b. ii, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 303, col. 2.—O. F. wardrobe, old spelling of garderobe; this is shewn by the fact that Roquefort gives warder-cors as the old spelling of F. garde-corps. The spelling garderobe is in Palsgrave, s. v. ward-roppe. Cotgrave spells it garderobbe, 'a wardrobe, also a house of office' [see wardrobe in Halliwell].—O. F. warder, to ward, keep, preserve; and robe, a robe; both words being of G. origin. See Ward and Robe.

WARE (1), merchandise. (E.) M. E. ware (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4560.—A. S. ware, pl. waru, wares, according to Bosworth; but the reference to § 1 of the Council of Enham (Eynsham) seems to be wrong, and I wholly fail to find the word in A. S., and suspect it to have been borrowed from Scand. We find, however, A. S. waru, protection, guard, care, custody, which is tolerably common, Grein, ii. 641; according to Leo, it has also the sense of 'contract-money,' for which he refers us to a gloss printed in Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 439. These words are doubtless related; the sense of wares appears to have been 'things kept,' or 'things of value;' there being also no doubt that worth is a related word, from the same root. We can explain wares as 'valuables' or 'goods;' just as Icel. varnaðr means (1) protection, (2) wares. The word is much plainer in the cognate languages. + Du. waar, a ware, commodity; pl. waren, wares. Cf. O. Du. waren, 'to keepe or to garde,' Hexham. + Icel. vara, pl. vörur, wares. + Dan. ware, pl. varer; cf. varre, care. + Swed. vara, pl. varor; cf. vara, care. + G. waare, pl. waaren; cf. wahre, care, wahren, to guard. β. All from Teut. WARA, a commodity, valuable; allied to WERTHA, worth.—✓ WAR, to guard; Fick, iii. 290. See Wary. Der. ware-house (Palsgrave). [†]

WARE (2), aware. (E.) 'They were ware of it,' Acts, iv. 16; so also in Romeo, i. i. 131, ii. 2. 103, &c. See further under Wary.

WARE (3), pt. t. of Wear, q. v.

WARFARE, WARLIKE; see under War.

WARILY, WARINESS; see under Wary.

WARISON, protection, reward. (F.,—Teut.) M. E. warisson, protection, Rob. of Brunne, p. 198, l. 1. This is the true sense; but it is much more common in the sense of help or 'reward;' see Will. of Paleme, 2259, 2379, Barbour, Bruce, ii. 206, x. 526, xx. 544. The usual sense of mod. F. guérison is 'recovery from illness,' which is yet a third sense of what is really the same word. Cf. M. E. warissen, to cure, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 105.—O. F. warison, garison, surety, safety, provision, also healing. Cot. has guarison, 'health, curing, recovery.'—O. F. warir, garir, to keep, protect, also to heal; mod. F. guérir. β. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. warjan, to bid to beware, forbid, keep off from, whence the sense 'protect;' and in O. H. G. werjan, to protect (whence G. wehren, to defend, restrain); cf. O. Du. waren, 'to keepe or garde,' Hexham. This answers to the Teut. type WARYAN, to defend, from the adj. WAR, wary; see Wary. γ. We may note that the O. F. garison just corresponds to the mod. E. garrison in form; but the sense of garrison is such as to link it more closely with O. F. garnison, another sb. from the same root. It makes little ultimate difference. See Garrison. ¶ Sir W. Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 24, uses warisson in the sense of 'note of assault,' as if it were a warry (warlike) sound. This is a singular blunder.

WARLOCK, a wizard. (E.) In Jamieson's Scot. Dict. 'Æneas was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron-free or lead-free;' Dryden, Dedication to tr. of Virgil's Æneid (R.) The final ck stands for an orig. guttural sound, just as most Englishmen say lock for the Scottish lock; the suffix was prob. confused with that of hem-lock or wed-lock. M. E. warloghe, a wicked one, a name for the devil, Destruction of Troy, 4439. Spelt warlawe, a deceiver, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 783. — A. S. wærlaga, a traitor, deceiver, liar, truce-breaker, Grein, ii. 650. Lit. 'one who lies against the truth.' — A. S. wær, truth (as in wærlæds, false, lit. 'truthless,' Grein), cognate with Lat. verum, truth; and loga, a liar, from logan (pp. log-en), to lie, Grein, ii. 176, 194. See Verity and Lie (2).

WARM, moderately hot. (E.) M. E. warm, Chaucer, C. T. 7409. — A. S. wearm, Grein, ii. 675. + Du. warm. + Icel. varmr. + Dan. and Swed. warm. + G. warm. Cf. Goth. warmjan, to warm; the adj. warms does not occur.

β. The Teut. type is WAR-MA, warm, Fick, iii. 292. It is usual to connect this with Lat. formus, Gk. θερμός, hot, Skt. gharma, heat, from the ✓GHAR, to glow, with which E. glow is connected; see Glow. See Curtius, ii. 99. γ. But this interchange of w with Skt. gh is against all rules, and constitutes a considerable objection to this theory. On this account, Fick (ii. 465) connects warm with Russ. varite, to boil, brew, scorch, burn, Lithuan. verdu, I cook, seethe, boil (inf. wirti), and hence infers a ✓WAR, to cook or boil, common to Teutonic and Slavonic. δ. This seems a more likely solution; and we can also derive from the same root the Skt. ulka, a fire-brand, Lat. vulcanus, fire. See Volcano. Der. warm-ly, warm-ness; also warm, verb, A. S. wearmian, Grein, ii. 675, whence warm-er, warm-ing-pan; also warm-th, sb., M. E. werthe, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 37, l. 33 (not found in A.S.).

WARN, to caution against, put on one's guard. (E.) M. E. warnien, warnen, Chaucer, C. T. 3535. — A. S. wearnian, warnian, (1) to take heed, which is the usual sense, Luke, xi. 35; (2) to warn, Gen. vi. 6; cf. warning, a warning, Gen. xli. 32. Formed from the sb. wearn, a refusal, denial (Grein), an obstacle, impediment (Bosworth); the orig. sense being a guarding of oneself, a defence of a person on trial, as in Icel. vörn, a defence. — ✓WAR, to defend, guard; see Wary. + Icel. varna, to warn off, refuse, abstain from; from vörn, a defence. + Swed. varna, to warn. + G. warnen. Der. warn-ing. And see garn-ish, garr-i-son (for garn-ison). Also fore-warn, pre-warn.

WARP, the thread stretched lengthwise in a loom, to be crossed by the woof; a rope used in towing. (E.) Lit. 'that which is thrown across.' M. E. warpe; 'Warp, threde for webbynge;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. wearp, a warp; 'Stamen, wearp,' Wright's Voc. i. 66, col. 1. — A. S. wearp, pt. t. of weorpan, to throw, cast, a strong verb; Grein, ii. 683. + Icel. varp, a casting, throwing, also the warping of anything; from varp, pt. t. of verpa (pp. orpinn), to throw. + Dan. varp, only as a naut. term. + Swed. varp, a warp. + O. H. G. warf (mod. G. werfte); from warf, pt. t. of werfen, to throw. β. All from the Teut. base WARP, to throw, Fick, iii. 295, whence also Goth. waippan, to throw; answering to Aryan ✓WARF, to throw, as seen in Lithuan. werpti, to spin, Gk. πέπειν, to incline downwards, πίπτειν, to throw. γ. The M. E. werpen, to throw, pt. t. warpe, pp. worpen, occurring in Havelok, 1061, &c., is obsolete. Der. warpe, verb, to pervert, twist out of shape (cf. cast in the sense of to twist timber out of shape); this is not the M. E. werpen (as above), but the derivative weak verb, and is of Scand. origin; M. E. warpen, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. varpa, to throw, cast, which from varp, sb., a casting, also a warping. Cf. Swed. varpa, Dan. varpe, to warp a ship, from Swed. varp, the draught of a net, Dan. varp, a warp; cf. Dan. varpanker, a warp-anchor or keedge. And see warp.

WARRANT, a voucher, guarantee, commission giving authority. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. warant, Havelok, 2067, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 8, l. 10. — O. F. warant, guarant (Burguy), later garant, 'a vouchee, warrant; also, a supporter, defender, maintainer, protector;' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the spelling garant, 'a warrenter.' In the Laws of Will. I, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 476, 477, the F. spelling is guarant, and the Low Lat. warantum and warantium. The suffix -ant is clearly due to the Lat. -ant used as the suffix of a present participle; so that the orig. sense of O. F. warant was 'defending' or 'protecting.' — O. H. G. warjan, werjan, M. H. G. wern, weren, G. wehren, to protect, lit. 'to give heed.' — O. H. G. wara, M. H. G. war, heed, care. — ✓WAR, to heed; see Wary. Der. warrant, verb, M. E. warant, K. Alisaunder, 2132; warrant-er, warrant-or, warrant-able, warrant-abl-y, warrant-able-ness. Also warrant-y, from O. F. warantie, later garantie, 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise,' Cot., orig. fem. of pp. of warantir, later garantir, to warrant, guarantee. Also guarant-ee (error for guarant-ie), q. v. And see warr-en, war-is-on, garr-et. [+]

WARREN, a preserved piece of ground, now only used of a place where rabbits abound, not always a preserved place. (F., — Low Lat., — O. H. G.) M. E. wareine, P. Plowman, B. prol. 163. —

O. F. wareinne, wareine, warene (Roquefort); later garenne, 'a warren of conies [conies], also a certain, or limited fishing in a river;' Cot. This shows that the sense was 'a preserve.' — Low Lat. warena, a preserve for rabbits, hares, or fish, occurring A. D. 1186 (Ducange). Formed (with Low Lat. suffix -enna) from O. H. G. warjan, to protect, keep, preserve; see Warrant. Cf. Du. warande, a park; borrowed from O. French. Der. warren-er, contracted to warner, P. Plowman, B. v. 316; which explains the name Warner.

WART, a small hard excrescence, on the skin, or on trees. (E.) M. E. werte (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. Group A, l. 555 (Six-text edition, where one MS. has werte); spelt wert in Tyrwhitt, l. 557. — A. S. wearte, pl. weartan, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 100, l. 10. 'Papula, wearte;' Wright's Voc. i. 288, col. 2. + Du. wrat; O. Du. warte, warate (Hexham). + Icel. varia. + Dan. vorte. + Swed. vårta. + G. warze.

β. All from Teut. type WARTAN or WARTA, Fick, iii. 294. The orig. sense is 'growth,' hence out-growth or excrescence; and it is closely allied to Wort (1), q. v. Der. wart-y.

WARY, WARE, guarding against deception or danger, cautious. (E.) The M. E. form is war; war-y is a comparatively late formation, perhaps due to misreading the adv. warely as war-e-ly; or the -y was subjoined as in murk-y from M. E. mirke, merke. In Meas. for Meas. iv. 1. 38. M. E. war, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, l. 309 (Six-text ed.), misspelt ware in Tyrwhitt, l. 311. — A. S. war, cautious, Grein, ii. 649. + Icel. varr. + Dan. and Swed. var. + Goth. vars. Cf. O. H. G. wara, heed, caution; G. gewahr, aware. β. All from Teut. type WARA, cautious, Fick, iii. 290. — ✓WAR, to defend, take heed; whence also Skt. vri, to screen, cover, surround, var-man, armour, Gk. οἶσπος, a watchman, guard, ὀπίω, I perceive, look out for, observe, Lat. uereri, to regard, respect, esteem, dread, Russ. vrata, a door, gate (lit. defence). Der. wari-ly, wari-ness; a-ware, be-ware. And see war-d, guar-d; war-n, gar-n-ish, garr-is-on; warr-ant, guar-ant-ee; ware (1); weir; re-vere, ver-y; pan-or-a-ma, di-or-a-ma.

WAS, WAST, WERE, WERT, used as parts of the verb to be. (E.) M. E. pt. t. sing. was, wast, uas; pl. weren or were. — A. S. wesan, infin. to be; whence pt. t. indic. sing. wæs, wære, wæ; pl. wæran, wæron, or wærun; pt. t. subj. sing. wære (for all persons), pl. wæren or wæron (for all persons). See Grein, ii. 664. β. As to the use of was in the 1st and 3rd persons, there is no difficulty. γ. As to the 2nd person, the A. S. form was wære, whence M. E. were, as in 'thou were betrayed,' Chaucer, C. T. 14690. In Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 67, where 7 MSS. read were, one MS. has was, and another has wast; no doubt was-t was formed (by analogy with hast) from the dialectal was, which was prob. Northern. When you came to be used for thou, the phrase you was took the place of thou was, and is very common in writings of the 18th century. Cf. I has, Barbour, Bruce, xiii. 652; I is, ye is (Northern dialect), Chaucer, C. T. 4043; thou is, id. 4087. In the subj. mood, the true form is were; hence was formed wer-t (by analogy with wast), K. John, iii. 1. 43, ed. 1623. δ. In the first and third persons singular of the subjunctive, and in the plural, the true form is were; but the use of were in the singular is gradually becoming obsolete, except when the conjunction if precedes. The forms if I were, if he were, if I be, if he be, if he have, exhibit the clearest surviving traces of a (grammatically marked) subj. mood in mod. English; and of these, if he have is almost gone. Some careful writers employ if he do, if it make, and the like; but it is not improbable that the subjunctive mood will disappear from the language; the particular phrase if I were will probably linger the longest. + Du. infin. wezen; indic. sing. was, waert, was; pl. waren, waert, waren; subj. sing. ware, waert, ware; pl. waren, waert, waren. + Icel. infin. vera; indic. sing. var, varit, vas, pl. várum, várut, váru; subj. sing. vera, varir, vari; pl. varim, verit, vari. + Dan. infin. være; indic. sing. and pl. var; subj. sing. and pl. være. + Swed. infin. vara; indic. sing. var; pl. voro, voren, voro; subj. sing. voro; pl. vore, voren, voro. + Goth. wisan, to be, dwell, remain; pt. t. indic. sing. was, wast, was; dual, wesu, wesuts; pl. wesum, wesuth, wesum; subj. sing. wesjau, weseis, wesi; dual, weseiwa, weseits; pl. weseima, weseith, weseina. + G. pt. t. sing. war, warest or warst, war; pl. waren, waret, waren; subj. sing. wäre, wärest or wärst, wäre; pl. wären, wäret, wären.

β. All from Teut. base WAS, to be, orig. to dwell. — ✓WAS, to dwell; cf. Skt. vas, to dwell, remain, live; Gk. ἀσ-ναι, a dwelling-place, city; Lat. uer-na (for ues-na), a household slave. Fick, iii. 300. Der. wass-ail, q. v. And see ver-na-cul-ar.

WASH, to cleanse with water, overflow. (E.) Formerly a strong verb; hence un-washen; Mark, vii. 2. M. E. waschen, weschen, pt. t. wesch, wosch, pp. waschen. The pt. t. is wesch in Chaucer, C. T. 2285, misprinted wesche by Tyrwhitt. — A. S. wascan, Grein, ii. 641. Just as we find axian (= asian) as well as ascian, so also wascan appears as wasjan; the pt. t. is wōsc or wōx; the pp. is wascen or wascen. 'Hig hira reáf wōxon' = they washed their robes, Exod. xix. 14. + Du. wasschen. + Icel. and Swed. vaska. + Dan. vaske. + G. waschen, pt. t.

β. The Teut. type is WASKAN, to wash, Fick, iii. 301. Fick compares Skt. wicch, to collect the gleanings in harvest, whence pra-wicch, to wipe out; this is far-fetched and unlikely. If we only remember that the Teut. sk often stands for ks, and that s (as in E. clean-se, rin-se) is used as an extension of a root, giving it an active force, we shall be disposed to take WAK-S as the form of the base, which may very well belong to the Teut. base WAK = ✓WAG, to moisten; see Wake (2). Corresponding with WAKS, we have Skt. uksh, to sprinkle, to wet, which comes much nearer not only in form, but also in sense. The orig. sense was prob. 'to wet,' hence to flood with water. Der. wash, sb., as in The Wash (place-name); wash-er, wash-er-woman, wash-y.

WASP, a stinging insect. (E.) M. E. waspe, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 648. Cf. prov. E. waps, wops. — A. S. wæps. 'Vespa, waps;' Wright's Voc. i. 23, col. 2. In a very old A. S. glossary of the 8th century, we find: 'Vespa, wæfssas;' Wright's Voc. ii. 123, col. 1. + O. H. G. wesfā, wafsa; G. wespe. + Lat. uespa. + Lithuan. wapsa, a gad-fly, horse-fly, stinging fly. + Russ. osa, a wasp. β. All from an Aryan form WAPSA, Fick, i. 769; the true E. form is waps, but it has become wasp under the influence of the Lat. uespa, which is really a modified form, for ease in pronunciation. γ. To suppose WAP-SA to mean 'weaver,' which is what Fick suggests, is surely nonsense; esp. as the root of 'weave' is not WAP, but WABH.

δ. It more likely means 'stinger,' from a root WAP, to sting, now lost, unless we may adduce E. wap, to strike. ¶ I cannot believe it to be connected with Gk. σφή; rather, the Gk. σφή is the same as Gael. speech, a wasp, a venomous creature, also a sting; cf. Gael. speech, a thrust, blow, speechair, one who strikes, a waspish fellow, Irish speech, a kick. Der. wasp-ish, As You Like It, iv. 3. 9; wasp-ish-ly, -ness.

WASSAIL, a festive occasion, a merry carouse. (E.) See Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 2, where also Verstegan's 'etymology' (from wax hale) and Selden's (from wish-hail) and other curiosities may be found. In Macb. i. 7. 64; Hamlet, i. 4. 9, &c. M. E. wasseyll, wassayl, Rob. of Glouc. p. 117, l. 4; 118, l. 3; and see Hearne's Glossary, p. 731. The story is well-known, viz. that Rowena presented a cup to Vortigern with the words was hæl, and that Vortigern, who knew no English, was told to reply by saying drinc hæl. Whatever truth there be in this, we can at any rate admit that was hæl and drinc hæl were phrases used at a drinking-bout. The former phrase is a salutation, meaning 'be of good health,' lit. 'be hale'; the latter phrase is almost untranslatable, meaning literally 'drink, hale!' i.e. 'drink, and good luck be with you.'

β. These forms are not Anglo-Saxon, but belong to another dialect, probably Northumbrian, if indeed they be not altogether Scandinavian. The A. S. (Wessex) form of salutation was wes hæl, occurring in Beowulf, l. 808 (or l. 407, ed. Grein). It occurs in the plural in Matt. xxviii. 9; 'hæle wese ge' = whole be ye, or peace be unto you. — A. S. wes, be thou, imperative sing., 2nd person, of wesan, to be; and hæl, whole. See Was and Whole. γ. The form hæl is just the Icel. heill, mod. E. hale, a cognate word with A. S. hæl (= E. whole). In the Icel. Dict. we find similar phrases, such as kom heill, welcome, hail! (lit. come, hale!); far heill, farewell! (lit. fare, hale!); sit heill, sit, hail! (lit. sit, hale!); the last of these fully explains drinc hæl. We may also notice Icel. heill, sb., good luck; and we even find A. S. hæl (but only as a sb.), good luck, Luke, xix. 9. See Hale, Hail (2).

WASTE, desert, desolate, unused. (F., — O. H. G., — L.) M. E. wast, Rob. of Glouc. p. 372, l. 10. — O. F. wast, in the phr. faire wast, to make waste (preserved in E. as lay waste), Roquefort; later form gast. He also gives waster, to waste. Burguy gives gast, guast, sb. devastation, gast, gaste, adj. waste; gaster (mod. F. gâter), to lay waste, despoil, spoil, ravage; also gastir, to ravage. — O. H. G. waste, sb., a waste; wasten, to lay waste; and there was prob. a form *wastjan, corresponding to O. F. gastir. Not a Teut. word; but simply borrowed from Lat. uastus, waste, desolate, also vast, whence the verb uastare, to waste, lay waste. Root unknown; some imagine a connection with uacuis, empty.

β. It is most remarkable that we should have adopted this word from French, since we had the word already in an A. S. form as wæste; but it is quite certain that we did so, since wæste would have been wæst in mod. E.; besides which, there are two M. E. forms, viz. wast (from F.) and weste (from A. S.), of which the latter soon died out, the latest example noted by Stratmann being from the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1528. And the result is remarkably confirmed by the M. E. wastour for waster (see below).

γ. The history of the word in G. is equally curious. There also the O. H. G. has wuosti, adj., empty, wuosti, sb., a waste, and wuostan, to waste; yet, in addition to these, we also find waste, sb., wasten, verb, borrowed from Latin, as shewn above. But in G. the native form prevailed, as shewn by mod. G. wüst, waste, wüste, a waste, wüsten, to waste.

D. We thus not only find Lat. uastus, but also the purely Teutonic words following, viz. A. S. wæste (Grein, ii. 668), O. Sax. wōsti, O. H. G. wuosti, waste; A. S. wæsten, O. Sax. wōstun, O. H. G. wuosti, a desert; A. S. wæstan, O. H. G. wuostan, to waste. All are from an Aryan type WASTA, waste, Fick, i. 781; of which the root is unknown. Der. waste, sb., M. E. waste, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2098; waste, verb, M. E. wasten, Layamon, 22575, from O. F. waster = O. H. G. wastlen, from Lat. uastare; wast-er, M. E. wastour, P. Plowman, B. prol. 22, vi. 29, where the suffix -our is French. Also waste-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 16; waste-ful-ly, -ness; waste-ness, Zeph. i. 15. (A.V.) Doublet, wast.

WATCH, a keeping guard, observation. (E.) M. E. wacche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 17. — A. S. wæcce, a watch, Grein, ii. 641. — A. S. wacian, to watch; Matt. xxvi. 40. — A. S. wacan, to wake; see Wake. Der. watch, verb, M. E. wacchen, Gower, C. A. i. 163, l. 6; watch-er; watch-ful, Two Gent. i. 1. 31, watch-ful-ly, -ness; watch-case, a sentry-box, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 17; watch-dog, Temp. i. 2. 383; watch-man (Palsgrave); watch-word, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 231.

WATER, the fluid in seas and rivers. (E.) M. E. water, Chaucer, C. T. 402. — A. S. wæter, Grein, ii. 651. + Du. water. + G. wasser, O. H. G. wazar, wazzar. β. From the Teut. type WATRA, water, Fick, iii. 284. There is also a Teut. type WATAN, water, appearing in Icel. vatn, Dan. vand, Swed. vatten, Goth. wato (pl. watna), water. Allied words are Russ. voda, Gk. ὕδωρ, Lat. unda, Lithuan. wandū, Skt. udan, water. All from the ✓WAD, to wet, perhaps orig. to well up; see Wet. Der. water, verb, A. S. wætrian, Gen. ii. 6, 10; water-ish, K. Lear, i. 1. 261; water-y, A. S. waterig, Wright's Voc. i. 37, col. 2, l. 2. Also water-carriage, -clock, -closet; -colour, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 80; -course; -cress, M. E. water-kyrs, Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2; -fowl; -gall, a rainbow, Shak. Lucrece, 1588; -level; -lilly, M. E. water-lille, Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2; -line, -logged, -man, -mark, -mill (Palsgrave), -pipe; -pot, Chaucer, C. T. 8166; -power, -proof, -shed (modern), -spout, -tight, -wheel, -work; &c., &c.

WATTLE, a twig, flexible rod, usually a hurdle; the fleshy part under the throat of a cock or turkey. (E.) In all senses, it is the same word. The orig. sense is something twined or woven together; hence it came to mean a hurdle, woven with twigs, or a bag of woven stuff; hence the baggy flesh on a bird's neck. It also appears in the corrupt form wallet; see Wallet. M. E. watel, a bag, P. Plowman, C. xi. 269; see further under Wallet. Hence M. E. watelen, verb, to wattle, twist together or strengthen with hurdles, P. Plowman, B. xix. 323. — A. S. watel, a hurdle, covering; also watul. 'Teges, watul;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 52, l. 13. Watelas, pl., coverings of a roof, tiles, Luke, v. 19; also in the sense of twigs or hurdles, Ælfric, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 16. Lit. 'a thing woven or wound together'; moreover, it is a dimin. form, with suffix -el, from a base WAT, to bind, a variant of Teut. base WAD, to bind, both being from ✓WA, to bind; see Withy, Weed (2), Weave. Der. wattle, verb, M. E. watelen, as above. Doublet, wallet.

WAVE (1), to fluctuate, to move or be moved about with an undulating motion or up and down. (E.) M. E. wauen, Lidgate, Minor Poems, p. 256 (Stratmann). The pres. part. is spelt vafand, vaffand, Barbour, Bruce, xi. 245, xi. 193, 513; the scribe constantly writes v for w. — A. S. wafian, only in the sense to wonder at a thing, to waver in mind; I cannot trace it in the lit. sense. Cf. 'Spectaculum, wafō, vel wæfer-syn, vel wafung;' Wright's Voc. i. 55. Grein writes wafian (ii. 636), which would have given a mod. E. wowe; the accent is unnecessary. The sense comes out in the derived adj. wafre, wavering, restless, Grein, ii. 642; see Waver. + O. Icel. vafa, cited by E. Müller and Stratmann, but they do not tell us where to find it; however, the Dict. gives the derivatives vafra, vafsa, to waver, vafsl, hesitation (which presuppose an orig. verb vafa); also váfá, váfá, vafa, to swing, vibrate. E. Müller cites M. H. G. waben, to wave; and Fick, iii. 289, cites M. H. G. waberen, wabelen, webelen, to fluctuate; cf. G. weben, to move, wave, fluctuate.

β. Fick suggests a connection with weave; if so, the sense of 'wave' is only secondary, and due to the motion of the hand; the primary sense of the Teut. base WAB being that of movement to and fro, as in G. weben, to fluctuate. The form of the root is, however, the same as that of weave, q.v. Der. wave, sb., a late word, occurring in the Bible of 1551, James, i. 6; it is due to the verb, and took the place of M. E. wawe, a wave, Wyclif, James, i. 6, which is not the same word, but allied to E. Wag, q.v. (cf. Icel. vágr, Dan. vog, G. woge, a wave). Also wave-less; wave-let, a coined word, with double dimin. suffix; wave-offering, Exod. xxix. 24; wave-worm, Temp. ii. 1. 120; wav-y. Also wav-er, q.v.; and perhaps waft, weev-il. ¶ Distinct from waive, waif.

WAIVE (2), the same as Waive, q.v.

WAVER, to vacillate. (E.) M. E. waueren (= waveren), Prompt. Parv. p. 518. Barbour has wauwand, wandering about; Bruce, vii. 112, xiii. 517, cf. vii. 41. 'Wauwand wynd' = a changeable wind, Wallace, iv. 340. — A. S. wæfre, adj., wandering, restless, Grein, ii.

642. + Icel. vafra, to hover about; Norw. vavra, to flap about. ^β It is the frequentative form of Wave, q.v. Der. waver-er.

WAX (1), to grow, increase, become. (E.) M.E. waxen, wexen, a strong verb, pt. t. wox, wex, pp. woxen, waxen, wexen; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 30; Luke, ii. 40, xiii. 5, 23; Matt. xiii. 32. — A.S. weaxan, pt. t. weax, pp. geweaxen, Grein, ii. 676. + Du. wassen, pt. t. wies, pp. gewassen. + Icel. vaxa, pt. t. óx, pp. vaxinn. + Dan. væxe. + Swed. våxa. + G. wachsen, pt. t. wuchs, pp. gewachsen. + Goth. wahsjan, pt. t. wohs, pp. wahsans. ^β All from Teut. base WAHS, to grow (Fick, iii. 281); answering to an Aryan type WAKS appearing in Gk. αἰσάειν, to wax, Skt. vaksh, to wax, grow. This Aryan base is extended from [✓]WAG, to be strong, be lively and vigorous; cf. Skt. vaj, to strengthen, Lat. augere, to increase, uigere, to flourish, &c. When extended by the addition of s, the form wags became waks, since wags (with voiceless s) is not pronounceable. See Eke(1), Vigour, Vegetable, Augment, Auction. Der. waist, q.v.

WAX (2), a substance made by bees; or other substances resembling it. (E.) M.E. wax, Chaucer, C. T. 677. — A.S. weax, Grein, ii. 676. + Du. was. + Icel. and Swed. vax. + Dan. vox. + G. wachs. + Russ. vosk. + Lithuan. waszkas. Root unknown. Possibly related to Lat. viscum, mistletoe, birdlime; see Viscid; but this is very uncertain. Der. wax, verb; wax-cloth, wax-work; wax-en, Rich. II, i. 3. 75; wax-y.

WAY, a road, path, distance, direction, means, manner, will. (E.) M.E. wey, way, Chaucer, C. T. 34. — A.S. weg, Grein, ii. 655. + Du. weg. + Icel. vegr. + Dan. vei. + Swed. väg. + G. weg. + O. H. G. wec. + Goth. wigs. ^β All from Teut. type WEGA, a way; Fick, iii. 282. Further allied to Lithuan. weža, the track of a cart, from weszi, to drive, or draw, a waggon; Lat. via, a way; Skt. vaha, a road, way, from vah, to carry. All from [✓]WAGH, to carry; see Wain, Viaduct, Vehicle. Der. al-way, al-ways, q.v.; length-ways, side-ways, &c.; also way-faring, i. e. faring on the way, A.S. weg-férend, Matt. xxvii. 39, where férend is the pres. part. of féran, to fare, travel, Grein, i. 285, a derivative of the more primitive verb faran, to go (see Fare); way-far-er; way-lay, Tw. Night, iii. 4. 176; way-mark, Jer. xxi. 21 (A.V.); way-worn. Also way-ward, q.v.

WAYWARD, perverse. (E.) M.E. weaward; 'if thin iþe be weaward [Lat. nequam], al thi bodi shal be derk,' Wyclif, Matt. vi. 23; used as an adj., but orig. a headless form of aweaward, adv., Owl and Nightingale, 376 (Stratmann), Layamon, 8878, 21464; cf. aweeward, in a direction away from, Layamon, 22352, Will. of Palerne, 2188. Thus wayward is away-ward, i. e. turned away, perverse. ¶ This is the simple solution of a word that has given much trouble. It is a parallel formation to fro-ward, q.v. It is now often made to mean bent on one's way. Cf. 'ouerthwartlie waiwarded' = perversely turned away, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 274. Der. wayward-ness, M.E. weawardnesse, Wyclif, Rom. i. 29. [†]

WE, pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. (E.) M.E. we, Chaucer, C. T. 29. — A.S. wē, Grein, ii. 652; but Grein omits the accent; of course it had a long vowel. + Du. wij; + Icel. vér, vær. + Dan. and Swed. vi. + G. wir. + Goth. weis. Origin unknown.

WEAK, yielding, soft, feeble. (Scand.) The Scand. form has replaced the A.S. wāc, which became M.E. wook, spelt wooe in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1874; and would have given a mod. E. woak, like oak from A.S. oac. We also find M.E. weik, waik, whence the pl. weike, for which Tyrwhitt prints weke, Chaucer, C. T. 889; but see Six-text ed., A. 887; the pl. is spelt wayke, Havelok, l. 1012. — Icel. veikr, veykr, weak; rarely vákr; Swed. vek; Dan. veg, pliant. + A.S. wāc, pliant, weak, easily bent; Grein, ii. 635. + Du. week, tender, weak. + G. weich, pliant, soft. ^β All from Teut. type WAIKA, weak; Fick, iii. 303. — Teut. base WIK, to give way or yield; appearing in Icel. vikja, pt. t. veik (whence adj. veikr), pp. vikinn, to turn, turn aside, veer; A.S. wican, pt. t. wāc (whence adj. wāc), pp. wicen, to give way, Grein, ii. 689; G. weichen, pt. t. wich, pp. gewichen, to give way. ^γ All from Aryan base WIG, to give way, a by-form of [✓]WIK, of which the orig. meaning seems to have been 'to separate'; hence Gk. εἰκν (for Feikn), to yield, give way, Skt. viich, to separate, to deprive; and prob. Lat. uitare (for uiciare *), to shun, avoid. See Curtius, i. 166. Prob. the bases WIK and WIG are extensions from [✓]WI, to bend, twine, weave; see Withy.

Der. weak-ly, weak-ness. Also weak-en, in which the suffix is added as in length-en, &c.; cf. M.E. weken, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144, A.S. wécan, wácan, Grein, ii. 641, 636, Icel. veikja-sk, to grow ill. Also weak-ly, adj., used by Raleigh (Todd's Johnson, no reference); weak-l-ing, 3 Hen. VI, v. 1. 37, with double dimin. suffix, as in gos-l-ing. And see vik-ing, wick, wick-er.

WEAL, prosperity, welfare. (E.) M.E. wēle, Chaucer, C. T. 3103, 4595. — A.S. wēla, wēala, wēola, weak, opulence, prosperity; Grein, ii. 656. + Dan. wel, weak, welfare. + Swed. väl. + O.H.G. wēla, wōla, wōlo, G. wohl, welfare. ^β The orig. sense is a 'well-being,' welfare, and (like the words well-being, wel-fare, wel-come, fare-well) it is a derivative from A.S. wel, well, adv., the notion of condition being expressed by the nominal suffix -a. So also Dan. wel, from wel, adv.; Swed. väl, from väl, adv.; G. wohl, from wohl, adv. See Well (1). And see Wealth.

WEALD, a wooded region, an open country. (E.) The peculiar spelling of this word is not improbably due to Verstegan, who was anxious to spell it so as to connect it at once with the A. S. form, forgetting that the diphthong ea was scarcely ever employed in the 13th and 14th centuries. Minshew, in his Dict., ed. 1627, has: 'Weald of Kent, is the woodie part of the countrey. Verstegan saith that wald, weald, and wold signifie a wood or forrest, a Teut. Wald, i. sylva, a wood.' This fashion, once set, has prevailed ever since. ^β It is also quite certain that two words have been confused, viz. wald and wild. Wald (now also wold) was sometimes spelt wæld, as in Layamon, 21339; hence it passed into weld or weeld. Causton, in the preface to his Recuyell of the Histories of Troye, tells us that he was born in Kent, 'in the weeld.' In the reprint of this book by Copland, this phrase appears as 'in the wilde.' Lyly, in his Euphues and his England, says: 'I was borne in the wylde of Kent;' ed. Arber, p. 268. Shak. has 'wilde of Kent,' 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 60, ed. 1623. ^γ For the further explanation of M.E. wald, see Wold. For the further explanation of wild, see Wild. Both words are English. Der. weald-en, adj., belonging to the wealds of the S. of England; a term in geology. For the suffix -en, cf. gold-en.

WEALTH, prosperity, riches. (E.) M.E. welthe (dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. i. 55. Spelt welþe, Genesis and Exodus, l. 796. Not in A.S. An extended form of wæal (M.E. wæle), by help of the suffix -th, denoting condition or state; cf. heal-th from heal, dear-th from dear, &c. See Weal. + Du. weelde, luxury; from wel, adv., well. Der. wealth-y, spelt welthy in Fabyan, Chron. c. 56; wealth-i-ness, spelt welthines in Fabyan, in the same passage.

WEAN, to accustom a child to bread, &c., to reconcile to a new custom. (E.) The proper sense is to 'accustom to,' we also use it, less properly, in the sense of 'disaccustom to.' These opposite senses are easily reconciled; the child who is being accustomed to bread, &c. is at the same time disaccustomed to, or weaned from, the breast. Cf. G. entwöhnen, lit. to disaccustom, also to wean; where ent- is equivalent to E. un- as a verbal prefix; so that ent-wöhnen = un-wean. M.E. wēnen. 'Wene chylde fro sokynghe [sucking], Abtactio, elacto,' Prompt. Parv. — A.S. wēnian, to accustom, Grein, ii. 660. Hence āwenian, answering to G. entwöhnen; 'ær þonne þæt accenned bearn fram meolcum āwened si' = before the child that is born be weaned from milk; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, l. i. c. 27, ed. Wheloc, p. 88. + Du. wennen, to accustom, inure; afwenen, to wean. + Icel. venja, to accustom. + Dan. vænne, to accustom; vænne fra Brystet, to wean. + Swed. vänja, to accustom; vänja af, to wean. + G. gewöhnen, to accustom, O. H. G. wēnian, wennan, M. H. G. wēnen; whence ent-wöhnen, to wean. ^β All from a Teut. weak verb WANYAN, to make accustomed, accustom; from the sb. WANA, custom, use, wont, appearing in Icel. vani, O. H. G. gi-wona, custom. And this sb. is again due to an adj. WANA, wont, accustomed, used to, appearing in O. H. G. gi-won, accustomed. See further under Wont.

WEAPON, an instrument for offence or defence. (E.) M.E. wēpen, Chaucer, C. T. 1591. — A.S. wāþen, a weapon, shield, or sword; Grein, ii. 648. + Du. wāpen. + Icel. vápn. + Dan. vaaben. + Swed. våpen. + G. waaffe, O. H. G. wāfan (also wappen, borrowed from Dutch or Low G.) + Goth. wepna, neut. pl. John, xviii. 3. ^β All from the Teut. type WĀPNA, a weapon; Fick, iii. 288. [Not allied to Gk. ὄπλον, an implement, weapon, which stands for ὀπλον; see Curtius, ii. 58.] Fick does not assign the root. But Benfey gives Skt. vap (properly causal of vt), to sow, to procreate, which he connects with E. weapon. He is certainly right. This appears from A.S. wāþ-man, a man of full growth, a husband. 'Vir, wer, oððe [or] wāþ-man;' Wright's Voc. i. 73, col. 1. 'Veretrum, wēpen, gecynd;' id. i. 44. Hence wāþned-man, a male; Grein, ii. 648; and see Grein's remarks on wāþen, and Skt. vāpāna in Benfey. A weapon is so named from the warrior or grown man who wields it. The root is [✓]WAP, Skt. vap. Der. weapon-ed, Oth. v. 2. 266; weapon-less.

WEAR (1), to carry on the body, as clothes; to consume by use, rub away. (E.) The pt. t. wore, now in use, is due to analogy with bore, pt. t. of bear; the word is not really a strong one, the M.E. pt. t. being wured. We also find pt. t. ware, Luke, viii. 27. (A.V.) M.E. weren, pt. t. wured, Chaucer, C. T. 75. — A.S. werian (pt. t. werode), Exod. xxix. 29. (Quite distinct from A.S. werian, to defend; Grein.) + Icel. verja, to wear (quite distinct from verja, to defend). + O. H. G. werian. + Goth. wasjan, to clothe; pp. wasids, Matt. xi. 8. ^β From the Teut. base WAS, to clothe; the r standing for s, as shown by the Gothic form; Fick, iii. 300. — [✓]WAS, to clothe; Fick, i. 779. See Vest. Der. wear, sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 34; wear-able; wear-er, Antony, ii. 2. 7. ¶ All the senses of wear can be deduced from the carrying of clothes on the body; it hence means to bear, to carry; also to consume or use up by wear, destroy, tire, efface; also, to become old by wearing, to be wasted, pass away (as time); to wear well = to bear wear and tear, hence to last out, endure. There is no connection with the sense of A.S. werian, to defend, from ✓ WAR.

WEAR (2), the same as Weir, q.v.

WEAR (3), in phr. 'to wear a ship'; the same as Veer, q.v.

WEARY, exhausted, tired, causing exhaustion. (E.) M.E. weri, wery, Chaucer, C. T. 4232. (The e is long, as in mod. E.) = A.S. wérig, tired; Grein, ii. 663. + O. Sax. wórig, weary; in the comp. stð-wórig, fatigued with a journey; Heland, 660, 670, 678, 698, 2238. + O. H. G. wórag, weary; cited by E. Müller. β. The long e is (as usual) due to a mutation of long o, as shewn by the cognate O. Saxon form. It is, consequently, connected with A.S. wórian, to wander, travel, Gen. iv. 14; Numb. xiv. 33; Grein, ii. 736. γ. This verb is a weak one, formed from the sb. wór, which probably meant a moor or swampy place; so that wórian was orig. 'to tramp over wet ground,' the most likely thing to cause weariness. Hence A.S. wór-hana, explained by 'fasianus,' i.e. phasianus, in Wright's Gloss. ii. 34, col. 2; it prob. meant a moor-cock (from hana, a cock). We actually find the expression 'wery so water in wore,' of which perhaps the sense is tired as water in a pool, like the modern 'as dull as ditch-water;' see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 44, l. 37. δ. And, considering the frequent interchange of s and r, I have little doubt that A.S. wór is identical with A.S. wós (also wis, Wright's Voc. ii. 18, col. 2), ooze, mire, so that wérig is equivalent to *wós-ig, lit. bedaubed with mire, 'dragged with wet;' and weary is, in fact, a doublet of oozy. This appears more clearly from Icel. vás (the same word as E. ooze), explained to mean 'wetness, toil, fatigue, from storm, sea, frost, weather, or the like,' whence the compounds vásbið, vásbið, toil, fatigue, vásferð, vásför, a wet journey, &c. This at once explains O. Saxon stð-wórig, lit. wet with journeying in bad weather, weary of the way. To this day E. weary is mostly applied to travel; the lit. sense is 'exhausted with wet,' because wet and rain are the most wearying conditions to the traveller. Cf. also Icel. vása, to bustle, derived from vás, toil, which again exhibits the right vowel-change. α. By way of further illustration, we may note Icel. vestr, worn out by wet or toil, vasask, to bustle, vasla, to wade in water. The last word occurs in M.E. 'This whit wasled in the fen almost to the ankle' = this white waded in the mire, almost up to his ankle; P. Plowman's Crede, 430. See further under Ooze. ζ. Lastly, the identity of wór with wós is verified by the use of woos in the sense of sea-weed (Webster), which is plainly the same word as the Kentish waure, sea-weed (Halliwell). Der. weari-ly, -ness; weary, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 19; weari-some, Two Gent. ii. 7. 8; weari-some-ly, -ness.

WEASAND, WESAND, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt wesand in Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 14; he also has weasand-pipe, id. iv. 3. 12. M.E. wesand; spelt wesande, Wright's Voc. i. 207, col. 2, l. 7; waysande, id. 185, col. 2, last line. = A.S. wásend, Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2; 64, col. 2; used to translate Lat. rumen, the gullet. The mod. E. weasand answers rather to a by-form wásend; whilst the A.S. wásend answers to prov. E. wosen, the wind-pipe (Halliwell). + O. Fries. wasende, wasande. Cf. prov. G. wasling, wasel, wásel, the gullet of animals that chew the cud, cited by Leo, A.S. Glossar, col. 494, l. 40; M. H. G. weisant, O. H. G. weisunt, weasand, cited by E. Müller. β. The form is evidently that of a pres. part. Perhaps an initial h has been lost, so that weasand is lit. 'the wheezing thing,' the wind-pipe. This suggestion is due to Wedgwood, and is adopted by A. S. Cook, in American Journal of Philology, vol. i. no. 1, Feb. 1880; and is well supported. See further under Wheeze.

WEASEL, a small slender-bodied animal. (E.) M.E. wesele, wesel, Chaucer, C. T. 3234. = A.S. wesle, Wright's Voc. i. 78, col. 1. + Du. wesel. + Icel. visla (given in the comp. hreyssivisla). + Dan. vasel. + Swed. vestla. + G. wiesel; O. H. G. wisala, wisela. β. The Teut. type is, I suppose, WISALA; evidently a dimin. form. Root unknown; but, as the characteristic of the animal is its slenderness, I would propose to translate it by 'the little thin creature,' and to connect it with Wizen, q.v. Perhaps it is worth while to compare Icel. vesall, poor, destitute, veslask, to grow poor, to pine away, veslingr, a poor, puny person.

WEATHER, the condition of the air, &c. as to sunshine or rain. (E.) M.E. weder, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326; Chaucer, C. T. 10366, where Tyrwhitt prints wether, but the MSS. mostly have weder, as in all the six MSS. in the Six-text edition, Group B, l. 52. The mod. E. th for M.E. d occurs again in M.E. fader, moder, and is prob. due to Scand. influence; cf. Icel. veðr, and see Wether. = A.S. weder, Grein, ii. 654. + Du. weder. + Icel. veðr. + Dan. veir (a contracted form). + Swed. väder, wind, air, weather. + G. wetter; O. H. G. wetar; cf. G. gewitter, a storm. β. All from the Teut. base WEDRA, weather, storm, wind, Fick, iii. 307; allied words appear in G. gewitter, as above, and in Icel. land-viðri, a land-wind, heið-viðri, bright weather. Further allied to Lithuan. wētra, a storm, stormy weather; Russ. vieter', viētr', wind, breeze. γ. To be divided, probably, as WE-DRA, where the suffix (as in fa-ther, mo-ther) answers to Aryan -tar, denoting the agent; and the base is WI, to blow, which occurs in a strengthened form in Gothic waian, to blow, Skt. vā, to blow; from ✓ WA, to blow, whence also E. wind; see Wind (1).

δ. Thus weather and wind mean much the same, viz. 'that which blows,' and they are constantly associated in the E. phrase 'wind and weather.' 'Wind ligeð, weder bið fæger,' Phoenix, ed. Grein, l. 182. A weather-cock means a wind-cock. Der. weather, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 42; weather-board, cf. Icel. veðrborð, the windward side; weather-bound; weather-cock, M. E. wedercoec, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 180, l. 27, so called because formerly often in the shape of a cock, as some are still made (cf. Du. weerhaan = wederhaan, from haan, a cock); weather-fend, i.e. to defend from the weather, Temp. v. 10, where fend is a clipped form of defend (see Fence); weather-gage, weather-side; weather-wise, M. E. weder-wis, P. Plowman, B. xv. 350. And see weather-beaten, withier.

WEATHER-BEATEN, WEATHER-BITTEN, harassed by the weather. (E. or Scand.) Weather-beaten, lit. beaten by the weather, or beaten upon by the weather, makes such good sense that I do not know that we can disallow it as being a genuine phrase; it occurs in 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 67, in Spenser (Todd's Johnson, no reference), and in Nich. Breton, ed. Grosart (see the Index). At the same time there can be little doubt that, at least in some cases, the right word is weather-bitten, i.e. bitten by the weather, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, v. 2. 60. The latter is a true Scand. idiom. We find Swed. väderbiten, lit. weather-bitten, but explained in Widegren as 'weather-beaten,' so also Norweg. vederbitten, which Aasen explains by Dan. veirbidt, also as 'tanned in the face by exposure to the weather,' said of a man; he also gives the expressive Norw. vederslitten, weather-worn (lit. weather-slit).

β. In connexion with this word, we may note that when a ship is said 'to beat up against the wind,' the word beat really represents Icel. beita, to tack (said of a ship), of which the lit. sense is 'to bait;' and, as shewn under Bait, this is a derivative of Bite. Even Icel. bita, to bite, also means to sail, cruise, said of a ship. Hence, from a nautical point of view, there is a strong suspicion that beat (in such a case) is an error for bait, and that weather-beaten should be weather-bitten.

WEAVE, to twine threads together, work into a fabric. (E.) M.E. wæuen (for weven), pt. t. waf, Gower, C. A. ii. 320, l. 24, pp. wouen (= woven), spelt wouun, Wyclif, John, xix. 23. = A.S. wefan, pt. t. wæf, pp. wefen; Grein, ii. 654. + Du. wæuen. + Icel. vefa, pt. t. vaf, pp. ofinn. + Dan. væve. + Swed. vefva. + G. weben, to weave, pt. t. wob, pp. gewoben; also as a weak verb. β. All from Teut. base WAB, to weave, Fick, iii. 289, answering to Aryan ✓ WABH, to weave (Fick, i. 769), which further appears in Gk. ὑφ-ῆ, ὑφ-ος (for ὑφ-ῆ, ὑφ-ος), a web, ὑφ-αί-ειν, to weave, and Skt. úrna-vābhis, a spider (lit. a wool-weaver), cited by Curtius, i. 369. γ. Further, it is tolerably certain (Curtius, i. 76) that WABH is an extension from ✓ WA, to weave, appearing in Skt. vā, to weave, Böthlingk and Roth's Skt. Dict. vi. 878, and in Lithuan. wo-ras, a spider (lit. a spinner); cf. also Skt. ve, to weave, vap, to weave (Benfey). And see Withy, Hymn.

δ. The connection with wave, waver, suggested by Fick, is somewhat doubtful; see Wave. Der. weav-er, weav-ing; also web, q.v., wef-t, q.v., woof, q.v., waf-er, q.v.

WEB, that which is woven; a film over the eye, the skin between the toes of water-birds. (E.) M.E. web, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6; also webbe, P. Plowman, B. v. 111. = A.S. webb, gen. written web, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 1, l. 26, col. 2, l. 3; 66, l. 9. + Du. web, webbe. + Icel. vefr (gen. veffar). + Dan. væv. + Swed. väf. + G. go-webe, O. H. G. weppi, wappi.

β. All from the Teut. type WAB-YA, a web; from ✓ WABH, to weave; see Weave. Der. webb-ing, webb-ed, web-foot-ed. Also M.E. webbe, Chaucer, C. T. 364; A.S. webba, a weaver, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2, where the suffix -a denotes the agent (obsolete, except in the name Webb); M.E. webster, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6, A.S. webbestre, a female weaver, used to translate Lat. textrix, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2 (obsolete, except in the name Webster); for the suffix -ster, see Spinster.

WED, to engage by a pledge, to marry. (E.) M.E. wedden, Chaucer, C. T. 870. = A.S. weddian, lit. to pledge, engage, Luke, xxii. 5. = A.S. wed, sb., a pledge, Grein, ii. 653. + Du. wedden, to lay a wager; from O. Du. wedde, 'a pledge, a pawne,' Hexham. + Icel. veðja, to wager; from veð, a pledge. + Dan. vedde, to wager. + Swed. vädja, to appeal; from vad, a bet, an appeal. + G. wetten, to wager, from wette, a wager. + Goth. ga-wadjaon, to pledge, betroth; from wadi, a pledge. β. All from the Teut. base WAD-YA, sb., a pledge; Fick, iii. 285. Further allied to Lithuan. wadōti, to redeem a pledge; Lat. uas (gen. uad-is), a pledge; Gk. ἀ-εθ-λον (for ἀ-εθ-λον), the prize of a contest, gen. contr. to ἀθλον. = ✓ WADH, to carry home (hence to bear off a prize or pledge), to marry, Fick, i. 767; cf. Lithuan. wēsti, pres. tense wedū, to marry, take home a bride, wadas, a conductor, guide, leader by the hand, Russ. vesti, to lead, conduct, Zend vádhayēiti, he leads home, vadhrya, marriageable (cited by Fick, i. 767), Skt. vadhū, a bride. Der. wedd-ed; wedd-ing, A. S. wedding, Gospel of Nicodemus, c. 7; also wed-lock, q.v. Also see wage, wager, gage (1), en-gage.

WEDGE, a piece of metal or wood, thick at one end and sloping to a thin edge at the other. (E.) Also used to denote simply a mass of metal, as in Rich. III. i. 4. 26. M. E. wegge, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 14, l. 3. — A. S. wegc, a mass of metal; Sweet, A. S. Reader. 'Cuneus, wegc'; Wright's Voc. ii. 15, col. 2. + Du. wig, wigge, a wedge. + Icel. veggr. + Dan. vægge. + Swed. vigg. + O. H. G. wekki, weggi, M. H. G. wecke, a wedge; G. wecke, a kind of loaf, from its shape (cf. prov. E. wig, a kind of cake). β. All from Teut. type WAG-YA, a wedge, Fick, iii. 283; from Teut. base WAG, to move, wag, shake, &c.; see Wag. Thus the sense seems to be 'a mover', from its effect in splitting trees. Cf. Lithuan. wagis, a bent wooden peg for hanging things upon, also a spigot for a cask, also a wedge. Der. wedge, verb.

WEDLOCK, marriage. (E.) M. E. wedlok (with long o), written wedloke, P. Plowman, B. ix. 113, 119; where some MSS. have wedlok. — A. S. wedlác, in the sense of pledge; 'Arrabo, wedlác', Wright's Voc. i. 50, col. 1. — A. S. wed, a pledge; and lác, a sport, also a gift, in token of pleasure. Thus the sense is 'a gift given as a pledge, and in token of pleasure'; hence, the gift given to a bride. It was usual to make a present to the bride on the morning after marriage; cf. G. morgengabe, a nuptial (lit. morning) gift. See Wed and Lark (2). And see Knowledge, which has a like suffix. [†]

WEDNESDAY, the fourth day of the week. (E.) M. E. wednesday, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 154, where one MS. has wodnesday. — A. S. Wōdnes dæg, rubric to Matt. v. 25. The change from ō to e is the usual vowel-change, when the vowel i follows; this vowel appears in the Icel. form. Wōdnes dæg means 'day of Wōden,' after whom it was named; see Day. Cognate words are Du. woensdag, Icel. óðinsdagr, Swed. and Dan. onsdag (short for odensdag). The G. name is simply mitwoch (mid-week).

β. The A. S. Wōden is cognate with Icel. Óðinn, O. H. G. Wōdan, Wuotan. The name signifies 'the furious,' i.e. the mighty warrior; from A. S. wōd, raging, mad (cognate with Icel. óðr, Goth. wōds), whence M. E. wood, mad, a word which occurs late, as in Shakespeare, Mids. Nt. ii. 1. 192; see Wood (2).

¶ It is remarkable that the Romans, whilst looking upon Wōden as the chief divinity of the Teutonic races, nevertheless identified him with Mercury; hence dies Mercurii was translated into A. S. by Wōdnesdæg. Cf. 'kölloŭ þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnabas þór' = they called Paul Óðinn, but Barnabas Thor; Icel. Bible, Acts, xiv. 12.

WEE, small, tiny. (Scand.?) 'A little wee face;' Merry Wives, i. 4. 22. M. E. we, only as a sb., a bit. 'A little we,' a little bit, for a short space; Barbour, Bruce, vii. 182, xiii. 217. 'And behynd hir a littill we It fell' = and it fell a little way behind her; id. xvii. 677. In all three passages it occurs in the same phrase, viz. 'a little we;' and in the last case we should now say 'a little way.' And as it is a sb., I believe (as Junius did) that it is nothing but the Scand. form of E. way, derived from Dan. vei, Swed. väg, Icel. veggr, a way. The loss of the guttural is seen in Danish. See Way.

¶ The constant association of little with we (= way) should lead to the supposition that the words little and we are synonymous, seems natural enough; and we have the evidence of Barbour that the word is Northern. The above solution seems to me greatly preferable to the usual supposed connection with G. wenig, little, which utterly fails to explain the three passages in Barbour, and further assumes an unaccountable loss of the letter n. And further, the above solution is strongly corroborated by the fact that way-bit is still in use, in the North, in the sense of wee bit or little bit; see Halliwell. [†]

WEED (1), any useless and troublesome plant. (E.) M. E. weed, Prompt. Parv. p. 519. — A. S. wéod, widd; Grein, ii. 676. + O. Sax. wiod. Allied to Low G. woden, pl. sb., the green stalks and leaves of turnips, &c.; Brem. Wörterbuch. Root unknown. Der. weed, verb. M. E. weeden, Palladius on Husbandry, ii. 289; cf. Du. wieden, Low G. weden (for wōden), to weed. Der. weed-y, Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

WEED (2), a garment. (E.) Chiefly in the phr. 'a widow's weeds,' i.e. a widow's mourning apparel. Common in Shak. as a sing. sb., in the sense of garment, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 256, &c. M. E. wede (dissyllabic), Havelok, l. 94. — A. S. wáde, neut., also wéad, fem., a garment; Grein, ii. 642. + O. Friesic wede, wed. + O. Sax. wádi; O. Du. wade, 'a garment, a habit, or a vesture,' Hexham. + Icel. váb, a piece of stuff, cloth; also, a garment. + O. H. G. wát, wót, clothing, armour. β. All from the Teut. type WÁDI, a garment, lit. something which is wound or wrapped round, exactly as in 'weed wide enough to wrap a fair in.' Shak. (as above). From Teut. base WAD, to bind, wind round; cf. Goth. ga-widan, pt. t. gawath, Mark, x. 9, O. H. G. wetan, to bind, yoke together; Fick, iii. 284. This Teut. base answers to Aryan WADH, appearing in Zend vadh, to clothe, cited by Fick;

cf. Lithuan. audmi, I weave.

γ. Again, the Aryan WADH, to wind round, clothe, is an extension from √WA, to bind, weave; just as WABH, to weave, is from the same root; Fick, i. 209, 203. See Weave, Withy, Wind (2), Wad, Wattle.

WEEK, a period of seven days. (E.) The vowel, in M. E., is very variable; we find weke, wike, on the one hand, and wouke, woke, wike on the other. In Chaucer, Six-text, Group A, 1539, we have weke, wike, as well as wouke; Tyrwhitt, C. T. 1541, prints weke. 1. The forms weke, wike (together with mod. E. week) answer to A. S. uice or wicu, of which the gen. wican occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 438, l. 23 (Eccl. Institutes, § 41). 2. The forms wouke, woke, wike, answer to A. S. wuce, wucu, Grein, ii. 744. We find the same change in A. S. widu, later form wudu, wood. + Du. week. + Icel. vika. + Swed. vecka. + O. H. G. wescha, wehka; but the M. H. G. form is wocke, which is also the mod. G. form. Cf. Dan. uge (= vuge), a week.

β. The prevalent Teut. type is WIKÁ, Fick, iii. 303. The Goth. wikó occurs only once, in Luke, i. 8, where the Gk. ἐν τῇ ῥάβδῳ τῆς ἐφημερίας αὐτοῦ (Lat. in ordine uicis suæ) appears in Gothic as in wikón kunjis seinis = in the order of his course. It is by no means clear what is the precise force of this Goth. wikó (which exactly answers in form to E. week), and some have supposed that, after all, it was merely borrowed from Lat. uicis, which is, however, equivalent in this passage to kunjis, not to wikó. γ. It seems best to consider week as a true Teut. word; perhaps it meant 'succession' or 'change,' and is related to Icel. vikja, to turn, return; see Weak. Der. week-day, Icel. vikudagr; week-ly.

WEEN, to suppose, imagine, think. (E.) M. E. wenen, Chaucer, C. T. 1655. — A. S. wénan, to imagine, hope, expect; Grein, ii. 658. — A. S. wén, expectation, supposition, hope; id. + Du. wanen, to fancy; from waan, conjecture. + Icel. vána, to hope; from ván, expectation. + G. wähnen; from wahn. O. H. G. wán, sb. + Goth. wenjan, to expect, from wens, expectation.

β. From the sb. of which the Teut. type is WÁNI, expectation, hope; Fick, iii. 287. — Teut. base WAN, to strive after, try to get; id. 286. Hence A. S. wén meant orig. 'a striving after,' and hence an expectation of obtaining. See Win.

WEEP, to wail, lament, shed tears. (E.) M. E. wepen, orig. a strong verb, pt. t. weep, wep, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text ed., Group D, l. 588, where only one MS. has weppe (dissyllabic), for which Tyrwhitt erroneously prints wep, C. T. 6170. — A. S. wépan, pt. t. wéop; Grein, ii. 661. The lit. sense is to cry aloud, raise an outcry, lament loudly; wépan (for wópan) is regularly formed, by the usual vowel-change, from wóp, a clamour, outcry, lament, Grein, ii. 732. + O. Sax. wópan, to raise an outcry; from wóp, sb. + Goth. wopjan, to cry out. + O. H. G. wuofan, to lament, weep; from wuof, wuaf, an outcry. + Icel. æpa, to shout, cry; from óp, a shout.

β. All from the Teut. base WÓPA, an outcry, loud lament. — √WÁP, to cry aloud, as seen in Russ. wopite, to sob, lament, wail, a parallel form to √WÁK, as in Skt. vák, to cry, howl; allied to WAK, to cry out; see Voice.

¶ This A. S. wóp, &c. is quite distinct from E. whoop, in which the initial w is unoriginal, but the h essential. Der. weep-er, weep-ing.

WEET, to know; the same as Wit (1), q.v.

WEEVIL, a small kind of beetle very destructive to grain. (E.) M. E. weuel, wiuel (with u = v), spelt weyvl, wyvel in Prompt. Parv., pp. 523, 531. — A. S. wifel, to translate Lat. scarabius (sic), Wright's Gloss. i. 281, col. 2; spelt wibil in a very early gloss of the 8th century, where it translates Lat. cantarus, i.e. cantharis, a beetle; Wright's Voc. ii. 103, col. 1. We even find the orig. form wibba; 'Scarabeus, scarn-wibba', Wright's Voc. i. 77; where scarn means dung. + Icel. yfill, in comp. tordyfill, a dung-beetle. + O. Du. wevel, 'a little worme eating corne or beanes, or a wevill'; Hexham. + O. H. G. wibil, M. H. G. wibel; cited by Fick and E. Müller. β. The Teut. type is WEBILA, a beetle, Fick, iii. 289; a dimin. form of WEB-YA, i.e. A. S. wibba. From the Teut. base WAB, in the sense 'to move to and fro'; cf. G. waben, to move, wave, float. The A. S. wibba prob. meant 'wiggler'; see Wave.

γ. Further allied to Lithuan. wábalas, a chafer, winged insect; in this case, we may explain it as 'flutterer.'

WEFT, the threads woven into and crossing the warp. (E.) M. E. weft, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 3, earlier version, where the later version has warp. — A. S. west, westa; 'Deponile, west, vel westa;' Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2; and again 'Deponile, westa' in a gloss of the 8th century, id. ii. 106, col. 1. + Icel. vefrir; also vipta, vifta.

β. The Teut. type is WEF-TA, Fick, iii. 289, lit. 'a thing woven'; formed with participial suffix -ta from wef-an, to weave; see Weave.

WEIGH, to balance, ponder, to have weight, be heavy. (E.) M. E. weghen, weyzen, weyen, weien, Chaucer, C. T. 456. — A. S. wegan, to carry, bear; also, intrans., to move; Grein, ii. 655. From the sense of 'carry' we pass to that of 'raise' or 'lift,' as when we say 'to weigh anchor;' so also Cowper says: 'Weigh the vessel up,' Loss of the Royal George, st. 7. From the sense of raising or lifting, we pass to that of weighing. + Du. wegen, to weigh. + Icel. vega, to move, carry, lift, weigh. + Dan. veie, to weigh. + Swed. väga, to weigh; väga upp, to weigh up, to lift. + G. wegen, to move, wiegen, to move gently, rock; wägen, to weigh; O. H. G. wegan, to move, bear, weigh. Cf. Goth. gawigan, to shake about. β. The A. S. wegan is a strong verb; pt. t. wag, pp. wegen; so also is the Icel. vega; pt. t. vá, pp. veginna. All from the Teut. base WAG, to carry, move, weigh, answering to Aryan √WAGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, Lat. vehere; see Vehicle. Der. weigh-t, M. E. weight, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 292, also spelt wight, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1385. A. S. ge-wiht, Gen. xxiii. 16, cognate with O. Du. wicht, gewicht (Hexham), Du. gewigt, G. gewicht, Icel. vægt, Dan. vægt, Swed. vigt; whence weight-y, spelt wayghty in Palsgrave; weight-i-ly, -ness. Also wag, q.v.; wagg-on, wain, wain-scot, wey, wight, whit.

WEIR, WEAR, a dam in a river. (E.) M. E. wer; dat. were, Chaucer, Parliament of Foules, 138. — A. S. wer, a weir, dam, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 38, ed. Sweet, p. 278, l. 16; the pp. gewered, dammed up, occurs in the line above. The lit. sense is 'defence,' hence a fence, dam; closely allied to A. S. werian, to defend, protect, also (as above) to dam up, Grein, ii. 662; allied to A. S. wer, wary. — √WAR, to defend; see Wary. + Icel. vör, a fenced in landing-place, ver, a fishing-station. + G. wehr, a defence; cf. wehren, to defend, also to check, constrain, control; mühl-wehr, a mill-dam.

WEIRD, fate, destiny. (E.) As an adj. in Shak. Macb. i. 3. 32; i. 5. 8; ii. 1. 20; iii. 4. 133; iv. 1. 136, where it means 'subservient to destiny.' But it is properly a sb. M. E. wirde, wyrde, 'And out of wo into wele þoure wyrdes shul change' = and out of woe into weal your destinies shall change; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 209. — A. S. wyrd, also wird, wurd, fate, destiny, also one of the 'Norms' or Fates, an extremely common word in poetry, Grein, ii. 760. Formed, by vowel-change from u to y (or, in the form wurd, without vowel-change), from wurð, stem of the pt. t. pl. of weorðan, to be, become, take place, become, come to pass; see Worth (2). The lit. sense is 'that which happens,' or 'that which comes to pass;' hence fate, destiny. + Icel. urðr, fate, one of the three Norms or Fates; from urð, stem of pt. t. pl. of verða, to become. + M. H. G. wurth, fate, death; from wurð, stem of pt. t. of werden, to become.

WELCOME, received gladly, causing gladness by coming. (E.; or perhaps Scand.) Now used as an adj., and derived, in popular etymology, from the pp. come of the verb to come; but, as a fact, it was orig. a sb., and derived from the infin. mood of the verb, as will appear. Again, the former part of the verb was not at first the adv. well, but related rather to will; the lit. sense was 'will-comer,' i.e. one who comes so as to please another's will. It makes no great difference as regards the etymology, but it is best to be correct. Moreover, we can explain how the word came by its new meaning, viz. through Scand. influence; see below. M. E. wilkome, welcome, Ancren Riwe, p. 394, l. 17; later welcome, P. Plowman, ii. 232. — A. S. wilcuma, masc. sb., one who comes so as to please another, Grein, ii. 705. — A. S. wil-, prefix, allied to will, will, pleasure; and cuma, a comer, one who comes, formed with suffix -a of the agent, from cuman, to come; Grein, ii. 706; i. 169. See Will and Come. + G. wilkommen, welcome, a less correct form of O. H. G. willicomo, from wiljo, will, pleasure, and komen (G. kommen), to come. Der. welcome, vb., M. E. wilcumen, Layamon, 10957, from A. S. wilcuman, to welcome, make welcome, Matt. v. 47. ☞ The above account shews the true origin of the E. word; but the change in meaning was due to the Scand. word, which is really composed of the adv. well and the pp. come; cf. Icel. velkominn, welcome, from vel, well, and kominn, pp. of koma, to come. So also Dan. velkommen, welcome, Swed. välkommen. Perhaps it would be as well to take the Scand. word as the true source of the modern word welcome, and to sever its connection with the A. S. usage.

WELD (1), to beat metal together. (Scand.) The final d is excrescent, like d after l in alder, a tree, elder, a tree, and Shakespeare's alder-liefest for aller-liefest, 2 Hen. VI. i. 1. 28. It is only a particular use of the word well, verb, to spring up as a fountain, lit. to boil up. It meant (1) to boil, (2) to heat to a high degree, (3) to beat heated iron. We find this particular use in Wyclif, Isaiah, ii. 4; where the earlier version has 'thei shul bete togidere ther swerdes into shares,' the later version has 'thei schulen welle togidere her swerdes in-to scharris.' See further under Well (2). The word is certainly Scand., not E.; for (1) the Swed. välla (lit. to well) is only used in the sense 'to weld,' as in välla järn, to weld iron (Widgren); the sense 'to well' appearing in the comp. uppvälla, to boil up. (2) The excrescent d actually occurs in Danish, in which language it is not uncommon; cf. Dan. væld, a spring, valde, to well up. (3) Sweden exports large quantities of iron and steel. ☞ The process of welding iron is named, in many languages, from the word for boiling; cf. Illyrian variti, to boil, weld iron, Lettish wārti, to boil, ☞ sawdrit, to weld, &c.; Wedgwood. These words are from the same root.

WELD (2), dyer's weed; Reseda luteola. (E.) M. E. welde; 'Madyr, welde, or wod' = madder, weld, or woad; Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 17; pr. in App. to tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 180. 'Welde, or woldes;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 520, 532. According to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 349, it is spelt wolde in MS. Harl. 3388. In Lowland Scotch, it is wald; see Jamieson. It appears to be an E. word; perhaps allied to Well (2), from the notion of boiling (for dyeing). It is the G. wau, Du. wouwe, Swed., Dan. vau; also Span. gualda, F. gaude (of Teut. origin). ☞ Mahn (in Webster) identifies it with woad; I can see no connection. See Woad.

WELFARE, prosperity. (E.) Lit. a state of faring or going on well. M. E. welfare, Chaucer, C. T. 11150; compounded of wel, adv. well, and fare = A. S. faru, sb., lit. a journey, from faran, to fare, go. See Well (1) and Fare. Cf. Icel. veiferð, a well-doing.

WELKIN, the sky, the region of clouds. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 101, &c. M. E. welkin, as printed in Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer, C. T. 9000, where the MSS. have welkne, welken, welkine, walkyn, Six-text, Group E, 1124. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 160, we have welkne, wolkne, þe welkene, welken in the various MSS. It thus appears that welkne = wolkne, which is an older spelling; in Layamon, 4575, 23947, we have wolkne, wolcne, welcene, prob. a pl. form, and signifying 'the clouds.' — A. S. wolcnu, clouds, pl. of wolcan, a cloud, Grein, ii. 731. + O. Sax. wolkan, a cloud. + G. wolke, O. H. G. wolchan, a cloud. β. Of uncertain origin. Some have connected it with A. S. geweald, a rolling about, as in þā geweald, the rolling of the waves, Grein, i. 477; from wealcen, to roll, walk; see Walk. There is no proof of this; if it were true, wolcen would mean 'that which rolls about.' γ. But Fick, iii. 298, connects it with G. welk, which (though it now means dried) formerly meant moist, damp, soft; and these he further compares with Lithuan. wilgyti, to moisten, Russ. vlaga, moisture, vlajiti (vlaziti), to moisten. If this be right, then wolcen meant orig. 'a mist.' This seems the more probable solution. ☞ Fick also cites A. S. wolæc, tepid; it is uncertain whether there is any connection.

WELL (1), in a good state, excellently. (E.) M. E. wel, Chaucer, C. T. 4728. — A. S. wel, Grein, ii. 656; also spelt well. + Da. wel. + Icel. vel, sometimes val. + Dan. vel. + Swed. väl. + Goth. waita. + G. wohl, wol; O. H. G. wela, wola. β. The Goth. waita is abnormal; the other forms answer to a Teut. type WELA or WALA, well; Fick, iii. 296. The orig. sense is 'agreeably,' or suitably to one's will or wish; from the Teut. base WAL, to wish (whence numerous Teut. derivatives proceed), answering to Aryan √WAR or WAL, to wish, will, choose, appearing in Lat. vol-o, I wish, vel-le, to wish, Russ. vol-ia, sb., will, Gk. βούλα-ομαι, I wish, Gk. βέλ-ρεpos, comp. adj., better, Skt. vara, better, vara, a wish, vri, to choose; see Will. Der. well-behaved, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 59; -beloved, Jul. Cæs. iii. 2. 180; -born, -bred, -disposed; -favoured, Two Gent. ii. 1. 54; -meaning, Rich. II. ii. 1. 128; -meant, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 67; -nigh; -spoken, Rich. III. i. 1. 29; -won, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 51; and numerous other compounds. And see well-come, well-fare; also wel, weal-th.

WELL (2), a spring, fountain of water. (E.) M. E. welle (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 5689. — A. S. wella, also well, Grein, ii. 657; also spelt wylla, wylle, wyll, id. 756. — A. S. weallan (strong verb, pt. t. wœl, pp. weallan), to well up, boil, id. 672; the mod. E. verb well being derived, not from this strong verb, but from its derivative wellan or wyllan, which is a secondary or weak verb, so that the pt. t. in mod. E. is welled. + Icel. vell, ebullition; from vella, to well, boil, pt. t. vall, pp. ollinn (strong verb); whence also vella, weak verb, to make to boil. + Du. wel, a spring. + Dan. væld (for væll), a spring. + G. welle, a wave, surge; from wallen, to undulate, boil, bubble up, of which the O. H. G. pt. t. was wial; Fick, iii. 300. β. All from Teut. base WAL, to turn round, WALL, to boil up, undulate; from the Aryan √WAR, to turn round, roll, as in Skt. val, to move to and fro, Russ. valiate, to roll. See further under Walk. Der. well, verb, M. E. wellen, verb, in P. Plowman, B. xix. 375, from A. S. weallan, wyllan; we find 'Ferueo, ic welle,' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 156, l. 14, in the Royal MS. (see the footnote), though most MSS. have ic wealle. Der. well-spring, M. E. wellespring, Genesis and Exodus, i. 1243. And see weld (1).

WELLAWAY, an exclamation of great sorrow. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 46. M. E. weilawe, Chaucer, C. T. 13048 (Group B, 1308); the MSS. have weylawe, weilawe, and (corruptly) wel away, wel away, shewing that some scribes mistook it to mean 'weal [is] away,' i.e. prosperity is over! 'Weilawei, and wolowo' = alas! and alas! Ancren Riwe, p. 88, l. 7; weilawei, id. p. 274, l. 2. 'Wo is us þat we weren born! Weilawei!' Havelok, 462; cf. l. 570. Written weila wai, Layamon, 8031; wala wa, 7971; also wela, wo la (without wei or wa following), 3456. It stands for wei la wei or wa la wa (wo lo wo). — A. S. wā lā wā, written wālā wā, alas!

lit. 'woe! lo! woe!' Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4); we also find wald, Mark, xv. 29, and simply wi, Mark, xiv. 21. — A. S. wā, woe; lā, lo; wā, woe. See Woe and Lo. ¶ The expression was early misunderstood; and was even turned into wella-day, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 106; in which unmeaning expression, though intended as an exclamation of sorrow, we seem to have well in place of wo, and day introduced without any sense; probably alas! the day also owed its existence to this unmeaning corruption.

WELSH, pertaining to Wales. (E.) Welsh properly means 'foreign.' M. E. walsh, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; Walsh is still in use as a proper name. — A. S. walisc, welisc; 'þā welisc menn' = the foreigners, i.e. Normans, A. S. Chron. an. 1048; see Earle's edition, p. 178, l. 15; 'þā walisc men,' ibid. l. 24; and see the note. Formed, with suffix -isc (= E. ish) and vowel-change, from A. S. wealh, a foreigner. See Walnut. Der. Welsh-rabbit, a Welsh dainty, i.e. not a rabbit, but toasted cheese; this is a mild joke, just as a Norfolk-capon is not a capon at all, but a red-herring (Halliwell). Those who cannot see the joke pretend that rabbit is a corruption of rare bit, which is as pointless and stupid as it is incapable of proof.

WELT, a narrow strip of leather round a shoe. (C.) The old sense seems to be hem or fringe. Cotgrave explains F. orlet by 'a little hemme, selvidge, welt, border;' and the verb orler by 'to hemme, selvidge, border, welt the edges or sides of.' 'Haua a care of the skirts, fringes, and welts of their garments,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 51. 'Welt of a garment, ourellet [F. orlet]; Welt of a shoe, ourelleure;' Palsgrave. M. E. welte. 'Welt of a schoo, Incucium, vel intercucium;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hec pedana, Anglice wampay [a vamp]; Hoc intercucium, Anglice welte;' Wright's Voc. i. 201. Palsgrave also has the verb; 'I welte, as a garment is, je ourle: This kirtell is well weltd, ce corset icy est bien ourlé. In a very obscure line in P. Plowman, B. v. 199 (C. vii. 205), two MSS. have welpe, with the possible meaning of welt or hem of a garment. A Celtic word; not found in other Teut. languages. — W. gwald, a hem, welt, gwalt, the welt of a shoe; gwald, to welt, hem; gwaltiesio, to form a welt; Gael. balt, a welt of a shoe, a border, a belt, baltach, a welt, belt, border; Irish balt, a belt, welt, border; baltach, welted, striped, baltadh, a welt, border, the welt of a shoe. It appears to be much the same as Belt, q. v. Der. welt, verb. ¶ I do not see how to connect it with M. E. welten, which does not mean to turn over, as seems to have been supposed, but to overturn, upset, overthrow, roll over; the E. word really connected with M. E. welt being welter, q. v.

WELTER, to wallow, roll about. (E.) Surrey has 'waltring tongs,' i.e. rolling or lolling tongues of snakes, tr. of Virgil's 2nd book of the Æneid, l. 267. 'I walter, I tumble, je me voystre; Hye you, your horse is walteringe yonder, hastez vous, vostre cheual se voystre la;' Palsgrave. 'I walter, je verse; Thou welterest in the myer, as thou were a sow;' Palsgrave. Walter and welter are frequentative forms, with the usual suffix -er, from M. E. walten, to roll over, overturn, hence to totter, fall, throw, rouse, rush, &c. Destruction of Troy, 1956, 3810, 4627, 4633, 4891, pt. t. welt, id. 4418, 4891, &c. We even find the sb. walter, a weltering, id. 3699. — A. S. wealtan, a strong verb, of which the pp. gewalten (for gewalten) occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the O. Northumb. translation of Matt. xvii. 14, where eunem gewalteno occurs as a gloss on genibus prostratus; hence the secondary verb wyltan, to roll round, Grein, ii. 757, also the adj. unwealt, steady, lit. 'not tottering,' A. S. Chron. an. 897, ed. Earle, p. 95, l. 14, and the note. — Teut. base WALT, a parallel form to WALK, to roll about; see Walk. + Icel. weltask, to rotate, to roll over, as a horse does; causal of welta, pt. t. walt, to roll. + Dan. welte, to roll, overturn. + Swed. vältra, to roll, wallow, welter; frequentative of välta, to roll. + G. wälzen, to roll, wallow, welter; from walzen, to roll. + Goth. us-waltjan, to subvert. See Waltz.

WEN, a fleshy tumour. (E.) M. E. wenne; 'Wenne, veruca, gibbus;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. wenn; acc. pl. wennas, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 12, l. 22; nom. pl. wannas, id. 46, l. 21. + Du. wen. + Low G. wenn; wenn-bulen [wen-boils]; prov. G. wenne, wehne, wöhne, cited by E. Müller. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'pain,' or painful swelling; it is perhaps allied to Goth. winnan, to suffer, as in aglons winnan = to suffer afflictions, 1 Tim. v. 10; cf. wunns, affliction, suffering, 2 Tim. iii. 11. So also Icel. vinna, though cognate with E. win, means not only to work, labour, toil, but also to suffer, and vinna á is to do bodily harm to another. See Win.

WENCH, a young girl, vulgar woman. (E.) Common in prov. E. without any depreciatory intention; as, 'a fine young wench.' 'Temperance was a delicate wench,' Temp. ii. 1. 43. M. E. wenche, Chaucer, C. T. 3254; P. Plowman, B. v. 364. We also find the form wenche, Ancrén Riwle, p. 334, note k. β. It is to be particularly noted that wenche is the earlier form; Stratmann gives no references for wenche earlier than Will. of Palerne, l. 1901, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 24, and Poems and Lives of the Saints, ed. Furnivall, xvi. 98, where, however, the form printed is wencen. But wenche (spelt wenche) occurs in the Ormulum, 3356, where it is used of a male infant, viz. in the account of the annunciation of Christ's birth to the shepherds. The orig. sense was simply 'infant,' without respect of sex, but, as the word also implies 'weak' or 'tender,' it was naturally soon restricted to the weaker sex. The M. E. wenche resulted from wenche by loss of l, which was doubtless thought to be a dimin. suffix; yet in this particular instance, it is not so. The sb. wenche, an infant, is closely allied to the M. E. adj. wanckel, tottery, unsteady, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 221. — A. S. wenche, a maid, a daughter (Somner); unauthorised. But we find the pl. winclo, children (of either sex), Exod. xxi. 4. Allied to wenche, wenchele, weak, Grein, ii. 659; wanckol, wonckol, unstable, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. vii. § 2 (b. ii. pr. 1). β. The lit. sense of wanckol is 'tottery,' whence the senses unstable, weak, infatigable, easily followed. Formed, with A. S. suffix -ol (due to Aryan suffix -ra, March, A. S. Grammar, § 228), from Teut. base WANK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, as in G. wanken, to totter, reel, stagger, waddle, flinch, shrink, M. H. G. wenken (causal form), to render unsteady. + M. H. G. wanckel, O. H. G. wanckal, unstable; mod. G. (provincial) wanckel, 'tottering, unsteady,' Flügel. See further under Wink.

WEND, to go, take one's way. (E.) Now little used, except in the pt. t. went, which is used in place of the pt. t. of go. When used, it is gen. in the phr. 'to wend one's way;' but Shak. twice has simply wend, Com. of Errors, i. 1. 158, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 372. M. E. wenden, Chaucer, C. T. 16. — A. S. wendan, (1) trans. to turn; (2) intrans. to turn oneself, proceed, go; common in both senses, Grein, ii. 659. The pt. t. was wende, which became wente in M. E., and is now went. The lit. sense was orig. 'to make to wind,' and it is the causal of wind; formed, by vowel-change of a to e, from A. S. wand, pt. t. of windan, to wind. + Du. wenden, to turn, to tack; causal of winden. + Icel. wenda, to wend, turn, change; causal of winda. + Dan. wende, caus. of vinde. + Swed. vända, caus. of vinda. + Goth. wandjan, caus. of windan. + G. wenden, caus. of winden. See Wind (2).

WERE, pl. of was; also as subj. sing. and pl. See Was. WERWOLF, a man-wolf. (E.) On the subject of werwolves, i.e. men supposed to be metamorphosed into wolves, see pref. to William of Palerne, otherwise called William and the Werwolf, p. xxvi; where the etymology is discussed. Cf. Gk. λυκάνθρωπος, i.e. wolf-man. M. E. werwolf, Will. of Palerne, 80, &c. — A. S. were-wulf, a werwolf; as an epithet of the devil (meaning fierce despoiler), Laws of Cnut, § 26, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 374. Better spelt wer-wulf. — A. S. wer, a man; and wulf, a wolf. + G. währwolf, a werwolf; M. H. G. werwolf (cited by E. Müller); from M. H. G. wer, a man; and wolf, a wolf. This was Latinised as garulphus or gerulphus, whence O. F. garoul (Burguy), mod. F. loup-garou, i.e. wolf-man-wolf, the word loup being prefixed because the sense of the final -ou had been lost. B. For the latter syllable, see Wolf. The former syllable occurs also in Icel. verr, a man, Goth. wair, which is further related to Lat. uir, Lithuan. wyras, Irish fear, Skt. vīra, Gk. ἥρως; see Hero and Virile.

WEST, the quarter where the sun sets. (E.) M. E. west, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 113. — A. S. west, Grein, ii. 667, where it occurs as an adv., with the sense 'westward;' we also find westan, adv., from the west, id. 668; west-dæl, the west part, west-ende, the west end, west-mest, most in the west. + Du. west, adj. and adv. + Icel. vestr, sb., the west. + Dan. and Swed. vest, sb. + G. west (whence F. ouest). β. All from Teut. type WESTA, west, orig. an adv., as in A. S.; Fick, iii. 30. Allied to Skt. vasta, a house; vasati, a dwelling-place, a house, night. The allusion is to the apparent resting-place or abiding-place of the sun at night; from ✓ WAS, to dwell, whence Skt. vas, to dwell, to pass the night. From the same root we have Icel. vist, an abode, dwelling, esp. a lodging-place, whence vista, to lodge; also Gk. ἄστυ, a city; also Gk. ἑσπερος, Lat. vesper, evening. See Was and Vesper. Der. west-ward, A. S. weste-weard, adj., Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xvi. § 4 (b. ii. met. 6); west-ern (see the suffix -ern explained under North); west-er-ly (short for west-ern-ly).

WET, very moist, rainy. (E.) M. E. wet (with long e), spelt wet in The Castle of Love, l. 1433 (Stratmann); whence pl. wete (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1282, riming with grete, pl. of gret, great. — A. S. wæt, Grein, ii. 651. + Icel. vátr. + Dan. vaad. + Swed. våt. β. All from Teut. base WATA, wet, Fick, iii. 284; from the same source as Teut. WATRA, water. — ✓ WAT, to wet, or spring up (as water). See Water. Der. wet, verb, A. S. wætan (Grein); wet, sb., A. S. wæta (Grein); wett-ish, wet-ness; wet-shod, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 161. From the same root are ott-er, und-ul-ate, hyd-ra, hyd-raulic, hyd-ro-gen, &c.

WETHER, a castrated ram. (E.) M. E. wether, Chaucer, C. T. 3249. — A. S. wæðer, Ps. xxviii. 1, ed. Spelman (marginal reading). + O. Sax. wethar, withar; Kleinere Altniederdeutsche Denkmäler, ed. Heyne, p. 186. + Icel. veðr. + Dan. væder, vædder. + Swed.

wādur. + G. widder, O. H. G. widar. + Goth. withrus, a lamb, John, i. 29. β. All from Teut. base WETHRU or WETHRA, a lamb, Fick, iii. 307. The orig. sense was doubtless 'a yearling,' as the word corresponds very closely to Lat. vitulus, a calf, allied to Skt. vatsara, Gk. ēros, a year. See Veterinary and Veal. ¶ We may note the distinction between weather and wether by observing that the former is wea-ther (with Aryan suffix -tar), whilst the latter is weth-er (with suffix -ra), the th answering to the t in vitulus.

WEY, a heavy weight. (E.) The weight varies considerably, from 2 cwt. to 3 cwt. M. E. weye, P. Plowman, B. v. 93. The lit. sense is merely 'weight.'—A. S. wēge; 'Pondus, byrðen oððe wēge,' i.e. burden or weight; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 58, l. 17.—A. S. wēg, stem of pl. of pt. t. of wegan, to bear, carry, weigh. See Weigh.

WH.

WH. This is distinct from w, just as th is from t. The mod. E. wh is represented by hw in A. S., and by hv in Icelandic; it answers to Lat. qu, and Aryan kw or k.

WHACK, to beat; see Thwack.

WHALE, the largest of sea-animals. (E.) M. E. whal, Chaucer, C. T. 7512; qual, Havelok, 753.—A. S. hwal, Wright's Voc. i. 55. + Du. walvisch, i.e. whale-fish. + Icel. hvalr. + Dan. and Swed. hval. + G. wal, walfisch. β. The Teut. type is HWALA, Fick, iii. 93. The name was orig. applied to any large fish, including the walrus, grampus, porpoise, &c. Thus Ælfric explains hwal by 'balena, vel cete, vel pistrix;' the sense is 'roller,' and it is closely allied to wheel. The rolling of porpoises must have been early noticed. Cf. also E. cylinder; see Wheel and Cylinder. ¶ Whale and balena have nothing in common but the letter l, and cannot be compared. Der. whale-bone, formerly whales bone, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 15, where the reference is to the ivory of the walrus' tusk, M. E. whales bon, Layamon, 2363; whal-ing, whal-er. Also wal-rus, q.v.

WHAP, to beat, flutter. (E.) Sometimes spelt whop; and, less correctly, wap. Halliwell has wap, 'to beat; to flutter, to beat the wings, to move in any violent manner;' also wapping (for whapping), 'quaking, used by Batman, 1582.' M. E. quappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 57, Legend of Good Women, 865; Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4, earlier version. From a base KWAP, to throb; see Quaver. Allied to Low G. quabbeln, to palpitate, with which cf. E. wabble. Note also W. chwap, a sudden stroke, chwapio, to strike, to slap. Der. wabb-le. And see whip.

WHARF (1), a place on the shore for lading and unlading goods. (E.) Spelt warf in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1543, where we read that 'the maior wente to the woode-*warf*es, and solde to the poore people billet and faggot,' because of the severe frost. It is not easy to find an earlier instance; but Palsgrave has wharfe. Blount, ed. 1694, explains wharf as meaning, not only a landing-place, but also 'a working-place for shipwrights;' see below.—A. S. hwerf, a dam or bank to keep out water; 'þa gymde hé þæt hé moste macian foran gēn Mildryþe æker ænne hwerf wið þon wodaþ to werianne,' which Thorpe translates by 'then desired he that he might make a wharf over against Mildred's field as a protection against the ford,' where 'ford' is a conjectural translation of wodaþ; Diplomatarium Ævi Anglo-Saxonici (A.D. 1038), p. 381; and again, 'þat land and þane wearf þarto' = the land and the wharf thereto; id. (an. 1042), p. 361. The orig. sense seems to have been a bank of earth, used at first as a dam against a flood; the present use is prob. of Dutch or Scand. origin. The lit. sense is 'a turning,' whence it came to mean a dam, from its turning the course of water; the allied A. S. hwearf not only means 'a returning,' but also 'a change,' and even 'a space or distance,' as in the O. Northumb. tr. of Luke, xxiv. 13; also 'a crowd,' Grein, ii. 118; cf. hwearfan, to turn about. The best example is seen in the comp. mere-hwearf, the sea-shore, Grein, ii. 233.—A. S. hwearf, pt. of hwearfan, to turn, turn about, Grein, ii. 119. + Du. werf, a wharf, yard; also a turn, time; Hexham has werf, 'a wharfe, or a working-place for shipwrights or otherwise.' + Icel. hvarf, a turning away; also, a shelter; from hvarf, pt. t. of hverfa, to turn. + Dan. værft, a wharf, a dock-yard. + Swed. varf, a shipbuilder's yard; O. Swed. hvarf, skeps-hvarf (ship's wharf), the same (Ihre). The O. Swed. hvarf also meant a turn or time, order, stratum, or layer; Ihre, i. 945; from hverfua, to turn, return. B. It thus appears that, even in A. S., this difficult word, with a great range of senses, meant not only a turning, reversion, but also space, distance, turning-place, dam, or shore. Cf. prov. E. wharfstead, a ford in a river (Halliwell). In Swedish and Dutch it had a yet narrower sense, that of 'ship-builder's yard,' so called from its being situate on a shore. And from this sense to that of 'landing-place' the step is not a long one. O. The A. S. strong verb hwearfan, answering to Goth. hwaiban, to turn oneself about (hence to walk), and to Icel. hverfa, is from the Teut. base HWARB, to turn, turn about, Fick, i. 93. This is an extension of HWAR=KWAR, as seen in Lat. curvus, curved; see Curve. Another form of HWAR is HWAL, as seen in Whale, Wheel. ¶ There is no reason for introducing confusion by comparing G. werfen, to throw, which is allied to E. war, and therefore bears no resemblance to wharf either initially or finally. Such confusion is natural in High German, where the words werft, a wharf, dock-yard, werf, a bank, a wharf, probably borrowed from Dutch and Danish, bear a striking resemblance to werfen, to throw, cast, or fling. But in E., Du., and Scand. there is no such confusion; though I regret to say I have connected Goth. hwaiban with G. werfen in my Gothic Dict., by an oversight, though in another place I rightly connect G. werfen with Goth. waipan. Der. wharf-age, Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 135; wharf-ing-er, which occurs (according to Blount, ed. 1674) anno 7 Edw. VI, cap. 7, a corruption of wharfager, just as messenger is of messager. [†]

WHARF (2), the bank of a river. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 33; Antony, ii. 2. 218. I once proposed to identify this with the Herefordshire warth, a flat meadow close to a stream, from A. S. warð, a shore, bank, Matt. xiii. 2, allied to A. S. war, Icel. ver, the sea. In this case we should suppose wharf to stand for warth. β. But the occurrence of mere-hwearf, the sea-shore (for which see Grein, ii. 233), justifies Shakespeare's spelling, and shows that the present word is only a peculiar sense of Wharf (1), q.v.

WHAT, neuter of Who, q.v. Der. what-ever, what-so-ever; what-not, a piece of furniture for holding anything, whence the name.

WHEAL (1), a pimple. (E.) Not to be confused with wale, another spelling of wale, the mark caused by a stripe; for which see Wale. A whéal is a swelling, pimple, caused by ill-health. It occurs frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25, where is mention of 'pushes, wheals, and blains,' and of 'pushes and angry wheales, &c.; a push being a pustule, still in use in Camba. M. E. wele; 'Whele, whele, weel, or welke, quelke, soore, Pustula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. pl. whelkes, Chaucer, C. T. 634.—A. S. hwēle, a wheal; an unauthorised word, due to Sommer. Ettmüller cites A. S. hweal, with a reference to Ælfric's Glossary; but Wright prints it hwēal; 'Lotium, hwēal,' Wright's Voc. i. 46, l. 7; and the word is very doubtful. There is also a verb hwēlan, to wither, or pine away, respecting which all that is known is that it occurs in sect. 15 of the Liber Scintillarum (unprinted), as follows: 'Unde bonus proficit, inde inuidus contabescit,' glossed by 'þanon se goda framað, þanon se andiga hwēlað.' Cf. Icel. hwelja, 'the skin of a cyclopterus [sucking-fish] or whale;' which is a curious definition. Also W. chwiler, a maggot, wheal, pimple. More light is desired. The M. E. whelke, a pimple, is clearly a dimin. form; hence whelk, Hen. V. iii. 6. 108.

WHEAL (2), a mine. (C.) Still common in Cornwall.—Corn. hwel, a work, a mine; also written whéal, whel, wehel; Williams, Corn. Dict. Williams compares it with W. chwyl, a turn, a course, a while, chwyllo, to turn, revolve, run a course, bustle; cf. also W. chwel, a course, turn. Perhaps related to E. wheel.

WHEAT, the name of a grain used for making bread. (E.) M. E. whete, Chaucer, C. T. 3986.—A. S. hwæte; Grein, ii. 117. + Du. weite, weit. + Icel. hwēiti. + Dan. hwede. + Swed. hwets. + G. weizen. + Goth. hwaiteis. (The Lithuan. kwēitis, wheat; is borrowed from Teutonic.) β. All from a Teut. type HWAITYA, wheat (Fick, iii. 94); lit. 'that which is white;' so named from the whiteness of the meal. See White. Der. wheat-en, A. S. hwæten, John, xii. 24; wheat-fly; buck-wheat. Perhaps wheat-ear, the name of a small bird (Phillips), unless it be a corruption; Halliwell gives Linc. whitter, to complain, whitterick, a young partridge; it is just possible that wheat-ear is for whitty-er=whitter-er; cf. twitter, whistle; if so, the word is of imitative origin.

WHEELLE, to cajole, flatter. (G.?) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 760. In Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act i. sc. 1, we find: 'I must wheelle her.' Blount, ed. 1674, notes it as a new word, saying; 'Wheelle in the British tongue signifies a story, whence probably our late word of fancy, and signifies to draw one in by fair words or subtil insinuation,' &c. He is referring to W. chwedl, a saying, sentence, fable, story, tale, chwedla, to gossip, chwedlu, to tell a fable; but this is not a satisfactory explanation, nor does it account for the long e. It seems more likely that the word should be weedle, and that it is from G. wedeln, to wag the tail, to fan; whence the notion of flattering or paying attention may have arisen. Wedeln is from the sb. wedel, a fan, tail, brush, M. H. G. wadel, O. H. G. wadol, a tail. β. The orig. sense of wedel is perhaps a winnowing-fan; it may be allied to weken, to blow, from √WA, to blow; see Wind. By way of illustration, Wedgwood compares Dan. logre, to wag the tail, to fawn upon one; also Icel. flaðra, to wag the tail, fawn upon one (but the Oxford Dict. does not give the former of these senses). Der. wheel-er.

WHEEL, a circular frame turning on an axle. (E.) M.E. wheel, Wyclif, James, iii. 6.—A.S. hwēol, Grein, ii. 119. Hwēol is a shortened form of hweowl, Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman; it is also spelt hweohl, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 7 (b. iv. pr. 6). + Du. wiel. + Icel. hjól. + Dan. hjul. + Swed. hjul. β. Fick collects these under a supposed Teut. type HWEHWLA (HWEHULA), related to a shorter type HWEĽA which appears in Icel. hvel, also meaning 'a wheel.' These Fick connects with Gk. κύκλος, a circle, wheel (i. 516); but perhaps we may connect them with ✓KAR, to run, move round (Fick, i. 521), and its related form KAL, to drive (i. 527). Cf. Russ. koloso, a wheel; and see Calash. Der. wheel, verb; wheel-er; wheel-barrow, spelt whelebarow in Le Bone Florence, l. 2031, pr. in Ritson's Met. Romances, iii. 86; wheel-wright (see Wright).

WHEEZE, to breathe audibly and with difficulty. (E.) M.E. whesen, Towneley Mysteries, 152 (Stratmann); rare.—A.S. hwēsan, to wheeze, A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 365 (glossary). The 3rd pers. pres. sing. hwēst occurs in the same volume, p. 126, l. 9, according to Cockayne; but hwēst is here really put for hwōstēð, from hwōstan, to cough, which is perhaps a related word, but not quite the same thing. The only sure trace of the verb is in Ælfred's Homilies, i. 86, where we find the strong pt. t. hwōds=wheezed (mistranslated by Thorpe, but rightly explained by Cockayne). See the same passage in Sweet, A.S. Reader, p. 92, l. 150. Sweet gives the infin. mood as hwēsan, but does not give any authority. Cf. Icel. hvasa, to hiss, Dan. hvæse, to hiss, to wheeze. And cf. E. whisper, whistle. β. Fick, iii. 94, gives the base as HWAS, answering to Aryan ✓KWAŚ, to sigh, pant, as seen in Skt. qwas, to breathe hard, sigh, Lat. queri (pt. t. ques-tus), to complain. ¶ The A.S. hwōstan, to cough, is from ✓KAS, to cough; cf. Skt. kās, to cough, Lithuan. kosti, G. husten, to cough. Der. (perhaps) weas-and, q.v.; and cf. whisper, whistle. From the same root is quer-ul-ous.

WHELK (1), a mollusc with a spiral shell. (E.) The W is unoriginal, and due to confusion with the word below; the right (etymological) spelling is welk or wilk. Spenser has 'whelky pearls' =shelly pearls, pearls in the shell; Virgil's Gnat, l. 105. M.E. wilk; spelt wylke, Prompt. Parv.; and in Wright's Voc. i. 189.—A.S. wilc (8th cent.), Wright's Voc. ii. 104, col. 1; later weluc, weluc, id. i. 56, 65. Named from its convoluted shell; allied to A.S. welcan, to roll, walk; see Walk. Der. Hence prob. welk-ed, K. Lear, iv. 6. 71; spelt wealk'd, i.e. convoluted, in the first folio. [†] WHELK (2), a small pimple. (E.) The dimin. of Wheal (1), q.v.

WHELM, to overturn, cover over by something that is turned over, overwhelm, submerge. (Scand.) 'Ocean whelm them all,' Merry Wives, ii. 2. 143. M.E. whelmen, to turn over; Chaucer, Troilus, i. 139. 'Whelmyn a vessel, Suppino,' Prompt. Parv.; on which Way cites Palsgrave: 'I whelme an holowe thyng over an other thyng, Je mets dessus; Whelme a platter upon it, to save it from flies.' He adds: 'in the E. Anglian dialect, to whelm signifies to turn a tub or other vessel upside down, whether to cover any thing with it or not; see Forby.' 'Whelm, to turn over, sink, depress; Halliwell; which see. The Lowland Sc. form is guheme or whommel, also whamle, to turn upside down; ovir guhemlit=did overturn, occurs in Bellenden's Chron., prol. st. 2 (Jamieson). Jamieson gives Sibbald's opinion (which is correct) that the Lowl. Sc. whemle is due to E. whelm, the letters being transposed to make the word easier of utterance; but he afterwards assumes the Lowl. Sc. word as the older form, in order to deduce its etymology from O. Swed. hwimla, to swarm (=G. wimmeln), which he explains quite wrongly. This opinion must be dismissed, as the notion of 'swarming' is entirely alien to E. whelm.

β. The word presents some difficulty; but it is obvious that whelm and overwhelm must be very closely related to M.E. wheluen (whelven) and overwheluen (overwhelven), which are used in almost precisely the same sense. Wheluen is also spelt hwelfen; 'He hwelfde at þare sepulchre-dure enne grete ston'=he rolled (or turned) over a great stone at the door of the sepulchre; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 51, l. 513. 'And perchance the overwhelve'=and perchance overwhelm thee; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 161.

γ. The only difficulty is to explain the final -m; this is due to the fact that whelm, verb, is really formed from a substantive whelm; and the sb. whel-m stands for whelf-m, which was simply unpronounceable, so that the f was perforce dropped. This appears from O. Swedish; Ihre gives the verb hwalma, to cock hay, derived from hwalma, a hay-cock; and he rightly connects hwalma with hwälfwa, to arch over, make into a rounded shape, and hwälf, an arch, a vault. The mod. Swed. words are vålma, to cock hay, vålm, a hay-cock (which have lost the h); hwälfwa, to arch, hwälf, an arch. Cf. Dan. hvålte, to arch, vault over. Thus the orig. sense of whelm was to arch over, vault, make of a convex form; hence, to turn a hollow dish over, which would then present such a form; hence, to upset, overturn, which is now the prevailing idea.

δ. We conclude that whelm (for whelf-m) is from the strong verb appearing only in M.H.G. welben (pt. t. walb), to distend oneself into a round form, swell out, become convex, answering to the Teut. base HWALB, to become convex; see Fick, iii. 94. The derivatives are seen clearly enough in A.S. hwealf, adj. convex, sb. a vault (Grein, ii. 118); Icel. hwälf, hólf, a vault, hwälf, hólfa, to 'whelve' or turn upside down, overwhelm or capsize a ship, hwelfa, to arch, vault, to turn upside down, &c.; mod. G. wölben, to arch over.

ε. Further, it is quite clear that the base HWALB is a by-form of HWARD, to turn about; for which see Wharf and Whirl. Der. over-whelm.

WHELP, a puppy, young of the dog or lion. (E.) M.E. whelp, Chaucer, C.T. 10805.—A.S. hwelp, Matt. xv. 27. + Du. welp. + Icel. hwelp. + Dan. hwalp. + Swed. valp; O. Swed. hwalp (Ihre). + M.H.G. welf. β. The Teut. type is HWEĽPA; Fick, iii. 95. Root unknown. Der. whelp, vb., J. Caesar, ii. 2. 17.

WHEN, at what time, at which time. (E.) M.E. whan, Chaucer, C.T. 5, 179; whanne, Ormulum, 133.—A.S. hwanne, hwonne; Grein, ii. 115. + O. Du. wan (Hexham). + Goth. hwan. + G. wann; O.H.G. hwanne. β. Evidently orig. a case of the interrogative pronoun; cf. Goth. hwana, acc. masc. of hwas, who; see Who. So also Lat. quum, when, from quis, who; Gk. πότε, when, put for κότε, from the same pronom. base. Der. when-ever, when-so-ever; and see when-ce.

WHENCE, from what place. (E.) M.E. whennes (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C.T. 12269. This form whenn-es, in which the suffix imitates the adverbial -es (as in twi-es, twice, ned-es, of necessity), was substituted for the older form whanene, written wonene in Layamon, l. 16. The suffix -es was orig. a genitive case-ending, as in dag-es, of a day.

β. The form whanene is from A.S. hwanan, also hwanon, hwanan, whence, Grein, ii. 114. This is closely connected with A.S. hwanne, when; the suffix -an being used to express direction, as in A.S. sūð-an, from the south. See When. + G. wannen, whence; allied to wann, when.

¶ Compare hen-ce, similarly formed from M.E. henn-es, put for A.S. heonan, hence; see Hence. Also Thence. Der. whence-so-ever.

WHERE, at which place. (E.) WHERRY, a shallow, light boat. (Scand.) 'A wherry, boate, ponto;' Levins, ed. 1570. The pl. is wheries in Hackluyt, Voyages, iii. 645 (R.). In use on the Thames in particular; not E., but probably of Danish origin. The word in Scandinavian dialects signifies lightly built, crank, swift, and the like.—Icel. hverfr, shift, crank (said of a ship); Norweg. hverv, crank, unsteady, also swift of motion (Aasen).—Icel. hverfa (pt. t. hvarf), to turn; see Wharf, Whirl. The lit. sense is 'turning easily.' The Scand. word would become wherrif in E., whence wherry; like jolly from M.E. jolif.

In the Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 161, we find various Low G. words for wey, which are not all related; the related forms are the Dittmarsh hei, heu, and perhaps Holstein weje; but the Bremen wattke, waddik, wey, seem to be allied to E. water, which is obviously from another source. WHIFF, a puff of wind or smoke. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 495. M.E. weffe, vapour; Prompt. Parv. An imitative word; cf. puff, pipe, fife. + W. chwiff, a whiff, puff; chwiffio, to puff; chwaff, a gust. + Dan. wift, a puff, gust. Cf. G. piß-puff, to denote a sudden explosive sound; also Icel. hwiða, a puff; A.S. hwiða, a breeze; Wright's Voc. i. 52, col. 2, 76, col. 2, l. 1. Der. whiff, verb, whiff-le, q.v.

WHIFFLE, to blow in gusts, veer about as the wind does. (E.) 'But if the winds whiffle about to the south;' Dampier, Discourse of Winds, c. 6 (R.). Whiffle is the frequentative of whiff, to puff, and was specially used of puffing in various directions (perhaps by confusion with Du. weifelen, to waver); hence it came to mean to trifle, to trick (Phillips). See Whiff. Der. whiff-er, Henry V. v. chor. 12, orig. a piper or fifer, as explained by Phillips, who says that 'it is also taken for a piper that plays on a fife in a company of foot-soldiers;' hence it meant one who goes first in a procession; see Whiffler in Nares, whose account is sufficient.

WHIG, the name of a political party. (E.?) 'Wit and fool are consequents of Whig and Tory;' Dryden, Pref. to Absalom and Achitophel (1681). See the full account in Todd's Johnson and Nares. The standard passage on the word is in b. i. of Burnet's Own Times, fully cited by Johnson; it is to the effect that whig is a shortened form of whiggamor, applied to certain Scotchmen who came from the west in the summer to buy corn at Leith; and that the term was given them from a word whiggam, which was employed by those men in driving their horses. A march to Edinburgh made by the Marquis of Argyll and 6000 men was called 'the whiggamor's inroad,' and afterwards those who opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs. [There seems no reason to doubt this account, nor does there seem to be the slightest foundation for an assertion made by Woodrow that Whigs were named from whig, sour whey, which is obviously a mere guess, and has to be bolstered up by far-fetched (and varying) explanations.] β. The Glossary to Sir W. Scott's novels has whigamore, a great whig; also whiggery, jogging rudely, urging forward; Jamieson has 'whig, to go quickly; whig awa', to move at an easy and steady pace, to jog (Liddesdale); to whig awa' with a cart, remarks Sir W. Scott, signifies to drive it briskly on.' I suspect that the h is intrusive, and that these words are connected with Lowland Sc. wiggle, to wriggle (or rather to keep moving about) and with A.S. wægan, to move, agitate, also to move along (intransitive). See Wag. Der. whigg-ish, -ish-ly, -ism, -ery.

WHILE, a time, space of time. (E.) M.E. whil, while, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 46. — A.S. hwil, sb. a time, Grein, ii. 120. + Icel. hwila, only in the special sense of a place of rest, a bed. + Dan. hwile, rest. + Swed. hwila, rest. + G. weile, O.H.G. hwiltla. + Goth. hweila, a time, season.

β. The Teut. type is HWILA, a time, rest, pause, time of repose; Fick, iii. 75. Prob. allied to Lat. qui-es, rest; see Quiet. Der. while, adv., from some case of the sb., prob. from the acc. or dat. hwile; whil-es, Matt. v. 25, M.E. whiles, Chaucer, C.T. 35 (in the Harleian MS.), where whiles is the gen. case used adverbially, as in twi-es, twice, ned-es, needs, &c. [but note that the A.S. genitive is hwile, the sb. being feminine]; hence whil-s-t, Spenser, F.Q. ii. 2. 16, with added excrement t after s (as in among-s-t, amid-s-t). Also whil-om, spelt whylome in Spenser, F.Q. ii. 2. 13, from A.S. hwilum, instr. or dat. pl. of hwil, signifying 'at times.' Also mean-while, see Mean (3); while-ere, Temp. iii. 2. 127. Also whiling-time, the 'waiting a little before dinner,' Spectator, no. 448, Aug. 4, 1712; whence 'to while away time;' prob. with some thought of confusion with wile.

WHIM, a sudden fancy, a crotchety. (Scand.) 'With a whym-wham Knyt with a trym-tram Upon her brayne-pan;' Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 75. — Icel. hwima, to wander with the eyes, as a silly person; Norweg. hwima, to whisk or flutter about, to trifle, play the fool (Aasen); cf. Swed. dial. hwimmer-kantig, dizzy, giddy in the head; Icel. vim, giddiness, folly. β. This etymology is verified at once by the derived word whimsey, a whim, pl. whimsies, Beaum. and Fletcher, Women Pleased, iii. 2, last line; this is from the allied Norweg. hwimsa, Dan. vimse, to skip, whisk, jump from one thing to another, Swed. dial. hwimsa, to be unsteady, giddy, dizzy. Cf. W. chwimio, to be in motion, chwimlo, to move briskly. γ. All from a base HWIM, to move briskly, allied to Whip, q.v. Der. whim-wham, a reduplicated word, as above; whims-ey, as above; whimsic-al, whimsic-al-ly; whim-ling (Nares). Also wim-ble (2), q.v.

WHIMPER, to cry in a low, whining voice. (E.) 'Lieue in puling and whimpering and heuines of hert;' Sir T. More, p. 90 (R.). And in Palsgrave. A frequentative form, from whimpe. 'There shall be intractables, that will whimpe and whine;' Latimer, Seven Sermons (March 22, 1549), ed. Arber, p. 77, last line. In both words, the p is excrement, as is so common after m; whimper and whimpe stand for whimmer and whim; cf. Scotch whimmer, to whimper. And further, whim is but another form of whine, so that Latimer joins the words naturally enough. See Whine. + Low G. wemern, to whimper. + G. wimmern. Der. whimper-er.

WHIN, gorse, furze. (C.) 'Whynnes or hethe, bruiere;' Palsgrave. 'Whynne, Saliunca;' Prompt. Parv. 'With thornes, breres, and moni a quyn;' Ywain and Gawain, 159; in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 8. — W. chwyn, weeds; also, a weed; cf. Bret. chouenna (with guttural ch), to weed.

WHINE, to utter a plaintive cry. (E.) M.E. whinen, said of a horse, Chaucer, C.T. 5968. — A.S. hwinan, to whine, Grein, ii. 122. + Icel. hwina, to whiz, whirl. + Dan. hwine, to whistle, to whine. + Swed. hwina, to whistle. β. All from the Teut. base HWIN, to make a discordant noise, to make a creaking or whizzing sound; Fick, iii. 95. Cf. Skt. hvan, to buzz; also Icel. hveina, to wail; Goth. hwaīnon, to mourn. And see Whir, Whiz, Whisk, Whisper, Wheeze, Whimper. Der. whine, sb., whin-er, whin-ing; also whinn-y, Drayton, The Moon-calf, l. 121 from end (R.), which is a sort of frequentative. And see whimp-er.

WHIP, to move suddenly and quickly, to flog. (E.) 'I whipt me behind the arras,' Much Ado, i. 3. 6; 'Whips out his rapier,' Hamlet, iv. 1. 10. This seems to be the orig. sense, whence the notion of flogging (with a quick sudden stroke) seems to have been evolved. [The alleged A.S. hweop, a whip, and hweopian, to whip, scourge, are solely due to Sommer, and unauthorised; the A.S. word for 'scourge' being swipe, John, ii. 15.] Another sense of whip is 'to overlay a cord by rapidly binding thin twine or silk thread round it, and this is the only sense of M.E. whippen noticed in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Whippyn, or closyn threde in sylke, as sylke-womene [do], Obvolvō.' The sb. whippe, a scourge, occurs in Chaucer, 5757, 9545; it is spelt quippe in Wright's Voc. i. 154. All from the notion of rapid movement. The word is presumably English, and is preserved in the nearest cognate languages. Cf. Du. wippen, to skip, to hasten, also to give the strappado, formerly 'to shake, to wagge,' Hexham; Du. wip, a moment, a swipe, the strappado, O. Du. wippe, 'a whip or a scourge,' Hexham. + Low G. wippen, wippen, to go up and down, as on a see-saw; wips! quickly. + Dan. wippe, to see-saw, rock, bob, wips! pop! wipstiert, a wag-tail, lit. 'whip-start,' where start = tail. + Swed. wippa, to wag, to jerk or give the strappado; wippgalge, a gibbet, lit. 'whip-gallows,' wips! quick! + G. wippen, to move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, to draw up a malefactor at a gibbet, and drop him again, to give the strappado; wipp-galgen, a gibbet. β. I find no early authority for the h; it may have been added for emphasis. The root is almost certainly WIP, to tremble, vibrate; see Vibrate.

γ. If so, the Gael. cuip, a whip, W. chwip, a quick turn, chwipio, to move briskly or nimbly, are borrowed from the English, and have taken up different senses of the E. word. And see Quip. Der. whip, sb., as above; whip-cord, -hand, -lash; whipper; whipp-er-in, one who keeps the hounds from wandering, and whips them in to the line of chase; whipp-ing, -ing-post; also whip-ster, Oth. v. 2. 244; whip-stock, i. e. whip-handle, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 28, and in Palsgrave; and see whipp-le-tree. And see wisp, wipe.

WHIPPLE-TREE, a swing-bar, to which traces are fastened for drawing a carriage, &c. (E.) In Forby's Norfolk Glossary (1830). Spelt whippel-tree in Palsgrave, where it is left unexplained. M.E. whippeltree, whippultre, Chaucer, C.T. 2925, in a list of trees; but whether Chaucer here speaks seriously, or whether there was a special tree whence whipple-trees were made and which was named from them, we cannot certainly say. We know, however, that (like swingle-tree) the word means 'piece of swinging wood,' and is composed of tree in the sense of timber (as in axle-tree, &c.) and the verb whipple, frequentative of whip, to move about quickly, to see-saw. See Whip and Tree; and see Swingletree.

WHIR, to buzz, whirl round with a noise. (Scand.) In Shak. Pericles, iv. 1. 21. 'Not an old word, and prob. to some extent imitative, like whiz. — Dan. hvirre, to whirl, twirl; Swed. dial. hvirra, to whirl (Rietz). We may connect it with Whirl. And see Whiz.

WHIRL, to swing rapidly round, to cause to revolve rapidly, to rotate quickly. (Scand.) M. E. whirlen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 80. In Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 24, the earlier version has 'whirl-puff of wind,' and the later version 'whirling of wind.' This word is not a mere extension of whir (which is not found till a later date), but is a contraction for whirlf-le, frequentative of the verb equivalent to M. E. wherfen, to turn (Stratmann); and it is of Scand. origin rather than directly from A. S. hwærfan. — Icel. hvirfla, to whirl, frequent. of hverfa (pt. t. hvarf), to turn round. — Teut. base HWARB, to turn, Fick, iii. 93; see Wharf. + Dan. hvirvle, to whirl. + Swed. hvirfla, to whirl; cf. hvarf, a turn. + O. Du. weruelen, 'to whirl,' Hexham. + G. wirbeln, to whirl; also, to warble. Der. whirl, sb.; whirl-wind, spelt whyrle-wynde, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. hvirflvindr, a whirl-wind, Dan. hvirvelvind, Swed. hvirvelvind; whirl-pool, spelt whirlpole in Palsgrave, and applied to a large fish, from the commotion which it makes. Also whirl-i-gig, spelt whirlygigge (to play with) in Palsgrave; see Gig. Doublet, warble.

WHISK, to sweep round rapidly, to brush, sweep quickly, move quickly. (Scand.) The proper sense is merely 'to brush or sweep,' esp. with a quick motion, then to flourish about as when using a light brush; then (as in our phrases to brush along, to sweep along) to whisk is to move quickly, esp. with a kind of flourish. The h is intrusive, and probably due to confusion with whiz, whirl, &c. It should rather be wisk, as it is, etymologically, related to wash. 'He winched [winced] still alwayes, and whisked with his taile;' Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 493. 'The whyskyng rod;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 1161. 'Whisking his riding-rod;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman, Act ii (Gentleman). 'As she whisked it' [her tail]; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 897. Cf. prov. E. whisk, to switch, beat, wisk, to switch, move rapidly (Halliwell). The sk (as in many words) indicates a Scand. origin. — Dan. visk, to wipe, rub, sponge; from visk, sb., a wisp, a rubber; Swed. viska, to wipe, to sponge, also to wag (the tail), from viska, a whisk. Widegren's Swed. Dict. gives viska, 'a small broom, whisk;' and the example hunden viskar med svansen, 'the dog wags his tail,' which precisely shews the sense of the E. word in old authors. [The verb is, in fact, formed from the sb., which appears further in Icel. visk, a wisp of hay or the like, lit. something to wipe or wash off with. The E. sb. whisk, a small besom or brush, is used by Boyle and Swift; see Todd's Johnson.] + G. wischen, 'to wipe, whisk, rub,' Flügel; from the sb. wisch, 'a whisk, clout, wisp, malkin,' id. β. The sb. which thus appears as Icel. and Dan. visk, Swed. viska, G. wisch, is a weakened form, derived from the Teut. base WASK, to wash; Fick, iii. 301. See Wash. Der. whisk, sb. (as above, really a more orig. word). Hence whisker, sb., from its likeness to a small brush; 'old Nestor put aside his gray beard and brush'd her with his whiskers,' Dryden, Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); whisker-ed. Also whisk-y, a kind of light gig, from its being easily whisked along; it occurs in Crabbe, Tales of the Hall, b. viii (R.).

WHISKEY, WHISKY, a spirit distilled from grain, &c. (Gaelic.) In Johnson's Dict. — Gael. uisge-beatha, water of life, whisky; the equivalent of F. eau de vie. We have dropped the latter element, retaining only uisge, water. See Usquebaugh. [+]

WHISPER, to speak very softly, or under the breath. (E.) M. E. whisperen; 'Whysperyn, mussito;' Prompt. Parv. In Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 19, 'whispering' is expressed by whistrende or whistringe. — O. Northumbrian hwisprian; the Lat. murmurabant is glossed by hwispredon in the Rushworth MS., and by hwæstredon in the Lindisfarne MS.; Luke, xix. 7. Again, the Lat. murmur is glossed by hwisprunge in the Rushworth MS., and by hwæstrung in the Lind. MS.; John, vii. 12. We see, then, that hwisprian and hwæstrian were parallel forms, and hwæstrian is evidently closely allied to A. S. hwistlian, to whistle. Whisper and whistle are allied words, both of an imitative character; further, they are frequentatives, from the bases whisp- and whist- respectively; and these are extended from an imitative Teut. base HWIS, allied to the Teut. base HWAS, to breathe hard; see Wheeze. + O. Du. wisperen, wispelen, to whisper; Hexham. + G. wispeln. So also (from the base whisk or hwisk) we have Icel. hviskra, Swed. hviska, Dan. hviske, to whisper. Der. whisper, sb., whisper-er.

WHIST, hush, silence; a game at cards. (E.) The game at cards is named from the silence requisite to play it attentively. The old verb whist, to keep silence, also to silence, has whisted for its past tense, but whist for its pp. 'So was the Titanesque put down and whist,' i. e. silenced; Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 59. 'All the companie must be whist,' i. e. silent; Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 67. 'They whisted all' = they all kept silence, Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 1. M. E. whist, interj., be silent! Wyclif, Judges, xviii. 19 (earlier version), where the later version has Be thou stille, and the Vulgate has tace. It is thus seen to have been orig. an interjection, commanding silence. See Hist and Hush. Cf. Lat. st! hist! G. st! bst! pst! hist, hush, stop! 'The orig. intention of the utterance is to represent a slight sound, such as that of something stirring, or the breathing or whispering of some one approaching. Something stirs; listen; be still;' Wedgwood. By way of further illustration may be quoted: 'I . . . made a contenance [gesture] with my hande in maner to been hwiseke,' i. e. to enjoin silence; Test. of Love, b. ii, in Chaucer's Workes, ed. 1561, fol. 301, col. 2. [+]

WHISTLE, to make a shrill sound by forcing the breath through the contracted lips. (E.) M. E. whistlen, P. Plowman, B. xv. 467. — A. S. hwistlan, or hwistlian, to whistle, only found in derivatives; we find hwistlere, a whistler, piper, Matt. ix. 23; 'Sibilation, hwistlung,' Wright's Voc. i. p. 46, col. 1; 'Fistula, wistle, id. ii. 37, col. 1. A frequentative verb, from a base HWIS, meant to imitate the hissing sound of whistling, and allied to the Teut. base HWAS, to breathe hard; see Wheeze. And see Whisper. + Icel. hvisla, to whisper; from hvis, whew! to imitate the sound of whistling. + Dan. hvisle, to whistle, also to hiss. + Swed. hvisla, to whistle. Der. whistle, sb.; whistle-er, A. S. hwistlere, as above.

WHIT, a thing, a particle, a bit. (E.) The h is in the wrong place; whit stands for wiht = wight, and is the same word as wight, a person. M. E. wight, a person; also a thing, a bit. 'For she was falle aslepe a little wight' = for she had fallen asleep a little whit; Chaucer, C. T. 4281. 'A lutewhit' = a little bit, for a short time, Ancræn Riwe, p. 72, l. 24. — A. S. wiht, (1) a wight, person, (2) a whit, bit; see abundant examples in Grein, ii. 704. The latter sense is particularly conspicuous in awiht = aught, i. e. a whit, and nawiht = naught, i. e. no whit. See further under Wight (1). Der. aught, q.v.; naught, q.v.

WHITE, of the colour of snow, very pale. (E.) M. E. whit (with long i), whyht; pl. white, Chaucer, C. T. 90. — A. S. hwit; Grein, ii. 122. + Du. wit. + Icel. hvitr. + Dan. hvid. + Swed. hvit. + Goth. hwerts. + G. weiss; O. H. G. hwiz. β. All from Teut. base HWITA, white, shining; further allied to Skt. çveta, white, from çvit, to be white, to shine. The Teut. words are from √ KWID, to shine (Fick, i. 555); the Skt. çveta is from √ KWIT, to shine, whence also Russ. svetluii, light, bright, svetite, to shine, give light, O. Lithuan. szweitu, later form szwieciu, I make white, I cleanse. Both are from an earlier √ KWI, to shine, not found. Cf. √ SKI, to shine, whence E. shine. Der. white-ly; white-ness, spelt whynesse in Prompt. Parv. Also white, verb, M. E. hwiten, used intransitively, to become white, Ancræn Riwe, p. 150, l. 7; whiten, M. E. hwitenen, to make white, Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. l. 9, but properly intransitive, from Icel. hvítina, to become white (see note on Waken). Also whit-ing, a fish with delicate white flesh, spelt whityng in Prompt. Parv.; it also means ground chalk. Also whit-ish, whit-ish-ness; white-bait, a fish; white-faced, K. John, ii. 23; white-heat, white-lead, spelt whyte led in Prompt. Parv.; white-limed, spelt whitlymed, P. Plowman, B. xv. 111; white-livered, i. e. cowardly, Hen. V. iii. 2. 34; white-wash. And see wheat, whit-ster, Whit-sunday, whitt-le (3).

But not whit-low.

WHITHER, to what place. (E.) M. E. whider; spelt whidir, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 12, whidir, id. xiv. 14. (Cf. M. E. fader for father, moder for mother.) — A. S. hwider, hwuyder, Grein, ii. 120. + Goth. hwadre, whither, John, vii. 35. Closely allied to Whether, and formed from the Teut. base HWA, who, with a compar. suffix answering to Aryan -tar; see Whether. And see Hither, a more widely spread word; prob. whither was coined to accompany it. Der. whither-ward, M. E. whiderward, Chaucer, C. T. 11814; whither-so-ever.

WHITLOW, a painful swelling on the fingers. (Scand.) Nothing but a careful tracing of the history of the word will explain it; it is an extraordinary corruption of quick-flaw, i. e. a flaw or flaking off of the skin in the neighbourhood of the quick, or sensitive part of the finger round the nail. The word is properly Northern, and of Scand. origin. It is still preserved, in an uncorrupted form, in the North. E. whickflaw, a whitlow (Halliwell). Here whick is the well-known (and very common) Northern form of quick, in the sense of 'alive' and 'quick' part of the finger. This is why the sore was called paronychia. 'Paronychia, a preternatural swelling or sore, under the root of the nail, in one's finger, or whitlow;' Phillips, ed. 1706. [Der. from Gk. παρ, for παρά, beside, and ὄνυξ, crude form of ὄνυξ, the nail.] And this is also why horses were subject to whitlows; in farriery, it is a disease of the feet, of an inflammatory kind, occurring round the hoof, where an acrid matter is collected (Webster); the hoof of the horse answering to the nail of a man. 'Cf. 'Quick-scab, a distemper in horses,' Bailey, vol. i. (1735). β. The only real difficulty is with the former syllable; that the latter syllable is properly flaw, is easily established. Cotgrave explains poil de chat by 'whitlow;' but Palsgrave has: 'Whitflowe in ones fyngre, poil de chat.' The spelling whitflaw is commoner still; it occurs repeatedly in Holland's tr. of Pliny (see the index), and is once spelt white-flaw, shewing that the former syllable was already confused with the adj. white. 'Whitflawes about the root of the nails,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 4. § 1; &c., &c. 'Paronychia . . . by the vulgar people amongst us it is generally called a whitflaw;' Wiseman, Surgery, b. i. c. 11 (R.). Both parts of the word are properly Scandinavian. — Icel. kviķa, 'the quick under the nail or under a horse's hoof;' otherwise kvikva, 'the flesh under the nails, and in animals under the hoofs;' and Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach, also a flake, Icel. flagna, 'to flake off, as skin or slough.' See Quick and Flaw.

¶ Whic easily turned to whit, which was naturally interpreted as white (from the words whit-tawer, whitster), the more so as the swelling is often of a white colour; the true sense of the word was thus lost, and a whitlow was applied to any similar sore on the finger, whether near the quick or not.

WHITSUNDAY, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the day of Pentecost. (E.) Lit. white Sunday, as will appear. The word is old. In the Ancræn Riwle, p. 412, l. 13, we have mention of whitesundei immediately after a mention of holi þursdei. Again, we find: 'þe holi goste, þet þu on hwite sune dei sendest' = the Holy Ghost, whom thou didst send on Whit-sunday; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 209, l. 16. [In Layamon, l. 31524, we already have mention of white sune tide, i.e. Whitsun-tide, which in the later version appears in the form Witsontime, shewing that even at that early period the word White was beginning to be confused with wit; hence the spelling witsundai in Wycliffe's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 158, 159, &c., is not at all surprising. In the same, p. 161, we already find witsun-weke, i.e. Whitsun week.] — A.S. hwita Sunnan-dæg; only in the dat. case hwitan sunnan dæg, A.S. Chron. an. 1067. However, the A.S. name is certified, beyond all question, by the fact that it was early transplanted into the Icelandic language, and appears there as hwitasunnudagr. In Icelandic we also find hwita-daga, lit. 'white days,' as a name for Whitsun week, which was also called hwitadaga-vika = whitedays-week, and hwitasunnudags-vika = Whitsunday's week.

β. All these names are unmistakable, and it is also tolerably certain that the E. name White Sunday is not older than the Norman conquest; for, before that time, the name was always Pentecoste (see Pentecost). We are therefore quite sure that, for some reason or other, the name Pentecost was then exchanged for that of White Sunday, which came into common use, and was early corrupted into Whit-Sunday, proving that white was soon misunderstood, and was wrongly supposed to refer to the wit or wisdom conferred by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, on which theme it was easy for the preacher (to whom etymology was no object) to expatiate. Nevertheless, the truer spelling has been preserved to this day, not only in English and in modern Icelandic, but in the very plainly marked modern Norwegian dialects, wherein it is called Kvitsunddag, whilst Whitsun-week is called Kvitsunn-vika, obviously from kvit, white, and from nothing else (Aasen). See, therefore, White and Sunday. β. But when we come to consider why this name was given to the day, room is at last opened for conjecture. Perhaps the best explanation is Mr. Vigfusson's, in the Icel. Dict., who very pertinently remarks that even Bingham gives no reference whatever to Icelandic writers, though, from the nature of the case, they know most about it, the word having been borrowed by Icelandic whilst it was still but new to English. He says: 'The great festivals, Yule, Easter, and Pentecost, but esp. the two latter, were the great seasons for christening: in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in Roman usage the Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; but in the Northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter-time, Pentecost, as the birth-day of the church, seems to have been esp. appointed for christening and for ordination; hence the following week was called the Holy Week (Helga Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments;' &c. See the whole passage, and the authorities cited. ¶ It is not likely that this account will be accepted by such as prefer their own guess-work, made without investigation, to any evidence, however clear. It deserves to be recorded, as a specimen of English popular etymology, that many still prefer to consider A.S. hwita sunnan (occurring in the A.S. Chronicle) as a corruption of the mod. G. pfingsten (which is acknowledged to be from the Gk. πεντηκοστή). Seeing that pfingsten is a modern form, and is an old dative case turned into a nominative, the M. H. G. word being pfingeste, we are asked to believe that pfingeste became hwita su, and that nnan was afterwards luckily added! This involves the change of pf (really a p) into hw, and of ste into tasu, together with a simultaneous loss of nge. Comment is needless. Der. Whitsun-week, a shortened form for Whitsunday's week (as shewn by Icel. hwitasunnudags-vika); and similarly, Whitsun-tide. Also Whit-Monday, Whit-Tuesday, names coined to match Whit-Sunday; formerly called Monday in Whitsun-week, &c.; Wycliffe, Works, ii. 161.

WHITTLE (1), to pare or cut with a knife. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. A mere derivative from the sb. whittle, a knife, Timon, v. i. 183. Again, whittle is the same as M. E. hwitel, thwitel, a knife, Chaucer, C. T. 3931. Lit. 'a cutter;' formed, with suffix -el of the agent (Aryan -ra), from A.S. hwitan, to thwite, to cut, to pare; whence the verb which is spelt by Palsgrave both thwite and whyte. See Rom. of the Rose, l. 933. ¶ The alleged A.S. hwitel, a knife, is a mere myth; see Whittle (3).

WHITTLE (2), to sharpen. (E.) Used as a slang term; 'well whittled and thoroughly drunk;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 387 (R.). 'Thoroughly whittled' = thoroughly drunk; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 22. The lit. sense is, sharpened like a whittle or knife; see Whittle (1). It has obviously been confused with whet, the frequentative of which, however, could only have been whettle, and does not occur.

WHITTLE (3), a blanket. (E.) M. E. hwitel, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 76. — A.S. hwitel, a blanket, Gen. ix. 23. Lit. 'a small white thing.' — A.S. hwit, white. See White. + Icel. hwitill, a whittle; from hwit, white; Norweg. kvitel, from kvit, white (Aasen). Cf. E. blank-et, from F. blanc, white. ¶ Somner, not understanding this, gave 'knife' as one sense of A.S. hwitel; he was clearly thinking of whittle, which happens to be a corruption of thwitel; see Whittle (1). His mistake has been carefully preserved in many dictionaries.

WHIZ, to make a hissing sound. (E.) 'The woods do whiz;' Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. l. 536. An imitative word, allied to Whistle, q.v. Cf. Icel. kvissa, to hiss, to run with a hissing sound, said, e.g., of a stream; and cf. E. whzeeze.

WHO, an interrogative and relative pronoun. (E.) 'Formerly who, what, which, were not relative, but interrogative pronouns; which, whose, whom occur as relatives [misprinted interrogatives] as early as the end of the twelfth century, but who not until the 14th century, and was not in common use before the 16th century;' Morris, Hist. Outlines of E. Accidence, § 188. — A.S. hwā, who (interrogatively), masc. and fem.; hwæt, neuter; gen. hwæs, for all genders; dat. hwām [not hwam], also hwām, for all genders; acc. masc. hwone, fem. hwone, neut. hwæt; instrumental hwī, hwū (mod. E. why); Grein, ii. 113; Sweet, A.S. Reader. We now have who = A.S. hwā; what = hwæt; whose = hwæs, with a lengthening of the vowel, to agree with the vowel of other cases (seldom used in the neuter, though there is nothing against it); whom = dat. hwām, but also used for the accusative, the old acc. hwone being lost; why = inst. hwī; see Why. + Du. wie, who; wat, what; wien, whose; wien, whom (dat. and acc.) + Icel. hverr, hver, who; hvat, what; hvers, whose; hverjum (masc.), whom; pl. hverir, &c. + Dan. hvo, who; hvad, what; hvis, whose; hvem, whom (dat. and acc.) + Swed. hvem, who, whom (nom. dat. and acc.); hvad, what; hvems, hvars, whose. + G. wer, who; was, what; wessen, wess, whose; wem, to whom; wen, whom (acc.) + Goth. nom. hwas, hwo, hwa (or hwata); gen. hwis, hwizos, hwis; dat. hwamma, hwizai, hwamma; acc. hwana, hwo, hwa (or hwata); instr. hwe; pl. hwai, &c. + Irish and Gael. co. + W. pyy. + Lat. quis, quæ, quid. + Russ. kto, chto, who, what. + Lithuan. kas, who. + Skt. kaś, who (masc.), kim, what; kam, whom (acc.) β. All from the interrogative base KA (Teut. HWA), who? The neuter has the characteristic neut. suffix -d (Lat. qui-d), Teut. -t (E. wha-t, Goth. hwa-ta), as in the words i-t, tha-t. Der. who-ever, who-so-ever. Also whē-n, whē-re, whē-ther, whi-ch, whi-ther, why. Also quidd-i-ty, qua-li-ty, qua-nti-ty.

WHOLE, hale, sound, entire, complete. (E.) The orig. sense is 'hale,' or in sound health; hence the senses entire, complete, &c., have been deduced. The spelling with initial w is curious, and points back to a period when a w-sound was initially prefixed in some dialect and afterwards became general; this pronunciation is now again lost. We have other examples in whot = hot, Spenser, F. Q. ii. l. 58, 9. 29, &c.; in whore = hore; in whoop = M. E. houpen, where the w is still sounded; and in mod. E. wum as the pronunciation of one, where the w is never written. I believe the spelling with w is not older than about A.D. 1500; Palsgrave, in 1530, still writes hole. 'A whole man;' Golden Booke, c. 29; first printed in 1534. Richardson cites the adv. wholly from Gower; but of course Paul's edition (vol. ii. p. 4, l. 21) has holy (for holly). M.E. hol, hool, Wyclif, John, v. 6. — A.S. hāl, whole; whence M.E. hool by the usual change from A.S. á to M.E. long o, as in A.S. stān = M.E. stoon, a stone; Grein, ii. 6. + Du. heel. + Icel. heill (whence E. hale, q.v.) + Dan. heel. + Swed. hel. + G. heil. + Goth. hails. β. All from Teut. type HAILA, hale, whole, Fick, iii. 57. Further allied to Gk. kalós, excellent, good, hale, and to Skt. kalya, healthy, hale. The Skt. kalya is allied to kalyānā, prosperous, blessed, where the lingual n proves that the orig. form was karyāna (Benfey). Consequently, the root is ✓KAR, but whether in the sense 'to make,' whence whole would be 'well-made,' or in the sense 'to sound, call, praise,' whence whole would be 'praiseworthy,' is uncertain. Fick, i. 520, 529, 530. Der. whol-ly, M.E. holly, holy, in Gower, as above, Chaucer, C. T. 601; whole-ness (modern). Also whole-some, M.E. holsum, holsum, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 947, spelt halsum in the Ormulum, 2915, not in A.S., but suggested by Icel. heilsamr, salutary, formed from heill, whole, with suffix -samr corresponding to E. -some; hence whole-somely, whole-some-ness. Also whole-sale, used by Addison (Todd), from the phr. 'by whole sale,' as opposed to retail. Also heel, q.v.; hol-y, q.v. Doublet, hale.

✚ If we write whole for hale, we ought to write wholy for holy: 'For their wholy conversacion,' Roy, Rede Me and be not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 75, l. 24.

WHOOP, to shout clearly and loudly. (F. — Teut.) Here, as in the case of whole, whot for hot (Spenser), and a few other words, the initial w is unoriginal, and the spelling should rather be hoop. The spelling with w dates from about A.D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, has: 'I whoope, I call, je huppe;' yet Shakespeare (ed. 1623) has hooping, As You Like It, iii. 2. 203. [Oddly enough, the derivative whoobub is, conversely, now spelt hubbub; see Hubbub.] M.E. houfen, to call, shout, P. Plowman, B. vi. 174; Chaucer, C. T. 15406. — F. hooper, 'to hoop unto, or call afar off'; Cot. Of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. hwopjan, to boast, Romans, xi. 8. Der. whoop, sb.; whooping-cough or hoop-ing-cough; hubbub. Doublet, hoop (2), which is a mere variation of spelling, and exactly the same word.

WHORE, a harlot. (Scand.) As in the case of whole, q.v., the initial w is not older than about A.D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, still has hore. In Bale's Kynge Johan, ed. Collier, p. 26, l. 21, we find horson, but on p. 76, l. 12, it is whoreson. [It is remarkable that the word hoar, white, as applied to hair, also occurs with initial w at about the same period. 'The heere of his hedd was whore' = the hair of his head was hoar; Monk of Evesham, c. 12; ed. Arber, p. 33.] M.E. hore, King Alisaunder, l. 1000; P. Plowman, B. iv. 166. The word is certainly not A.S., as Somner would have us believe, but Scandinavian. [The A.S. word was miltestre, Matt. xxi. 31, founded on the verb meit.] In the Laws of Canute (Secular), § 4, we find hór-cwén, an adulteress, where the Danish word has the A.S. cwén (a queen) added to it, by way of explanation; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 378. — Icel. hóla, an adulteress, fem. of hórr, an adulterer (we also find hór, neut. sb., adultery); Dan. hore; Swed. hora. + Du. hoer. + G. hure, O.H.G. huora. + Goth. hors, masc., an adulterer, Luke, xviii. 11. β. The Teut. type is HÖRA, orig. an adulterer, a masc. sb.; Fick, iii. 80. Allied to Church-Slavonic kuruwa, an adulteress (cited by Fick), Polish kuruwa, in Schmidt, Polish Dict. β. This difficult word is traced further by Fick (ii. 315); he associates it with Lat. cārus, dear, orig. 'loving'; Irish caram, I love, Skt. chāru, agreeable, beautiful, &c.; all from ✓KA, to love (i. 34), whence also Skt. kan, to love, to be satisfied, kam, to love, kāma, love, desire, kāmin, desiring, having sexual intercourse, a lover, kāmaga, a lascivious woman, &c. γ. If this be right, the word prob. meant at first no more than 'lover,' and afterwards descended in the scale, as so often happens; this would account for its use in Gothic and Icelandic with reference to the male sex.

✚ In any case, we can tell, by phonetic laws, that it is not derived from, nor in any way connected with, the verb to hire, as is usually asserted by a specious but impossible guess. Der. whore-dom, M.E. hordom, Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 20, from Icel. hórdómr, Swed. hordom, whor-ish, Troil. iv. 1. 63, whor-ish-ly, -ness; -master, K. Lear, i. 2. 137, spelt hore-maister in Palsgrave; -monger, Meas. for Meas. iii. 2. 37; -son, in Bale, Kynge Johan (as above).

WHORL, a number of leaves disposed in a circle round the stem of a plant. (E.) It is the same word as wharl, which is the name for a piece of wood or bone placed on a spindle to twist it by. This is also called a wharrow, a picture of which will be found in Guillim, Display of Heraldry, 1664, p. 289; 'The round ball [disc] at the lower end serveth to the fast twisting of the thread, and is called a wharrow.' The likeness between a wharl on a spindle and a whorl of leaves is sufficiently close. Palsgrave has: 'Wharle for a spyndell, peson.' Wharl, whorl are contr. forms for wharvel, whorvel. 'Whorl-wyl, whorwhil, whorle of a spyndyl, Vertebtrum,' Prompt. Parv.; where whorl-wyl is clearly an error for whorwyl (= whorvil). The A.S. name was hweorfa; we find 'Vertelum [sic], hweorfa' in a list of spinning-implements, Wright's Voc. i. 281; this is clearly an allied word, but without the suffix -el, and the etymology is from the strong verb hweorfan, to turn; see Whirl and Wharf. β. The particular form whorl may have been borrowed from O. Du., and introduced by the Flemish weavers; cf. O. Du. worvel, 'a spinning-whirl,' Hexham; also worvelen, 'to turne, to reele, to twine,' id.; these words are from the same root, and help to account for the vowel o. [†]

WHORTLE-BERRY, a bilberry. (E.) 'Airelles, whurtle-berries;' Cot. From A.S. wyrtil, a small shrub, dimin. of wyrt, a wort; see Wort (1). 'Biscop-wyrtil,' Wright's Voc. i. 31. ✚ Not from heart-berige = hart-berry, as Lye carelessly asserts.

WHY, on what account. (E.) Why is properly the instrumental case of who, and was, accordingly, frequently preceded by the prep. for, which (in A.S.) sometimes governed that case. M.E. whi, why, Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 26; for whi = on which account, because, id. viii. 9. — A.S. hwi, hwý, hwig, instr. case of hwa, who; for hwig, why; Grein, ii. 113. See Who. + Icel. hvi, why; allied to hverr, who, hvat, what. + Dan. hvi. + Swed. hvi. + O.H.G. hwit, wit, instr. case of hwer (G. wer), who. + Goth. hve, instr. case of hwas, who. β. The word how is either a variation of why, or at the least very closely related; March identifies them, considering A.S. hú as an outcome of A.S. hwi. See How.

WI—WY.

WICK (1), the cluster of threads of cotton in a lamp or candle. (E.) Spelt weeke, in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 30. M.E. wicke, P. Plowman, C. xx. 204; weyke, id. B. xvii. 239; wueke, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 47, l. 30. — A.S. weoca. 'Funalia, vel funes, candel-weoca;' Wright's Gloss., i. 41, col. 2; pl. candel-weocan, id. ii. 36, col. 1. It is said to be also spelt wecca, in a gloss (Bosworth). + O. Du. wiecke, 'a weeke of a lampe, a tent to put into a wounde;' Hexham. + Low G. weke, lint, to put to a wound. + Dan. væge, a wick. + Swed. veke, a wick; Widgren. + Bavarian wichengarn, wick-yarn, Schmeller, 835; he also gives various G. forms, viz. O. H. G. wieche, weche, with a reference to Graff, i. 728.

β. The orig. sense is simply, 'the pliant or soft part,' and it is closely allied to E. weak. This will appear, in every Teutonic language, if the word be carefully examined. The A.S. wíc, weak, and weoca, a wick, are both from the same base wic-, appearing in wic-en, pp. of wican, to give way; see Weak. The O. Du. wiecke is allied to O. Du. weeck, soft. The Low G. weke is allied to Low G. week, soft, whence weken, to soften, also to thaw. The Dan. væge is allied to veg, pliant, vige, to yield; this appears more clearly in the Norweg. vík, a skein of thread, the same word as vík, a bend, from vika, to bend, yield. The Swed. veke, a wick, is from the adj. vek, weak, soft; cf. vekna, to soften. The Bavarian wichengarn is rightly connected by Schmeller with G. weich, soft, pliant. γ. The present is a case where attention to the vowel-sounds is particularly useful; by ordinary phonetic laws, the A.S. weoca is for *wica, and the A.S. wíc is for *wiuc, strengthened form of wic; and similarly in other languages. The application of soft, pliant, &c., to a piece of lint, to a twist of thread for a wick, or (as in Norwegian) to a skein of thread, is obvious enough. δ. The dimin. form appears in Bavar. wickel, a bunch of flax, as much as is put on the distaff at once; hence the G. verb wickeln, to wind up, wrap up, roll round, which is a mere derivative. See Wicker.

✚ The Icelandic word bears only a casual resemblance, and is really unconnected. It is kveikr, lit. 'that which is kindled,' from kveikja, to quicken, kindle, allied to E. quick; see Quick. It is just possible that the word has been corrupted, in Icelandic, by a mistaken notion as to the orig. sense. But it must not mislead us. WICK (2), a town. (L.) A.S. wic, a village, town; Grein, ii. 688. Not E., but borrowed. — Lat. vicus, a village; see Vicinity. WICK (3), WICH, a creek, bay. (Scand.) In some place-names, as in Green-wick, &c. — Icel. vík, a small creek, inlet, bay; see Viking. ✚ It is not easy, in all cases, to distinguish between this and the word above. Ray, in his Account of Salt-making (E.D.S., Gloss. B. 15, p. 20), mentions Nant-wick, North-wick, Middle-wick, Droit-wick; here wick = brine-pit, merely a peculiar use of Icel. vík above.

WICKED, evil, bad, sinful. (E.) The word wicked was orig. a past participle, with the sense 'rendered evil,' formed as if from a verb *wikken, to make evil, from the obsolete adj. wikke (dissyllabic), evil, once common. Again, the adj. wikke was orig. a sb., viz. A.S. wicca, masc., a wizard, wicce, fem., a witch. Hence the adj. wikke meant, literally, 'witch-like;' and wicked is precisely a doublet of the mod. E. be-witched, without the prefix, and used in the sense of 'abandoned to evil' rather than 'controlled by witch-craft.' M.E.

wicked, as in the adv. wickedly, Chaucer, C. T. 8599; spelt wickeded, def. form of wicked, Layamon, later text, 14983, where it takes the place of swicfulle (deceitful) in the earlier text. This is prob. the earliest instance of the word.

β. The shorter form wikke is common; it occurs in Havelok, 688; P. Plowman, B. v. 229; Chaucer, C. T. 1089, 5448, 15429, &c. It became obsolete in the 15th century as an adj., but the sb. is still in use in the form witch. See further under Witch. Der. wickedly; wickedness, M. E. wikkednesse, P. Plowm. B. v. 290.

WICKER, made of twigs. (E. or Scand.) 'A wicker bottle,' Oth. ii. 3. 152 (folios, twiggen bottle). Wicker is properly a sb., meaning a pliant twig. M. E. wiker, wikir; 'Wykyr, to make wythe basketys, or to bynde wythe thyngys [i. e. to make baskets with, or bind things with], Vimen, vituligo;' Prompt. Parv. 'Wycker, osier;' Palsgrave. The A. S. form does not appear; but was prob. of the form *wicor, with suffix -or as in eald-or, an elder, kleaht-or, laughter, sig-or, victory, telg-or, a twig (=prov. E. teller, tiller), &c. The derivation is clear enough; it is formed with suffix -or, -er (Aryan -ra) from wic-, base of gewic-en, pp. of wican, to give way, bend, ply; see Weak.

β. This is certified by cognate words in the Scand. dialects; and perhaps E. wicker may even have been borrowed from Scandinavian. We find O. Swed. wika, to bend, whence weck, a fold, wickla, to fold, wrap round (Ihre); also Swed. dial. vekarer, vikker, vikker (which is our very word), various names for the sweet bay-leaved willow, Salix pentandra, lit. 'the bender,' from veka, to bend, to soften, allied to Swed. vika, to fold, to double, to plait (Widgren). Wicker-work means, accordingly, 'plaited work,' esp. such as is made with pliant twigs, according to the common usage of the word. The word is closely allied, in the same way, to Dan. veg, pliant (with g for k, as usual in Danish), in connection with which Wedgwood cites, from various Danish dialects, vøge, vögger, vegre, a pliant rod, a withy (lit. a wicker), vøgrekurv, vegrekurv, a wicker-basket, væger, vægger, a willow (=Swed. dial. vekarer above). γ. To go further, we find a form parallel to wicker in the Bavarian wickel, a bunch of tow on a distaff, G. wickel, a roll, whence wickeln, to wind up, roll up, wrap up; all from the fundamental notion of 'soft,' or 'bending,' or 'yielding;' see Wick. And see Witch-elm.

WICKET, a small gate. (F., -Scand.) M. E. wiket, P. Plowman, B. v. 611; Rom. of the Rose, 528. - O. F. *wiket, which is certainly the correct form, though Littré's quotations only give us the forms wisnet (with intrusive s) and viquet; mod. F. guchet, a wicket. Littré also cites the Walloon wichet, Norman viquet, Prov. guisquet, all of them deduced from the common form *wiket. A dimin. sb. formed from Icel. vik-inn, pp. of the strong verb vikja, to move, turn, veer; so that wicket is, literally, 'a small turning thing,' which easily gives way. It was esp. used of a small door made within a large gate, easily opened and shut. Cf. Swed. vicka, to wag; Swed. dial. vekka, vikka, to totter, see-saw, go backwards and forwards (Rietz); Swed. vika, to give way, vika åt sidan, to turn aside.

β. Littré and Scheler (following Diez) derive the F. word from Icel. vik, said to mean 'a lurking-place;' the Icel. Dict. only gives vik, the corner of the mouth, vik, a bay, creek, inlet; but it makes no ultimate difference, since all these are from the same strong verb vikja, and it is just as well to go back to it at once. The Icel. vikja is cognate with A. S. wican (pp. gewicen), to give way; see further under Weak. Cf. O. Du. wicket, a wicket, from wicken, 'to shake or to wagge,' Hexham; also winchet, 'a wicket,' id., from the nasalised form of the same root; see Wink. B. In the game of cricket, the wicket was at first (A. D. 1700) lit. 'a small gate,' being 2 feet wide by 1 foot high; but the shape has so greatly altered that there is no longer any resemblance. See the diagrams in the Eng. Cyclop. div. Arts and Sciences, Supplement; s. v. Cricket.

WIDE, broad, far extended. (E.) M. E. wid (with long i); pl. wide (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 28. - A. S. wid, wide; Grein, ii. 690. + Du. wijd. + Icel. vidr. + Swed. and Dan. vid. + G. weit, O. H. G. wit. β. All from Teut. type WIDA, wide, Fick, iii. 103. Perhaps the orig. sense is 'separated' or set apart; from the ✓ WIDH, to separate (Fick, i. 786). This is not a well-marked root, but we find Skt. vyadh, to pierce (answering to a base vidh); cf. vedha, piercing, breaking through. It is remarkable that the Skt. vedhana, lit. a piercing or perforation, also means depth, which is extension downwards instead of sideways. Der. wide-ly, -ness; wid-en, verb, Cor. i. 4. 44, with which cf. M. E. widen, Prompt. Parv., imperative wide, Palladius on Husbandry, iii. 923, though the mod. suffix -en is not the same as the ending of the M. E. infin. widen (see this explained under Waken). Also wid-th, not an old word, used in Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, st. 142, as equivalent to the older sb. wideness; formed by analogy with leng-th, bread-th, &c.; cf. Icel. vidd, width.

WIDGEON, the name of a kind of duck. (F., -Teut.) 'A wigion, bird, glaucea;' Levins, ed. 1570. The suffix and form of the word shows that it is certainly French; and it is clear that the E.

word has preserved an older form (presumably *wigeon or *wingeon) than can be found in French. Littré gives the three forms wigeon, vingeon, gingeon, as names of the 'whistling duck' (canard siffleur). The variation of the initial letter, which is either v or g, can only be accounted for by assuming an O. F. initial w, as above, and this is confirmed, past all doubt, by the E. form.

β. And we can further assume that the O. F. word was of Teut. origin, as is the case with nearly all words commencing with w. It was also prob. a Norman word, and of Scand. origin; probably from Dan. and Swed. vinge, a wing; cf. Norweg. vingla, to flutter, flap about. ¶ I will here note the curious O. F. vengeron, 'a dace, or dare-fish,' Cot. A connection is just possible. [*]

WIDOW, a woman whose husband is dead. (E.) M. E. widewe, widwe, Chaucer, C. T. 255, 1173. - A. S. widwe, weodwe; also widwe, widuwe, wydewe, Grein, ii. 692. + Du. weduwe. + G. wittwe, O. H. G. wituwa, witewa, witiwa. + Goth. widruwo, widowo.

β. The Teut. type is WIDUWA (WIDUWAN), fem. sb., a widow, Fick, iii. 304. Further cognate with Lat. uidua, fem. of uiduus, deprived of, bereft of (whence E. void), which gave rise to Ital. vedova, Span. viuda, F. veuve, a widow: also with W. gweddur, Russ. vdova, Skt. vidhavā, a widow.

γ. Here the Lat. d, as in other cases, answers to Skt. dh, and the root is ✓ WIDH, to lack, want, hence, to be bereft of. This root is preserved in the Skt. vindh, to lack (not in Benfey), for which see the St. Petersburg Dict. vol. vi. 1070. See Fick, as above.

¶ The etymology of Skt. vidhavā in Benfey (from vi, separate from, and dhavā, a husband) is unsatisfactory, as it entirely isolates the Skt. word from the rest of the series. See Curtius, ii. 46; Max Müller, Selected Essays, i. 333. The corresponding Teut. base would be WID, to lack; as in Goth. widu-wairns, orphaned, comfortless, John, xiv. 18; from wair, a man, a husband. Der. widow, verb, Cor. v. 6. 153; widow-hood, M. E. widewehad, Holi Meidenhad, p. 23, l. 20; widow-er, M. E. widewer, widwer, P. Plowman, A. 10. 194, B. 9. 174, formed by adding -er; cf. G. wittwer. And see wid.

WIELD, to manage, to use. (E.) M. E. welden, to govern, also to have power over, to possess, Wyclif, Matt. v. 4, Luke, xi. 10, xviii. 18. - A. S. geweldan, geuwyldan, to have power over, Gen. iii. 16; Mark, v. 4. This is a weak verb, answering to M. E. welden, and mod. E. wield, which are also weak verbs; all are derivatives from the strong verb wealdan (pt. t. weold, pp. wealden), to have power over, govern, rule, possess. + Icel. valda, to wield, + Dan. valde, commonly forvalde, to occasion. + Swed. välla (for vällda), to occasion. + G. walten, O. H. G. waltan, to dispose, manage, rule. + Goth. waldan, to govern.

β. All from Teut. base WALD, to govern, rule; Fick, iii. 299. Further cognate with Russ. vladiete, to reign, rule, possess, make use of, Lithuan. waldyti, to rule, govern, possess. The Aryan base is WALDH, to rule, an extension of ✓ WAL, to be strong; see Valid. Der. wield-er, un-wield-y.

WIFE, a woman, a married woman. (E.) M. E. wif (with long i), wyf, Chaucer, C. T. 447, 1173; pl. wyves (wyues). id. 234. - A. S. wif, a woman, wife, remarkable as being a neuter sb., with pl. wif like the singular. + Du. wijf, woman, wife; fem. + Icel. vif, neut. a woman; only used in poetry. + Dan. viø, fem. + G. weib, neut. a woman; O. H. G. wip.

β. Fick (iii. 305) gives the Teut. type as WĪBA. The form of the root is WĪB = Aryan WĪP; in accordance with which we find O. H. G. weibōn, weipōn, to waver, be irresolute, Lat. vibrare, to quiver, Skt. vep, to tremble; so that the orig. sense of wiba would appear to be 'trembling;' cf. Skt. vepas, a trembling, which is a neuter sb. We might perhaps interpret this as an epithet of 'a bride;' but the real origin of the word remains obscure. ¶ It is usual to explain the word as 'weaver;' but this cannot be reconciled with its form. The A. S. for 'to weave' is wefan; a male weaver was called webba, and a female weaver webbestre; and to equate wif with webbestre is to give up all regard for facts. Der. wife-like, Cymb. iii. 2. 8, fish-wife, i. e. fish-woman; mid-wife, q. v.; house-wife (see House); wive, v., A. S. wifian, Luke, xx. 34. Also wo-man, q. v.

WIG, a peruke. (Du., -F., -Ital., -L.) Wig occurs frequently in Pope; Moral Essays, iii. 65, 205, &c., and is merely a shortened form of periwig, which is much older, and occurs in Shakespeare. Cf. bus for omnibus. See further under Periwig and Peruke. Der. wigg-ed.

WIGHT (1), a person, creature. (E.) M. E. wiȝt, wight, Chaucer, C. T. 848. - A. S. wiht (very common), a creature, animal, person, thing; also spelt wuht, wyht, and used both as fem. and neut.; Grein, ii. 703. + Du. wicht, a child. + Icel. vættir, a wight; vætta, a whit. + Dan. vætte, an elf. + G. wicht. + Goth. waihts, fem., waiht, neut., a whit, a thing.

β. It is probable that the fem. and neut. sbs. were orig. distinct, but they were early confused. Fick gives the Teut. type as WEHTI, fem. sb., a wight, being, elf. The orig. sense is 'something moving,' a moving object, an extremely convenient word for pointing to something indistinctly seen at a distance, which might be a man, child, animal, or (in the imagination of the Aryan) an elf or demon. From the Teut. base WAG (A.S. wegan), to move, also to carry, represented by mod. E. weigh; see Weigh. Cf. E. wag, from the same root. The word wight is a later formation from the same A.S. verb. Whit is nothing but another spelling of wight. Doublet, whit.

WIGHT (2), nimble, active, strong. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. M.E. wight, wigt, valiant, P. Plowman, B. ix. 21; Layamon, 20588. — Icel. vigr, in fighting condition, serviceable for war; the final t seems to have been caught up, in a mistaken manner, from the neut. vígt, which was used in certain phrases; 'þeir drápu karla þá er vígt var at' = they smote the men that might be slain, i.e. the men who were serviceable for war; referring to the rule not to slay women, children, or helpless men. See Icel. Dict. For a similar instance of final t from Icelandic, see Want, Thwart, Tuft (2). The same word as Swed. vig, nimble, agile, active (whence vígt, nimbly), allied to A.S. víglic, warlike. β. From the sb. which appears as Icel. víg, A.S. wig, war. The Icel. víg, war, is derived from Icel. vega, to fight, smite (quite distinct from vega, to move, weigh), allied to Goth. weigan, weihan (pt. t. waik, pp. wigans), to fight, strive, contend. — Teut. base WIH, to fight; Fick, iii. 303. Allied to Lat. vincere, to fight, conquer; see Victor.

WIGWAM, an Indian hut or cabin. (N. American Indian.) In books relating to N. America. — 'Algonquin (or Massachusetts) wék, his house, or dwelling place; this word, with possessive and locative affixes, becomes wéhou-om-ut, in his (or their) house; contracted by the English to weekwam and wigwam;' Webster.

WILD, self-willed, violent, untamed, uncivilised, savage, desert. (E.) In Barbour's Bruce, we find will of red = wild of rede or counsel, at a loss what to do, i. 348, iii. 494, xiii. 477; will of wane = wild of wening or thought, at a loss, i. 323, ii. 471, vii. 225. The form will, here used as an adj., is simply due to the fact that the Icel. form for 'wild' is víllr, which stands for víldr by the assimilation so common in Icelandic. By themselves, these passages would not by any means prove any connection between wild and will; nevertheless, the connection is real, as appears from a consideration of the words cognate with wild. (See further below.) M.E. wilde, very rarely wielde, though we find 'a wielde olyue-tre' in Wyclif, Rom. xi. 17; spelt wylde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, l. 14. — A.S. wild, Grein, ii. 705. He gives the examples: se wilda fugel = the wild bird; wilde deór = wild deer or animals. + Du. wild, proud, savage. + Icel. víllr (for víldr), wild; also astray, bewildered, confused. + Dan. and Swed. vild. + G. wild, O. H. G. wildi. + Goth. wiltheis, wild, uncultivated, Mark, i. 6; Rom. xi. 17. β. All from Teut. type WEL-THA, astray, wild; the Goth. form wil-theis is important, because the Goth. -th answers to Lat. -t-, used as a suffix with pp. force; cf. Lat. rectus, right, orig. a pp. form. The orig. sense is, doubtless, that which is indicated by the Icel. víllr and by the common E. use of the word, viz. 'actuated by will', and by that only. A wild animal wanders at its own 'sweet will'; to act wildly is to act wilfully. Though we cannot deduce A.S. wild from A.S. will, sb., will, we can refer them to the same verb to will, once a strong verb and of great antiquity, as shewn by the A.S. ic will, I will. Similarly, the W. gwyllt, wild, savage, and gwylls, the will, are from the same root. See further under Will (1). Der. wild, sb., Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 41, M.E. wilde, Rob. of Glouc., p. 553, l. 10; wild-ly; wild-ness, spelt wyldnesse in the Prompt. Parv.; wild-fire, M.E. wylde fur, Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 12; wild-ing, a wild or crab-apple, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 17. Also be-wild-er, q.v.; wild-er-ness, q.v.

WILDERNESS, a wild or waste place. (E.) M.E. wilder-ness, Ancren Riwe, p. 158, l. 18. [Not found in A.S.; Somner's suggestion of an adj. wildeören is not authorised.] Wilder-ness first appears in Layamon, 30335; and stands for wildern-ness. It is formed by adding the M.E. suffix -ness to the shorter word wilderne, which was used in the same sense. Thus, in the Ancren Riwe, p. 160, l. 7, one MS. has wilderne in place of wilder-ness. So also in Layamon, l. 1238: 'þar is wode, þar is water, þar is wilderne muchel' = there is wood, there is water, there is a great desert. This M.E. wilderne, a desert, clearly answers to an A.S. *wildern, adj. (not found), regularly formed with the common suffix -n (= -en, cf. silver-n, gold-en) from the A.S. wilder, a wild animal; so that *wildern = of or belonging to wild animals, hence, substantively, a desert or wild place.

β. The A.S. wilder, a wild animal, is given in Grein, ii. 705, and occurs in the gen. sing. wildres, nom. pl. wildro, gen. pl. wildra. It is certainly a shortened form of wild deór, a wild animal (lit. wild deer), which is also written wildeór; see examples in Grein. (wild-deór or wildeór. It follows that wilder-ness is short for wild-deer-en-ness, -ness being added to wild-deeren, adj., of or belonging to wild deer. See Wild and Deer. And see be-wilder).

WILE, a trick, a sly artifice. (E.) M.E. wile (dissyllabic), Chaucer, 3403. — A.S. wil, or wile, a wile, A.S. Chron. an. 1128; also in the comp. flyge-wil, lit. a flying wile, an arrow of Satan, Grein, i. 306. + Icel. vél, væl, an artifice, craft, device, fraud, trick, contrivance. Root unknown. Perhaps we may compare Lithuan. uylus, deceit; wilti, to deceive. Der. wil-y, M.E. wili, wely, Cursor Mundi, 1807; wil-i-ness. Doublet, guile; whence be-guile.

WILFUL, obstinate, self-willed. (E.) M.E. wilful, Life of Beket, ed. Black, l. 1309 (Stratmann). Formed with suffix -ful (= full) from A.S. will, will; see Will (2). Der. wilful-ly, M.E. wilfulliche, in the sense 'willingly,' O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 8; wilful-ness, M.E. wilfulness, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 71.

WILL (1), to desire, be willing. (E.) M.E. willen, infin.; pres. t. wol, Chaucer, C. T. 42; pt. t. wolde (whence mod. E. would), id. 257. — A.S. willan, wyllan, Grein, ii. 708. Pres. sing. 1 and 3 p. wile, wyle (whence M.E. wil, wol), wille, wylle; 2 p. wilt; pl. willað, wyllað; pt. t. wolde, 2 p. woldest, pl. woldan, woldon, or woldun. + Du. willen. + Icel. vilja; pt. t. vilða. + Dan. ville. + Swed. vilja. + G. wollen; pr. t. will, pt. t. wollte. + Goth. wiljan, pt. t. wilda. + Lithuan. weliti. + Lat. uelle; pr. t. uolo, pt. t. uolui. + Gk. βούλομαι, I will, I wish. + Skt. wri, to choose, select, prefer.

β. All from WAR, to choose; Fick, i. 311; iii. 296; whence also G. wahl, choice, E. well, adv., will, sb., &c. Der. will-ing, orig. a pres. part.; will-ing-ly; will-ing-ness. Also will (2), q.v. Also will-y-nill-y, answering either to will I, nill I, i.e. whether I will or whether I nill (will not), or to will he, nill he, i.e. whether he will or whether he nill (will not), as in Hamlet, v. i. 18; we also find will we, nill we, Udall, on 1 St. John, cap. 2. (R.); will you, nill you, Tam. Shrew, ii. i. 273; cf. A.S. willan (short for ne willan), not to wish, Grein, ii. 296, cognate with Lat. nolle (short for ne uelle); and see Hobnob. From the same root are well (1), wilful, weal, wild, wol-unt-ar-y, wol-upt-u-ous.

WILL (2), sb., desire, wish. (E.) M.E. wille, Wyclif, Luke, ii. 14. — A.S. will, will, Grein, ii. 706. — A.S. willan, verb, to wish; see Will (1). + Du. wil. + Icel. vili. + Dan. vilke. + Swed. vilja. + G. wille. + Russ. volia. Cf. Lat. voluntas. Der. wil-ful, q.v.

WILLOW, a tree, with pliant branches. (E.) M.E. wilow, wilwe, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. — A.S. welig; 'Salix, welig;' Wright's Voc. i. 285, col. 2. + Du. wilg; O. Du. wilge (Hexham). + Low G. wilge (another Low G. name is wichel).

β. The Low G. wichel is clearly allied to E. wicker and to A.S. wican, to give way, bend; the tree being named from the pliancy of its boughs. The name willow has a similar origin, as is commemorated in the fact that the prov. E. willy not only means a willow, but also a wicker-basket, like the weele or fish-basket of which an illustration is given in Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 316. The A.S. wel-ig is from the Teut. base WAL, to turn, wind, roll, appearing in G. welle, a wave (lit. that which rolls), but chiefly in various extended forms, such as E. wal-k, wel-k-in, wel-t-er, Goth. wal-wjan, to roll, &c. The exact equivalent occurs in Lithuanian, which has wel-ti, to full cloth, swel-ti, to mat hair together. Thus a willow is a tree, the twigs of which can be plaited into baskets.

γ. A much commoner name for the tree in A.S. is wiðig, mod. E. withy, with just the same orig. sense. See Withy. And cf. Wicker.

WIMBERRY, the same as Winberry, q.v.

WIMBLE (1), a gimlet, an instrument for boring holes. (Scand.) M.E. wimbil, spelt wymbyl in the Prompt. Parv., where we also find the verb wymbelyn, or wymmelyn, to bore. — Dan. vimmel, an augur, tool for boring. The traces of the word are but slight, because vimmel (standing for vimpel) is a parallel form to, or a familiar pronunciation of vindel, anything of spiral shape, as in Dan. vindel-trappe, Swed. vindeltrappa, a spiral staircase. This is shewn by G. wendeltreppe, a spiral staircase, wendelbohrer, a spiral borer, a wimble or augur. Thus the real verb on which the word depends is Dan. vinde, Swed. vinda, G. winden, to turn, wind, twist; see Wind (2).

β. A wimble is simply a 'winder' or 'turner.' The peculiar form (with mb for nd) is also preserved in E. gimblet or gimlet, which reached us through the French, and is, practically, merely the dimin. of wimble. See Gimlet. γ. Hexham gives O. Du. wemelen, 'to pearce or bore with a wimble,' whence the sb. weme, 'a pearcer or a wimble,' seems to have been formed, rather than vice versâ. I suppose this to be similarly corrupted from wendel, as appearing in wendel-trap, winding-stairs, and in other compounds, prob. by confusion with wemelen, to skip about, for which see below.

¶ The prov. E. whims, a windlass (Yksh., Halliwell), is a mere corruption of winch; and prov. E. wim, an engine for drawing ore (Halliwell), is perhaps short for whims, or else for windas, an engine used for raising stones; see Windlass (1). Der. gimlet.

WIMBLE (2), active, nimble. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. The true sense is full of motion, skipping about. Spenser perhaps picked up the word in the North of England. The b (as often after m) is excrement, and due to stress. — Swed. vimmel-, in comp. vimmelkantig, giddy, whimsical;

Swed. dial. vimmla, to be giddy or skittish; cf. Swed. dial. vimmra, the same, whence vimmrig, skittish, said of horses. The verbs vimmla, vimmra, are frequentatives of Swed. dial. vima, to be giddy, allied to Icel. vim, giddiness, whence E. wim, misspell whim; see Whim. So also Dan. vimse, to skip about, vims, brisk, quick. + Du. wemelen, to move about, or 'to remove often,' Hexham; a frequentative verb from the same base.

WIMPLE, a covering for the neck. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 22; hence wimpled, id. i. 1. 4; Shak. L. L. L. iii. 181. M. E. wimpel, Chaucer, C. T. 151; Rob. of Glouc. p. 338, l. 4; hence ywimpled, Chaucer, C. T. 472. — A. S. winpel, the same. 'Ricinum, winpel, vel ori,' Wright's Voc. i. 17, l. 1; 'Anabala, winpel,' id. i. 26, l. 1. + Du. wimpel, a streamer, a pendant. + Icel. vimpill. + Dan. and Swed. wimpel, a pennon, pendant, streamer. + G. wimpel, a pennon (whence F. guimpe, E. gimp).

β. The Teut. winpel or wimpel is 'that which binds round,' hence a veil or covering for the head; they are nasalised forms (with suffix -el = Aryan -ra) from the Teut. base WIP, to twist or bind round; see Wisp. And see Gimp.

WIN, to gain by labour or contest, earn, obtain. (E.) The orig. sense was to endure, fight, struggle; hence to struggle for, gain by struggling. M. E. winnen, pt. t. wan, won, Chaucer, C. T. 444; pp. wonnen, id. 879. — A. S. winnan, to fight, labour, endure, suffer; pt. t. wann, pp. wunnen, Grein, ii. 715. + Du. winnen, pt. t. won, pp. gewonnen. + Icel. vinna, pt. t. wann, pp. unninn, to work, toil, win. + Dan. vinde (for vinne). + Swed. vinna. + G. gewinnen, O. H. G. winnan, to fight, strive, earn, suffer. + Goth. winnan, pt. t. wann, pp. wunnans, to suffer.

β. All from Teut. base WAN, to work, suffer, strive; Fick, iii. 286. — √WAN, to desire, hence to strive for; whence Skt. van, to ask, beg for, also to honour, Lat. Venus, desire, love, ven-er-ari, to honour; Fick, i. 768. Der. winn-er, winn-ing; also win-some, q. v. From the same root are wean, ween, won-t, wi-sh; also ven-er-a-al, ven-er-ate.

WINBERRY, WIMBERRY, a whortleberry. (E.) Whortleberries are called, in some parts, wimberries or winberries. The latter form, in Halliwell, is the more correct. — A. S. win-berie, win-berige, a grape; lit. a wine-berry, Matt. vii. 16; Luke, vi. 44. See Wine and Berry.

WINCE, WINCH, to shrink or start back. (F., — M. H. G.) M. E. wincen, winsen, wincen. 'It is the wone of wil to wyne and to kyke' = it is the wont of Will (wilfulness) to wince and to kick, P. Plowman, C. v. 22. 'Wynceyn, Calcitro,' Prompt. Parv. Spelt wynce, Allit. Morte Arthure, 2104. — O. F. *winchir, not found, but necessarily the older form of guinchir, 'to wrigle, writhe, winche a toe-side' [i. e. on the one side, aside]; Cot. Roquefort gives guincher, guinchir, to wince; also guencher, guencher, guencir, ganchir (p. 664, misprinted gauchir elsewhere), the same; Burguy gives ganchir, guencher, guencir. — M. H. G. wenken, wenchen, to wince, start aside; cf. also wanken, O. H. G. wankôn, weak verb, the same. — M. H. G. wane, a start aside, side or back movement. — M. H. G. wank, pt. t. of winken, to move aside, to nod; the same as G. winken, to nod; cognate with E. Wink, q. v. Wince is, in fact, merely the secondary verb formed from wink. Cf. G. wanken, to totter, waver, stir, budge, flinch, shrink back.

WINCH, the crank of a wheel or axle. (E.) M. E. winche; spelt wynche, Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 426. Cf. prov. E. wink, a periwinkle, also a winch; Halliwell. E. Cornwall wink, 'the wheel by which straw-rope is made'; E. D. S. — A. S. wince. 'Gigrillus, wince,' Wright's Voc. ii. 42, col. 1; here Gigrillus is an error for gigillus, a winch; see Ducange. The connection with winkle is obvious; and both winch and winkle are plainly derivatives from Teut. base WANK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, &c.; see further under Wink. A winch was simply 'a bend,' hence a bent handle; cf. A. S. wincel, a corner (Somner); M. H. G. wenke, a bending or crooking, cited by Fick, iii. 288; Lithuan. winge, a bend or turn of a river or road. And see Winkle, Wench.

WIND (1), air in motion, breath. (E.) M. E. wind, wynd, Wy-clif, Matt. xiv. 24. — A. S. wind, Grein, ii. 712. + Du. wind. + Icel. vindr. + Dan. and Swed. wind. + G. wind, O. H. G. wint. + Goth. winds, winth. β. All from the Teut. type WENDA, or WENTHA, wind, Fick, iii. 279. Cognate with Lat. uentus, W. gwynt, wind; orig. a pres. part., signifying 'blowing,' and answering to the Gk. pres. part. deis (stem aferr-), blowing. The Gk. deis, from âyva, to blow, âyv, to breathe, is from Aryan √AW, to blow, which also appears in the form WA, to blow. From the latter form we have Skt. vā, to blow, vātas, wind, Goth. waian, to blow; Russ. vievati, to blow, vieler, wind, Lithuan. wējas, wind; as well as Lat. uentus and E. wind. See Curtius, i. 484. From the form AW we have E. air, q. v. And see Weather. Der. wind, to blow a horn, pp. winded, Much Ado, i. 1. 243, oddly corrupted to wound (by confusion with the verb to wind); Scott, Lady of the Lake, i. 1. 17; &c.; wind-age, a coined word; wind-bound, Milton, Hist. of Britain, b. ii, ed. 1695, p. 44; wind-fall, that which falls from trees, &c., being blown down by the wind, hence, a piece of good fortune that costs nothing, Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, ii. 1 (Fabritio), also used in a bad sense (like downfall), Bacon, Essay 29, Of Kingdoms; wind-mill, M. E. wind-mulle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 547, l. 22; wind-pipe, spelt wyndpype in Palsgrave; wind-row, a row of cut grass exposed to the wind, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 28; wind-ward; wind-y, A. S. windig, Grein, ii. 713; wind-iness. And see winn-ow, vent-il-ate.

WIND (2), to turn round, coil, encircle, twist round. (E.) M. E. winden, pt. t. wand, wond, pl. wonden, P. Plowman, B. ii. 220, pp. wunden, spelt wnden. Havelok, 546. — A. S. windan, pt. t. wand, wond, pp. wunden; Grein, ii. 713. + Du. winden. + Icel. vinda, pt. t. vatt (for vand), pp. undinn. + Dan. vinde. + Swed. vinda, to squint. + G. winden, pt. t. wand, pp. gewunden; O. H. G. wintan. + Goth. windan, only in compounds such as biwindan, dugawindan, uswindan; pt. t. wand; pp. wundans.

β. All from Teut. base WAND, to wind or bind round, hence to turn; Fick, iii. 285. This is a nasalised form of the base WAD, to bind, swathe; see Weed (2). Der. wind-ing, sb.; also wind-lass, q. v.; wend, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.; wond-er, q. v.; wand, q. v.

WINDLASS (1), a machine with an axle, for raising heavy weights. (Scand.) The spelling windlass is a corruption, due to popular etymology (as if the word were from wind, verb, and lace), and to confusion with the word below. [It is worth noting that there was also a word windle, a wheel on which yarn is wound (see Halliwell), whence the pl. windles, wheels, axles, in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxvi. c. 15; this is from A. S. windel, of which the usual sense was a woven basket, Exod. ii. 3, though it could also mean something to wind on, a reel, from windan, to wind.] But the true M. E. form was windas, Chaucer, C. T. 10498; Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 103. 'Wyndace for an engyn, gryndas;' Palsgrave. — Icel. vindáss, a windlass; lit. a winding-pole, i. e. a rounded pole (like an axis) which can be wound round. — Icel. vind-a, to wind; and áss, a pole, main rafter, yard of a sail, &c. β. Here vinda is cognate with E. wind; see Wind (2). The Icel. áss is cognate with Goth. ans, a beam, Luke, vi. 41 (the long a being due to loss of n); so that the Teut. type is ANSA, a beam, Fick, iii. 18. The root of áss is not known; the suggested connection with Lat. assula is very doubtful. In any case, the Icel. áss has nothing to do with axis or axle, as some suggest. + Du. windas, a windlass; O. Du. windaes, 'a windlass or an engine,' Hexham; where aes (= Icel. áss, a beam) is quite distinct from O. Du. asse (mod. Du. as), an axis.

WINDLASS (2), a circuit, circuitous way. (Hybrid; E. and F., — L.) Shak. has windlasses, Hamlet, ii. 1. 65. 'Bidding them fetch a windlasse a great way about;' Golding, tr. of Caesar, fol. 206 (R.) 'And fetched a windlasse round about;' Golding, tr. of Ovid (see Wright's note on Hamlet). 'I now fetching a windlesse,' Lyly, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 270. Apparently compounded of wind (verb) and lace; it must be remembered that the old sense of lace was a snare or bit of twisted string, so that the use of it in the sense of 'bend' is not remarkable. Thus windlass prob. = wind-lace, a winding bend, circuitous track. [Wedgwood's suggestion that windlass stands for an older form windels (with the usual A. S. suffix -els, for which see Riddle) would be satisfactory; only, unfortunately, no trace of windels has as yet been detected; the A. S. windel means 'a woven basket;' Exod. ii. 3; see Windlass (1).] See Wind (1) and Lace.

WINDOW, an opening for light and air. (Scand.) The orig. sense is 'wind-eye,' i. e. eye or hole for the wind to enter at, an opening for air and light. [The A. S. word was égyryl (= eye-thrill), Joshua, ii. 15; also éagdura (= eye-door), according to Bosworth.] M. E. windoge, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 602, windohe, Ancren Riwle, p. 50, note a; windowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 48; Wynclif, Acts, xx. 9. — Icel. vindauga, a window; lit. 'wind-eye.' — Icel. vindr, wind; and auga, an eye, cognate with A. S. eige, an eye. + Dan. vindue, a window; cf. vind, wind, and öie, an eye; but Dan. vindue is directly from the O. Norse form. See Wind (1) and Eye. ¶ Butler has windore, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 214, as if from wind and door; but this is prob. nothing but a corruption.

WINE, the fermented juice of the vine. (L.) M. E. win (with long i), Chaucer, C. T. 637. — A. S. win, Grein, ii. 712. — Lat. vinum, wine (whence also Goth. wein, G. wein, O. H. G. wîn, Du. wijn, Icel. vin, Swed. vin, Dan. vin). + Gk. oîvos, wine, allied to ôivn, the vine. — √WI, to twine; see Withy. β. 'The Northern names, Goth. wein, G. wîn, &c. are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed; so also O. Irish fin, wine, &c. Pott very appropriately compares the Lith. apwynys, hop-tendrill, pl. apwynei, hops. The Skt. vénis, a braid of hair, also belongs here. We cannot see why the fruit of the twining plant should not itself have been called originally 'twiner.' The Lith. word offers the most striking analogy. The fact is, therefore, that the Indo-Germans [Aryans] had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice; 'Curtius, i. 487; which see. Der. wine-bibber, Matt. xi. 19; see Bib. [†]

WING, the limb by which a bird flies, any side-piece, flank. (Scand.) M. E. winge (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1966; the pl. appears as kwingen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 130, last line, Layamon, 29263; we also find wenge, wenge, (dat. case) P. Plowman, B. xii. 263; 'wenge of a fowle, Ala,' Prompt. Parv.; pl. wenges, Ormulum, 8024. It is quite certain that the form wenge is Scand.; and, as there does not seem to be any authority for an alleged A. S. winge, it is simplest to suppose winge to be also a Scand. form. [The A. S. word for 'wing' is fēder.]—Icel. vængr, a wing; Dan. and Swed. vinge. β. The sense is 'wagger' or 'flapper'; from the fluttering movement of the wing. The form is nasalised from the base WIG, as seen in Goth. gawigan (pt. t. gawag, pp. gawigans), to shake up, whence also wagjan, to wag, shake. See Wag. Der. wing, verb, to fly, Cymb. iii. 3. 28; wing-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 1387; wing-less. And see widgeon.

WINK, to move the eyelids quickly. (E.) 1. M. E. winken, pt. t. winked, P. Plowman, B. iv. 154.—A. S. wincian, to wink. 'Conniveo, ie wincige,' Wright's Voc. i. 34, col. 1. 2. But winken also occurs as a strong verb, pt. t. wank, Ancient Met. Tales, ed. Hartshorne, p. 79 (Stratmann); also wonk, Lancelot of the Laik, ed. Skeat, i. 1058; and we may certainly conclude that there was also a strong verb, viz. A. S. *wincan, with pt. t. *wanc, pp. *wuncen; so that the true base is not WINK, but WANK. This is verified by A. S. wancol, wavering, and E. wench, q. v.; as well as by the cognate forms. + O. Du. wincen (Hexham); also wencken, 'to winke, or to give a signe or token with the eyes'; id. Allied to O. Du. wanch, a moment, an instant, id. (lit. the twinkling of an eye); wanchel, unsteady. + Icel. vanka, to wink; to rove. + Dan. vinke, to beckon; cf. vanke, to rove, stroll. + Swed. vinka, to beckon, wink; cf. vanka, to rove, vankelmodig, fickle-minded. + G. winken, to nod, make a sign; M. H. G. winken, not only in the same sense as mod. winken, but also in the same sense as mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, wince, &c. β. All from Teut. base WANK, to go or move from side to side, hence to totter, bend aside, also to nod, beckon; Fick, iii. 288. Further allied to Lithuan. wengti, to shun, winge, a bend. WANK is a nasalised form of Teut. WAK, answering to Aryan WAG, to move aside, which is nothing but a variant of WAK, to vacillate, go or move aside, waver, &c.; see Fick, i. 761. Cf. Skt. vañch, to go, pass over; the causal form means 'to avoid,' lit. to cause to go astray (Benfey). γ. The orig. sense is simply to move aside; thence to totter, nod, beckon, wink; also to flinch or wince, &c. [There certainly seems to be some ultimate connection with weak; see Weak.] From the sense of 'tottering' we have that of wench, i. e. baby, which was the orig. sense of that word. Der. wink, sb., Temp. ii. 1. 285. Also (from the same root) wench, wince, winch, winkle, peri-winkle (the fish). Also vac-ill-ate; and cf. wag, wick-et.

WINKLE, a kind of shell-fish. (E.) Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 32, uses winkles to denote shell-fish and also snails.—A. S. wincle, according to Lye; the compound pl. pinewinclin, periwinkles, occurs as a gloss to torriculi in Ælfric's Colloquy; Wright's Voc. i. 6. Named from the convoluted shell; allied to Winch, q. v., and to Wink. Der. periwinkle (2), q. v.

WINNOW, to fan grain, so as to separate the chaff from it. (E.) Winnow stands for window, if we may so write it; nn being put for nd (but without reference to the sb. window). M. E. windewen, Wyclif, Jer. xlix. 36, to translate Lat. uentilare; some MSS. have wynnewen, shewing that the d was being lost just at this time.—A. S. windwian, less correctly wyndwian, Ps. xliii. 7, ed. Spelman; to translate Lat. uentilare.—A. S. wind, wind; with formative suffix -w-. See Wind. Cf. Goth. winthi-skaura, a winnowing-fan; diswinthjan, to disperse, grind to powder; from *winth, collateral form of winds, wind. So also Icel. vinza, to winnow, from vindr, wind; Lat. uentilare from uentus; see Ventilate. Der. winnow-er, winnow-ing-fan.

WINSOME, pleasant, lovely. (E.) M. E. winsom, with the sense 'propitious,' Northumb. Psalter, Ps. lxxviii. 9; also 'pleasant,' id. Ps. lxxx. 3.—A. S. wynsum, delightful, Grein, ii. 759; formed with suffix -sum (E. -some) from wyn, joy, id. ii. 757. Wyn is formed (by vowel-change from u to y), from wun-, stem of pp. of winnan, to desire, win; see Win. Cf. G. wonne, joy (from winnen); Icel. unadr, joy, unadsamr, winsome.

WINTER, the cold season, fourth season of the year. (E.) M. E. winter, orig. unchanged in the plural; 'a thousand winter' = a thousand winters, i. e. years; Chaucer, C. T. 7233.—A. S. winter, a winter, also a year; pl. winter, or wintru. + Du. winter. + Icel. vetr; O. Icel. vettr, assimilated form of wintr. + Dan. and Swed. winter. + G. winter, O. H. G. wintar. + Goth. wintrus. β. All from Teut. type WINTRU or WENTRU, winter, Fick, iii. 284; where -ru is evidently a suffix (Aryan -ra). Origin doubtful, but the suggestion in Fick is a good one, viz. that it meant 'wet season,' and is a nasalised form allied to E. wet, from WAD, to well (as water does). This is made more probable by the fact that we actually find nasalised forms of this root in Lat. unda, a wave; Lithuan. wandū, water, Skt. und, to wet, moisten; whilst, on the other hand, we find E. water with a similar suffix, but without the nasal sound. See Wet, Water. Der. winter, verb, to pass the winter; wintr-y (for winter-y); winter-ly, Cymb. iii. 4. 13; winter-quarters.

WIPE, verb, to cleanse by rubbing, to rub. (E.) M. E. wipen, Chaucer, C. T. 133.—A. S. wipian, to wipe; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 426, l. 30; 'Tergo, ie wipiga,' Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 172, l. 8. This is a weak verb, meaning to rub over with a wisp, or to use a wisp of straw; formed, with the usual causal suffix -ian, from a sb. *wip, a wisp of straw, which does not occur in A. S. But it is preserved in Low G. wiep, a wisp of straw, or a rag to wipe anything with; Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 269; and the common E. wisp is nothing but an extended form of the same. See Wisp. Der. wipe, sb., sometimes in the sense of sarcasm or taunt, Shak. Lucrece, 537; wip-er.

WIRE, a thread of metal. (E.) M. E. wir, wyr (with long i); dat. wyre, P. Plowman, B. ii. 11.—A. S. wir, a wire, Grein, ii. 717. + Icel. virr, wire; hence Swed. vire, to wind, twist. Cf. O. H. G. wiara, M. H. G. wiere, an ornament of refined gold.—Teut. type WIRA, wire, a thread of metal, properly a 'twisted' thread or an ornament of twisted metal-wire; cf. Icel. viravirki, filagree-work, lit. 'wire-work'; Lat. uiria, armlets of metal; Lithuan. willa, iron-wire. The Russ. vir, a whirl-pool, is related; from the same notion of twisting. Formed with suffix -ra from WI, to twist, twine; see Withy. Der. wire-draw, verb, to draw into wire; wire-draw-ing; wire-work; wir-y. And see ferrule.

WIS; for this fictitious verb, see Ywis.

WISE (1), having knowledge, discreet, learned. (E.) M. E. wis (with long i), wys, Chaucer, C. T. 68.—A. S. wis, wise; Grein, ii. 718. Du. wijs. + Icel. viśs. + Dan. viis. + Swed. vis. + G. weise, O. H. G. wīsi. + Goth. weis, in comp. unweis, unwise. β. All from Teut. type WISA, wise; Fick, iii. 306. The connection with the word wit, to know, cannot be doubted; the orig. sense must have been 'knowing,' or 'full of knowledge.' But, if so, t has been dropped, and wisa=witsa; the loss of t being accounted for by the length of the vowel. At the same time, a formative s has been added to the root; see Ywis. γ. Precisely the same phenomena occur in the Lat. wisere, to go to see, standing for *wids-ere, from the same root, and in its derivative uisitare, to visit. Thus the root is WID, to know; see Wit; and see Visit. Der. wise-ly; wis-dom, A. S. wisdom, Grein, ii. 719 (where dóm=E. doom, i. e. judgment); wise-man (one word), As You Like It, i. 2. 93, &c.; wise-ness, Hamlet, v. 1. 286. Also wise (2). (But hardly wiseacre, q. v.)

WISE (2), way, manner, guise. (E.) M. E. wise (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1448.—A. S. wise, Grein, ii. 719. + Du. wijs. + Icel. -vis, in the comp. öðruvis, otherwise. + Dan. viis. + Swed. vis. + G. weise; O. H. G. wīsa (whence, through French, E. guise). β. All from Teut. type WISA, lit. 'wiseness,' i. e. skill, hence the way or mode of doing a thing; from the adj. wise. See Wise (1). Der. like-wise, other-wise. Doublet, guise.

WISEACRE, a wise fellow (ironically), a fool. (Du., -G.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—O. Du. wijs-segger, as if 'a wise-sayer,' whence wijs-seggen (Hexham), a verb wrongly used as if equivalent to the more usual O. Du. waerseggen, 'to sooth-say,' id., whence waersegger, 'a diviner, or a soothsayer,' id. (from O. Du. waer, true). But the O. Du. word is merely borrowed from G. weisager, a sooth-sayer, as if it meant 'a wise-sayer'; cf. weissagen, to foretell, prophesy, soothsay.

β. Oddly enough, not only is the E. form a strange travesty of the G. word, but the latter has itself suffered from the manipulation of popular etymology, and is a very corrupt form, having originally nothing to do with the verb to say, nor even precisely containing the word wise! This appears from the older forms; the G. weissagen is the M. H. G. wīzagōn, afterwards corrupted to wīzsagen or wīssagen by confusion with sagen, to say. And this M. H. G. verb was unoriginal, being formed from the sb. wīzago, a prophet, which was itself afterwards corrupted into weissager.

γ. Now wīz-a-go is exactly parallel to A. S. wit-e-ga or wit-i-ga, a prophet (Grein, ii. 726); both words are formed (with suffixes denoting the agent) from the verb which appears as O. H. G. wīzan, A. S. wītan (=Lat. videre), to see; all from WID, to know; see Wit.

δ. It follows that the s in for G. z, the equivalent of E. t; whilst the unmeaning suffix -acre is less objectionable than the corrupt G. suffix -sager. Moreover, the sense 'wise-sayer' is merely an erroneous popular interpretation; the true sense is simply seer (=see-er).

WISH, to have a desire, be inclined. (E.) M. E. wisshen, wischen; P. Plowman, B. v. 111.—A. S. wýscan, to wish; Grein, ii. 766; less correctly wiscan, id. The long y is due to loss of n, which appears in most cognate forms. + Du. wenschen. + Icel. æskja, with the usual loss of initial v, and written for æskja. + Dan. ønske. + Swed. önska. + G. wünschen; O.H.G. wunscan. β. All these are verbs formed from the corresponding sb., which is really the more orig. word. But the mod. E. word has the vowel of the verb, so that it was best to consider that first; otherwise, the mod. E. word would have been wush. The A.S. sb. is wisc, a wish, very rare, in Alfred, tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 19, ed. Smith, p. 638, l. 40, where it is misprinted wiise; whence wiscan, vb., by the usual change from i to y. Cognate words to the sb. are found in O. Du. wunsch (Hexham); Icel. ösk; G. wunsch; O.H.G. wunsc; the Teut. type being WONSKA, a wish, Fick, iii. 307. All from ✓ WAN, to wish (Fick, i. 769); whence also Skt. vāṅsk, to wish (Benfey). Fick also cites Skt. vāṅchh, to wish, vāṅchhā, a wish; he supposes the form WANSK to be a desiderative form (with the desiderative suffix -sk as in E. -ask) from ✓ WAN, to desire, strive after, appearing in Skt. van, to ask, and in E. win; see Win. Der. wish, sb., merely from the verb, and not the same as the more orig. M.E. wusch, Prompt. Parv. p. 535, which answers to A.S. wisc, as above. Also wish-er, well-wish-er; well-wish-ed, Meas. for Meas. ii. 4. 27; wish-ful, i.e. longing, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; wish-ful-ly, wish-ful-ness. And see wist-ful.

WISP, a small bundle of straw or hay. (E.) M.E. wisp, wips; spelt wispe, wips, P. Plowman, B. v. 351; wysp, wesp, wips, id. A. v. 195; the Vernon MS. has 'Iwipet with a wesp' = wiped with a wisp. As in other cases where sp and ps are interchanged, the spelling with ps is the older; cf. hasp, clasp, &c. The A.S. form would be *wips, but it does not occur; and the final s is formative, wips being closely connected with the verb to wipe. We find also Low G. wiep, a wisp; Norweg. vippa, a thing that skips about, a wisp to sprinkle or daub with, also a swape, or machine for raising water; Swed. dial. vipp, an ear of rye, also a little sheaf or bundle; Goth. waips, also wipja, a crown, orig. a twisted wreath. β. Thus the Teut. base is certainly WIP, of which the orig. sense was to jerk or 'move briskly to and fro,' hence to wipe or rub, and a wisp (or wips) is a rubber. The sense of the verb plainly appears in O. Du. wippen, 'to shake, to wagge,' Low G. wippen, to go up and down as on a see-saw, Dan. vippe, to see-saw, rock, bob, Swed. vippa, to wag, jerk, G. wippen, to move up and down, see-saw, rock, jerk. — ✓ WIP, to tremble, vibrate; see Whip (in which the k is unoriginal). It has probably been confused with whisk, as in Dan. visk, a wisp, a rubber; but the two words are from different roots; see Whisk.

WIST, knew, or known; see Wit (1).

WISTFUL, eager, earnest, attentive, pensive. (E.) The word appears to be quite modern, and it has almost supplanted the word wishful, which was once common. It is a reasonable inference that it is nothing but a corruption of that word. The usual explanation, that it is derived from wist, I knew, or from wist, known, is stark nonsense, since 'knew-ful' or 'known-ful' gives no sense, nor do we generally add -ful to past tenses or past participles. The most that can be said is that wistful is clearly founded on wistly, attentively, earnestly, used 4 times by Shakespeare, and apparently by no one else.

β. Now wistly cannot be fairly elucidated by wistfully, since the latter word does not occur till long afterwards; nor can we suppose that wistly has any connection with wist, since 'knew-ly' or 'known-ly' again gives no sense. It follows that wistly is itself a corrupt form.

γ. Two solutions are possible; (1) that wistly stands for wisthtly, i.e. in a desired manner, which is not particularly good sense, though supported by the fact that the quartos read wisthtly for wistly in Rich. II. v. 4. 7; but, on the other hand, this sense does not suit in the other passages, viz. Venus and Adonis, 343, Lucrece, 1355, Pass. Pilgrim, 82; and (2) that wistly is put (with the usual excrescent t after s) for M.E. wisly (with short i), certainly, verily, exactly, whence the senses of 'attentively,' &c. may have arisen; see Chaucer, C. T. 1865, 3992; Havelok, 274, Ormulum, 928. This M.E. word is from Icel. viss, certain (distinct from viss, wise), which is allied to vita, to know, and E. wit, to know.

δ. My belief is, then, that wistful stands for wishful, the change in form being due to confusion with wistly, which was itself a corruption of M.E. wisly. The history of the word bears this out: we find wishful in 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; 'I sat looking wishfully at the clock,' Idler, no. 67 (R.); 'We looked at the fruit very wishfully,' Cook, First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7; 'I was weary of this day, and began to think wishfully of being in motion,' Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 98 (Todd); 'I looked at them wishfully,' Boswell, Life of Johnson, Sept. 1, 1773. The earliest quotations for wistful appear to be these: 'Lifting up one of my sashes, I cast many a wistful melancholy glance towards the sea,' Swift (in Todd); 'Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wistful seem? There's sorrow in thy look,' Gay, Pastorals, Friday, l. 1. It is remarkable that wishly (= wishfully) occurs in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 863 (Todd). Der. wistful-ly.

WIT (1), to know. (E.) This verb is ill understood and has suffered much at the hands of grammarians and compilers of dictionaries. Wit is the infin. mood; to wit (as in 'we do you to wit') is the gerund; wot is the 1st and 3 pers. of the present indicative, the 3rd person being often corruptly written wotteth; wost (later form wottest) is the 2nd pers. sing. of the same tense; wiste, later wist, is the pt. t.; and wist is the pp. [The adv. ywis or Iwis, certainly, was often misunderstood, and the verb wis, to know, was evolved, which is wholly unsanctioned by grammar; see Ywis.] M.E. witen, infin.; pres. t. wot, wost, wot, pl. witen; pt. t. wiste, pp. wist; see Chaucer, C. T. 1142, 1158, 1165, 8690, 9614, &c. [There was also M.E. witen, to see (with long i); see Stratmann, who puts wot under this latter verb, as if I have seen = I know. It makes little difference, since A.S. witan, to know, and witan, to see, are closely connected; I follow the arrangement in Grein.] — A.S. witan, to know; pres. t. ic wāt, þu wist, he wāt, pl. witon; subj. sing. wite, pl. witon, pt. t. wiste (sometimes wisse), 2 p. wisses, pl. wiston; pp. wist; Grein, ii. 722. Allied to A.S. witan, to see; pt. t. wite, pl. witon; id. ii. 724. It is clear that ic wāt is really an old past tense (prob. of witan) used as a present; causing the necessity of creating a new past tense wisse or wiste, which is, however, of great antiquity. Similar anomalous verbs are found in E., viz. can, may, shall, &c. The gerund is to witanne, whence mod. E. to wit. The form weet, in Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 6, is nothing but a corruption of wit. + Du. weten, pt. t. wist, pp. geweten. + Icel. vita, pr. t. veit, pt. t. vissa, pp. vitaðr. + Dan. vide, pr. t. veed, pt. t. vidste, pp. vidst. + Swed. veta, pr. t. vet, pt. t. visste, pp. veten. + G. wissen, pr. t. weiss, pt. t. wusste, pp. gewusst. + Goth. witan, pr. t. wait, pt. t. wissa, pp. wits (?).

β. All from Teut. type WITAN, to know, pr. t. WAIT, pt. t. WISSA; Fick, iii. 304; the base being WIT, orig. 'to see.' Further allied to Lithuan. weizdēti, to see, Russ. vidiete, to see, Lat. videre, to see, Gk. idēō, to see, oīda, I know (= E. wot), Skt. vid, to perceive, know, orig. to see. — ✓ WID, to see, perceive, know. Der. wit (2), q. v., wit-ness, q. v., t-wit (for at-wit); wit-ing-ly, knowingly, Hamlet, v. i. 11. Also, from the same root, wise, guise; vis-ion, vis-ible, &c. (see Vision); id-ea, id-ol, and the suffix -id in rhombo-id, &c.; ved-a. And see witch, wiseacre, witt-ol, wizard.

WIT (2), understanding, knowledge, the power of combining ideas with a happy or ludicrous effect. (E.) M.E. wit, Chaucer, C. T. 748. — A.S. wit, knowledge, Grein, ii. 722. — A.S. witan, to know; see Wit (1). + Icel. vit. + Dan. vid. + Swed. vett. + G. witz; O.H.G. wizzi. Der. wit-less, wit-less-ly, wit-less-ness; wit-ling, a pretender to wit, with double dimin. suffix -ling; witt-ed, as in blunt-witted, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 210; witt-y, A.S. witig or wittig, Grein, ii. 726; witt-i-ly, witt-i-ness. Also witt-i-c-ism, used by Dryden in his pref. to the State of Innocence, with the remark that he asks 'pardon for a new word' (R.); evidently put for witty-ism, the c being introduced to avoid the hiatus, and being suggested by Galli-cism, &c.

WITCH, a woman regarded as having magical power. (E.) Formerly used also of a man, Comedy of Errors, iv. 4. 160, Antony, i. 2. 40; but this is unusual. M.E. wicche, applied to a man, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 69; also to a woman, Sir Percival, l. 826 (in the Thornton Romances). — A.S. wicca, masc. a wizard; wicce, fem. a witch. 'Ariolus, wicca,' Wright's Voc. i. 60, col. 2. 'Phytonessa, wicce,' Wright's Voc. i. 74, col. 2. The pl. wiccen, occurring in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, § 11, and Laws of Cnut, secular, § 4 (Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 172, 378), may refer to either gender.

β. Wicce is merely the fem. of wicca; and wicca is a corruption of A.S. witga, a common abbreviated form of witiga or witega, a prophet, soothsayer, wizard; the pl. witgan is used in the sense of magicians, or sorcerers, and we even meet with deoful-witga, a devil's prophet or wizard, shewing how completely the worse sense of the word prevailed; see Grein, ii. 727, i. 191. The corruption from witga to wicca is not difficult; but we could not be sure of it were it not for the cognate Icel. form, which is the real clue to the word. This is Icel. vitki, a wizard; whence vitka, verb, to bewitch. Now this Icel. vitki is plainly from vita, to know; just as A.S. witga, orig. a seer, is from witan, to see, allied to witan, to know. The same word occurs in O.H.G. wizago, a seer, explained under Wiseacre. It follows that witch and wiseacre are mere variants from the same base; and that wizard is likewise from the same root.

γ. There are two other circumstances that help to confirm the above etymology; these are (1) that A.S. wicca does not appear to be in very early use; and (2) that there is no cognate form in other languages, except mod. Fries. wikke, a witch (cited by the author of the Bremen Wörterbuch, which was prob. borrowed, and the Low G. wikken, to predict (which is formed from Fries. wikke), with its derived sb. wikker, a soothsayer. ¶ In the Laws of Guthrum and Edward (cited above) we find mention of wiccen oððe wigleras, witches or diviners. The latter word, wiglere, is plainly connected with A.S. wig, a temple (Grein), also spelt wih, and with Goth.

weiks, holy, from a Teut. base WIH (Fick, iii. 303). I do not see how we can possibly attribute wicca to the same root, as some propose to do. By way of further illustrating the change from witga to wicca, I may remark that Swed. vidga, to widen, is pronounced wikka in Norwegian (Aasen). Der. witch-craft, A. S. wiccerast, Levit. xx. 27, from wicca, a witch, and craft, craft, art. Also witch, verb, A. S. wiccian, Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 274, sect. 39; hence witch-er-y, a coined word, Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1, l. 412. Also be-witch; q. v.

WITCH-ELM, WYCH-ELM, a kind of elm. (E.) Spelt wiech-elm, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 475. There is also a witch-hazel. M. E. wyche, wiche; 'Wyche, tre, Ulmus;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. wice, occurring in a list of trees. 'Virecta, wice; Cariscus, wice;' Wright's Voc. i. 285, col. 2. The sense is 'drooping' or 'bending'; and it is derived from A. S. wic-en, pp. of wican, to bend; see WICKER. The t in the word is quite superfluous, and due to confusion with the word witch above. 'Some varieties of the wych-elm have the branches quite pendulous, like the weeping-willow, thus producing a most graceful effect;' Our Woodlands, by W. S. Coleman.

WITH, by, near, among. (E.) M. E. with, Chaucer, C. T. i. — A. S. wið, governing gen., dat., and acc.; Grein, ii. 692. It often has the sense of 'against,' which is still preserved in to fight with = to fight against, and in with-say, with-stand. + Icel. við, against, by, at, with. + Dan. ved, by, at. + Swed. vid, near, at, by. β. From Teut. type WITH, against; Fick, iii. 304. Fick suggests a connection with Skt. vi, asunder, a common prefix. And see WITHERS.

¶ We must observe that with has to a great extent taken the place of A. S. and M. E. mid, with, which is now obsolete. Der. with-al, with it, with, Temp. iii. 1. 93, M. E. withalle, Chaucer, C. T. 14130, compounded of with, prep., and alle, dat. case of al, all, and used in place of A. S. mid ealle, with all, wholly, Grein, i. 238, l. 12. Also with-in, M. E. with-inne, Wyclif, Matt. ii. 16, A. S. wiðinnan, on the inside, Matt. xxiii. 26; with-out, M. E. with-uten, with-outen, Chaucer, C. T. 463, A. S. wiðutan, on the outside of, Matt. xxiii. 25; and note that A. S. innan and utan are properly adverbial formations, extended from in and út respectively. And see with-draw, with-hold, with-say, with-stand; also with-ers.

WITHDRAW, to draw back or away, to recall. (E.) M. E. withdrawen, to draw back, take away, Ancren Riwe, p. 230, last line. Not found in A. S. From With and Draw; where with has the old sense of 'towards,' hence towards oneself, and away from another. Der. with-draw-al, with-draw-ment, late and coined words. Also withdrawing-room, a retiring-room, esp. for ladies (see example in Todd's Johnson, and in Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ch. ix.), now corrupted to drawing-room!

WITHE, WITH, a flexible twig; see Withy.

WITHER, to fade. (E.) M. E. widren, not an old form. 'Now grene as lefe, now widred and ago;' Test. of Creseide, st. 34. This M. E. widren is nothing but a variant of M. E. wederen, to expose to the weather, so that widred = wedered, exposed to weather. 'Wederyn, or leyn or hangyn yn the weder, Auro;' Prompt. Parv. And the verb wederen is from M. E. weder, weather; see Weather. ¶ It follows that wither is properly transitive, as in 'Age cannot wither her,' Antony, ii. 2. 240; but the intrans. use is much more common.

WITHERS, the ridge between the shoulder-blades of a horse. (E.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. So called because it is the part which the horse opposes to his load, or on which the stress of the collar comes in drawing. Cf. Cleveland withers, the barbs of an arrow-head, which oppose its being drawn backwards (Atkinson). The lit. sense is 'things which resist;' formed from M. E. wiðer, resistance. 'Wiðer com to-jenes' = resistance (or an adverse wind) came against me; Layamon, 4678. Hence wiðerful, full of resistance, hostile, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 51, l. 19; wiðeren, wiðerien, to resist, id. ii. 123, last line; and see Stratmann. — A. S. wiðre, resistance; Grein, ii. 698. — A. S. wiðer, against, id. ii. 697; common in composition. An extended form of wið, against, also used in the sense of with; see With. The A. S. wiðer is cognate with Du. weder, Icel. viðr, Dan. and Swed. veder, G. wieder, Goth. withra, signifying against, or again; Fick gives the Teut. type as WITHERA, extended from WITH. This very prefix is represented by guer- in Guerdon, q. v. β. The above etymology is verified by the similar word found in G. widerrist, the withers of a horse, from wider, old spelling of wieder, against, and rist, which not only means wrist or instep, but also an elevated part, the withers of a horse.

WITHHOLD, to hold back, keep back. (E.) M. E. withholden, pp. withholdē, Chaucer, C. T. 513; and see Ancren Riwe, p. 348, l. 22. From With, in the sense of 'back,' or 'towards' the agent, and Hold. Cf. with-draw.

WITHIN, WITHOUT, see under With.

WITHSAY, to contradict. (E.) M. E. withseien, Chaucer, C. T. 807; withsiggen, Ancren Riwe, p. 86, l. 7. — A. S. wið, against; and segan, to say; see With and Say.

WITHSTAND, to stand against, resist. (E.) M. E. withstonden, Wyclif, Rom. ix. 19. — A. S. wiðstandan, to resist, Grein, ii. 699. — A. S. wið, against; and standan, to stand; see With and Stand.

WITHY, WITHE, a flexible twig, esp. of willow. (E.) Spelt withes or withs, pl., Judg. xvi. 7. M. E. wiði, wiðde, &c.; spelt withe, withe, wythth, Prompt. Parv. p. 531; withthe, K. Alisaunder, 4714; wiði, Ancren Riwe, p. 86, l. 15. — A. S. wiðig, a willow, also a twig of a willow. 'Salix, wiðig;' Wright's Voc. i. 33. + O. Du. weede, 'a hoppe,' Hexham; i. e. the hop-plant, from its twining. + Icel. viðja, a withy; við, a with (showing the different forms); viðir, a willow. + Dan. vidie, a willow, osier. + Swed. vide, a willow; vidja, a willow-twig. + G. weide, a willow; O. H. G. widda. β. Fick gives two Teut. types, viz. WITHYA, a willow (including Icel. viðir, G. weide); and WITHI, a twig or tendril (including Icel. við, M. H. G. wit, a withe); which are, of course, closely related. Moreover, we find allied words in Lithuan. žil-wittis, the gray willow (used for basket-work), Gk. iréa, a willow, a wicker-shield; also in Russ. uitsa, a withe, Lat. uitis, a vine. The application is to plants that twine or are very flexible; and all these words are from the ✓ WI, to twine, plait, as in Russ. vite, to twine, plait, Lat. ui-ere, whence also Lat. ui-men, a twig, ui-tis, a vine, ui-num, wine (orig. grape). From the same root we have vetch, wire, ferrule (for virole), wine, vine; also wi-nd (2), wi-nch, wi-cher, wy-ch-elm, wi-nkle, &c.

WITNESS, testimony; also, one who testifies. (E.) Properly an abstract sb., like all other sbs. in -ness. M. E. witnesse, Ancren Riwe, p. 68, l. 3. — A. S. witnes, testimony, Luke, ix. 5; also ge-witnes, Mark, i. 44. [The use of the word in the sense of 'witnesser' is unoriginal, and prob. not early; it occurs in Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 60.] — A. S. wit-an, to know; with suffix -nes; see WIT (1); thus the orig. sense is 'knowledge' or 'consciousness.' Cf. M. E. witnen, to testify, Ancren Riwe, p. 30; Icel. vitna, Dan. vidne, to testify. Der. witnes, vb., M. E. witnesen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 191.

WITTOL, a cuckold. (E.) In Merry Wives, ii. 1. 3. Not an old word in this sense. It occurs also in Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act v. sc. 1 (Mosca); and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, iii. 2 (Gomera). 'Jannin, a wittall, one that knows and bears with, or winks at, his wife's dishonesty;' Cotgrave. This explanation of Cotgrave's seems to resolve the word at once into wit-all, one who knows all, but this would hardly be grammatical; it should rather be wot-all. It is commonly explained as equivalent to M. E. witele, knowing, a very rare word, occurring once in Layamon, 18547. And this again is supposed to be from the A. S. witol, adj., wise, sapient; formed with suffix -ol (as in sprec-ol, talkative), from wit-an, to know. In this case, the word would mean wise or knowing; or, ironically, a simpleton, a gull.

β. But all this is very suspicious; the A. S. witol is unauthorised, and only known to Somner, who may have invented it; it is surprising that we have no trace of the word for nearly 4 centuries, from about 1200 to 1600. On this account, Wedgwood's suggestion is worth notice; viz. that a wittol is the bird commonly called in olden times a witwall. Florio explains Ital. godano by 'the bird called a witwall or woodwall;' ed. 1598. In a later edition, according to Wedgwood, this appears as: 'Godano, a wittal or woodwale;' and Torriano has 'Wittal, becco contento,' i. e. a cuckold. The corruption from witwall to wittal is easy and natural. γ. Wit-wall itself is the same word as wodewale, an old name for various birds, one of which may be supposed to answer to the Low Latin curruca. 'Curruca est avis, vel ille qui, cum credat nutrire filios suos, nutrit alienos;' Supp. to Ducange, by Diefenbach. On which Wedgwood remarks: 'the origin of this name [wittol] is undoubtedly from the fact that the bird known under the name of curruca is one of those in the nest of which the cuckoo drops its egg.' See further under Woodwale. Cf. gull, (1) a bird, (2) one who is deceived, [†]

WIVERN; see Wyvern.

WIZARD, WISARD, one who practises magic, a magician. (F., — Teut.) M. E. wisard; spelt wysard, wysar, Prompt. Parv. It should rather have been wishard, and I suspect this form is really preserved in the proper names Wishart, Wisheart, Wisset (all in Bohn's Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual). — O. F. *wischard, not recorded, but necessarily the older spelling of O. F. guischard, also guiscart, adj., prudent, sagacious, cunning (Burguy). [In like manner the O. F. guisarme, gisarme, was at first spelt wisarme, as recorded by Roquefort.] Hence Guiscard as a surname or epithet. — Icel. vizkr, clever, knowing; with F. suffix -ard, due to O. H. G. suffix -hart, which is merely G. hart (= E. hard) in composition, as in numerous other words. The Icel. vizkr is a contracted form of vit-skr, formed from vit-a, to know, with suffix -sk (= E. -ish, A. S. -ise). Hence wiz-ard is equivalent to witt-ish-ard.

WIZEN, to shrivel or dry up. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. M. E. wisenen, to become shrivelled; see quotation in Halliwell, s.v. wisened. — A. S. wisnian, to become dry, John, xv. 6 (only in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS., both Northumbrian); the word appears to be Northern. We find, however, A.S. for-wisnode, to translate Lat. emarcuit, Wright's Gloss. ii. 30, col. 1. + Icel. visna, to wither.

β. This is an intransitive verb, with formative -n-, giving it the sense 'to become;' so that the orig. sense was 'to become dry;' see this suffix explained under Waken. The Icel. vis-na is derived from vis-inn, withered, palsied, dried up, which, by its form, is the pp. of an old lost strong verb *vis-a (pt. t. veis, pp. visinn); cf. risa, to rise (pt. t. reis, pp. risinn). The Icel. visinn is cognate with Dan. and Swed. vissen, withered; cf. also Swed. vissna, to fade.

γ. Fick gives the Teut. type WISNA, dry, shrivelled; to which may also be referred O. H. G. wēsānen, to dry (cited by Fick), G. verwesen (put for verwesnen), to putrify, corrupt, moulder. The last sense links these words with Icel. veisa, a stagnant pool, cess-pool; and (probably, as Fick suggests) with Lat. uirus, Gk. lós, Skt. visha, poison. The Skt. visha, poison, water, may be derived from Skt. vish, to sprinkle; but this verb is unauthorised. The form of the root certainly seems to be WIS, whatever may be the sense.

¶ Wedgwood connects Icel. visinn with Goth. wisans, pp. of wisan, to be, remain, dwell; but the Icel. word for 'been' is verit; again, the O. H. G. wēsānen, to dry, seems distinct from O. H. G. wēsan, to be; see Was. This would refer wizen to ✓ WAS, to dwell. It is remarkable that we find Skt. vasi, dry; and ushita, that which has dwelt, stale, pp. of vas, to dwell; but this will not explain the Scand. forms.

WO, WOE, grief, misery. (E.) M. E. wo, Chaucer, C. T. 353, 1458. — A. S. wā, wo, used as interj. and adv., sometimes with dat. case, Grein, ii. 635; wēd, wo, sb., id. 668. + Du. wee, interj. and sb. + Icel. vei, interj., used with dat. case. + Dan. vee, interj. and sb. + Swed. ve, interj. + G. weh, interj. and sb. + Goth. wai, interj. β. The Teut. type is WAI, wo! orig. an interjection. Further allied to Lat. wae, wo! Fick, iii. 279. The A. S. sb. wēd is derived from the interjection. Der. wo-ful, M. E. woful, Chaucer, C. T. 2058; woful-ly, -ness. Also wo-begone, spelt woe-begon, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 20, i.e. surrounded with wo, from M. E. wo begon, Chaucer, C. T. 5338, where begon is the pp. of M. E. begon, to go about, surround, equivalent to A. S. begán, compounded of be, prep. (E. by) and gán, to go; see further in Stratmann, s.v. bigán, p. 61. Also wo worth, wo be; for which phrase see Worth (1). Also wai-l, q.v.

WOAD, a plant used as a blue dye-stuff. (E.) M. E. wod (with long o), Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 17, pr. in Appendix to tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 180. — A. S. wād, woad. 'Sandix, wād; Fucus, waad;' Wright's Voc. i. 32, col. 1. The O. F. name is spelt waide in a Vocab. of the 13th century; id. 139, col. 2. + Du. weede. + Dan. void, veid. + Swed. veide. + G. waid, weid, M. H. G. weit, weid (E. Müller); whence O. F. waide, waide, gaide, mod. F. guède. Root unknown; allied to Lat. uitrum, woad. ¶ Distinct from weld (2).

WOLD, a down, plain open country. (E.) Spelt old in Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 125; wolde, would in Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. wold, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 938; the dat. case is spelt walde in one text of Layamon, 20842, but wolde in the other; it is thus seen to be the same word as M. E. wald, a wood, which was, however, more commonly used in the sense of waste ground, wide open country (as in Norse); in Layamon, 21339, where one text has wald, the other has feld, field, in the sense of open country. — A. S. wæld, wald, a wood, forest, Grein, ii. 669. + O. Sax. and O. Fries. wald, a wood. + G. wald, O. H. G. walt. + Icel. völtr, gen. vallar (= valdar), a field, plain.

β. All from Teut. type WALDU or WALDA, a wood; Fick, iii. 299. The connection, in form, with A. S. geweald, Icel. vald, dominion, is so obvious that it is difficult to assign any other origin than Teut. WALD, to rule, possess, for which see Wield. The orig. sense may have been 'hunting-ground,' considered as the possession of a tribe. Doublet, wæld, q.v.

WOLF, a rapacious beast of prey. (E.) M. E. wolf; pl. wolves (= wolues), Wyclif, Matt. x. 16. — A. S. wulf, pl. wulfas, Grein, ii. 750. + Du. and G. wolf. + Icel. úlfr (for vulfr). + Dan. ulv. + Swed. ulf. + Goth. wulfs. β. All from Teut. type WOLFA, a wolf; Fick, iii. 307. Further allied to Lith. wilkas, Russ. volk, Gk. λύκος, Lat. lupus, Skt. vrika, a wolf; the common European form being WALKA (Fick, i. 773), answering to Aryan warka (id. i. 313). The form WALKA was variously altered to wlaka, wlapa, walpa, producing Gk. λύκος, Lat. lupus, A. S. wulf, &c.

γ. The sense is 'tearer,' or 'render,' from his ravenous nature. — ✓ WARK, to tear; whence Skt. vrapach, to tear, Gk. βίρρυμ, I break, Lithuan. wilkti, to pull, &c. ¶ The suggested connection with Lat. vulpes, a fox, is not generally accepted. Der. wolf-ish, wolf-ish-ly; wolf-dog. Also wolv-er-ene, or wolv-er-ine, a coined word, a name given to an American animal resembling the glutton, a name sometimes incorrectly given to the wolverine also.

WOMAN, a grown female. (E.) That woman is a corruption of A. S. wifman, lit. wife-man, is certain; and it must be remembered that the A. S. man (like Lat. homo) is of both genders, masc. and fem. To shew this, it is best to trace the word downwards. The A. S.

form is wifman, a woman, Grein, ii. 700. By assimilation, this form became wimman in the 10th century. In Judges, iv. 17, we have the dat. sing. wifmen, but in the very next verse (and in verse 22) Jael is called sēo wimman = the woman. [Similarly, the A. S. hlāfmesse (loaf-mass) became lammas; see Lammas.] By way of further illustration, see Mark, x. 6, where the various MSS. have wyfmān, wifmon, wimman.

β. The pl. of wifman was wifmen, which was similarly reduced to wimmen, as in Gen. xx. 17, and this form has held its ground, in the spoken language, to the present day; which is the strongest possible proof of the etymology.

γ. But the sing. form suffered further alteration; we still find wifmon (later text wimmon) in Layamon, l. 1869, wimman, Havelok, l. 1168, wyfmān, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 11, l. 1 [as late as A. D. 1340; the pl. being both wyfmān, p. 10, last line but one, and wymmen, according to Morris]; but we also find wummon, Ancren Riwe, p. 12, l. 11, wumman, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 3863; womman, Rob. of Glouc. p. 9, last line, P. Plowman, B. i. 71, ii. 8; so also in Chaucer, C. T. Group D. 66 [l. 5648], where 5 MSS. have womman, but one has woman; after which the spelling woman is common. Thus the successive spellings are wifman, wifmon, wimman, wimmon, wumman or wummon, womman; and lastly woman, as at present.

In some dialects, the pronunciation wumman [glossic wum-un] is still heard. δ. The successive corruptions are probably merely due to the loss of the sense of the word; when once wifman had become wimman, there was nothing to keep the pronunciation stable. Some have thought that popular fancy connected the word with womb, as if the word were womb-man; but the change of vowel was due to the preceding w, just as in A. S. widu, later form wudu, a wood; see Wood. For further discussion, see Wife and Man.

¶ Note also the word leman, which was successively lef man, lemman, leman; here we have a similar assimilation of fm to mm, and a considerable change in sense; see Leman. Der. womanhood, M. E. womanhede, wommanhede, Chaucer, C. T. 1750, the corresponding A. S. word being wifhād, Gen. i. 27; woman-ish, K. John, i. 4. 36; woman-ish-ly, -ness; woman-kind, Tam. Shrew, iv. 2. 14; women-kind, Pericles, iv. 6. 159; woman-like, woman-ly, M. E. wummonlich, Ancren Riwe, p. 274, l. 9; woman-li-ness.

WOMB, the belly, the place of conception. (E.) Lowl. Sc. wame, the belly; Burns, Scotch Drink, st. 5. M. E. wombe, Wyclif, Matt. xv. 17; wambe, Pricke of Conscience, 1461. — A. S. wamb, womb, the belly, Grein, ii. 637. 'Venter, wamb;' Wright's Voc. i. 71, col. 1. + Du. wam, the belly of a fish. + Icel. vömb, the belly, esp. of a beast. + Dan. wom. + Swed. våmb, våmm. + G. wampe, wamme, O. H. G. wampa. + Goth. wamba. β. The Teut. type is WAMBA, the belly, paunch; Fick, iii. 290. Root unknown. ¶ Quite distinct from Lat. uenter.

WOMBAT, a marsupial mammal, found in Australia. (Austrian.) In Webster. A corruption of the native Australian name womback or wombach. 'The wombat, or, as it is called by the natives of Port Jackson, the wombach;' Collins, New South Wales (1802), quoted in the Penny Cyclopædia. 'The mountain natives call it wombach;' letter from Governor Hunter, dated Sydney, 1798; in Bewick's Quadrupeds.

WON, to dwell, remain. (E.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 457. Practically obsolete, though occurring in Sir Walter Scott, Lady of the Lake, iv. 13. M. E. wonen, Chaucer, C. T. 7745. — A. S. wunian, to dwell. + Icel. una, to dwell; see further under Wont.

WONDER, a strange thing, a prodigy, portent, admiration. (E.) M. E. wonder; pl. wondris, Wyclif, Mark, xiii. 22. — A. S. wundor, a portent, Grein, ii. 751. + Du. wonder. + Icel. undr (for vundr). + Dan. and Swed. under. + G. wunder, O. H. G. wuntar.

β. The Teut. type is WOND-RA or WUND-RA, a wonderful thing; Fick, iii. 306. The orig. sense is 'awe,' lit. that from which one turns aside, or 'that which is turned from,' from Teut. base WAND, to wind, turn; see Wind (2), and cf. A. S. wunden, pp. of windan, to wind. The connection between wind and wonder, not very apparent at first sight, is explained by A. S.

γ. Thus, from A. S. windan, to wind, we not only have wendan, to turn (see Wend), but also the verb wandian, lit. to turn aside from, but usually to turn from through a feeling of fear or awe, to respect, to revere. 'Pū ne wandast for nānum men' = thou respectest, or darest, no man; Matt. xxii. 16; Luke, xx. 21. Grein explains wandian by 'præ metu sive alicujus reverentia omittēre, cunctari;' ii. 638. Hence M. E. wonden, to conceal through fear, to falter, &c.; Will. of Palerne, 4071; Gower, C. A. i. 332, l. 7; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 1185. The suffix answers to Aryan -ra.

Der. wonder, verb, A. S. wundrian, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful, M. E. wonderfol, Layamon, l. 280, later text, used in place of A. S. wunderlīc, lit. wonder-like, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful-ly, -ness. Also wondrous, q.v.

WONDROUS, wonderful. (E.) Spelt wonderous in Palsgrave, and prob. not found much earlier; it is a corrupt form (like righteous for rightwise), and took the place of the older word wonders, properly an adv., but also used as an adj. 'Ye be wonders men' = ye are wondrous men; Skelton, Magnificence, 90. 'Where suche a solempne yerely myracle is wrought so wondrously in the face of the world;'. Sir T. More, Works, p. 134 (R.). Earlier as an adv., as 'wonders dere,' i.e. wonderfully dear, Test. of Love, b. ii; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1651, fol. 297, col. 2, l. 1. Wonders is formed by adding s (an adv. suffix, as in need-s) to wonder used as an adv. or adj.; Chaucer has 'wonder diligent,' C.T. 455; Gower has 'such a wonder sight,' C.A. i. 121, l. 9. Wonder became an adj. through the misuse of the A.S. wunderlic, adj., wonderful, as an adverb; thus Chaucer has 'wonderly deliver,' C.T. 84; so also 'so wonderly sore,' Tale of Gamelyn, 266 (late editions, wondrously).

W. Hence the history of the word is clear; the A.S. wunderlic, adj., became M.E. wonderly, adv., whence M.E. wonder, adj. and adv., lengthened to wonders, adv. and adj., and to wondersly, adv.; the double use of -ly, both as an adjectival and adverbial suffix, being a lasting cause of confusion. ¶ The spurious poem called Chaucer's Dream has the word wondrous, l. 1898, but it was not printed till A.D. 1597. Hence wondrously, wondrousness.

WONT, used or accustomed. (E.) Properly the pp. of won, to dwell, to be used to. When the fact that it was a pp. was forgotten, it came to be used as a sb.; and then, by way of distinction, a new form wont-ed was evolved, to keep up the pp. use. Hence won-t-ed (= won-ed-ed) has the suffix -ed twice over! [For wont, sb., and wont-ed, see the end of the article.] 'As they were wont [accustomed] to do;'. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1195. 'She neuer was to swiche gestes woned' = she was never accustomed to such guests, Chaucer, C.T. 8215. 'Thou wert aye woned ech loue reprehend' = thou wert ever wont to reprehend each lover, Chaucer, Troilus, l. 511. Woned is the pp. of M.E. wonen, wonien, to dwell, be accustomed to; in Chaucer, C.T. 7745, it means simply 'to dwell,' but the sense 'to be accustomed' was easily (in A.S. times) introduced from the related sb. wone, a custom, Chaucer, C.T. 337. — A.S. winian, to dwell, remain, continue in, Grein, ii. 753; also gewunian, to dwell, to be accustomed to. 'Swā swā he gewunade' = as he was accustomed (lit. as he won), Mark, x. 1; cf. 'whom we wont to fear,' 1 Hen. VI. i. 2. 14. A weak verb, allied to the sb. wuna, custom, use, wont, commonly spelt gewuna, Luke, i. 9, ii. 27. Allied to A.S. winnan-en, pp. of winnan, to strive after; see Win. Wont is 'a thing won,' i.e. the custom or habit due to continual endeavour. W. Similarly, from the Teut. base WAN, to strive after, we have Icel. vannr, adj., accustomed, used (to a thing), vani, a usage, whence vandi (for vanþi), a custom, habit, venja, to accustom (pt. t. vandi, vandi, pp. vandr, vannin) = E. wan; see Wean. So also (in connection with M.H.G. gewinnen) we find M.H.G. gewon, O.H.G. giwon, adj., accustomed to, M.H.G. gewon, O.H.G. giwon, usage, M.H.G. gewonen, to be used to, gewonlich, customary; Gewohnen, to be used to, pp. gewohnt, wont, wohnen, to dwell. See Fick, iii. 287. Der. wont, sb., Hamlet, i. 4. 6, put for M.E. wone, sb., by confusion with wont above. Also wont-ed, used as a pt. t. by Surrey instead of wont; 'Of me, that wonted to rejoice,' Complaint of the Absence of her Louer, l. 5, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 15; so also Palsgrave gives wont as a verb, 'I wonte or use; it is no wysdome to wont a thing that is nat honest;'. and hence wonted as a pp. or adj., Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 113, iii. 2. 369.

WOO, to sue, court, ask in order to marriage. (E.) Spelt wo in Palsgrave; but Spenser retains the old spelling woue, F. Q. vi. 11. 4. M.E. wozen, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 546; later wowen (by change of z to w). P. Plowman, B. iv. 74. — A.S. wógian, to woo, occurring in the comp. áwógian, to woo, Ælfric's Homilies, 3rd Series, vii. 14 (E. E. T. S.). Hence the sb. wógere, a wooer; 'Procus, wógere,' Wright's Voc. i. 50, col. 2. The lit. sense is simply to bend, incline; hence to incline another towards oneself. — A.S. wók (stem wóge, pl. wóge), bent, curved, crooked; Grein, ii. 731. Cf. wók, sb., a bending aside, turning aside, iniquity; wók-bogen, bowed in a curve, bent; id. W. The A.S. wók, bent, is cognate with Goth. waks, bent, only occurring in un-waks, straight, blameless, Luke, i. 6. — WAK, to go tortuously, be crooked; whence also Skt. vañk, to go tortuously, be crooked, vakra, crooked, Lat. vacillare, to vacillate, varus, crooked, &c. Fick, i. 205. See Vacillate, Varicose. Der. woo-er, M.E. wowere, P. Plowman, B. xi. 71, A.S. wógere, as above.

WOOD (1), a collection of growing trees, timber. (E.) M.E. wode, Chaucer, C.T. 1424, 1524. — A.S. wudu, Grein, ii. 745; but the orig. form was widu; id. 692. + Icel. viðr, a tree, wood. + Dan. ved. + Swed. ved. + M.H.G. wite, O.H.G. witsu. W. The Teut. type is WIDU, wood, Fick, iii. 305. Cf. also Irish fiodh, a wood, a tree; fiodais, shrubs, underwood; Gael. fiodh, timber, wood, a wilderness, fiodhach, shrubs, W. guydd, trees, guyddeli, bushes, brakes. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'twig,' or a mass of twigs, a bush; I suspect a connection with E. withy. Cf. M.H.G. weten, O.H.G. wētan, to bind, fasten together. The O.H.G. wi-tu and E. wi-ty may both, perhaps, be referred to WI, to twine; whence Lat. ui-man, ui-tis, &c.; see Withy. Der. wood-bine or wood-bynd, spelt wodbynde in Palsgrave, wodebynde in Chaucer, C.T. Six-text, 1508 (1510 in Tyrwhitt), A.S. wudebinde, used to translate hedera nigra in Wright's Voc. i. 32, col. 1; so called because it binds or winds round trees; cf. A.S. wuduwinde, lit. wood-wind, used to tr. viverna, id. i. 286, l. 1. Also wode-coal; wood-cock, A.S. wuduwoce, id. i. 280, l. 3; wood-craft, M.E. wodecraft, Chaucer, C.T. 110; wood-cut; wood-dove, M.E. wode-douwe, Chaucer, C.T. 13700; wood-engraving; wood-land, M.E. wodelond, Layamon, 1699; wood-lark; wood-man, Cymb. iii. 6. 28, spelt wodman in Palsgrave; wood-nymph; wood-pecker, Palsgrave; wood-pigeon; wood-ruff, q. v. Also wood-ed; wood-en, i.e. made of wood, K. Lear, ii. 3. 16; wood-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 18.

WOOD (2), mad, furious. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 192. M.E. wod (with long o), Chaucer, C.T. 184. — A.S. wóð, mad, raging, Grein, ii. 730; whence wóðan (= wóðian), to be mad, 653. + Icel. óðr, raging, frantic. + Goth. wods, mad. And cf. Du. woede, G. wuth, M. H. G. wuot, madness. W. The Teut. type is WODA, wood, frantic. Doubtless allied, as Fick suggests (iii. 308), to Lat. uates, a prophet, poet, one who is filled with divine frenzy; hence the name Woden, applied to the highest of the Scand. divinities. Root uncertain. Der. Wednes-day, q. v.

WOODRUFF, the name of a plant. (E.) Spelt wodruffe in Palsgrave. M.E. wodruffe, Wright's Gloss. i. 226, col. 2. — A.S. wudrofe, id. 30, col. 2; also wudurofe. See Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 412, where it is shewn that it was not only applied to the Asperula odorata (as at present), but also to Asfodelus ramosus; and it is also called astula (hastula) regia in glosses. The former part of the word is A.S. wudu, a wood; the sense of rofe is uncertain, but it is usual to connect it with Ruff (1), q. v. Certainly, the A.S. rofe may very well be from rosen, pp. of reosan, to break, cleave, as suggested under that word. Supposed to be named from the ruff or whorl of leaves round the stem.

WOODWALE, the name of a bird. (E.) Also called witwall and even wittal; see Wittol. Cotgrave explains F. oriole or orio as 'a heighaw or witwall.' [The form witwall was not borrowed from G., but stands for widwall; the old form of A.S. wudu being widu.] M.E. wodewale, the same as wodehake (i.e. wood-hatch or wood-hack, a woodpecker), Prompt. Parv.; Rom. of the Rose, 658; used to translate O. F. oriole, Wright's Voc. i. 166 (13th century); Owl and Nightingale, 1659. Not found in A.S. + O. Du. weduwael, 'a kind of a yellow bird'; Hexham. + G. witwale, a yellow thrush, Flügel; M. H. G. witewal, an oriole (Stratmann). W. The former element is certainly A.S. widu, wudu, M.E. wode, a wood; just as M. H. G. witewal is from M. H. G. wite, a wood. Cf. M.E. wodehake, above, and E. wood-pecker. [Kilian's strange error in connecting it with wod was due, probably, to the loss of the cognate word to wood in Dutch.] But the sense of the latter element has not been explained; it might mean 'stranger,' from A.S. wealh. Cf. Wales, lit. 'the strangers,' but now used as the name of a country. Doublet, wittol, q. v.

WOOF, the weft, the threads crossing the warp in woven cloth. (E.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 152. A corruption of M.E. oof, due to a supposed connection (which happens to be right, but not in the way which popular etymology would assign) with the vb. to weave and the sb. weft. 'Oof, threde for webbynge, Trama, stamen, subtegmē,' Prompt. Parv. So also in Wyclif, Levit. xiii. 47, earlier version (cited in Way's note). — A.S. ōwef, a woof. 'Cladica, wefl, vel ōwef,' Wright's Voc. ii. 104 (8th century). Cladica is the dimin. of Low Lat. clada, a woven hurdle, and wefl is clearly a variant of weft; so that there can be no doubt as to the sense of ōwef. Somewhat commoner is the parallel form ōweb or āweb, frequently contracted to āb; and this word has precisely the same sense. 'Subtimen, āweb' immediately follows 'Stamen, wearp,' i.e. the warp, in Wright's Voc. i. 282, l. 5; 'Trama, vel subtemen, ōweb, vel āb,' id. i. 59, col. 2; 'Linostema, linen wearp, vel wyllen [woollen] āb,' id. i. 40, l. 8; where Mr. Wright adds the note: 'the yarn of a weaver's warp is, I believe, still called an abb.' [For wearp we should doubtless read woof.] W. The words ōwef, and ōweb or āweb are compounds, both containing the prefix d or ō, shortened form of on, preposition. Also wef and web are both sb.s., meaning 'web,' from wefan, to weave. Thus the word woof, put for oof, is short for on-wef, i.e. on-web, the web that is laid on or thrown across the first set of threads or wearp. See On and Weave. ¶ Most dictionaries 'explain' woof as derived from weave, but care not a jot about the oo, which they do not deign to notice. Yet they do not dream of deriving hoof from heave, nor roof from reave.

WOOL, the short thick hair of sheep and other animals. (E.) M.E. wolle, P. Plowman, B. vi. 13. — A.S. will, wul. 'Lana, wul,' Wright's Voc. i. 66, col. 1. + Du. wol. + Icel. ull (for vull). + Dan. uld (for ull or vull). + Swed. ull. + G. wolle, O.H.G. wolla. + Goth. willa. W. The Teut. type is WOLLA (Fick, iii. 298), which is certainly an assimilated form for WOL-NA, with Aryan suffix -na, as shewn by the cognate words, viz. Lithuan. wilna, Russ. volna, Skt. úrṇá, wool. The same assimilation appears in Lat. uillus, shaggy hair, uellus, a fleece.

γ. The Aryan form is WAR-NA, lit. 'a covering', hence a fleece; cf. Skt. uri, to cover, whence úrṇá, wool. From the same ✓WAR, to cover, we have also Gk. ép-ov, wool, ép-os, wool; and prob. oḗ-os, in the sense of woolly, shaggy, thick, Homer, Odys. iv. 50, vi. 231, Iliad, xvi. 224, x. 134. Der. wooll-en, M. E. wollen, P. Plowman, B. v. 215. A. S. wyllen (with the usual vowel-change from u to y), Wright's Voc. i. 40, l. 7; wooll-y, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 84; wool-monger, M. E. wolmongere, Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 20; wool-pack, M. E. wolpak, same page, l. 18; wool-sack, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 148, M. E. wollesak, Gower, C. A. i. 99, l. 6. Also wool-gathering (Halliwell), idly roving (said of the thoughts), as if gathering scattered wool on the downs. Also woolward, q. v.

WOOLWARD, clothed in wool only. (E.) 'I have no shirt, I go woolward for penance;' L. L. L. v. 2. 717; on which Dr. Schmidt says: 'Woolward, in wool only, without linen, a dress often enjoined as a penance by the church of Rome.' M. E. wolward, wolward, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 1; Pricke of Conscience, 3514; P. Plowman's Crede, 788. See four more examples in Nares, and his note upon the word. 'To goo wulward and barfott;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 150. Palsgrave has, in his list of adverbs: 'Wolward, without any linnen nexte ones body, sans chemyse.' I have elsewhere explained this as 'with the wool next one's skin;' I should rather have said 'with the skin against the wool,' though the result is practically much the same. This is Stratmann's explanation; he gives: 'wolwarde, cutis lanam uersus.' Cf. home-ward, heaven-ward. See Wool and Ward. ¶ To the above explanation, viz. that wool-ward = against the wool, with reference to the skin, which agrees with all that has been said by Nares and others, I adhere. In an edition of books iii and iv of Bede's Eccl. History, by Mayor and Lumby, Cambridge, 1878, p. 347, is a long note on this phrase, with references to Bp. Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor, pt. i. p. 181, l. 13; Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, pt. iii. sect. 4. memb. 1. subsect. 2, and subsect. 3; Christ's Own Complaint, ed. Furnivall (E. E. T. S.), l. 502; Myroure of Our Lady (E. E. T. S.), p. lii, where we read of St. Bridget that 'she neuer vsed any linnen clothe though it weer in tyme of syknes but only vpon hir hed, and next hir skyn she weer ener rough and sharpe wolwen cloth.' The note further corrects my explanation 'with the wool towards the skin,' because this 'would only suit with a clothing made of the fleece as it came from the sheep's back;' and I have amended my explanation accordingly. It then goes on: 'ward is wered, the pp. of A. S. werian, to wear, and wool-ward means "wool-clad," just as in Beowulf, 606, sweghwæred means "clad in brightness;" scirwæred and ealdwæred may be cited as other examples of this pp. in composition. It has fared with woolward, when it became a solitary example of this compound, as it did with rightwise under similar circumstances. The love for uniform orthography made this latter word into righteous, and wolwæred into woolward to conform to the shape of forward, &c. The use of go is the same as in to go bare, naked, &c. This is ingenious, but by no means proven, and I beg leave to reject it. The suffix -wered is extremely rare; sweghwæred and scirwæred each occur only once, and only in poetry, and even Grein can only guess at the sense of them; whilst ealdwæred has nothing to do with the matter, as it means 'worn out by old age,' Ettmüller, p. 4. There is no such word as wolwæred in A. S., nor is the spelling wolwæred ever found in M. E.; and it is a long jump of many centuries from these doubtful compounds with -wered in A. S. poetry to the first appearance of wolwarde (always so spelt) in the 14th century. I can only regret that my too loose explanation gave occasion for this curious theory. The M. E. wered = mod. E. worm; and I fail to see that wool-worm is an intelligible compound. [†]

WORD, an oral utterance or written sign, expressing thought; talk, message, promise. (E.) M. E. word, pl. wordes, Chaucer, C. T. 315. — A. S. word, neut. sb., pl. word, Grein, ii. 732. + Du. woord. + Icel. ord (for ord). + Dan. and Swed. ord. + G. wort. + Goth. ward. β. The Teut. type is WORDA, Fick, iii. 307. Cognate with Lithuan. wardas, a name, Lat. uerbum (base uark), a word, a verb; the Aryan type being WARDHA, Fick, i. 772. — ✓WAR, to speak; whence Gk. ἐπεω, to speak; so that the lit. sense is 'a thing spoken.' Cf. Gk. φή-ρα, a speaker, from the same root. Der. word, vb., to speak, Cymb. iv. 2. 240, M. E. worden, P. Plowman, B. iv. 46; word-less, Lucrece, 112; word-ing, word-y, M. E. wordi, Wyclif, Job, xvi. 21 (earlier version), word-i-ness. Also word-book, a dictionary, prob. imitated from Du. woordenboek, G. wörterbuch. And see rhetoric. Doublet, verb.

WORK, a labour, effort, thing done or written. (E.) M. E. werk, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 481. — A. S. weorc, worc, werce, Grein, ii. 677. + Du. werk. + Icel. verk. + Dan. værk. + Swed.

+ G. werk, O. H. G. werch, werah.

β. All from Teut. type WERKA, work, Fick, iii. 292; which from Teut. base WARK = Aryan ✓WARG, to work, id. i. 774. Hence also Gk. ἐ-οργα, I have wrought, ἐργα (= ἐργε-yeu), to do, work; Zend vareza, a working, varezána, a making (cited by Fick); cf. Pers. warz, gain, profit, acquisition, habit, warzad, he studies or labours, warz-kār, a ploughman (lit. work-doer), warz-gāw, an ox for ploughing (lit. work-cow), warzah, agriculture; Rich. Dict. p. 1638. Der. work, verb, M. E. werchen, wirchen, Chaucer, C. T. 2761, pt. t. wroughte, id. 499, pp. wrought, id. 16800, from A. S. wyrcean (with the usual vowel change from eo or o to y), also wircan, wercan, pt. t. workte, pp. geworht, Grein, ii. 759. Also work-able (from the verb); and (from the sb.) work-day, M. E. werkedei (trisyllabic), Ancren Riwe, p. 20, l. 7. A. S. weorc-dæg, Wright's Voc. i. 37; work-house, A. S. weorc-hūs (Lat. officina), Wright's Voc. i. 58, col. 1; work-man, O. Northumb. weremenn, Matt. x. 10 (Lindisfarne MS.); work-man-like; work-man-ship, M. E. werkemanship, P. Plowman, x. 288; work-shop. Also wright, q. v. And see en-erg-y, lit-urg-y, metall-urg-y, chir-urg-eon, s-urg-eon, organ.

WORLD, the earth and its inhabitants, the system of things, present state of existence, a planet, society. (E.) M. E. werld, Genesis and Exodus, l. 42, world, worlde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 19; also spelt wordle, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 7, l. 10; werd, Havelok, 1290; ward, Lancelot of the Laik, 3184. — A. S. weoruld, weorold, woruld, world, world, Grein, ii. 684. + Du. wereld. + Icel. veröld (gen. veraldar). + Dan. verden (for verld-en, where en is really the post-posed def. article). + Swed. verld. + G. welt, M. H. G. werlt, O. H. G. weralt, werold. β. The cognate forms shew clearly that the word is a composite one. It is composed of Icel. verr, O. H. G. wer, A. S. wer, Goth. wair, a man, cognate with Lat. uir, a man; and of Icel. öld, A. S. yldo, an age, M. E. elde, old age; see Virile and Eld. Thus the right sense is 'age of man' or 'course of man's life,' whence it came to mean lifetime, course of life, experience of life, usages of life, &c.; its sense being largely extended. The sb. eld is a derivative from the adj. öld, as shewn s. v.; and is well exhibited also in the curious Dan. hedenold, the heathen age, heathen times, from heden, a heathen. γ. Strictly, we have A. S. weoruld from wer and yldo; Icel. veröld from verr and öld, O. H. G. weralt from wer and a sb. formed from alt, old; but the corrupt form of the word in A. S. proves that the word is a very old one, formed in times previous to all record of any Teutonic speech. Der. world-ly, A. S. weoruldlic, Grein, ii. 687; world-li-ness; world-ly-mind-ed, world-ly-mind-ed-ness; world-ly-ing, with double dimin. suffix, As You Like It, ii. 1. 48.

WORM, a small creeping animal. (E.) Formerly applied to a snake of the largest size; cf. blind-worm. M. E. worm; pl. wormes, Chaucer, C. T. 10931. — A. S. wyrm, a worm, snake, dragon; Grein, ii. 763. + Du. worm. + Icel. ormr (for worm). + Dan. and Swed. orm (for worm). + G. wurm. + Goth. waurns. β. The Teut. type is WORMI, a worm, snake, Fick, iii. 307. The Gk. ἐμυς, an intestinal worm, is prob. not related, see Curtius, ii. 173. But the relation of the Teut. words to Lat. uermis, a worm, cannot be doubted; and as we further find Skt. krimi, a worm (whence E. crimson and carmine), Lithuan. kirmis, a worm, O. Irish crúim, a worm (cited by Curtius, cf. Irish crúimh, a maggot, W. pryf, a worm), Russ. cherve, a worm, we can hardly doubt that the Teut. WORMI has lost an initial h (= Aryan h), and stands for HWORMI, and that an initial c has been lost in Lat. uermis (for cuermis). 'All the forms may be explained from a primitive KARMI, by supposing that from this KWARMI was first developed, then, in Lat. and Teutonic, WARMI;' Curtius, as above. Fick (i. 522) gives KARMI as the orig. form whence the Skt., Lat., and Lithuan. forms are derived, but pronounces no opinion as to the Teut. words, as the loss of initial h is not proved; still, as he includes Lat. uermis, we may feel little hesitation. He further compares Lat. curvus, curved, crooked, which takes us back to ✓KAR, to move (esp. used of circular motion); see Curve and Circle. There is even a suspicion that the orig. form of the root was ✓SKAR, to move hither and thither, Fick, i. 810; which seems to be remarkably represented in English by the prov. E. squirm, to wriggle as an eel or snake; cf. prov. E. squir, to whirl round (Halliwell), unless, indeed, we are rather to connect these with E. swarm. Der. worm, verb; worm-y. Allied words are verm-ine, verm-icular, verm-icelli; also (probably) crim-son, carm-ine. (But not wormwood.)

WORMWOOD, a very bitter plant. (E.) The suffix -wood is corrupt, due to confusion with wood, in order to make it sound more intelligible. We find the spelling wormwod as early as the 15th century. 'Hoc absinthium, wormwod;' Wright's Voc. i. 226, col. 1. But only a little earlier (early 15th century), we find uermod, id. i. 191, col. 2. — A. S. wermod; 'Absinthium, wermod,' in a glossary of the 8th century; Wright's Voc. ii. 98, col. 1. + Du. wermoet, 'wormwood; Hexham. + G. weremuth, M. H. G. weremute, O. H. G. weramôte, werimute, weremute.

β. It is thus evident that the word is doubly corrupt, and has no more to do with worm than it has with wood; the G. forms shew clearly that the division of the A. S. word is wer-môd. [It is quite distinct from A. S. wyrmwyr, worm-wort, Sedum album or villosum; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 411.] Mr. Cockayne, Leechdoms, i. 217, supposes A. S. weremôd to mean 'ware-moth,' i. e. that which keeps off moths; this shews the right division of the word, but môd bears no resemblance to the A. S. for moth.

γ. Of course, the only way to recover the etymology is to consider the A. S., Du., and G. forms all at once. Now A. S. môd, O. Du. moed, G. muth, M. H. G. muot, muotte, O. H. G. muat, all mean the same thing, and answer to mod. E. mood, meaning formerly 'mind, courage, wrath.' The A. S. weriam, O. Du. weren, weeren, M. H. G. weren, all alike mean to protect or defend; cf. G. wehren, to check, control, defend. Thus the comp. weremôd unquestionably means ware-mood or 'mind-preserver,' and points back to some primitive belief as to the curative properties of the plant in mental affections. Any one who will examine the A. S. Leechdoms will see that our ancestors had great trust in very nauseous remedies, and the bitterness of the plant was doubtless a great recommendation, and invested it with special virtue.

δ. This orig. sense was no doubt early lost, as we find no mention of the plant being used in the way indicated. I may add that both parts of the word appear in other compounds. Thus we have G. wehr-haft, able to defend, wehr-los, defenceless (so also O. Du. weerloos); and, on the other hand, the latter element terminates G. weh-muth, sadness, de-muth, humility. See Wary and Mood. A curious confirmation of this etymology occurs in the A. S. name for hellebore, viz. wéde-berge, i. e. preservative against madness, Wright's Voc. ii. 32, note 2. [†]

WORRY, to harass, tease. (E.) The old sense was to seize by the throat, or strangle, as when a dog worries a rat or sheep. M. E. sworowen, wirien; spelt wirry, Rom. of the Rose, 6267; also wyruyn or worowen, and explained by 'strangulo, suffoco,' Prompt. Parv.; worow, used of lions and wolves that worry men, Pricke of Conscience, 1220; pp. werewed, wirwed, Havelok, 1915, 1921. The theoretical M. E. form is *wurzen (Stratmann), which passed, as usual, into wurwen, worwen, or wirwen, and other varieties; the w is always due (in such a position) to an older z, and answers to A. S. g. The various vowels point back to A. S. y, so that the A. S. form must have been wyrgan. — A. S. wyrgan, only found in the comp. dwyrgan, to harm, Grein, i. 49 (not a well-known word in this sense). + Du. worgen, to strangle; whence worg, quinsy. + O. Fries. wergia, wirgia, to strangle. + G. würgen, O. H. G. wurgan, to strangle, suffocate, choke; as in Wölfe würgen die Schafe, wolves worry the sheep, Flügel.

β. These verbs are closely allied to the sb. which appears as A. S. wearg, weark, werg, a wolf, an outlaw, Grein, ii. 675; the vowel-change from ea to y being well exhibited in the derivative wyrgan, a female wolf, occurring in the comp. grund-wyrgan, a female wolf dwelling in a cave, Grein, i. 531. Cognate words are Icel. wargr, a wolf, an outlaw, an accused person, M. H. G. warc, the same; from the Teut. type WARGA, a wolf, accused person; Fick, iii. 293.

γ. The root appears in the M. H. G. strong verb wergen, only occurring in the comp. ir-wergen (= er-wergen), to choke, throttle, strangle, pt. t. irwarg. Thus the Teut. base is WARG, to choke; whence WARGA, a strangler, a wolf, an outlaw, an accused person; also the secondary A. S. verb wyrgan, to choke, whence E. worry.

δ. It will now be seen that the much commoner A. S. wyrgan, wyrgan, to curse (Grein, ii. 763), is equally a derivative from A. S. wearg in the sense of 'accused person'; so also A. S. wergian, wergan, to curse (id. ii. 662), is a mere variant. The latter of these became M. E. warien, to curse, Chaucer, C. T. 4792. Hence probably the mod. use of worry in the sense 'to tease, vex;' but whether this be so or not is immaterial to the etymology, since M. E. wirien, to worry, and warien, to curse, are thus seen to belong to the same base.

— ✓ WARGH, to choke (Fick, i. 774); whence also Gk. βρόχος, a noose, slip-knot (for hanging), Lithuan. werszti, to strangle. And prob. the ✓ WARGH is extended from ✓ WAR, to turn, twist; for which see Walk. And cf. Wrong, Wrench, Wrangle.

WORSE, comp. adj. and adv., more bad; WORST, superl. adj. and adv., most bad. (E.) 1. M. E. wurs, wors, wers, adv.; wurse, worse, werse (properly dissyllabic), adj. 'Now is my prison wersé than before;' Chaucer, C. T. 1226. [Hence perhaps the suggestion of the double comp. wors-er, Temp. iv. 27.] 'Me is the wurs' — it is the worse for me; Owl and Nightingale, l. 34. We find also M. E. werre, worse, spelt also worre, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1588; this is a Scand. form, due to assimilation. — A. S. wyrs, adv.; wyrsa, wirsa, adj.; Grein, ii. 765. + O. Sax. wirs, adv.; wirsa, adj. + O. Fries. wirra, werri, adj. (for wirsa, werri, by assimilation). + Icel. verr, adv.; verri, adj. (for vers, verri). + Dan. værre, adj. + Swed. värre, adj. + M. H. G. wirs, adv.; wirser, adj. + Goth. wairs, adv.; wairsiza, adj. +

β. Fick (iii. 296) gives the Teut. type of the adv. as WERSIS, and that of the adj. as WERSISA; he thinks the Goth. wairs is short for wairsis, the full form being preserved only in the Goth. adj. wairsiza. Similarly, from the Goth. adj. minniza, smaller, was formed the adv. minz or mins, short for minnis or minis. In Gothic, -iza is a common suffix in comparatives, as in hard-iza, hard-er, from hard, hard; and it answers to mod. E. -er (Aryan -yans, explained in Schleicher, Compendium, p. 463, § 232). Hence, in the forms WERSIS, WERSISA, when the comp. suffix is removed, and vowel-change is allowed for (cf. A. S. lengra, longer, from lang, long), we are led to the Teut. base WARS, to twist, entangle, bring into a confused state, whence Icel. vörr, a pull (lit. twist) of the oar in a boat, orig. the turn of the paddle, and O. H. G. werran (G. wirren), to twist, entangle, confuse, O. H. G. werre, confusion, broil, war; see War.

γ. The same base WARS (assimilated to WARR) occurs perhaps in Lat. uerrere, pt. t. uerri, pp. uersus, to whirl, toss about, drive, sweep along, sweep; cf. Lucretius, v. 1226. See Fick, i. 776. 2. The superl. form presents no difficulty. M. E. worst, werst, adv.; worste, werste, adj., Gower, C. A. i. 25, l. 17. — A. S. wyrst, adv., wyrsta, adj. (Grein); this is a contracted form of wyrresta, which appears as wyrresta (by assimilation) in Matt. xii. 45. + O. Sax. wirista, adj. + Icel. verst, adv., verstr, adj. + Dan. værst. + Swed. värst. + O. H. G. wirist, wirrest, contracted form wirst. The Teut. type is WERSISTA.

¶ It is now seen that the s is part of the base or root; worse really does duty for wors-er, which is in actual use in the 16th century; and wors-t is short for wors-est. Der. worse, verb, Milton, P. L. vi. 440, M. E. wursien, Ancrén Riwe, p. 326, A. S. wyrisian, properly intrans., to grow worse, A. S. Chron. an. 1085; wors-en, verb, to make worse, Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. i. (R.); wors-en, to grow worse (Craven dialect). Also worst, verb, to defeat, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 878; this answers to M. E. wursien, above (A. S. wyrisian), and is a form due to the usual excrement t after s (as in among-st, whil-st, &c.) rather than formed from the superlative.

WORSHIP, honour, respect, adoration. (E.) Short for worth-ship; the th was not lost till the 14th century. Spelt worship, P. Plowman, B. iii. 332; but worþsipe (= worþsipe), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 8, l. 9 (A. D. 1340). — A. S. weorðscipe, worþscipe, honour; Grein, ii. 683. Formed with suffix -scipe (E. -ship) from A. S. weorð, wurð, adj., worthy, honourable; just as Lat. dignitas is from the adj. dignus. See Worth (1). Der. worship, verb, M. E. worþschipen, spelt wurþschipen in St. Katharine, l. 55 (so in the MS., but printed wurðschipen); not found in A. S. Also worship-ful, spelt worþssipul, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 80, l. 22; worship-ful-ly.

WORST, adj. and verb; see under Worse.

WORSTED, twisted yarn spun out of long, combed wool. (E.) M. E. worsted, Chaucer, C. T. 264. So named from the town of Worsted, now Worstead, not far to the N. of Norwich, in Norfolk. Probably not older than the time of Edward III, who invited over Flemish weavers to improve our woollen manufactures. Chaucer is perhaps the earliest author who mentions it. 'Worsted: these first took their name from Worsted, a village in this county;' Fuller, Worthies; Norfolk (R.).

β. Worsted stands for Worthstead; this we know from Charter no. 785 in Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. 111, where the name appears as Wrðestede, and w = wu, as in other instances. The A. S. wurð, weorð, worth, value, was also used in the sense of 'estate' or 'manor,' and appears in place-names, such as Sawbridge-worth, Richmans-worth; however, in the sense of 'estate,' the usual form is weorðig, and this may equally well suit the form Wrðestede, the first e representing an earlier -ig. The A. S. stede = mod. E. stead, or place. Hence Worsted means 'the place of an estate;' see Worth and Stead.

WORT (1), a plant. (E.) Orig. the general E. name for plant; plant being a Latin word. M. E. wort; pl. wortes, Chaucer, C. T. 15227. — A. S. wyrt, a wort; Grein, ii. 765. + O. Sax. wurt. + Icel. urt (for wurt), also spelt jurt, perhaps borrowed. + Dan. urt. + Swed. ört. + G. wurz. + Goth. wauris. β. All from Teut. type WORTI, a plant, herb, Fick, iii. 294. Closely allied to Wart and Root; see further under Root (1). Der. mug-wort, and other plant-names in which wort is suffixed; also orchard (= wort-yard); also wort (2).

Allied to radix, liquorice, &c.

WORT (2), an infusion of malt, new beer unfermented or while being fermented. (E.) M. E. wort or worte, Chaucer, C. T. 16281. 'Hoc idromellum, Anglice wurte;' Wright's Voc. i. 257, col. 2. Not found in A. S.; Somner gives a form wert, which is unauthorised, and can hardly be right, being inconsistent with the M. E. spelling. It does not seem to be an old word in this sense, and is prob. only a particular application of wort (1), meaning an infusion like that of herbs when boiled. + O. Du. wort, 'wort, or new beere before it be clarified;' Hexham; cf. worte, 'a root or a wort,' id. + Low G. wört. + Icel. virtir. + Norweg. vyrt, vört, Aasen. + Swed. vört. + G. bier- würze, beer-wort; cf. wurz, a wort, herb, whence würze, seasoning, spice, würzsuppe, spiced soup, &c. See Wort (1). [†]

WORTH (1), equal in value to, deserving of; as sb., desert, price. (E.) M. E. wurð, worþ, worth, adj., worthy, honourable, Will. of Palerne, 2522, 2990; Rob. of Glouc. p. 364, last line. Also wurþ, worþ, ill-spelt worthe in P. Plowman, B. iv. 170; but wurþ in Rob. of Glouc. p. 373, l. 3. — A. S. weorð, wurð, adj., honourable; weorð, wurð, value; Grein, ii. 678. + Du. waard, adj.; waard, sb. + Icel. verðr, adj.; verð, sb. + Dan. værd, adj. and sb. + Swed. vård, adj.; värde, sb. + G. wert, M. H. G. wert, adj. and sb. + Goth. waitr, adj. and sb. β. All from Teut. type WERTHA, as adj., valuable; as sb., value; Fick, iii. 290. This word is probably to be divided as WER-THA, and is allied to A. S. waru, wares, orig. 'valuables'; from ✓ WAR, to guard, protect, keep (in store); see Ware (1) and Wary. As to the suffix, cf. bir-ik from bear, til-ik from till, bro-ik from brew. Der. worth-y, spelt wurþi, Ormulum, 2705, wurþiz, id. 4200, suggested by Icel. verðugr, worthy (the A. S. weorðig only occurring as a sb. meaning an estate or farm); hence worthi-ly, worthi-ness; worth-less, worth-less-ly, -ness.

WORTH (2), to become, to be. (E.) Now only in the phr. wo worth the day! = evil be to the day. M. E. worþen, to become; formerly common. In P. Plowman's Crede, a short poem of 855 (long) lines, it occurs 8 times; as 'schent mote I worþen' = I must be blamed, l. 9; 'wo mote þou worþen' = may evil be (or happen) to you; and see P. Plowman, B. prol. 187, i. 186, ii. 43, iii. 33, v. 160, vi. 165, vii. 51. — A. S. weorðan, to become, also spelt wurðan, wyrðan; pt. t. weorð, pl. wurdon; Grein, ii. 678. + Du. worden, pt. t. werd, pp. geworden. + Icel. verða, pt. t. varð, pp. orðinn, to become, happen, come to pass. + Dan. vorde. + Swed. varda. + G. werden, O. H. G. werdan. + Goth. waitrhan, pt. t. waitrþ, pp. waitrþans. β. All from Teut. base WARTH, to become, turn to; allied to Lat. vertere, to turn, verti, to turn to. — ✓ WART, to turn; Fick, i. 774, iii. 294; see Verse. Der. wierd, q. v.

WOT, I know, or he knows; see Wit (1). Der. not (2).

WOULD; see Will (1).

WOUND, a hurt, injury, cut, bruise. (E.) M. E. wounde, Chaucer, C. T. 1012. — A. S. wund, Grein, ii. 750. + Du. wond, or wonde. + Icel. und (for vund). + Dan. vunde. + G. wunde; O. H. G. wunta. β. All from Teut. type WONDA, a wound; Fick, iii. 288. We find also the same form WONDA, wounded, appearing in G. wund, O. H. G. wunt, Goth. wunds, wounded. Formed from the pp. of the strong verb signifying 'to fight' or 'suffer', represented in A. S. by winnan, to strive, fight, suffer, pp. wunnen. So also Icel. und is from unninn, pp. of vinna; and similarly in other Teut. languages. — ✓ WAN, to strive, fight; see Win. Cf. Lithuan. wotis, a sore; also Skt. van, occurring in the sense 'to hurt, kill,' as well as 'to ask, desire.' Der. wound, verb, A. S. wundian, Grein, ii. 751.

WRACK, a kind of sea-weed; shipwreck, ruin. (E.) Wrack, as a name for sea-weed, merely means 'that which is cast ashore,' like things from a wrecked ship. This is well shewn by mod. F. varech, which has both senses, (1) sea-weed cast on shore, and (2) pieces of a wrecked ship cast on shore; this F. word being merely borrowed from English, and pronounced as nearly like the original as F. pronunciation will admit. Cotgrave has F. varech, 'a sea-wreck or wreck, all that is cast ashore by chance or tempest.' Shak. has urack, shipwreck, destruction, ruin, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 110; Macb. i. 3. 114, &c. M. E. wrak, a wreck, Chaucer, C. T. (Six-text edition), Group B, l. 513; where Tyrwhitt prints wrecke, l. 4933. Merely a peculiar sense of A. S. wrac, banishment, exile, misery, Grein, ii. 738. The sense is immediately due to the orig. verb, viz. A. S. wrecan (pt. t. wrac), to drive, expel, cast forth; so that wrac is here to be taken in the sense of 'that which is driven ashore.' The A. S. wrecan also means to wreak, punish; see Wreak. And see Wreck. + Du. wrak, sb., a wreck; adj., cracked, broken; cf. wraken, to reject. + Icel. rek (for wrek), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore; from reka (for wreka), to drive. + Dan. vrag, wreck; cf. vrage, to reject. + Swed. vrat, wreck, refuse, trash. Doublets, wreck, rack (4).

WRAITH, an apparition. (Scand.) 'Wraith', an apparition in the likeness of a person, supposed to be seen soon before, or soon after death. The apparition called a wraith was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel; Jamieson. He adds that the word is used by King James. Also spelt warth, as in Ayrshire (id.) — Icel. vörðr (gen. varðar), a warden, guardian; from varða, to guard, cognate with E. Ward, q. v. Cf. Icel. varða, varði, a beacon, a pile of stones to warn a wayfarer (whence the notion may have arisen that the wraith gives warning of death). Note also Norweg. varde, a beacon, pile of stones, and the curious word vardyule [= ward-evil?], a guardian or attendant spirit, a fairy or sprite said to go before or follow a man, also considered as an omen or a boding spirit (Aasen); which is precisely the description of a wraith.

WRANGLE, to dispute, argue noisily. (E.) M. E. wranglen, a various reading for wraxlen (to wrestle), in P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80. The sb. wranglyng is in P. Plowman, B. iv. 34. The frequentative of wring, to press, to strain; formed from A. S. wrang, pt. t. of wringan, to press. Thus the orig. sense was to keep on pressing, to urge; hence to argue vehemently. Cf. Dan. wringle, to twist, entangle. See Wring. Der. wrangle, sb.; wrangl-er, a disputant in the schools (at Cambridge), now applied to a first-class-man in the mathematical tripos; wrangl-ing.

WRAP, to fold, infold, cover by folding round. (E.) M. E. wrappen, Chaucer, C. T. 10950; Will. of Palerne, 745. We also find wlappen (with l for r), Wyclif, Luke, ii. 7, John, xx. 7, now spelt lap; see Lap (3). Cf. Prov. E. warp, to wrap up, Somersetshire (Halliwell), also to weave. Not found in A. S. Cf. North Frisian wrappe, to press into, to wrap up. The form of the word is such that it can be no other than derivative from the sb. Warp, q. v. Perhaps the sense was due to the folding together of a fishing-net; cf. Icel. varp, the cast of a net, varpa, a cast, also the net itself; skóvarp, lit. 'a shoe-warp,' the binding of a shoe; Swed. dial. varpa, a fine hering-net (Rietz). Der. wrapp-er, sb. Doublet, lap (3). Cf. envelop, develop.

WRATH, anger, indignation. (E.) M. E. wrappe, wratthe, P. Plowman, B. iv. 34; wraththe, Wyclif, Eph. iv. 31. Properly dissyllabic. — O. Northumbrian wræðo, wræððo, Mark, iii. 21; Luke, xxi. 23; John, iii. 36 (both in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS.). The sb. does not occur in the A. S. texts, but the adj. wræð, wroth, from which it is formed, is common; see Wroth. + Icel. vreiði (for vreiði), wrath; from reið, adj., wroth. + Dan. and Swed. vrede; from vred, adj. Der. wrath-ful, King John, ii. 87; wrath-ful-ly, -ness.

WREAK, to revenge, inflict (vengeance) on. (E.) M. E. wreken, Chaucer, C. T. 963; formerly a strong verb; pt. t. wraþ, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 303; pp. wroken, wroke, wreken, P. Plowman, A. ii. 169, B. ii. 104. — A. S. wrecan, to wreak, revenge, punish, orig. to drive, urge, impel, Grein, ii. 741; pt. t. wrac, pp. wrecen. + Du. wreken, to avenge. + Icel. reka (for wreka), pt. t. rak, pp. rekinn, to drive, thrust, repel, toss; also, to wreak vengeance. + Swed. wräka, to reject, refuse, throw (not a primary verb). + G. rächen, to avenge; O. H. G. rechan. + Goth. wrikan, to wreak anger on, to persecute. β. All from Teut. base WRAK, orig. to press, urge, drive; Fick, iii. 308.

Further allied to Lithuan. wargti, to suffer affliction, wargas, affliction; Russ. wrag, an enemy, foe (persecutor); Lat. uergere, to bend, turn, incline, urgere, to press, urge on, Gk. ἐργεῖν, to repel, Skt. vrij, to exclude, orig. to bend. All from ✓ WARG, to press, urge, repel; Fick, i. 773. Prob. identical with ✓ WARG, to work; the sense of 'drive on' being common to both. See Work. Der. wrack, q. v.; wreck, q. v., wretch, q. v.

WREATH, a garland. (E.) M. E. wrethe, Chaucer, C. T. 2147. — A. S. wræð, a twisted band, a bandage; gewræðen mid wræðe = bound with a bandage, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, cap. xvii. p. 122, l. 14. Formed (with vowel-change from á to é) from A. S. wræð, pt. t. of wræðan, to writhe, twist; see Writhe. Der. wreathe, verb; 'together wreathed sure,' Surrey, Paraph. of Ecclesiastes, c. iv. l. 34.

WRECK, destruction, ruin, remains of what is wrecked. (E.) Formerly wrack, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 26. M. E. wrak, Chaucer, C. T. 4933 (Group B, l. 513), where Tyrwhitt prints wrecke. — A. S. wrac, expulsion, banishment, misery; Grein, ii. 738. The peculiar use is due to Scand. influence; see Wrack. — A. S. wrac, pt. t. wrecan, to drive, wreak; see Wreak. + Du. wrak, wreck; cf. wrak, adj., broken. + Icel. rek (for wrek), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore; from reka, to drive. + Dan. vrag, wreck. + Swed. vrak, refuse, trash, wreck. β. The lit. sense 'that which is drifted or driven ashore;' hence it properly meant pieces of ships drifted ashore, also wrack or sea-weed. Secondly, as the pieces thus driven ashore were from ships broken up by tempests, it came to mean fragments, refuse, also destruction, or ruin caused by any kind of violence, as in Shakespeare and Milton. The orig. sense of A. S. wrecan was to impel, drive, persecute, expel, wreak; hence wrac in A. S. poetry commonly means banishment or misery such as is endured by an exile; but in all the various senses the word remains the same. Der. wreck, verb; also worack, Temp. i. 2. 236; wrack-ful, Shak. Sonnet 65; wreck-ful, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 36; wreck-er, one who plunders wrecks. And see wretch. [†]

WREN, a small bird. (E.) M. E. wrenne, Gower, C. A. iii. 349, l. 25. — A. S. wrenna, wrænna; Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2; 62, col. 2. The lit. sense is 'the lascivious bird.' — A. S. wræne, lascivious; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 12, § 1. Allied to Dan. vrinsk, proud, Swed. wrensk, not castrated (said of horses), Widgeon; where -sk answers to E. -ish; M. H. G. reinno, wrenno, O. H. G. ranno, a stallion. Hence the Swed. wrenska, to neigh as a stallion. The form of the root is WRIN, to neigh (as a horse), to squeal (as a pig), used of various animals; and, as applied to the wren, it may be taken to mean to chirp or twitter. It appears in the Norweg. strong verb grina, to whine, squeal, neigh, Aasen; and in the Icel. grína (for grína), pt. t. gréin, pp. gréin, to whine, squeal, &c.; used of animals in heat, and applied to cocks, dogs, swine, horses, &c. Hence also Icel. rindill, a wren.

WRENCH, a twist, sprain, side-pull, jerk. (E.) 'I wrench my foot, I put it out of joint;' Palsgrave. He also spells it wrinche. M. E. wrench, only in the metaphorical sense of perversion, guile, fraud, deceit. 'Withouten eny wrenche'—without any guile, Rob. of Glouc. p. 55, l. 2.—A. S. wrence, wrene, guile, fraud, deceit, Grein, ii. 742.

β. It is obvious that mod. E. has preserved the orig. sense, and that the A. S. and M. E. uses are merely metaphorical. So also G. rank, the cognate form, means an intrigue, trick, artifice, but provincially it means 'crookedness,' Flügel; hence M. H. G. renken, G. verrenken, to wrench. On the other hand, mod. E. only uses the allied word wrong in the metaphorical sense of perverse, bad. Both wrench and wrong are allied to WRING, q.v. The literal sense is 'twist.' Der. wrench, verb, A. S. wrencan, to deceive, Grein, ii. 742; so also A. S. beurenca, to obtain by fraud, A. S. Apothegms, no. 34, pr. in Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 262.

WREST, to twist forcibly, distort. (E.) M. E. wresten, in the sense to wrestle, struggle, Ancren Riwle, p. 374, l. 7.—A. S. wrēstan, to twist forcibly, Grein, ii. 740; cf. Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 140, l. 190. We also find A. S. wrēst, adj., firm, strong (Grein); the orig. sense of which is supposed to have been tightly twisted, or rather (as I should suppose) tightly strung, with reference to the strings of a harp when tightened by the instrument called a wrest; see Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 23; and note that the word strong itself merely means strung.+ Icel. reista, to wrest; cf. Dan. wriste (secondary verb), to wrest.

β. The form wrēst is closely allied to wrēð, a wreath or twisted bandage, and stands (probably) for wrēðst *; in any case, it is clearly from A. S. wrēð, pt. t. of wrēðan, to writhe or twist; see WRITHE. The suffix -st is not uncommon, and occurs in E. bla-st from blow, in A. S. blōst-ma, a blossom, from blōwan, to flourish, &c.; see WRIST. Der. wrest, sb. (as above); wrest-le, q.v.

WRESTLE, to struggle, contend by grappling together. (E.) M. E. wrestlen, Gower, C. A. iii. 350; wrastlen, Ancren Riwle, p. 80, l. 6. The frequentative of WREST, q.v. The A. S. wrēstlian, to wrestle, is rare; the form more commonly found is wrāstlian, Gen. xxxii. 24, whence M. E. wraxlen, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80, where we also find the various readings wrastle, wraskle. Still, we find: 'Luctatur [read Luctor] wrāstlere; Luctorum, wrāstliendra;' Wright's Voc. ii. 50, col. 1. + O. Du. wrastelen, worstelen, 'to wrestle or to struggle,' Hexham. Der. wrestl-er, wrestl-ing.

WRETCH, a miserable creature. (E.) Orig. an outcast or exile. M. E. wrecche, Chaucer, C. T. 931 (or 933), where Tyrwhitt prints wretched wight, and omits which.—A. S. wrecca, an outcast, exile, lit. 'one driven out,' also spelt wræcca, wreca, Grein, ii. 739. Cf. A. S. wraec, exile.—A. S. wreccan, to drive out, also to persecute, wreak, avenge; see WREAK. Cf. Lithuan. wargas, affliction, misery. Der. wretch-ed, M. E. wreched, Chaucer, C. T. 923, lit. 'made like a wretch'; wretch-ed-ly, wretch-ed-ness.

WRETCHLESSNESS, a misspelling of recklessness, i.e. recklessness; see RECK.

WRIGGLE, to move along by twisting to and fro. (E.) 'With their much winding and wrigling;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 2. § 1. The frequentative of wrig, to move about; 'The bore his taylor wrygges,' Skelton, Elinour Rumming, l. 176. This word wrig seems to answer most closely to M. E. wrikken, to twist to and fro, Life of St. Dunstan, l. 82; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. Not found in A. S., but a Low G. word as well as Scand., and preserved in mod. E. wrick, to twist.

β. We find the closely related A. S. wrigian, to impel, move towards, but this became M. E. wrien (with loss of g), whence mod. E. wry, adj.; see further under WRY. It is clear that M. E. wrikken and A. S. wrigian are closely related forms; both are due to the Teut. base WRIK, weakened form of WRAK, to drive, wreak; Fick, iii. 308. Cf. Goth. wrikan, to persecute, wraikuz, wry, crooked; see further under WREAK and WRING.+ Du. wriggelen, to wriggle; frequentative of wrikken, 'to move or stir to and fro,' Sewel; whence onwrikbaar, immovable, steady.+ Low G. wrikken, to turn, move to and fro, wriggle.+ Dan. wrikke, to wriggle.+ Swed. wricka, to turn to and fro; whence wrickning, distortion.

γ. The orig. sense of Skt. wrij seems to have been 'to bend'; and we may deduce the orig. sense of E. wriggle as having been 'to keep on bending or twisting about,' which is precisely the sense it has still. See WRY and RIG (2). Der. wriggl-er. Also wrick-ets, q.v.

WRIGHT, a workman. (E.) M. E. wrighte, Chaucer, C. T. 3145.—A. S. wyrhta, a worker, workman, maker, creator; Grein, ii. 763; with the common shifting of r.—A. S. wyrht, a deed, work; with suffix -a of the agent, as in huni-a, a hunter. The A. S. wyrht occurs in ge-wyrht, a work, Grein, i. 489, where the prefix ge- makes no appreciable difference; and it stands for wyrct (by the usual putting of ht for ct). Formed, with suffix -t (as in gift, flight), from A. S. wyre-an, to work; see WORK.+ O. Sax. wurhtio, a wright, from wurht, a deed; which from wirkian, to work.+ O. H. G. wurhto, a wright (cited in Heyne's Gloss. to the Heliand), from O. H. G. wurhti, wurahi, a work, merit; which from O. H. G. wurchan, to work. Der. cart-wright, ship-wright, wheel-wright.

WRING, to twist, force by twisting, compress, pain, bend aside. (E.) M. E. wringen; pt. t. wrang, wrong, Chaucer, C. T. 5026; pp. wringen, wrongen.—A. S. wringan, to press, compress, strain, pt. t. wrang, Gen. xl. 11, pp. wrunon.+ Du. wringen.+ Low G. wringen, to twist together.+ Dan. wringel, to twist, tangle.+ Swed. wränga, to distort, wrest, pervert (secondary form).+ G. ringen, to wring, wrest, turn, struggle, wrestle; a strong verb; pt. t. rang, pp. gerungen; O. H. G. hringan (for wringan), strong verb.

β. All from Teut. base WRANG, to press, wring, twist; Fick, iii. 294. Fick considers this as a nasalised form of Teut. base WARG, to worry, properly to throttle; for which see WORRY. But I am convinced that this leads us astray, and introduces all kinds of difficulties. It is quite impossible to separate wring from E. wrick, to twist or sprain, and the numerous related Teutonic words quoted under WRIGGLE; all these are from a base WRIK, to twist, which Fick himself (iii. 308) considers as a weakened form of WRAK, to drive, urge, wreak, treated of under WREAK. Accordingly, I look upon the Teut. base WRANG as a parallel form to WRANK (E. wrench), nasalised from WRAK, just as WRINK (base of E. wrinkle) is a nasalised form of WRIK.

γ. Only thus can we connect the E. words wring and wrench, the meanings of which are almost identical, and which must not be separated. Neither the E. wring nor any of its cognates necessarily involve the sense 'to choke,' but all plainly involve the sense 'to twist' or 'to distort.' We find, then, Aryan ✓ WARG, to bend or drive = Teut. base WRAK, to drive, wreak, with a weakened form WRIK, to bend, twist, wrick. Hence, by nasalisation, we have WRANK, to wrench, and WRINK, to fold or bend together, as in E. wrinkle. And in connection with WRANK, we have a parallel form WRANG, to twist, wring, whilst in connection with WRIK we have E. wrigg-le. All are various developments from ✓ WARG in its double sense: (1) to bend, twist, as in Lat. uergere, Skt. wrij; (2) to drive, urge, as in Lat. urgere, E. wreak, Icel. reka. See Fick, i. 773, where the senses of ✓ WARG are given as drehen (to twist) and drängen (to urge). Der. wrang-le, wrong; allied to wreak, wrack, wreck, wretch, wrench, wrink-le, wrigg-le, wry.

WRINKLE (1), a small ridge on a surface, unevenness. (E.) M. E. wrinkel or wrinkil. 'Wrynkyll, or rympyl, or wrympyl, Ruga; Wrynkyll, or playte [pleat] in clothe, Plica;.' Prompt. Parv. [Here the spelling wrympyl stands for hrympyl; wrinkle and rimple are from different roots, as shewn under ripple (2). Elsewhere, we find, in Prompt. Parv. p. 434, the spelling rympyl, given under R.] The pl. wrinklis occurs, in the various readings of the later version, in Wyclif, Gen. xxxviii. 14. Sommer gives A. S. wrinle, a wrinkle; and wrinclian, to wrinkle; both wholly unauthorised, and perhaps the right form should be wryncle.

β. Evidently a dimin. form, from A. S. wringan, to press, wring, hence to distort; or else from A. S. wringen, pp. of the same verb. The sense is 'a little twist' or slight distortion, causing unevenness. See WRING; and see WRINKLE (2).+ O. Du. wrinkel, 'a wrinkle'; wrinckelen, 'to wrinkle, or to crise'; allied to wringen, 'to wreath [i.e. writhe, twist] or to wring'; Hexham. E. Müller gives the O. Du. spellings as wryncel, wryncelen, which are probably more correct; cf. the forms following.

+ Dan. rynke, a wrinkle, pucker, gather, fold; rynke, to wrinkle.+ Swed. rynka, both sb. and vb. Cf. G. runzel, a wrinkle; rünzeln, to wrinkle, frown. Der. wrinkle, vb.; wrinkl-y. [†]

WRINKLE (2), a hint, small piece of advice. (E.) Prov. E. wrinkle, a new idea (Halliwell). It means 'a new idea' imparted by another, a hint; but the lit. sense is 'a small trick,' or 'little stratagem.' It is the dimin. of A. S. wrenc, a trick; for which see WRENCH. Closely allied to WRINKLE (1). [†]

WRIST, the joint which turns the hand. (E.) The pl. is spelt wrestes in Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 6. M. E. wriste or wrist; also wirst, by shifting of r. 'Wryst, or wyrste of an hande;' Prompt. Parv.—A. S. wrist. We find 'ōð þá wriste'=up to the wrist; Laws of Æthelstan, pt. iv. § 7, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 226, l. 17. The full form was hand-wrist, i.e. that which turns the hand about. We find 'betwux elboga and handwyrste'=betwix elbow and handwrist, Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2. Put for *wrið-st, and formed with suffix -st (as in bla-st from blow, &c.) from wrið-en, pp. of wriðan, to writhe, to twist; see WRITHE. Cf. WREST, from the same verb.+ O. Fries. wriust, wrist, werst; whence hondwriust, hand-wrist, foetwriust, foot-wrist or instep.+ Low G. wrist.+ Icel. rist, the instep; from rið-inn, pp. of riða, to twist.+ Dan. and Swed. wrist, the instep; from vide, vrída, to twist. + G. rist, instep, wrist. ¶ Fick (iii. 255) makes the curious mistake of deriving the Icel. rist from the verb to rise; he happened only to observe the Icel. and G. forms, which have lost the initial w. Der. wrist-band, the band of the sleeve at the wrist.

WRITE, to form letters with a pen or pencil, engrave, express in writing, compose, communicate a letter. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to score,' i.e. to cut slightly, as when one scores letters or marks on a piece of bark or soft wood with a knife; it also meant to engrave runes on stone. M.E. writen, pt. t. wroot, Chaucer, C.T. 5310; pp. writen (with short i).—A.S. writan, pt. t. wrát, pp. writen, to write, inscribe (orig. to score, engrave), Grein, ii. 743. + O. Sax. writan, to cut, injure; also to write. + Du. rijten, to tear, split. + Icel. rita, pt. t. reit, pp. ritinn, to scratch, cut, write. + Swed. rita, to draw, delineate. + G. reissen, pt. t. riss, pp. gerissen, O. H. G. rizan, to cut, tear, split, draw or delineate. Cf. Goth. writs, a stroke made with a pen.

β. All from the Teut. base WRIT, to cut, scratch, hence to engrave, write; Fick, iii. 309. Cf. Skt. vardh, to cut, vraṇa, a wound, fracture, vraçh, to tear, cut, vrika, a wolf (lit. 'tearer'), all pointing back to a primitive ✓WAR, to cut, tear. See Fick, i. 213. Der. writ, sb., A.S. ge-writ, also writ, a writing, Grein, i. 486, ii. 743, from writ-en, pp. of writan, to write. Also writ-er, A.S. writere, Matt. ii. 4; (E.) writet, writ-ing.

WRITHE, to twist to and fro. (E.) Spelt wrethe in Palsgrave. M.E. writhen, spelt wrythen in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 3, l. 4452; pt. t. wroth (with long o), Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1200; pp. writhen (with short i), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 174. Cf. writhing in Chaucer, C.T. 10441.—A.S. wriðan, to twist, wind about, pt. t. wrāð, pp. wriðen, Grein, ii. 743. + Icel. ríða (for vrída), pt. t. reið, pp. riðinn. + Dan. vríde. + Swed. vrída, to wring, twist, turn, wrest. + O. H. G. ridan, M. H. G. riden; a strong verb, now lost.

β. All from Teut. base WRITH, from WARTH = Aryan ✓WART, to turn, as in Lat. uertere; see VERSE. And see WORTH (2). Der. wrath, wroth, wreath, wri-st, wre-st.

WRONG, perverted, unjust, bad; also as sb., that which is wrong or unjust. (E.) M.E. wrong, adj., Will. of Palerne, 706; sb., P. Plowman, B. iii. 175.—A.S. wrang (a passing into o before n), occurring as a sb. in the A.S. Chron. an. 1124. Properly an adj. signifying perverted or wrung aside; as is curiously shown by the use of wrong nose, for 'crooked nose,' in Wyclif, Levit. xxi. 19 (later version).—A.S. wrang, pt. t. of wringan, to wring; see WRING. (Cf. Lat. tortus from torquere.) + Du. wrang, sour, harsh (because acids wring the mouth); from wringen. + Icel. rangr, awry; metaphorically, wrong, unjust. + Dan. wrang, wrong, adj. + Swed. vrång, perverse. Der. wrong, verb, to injure, as in 'to wrong the wronger,' Shak. Lucrece, 819; wrong-er (as above); wrong-ly; wrong-ful, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 58 (earlier version); wrong-ful-ly, -ness; wrong-head-ed, i.e. perverse. Also wrong-wise, M.E. wrongwis, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 175, l. 256 (Swed. vrångvis, iniquitous), now obsolete, but remarkable as being the converse of E. righteous, formerly right-wise; Palsgrave actually spells it wrongeous!

WROTH, full of wrath, angry. (E.) M.E. wroth, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 504.—A.S. wrāð, wroth, Grein, ii. 737.—A.S. wrāð, pt. t. of wriðan, to writhe; so that the orig. sense was 'wry,' i.e. twisted or perverted in one's temper. + Du. wreed, cruel. + Icel. reibr. + Dan. vrød. + Swed. vrød. + M. H. G. reit, reid, only in the sense of twisted or curled. See WRITHE and WRATH.

WRY, twisted or turned to one side. (E.) 'With visage wry,' Court of Love, l. 1162 (a late poem, perhaps 16th century). But the verb wrien, to twist, bend, occurs in Chaucer, C.T. 17211; and answers to A.S. wrigian, to drive, impel, also to tend or bend towards. 'Hláford mīn [me] . . . wrigað on wonge' = my lord drives me [i.e. a plough] along the field; Codex Exoniensis, ed. Thorpe, p. 403 (Riddle xxii, l. 9). Of a bough bent down, and then let go, it is said: 'wrigað wip his gecydeas' = it moves towards its kind, i.e. as it is naturally inclined; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 2 (cap. xxv). This A.S. base is still preserved in the frequentative WRIGGLE, q. v. And cf. Goth. wraikuis, crooked, Skt. vrj, orig. to bend, Lat. vergere. See further under AWRY. Der. a-wry, q. v.; wry-neck, a small bird, allied to the woodpecker, so called from 'the witting snake-like motion which it can impart to its neck without moving the rest of its body;' Engl. Cycl. Also wry-ness.

WYCH-ELM; see under WITCH-ELM.

WYVERN, WIVERN, in heraldry, a kind of flying serpent or two-legged dragon. (F., -L.) The final n is excrement after r, as in bitter-n, q. v. M.E. wivre, a serpent, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1012.—O. F. wivre, a serpent, viper, esp. in blazon; see Roquefort and Burguy; mod. F. givre, a viper. By some strange confusion between the Lat. u and the G. w, this word was improperly spelt with w, somewhat like prov. E. wiper, a viper. Burguy says it was also formerly spelt wivre, and that it is still spelt voivre in some F. dialects.—Lat. uipera, a viper; see VIPER. Doublet, viper.

X.

XEBEC, a small three-masted vessel used in the Mediterranean. (Span., -Turk.) In Ash's Dict. ed. 1775.—Span. xabeque, a xebec. So also Port. zabeco, F. chebec.—Turk. sumbaki, 'a kind of Asiatic ship;' Rich. Dict. p. 852. He also gives Pers. sumbuk, a small ship; Arab. sumbūk, a small boat, a pinnace; on the same page. See Devic, Supp. to Littré, s. v. chebec, which is the F. form; he gives also Port. xabeco, Ital. zambecco, the latter form retaining the nasal m, which is lost in the other languages. He adds that the word sumbaki is given in the first ed. of Meninski's Thesaurus (1680); and that the mod. Arab. word is shabāk; see Dozy, Glossaire, p. 352.

Y.

Y-, prefix. (E.) This prefix is nearly obsolete, being only retained in the archaic words y-clept, y-wis. The M. E. forms are y-, i-; the latter being frequently written I (as a capital).—A.S. ge-, an extremely common prefix, both of sbs. and verbs. [In verbs it was prefixed, not only to the pp. (as in mod. G. and in Middle-English), but also to the past tense, to the infinitive, or indeed occasionally to any part of the verb, without appreciably affecting the sense. In the word y-wis, certainly, many editors have ignorantly mistaken it for the pronoun I; see Ywis. It appears as e- in the word e-nough; and as a- in the word a-ware.] + Du. ge-, prefix. + G. ge-; O. H. G. ka-, ki-. + Goth. ga-. Perhaps the same as the Gk. enclitic -γέ, and Skt. ka (Vedic gha), a particle laying a stress on the preceding word (as γέ), or without a distinct signification; Benfey, p. 1101; Fick, iii. 95.

YACHT, a swift pleasure-boat. (Du.) Pron. yot. In Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, where it is badly spelt yacht; Bailey has yatch.—Du. jagt, formerly spelt jacht; 'een lacht, ofte [or] See-roovers Schip, a pinace, or a pirate's ship,' Hexham. 'Jagt, a yacht;' Sewel. Named from its speed.—Du. jagten (formerly jachten), to speed, to hunt; jagt (formerly jacht), a hunting.—Du. jagen, 'to hunt or to chase deer, hares, &c.;' Hexham. + G. jagen, to hunt; prob. allied to G. jāhe, O. H. G. gāhi, quick, sudden, rash, and so to G. gehen, to go, Du. gaan, formerly gaen (Hexham), to go. See Gay and Go. Der. yacht-er, yacht-ing. [†]

YAM, a large esculent tuber, resembling the potato. (Port.) Mentioned in Cook's Voyages (Todd; no reference).—Port. inkame, a yam; not given in Vieyra, but noted in Webster and in Littré. Littré gives the F. form as igname, which he says is borrowed from the Port. inkame; and adds: 'it was the Portuguese who first found the yam used as an object of culture, first on the coast of Africa, afterwards in India and Malacca, and gave it its name; but the language whence it was taken is unknown.' Webster gives the West-Indian form as ikame, but (if Littré be right) this is merely the Port. word with n dropped. It would seem that the orig. word must be sought for in some African language. The Malay name is ubi; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 21.

YANKEE, a citizen of New England, or of the United States. (Unknown.) The word occurs as early as 1765. Webster cites: 'From meanness first this Portsmouth Yankee rose, And still to meanness all his conduct flows,' Oppression, A Poem by an American, Boston, 1765. We also find in the same: 'Commonly supposed to be a corrupt pronunciation of the word English, or of the F. word Anglais, by the native Indians of America. According to Thierry, a corruption of Yankin, a dimin. of John, a nickname given to the English colonists of Connecticut by the Dutch settlers of New York [which looks very like a pure invention]. Dr. Wm. Gordon, in his Hist. of the American War, ed. 1789, vol. i. pp. 324, 325, says it was a favourite cant word in Cambridge, Mass., as early as 1713, and that it meant "excellent;" as, a yankee good horse, yankee good cider, &c. He supposes that it was adopted by the students there as a by-word, and, being carried by them from the college, obtained currency in the other New England colonies, until at length it was taken up in other parts of the country, and applied to New Englanders generally as a term of slight reproach.' Cf. Lowland Sc. yankie, a sharp, clever, forward woman; yanke, an agile girl, an incessant speaker; yanke, a smart stroke, a great falsehood; yank, a sudden and severe blow, a sharp stroke; yanking, active, pushing (Jamieson). Without the nasal, there is also Lowland Sc. yack, to talk precipitately and indistinctly, yaike, a stroke or blow. β. If Dr. Gordon's view be right, the word yankee may be identified with the Sc. yankie, as above; and all the Scotch words appear to be of Scand. origin, due, ultimately, to Icel. jaga, to move about, whence (reflexively) & jagast, to altercation; cf. Swed. jaga, to hunt, whence Swed. dial. jakka, to rove about (cf. Nassau jacken, to drive horses quickly, cited by Rietz). The fundamental idea is that of 'quick motion'; see Yacht. ¶ But the word cannot be said to be solved. [†]

YAP, to yelp, bark. (Scand.) 'The yapping of a cur'; L'Estrange, tr. of Quevedo, p. 243 (Todd). Yap is the same as yaupe, the Lowland Sc. equivalent of yelp (Jamieson). The Lowland Sc. yaff also occurs, which is a corruption of yap.—Icel. gjálpa, to yelp; allied to E. yelp; see Yelp. The F. japper, 'to bark, to yawl,' Cot., is of similar origin.

YARD (1), an enclosed space. (E.) M. E. yard, Chaucer, C. T. 15181. —A. S. geard, an enclosure, court; Grein, i. 493. + Du. gaard, a yard, garden. + Icel. garðr (whence prov. E. garth). + Dan. gaard. + Swed. gård. + O. H. G. garto, M. H. G. garie, G. garten. + Russ. gorod, a town. + Lat. hortus. + Gk. χόρος, a court-yard, enclosure. β. From the Teut. base GARDA = Aryan GHARTA, a yard, court, enclosure, lit. 'a place surrounded'. —✓ GHAR, to seize, hence to enclose; cf. Skt. hri, to take, seize, harama, the hand; Gk. χείρ, the hand. Der. court-yard, orchard (for woort-yard). From the same root are garden, gird (1), gird-le; horti-culture; as well as chiro-mancy, chir-urgeon, surgeon; cohort, court, cut-ain, &c. Doublets, garden, prov. E. garth.

YARD (2), a rod, an E. measure of 36 inches, a cross-beam on a mast for spreading square sails. (E.) M. E. yerde, yerde, a stick, Chaucer, C. T. 149; also a yard in length, id. 1052. —A. S. gyrd, gierd, a stick, rod; Grein, i. 536. + Du. garde, a twig, rod. + G. gerte, a rod, switch; O. H. G. gerta, heria. Allied to O. H. G. gart, a goad; Icel. gaddr (for gasdr), a goad, spike, sting; A. S. gād (for gasd), a goad; Goth. gazds, a goad, prick, sting; see Goad, Gad (1). Der. yard-arm, the arm (i.e. the half) of a ship's yard, from the mast to the end of it. Also gird (2), gride.

YARE, ready. (E.) As adj. in Temp. v. 224; as adv., readily, quickly, Temp. i. 1. 7. M. E. zare, Will. of Palerne, 895, 1963, 3265; yare, Rob. of Glouc. p. 52, l. 25. —A. S. gearu, gearo, ready, quick, prompt; Grein, ii. 493. + Du. gaar, done, dressed (as meat); gaar, adv., wholly. + Icel. gerr, adj., perfect; görva, gervu, görvua, adv., quite, wholly. + M. H. G. gar, gare, O. H. G. garo, karo, prepared, ready; G. gar, adv., wholly. β. All from Teut. type GARWA, adj., ready (Fick, iii. 102). Root unknown; perhaps from ✓ GHAR, to seize; for which see Yard (1). Der. yare-ly, adv., Temp. i. 1. 4; also gear, garb (1), gar (2). Also yarr-ow, q.v.

YARN, spun thread, the thread of a rope. (E.) M. E. yarn, zarn; 'zarne, threde, Filum'; Prompt. Parv., p. 536. —A. S. gearu, gearo, yarn, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2; spelt geru, id. 282, l. 2. + Du. garen. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. garn. + G. garn. β. All from the Teut. type GARNA, yarn, string, Fick, iii. 101. Further allied to Gk. χορδή, a string, orig. a string of gut; cf. Icel. görn, or garnir, guts (i.e. strings or cords). From ✓ GHAR, to seize, hence to enclose, bind; see Yard (1) and Cord. From the same root are cor-d, chor-d, as well as cour-t, yard, garden, &c.

YARROW, the plant milfoil. (E.) M. E. zarowe, zarwe; Prompt. Parv. p. 536. —A. S. gearuwe, gearuwe, explained by 'millefolium'; Wright's Gloss., i. 30, col. 2; i. 67, col. 2; spelt gearwe, id. i. 289, col. 1. + G. garbe; M. H. G. garbe, garwe, O. H. G. garba, harpa. β. The lit. sense of A. S. gearuwe is 'that which prepares or sets in order', from gearwian, to prepare, gerwan, to dress; we must here translate it by 'healer.' The reference is to the old belief in the curative properties of the yarrow, which was supposed to be a great remedy for wounds; in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 195, we are told that Achilles was the first person who applied it to the cure of sword-wounds; hence, indeed, its botanical name of Achillea millefolium.

γ. Again, the verb gearwian is a derivative from the adj. gearo, ready, yare; see Yare. Thus yarrow = that which makes yare. The G. garbe may be explained in a precisely similar way; cf. G. gerben, to tan, dress leather.

YAW, to go unsteadily, bend out of its course, said of a ship. (Scand.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 120. The sense is to go aside, swerve, bend out of the course; see Phillips. —Norweg. gaga, to bend backwards, esp. used of the neck of a bird; gag, adj., bent backwards, not straight, used of a knife that is not set straight in the haft; Icel. gagr, bent back. + Bavarian gagen, to move unsteadily; Schmeller, 877. Prob. a reduplicated form of go; hence 'to keep going about.'

YAWL (1), a small boat. (Du.) In Anson's Voyages, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). 'Barges or yauls of different kinds'; Drummond's Travels (Letter, dated 1744), p. 87 (Todd). The word is common at Lowestoft. —Du. jol, a yawl, skiff; Sewel explains jol as 'a Jutland boat.' + Dan. jolle; Swed. julle, a yawl. Origin unknown. The Dan. jolle has been corrupted into E. jolly-boat; see Jolly-boat. Hexham records O. Du. iolleken, 'a small barke or boate.' The mod. Icel. form is jula.

YAWL (2), to howl. (Scand.) 'There howling Scyllas. yawling round about;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. iv. st. 5. Also spelt yole, yowl (Halliwell). M. E. goulen, Havelok, 164; zoulen, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1278 (Six-text ed.), Wyclif, Micah, i. 8; zoulen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1453. —Icel. gaula, to low, bellow; Norweg. gaula, to bellow, low, roar (Aasen). Allied to yell, and to E. -gale in nightin-gale. See Yell.

YAWN, to gape. (E.) Spelt yane in Palsgrave. M. E. ganien, Chaucer, Six-text ed., Group H, l. 35; where Tyrwhitt (l. 16984) has galpeth. —A. S. gánian, to yawn; Grein, i. 370. By the usual change from A. S. á to long o, this became gonien, or gonen, of which ganien, ganen was a variant; accordingly, in Wright's Voc. i. 152, we have gonys as a various reading for ganes. + O. H. G. geinon, to yawn; mod. G. gähnen.

β. These are weak verbs, answering to a Teut. type GAINYAN (Fick, iii. 106) from the strong verb (base GIN) appearing in A. S. ginan (in the comp. 10-ginan, to gape widely, Grein, ii. 544), pt. t. gán; also in Icel. gína, to gape, yawn, pt. t. gein. These verbs further answer to Gk. χαίω, to gape. γ. The base is GIN = Aryan GHIN, an extension from GHI, weakened form of ✓ GHA, to gape, whence Gk. χά-ος, a yawning gulf, Lat. hi-are, to gape, Russ. zie-vate, to yawn, &c. Der. yawning. From the same root, cha-os, cha-sm, hi-at-us.

YE, the nom. pl. of the 2nd personal pronoun. (E.) The nom. pl. is properly ye, whilst the dat. and acc. pl. is you; the gen. pl. is properly your, now only used as a possessive pronoun. But in mod. E. ye is almost disused, and you is constantly used in the nominative, not only in the plural, but in the singular, as a substitute for thou. 'Ye in me, and I in you,' John, xiv. 20; this shews the correct use. M. E. ye, 3e, nom.; your, 3our, gen.; you, 3ou, 3ow, dat. and acc. —A. S. ge, nom.; edwer, gen.; edw, dat. and acc.; Grein, i. 263, 375. + Du. gi, ye; u, you. + Icel. ér, ier, ye; yðar, yður, you. + Dan. and Swed. i, ye (also you). + G. ih; O. H. G. ir, ye, iuwar, iuwer, your, iu, you. + Goth. jus, ye; izwara, your; izwis, you. β. The common Teut. types are: nom. YUS, gen. YUSWARA, dat. and acc. YUSWIS, whence the various forms can be deduced; Fick, iii. 245. We also have the A. S. dual form git, ye two, answering to a Goth. form *jut, which does not, however, occur. Thus the common Aryan base is YU, whence also Lithuan. jus, ye, Gk. ὑ-μεῖς, ye, Skt. yū-yam, ye; Fick, i. 732.

YEA, an affirmative adverb; verily. (E.) The distinction between M. E. 3e, 3a, yea, and 3is, 3es, 3us, 3ys, is commonly well marked; the former is the simple affirmative, giving assent, whilst the latter is a strong asseveration, often accompanied by an oath; see Will. of Palerne, &c. Spelt ye, Chaucer, C. T. 9219, &c. —A. S. gēd, yea; John, xxi. 15. + Du., Dan., Swed., and G. ja. + Icel. já. + Goth. ja, jai.

β. The common base is YÁ, yea; Fick, iii. 243, allied to Goth. jah, O. Sax. gia, ja, A. S. ge, also, and; and to the Aryan pronominal base YA, that, that one, whence Skt. ya, who (in Benfey, p. 733, s.v. yad), Gk. ὅς, who, which were orig. demonstratives. The orig. sense was 'in that way,' or 'just so.' Der. ye-s, q.v.

YEAN, EAN, to bring forth young. (E.) The new-yeam'd lamb; Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iii. 1. Spelt ean in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 88; M. E. enen; 'Enyn, or brynge forthe kyndelyngys, Feto'; Prompt. Parv. p. 140. The difference between ean and yeam is easily explained; in the latter, the prefixed y represents the very common A. S. prefix ge-, readily added to any verb without affecting the sense; see Y-, prefix, above. —A. S. ednian, to can; ge-édnian, to yean; of which the only clear trace appears to be in the expression ge-éane edwa = the ewes great with young, Gen. xxxiii. 13. There can be little doubt that ge-éane is here a contracted form of ge-édene or ge-édene, where ge- is a mere prefix, -e is the pl. ending, and édene signifies 'pregnant'; Grein, i. 251. Hence the verb ge-édnian, to be pregnant, Luke, i. 24, which would be contracted to ge-édnian, as above.

β. Moreover, édene is the pp. of the lost strong verb *édcan, to increase, augment; the weak derivative of which was A. S. écan = mod. E. eke. The strong form appears in Icel. auka (pt. t. jók, pp. aukinn), and in Goth. aukan (pt. t. aiauk, pp. aukans), to increase. From Teut. base AUK = ✓ WAG, to be vigorous, grow; Fick, iii. 6, i. 763. See Ekke (1). Thus the orig. sense of yeam was merely 'to be pregnant.' Der. yeam-ling, a newborn lamb; with double dimin. suffix -ling.

YEAR, the time of the earth's revolution round the sun. (E.) M. E. 3eer, yeer, 3er, yer; Chaucer, C. T. 601, where it appears as a plural. This sb. was formerly unaltered in the plural, like sheep, deer; hence the mod. phrase 'a two-year old colt.' The pl. year is common in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 53, &c. —A. S. geár, gér, a year; pl. geár; Grein, i. 496. + Du. jaar. + Icel. ár. + Dan. aar, pl. aar. + Swed. år. + G. jahr; O. H. G. jár. + Goth. jer. β. All from Teut. type YÁRA, a year, Fick, iii. 243. Further allied to Gk. ἔπος, a season, a year; ἔπα, a season, an hour. —✓ YÁ, to go, pass; an extension from ✓ I, to go; whence also Skt. yātu, time. See Hour. Der.

year-ly, adj. and adv.; year-ling, an animal a year old, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Allied to hour.

YEARN (1), to desire strongly, be eager for. (E.) M. E. zernen, P. Plowman, B. i. 35. — A. S. gyrnan, to yearn, be desirous, Grein, i. 537. Formed (by the usual change of eo to y) from A. S. georn, adj., desirous, eager, id. i. 500. + Icel. girma, to desire; from gjarn, eager. + Goth. gairnan, to long for; from gairns, desirous, only in the comp. faihu-gairns, covetous, lit. desirous of money. β. The verb answers to a Teut. type GERNYA (Fick, iii. 101), from the adj. GERNA, desirous of. Again, the adj. is formed (with Aryan suffix -na) from the base GER (for GAR), appearing in O. H. G. gerón, herón, mod. G. be-gehren, to long for. — ✓ GHAR, to yearn; whence also Gk. χαλπεῖν, to rejoice, χαρά, joy, χαρίς, Lat. gratia, grace, and Skt. kary, to desire. See Grace. Der. yearn-ing, -ly. ☞ Not connected with earnest (1).

YEARN (2), to grieve. (E.) This verb, not well explained in the Dictionaries, occurs several times in Shak.; and it is remarkable that Shak. never uses yearn in the sense 'to long for,' i.e. he never uses the verb yearn (1) above. It is often spelt earn or ern in old editions. The proper sense is intransitive, to grieve, mourn, Hen. V, ii. 3. 3, ii. 3. 6; Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 129; it is also transitive, to grieve, vex, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 45; Rich. II, v. 7. 56; Hen. V, iv. 3. 26. Other authors use it besides Shakespeare; as in the following examples. 'I must do that my heart-strings yearn [mourn] to do;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 4 (Judas); and see Richardson. Nares gives yearful, grievous, melancholy; so also prov. E. earnful (Halliwell, Pegge). β. The distinction between yearn (as it should be spelt) and ern (as it should be spelt) is precisely the same as the difference between yeen and ean; see Yean. In other words, ern is the true word, whilst yearn is a form due to the A. S. prefix ge-. γ. Again, ern is certainly a corruption of M. E. ermen, to grieve, occurring in Chaucer, C. T. 12246. A later instance is in the following: 'Thenne departed he fro the kynge so heuily that many of them erned,' i.e. mourned; Reynard the Fox, tr. by Caxton; ed. Arber, p. 48, l. 6. — A. S. yrman, to grieve, vex, Grein, ii. 775; also ge-yrman, to grieve, vex, id. i. 40; which exhibits the prefix ge- = later E. y-. Formed (by the usual vowel-change from ea to y) from A. S. earm, adj., miserable, wretched, poor, a common word; Grein, i. 248. + Du. arm, poor, indigent. + Icel. armr, wretched. + Dan. and Swed. arm. + G. arm. + Goth. arms. δ. All from the Teut. type ARMA, wretched, poor, indigent (Fick, iii. 24); perhaps allied to Gk. ἐρημος, desolate (Fick, i. 496), but this is doubtful. We may, however, compare Skt. rite, wanting, except, of which the orig. sense was 'in deficiency,' Benfey. — ✓ AR, to separate; Fick, i. 496.

YEAST, the froth of malt liquors in fermentation, a preparation which raises dough. (E.) M. E. 3eest. '3eest, berme, Spuma;' Prompt. Parv., p. 537. — A. S. gist; spelt gyst, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 118, l. 10. + Du. gest. + Icel. jast, jastr. + Swed. jäst. + Dan. giær. + G. gäseht, gischt, M. H. G. jest (cited by Fick). β. The Teut. type is YESTA, formed (with suffix -ta) from the base YAS, to ferment, appearing in O. H. G. jesan, M. H. G. jesen, gesen, germ, mod. G. gähren, to ferment. — ✓ YAS, to foam, ferment; whence Skt. nir-yāsa, exudations of trees, Gk. ζεῖν, to boil, seethe, ζεῖρος, fervent. Der. yeast-y, spelt ysty in Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 53, Hamlet v. 2. 199, just as yeast is also written yest, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 94; the sense is 'frothy.' [Not allied to A. S. yst, a storm.] And see zeal.

YEDE, went. (E.) Obsolete. Also spelt yode, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 2. Spenser, unaware that yede and yode are varying forms of the same past tense, and that the verb is only used in the past tense, wrongly uses yede or yood as an infinitive mood (!); F. Q. i. 11. 5; ii. 4. 2. M. E. 3ede, yede, Chaucer, C. T. 13249; yode Sir Eglamour (Thornton Romances), 531; 3eode, 3ede, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 381, 1025; eode, 3eode, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 53, 79. The proper form is eode (Stratmann); it is probable that the forms yede, yode answer rather to A. S. ge-eode, with prefixed ge-, as in the case of yeen and ean, see Yean, and yearn and ern, see Yearn (2). — A. S. eode, went, only in the past tense; pl. eodon; Grein, i. 256. Here eo corresponds (as usual) to original i; and -de is the usual ending of the weak preterite; so that it is formed from the common ✓ I, to go, which appears also in Skt. i, to go, Lat. i-re, to go. So also Goth. i-dǣja, went, from the same root. ☞ Yode or yede has nothing to do with an imaginary go-ed, supposed pt. t. of go! Go (= A. S. gān) is from a totally different root.

YELK, the same as Yolk, q. v.

YELL, to utter a loud noise, to howl. (E.) M. E. yellen, yellan, Chaucer, C. T. 2674, 15395. — A. S. gellan, giellan, gyllan, to yell, cry out, resound; Grein, i. 423. + Du. gillen. + Icel. gella; also gjalla (pt. t. gall). + Dan. giælle, giælle (for gialle). + Swed. gälla, to ring, resound. + G. gellen, to resound. β. All from the Teut. base GALL, to resound (Fick, iii. 105); allied to GAL, to sing, as seen in Icel. gala, to sing (pt. t. gól, pp. galinn), A. S. galan (pt. t. gól),

O. H. G. galan, kalan, to sing; see Nightingale. — ✓ GHAR, to sound; as in Skt. gharghara, a gurgling, ghur, to sound; Fick, i. 581. Der. yell, sb., Oth. i. 1. 75.

YELLOW, of a bright golden colour. (E.) M. E. yelwe, Chaucer, C. T. 2168, 2172. Also spelt zelu, zeoluh, &c.; Stratmann. — A. S. geolo, geolu (acc. fem. geolwe), Grein, i. 497. + Du. geel. + G. gelb, O. H. G. gelo, kelo. β. The Teut. type is GELWA, Fick, iii. 103. Further allied to Gk. χλόη, the young verdure of trees; Lat. heluus, light yellow; the Aryan type being GHELWA, yellow. — ✓ GHAL, for GHAR, to be green, to be yellow, Fick, i. 579; whence also Green, Gall (1), and Gold. Der. yellow-ness; yellow fever, a malignant fever that often turns the skin yellow; yellow-ish, spelt yellowyshe in Palsgrave; yellow-ish-ness. Also yellow-hammer, q. v.

YELLOW-HAMMER, YELLOW-AMMER, a song-bird, named from its yellow colour. (E.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Beyond doubt, the h is an ignorant insertion, due to substitution of a known for an unknown word, irrespective of the sense. Yet the name is E., and very old. The former part of the word (yellow) is explained above; the latter part is the A. S. amore. In a list of birds, we find: 'Scorellus, amore,' Wright's Voc. i. 281, col. 1. Cognate words occur both in Du. and G. + O. Du. emmerick, emmerlinck, 'a kind of merlin or a hawk,' Hexham. + Low G. geel-emerken, a yellow-ammer. + G. gelb-ammer, gold-ammer, yellow-ammer, gold-ammer; also emmerling, a yellow-ammer. β. The A. S. amore (for amora, like O. Du. emmer and G. ammer) denotes an agent, and is formed from the base AM. The most likely sense is 'chirper;' since there are several traces of the ✓ AM, to sound, make a noise; e.g. Skt. am, to sound, Icel. emja, to howl, O. H. G. ámar, G. jammer, lamentation. ¶ It is probable that ousel may be similarly explained; the O. H. G. for ousel is written both amsalá and amelsá, where -salá, -elsá, are mere suffixes, denoting the agent. Hence A. S. am-ore and o-sle (= am-sala) contain precisely the same base AM, probably used in both words in the same sense.

YELP, to bark, bark shrilly. (E.) M. E. 3elpen, gelpen, only in the sense to boast, boast noisily; but it is the same word. 'I kepe not of armes for to yelp;' Chaucer, C. T. 2240. — A. S. gilpan, gielpen, gylpan, to boast, exult; orig. to talk noisily; Grein, i. 509. A strong verb; pt. gealp, pp. golpen; whence gilp, gielp, gelp, gylp, boasting, arrogance, id. + Icel. gjálpa, to yelp; cf. gjálfra, to roar as the sea; gjálfr, the din of the sea. β. From a base GALP, to make a loud noise, allied to GALL, to yell, GAL, to sing; see Yell. Der. yelp, sb. Doublet, yap.

YEOMAN, a man of small estate, an officer of the royal household. (E.) M. E. 3eman, yeman, 3oman; in Chaucer, C. T. 101, the Lansdowne MS. has 3oman, whilst the rest have 3eman or yeman. In Sir Amadas (pr. in Weber's Met. Rom. vol. iii), l. 347, it is written yomon; but the usual spelling is 3eman, as above, and as in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 534 (or 535). In Will. of Palerne, l. 3649, however, we have 3omen, pl.; which is one of the earliest examples of the word; I know not where to find an example earlier than the 14th century. β. The variation of the vowel in the M. E. forms is curious, but we find other examples almost as remarkable; thus M. E. heer (hair) answers to A. S. hær, but we also find hor (Havelok, 235) as if from an A. S. form *hár; again, we have mod. E. deal, from A. S. dāl, but also dole, from the A. S. variant dol; again, ere (before) from A. S. ēr, often appears as or, as if from A. S. ār; and, once more, the mod. E. tease, from A. S. tēsan, also appears in M. E. as tosen or toosen; see Tease. γ. The word does not appear in A. S.; but it would (judging by the foregoing examples) take the form *gá-man, with a variant *gá-man; the change from g to y, even before a, presents no difficulty, for we still have the remarkable form gave where M. E. has yaf or yaf, as well as mod. E. yawn from A. S. gānian. The sense of gá is 'district' or 'village.' Kemble, Saxons in England, b. i. c. 3, treats of the gá or district, though he gives no reference to shew where the word occurs; Leo (A. S. Glossar) gives gá, a district, as in Ohiga-gá, Noxga-gá, but he adds no references. δ. However, the word is cleared up by cognate languages. Cf. O. Frisian ga, go (nom. pl. gae), a district, village; whence gaman, a villager; gafolk, people of a village. Also Du. gouw, gouwe, a province; O. Du. gouwe, 'a hamlet where houses stand scattered, a country village, or a field; goograve or gograef, a field-judge; goylieden or goy-mannen, arbitrators, or men appointed to take up a business between man and man;' Hexham. Also Low G. goð, gohe, a tract of country; go-gräve, a judge in one of the 4 districts of Bremen; Brem. Wörterbuch. Cf. also G. gau, a province, O. H. G. gowi, gewi, Goth. gawi. Prob. allied to Gk. χῶρα, χῶπος, an open space, country, district, land. ¶ This seems better than Stratmann's derivation from the A. S. iúman, from geo or iu, formerly, the sense of which is totally unsuitable. iúman means a forefather, ancestor, or 'one who lived long ago,' which no yeoman can possibly be during his life-time. Unsuccessful attempts have also been made to derive yeoman from young man; or from A. S. guma, a man; or from A. S. gýman, to take care, &c. The worst of all is Verstegan's, from A. S. gemēne, common, which could only become y-mean in mod. E., and is, in fact, represented by the adj. mean; only one who was regardless of English accent could have dreamt of such a thing. Der. yeoman-ry, where -ry is used as a collective suffix.

YERK, in Shak. Hen. V. iv. 7. 83; the same as Jerk, q. v.

YES, a word denoting affirmation. (E.) A much stronger form than yea, and often accompanied, in old authors, by an oath. M. E. us, 3is, P. Plowman, B. v. 125; '3is, be marie,' Will. of Palerne, 1567; '3is, bi crist,' id. 5149. A. S. gise, gese; 'gise, lā gese' = yes, O. yes; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 6; cap. xvi. § 4. Probably contracted from geō sý = yea, let it be so = yea, verily; where geō = E. yea, and sý = let it be, is the imperative from the √AS, to be. See Yea and Are. See Grimm, Gram. iii. 764.

YESTERDAY, the day last past. (E.) M. E. 3isterday, Wyclif, John, iv. 52. — A. S. geostra, giestra, gystra (yester-), Grein, i. 501; and dag, a day; commonly in the acc. geostran dag, yesterday. + Du. gisteren, dag van gister. + G. gestern. + Goth. gistra-dagis. β. From a Teut. type GES-TRA, Fick, iii. 108. The same word appears with the suffix -tra in Lat. hesternus, adj.; but without it in Icel. gar, Dan. gaar, Swed. går, Lat. heri, Gk. χθές, Skt. hyas, yesterday. All from the Aryan type GHYAS, yesterday (Fick, i. 585). The suffix -TRA is a comparative form, as in in-ter-ior, ex-ter-ior, &c. The orig. sense of GHYAS appears to have been 'morning' (Fick); and, of GHYAS-TRA, 'the morning beyond.' Der. Similarly, yester-night.

YET, moreover, besides, hitherto, still, nevertheless. (E.) M. E. 3it, 3et, yet, Chaucer, C. T. 565. — A. S. git, get, giet, gyt; Grein, i. 511. + O. Fries. ieta, eta, ita, yet; mod. Fries. jietle (Richtofen). + M. H. G. iezuo, ieze; whence G. jetzt, now. β. The M. H. G. zuō, ze, answers to A. S. tō, too, and to O. Fries. to, te (of which an older form would be ta). It is, accordingly, probable that A. S. git is a contraction of the compound ge tō = and too, i. e. moreover. For the latter of these words, see Too, To. For the former, see Yea, section β.

YEW, an evergreen tree. (E.) Spelt yowe in Palsgrave. M. E. ew, Chaucer, C. T. 2925. — A. S. iw; to translate Lat. taxus; Wright's Voc. i. 32, 79, 285; spelt iuu, id. ii. 121. + Du. ijf. + Icel. yr. + G. eibe; O. H. G. iwa. β. The Teut. type is īWA, Fick, i. 31. Perhaps the word is of Celtic origin; we find Irish iubhar, a yew; Gael. iubhar, iughar, a yew-tree, also a bow; W. yw, ywen; Corn. hivin; Breton ivin, ivinen; so that it is found in all Celtic languages. γ. According to Fick, the Lithuan. jėwa is not the yew, but a kind of alder (Faulbaum), and is borrowed from a Gk. ēba; it may therefore be set aside. ¶ Totally distinct from ivy.

YEX, to hiccough. (E.) Prov. E. yex (Halliwell); spelt yeske in Palsgrave. M. E. 3exen, zesken, 3oxen, Chaucer, C. T. 4149 (Group A. 4151, Six-text edition). '3yxyn, yexen, Singulcio, Singulto'; Prompt. Parv., p. 539. — A. S. giscian, to sob, sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1. c. 2. Probably an extension from the Teut. base GI (Aryan GHI), to gape; just as Lat. hiscere, hiescere, to yawn, gape, is extended from Lat. hiare. Cf. A. S. gin, a wide space, Grein, i. 510; O. H. G. gīen, to yawn. See Yawn, Hiatus.

YIELD, to resign, grant, produce, submit, give way. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to pay.' M. E. geiden, zelden, yelden; a strong verb; pt. t. yald, pp. yolden. Chaucer has un-yolden, C. T. 2644. In P. Plowman, B. xii. 193, we have both yald (strong) and zelle (weak), as forms of the pt. t. — A. S. gieldan, geldan, gildan, to pay, restore, give up; pt. t. geald, pl. guldun, pp. golden, Grein, i. 508. + Du. gelden. + Icel. gjalda, pt. t. galt, pp. goldinn. + Dan. gielde. + Swed. gälla (for gälda), to be of consequence, be worth. + G. gelten, to be worth; pt. t. galt, pp. gegolten. + Goth. gildan, only in the compounds fragildan, us-gildan, to pay back. β. All from Teut. base GALT, to be worth, to pay for, repay; Fick, i. 105. Prob. allied to Lithuan. galėti, W. gallu, to be able, have power. Der. yield, sb., yield-ing, -ly; also guld or gild; also guilt.

YOKE, the frame of wood joining oxen for drawing, a similar frame for carrying pails, a mark of servitude, a pair. (E.) M. E. 3ok, Chaucer, C. T. 7089. — A. S. geoce, gioc, ioc, a yoke; Grein, i. 497. + Du. juk. + Icel. ok. + Dan. aag. + Swed. ok. + Goth. juk. + G. joch, O. H. G. jok. + W. iau. + Lat. iugum (whence Ital. giogo, Span. yogo, F. joug). + Russ. igo. + Lithuan. jungas. + Gk. ζυγόν. + Skt. yuga, a yoke, pair, couple. β. All from the Aryan type YUGA (Teut. YUKA), a yoke; lit. 'that which joins.' = √YUG (Teut. YUK), to join; see Join. Der. yoke, verb, Two Gent. i. 1. 40; yoke-fellow, companion, K. Lear, iii. 6. 39.

YOLK, YELK, the yellow part of an egg. (E.) Spelt yelke in Palsgrave. M. E. 3olke, Morte Arture, 3283; 3elke, Prompt. Parv. p. 537. — A. S. geoleca, gieleca, the yolk; Grein, i. 497. Lit. 'the yellow part.' — A. S. geolu, yellow; see Yellow.

YON, at a distance. (E.) Properly an adj., as in prov. E., in & which such phrases as 'yon house' and 'yon field' are common. Common in Shak., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 188, &c. M. E. 3on, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 149 (also 3eon, and even 3ond, 3eond, see the footnote). — A. S. geon, yon; 'tō georne byrg' = to yon city; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 443, l. 25; where geon-re is the dat. fem. + Icel. enn, the (orig. that), used as the def. art., and often miswritten hin; see Vigfusson's remarks on hin. + Goth. jains, yon, that. + G. jener, M. H. G. gener, yon, that. β. The Teut. type is YENA, Fick, iii. 243; extended (with Aryan suffix -na) from the Aryan pronom. base YA, that; cf. Skt. pronom. base ya, who (orig. that), Gk. ōs (for yōs). From the same base are yea, ye-s, ye-t. Der. yond, adv., Temp. i. 2. 409 (also incorrectly used instead of yon, Temp. ii. 2. 20), from A. S. geond, adv., but often used as a prep., Grein, i. 497; cf. Goth. jaind, adv., there, John, xi. 8. Hence be-yond, q. v. Also yond-er (not in A. S.), M. E. yonder, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 5138; cf. Goth. jaindre, adv., yonder, there, Luke, xi. 37.

YOKE, in old time, long ago. (E.) M. E. 3ore, yore, Chaucer, C. T. 4594. — A. S. geōra, formerly (with the usual change from ā to long o, as in stān = stone); Grein, i. 496. Orig. gen. pl. of gedr, a year, so that the sense was 'of years,' i. e. in years past; the gen. case being often used to express the time when, as in daeges = by days, &c. See Year.

YOU, pl. of second pers. pronoun; see Ye. Der. you-r, q. v.

YOUNG, not long born, new to life. (E.) M. E. 3ong, yong, yng. In Chaucer, C. T. 79, we have the indef. form yong (misprinted yonge in Tyrwhitt); whilst in l. 7 we have the def. form yongē (dissyllabic). — A. S. geong, giung, iung (and even geng, ging), young; Grein, i. 499. + Du. jong. + Icel. ungr, jungur. + Dan. and Swed. ung. + G. jung; O. H. G. junc. + Goth. juggs (written for jungs); of which the alleged (but unauthorised) comparative form is jukiza. β. All from a Teut. type YŪNGA, a contracted form of YUWANGA or YUWANHA, answering precisely to the cognate W. ieuanc, young, and to the Lat. form iuvencus, an extension (with Aryan suffix -ka) from iuvēn-is, young. γ. The base YUWAN, young, occurs in Lat. iuvēnis, young, Skt. yuvan, young, Russ. iunuii, young, Lithuan. jaunas, young. The lit. sense is perhaps 'protected,' from √YU, to guard; cf. Skt. yu, to keep back, Lat. iuvare, to aid, help; Fick, i. 732. But Curtius (i. 285) derives it from √DIV, to play.

Der. young, sb.; young-ish; young-ling, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 57, M. E. 3onglyng, Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 5, with double dimin. suffix -ling; young-ster, as to which see Spinster. Also youn-ker, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 11, borrowed from Du. jonker, also written jonkheer, compounded of jong, young, and heer, a lord, sir, gentleman; Hexham has O. Du. jonck-heer or joncker, 'a young gentleman or a joncker' (sic). Also you-th, q. v.

YOUR, possess. pron. of and person. (E.) Properly the possess. pron. of the 2nd person plural, but commonly used instead of thy, which was considered too familiar, and has almost passed out of use in speech. M. E. 3our, your, Chaucer, C. T. 2251. Orig. the gen. pl. of the 2nd pers. pronoun; a use which occurs even in M. E., as: 'ich am 3oure aller hefd' = I am head of you all, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 473; where aller = A. S. ealra, gen. pl. of eall, all. — A. S. ēower, your; orig. gen. of ge, ye; see Ye. Der. your-s, M. E. 3oures, Chaucer, C. T. 13204, from A. S. ēowres, gen. sing. masc. and neut. of ēower, poss. pronoun; Grein, i. 263. Also your-self (see Self).

YOUTH, early life. (E.) M. E. youthe, Chaucer, C. T. 463; older forms 3uweðe, Ancrén Riwe, p. 156, l. 22; 3u3eðe, Layamon, 6566; 3e3eðe, id. 19837. — A. S. geōgūð, giōgūð, youth, Grein, i. 502. [The middle g first turned to w, and then disappeared.] + O. Sax. juguð. + Du. jeugd. + G. jugend, O. H. G. jugund; we also find M. H. G. jungede. Cf. Goth. junda, youth. β. The A. S. geōgūð stands for geongūð, n being lost, as in tōð, tooth (Goth. tanthus), gōs, goose (G. gans); accordingly, we actually find M. E. 3ungthe, youth, Prompt. Parv., p. 539, 3ongthe, Wyclif, Mark, x. 20; hence youth = young-th, formed from A. S. geong, young, by means of the suffix -th (= Aryan -ta). Similarly the O. Sax. juguð is for *junguð, and O. H. G. jugund for *jungund; but the Goth. junda is different, standing for yawan-da, directly from the Aryan base YUWAN, young. Der. youth-ful, -ly, youth-ful-ness.

YULE, Christmas. (E.) 'Fu-batch, Christmas batch; yu-block or yule-block, Christmas block; yu-gams or yule-gams, Christmas games;' Ray's Gloss. of N. Country Words. Here yu is short for yule. M. E. 3ole; 'the feste of 3ole,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 65, l. 6; whence 3ole-stok, a yule-stock or yule-log, Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 2. — A. S. iula, geōla. Spelt iula, Grein, i. 148. Spelt geōla in the following: 'Se mōnað is nemned on Leden Decembris, and on ūre geðeode se ærra geōla, forðan ūa monðas twegen syndon nemde anum naman, oðer se ærra geōla, oðer se æftera, forðan þe hyra oðer ganged beforan ðæra [read ðære] sunnan ærþon þe heo cyrre hig to ðæs dæges lenge, oðer æfter,' i. e. This month is named Decembris in Latin, and in our tongue the former Yule, because two months are named with one name; one is the former Yule, the other the after Yule, because one of them comes before the sun, viz. before it turns itself about [at the winter solstice] to the lengthening of day, whilst the other [January] comes after; MS. Cotton, Tib. B. 1, quoted in Hickes, Thesaurus, i. 212. Beda, De Temporum Ratione, cap. 13, has the same account (but in Latin), and calls the Yule-months Menses Giuli; i. e. he Latinises Yule as Giulus. Spelt geol, gehol, gehel, Laws of Ælfred, § 5, and § 43; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 64, note 54; i. 92, note 4. + Icel. jól; Dan. jul; Swed. jul. We may also note that, in a fragment of a Gothic calendar (pr. in Massmann's Ulfilas, p. 590), November appears to be called fruma jūleis, which seems to mean 'the first Yule'; a name not necessarily inconsistent with the A. S. use, since November may once have also been reckoned as a Yule-month.

β. The best solution of this difficult word is that given by Fick (iii. 245). He explains yule as meaning 'noise,' or 'outcry,' esp. the loud sound of revelry and rejoicing. Cf. M. E. soulen, yollen, to lament loudly, Chaucer, C. T. Group A. 1278 (Six-text ed.), mod. E. yawl; see Yawl (2). We also find, as derived verbs, the A. S. gýlan, to make merry, keep festival, Grein, i. 537, and (perhaps) Icel. ýla, to howl, make a noise, though this is chiefly used of dogs and wolves; also G. jolen, jöhlen, jodeln, to sing in a high-pitched voice. Perhaps we may compare O. Du. jou, 'a hue, or a hooting; een jou geven, to make a noise, or to hoot at one,' Hexham; Low G. jaweln, to shriek, said of cats; G. jauchzen, to shout in triumph; Gk. λυγός, λυγῆ, an outcry. γ. The usual attempt to connect this word with E. wheel, A. S. hwēl, Icel. hjól, with the far-fetched explanation that the sun turns at the winter solstice, cannot be admitted, since an initial h or hw makes all the difference. Besides Yule did not denote the shortest day, but a season. Der. jolly.

YWIS, certainly. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 19. M. E. ywis, Chaucer, C. T. 3277; ywis, Ancren Riwle, p. 270, l. 11. — A. S. gewis, adj., certain, gewislice, adv., certainly, Grein, i. 483. The adj. came to be used adverbially. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly. + Icel. við, certain. + Dan. vis, certain; vist, certainly. + Swed. viss, certain; visst, certainly. + G. gewiss, certainly.

β. The ge- is a mere prefix; see Y-. The adj. is from the Teut. type WISA, certain, Fick, iii. 306. Related to Wise and Wit, verb. Cf. Goth. wissa, I knew. ¶ It is particularly to be noted that the commonest form in MSS. is ywis, in which the prefix (like most other prefixes) is frequently written apart from the rest of the word, and not unfrequently the i is represented by a capital letter, so that it appears as I wis. Hence, by an extraordinary error, the I has often been mistaken for the 1st pers. pron., and the verb wis, to know, has been thus created, and is given in many dictionaries! But it is a pure fiction, and the more remarkable because there actually exists a M. E. causal verb wissen or wissen, but it means to teach, shew, instruct. The easiest test by which to gauge any one's knowledge of Middle-English is to ask him to explain clearly and to parse the words wit, wot, wistē, wist, I wissē, and i-wis. If he fails, his opinion is valueless.

Z.

ZANY, a buffoon, a mimic. (Ital., — Gk., — Heb.) In L. L. L. v. 2. 463; and in Beaum. and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, ii. 6 (Bacha). — Ital. Zane, 'the name of Iohn, also a sillie Iohn, a gull, a noddie; used also for a simple vice, clowne, foole, or simple fellowe in a plaie;' Florio. Mod. Ital. Zanni. Zane and Zanni are familiar forms of Giovanni, John. — Gk. Ἰωάννης; John, i. 6. — Heb. Yóhánán, i. e. the Lord sheweth mercy. — Heb. Yó, put for Yehóvah, the Lord; and hánan, to shew mercy. Der. zany, verb, Beaum. and Fletcher, Qu. of Corinth, i. 2 (Crates).

ZEAL, fervour, ardour. (F., — L., — Gk.) Spelt zele in Palsgrave. — F. zele, 'zeale,' Cot. Mod. F. zèle. — Lat. zelum, acc. of zelus, zeal. — Gk. ζῆλος, zeal, ardour, fervour; lit. 'heat.' Zῆλος stands for ζεσ-λος; cf. ζεῖν (for ζε-γῆν), poetic form of ζεῖν, to boil, seethe, ζεῖ-ις, a boiling. — ✓ YAS, to seethe, ferment, whence also E. yeast; see Yeast. Der. zeal-ous, L. L. L. v. 2. 116; zeal-ous-ly. Also zeal-ot, Selden's Table-Talk, s. v. Zealot, from F. zelote, 'jealous, or zealous,' Cot., from Lat. zelotes, Gk. ζηλωτής. And see jealous.

ZEBRA, a striped animal of the horse kind. (Port., — Ethiopian?) Added by Todd to Johnson. — Port. zebra. (Also Span. zebra, cebra.) The animal is a native of S. Africa, and the word is from some African language. According to Littre, it is Ethiopian; he cites: 'Pecora, congensibus zebra dicta,' Ludolf, Histor. Ethiop. i. 40.

ZEDOARY, an East-Indian root resembling ginger. (F., — Low Lat., — Pers.) 'Zedoary, a spicy root, very like ginger, but of a sweeter scent, and nothing near so biting; it is a hot and dry plant, growing in the woods of Malabar in the E. Indies,' Phillips, ed. 1706. [In old F., the name was corrupted to citoual, citoual, citouart (Roquefort); whence the M. E. cetewale, Chaucer, C. T. 13691 (Group B, 1951), on which see my note.] — F. zedoaire, an East-Indian root which resembleth ginger; Cot. — Low Lat. zedoaria, —

Pers. zadwár, zidwár, zedoary; Rich. Dict. p. 771; or jadwár, zedoary, id. p. 794. The initial letter is sometimes the 13th, sometimes the 14th letter of the Pers. alphabet; see Palmer, Pers. Dict., col. 314.

ZENITH, the point of the heavens directly overhead. (F., — Span., — Arab.) M. E. senyth, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, i. 18. 4. — O. F. cenith (Littre); mod. F. zenith. — Span. zenit, formerly written zenith, as in Minshew's Span. Dict. — Arab. samt, a way, road, path, tract, quarter; whence samt-ur-ras, the zenith, vertical point of the heavens, also as-samt, an azimuth; Rich. Dict. p. 848. Samt was pronounced semt, of which Span. zenith or zenit is a corruption; in the sense of zenith, it is an abbreviation for samt-ur-ras or semt-er-ras, lit. the way overhead, from ras, the head, Rich. Dict. p. 715. The word azimuth, q. v., is from the same source. See Devic, Supp. to Littre. ZEPHYR, a soft gentle breeze. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Cymb. iv. 2. 172. Chaucer has the form Zephyrus, directly from the Latin, C. T. 5. — F. zephyre, 'the west wind;' Cot. — Lat. zephyrum, acc. of zephyrus, the west wind. — Gk. ζέφυρος, the west wind. Allied to ζόφος, darkness, gloom, the dark or evening quarter, the west.

ZERO, a cipher, nothing, denoted by 0. (F., — Ital., — Arab.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. — F. zero, 'a cypher in arithmetick, a thing that stands for nothing;' Cot. — Ital. zero, 'a figure of nought in arithmeticke;' Florio. A contracted form of zefiro or *zifro, parallel form to zifra, 'a cifre,' i. e. cipher; Florio. — Arab. sifr (with initial sad), a cipher; Rich. Dict. p. 937. See Cipher. See Devic, Supp. to Littre; he explains that the old Latin treatises on arithmetic wrote zephyrum for Arab. sifr, which became, in Italian, zefiro, and (by contraction) zero. Doublet, cipher.

ZEST, something that gives a relish or a flavour. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Phillips explains zest as a chip of orange or lemon-peel, used for flavouring drinks. — F. zest, 'the thick skinn or filme wherby the kernell of a wallnut is divided;' Cot. Mod. F. zeste, a piece of the skin of a citron or lemon, whence zester, 'to cut up lemon rind;' Hamilton. The E. sense is due to the use of lemon or citron-peel for flavouring. — Lat. schistos (schistus), cleft, divided, used by Pliny; according to Diez, who notes that Lat. schedula became, similarly, F. édule; there must have been a transference of sense from 'divided' to 'division.' — Gk. σχίστρος, divided. — Gk. σχίζεω, to cleave. See Schism.

ZIGZAG, having short, sharp turns. (F., — G.) In Pope, Dunciad, i. 124. — F. zigzag. — G. zickzack, a zigzag; zickzack segeln, to tack, in sailing. We also find Swed. sicksack, zigzag (Widegren, 1788). Origin obscure; cf. Swed. sacka, Dan. sække, to have sternway; said of a ship.

ZINC, a whitish metal. (G.) In Locke, Elements of Nat. Philosophy, c. 8 (R.). — G. zink, zinc; whence also F. zinc, &c. Origin uncertain; perhaps formed from zinn, tin, from the likeness between the metals. See Tin.

ZODIAC, an imaginary belt in the heavens, containing the twelve constellations called signs. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. zodiac, zodiack, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 65. — F. zodiaque, 'the zodiack,' Cot. — Lat. zodiacus. — Gk. ζωδιακός, adj., of or belonging to animals, whence ὁ ζωδιακός, the zodiac circle; so called from containing the twelve constellations represented by animals. — Gk. ζῆδιον, a small animal; dimin. of ζῷον, a living creature, an animal; where ζῷον is neut. of ζῶω, living; allied to ζῶη, life, and ζῆν, ἔζην (Ionic ζῆν), to live. Curtius, ii. 96, says that ζῆν 'stands for δαῖν, and its most natural derivation is from the ✓ GI (Zend ji), to live.' See Victuals. Der. zodiac-al, adj.

ZONE, a belt, one of the great belts in which the earth is divided. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Hamlet. v. 1. 305. — F. zone, 'a girdle, zone;' Cot. — Lat. zona, a girdle, belt, zone. — Gk. ζώνη, a girdle. Put for *ζώνη. — Gk. *ζώνη (= ζωσ-νυμι), I gird. — ✓ YAS, to gird, Fick, i. 731; whence also Lithuan. josta, a girdle, josti, to gird (Nesselmann). Der. zon-ed.

ZOOLOGY, the natural history of animals. (Gk.) See Pennant's British Zoology, London, 1766. Coined from Gk. ζῷο, crude form of ζῷον, a living creature; and -λογία, allied to λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. See Zodiac and Logic. Der. zoologi-c-al, zoolog-ist.

¶ Pronounced zo-o, the o's being separate. ZOOPLHYTE, an animal plant, a term now applied to corals, &c. (F., — Gk.) In Johnson's Dict. — F. zoophyte, pl. zoophytes, 'such things as be partly plants, and partly living creatures, as sponges, &c.?' Cot. — Gk. ζωόφυτον, a living being; an animal-plant, the lowest of the animal tribe, Aristotle, Hist. Anim. xviii. 1. 6. — Gk. ζῶο, crude form of ζῶω, living; and φυτέν, a plant, that which has grown, from φύειν, to produce, also to grow, from ✓ BHU, to grow, exist, be. See Zodiac and Be.

ZYMOTIC, a term applied to diseases, in which a poison works through the body like a ferment. (Gk.) Modern. — Gk. ζυμωτικός, causing to ferment. — Gk. ζυμός, I leaven, cause to ferment. — Gk. ζύμη, leaven. Allied to Lat. ius, broth; see Juice.

APPENDIX.

I. LIST OF PREFIXES.

A. The following prefixes are all carefully explained, each in its due place, in the Dictionary, so that it is sufficient to enumerate them.

A- (with several values), ab-, abs- (see Abscond), ad-, ambi- or amb- (see Ambidextrous), amphi-, an-, ana-, ante-, anti- or ant-, aph- or apo-, be-, cata-, circum-, co-, com-, con-, contra-, counter-, de-, di-, dia-, dis-, dys- (see Dysentery), e-, em- (see Embark), en-, epi-, ex-, extra-, for- (2), for- (3), fore-.

Gain- (see Gainsay), hyper-, hypo-, i-, il- (1), il- (2), im- (1), im- (2), im- (3), in- (1), in- (2), in- (3), inter-, intro- (see Introduce), ir- (1), ir- (2), juxta- (see Joust).

Meta-, mis- (1), mis- (2), ne- (see No (1)), non-, ob-, on-, or- (see Ordeal, Ort), out-, over-, palin- (see Palindrome), para-, per-, peri-, pol- or po- (see Pollute, Position), por- (see Portend), pos- (see Possess), post-, pre-, preter-, pro-, pros-, pur-, re-, red-, retro-.

Se-, sine- (see Sinecure), sub-, sus-, super-, supra-, sur- (1), sur- (2), syn-, to- (1), to- (2), trans-, ultra-, un- (1), un- (2), un- (3), under-, up-, with-, y-.

There are other words often considered as prefixes, which are not mere prepositions, but true words, such as al- in al-mighty, poly- in poly-gon, and the like. It is much the best way to regard such words as mere compounds. I therefore omit them from the list.

B. Some of these prefixes assume various shapes in accordance with phonetic laws. Of these, the most important are the following:—

(a) The Lat. prep. ad appears as a-, ab-, ac-, ad-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, at-.

(b) The Lat. prep. cum appears as co-, col-, com-, comb-, con-, cor-.

(c) The Lat. prefix dis- appears as de-, des-, di-, dif-, dis-, and even s-.

(d) The Lat. prep. ex appears as a-, e-, ef-, es-, ex-, and even iss- and s-.

(e) The Lat. prep. in appears as am-, an-, em-, en-, il- (1), im- (1), in- (2), ir- (1).

(f) The Lat. negative prefix in- appears as en-, i-, il- (2), im- (3), in- (3), ir- (2).

(g) The Lat. prep. ob appears as ob-, oc-, of-, o-, op-; we even find os-.

(h) The Lat. prep. sub appears as s- (in S-ombre), so- (in So-journ), sub-, suc-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sup-, sur-.

(i) The Greek prefix apo- (ἀπό) also appears as aph-; cata- (κατά), also as cath-; en- (ἐν), also as em-; epi- (ἐπί), also as eph-; hypo- (ὑπό), also as hyp-; syn- (σύν), also as sy-, syl-, sym-.

These very common variations should be observed and learnt. For this purpose, I suggest a study of the following words:—

(a) *A-*chieve, *ab-*breviate, *ac-*cede, *ad-*mire, *af-*fix, *ag-*gress, *al-*lude, *an-*nex, *ap-*pend, *ar-*rogate, *as-*sign, *at-*tract.

(b) *Co-*agulate, *col-*lect, *com-*mute, *comb-*ustion, *con-*nect, *cor-*rode.

(c) *De-*feat, *des-*cant, *di-*verge, *dif-*fuse, *dis-*pel, *s-*pend.

(d) *A-*mend, *e-*normous, *ef-*fect, *es-*cape, *ex-*tend, *iss-*ue, *s-*ample.

(e) *Am-*bush, *an-*oint, *em-*bellish, *en-*close, *il-*lude, *im-*mure, *im-*merge, *in-*clude, *ir-*ritate.

(f) *En-*emy, *i-*gnoble, *il-*legal, *im-*mortal, *in-*firm, *ir-*regular.

(g) *Ob-*long, *oc-*cur, *of-*fer, *o-*mit, *op-*press, *os-*tensible.

(h) *S-*ombre, *so-*journ, *sub-*mit, *suc-*ceed, *suf-*fuse, *sug-*gest, *sum-*mon, *sup-*press, *sur-*rogate.

(i) *Apo-*logy, *aph-*æresis; *cata-*logue, *cath-*olic; *en-*ergy, *em-*phasis; *epi-*logue, *eph-*emera; *hypo-*thesis, *hyph-*en; *syn-*onymous, *sy-*stem, *syl-*logism, *sym-*metry.

It may be noted here that more than one prefix may be placed at the beginning of a word, as in re-im-burse, ram-part (= re-em-part), in-ex-act, &c.

C. Some prefixes exhibit such unusual forms in certain words that they can only be understood upon a perusal of the etymology of the word as given in the Dictionary. I note here a few curious examples.

A- replaces e- (Lat. e, for ex) in a-mend.

Al-, the Arabic definite article, appears at the beginning of al-cohol, a-pricot, ar-tichoke, as-segay (explained s.v. Lancegay), el-ixir, l-ute. But the al- in al-ligator is the Span. el, Lat. ille.

The Latin ab has actually become adv- in the word adv-antage; whilst in v-an-guard it appears as v-. But, in ab-breviate, the prefix is ad-. The Latin cum- appears in co-st, co-uch, cur-ry (1), cu-stom.

The d in daffodil represents the Lat. de.

The de- in de-a-con represents the Greek δᾶ; so also de- in de-vil.

The e- in e-lope represents the Dutch ent-.

The e- in e-squire is purely phonetic, as explained.

The ev- in ev-angelist is for Gk. eu, as in eu-logy.

The l- in lower represents the Latin ille; but in l-one it is the A. S. eall.

The or- in or-deal and or-t is a Teutonic prefix.

The outr- in outr-age represents the Latin ultra; so also in utter-ance (2).

Re-but = re-a-but (prefixes re-, ad-).

The s- in s-ure (Lat. se-curus) represents the Latin se-.

The t- in t-wit represents the A. S. æt; but in t-awdry it is the last letter of saint.

D. The best way of understanding prefixes is by observing their original forms. The following is a list of these (perhaps not exhaustive); the forms within marks of parenthesis shewing how they appear in modern English. See Morris, Outlines of English Accidence, p. 224.

CLASS I. Prefixes of English origin, in Anglo-Saxon spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

á- (a-rise); á (see either); æfter (after); æt (a-do, t-wit); and- (along, answer) [dn (once, a-pace, on-ly, n-ewt, and see aught) not a true prefix, but a numeral]; be, bi (be-, by); for- (for-give); fore (fore-bode); forð (forth); from (fro-); ge- (c-lutch, e-nough, y-wis); gegn- (gain-); in (in, im-, em-, en-); mis- (mis-); ne, whence n-, negative prefix (n-o, n-one, n-aught, &c.); niðer (nether); of (of, off, a-down); ofer (over); on (on, ann-eal, [un]-an-eled, a-foot); or- (or-deal); purh (through, thorough); tó- (to-brake); tó (to-ward, to); un-, before sbs. and adjs. (un-true, un-truth); un-, before verbs (un-do); under (under); up (up); út (out, utt-er); wið (with).

β. To this class belong Gothic and-, whence am-bassador, em-bassy; Dutch ent-, whence e-lope; Dutch oor-, whence or-lop; Gothic, O. Frisian, and O. Saxon und, whence un-to.

CLASS II. Prefixes of Latin and French origin, in Latin spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

a (a-vert); ab (ab-jure, a-bate, adv-ance, as-soil, av-aunt, v-an-guard); abs- (abs-ent); ad (a-chieve, ab-breviate, ac-cede, ad-mire, af-fix, ag-gress, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pend, ar-rogate, as-sets, as-sign, at-tract); amb- (amb-ient, am-putate); ante, anti- (ante-cedent, anticipate, anci-ent, an-cestor); circum (circum-, circu-it); contra, contro- (contra-, contro-vert, contro-ol, counter-feit); cum, com- (co-agulate, col-lect, com-mute, comb-ustion, con-nect, cor-rode, coun-cil, co-unt, co-uch, co-st, cu-stom, cur-ry); de (de-, di-stil, d-affodil); dis- (de-feat, de-luge, des-cant, di-verge, dif-fuse, dis-pel, s-pend); ex, e (a-mend, e-normous, ef-fect, es-cape, ex-tend, iss-ue, s-ample); extra (extra-, stra-ange); in, prep. (am-bush, an-oint, em-bellish, en-close, il-lude, im-mure, im-merge, in-clude, ir-ritate); in-, negative (en-emy, i-gnoble, il-legal, im-mortal, in-firm, ir-regular); O. Lat. indo (ind-igent); inter, intro- (inter-, intro-, enter-tain, entr-ails); juxta (juxta-, joust); minus (O. F. mes-, mis-chief); ne (n-null, ne-uter, ne-farious), nec, short for ne-que (neg-lect); non, short for ne-unum (non-age, um-pire); ob (ob-long, oc-cur, of-fer, o-mit, op-press, os-tensible); per (per-, par-son, pel-lucid, pil-grim); O. Lat. port (pol-lute, po-sition, por-tend, pos-sess); post (post, pu-ny); præ (pre-, pro-vost); præter (preter-); pro (pro-, prof-fer, pour-tray or por-tray, pur-vey, pr-udent); re-, red- (re-, red-, r-ally, ren-der); retro (retro-, rear-guard, rere-ward); se-, sed- (se-, sed-ition, s-ober); sine, for si-ne (sine-, sans); sub, for *sup (s-ombre, so-journ, sub-mit, suc-ceed, suf-fuse, sug-gest, sum-mon, sup-press, sur-rogate); subter- (subter-); sub-, for *sup*s*; *subs (sus-pend, su-spect); super (super-, sur-, sopr-ano, sover-eign); supra, for *superâ (supra-); trans- (trans-, tran-scend, tra-duce, tres-pass, tre-ason); ultra (ultra-, outr-age, utter-ance, as in Shake-speare).

β. Numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; such are Lat. unus, duo (adverbially, bis), tres, &c.; hence un-animous, du-et, bin-ary, bi-sect, bis-cuit, ba-lance, dou-ble, tre-ble, tri-ple, &c. Other note-worthy Latin words are dimidium, male, pæne, semi-, vice; whence demi-, mal-treat, mau-gre, pen-insula, semi-circle, vice-admiral, vis-count.

γ. The prefix a- in a-las is the French interjection hé.

The prefix for- in for-feit and for-close (usually fore-close), is also French; and due to Lat. foris, out of doors.

The Latin ille accounts for Spanish el, whence E. al-ligator; for French le, whence E. l-ouwer or l-oover; and for Portuguese o, as in O-porto, whence E. port (4).

CLASS III. Prefixes of Greek origin, in Greek spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

ἀμφί (amphi-); ἀν-, ἀ-, negative prefix (an-odyne, a-byss, ambrosial); ἀνά (ana-, an-eurism); ἀντί (anti-, ant-agonist); ἀπό (apo-, aph-eresis); κατά (cata-, cath-olic); διά (dia-, di-æresis, dea-con, de-vil); δυσ- (dys-); ἐκ (ec-logue, el-lipse, ex-odus); ἐν (en-ergy, em-piric); ἐνδο- (endo-); ἐπί (epi-, eph-emeral, ep-och); ἔσω, from εἰς (eso-teric); εὐ (eu-, ev-angelist); ἔξω (exo-); ὑπέρ (hyper-); ὑπό (hypo-, hyph-en); μετά (meta-, meth-od, met-eor); πάλιν (palin-drome, palim-psest); παρά (para-, par-ody, pa-lsy); περί (peri-); πρό (pro-phet); πρὸς (pros-); σύν (syn-, sy-stem, syl-logism, sym-metry).

β. As in Latin, numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; hence δι-ecyledon, from δῖς, twice; tri-gonometry, tetra-hedron, penta-gon, hexa-gon, &c. Other note-worthy Greek words are ἀρχι-, chief (archi-pelago, arche-type, arch-bishop); αὐτός, self (auto-graph, auth-entic, eff-endi); ἡμι-, half (hemi-); ἕτερος, other (hetero-); ὅλος, entire (holo-); ὁμός, same (homo-); ὁμός, single (mono-); πᾶν, all (pan-); πολλός, much, many (poly-); πρῶτος, first (proto-).

CLASS IV. Of prefixes which cannot be included in any of the preceding classes, the most important is the Arabic definite article al, very common in Spanish, and appearing in English in nine words beginning with al; also in a-pricol, ar-tichoke, as-sagay, el-ixir, l-ute.

MUTUAL RELATION OF PREFIXES.

The prefixes in Classes i, ii, and iii above are not all independent of each other, many of those in one class being cognate with those in another. Thus the A. S. æt is the same word with the Latin ad. To shew this more clearly, the conjectural Aryan forms are subjoined, each primitive form being numbered. The numbers in the following list supply an index to the thirteen Aryan forms below.

CLASS I. ANGLO-SAXON. Æfter, 7 δ; æt, 2; and- (cf. Du. ent-), 6; be, bi, 8; for-, 13 α; fore, 13 α; forð, 13 δ; from, 13 γ; in, 5 β; ne, n-, 12 (and see 4); of, 10 α; ofer, 10 β; on, 5 α; tó-, 11; un- (before adjs.), 4 (and see 12); un- (verbal), 6; under, 3, 5 γ; up, 10 α; út, 9.

CLASS II. LATIN. A, ab, 7 α; abs, 7 β; ad, 2; amb-, 8; ante, 6; bis, 11; dis-, 11; ex, e, extra, 1; in, 5 β; in- (negative), 4; ind-, 5 β; inter, intra, 5 γ; ne, n-, 12; ob, 7 γ; per, 13 α; *port, 13 δ; præ, præter, 13 γ; pro, 13 γ; sub, sus-, subter, 10 α; super, supra, 10 β.

CLASS III. GREEK. ἄμφι, 8; ἀν-, ἀ- (negative), 4 (and see 12); ἀνά, 5 α; ἀντί, 6; ἀπό, 7 α; διά, δῖς, δι-, 11; ἐν, ἐνδον, 5 β; ἔξω, 1; ἐπί, 7 γ; παρά, 13 α; περί, 13 β; πρό, 13 γ; πρὸς, 13 δ; ὑπό, 10 α; ὑπέρ, 10 β.

[N.B. The alphabetical arrangement here follows that of the Sanskrit, not of the Roman alphabet.]

1. AK, AKS, out. Fick, i. 475. Gk. ἐκ, ἐξ; L. ec-, ex, e; Lithuan. isz; Russ. iz', izo, out. Hence Gk. ἔξω, outside; L. extra (for exterâ), abl. fem. of the comparative form ex-ter-us.

2. AD? Fick, i. 484. Lat. ad; Goth. at; A. S. æt. (The Skt. adhi is not an equivalent form; but perhaps it can be referred to the same pronominal base.)

3. ADHAS? Cf. Skt. adhas, adv., underneath; Fick, iii. 38.

ADHARA (comparative); Skt. adhara, lower; L. inferus; Goth. undar; A. S. under. [But Curtius, i. 384, connects A. S. under with Lat. inter. See no. 5.]

4. AN, negative prefix; Fick, i. 12. Skt. an- (before a vowel), a- (before a consonant); Gk. ἀν-, ἀ-; L. in-; A. S. un-, before adjectives and substantives. [N.B. Perhaps identical with NA, from an orig. form ANA; so Curtius. See no. 12 below.]

5. ANA. (Apparently a pronominal stem of the third person; cf. Skt. ana, this); Fick, i. 14.

(a) ANA; Zend ana, Gk. ἀνά, Goth. ana, A. S. on.

(β) ANI (locative); Gk. ἐνί, ἐν; Lat. in; Goth. in; A. S. in. Hence Gk. ἐν-δον; O. Lat. in-do.

(γ) ANTAR (comparative); Skt. antar; L. inter, whence intra (= interâ), intro (= intero). [To which Curtius allies A. S. under; but see no. 3.]

6. ANTA, sb., an end; Skt. anta, A. S. ende. Fick, i. 15.

ANTI (locative); Vedic anti; Gk. ἀντί; Goth. and-; A. S. and-, Du. and G. ent; also A. S. un-, as a verbal prefix. The Lat. ante (perhaps for *anted), appears to be an ablative form.

7. ✓AP? to obtain? Fick, i. 17. Hence was formed a sb., of which various cases remain in the form of prepositions.

(a) APA (instrumental); Skt. apa, away; Gk. ἀπό; Lat. ab, a; Goth. af.

(β) APAS (genitive); Gk. ἀπ; Lat. abs.

(γ) API (locative); Skt. api; Gk. ἐπί; Lat. ob.

(δ) APATARA (comparative); Zend apatara; Gk. ἀπάρταρ, Goth. aftra; A. S. æfter.

8. ABHA, both; Fick, i. 18. Skt. ubha, both; Gk. ἀμφω, Lat. ambo, Goth. bai, A. S. bá. Hence ABHI, AMBHI, on both sides, around, on; Skt. abhi, towards; Gk. ἀμφί, Lat. ambi-, A. S. be.

9. UD; up, out; Skt. ud, Goth. ut, A. S. út. Hence UD-TARA (comparative); Gk. ὑπερος, A. S. utor, uttor.

10. UPA, close to, (just) over, (just) under.

(a) Skt. upa, near, under; Gk. ὑπό, under; Lat. s-sub (for *sup); with a comparative form sub-ter; also sus- (for sub-s). Fick, i. 31; iii. 511. Allied to these are a double set of Teut. forms, viz. Goth. isup, A. S. up (G. auf), in which the original p of the base is preserved; also Goth. uf, A. S. of, in which the regular sound-shifting has taken place, together with a differentiation in the sense, the orig. sense being, however, preserved in the comparative form below.

(β) UPARA (comparative); Vedic upara, Lat. s-superus. Hence UPARI (locative); Skt. upari, over; Gk. ὑπέρ; Lat. s-super, ablative fem. supra (for superâ); Goth. ufar, A. S. ofer.

11. DWA, two; Skt. dwa, Gk. δύο, Lat. duo, A. S. twá; Fick, i. 625. Hence Gk. διá, through; δῖς, δι-, twice; Lat. bis (for *dwis), bi-, double; Lat. dis- (for *dwis), in twain, asunder; A. S. tó-, asunder.

12. NA, negative particle; Fick, i. 122. Skt. na, not; Gk. νη-; Lat. ne, n-; Goth. ni; A. S. ne, n-. See no. 4 (above).

13. ✓PAR, to fare, go through; Skt. pri, to bring over; Gk. πῶπος, a way through; Lat. ex-per-ior, A. S. faran. Fick, i. 662, iii. 175.

(a) PARA, onward, forward, from. Skt. pará, away; Gk. παρά, from; Lat. per; Goth. fra-, fair-; A. S. for-. Here belong also Goth. faura, A. S. fore.

(β) PARI, around; Skt. pari, Gk. περί, Zend pairi (in para-dise).

(γ) PRA, before; Skt. pṛa, Gk. πρὸ, Lat. prō-. Hence Lat. ablative prō; locative præ, with comparative præ-ter. Also Skt. param, beyond, Goth. fram, A. S. from. Here also belong Lat. pri-or, pri-stine, pri-me, A. S. for-ma.

(δ) PRA-TI, towards; Skt. prati, towards; Gk. πρὸς; O. Lat. port- (whence Lat. por-, pol-, po-); A. S. forð.

II. SUFFIXES.

The number of suffixes in modern English is so great, and the forms of several, especially in words derived through the French from Latin, are so variable that an attempt to exhibit them all would tend to confusion. The best account of their origin is to be found in Schleicher, Compendium der Vergleichenden Grammatik der Indogermanischen Sprachen. An account of Anglo-Saxon suffixes is given at p. 119 of March, Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language. Lists of Anglo-Saxon words, arranged according to their suffixes, are given in Loth, Etymologische Angelsächsisch-englische Grammatik, Elberfeld, 1870. The best simple account of English suffixes in general is that given in Morris, Historical Outlines of English Accidence, pp. 212-221, 229-242; to which the reader is particularly referred. See also Koch, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, vol. iii. pt. 1, pp. 29-76. Schleicher has clearly established the fact that the Aryan languages abound in suffixes, each of which was originally intended slightly to modify the meaning of the root to which it was added, so as to express the radical idea in a new relation. The force of many of these must, even at an early period, have been slight, and in many instances it is difficult to trace it; but in some instances it is still clear, and the form of the suffix is then of great service. The difference between lov-er, lov-ed, and lov-ing is well marked, and readily understood. One of the most remarkable points is that most Aryan languages delighted in adding suffix to suffix, so that words are not uncommon in which two or more suffixes occur, each repeating, it may be, the sense of that which preceded it. Double diminutives, such as parti-c-le, i.e. a little little part, are sufficiently common. The Lat. superl. suffix -is-si-mus (Aryan -yans-ta-ma) is a simple example of the use of a treble suffix, which really expresses no more than is expressed by -mus alone in the word pri-mus. The principal Aryan suffixes, as given by Schleicher, are these: -a-i, -u, -ya, *-wa*¹, -ma, -ra (later form -la), -an, -ana, -na, -ni, -nu, -ta, -tar or -tra, -ti, -tu, -dhi, -ant or -nt, -as, -ka. But these can be readily compounded, so as to form new suffixes; so that from -ma-na was formed -man (as in E. no-min-al), and from -ma-na-ta or -man-ta was formed -manta (as in E. argu-ment). Besides these, we must notice the comparative suffix -yans, occurring in various degraded shapes; hence the Gk. μείζων, greater, put for μέγ-γων, the s being dropped. This suffix usually occurs in combination, as in -yans-ta, Gk. -ατο, superl. suffix; -yans-ta-ma, Lat. -is-si-mus (for -is-ti-mus *), already noted. The combinations -ta-ra,

-ta-ta occur in the Gk. -τερο, -τατο, the usual suffixes of the comparative and superlative degrees.
